CASE NOTES

Right to Bail.

A noncapital defendant's absolute right to bail may only be curbed by the setting of certain conditions upon his release, and not its complete denial; thus, although mental examination provided a basis for setting stringent conditions on release of defendant charged with attempted murder and aggravated assault, it did not give the judge the option of refusing to release him from incarceration. Henley v. Taylor, 324 Ark. 114, 918 S.W.2d 713, 922 S.W.2d 681 (1996).

Rule 9.4. Notice of penalties.

(a) When the conditions of the release of a defendant are determined or an order is entered under Rule 9.3, the judicial officer shall inform the defendant of the penalties for failure to comply with the conditions or terms of such order.

(b) All conditions of release and terms of orders under Rule 9.3 shall be recorded in writing and a copy given to the defendant.

Rule 9.5. Violations of conditions of release.

(a) A judicial officer shall issue a warrant directing that the defendant be arrested and taken forthwith before any judicial officer having jurisdiction of the charge for a hearing when the prosecuting attorney submits a verified application alleging that:

(i) the defendant has wilfully violated the conditions of his release or the terms of an order under Rule 9.3; or

(ii) pertinent information which would merit revocation of the defendant's release has become known to the prosecuting attorney.

(b) A law enforcement officer having reasonable grounds to believe that a released defendant has violated the conditions of his release or the terms of an order under Rule 9.3 is authorized to arrest the defendant and to take him forthwith before any judicial officer having jurisdiction when it would be impracticable to secure a warrant.

(c) After a hearing, and upon finding that the defendant has wilfully violated reasonable conditions or the terms of an order under Rule 9.3 imposed on his release, the judicial officer may impose different or additional conditions of release upon the defendant or revoke his release.

[Order for Issuance of Arrest Warrant and Summons/Order for Surety to Appear]

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF _____ COUNTY, ARKANSAS DIVISION _____

STATE OF ARKANSAS

PLAINTIFF

VS. NO. CR

DEFENDANT

ORDER FOR ISSUANCE OF ARREST WARRANT
AND SUMMONS/ORDER FOR SURETY TO APPEAR

On this _____ day of _____, 20____, comes on for consideration the oral motion of the State of Arkansas, by its Prosecuting Attorney for this County, requesting the forfeiture of the defendant's bail bond and issuance of an alias bench warrant for the immediate arrest of the defendant.

From the statements of the Prosecuting Attorney, a review of the records applicable to this case, and the applicable law, the Court finds that:

(1) The defendant had been directed to appear before the Court on this date at _____ o'clock _____. m. but failed to respond or to appear before the Court as directed.

(2) The defendant has been released from custody, having caused a bail bond to be executed in favor of _____ County, Arkansas in the penal sum of $ _____, with said defendant as principal and _____ as surety thereon, which bond guaranteed the defendant's appearance on said date and on all dates as directed by the Court in these proceedings.

(3) No reasonable excuse has been advanced to justify the defendant's failure to appear as directed.

THEREFORE, it is herein considered, ordered and adjudged that the Circuit Clerk be, and hereby is directed to promptly cause an alias bench warrant to be issued for the immediate arrest of the defendant, and to cause the warrant to be delivered to the Sheriff of this Court for service upon the defendant. Upon the apprehension or surrender of the defendant, the initial appearance (bail) bond shall be $ _____; and

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Circuit Clerk be, and hereby is directed to promptly notify the surety (one or more) that the defendant should be surrendered to the Sheriff of this Court as required by the terms of the bail bond and notify the surety (one or more) to appear before the Circuit Court on the _____ day of _____, 20____, at _____ o'clock _____. m. to show cause why the full amount specified in the bail bond or the money, if any, deposited in lieu of bail should not be forfeited to _____ County.

If the surety (one or more) does not appear at the hearing scheduled by the Court, each surety on the bond shall be liable, jointly and severally, for payment of the amount forfeited. If the surety desires to be represented by an attorney, such attorney should appear at the hearing.

Entry of the Order of Forfeiture by the Court shall constitute a personal judgment against each surety on the bond, for which execution and other lawful process may issue.

The officer who is responsible for taking the bail bond is also ordered to appear before the Court on the date and at the time noted above, unless (1) the surety is a bail bondsman, or (2) the officer accepted cash in the amount of bail.

IT IS SO ORDERED on this _____ day of _____, 20____.

Jurisdiction.

The pendency of an interlocutory appeal from a denial of defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of a speedy trial did not divest the trial court of its jurisdiction to determine under this rule if there was reasonable cause for revocation of defendant's bail. Reeves v. State, 261 Ark. 384, 548 S.W.2d 822 (1977).

Right to Bail.

In view of the fact that a defendant has an absolute right before conviction, except in capital cases, to a reasonable bail, this rule would not preclude the trial court from setting a new and reasonable bail with appropriate terms and restrictions. Reeves v. State, 261 Ark. 384, 548 S.W.2d 822 (1977).

Petitioner was awarded certiorari relief after a trial court denied petitioner bail after petitioner was charged with violating an order of protection because petitioner was not charged with a capital offense; the trial court should have set a reasonable bail with whatever terms and restrictions were deemed appropriate. *Hobbs v. Nature of Hearing.

A hearing in which the circuit court found probable cause existed that defendant, who was free on bail, had committed two subsequent offenses was not a hearing of an adversary nature which required representation by counsel. Reeves v. State, 261 Ark. 384, 548 S.W.2d 822 (1977).

The liberty interest at stake at a bond-revocation hearing is not equivalent to the liberty interest at stake in a criminal trial, as is reflected in the lower standard of proof required to revoke a defendant's bond, so it follows that a defendant may not have the same motive and opportunity in developing or attacking testimony in a non-adversarial bond-revocation hearing as he would in a trial, which is

RULE 10.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

- Rule
- Rule 10.1. Definitions.
- Rule 10.2. Permissible objects of seizure.

Commentary to Article IV

Article IV establishes a general statutory scheme which defines the permissible limits of searches and seizures. The Article focuses on "conventional" searches and seizures. Because the pace of technological advancement makes it difficult to anticipate future problems in the area of electronic surveillance, this Article does not encompass wiretapping, bugging, and similar forms of surveillance. Inspectorial searches (health, housing, port, etc.) are also beyond the scope of this Article.

The Article is organized according to the traditional justifications for a search and seizure: consent (Rule 11); arrest (Rule 12); warrant (Rule 13); and vehicle or emergency situations (Rule 14). Rule 15 sets out procedures for the disposition of seized things, and Rule 16 governs the admissibility of seized things at a criminal trial.

As the title indicates, Rule 10 contains general provisions applicable to Article IV as a whole.

Rule 10.1 defines several key terms. The definition of "search" is of critical importance since it determines the substantive scope of Article IV. There is no Arkansas statutory precedent for a definition of search, and judicial attempts to develop a definition have been piecemeal since the issue whether particular action did or did not constitute a "search" seldom arises. The key word in the definition is "intrusion," a term sufficiently broad to encompass any legally cognizable interference with an individual's right to privacy. The remainder of the definition limits the scope of this initial term.

An arrest is an intrusion within the scope of the Fourth Amendment, but it is excluded from the definition of search since it is covered both by Article III and existing authority. The phrase "by an officer under color of authority" limits the coverage of the Article to official intrusions. See, Walker v. State, 244 Ark. 1150, 429 S.W.2d 121 (1968).

Most searches are challenged as intrusions upon an individual's person or property. However, in Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 88 S. Ct. 507, 19 L. Ed. 2d 576 (1967), the Supreme Court repudiated a Fourth Amendment analysis based on "constitutionally protected areas." Consequently, the definition of "search" is extended to cover any intrusions upon the privacy of an individual.

With respect to "purpose," the definition makes it clear that the Article encompasses searches for persons and information, as well as searches for tangible physical "things."

Since there are various types of activities which meet the foregoing criteria, but which are nevertheless permissible under current law, the final clause limits the scope of the definition to those intrusions which in the absence of authority or consent would be violative of constitutional or other legal rights. Hence, traditional police practices such as "staking out" premises, "shadowing" a person, and observing areas left open to public view are not considered searches.

The definition of "seizure" is also without statutory precedent. In most cases, a seizure will occur as a result of a search. The inclusion of the phrase "under other color of authority" is intended to cover nonsearch situations where an officer is justified in making a seizure — for example, when he discovers abandoned contraband or observes contraband openly possessed by an individual.

The term "reasonable cause" has been used throughout this Article and Article III in preference to "probable cause." Although most courts agree that there is no substantive distinction between the two terms, it was felt that the use of "probable cause" might imply a requirement that the existence of facts must be "more-probable-than-not." See A.L.I. commentary at 163; commentary to Arrest, Citation, Summons, and Pre-trial Release, supra at 9. "Reasonable cause" also corresponds to the standard in the present Arkansas statutes on search and arrest warrants, both of which use the phrase "reasonable grounds." Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 43-201, 43-408 (Repl. 1964).

Rule 10.2 lists the permissible objects of a seizure. The first three categories are coextensive in scope with Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-205 (Supp. 1973). Paragraph (iv), which recognizes searches for the purpose of arresting or rescuing a person, has no analogue in the present statute. The paragraph does not supplement or otherwise affect relief by writ of habeas corpus.

Rule 11.1 authorizes searches based on consent. Rule 11.4 adds the logical restriction that such searches shall not exceed the limits of the consent given.

Rule 11.2 attempts to identify those individuals who can give effective consent to a search. In the case of searching an individual's person, it seems rather obvious that the person searched must give consent. When the searchee is under the age of 14, his consent is not effective unless coupled with that of a parent or a person in loco parentis.

Under subpart (b) the owner of a vehicle or a person in apparent control of the vehicle can effectively consent to its search. Subpart (c) adopts a flexible rule with respect to searches of premises. Consent to such searches can be given by any person who, based on the circumstances as they appear to the officer conducting the search, is entitled to give such consent.

Rule 11.2 merely relieves the searching and seizing officer of any criminal or civil liability for his conduct. The admissibility in evidence of any things seized during a consent search is governed by existing authority read in conjunction with the Comments to Rule 16.2.

Rule 11.4 requires that the seizing officer provide the person consenting to the search with a receipt listing all things seized. Rule 13.3(f) imposes a similar requirement in the case of warrant searches. Such a receipt informs the person that the seizure is under color of law and may be of evidentiary value in a subsequent proceeding under Rule 15 for the return of seized things.

Rule 11.5 introduces a sensible principle into the law of consent searches — consent may be withdrawn or modified at any time. Admittedly, this rule permits a guilty suspect to halt a search when the searchers come too close to his hiding place, but the rationale of such a rule seems no less compelling in the search context than in an interrogation context. Furthermore, if initial consent were to be considered irrevocable, the warning required by Rule 11.3 would have to include a statement to this effect. This would presumably make it more difficult to obtain consent, thus defeating the object of a rule of irrevocability. See A.L.I. commentary at 196, 197.

Rule 12 is addressed to searches and seizures incidental to an arrest.

Rule 12.1 provides the basic authorization for such searches and lists the purposes for which a search incidental to an arrest may lawfully be made. These purposes, as well as the Comment to Rule 12.1, and the subsequent rules serve to clearly define the permissible scope of a search incidental to an arrest.

Rule 12.2 authorizes searches of an arrestee's person and the area within his immediate control. Such searches were expressly approved in Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 89 S. Ct. 2034, 23 L. Ed. 2d 685 (1969).

Because searches of body cavities or the blood stream are especially offensive and intrusive, Rule 12.2 establishes special criteria which must be met before a warrantless search is authorized. In addition to a general requirement that the search be reasonable under the circumstances of the case, the rule requires that there be a "strong probability" that seizable objects will be disclosed and that any delay will probably result in the disappearance of evidence. These standards are substantially in agreement with the Supreme Court holding in Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757, 86 S. Ct. 1826, 16 L. Ed. 2d 908 (1966). Cf., Cupp v. Murphy, 412 U.S. 291, 93 S. Ct. 2000, 36 L. Ed. 2d 900 (1973).

Rule 12.4 permits searches of a vehicle within the control of an arrested person when the arresting officer reasonably believes that the vehicle contains seizable items connected with offense for which the arrest is made. The court in Chimel, supra, expressly disclaimed any intent to change the law regarding searches of vehicles incidental to an arrest, 395 U.S. at 764, n. 9, 23 L. Ed. 2d at 694.

Searches pursuant to Rule 12.4 should be distinguished for analytical purposes from vehicular searches without a warrant and independent of an arrest. Searches of the latter type are the subject of Rule 14.1. However, both types of searches find support in the same constitutional principles. See commentary to Rule 14.1, infra. A vehicular search under Rule 12.4 must meet the same standards as a vehicular search under Rule 14.1. The fact that an arrest is made in no way extends the permissible scope of the search except in so far as the arrest or the circumstances on which the arrest is based also justify a reasonable belief that the vehicle contains seizable things. If the circumstances do not justify such a belief, then the arresting officer is limited to a search of the arrestee's person within the scope permitted by Rule 12.2. Compare, Steel v. State, 248 Ark. 159, 450 S.W.2d 545 (1970).

The contemporaneous time limitation of Rule 12.4(2) is required by United States and Arkansas Supreme Court decisions. Preston v. United States, 376 U.S. 364, 84 S. Ct. 881, 11 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1964); Jenkins v. State, 253 Ark. 249, 485 S.W.2d 541 (1972).

Rule 12.5 embodies a limited authorization for searches of premises incident to an arrest on the premises. Although the Supreme Court in Chimel, supra, restricted the scope of a premises search incident to an arrest to the area actually within the control of the arrestee, it is believed that searches under the circumstances stated in Rule 12.5(b) fall within the "well-recognized exceptions" referred to by the court in Chimel. 395 U.S. at 763, 23 L. Ed. 2d at 694. The language of the rule reflects the following conclusion of the A.L.I. Reporters: It appears, therefore, that the Chimel case is intended to rule out "routine" searches of premises incidental to an arrest, especially if the situation is such that a search warrant could have been obtained without danger to the success of the search. It does not, however, undertake to rule out searches where there is reasonable cause to believe that vehicles or premises, in which an arrest has been made, contain seizable things which are likely to be removed or destroyed before a warrant can be secured and served. A.L.I. commentary at 188.

As in the case of vehicular searches incident to an arrest, the premises search must be contemporaneous in time with the arrest. Stoner v. California, 376 U.S. 483, 84 S. Ct. 889, 11 L. Ed. 2d 856 (1964); Jones v. State, 246 Ark. 1057, 441 S.W.2d 458 (1969).

Things not subject to seizure under Rule 10.2 may nevertheless be taken from the possession of a jailed arrestee under Rule 12.6(a), if reasonably necessary for custodial purposes. Such purposes may include the safeguarding of the arrestee's property, the protection of the police against charges of theft, the prevention of escape, and the maintenance of prison discipline. Only in the limited circumstances cited in paragraph (a) will these purposes justify reading the arrestee's personal papers.

Rule 12.6(b) relaxes the contemporaneous time limitation for vehicular searches when custody of a vehicle is lawfully retained by the police. The constitutionality of such searches was recognized in Cooper v. California, 386 U.S. 58, 87 S. Ct. 788, 17 L. Ed. 2d 730 (1967).

Rule 13 deals with searches and seizures pursuant to a warrant.

Rule 13.1 establishes issuance procedures designed to prevent abuse of the search warrant process unduly discouraging warrant searches.

Under Rule 13.1(a) a search warrant may be issued only by a "judicial officer." The same term is used in the present statute. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-205 (Supp. 1973). Since Rule 1.6 restricts the definition of judicial officers to those persons authorized to hear criminal cases, chancellors would no longer be able to issue search warrants, except in circumstances indicated supra at 1, 2 (Commentary to General Provisions).

Rule 13.1(b) requires that an application for a search warrant contain a description of the persons or places to be searched and the persons or things to be seized. This is probably the present Arkansas practice although there are no Supreme Court cases in point. See Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-201. The application must set forth "facts and circumstances." This provision is intended to discourage conclusory statements in affidavits for search warrants — a practice soundly condemned by both the United States and Arkansas Supreme Courts. Aguilar v. Texas, 378 U.S. 108, 84 S. Ct. 1509, 12 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1964); Cockrell v. State, 256 Ark. 19, 505 S.W.2d 204 (1974); Montgomery v. State, 251 Ark. 645, 473 S.W.2d 885 (1971); Ferguson v. State, 249 Ark. 138, 458 S.W.2d 383 (1970). The last sentence of Rule 13 (b) incorporates federal and state case law regarding use of hearsay information to support the issuance of search warrants. Spinelli v. United States, 393 U.S. 410, 89 S. Ct. 584, 21 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1969); Aguilar, supra; Glover v. State, 248 Ark. 1260, 455 S.W.2d 670 (1970); Walton v. State, 245 Ark. 84, 431 S.W.2d 462 (1968), appeal after remand, Fuller v. State, 246 Ark. 704, 439 S.W.2d 801 (1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 930, 90 S. Ct. 260, 24 L. Ed. 2d 228 (1969).

Subpart (c) of Rule 13.1 allows the judicial officer to take additional testimony under oath in support of affidavits. A written summary must be made of such testimony.

The Rule 13.1(e) requirement that search warrant proceedings be conducted in secret does not appear in the current statutes although this is probably a common practice.

Rule 13.2 details the contents of a search warrant. Under present law a warrant is directed to the sheriff of the county or any constable, but may be executed by any public officer. Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 43-202, 43-204 (Repl. 1964). Rules 13.2(a) and 13.3(a) permit the warrant to be issued to and executed by any "officer." An "officer," as defined in Rule 10.1, is comparable to "public officer" under present law.

Paragraphs (i) and (ii) of Rule 13.2(b) provide information which may be needed by a person served who desires to contest the validity of the warrant. Paragraphs (iii) and (iv) reflect the requirements of the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution and Article 2, § 15 of the Arkansas Constitution.

Subpart (c) of Rule 13.2 recognizes that nighttime searches are more likely to be resisted and, accordingly, establishes guidelines for determining when such searches are justified. Present law allows nighttime searches only "[i]f there is proof positive that any property stolen or embezzled is concealed in any particular house or place." Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 43-202, 43-203 (Repl. 1964).

Under Rule 13.2(c), the warrant must provide that it be executed within a reasonable time, not to exceed sixty days. Under Rule 13.2(b)(v) the warrant must state the period of time, not to exceed five days after execution, when it is returnable to the issuing officer. Heretofore, the only chronological restriction on execution or return has been the reasonable time limitation imposed by the Constitution.

Subpart (d) of Rule 13.2 is intended to effectuate the provisions of Rule 13.5 by providing that a warrant shall state any limitations on the scope of search or seizure imposed by Rule 13.5.

Rule 13.3 deals with execution of the search warrant.

Subpart (b) of Rule 13.3 changes present law by requiring the searching officer to furnish a copy of the warrant to the individual whose person or premises are searched before the search is begun. Easley, supra. This procedure informs the searchee that the intrusion is authorized by law and provides a basis for future challenges to the validity of the warrant.

Rule 13.3(c) compels the officer to discontinue the search when the persons or things specified in the warrant are found. Cf., Marron v. United States, 275 U.S. 192, 48 S. Ct. 74, 72 L. Ed. 231 (1927). This rule does not preclude continuation of the search if what transpires during the search gives reasonable cause for further search outside the warrant's authority.

Rule 13.3(d) requires the searching officer to furnish a receipt for things seized. Like the requirement that a copy of the search warrant be furnished, this procedure apprises the affected party of the lawful nature of the seizure. It also serves an evidentiary function in future proceedings under Rule 15.5 for the return or restoration of seized property.

Rule 13.3(e) permits the use of deadly force in the execution of a search warrant only in certain specified situations: [D]eadly force is not permissible unless there is no unnecessary risk to innocent bystanders, and there is substantial risk that failure to effect a prompt seizure of the things sought will result in death or serious bodily harm. The phrase "other than in self-defense" is inserted in order to make it clear that . . . an officer may use such degree of force, as is reasonably necessary to defend himself, even in circumstances where deadly force would not be authorized merely to ensure successful execution of the warrant. A.L.I. commentary at 44.

Rule 13.4 sets out procedures to be followed upon the return of a warrant, whether executed or not. A return of the warrant to the issuing officer is not required in either case by present statutes. The return of an executed warrant facilitates and encourages judicial supervision of compliance with the provisions of Rule 13. A return is also desirable when the warrant is not executed because the reasons for nonexecution may be relevant in subsequent criminal or civil litigation arising out of the search. Subpart (b) adds the requirement of a "verified report of the facts and circumstances of the execution, including a list of the things seized." This additional information may be useful in future proceedings challenging the search or seeking the return or restoration of things seized. To facilitate that end, subparts (c) and (d) ensure that the return and accompanying report are perpetuated.

Rule 13.5 establishes a new procedure to be followed when the search for documents covered by a warrant necessarily entails the examination of other documents outside the scope of the warrant. When such "intermingling" is present, the executing officer must impound the documents in situ or remove them under the seal of another place for safeguarding. At a subsequent hearing presided over by an appropriate judicial officer, any interested person may move for return of the documents or for specification of conditions or limitations on future examination of them. The A.L.I. note to Section 220.5 states: In support of such limitations, the moving party might request that the search be conducted in the presence of counsel; might show that certain files or other discrete portions of the intermingled documents could not possibly contain the particular documents or entries sought under the warrant; might request that the search be carried out by a special master or other qualified and judicially-designated examiner rather than by the police; or might suggest other safeguards against unnecessary scrutiny or disclosure of the contents of the documents. Id. at 48.

The entire procedure is designed to balance the state's interest in securing information relevant to a criminal prosecution against the individual's right to privacy.

Despite some reservations to the contrary, the Commission has taken the position that diaries and other private records of a testimonial nature are not protected from seizure by either the Fourth or Fifth Amendments to the United States Constitution. Therefore, such documents are seizable when relevant to a criminal prosecution. However, in a case covered by Rule 13.5, the determination of relevancy must be made by a judicial officer.

Since testimony in support of a motion under subpart (c) of Rule 13.5 may in some cases be self-incriminating, subpart (d) prohibits the admission of such testimony in a subsequent proceeding, except for impeachment purposes or in a perjury or contempt prosecution.

Seizure of obscene materials is the subject of Rule 13.6, which codifies the recent Supreme Court decision in Heller v. New York, 413 U.S. 483, 93 S. Ct. 2789, 37 L. Ed. 2d 745 (1973). That opinion permits the seizure of a single copy of an instrument without an adversary hearing for the bona fide purpose of preserving it as evidence in a criminal trial provided "such a seizure is pursuant to a warrant, issued after a determination of probable cause by a neutral magistrate, and, following the seizure, a prompt judicial determination of the obscenity issue in an adversary proceeding is available at the request of any interested party." 413 U.S. at 492, 37 L. Ed. 2d at 754. See, also, Gibbs v. State, 255 Ark. 997, 504 S.W.2d 719 (1974). Since seizing even a single copy may block the exhibition or distribution of an instrument, especially in the case of a film, the trial court must in appropriate cases either allow copies to be made or return the instrument pending a final determination on the obscenity issue.

Rule 14 outlines several situations where warrantless searches independent of an arrest or absent consent are nevertheless valid.

Rule 14.2 codifies the so-called "open field" doctrine established in Hester v. United States, 265 U.S. 57, 44 S. Ct. 445, 68 L. Ed. 898, 445 (1924) and approved in Jones, supra. The rationale of Hester is that the Fourth Amendment speaks only of "persons, houses, papers, and effects," and hence offers no protection against searches of "open fields." It is unclear to what extent this reasoning has been eroded by Katz, supra, which rejected the notion of "constitutionally protected areas" and held instead that "the Fourth Amendment protects people not places." Since the Katz court did not expressly overrule or limit the scope of Hester, the Commission has adopted a rule which encompasses the full sweep of the latter opinion.

Rule 14.3 allows warrantless searches of premises or vehicles in emergency situations. Such a search is justified under essentially the same circumstances that support the use of deadly force to execute a search warrant. See Rule 13.3.

The "plain view" doctrine, which forms the basis for Rule 14.4, was extensively discussed in Coolidge, supra. See, also, Cox v. State, 254 Ark. 1, 491 S.W.2d 802, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 923, 94 S. Ct. 230, 38 L. Ed. 2d 157 (1973). The doctrine permits the seizure of things which fall within the plain view of an officer who has a right to be in a position to have that view. Such a right may be based on "a warrant for another object, hot pursuit, search incident to an arrest, or some other legitimate reason for being present unconnected with a search directed against the accused." 403 U.S. at 466, 29 L. Ed. 2d at 583. The Coolidge opinion lists two limitations to the doctrine which are not expressed by the rule. First, a warrantless seizure is not justified absent "exigent circumstances" excusing the failure to procure a warrant. Second, the discovery of evidence must be inadvertent. Where the police know in advance the location of the evidence and intend to seize it, they cannot rely on the plain view doctrine to validate the search.

Rule 15 is without Arkansas statutory precedent. It is believed that most courts and law enforcement officers will welcome clear, reasonable procedures for the disposition of seized property.

The corresponding A.L.I. provisions require that a custody order be obtained from an appropriate court in all cases where property is seized. It was the consensus of the Commission that such a requirement imposed a needless administrative burden on courts and law enforcement officers. Accordingly, the proposed rules require a custody order to be entered only when a person makes a motion for return or restoration of seized things pursuant to Rule 15.2. Absent such a motion, the seizing officer need only provide for the appropriate safekeeping of the property.

In the case of warrantless seizure, he must also furnish a report of the facts and circumstances of the seizure to the court before which the defendant will be brought for first appearance. If no arrest is made, the seizure is reported to a court having jurisdiction to entertain proceedings respecting the offense disclosed by the seizure. See, Rule 15.4. Warrant seizures are not covered since a similar requirement is imposed with respect to them by Rule 13.4(b).

Rule 15.2 establishes procedures for the return or restoration of seized things to appropriate parties. Subpart (a)(i) permits the person from whose possession the things were seized to move for their return. Paragraph (ii) allows some other person asserting a claim to the seized things to move for restoration, generally on the grounds that the things were stolen and the moving party is the owner or rightful possessor.

The appropriate tribunal to hear motions for return or restoration of seized things will vary depending on the stage of the criminal proceedings. In the case of a warrant search, the motion should be made to the court to which the warrant was returned or to which the proceedings have been transferred pursuant to Rule 13.4(d). If a person has been charged in connection with the seizure, then the motion should be made to the court which will try the offense. If no prosecution is pending, then any court having jurisdiction to entertain proceedings respecting the offense disclosed by the seizure is competent to hear the motion. The overriding intent of the rule is that the court with the greatest evidentiary interest in the seized things should control their custody and disposition.

The motion for return or restoration must be made within 30 days after actual or constructive notice of the seizure, subject to the court's discretion to allow motions to be made at a later date.

The reasons that justify exclusion of seized things at trial do not necessarily justify returning the things to the person from whom they were seized. See, Bostic v. City of Little Rock, 243 Ark. 50, 418 S.W.2d 619 (1967). Therefore, the grounds upon which a motion for return or restoration may be based are more limited in scope than the grounds that may support a motion to suppress evidence. Cf., Rule 15.2(b) with Comment to Rule 16.1.

Rule 15.2(d) permits the court to postpone the return or restoration of seized things until they are no longer needed for evidentiary use.

Rule 15.2(e) makes it clear that the hearing on a motion for return or restoration of property is a special proceeding, independent of the underlying criminal prosecution. An order granting the motion is a final order for purposes of appeal within the meaning of the third subsection of Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-2101 (Supp. 1973). The same is true of an order denying the motion, but the court may postpone the appeal until the seized things are no longer needed for evidentiary purposes. Since the remedy provided by Rule 15.2 supplements the civil remedies otherwise available to a person whose property has been seized or is being withheld by the state, an order granting or denying relief under Rule 15.2 is appealable in accordance with the general statutory provisions governing civil appeals.

Since a criminal court is not the most appropriate forum for sorting out the interests of competing claimants, Rule 15.2(f) gives two alternatives to the court confronted with disputed possession rights in seized things. The court may return the things to the person from whose possession they were seized, or it may impound the things, pending resolution of the dispute by compromise or civil litigation.

If no motion is made for return or restoration of seized things, then whenever their custody is no longer necessary, the court must order their disposition in accordance with the provisions of the Arkansas Criminal Code which govern disposition of contraband and unclaimed property.

Finally, Rule 15.3 permits an informal restoration of freshly seized items to the rightful possessor when his claim is established beyond a reasonable doubt. The officer may also dispose of perishable things in appropriate circumstances.

Rule 16 sets out procedures for suppressing evidence seized in violation of the preceding rules of Article III. There is presently no statutory law respecting motions to suppress evidence, and current practice allows such motions to be made for the first time when the evidence is offered at trial. This often causes delay and creates confusion and frustration on the part of jurors. Unless the omnibus hearing procedure of Rule 20 is employed, motions to suppress evidence pursuant to Rule 16.2 must be made not later than ten days before trial. Rule 16.2(c) and the exception to Rule 16.2(b) should provide sufficient flexibility in cases where a motion ten days before trial is not feasible.

Rule 16.2(d) permits the state to appeal an order granting a motion to suppress evidence in cases where the exclusion would substantially prejudice the prosecution of the case. The rule supersedes the holding of State v. Gibbons, 255 Ark. 352, 500 S.W.2d 341 (1973), construing Act 333 of 1971 to abrogate the state's right to appeal interlocutory orders in felony cases. The right to appeal under Rule 16.2(d) is even broader than that existing prior to Act 333 since an appeal of interlocutory orders is now permitted even in misdemeanor cases.

Under Rule 16.2(e) an order denying a defendant's motion to suppress evidence is reviewable only when the conviction is subsequently appealed. However, the rule does allow the defendant to appeal such a denial notwithstanding the fact that he pleaded guilty. Under present Arkansas practice, a plea of guilty waives any defenses that might have been interposed at trial. Cox v. State, 255 Ark. 204, 499 S.W.2d 630 (1973), and cases cited therein. This forces the defendant whose defense is based solely on the invalidity of a search or seizure to stand trial, unnecessarily, in order to preserve his point on appeal.

Comment I to Rule 16.2 is a nonexclusive list of the possible grounds for suppression of evidence. These grounds have been placed in a comment rather than a separate rule in order to emphasize the Commission's view that the provisions of Article III are general guidelines for searches and seizures rather than absolute rules. A further indication of the flexibility with which the rules are to be applied is found in subpart (i) of the comment, which provides that, subject to constitutional limitations, "[a] motion to suppress evidence shall be granted only if the court finds that the violation upon which it is based was substantial."

Rule 10.1. Definitions.

For the purposes of this Article, unless a different meaning is plainly required:

(a) "Search" means any intrusion other than an arrest, by an officer under color of authority, upon an individual's person, property, or privacy, for the purpose of seizing individuals or things or obtaining information by inspection or surveillance, if such intrusion, in the absence of legal authority or sufficient consent, would be a civil wrong, criminal offense, or violation of the individual's rights under the Constitution of the United States or this state.

(b) "Seizure" means the taking of any person or thing or the obtaining of information by an officer pursuant to a search or under other color of authority.

(c) "Search warrant" means an order issued by a judicial officer authorizing a search or seizure or both.

(d) "Officer" means a law enforcement officer or other person acting under color of authority to search and seize.

(e) "Individual" includes a corporation.

(f) "Vehicle" includes any craft or device for the transportation of persons or things by land, sea or air.

(g) "Property" means real or personal property, including vehicles.

(h) "Reasonable cause to believe" means a basis for belief in the existence of facts which, in view of the circumstances under and purposes for which the standard is applied, is substantial, objective, and sufficient to satisfy applicable constitutional requirements.

(i) "Reasonable belief" means a belief based on reasonable cause to believe.

The Rule 10.1 definition of "search" was relied upon by a sharply divided Court in Haynes v. State, 269 Ark. 506, 602 S.W.2d 599, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1066 (1980). The Court decided that securing a hotel room after a warrantless arrest while a search warrant was being obtained was an "intrusion" constituting a "search" under Rule 10.1. Officers had witnessed appellant and an undercover agent going into a hotel room under surveillance. The agent then left the room and told officers that he had purchased drugs from appellant. Thereupon some officers left to obtain a search warrant for the room in which the sale had taken place as well as two nearby rooms. Appellant then left the room in which the sale had taken place and went to another room in the hotel where he lived with his father. The police raided that room, arrested appellant, and "seized" the room without searching it while awaiting the search warrant. Appellant volunteered that he had marijuana in the room. After he produced it and showed it to the officers, they told him to replace it in the drawer from which he had taken it. After the search warrant arrived, a more thorough search disclosed not only the marijuana, but also LSD. Appellant was convicted of delivery of LSD and possession of LSD with intent to deliver and received a 20 year sentence on each charge.

A four judge majority held that no exigent circumstances existed to support a search under Rule 14.3 governing warrantless emergency searches. Three dissenters vigorously protested that the police were justified in arresting appellant and in securing the room to prevent the sale or destruction of drugs.

As frequently happens in search and seizure cases, the facts become the focal point of dispute between members of the majority and dissenters. Though the majority presumably would not gainsay that LSD can cause "serious bodily harm" and that further drug sales might have taken place had appellant not been arrested, it concluded without much explanation that the circumstances did not disclose grounds for an emergency search. The dissent, without adverting to Rule 14.3, concluded that manifest exigent circumstances justified the officers in remaining on the premises for three hours until a search warrant could be procured. The dissenting opinion argued that the search was "reasonable," but this argument does not meet the thrust of the majority's opinion, the question being whether a three-hour "seizure" of an entire room prior to a search under warrant was constitutionally permissible. Though the United States Supreme Court has approved the "seizure" of an automobile pending the issuance of a search warrant to search its interior, Chambers v. Maroney, 399 U.S. 42 (1970), the Arkansas Supreme Court has apparently decided that a dwelling place, not being mobile, cannot be quarantined, so to speak.

CASE NOTES

Constitutional Protection.

Absent exigent circumstances, an intrusion into an individual's place of abode without a warrant is a violation of that individual's rights under the Constitutions of the United States and the State of Arkansas. Haynes v. State, 269 Ark. 506, 602 S.W.2d 599, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1066, 101 S. Ct. 795, 66 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1980).

No provision of the constitution permits police officers without a warrant to break down doors, to enter the premises of an individual, and to detain him for several hours while waiting for a search warrant. Haynes v. State, 269 Ark. 506, 602 S.W.2d 599, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1066, 101 S. Ct. 795, 66 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1980).

In a case involving third-degree battery and possession of firearms by certain persons, a motion to suppress was properly denied because there was no violation of the United States Constitution since police had consent to search from defendant's wife; the trial judge found that the testimony of the law enforcement officers was more credible than the witnesses to the incident at issue. Witnesses contradicted the testimony of defendant's wife, who stated that the weapons belonged to her and that she did not want them removed. Tate v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 72 (2015).

Invasion of Privacy.

Where the police arrested the defendant for the sale of a controlled substance and seized his motel room until a search warrant could be obtained, the seizure of the room was an invasion of privacy; therefore, the search of the motel room and the seizure of evidence prior to the receipt of the warrant, three hours later, were not authorized and the evidence so obtained was inadmissible in the prosecution of the defendant. Haynes v. State, 269 Ark. 506, 602 S.W.2d 599, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1066, 101 S. Ct. 795, 66 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1980).

Official Intrusion.

Where search is not under government direction, the search is not an "official intrusion" and is not subject to the exclusionary rule under U.S. Const., Amend. 4 or implicated under Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure. Winters v. State, 301 Ark. 127, 782 S.W.2d 566 (1990).

Probable Cause.

Unverified anonymous telephone tips do not support or contribute to a probable cause determination. Burks v. State, 293 Ark. 374, 738 S.W.2d 399 (1987), overruled, State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

Although the search was lengthy, it was not unreasonable, based upon the totality of the circumstances, where the evidence revealed that the item listed on the warrant was never found, and what transpired during the search gave the officers reasonable cause to believe that other items were subject to seizure. Campbell v. State, 27 Ark. App. 82, 766 S.W.2d 940 (1989).

The degree of proof sufficient to sustain a finding of probable cause is less than that required to sustain a criminal conviction. Burris v. State, 330 Ark. 66, 954 S.W.2d 209 (1997).

Court did not err by denying the motion to suppress; officer had reasonable suspicion that defendant was driving while intoxicated before he administered the PBT because defendant admitted he had been drinking, the officer saw defendant driving, and the officer noticed that defendant smelled of intoxicants; there was probable cause to arrest even without consideration of the PBT results because defendant told the officer that he had been drinking, his eyes were bloodshot and watery, and he smelled of intoxicants and failed two field-sobriety tests. Fisher v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 301, 427 S.W.3d 743 (2013).

Search.

Officer's entry into defendant's home in connection with his investigation of a suspect who had just left the home in defendant's company was a "search" as defined by this rule. Holmes v. State, 75 Ark. App. 46, 54 S.W.3d 121 (2001), aff'd, 347 Ark. 530, 65 S.W.3d 860 (2002).

Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied where her co-tenant gave police officers consent to search the common areas of her residence and the officers saw drug paraphernalia, from the living room through an open door, in plain view on defendant's bed. Love v. State, 355 Ark. 334, 138 S.W.3d 676 (2003), overruled in part, Georgia v. Randolph, 547 U.S. 103, 126 S. Ct. 1515, 164 L. Ed. 2d 208 (2006).

Drug manufacturing evidence should have been suppressed where officers entered defendant's residence seeking persons named in arrest warrants, which was a search under this rule; because the person allowing consent was not advised that she could refuse consent, the search violated Ark. R. Crim. P. 11.1(c), the Fourth Amendment, and Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 15. Burroughs v. State, 96 Ark. App. 289, 241 S.W.3d 280 (2006).

Police violated defendant's rights, and therefore the trial court erred by denying defendant's motion to suppress, because the officer did not procure defendant's girlfriend's consent to search her apartment before the search began and they did not tell her that she could deny them entry before they entered. The officers did not speak their intentions to the girlfriend until they were already inside the apartment and they did not present a consent to search form or seek verbal consent to search from her until they were already inside the apartment. Virgil v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 314, 603 S.W.3d 603 (2020).

Seizure.

The chasing of a suspect by a police officer did not constitute a seizure. Stewart v. State, 42 Ark. App. 28, 853 S.W.2d 286 (1993).

Rule 10.2. Permissible objects of seizure.

(a) Unless prohibited by other express provision, the following are subject to seizure:

(i) evidence of or other information except privileged information concerning the commission of a criminal offense or other violation of law;

(ii) contraband, the fruits of crime, or things possessed in violation of the laws of this state;

(iii) weapons or other things used or likely to be used as means of committing a criminal offense; and

(iv) an individual for whose arrest there is reasonable cause, or who is unlawfully held in confinement or other restraint.

CASE NOTES

Evidence From Victim.

Seizure of evidence from clothing of crime victim is constitutional. Mitchell v. State, 321 Ark. 570, 906 S.W.2d 307 (1995).

Evidence of Criminal Offense.

Where, in prosecution for witnessing a dog fight presented as a public spectacle, a copy of the rules for dog fighting was lawfully seized by the officers as being incidental to the arrests, as being within the immediate control at least of one witness, and as being evidence of the offense, and the rules were relevant to the action, explaining the purpose of the pit and details shown by the video-tape, the copy of the rules was admissible even though the state did not show that the defendants were aware of its existence. Ash v. State, 290 Ark. 278, 718 S.W.2d 930 (1986).

Where officers lawfully seized defendant's vehicle as a permissible object of seizure after viewing it with his consent, and upon inspection of the vehicle, the police had a reasonable belief that it was evidence of the commission of a crime, then, since the initial seizure was legal and since the reason for and nature of the custody of the vehicle was to use it as evidence, the subsequent warrantless searches were not unconstitutional. Booth v. State, 26 Ark. App. 115, 761 S.W.2d 607, cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1047, 109 S. Ct. 1956, 104 L. Ed. 2d 425 (1989).

Denying defendant's motion to suppress his cell phone as evidence was not error where he was injured and climbing out of an upended vehicle when a police officer approached him, the officer knew that an individual matching defendant's description was seen in a vehicle matching defendant's car, defendant provided a phone number that was connected to the texts received by the missing victim, and thus, seizure of the phone was appropriate. Lewis v. State, 2017 Ark. 211, 521 S.W.3d 466 (2017).

RULE 11.

SEARCH AND SEIZURE BY CONSENT

Rule

Rule 11.1. Authority to search and seize pursuant to consent.

Rule 11.2. Persons from whom effective consent may be obtained.

Rule 11.3. Search limited by scope of consent.

Rule 11.4. Items seized: receipt.

Rule 11.5. Withdrawal or limitation of consent.

Rule 11.1. Authority to search and seize pursuant to consent.

(a) An officer may conduct searches and make seizures without a search warrant or other color of authority if consent is given to the search.

(b) The state has the burden of proving by clear and positive evidence that consent to a search was freely and voluntarily given and that there was no actual or implied duress or coercion.

(c) A search of a dwelling based on consent shall not be valid under this rule unless the person giving the consent was advised of the right to refuse consent. For purposes of this subsection, a “dwelling” means a building or other structure where any person lives or which is customarily used for overnight accommodation of persons. Each unit of a structure divided into separately occupied units is itself a dwelling.

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 2004, effective January 1, 2005.

Reporter’s Notes to 2004 Amendments:

The 2004 amendments added subsections (b) and (c). Subsection (b) codifies the burden of proof imposed on the state beginning with such cases as Scroggins v. State, 268 Ark. 261, 595 S.W.2d 219 (1980) and Rodriguez v. State, 262 Ark. 659, 559 S.W.2d 925 (1978). Arkansas Supreme Court jurisprudence on consensual searches requires the state to prove the voluntary character of consent by “clear and positive evidence” or “clear and positive testimony.” Subsection (c) incorporates the holding of State v. Brown, 356 Ark. 460, 156 S.W.3d 722 (2004), which requires that a home dweller be advised of his or her right to refuse consent to a search of the dwelling.

It is now clear that Arkansas law enforcement officers seeking consent to search from suspects do not have to advise them that they may refuse to consent. Miranda has no counterpart in the search and seizure context. Scroggins v. State, 268 Ark. 261, 595 S.W.2d 219 (1980); Dickson v. State, 260 Ark. 857, 545 S.W.2d 606 (1977).

The state’s burden of proof on the consent issue is to produce “clear and positive testimony that consent to a search was freely and voluntarily given and that there was no actual or implied duress or coercion.” Scroggins v. State, relying upon Rodriguez v. State, 262 Ark. 659, 559 S.W.2d 925 (1978). “Clear and positive testimony” is apparently testimony that clears the preponderance of the evidence hurdle but falls short of proof beyond a reasonable doubt. In Rodriguez, a number of police units converged on the vehicle driven by appellant and stopped it. An officer patted appellant down, examined his driver’s license and opened the trunk of the vehicle with a key provided by appellant. According to the officer, the key was provided in response to a request accompanied by an explanation that the officer was looking for marijuana. Appellant disputed this testimony, stating that when he asked the officer if he had a search warrant, the officer patted his gun, saying that was all the search warrant he needed. Pointing out that appellant was surrounded by armed police officers at the time of the search, the Court overturned the trial court’s finding of voluntary consent, saying that the state’s burden of proof “cannot be discharged by showing no more than acquiescence to a claim of lawful authority.” Rodriguez at 661, 559 S.W.2d at 926, quoting from White v. State, 261 Ark. 23, 545 S.W.2d 641 (1977).

Standard of Review.

It is important to distinguish between the state’s burden of proof at trial and the standard of review on appeal. Though the state has the burden of proving by clear and positive testimony that consent to a search was freely and voluntarily given without actual or implied duress or coercion, on appeal the Supreme Court make[s] an independent determination based upon the totality of the circumstances when it reviews a trial judge’s ruling on a motion to suppress evidence, and it will not set aside a trial judge’s finding unless it is clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 589 S.W.2d 11 (1979).

In regard to warrantless searches, the Court has stated: “On appeal [the appellate court] make[s] an independent determination, based on the totality of the circumstances, as to whether evidence obtained by means of a warrantless search . . . should be suppressed, and the trial court’s finding will not be set aside unless it is clearly against the preponderance of the evidence or clearly erroneous.” State v. Tucker, 268 Ark. 427, 428-29, 597 S.W.2d 584, 585 (1980).

CASE NOTES

Burden on State.

The state has the burden of proving by clear and positive testimony that consent to a search was freely and voluntarily given and that there was no actual or implied duress or coercion. Scroggins v. State, 268 Ark. 261, 595 S.W.2d 219 (1980).

Challenge to Legality.

The proper manner of asserting a challenge to the legality of a search is at a hearing on a timely motion to suppress the evidence where the claims can be made without danger of self-incrimination, and one that fails to do so has no standing to make that challenge at a later point. Mock v. State, 20 Ark. App. 117, 725 S.W.2d 1 (1987).

Consent to Search.

Where officers lawfully seized defendant's vehicle as a permissible object of seizure after viewing it with his consent, and upon inspection of the vehicle, the police had a reasonable belief that it was evidence of the commission of a crime, then, since the initial seizure was legal and since the reason for and nature of the custody of the vehicle was to use it as evidence, the subsequent warrantless searches were not unconstitutional. Booth v. State, 26 Ark. App. 115, 761 S.W.2d 607, cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1047, 109 S. Ct. 1956, 104 L. Ed. 2d 425 (1989).

A search of the defendant's sister's home, at which the defendant resided, was proper where (1) the defendant's signed parole release form stated that, "You must submit your person, place of residence, and motor vehicles to search and seizure at any time, day or night, with or without a search warrant, whenever requested to do so by any Department of Community Punishment officer," and (2) the defendant's parole officer had informed the defendant's sister that if she permitted the defendant to live in her home, it would be subject to search "24 hours a day, seven days a week without a warrant," and the sister agreed to that condition. McFerrin v. State, 344 Ark. 671, 42 S.W.3d 529 (2001).

A "knock and talk" search, which involves officers proceeding to a house, knocking on the door, asking to be admitted inside, and then seeking consent to search the house, is not inherently coercive and does not violate the rule. Hadl v. State, 74 Ark. App. 113, 47 S.W.3d 897 (2001).

Where officer asked defendant for consent to search home and defendant stated he wanted to call his attorney and went back into the house, and officer simply followed defendant into the house, officer's entry into the home was illegal and not supported by unequivocal proof of consent required by state caselaw, therefore, evidence of manufacture of methamphetamine was suppressed. Stone v. State, 348 Ark. 661, 74 S.W.3d 591 (2002).

Defendant's consent to search following the telephone conversation with his attorney was not sufficiently attenuated from officer's illegal entry into defendant's house without unequivocal consent; thus, the methamphetamine and methamphetamine-manufacturing products seized as a result of the illegal entry and search were the fruit of the poisonous tree and had to be suppressed. Stone v. State, 348 Ark. 661, 74 S.W.3d 591 (2002).

Officers' warrantless entry into defendant's home constituted a Fourth Amendment violation because the state failed to present any clear and positive testimony that any type of consent, verbal or otherwise, was obtained by officers before they entered defendant's house. Latta v. State, 350 Ark. 488, 88 S.W.3d 833 (2002).

There was no evidence to support defendant's assertion that he was coerced into consenting to the search of his vehicle where defendant gave his consent to a police officer over the phone and another officer present with defendant at the police station overheard the conversation in which defendant gave his consent. Medlock v. State, 79 Ark. App. 447, 89 S.W.3d 357 (2002).

Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied where her co-tenant gave police officers consent to search the common areas of her residence and the officers saw drug paraphernalia, from the living room through an open door, in plain view on defendant's bed. Love v. State, 355 Ark. 334, 138 S.W.3d 676 (2003), overruled in part, Georgia v. Randolph, 547 U.S. 103, 126 S. Ct. 1515, 164 L. Ed. 2d 208 (2006).

When an officer does not inform a suspect of his or her right to refuse consent, any subsequent search, even one based on the suspect's apparent consent, is invalid; subsection (c) of this rule was amended such that this rule now explicitly provides that a search of a dwelling based on consent shall not be valid unless the person giving consent was advised of the right to refuse consent. Carson v. State, 363 Ark. 158, 211 S.W.3d 527 (2005).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence of methamphetamine that was found during a search of his vehicle where defendant gave an officer permission to look inside the vehicle. Welch v. State, 364 Ark. 324, 219 S.W.3d 156 (2005).

In a murder case, the circuit court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress a .40 caliber Glock pistol where the record showed defendant waived his Miranda rights and consented to police officers' obtaining his gun so that they could conduct ballistics testing. Dickinson v. State, 367 Ark. 102, 238 S.W.3d 125 (2006).

Although defendant argued that he gave consent to search his house only after the officer made threats of incarceration and of taking his children from the home, the officer denied ever threatening defendant or his family in order to get consent to search the house and confirmed that no one was taken to jail that night; thus, the appellate court could not say that the trial court's denial of the motion to suppress was clearly erroneous. Gonder v. State, 95 Ark. App. 144, 234 S.W.3d 887 (2006).

Drug manufacturing evidence should have been suppressed where officers entered defendant's residence seeking persons named in arrest warrants, which was a search under Ark. R. Crim. P. 10.1; because the person allowing consent was not advised that she could refuse consent, the search violated subsection (c) of this rule, the Fourth Amendment, and Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 15. Burroughs v. State, 96 Ark. App. 289, 241 S.W.3d 280 (2006).

Where officers saw evidence that defendant was manufacturing methamphetamine during a warrantless search of his home, he was not entitled to suppress the evidence. The consent form signed by defendant as a condition of his release on parole was sufficient to support the officers' search under this rule. Hatcher v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 481, 324 S.W.3d 366 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained in a body cavity search where defendant was asked for, and gave, his consent to the search, the request for consent was specific, the search was conducted in just the manner and extent requested, the search did not exceed the scope of the consent given, and the search was reasonable. Jackson v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 359, 374 S.W.3d 857 (2010).

Trial court's finding that a deputy sheriff had defendant's consent to a pat-down search after a traffic stop was not clearly erroneous. Though defendant testified that he never consented to the search, the trial court was entitled to find the contrary testimony of the deputy to be more credible, and there was no evidence that defendant was coerced into consenting. Webb v. State, 2011 Ark. 430, 385 S.W.3d 152 (2011).

Denial of the motion to suppress evidence was affirmed because consent was obtained prior to the completion of the traffic stop; the video indicated that the written warning was handed to appellant approximately nine minutes into the traffic stop. Freeman v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 144, 391 S.W.3d 682 (2012).

State did not have right to appeal under Ark. R. App. P. Crim. 3(a)(1) from an order suppressing evidence because the determination that the search violated this rule as defendant was not a probationer and did not expressly consent to the search of a bedroom he rented but occasionally shared with his girlfriend, who was a probationer, was a mixed question of law and fact and did not involve the correct and uniform administration of the criminal law. State v. Myers, 2012 Ark. 453 (2012).

In a drug case, defendant's argument that the contraband seized from a storage unit should have been suppressed as "fruit of the poisonous tree" due to the fact that he was not given Miranda warnings was rejected because this doctrine assumed a violation of the search and seizure provision of the United States Constitution, not the self-incrimination provisions of the United States Constitution. Moreover, the evidence showed that defendant voluntarily gave consent to the search of the unit; defendant unlocked the unit and volunteered information to the officers, indicating that they would find drugs in a red cooler inside the unit. Collins v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 574, 446 S.W.3d 199 (2014).

In a constructive possession case, involving marijuana found in a non-owned vehicle that defendant was transporting along with other vehicles in his automobile-transport carrier, defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied because, inter alia, defendant's consent to the search was voluntary. Pokatilov v. State, 2017 Ark. 264, 526 S.W.3d 849 (2017).

Trial court did not clearly err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence because the consent of defendant's fiancée to search her vehicle was obtained prior to the completion of the traffic stop and was freely given according to the officer; the officer testified that the fiancée had granted her consent and that she had additionally told him that defendant had entered her vehicle with a plastic bag. Rainey v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 427, 528 S.W.3d 288 (2017).

Search of defendant's wallet violated the Fourth Amendment. While the officer had reasonable suspicion to investigate the presence of defendant's car in a closed city park during the early morning hours and a pat-down search of defendant's outer clothing was reasonable under the Fourth Amendment where the responses of defendant and his companion were evasive, if not completely untruthful and neither of them could produce a driver's license, the officer lacked probable cause to search defendant's wallet for an identification card. Further, it was not disputed that the officer failed to ask defendant to consent to the search of his wallet and defendant did not verbally authorize him to look inside. Shay v. State, 2018 Ark. 393, 562 S.W.3d 832 (2018).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized from his vehicle after expressly determining that the trooper was more credible in his testimony than defendant was, and believing the trooper's testimony that defendant consented and he would not have searched the vehicle if defendant had not consented. Shoulders v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 235, 598 S.W.3d 77 (2020).

Police violated defendant's rights, and therefore the trial court erred by denying defendant's motion to suppress, because the officer did not procure defendant's girlfriend's consent to search her apartment before the search began and they did not tell her that she could deny them entry before they entered. The officers did not speak their intentions to the girlfriend until they were already inside the apartment and they did not present a consent to search form or seek verbal consent to search from her until they were already inside the apartment. Virgil v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 314, 603 S.W.3d 603 (2020).

Proof of Voluntariness.

State failed to meet its burden of proving that consent was freely and voluntarily given where defendant, whose automobile was stopped by armed police officers, handed over the keys to his trunk. Rodriguez v. State, 262 Ark. 659, 559 S.W.2d 925 (1978).

Consent to search was voluntarily given by the defendant's father where (1) the search form stated that he had been informed of his constitutional right not to permit a search without a search warrant and that he willingly gave his permission to conduct a complete search of his premises and property, and (2) a deputy testified that the father told him he didn't have anything to hide, that his boy shouldn't have anything to hide either, and that he officers could take a look around. Burdyshaw v. State, 69 Ark. App. 243, 10 S.W.3d 918 (2000).

Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied as there was no evidence of any duress or coercion in obtaining defendant's consent to search his home; he appeared to understand what was going on; and he gave officers the key to his house, and voluntarily advised the police of some of its contents; thus, there was no error in the trial court's finding that defendant's consent to the search was freely and voluntarily given. Dye v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 545, 564 S.W.3d 299 (2018).

Right to Refuse.

Knowledge of the right to refuse consent to search is not a requirement to prove the voluntariness of consent; specifically, a Miranda warning is not required before a warrantless search is conducted. Scroggins v. State, 268 Ark. 261, 595 S.W.2d 219 (1980).

Search of defendant's vehicle was not in violation of the Arkansas Constitution because the knock-and-talk procedure, during which officers were required to inform a home dweller that he or she had the right to refuse consent to a search, did not apply to the search of a vehicle; hence, defendant's motion to suppress evidence was properly denied because defendant consented to the search. Welch v. State, 364 Ark. 324, 219 S.W.3d 156 (2005).

Rule 11.2. Persons from whom effective consent may be obtained.

The consent justifying a search and seizure can only be given, in the case of:

- (a) search of an individual's person, by the individual in question or, if the person is under fourteen (14) years of age, by both the individual and his parent, guardian, or a person in loco parentis;
- (b) search of a vehicle, by the person registered as its owner or in apparent control of its operation or contents at the time consent is given; and
- (c) search of premises, by a person who, by ownership or otherwise, is apparently entitled to give or withhold consent.

The Arkansas Supreme Court has suggested that so long as a searching police officer reasonably believes that a person giving consent had authority to do so, the consent is valid, notwithstanding a later determination that the consensor had no such authority. Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 54-55, 589 S.W.2d 11, 13 (1979). Evidence seized pursuant to consent by one lacking authority to give it might survive a motion to suppress on the theory that the exclusionary rule is designed to deter future unlawful police conduct, not vindicate personal constitutional rights, and the deterrent function is not well served by excluding evidence seized by police officers acting in good faith and on reasonable grounds. See United States v. Peterson, 524 F.2d 167 (4th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1088 (1976). See, also, United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897, 82 L. Ed. 2d 677 (1984); Massachusetts v. Sheppard, 468 U.S. 981, 82 L. Ed. 2d 737 (1984).

The Court's lines of inquiry in consent search cases generally track the grounds set out in Comment 1(a)(iv) to Rule 16.2. The appearance of authority to give consent is an important factor in determining the validity of the search for the purposes of Rule 11, which relieves the searching officer of criminal or civil liability. Apparent authority has not, however, been found by the Arkansas Supreme Court to foreclose attack on the admissibility of evidence where there was no authority in fact. See, for instance, Spears v. State, 270 Ark. 331, 334, 605 S.W.2d 9, 11 (1980). But, given the United States Supreme Court's explicit recognition that the exclusionary rule is founded upon deterrence of future unlawful police conduct so that good faith searches are immunized, United States v. Leon and Massachusetts v. Sheppard, it is conceivable that a "good faith" doctrine may arise to immunize a seizure made pursuant to a search by an officer acting in good faith pursuant to consent given by one having apparent but not actual authority to consent.

It should be noted that an Arkansas Federal District Court has ruled that a third party cannot give consent validating a warrantless search of areas in which an absent party retains an expectation of privacy, regardless of actual or apparent authority on the part of the third person consensor. United States v. Butler, 495 F. Supp. 679 (E.D. Ark. 1980). In Butler, appellant's father consented to a search of the room in the father's home where appellant lived. FBI agents entered the room and opened a suitcase and a bureau drawer. The court suppressed the evidence on two grounds. First, appellant had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the suitcase and bureau drawer. Second, the prosecution failed to show exigent circumstances justifying a warrantless search.

The court relied upon Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753, 61 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1979) in making its privacy finding. In Sanders, the United States Supreme Court found that a warrantless search of luggage taken from the trunk of an automobile lawfully stopped was violative of the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, notwithstanding the validity of the stop and the valid warrantless arrest of the automobile's occupants. The Court found that exigent circumstances did not exist, the suitcase and its owners being in custody. "The exigency of mobility must be assessed at the point immediately before the search — after the police have seized the object to be searched and have it securely within their control." Id. at 763, 61 L. Ed. 2d at 244-45. Also, see United States v. Block, 590 F.2d 535 (4th Cir. 1978), where the court found that a mother had authority to permit inspection of the room that her son, the defendant, occupied as a guest in her home, but that this authority did not extend to the interior of her son's footlocker in this room, the expectation of privacy rationale preventing such a search.

The Arkansas Supreme Court's recitation of the facts in Grant v. State does not disclose the location of the items seized, so it is difficult to speculate how the Butler Court would have ruled on those facts.

It should be noted, however, that in Alford v. State, 291 Ark. 243, 724 S.W.2d 151 (1987) the Arkansas Supreme Court upheld the seizure of a gun that was concealed under books on a shelf in appellant's closed closet on the theory that his father, who shared the apartment, had impliedly consented to the search by inviting police officers into the apartment immediately after decedent had been shot by appellant. It later came out that appellant had shot decedent during an argument. Appellant's father was present and asked a neighbor to call an ambulance and the police. When police officers arrived, appellant and his father advised them that decedent had committed suicide. At some point the investigating officers became skeptical about the suicide claim and conducted the warrantless search of the apartment in which the murder weapon was discovered. Without citing Butler and though no explicit consent to search was given by either appellant or his father, the Court upheld the conviction, concluding: Here, the officers were permissibly in the Alford's apartment investigating a reported suicide, and no probable cause existed initially to obtain a warrant or to make an arrest. Yet, as a result of Dennis Alford's invitation into the apartment and his total cooperation in the search, the officers' search did ultimately yield substantial evidence that served as a basis for appellant's prosecution. On the facts presented in this situation, we hold the trial judge correctly upheld the search as constitutionally permissible. 291 Ark. at 249, 724 S.W.2d at 154. See, also, Spears v. State, 270 Ark. 331, 605 S.W.2d 9 (1980).

Warrantless Search of Closed Container Inside Passenger Compartment of Vehicle.

In Honea v. State, 15 Ark. App. 382, 695 S.W.2d 391 (1985), an officer posing as a truck-driver wishing to buy amphetamines had a conversation with appellant on a CB radio band and arranged to meet him. Police arrested appellant as he sat in the cab of his employer's truck on his employer's property. After arresting appellant, the officer searched the truck and found counterfeit drugs in an unlocked briefcase in the cab. Before the search was conducted, permission was obtained from a high level managerial official of the company. The Court found that the company official had authority to consent to the truck search. The Court went on to state as an alternative justification for the search that the officer was entitled to search the cab of the truck incidental to appellant's valid arrest under New York v. Belton, 453 U.S. 454, 69 L. Ed. 2d 768 (1981).

In Belton, the United States Supreme Court held that a policeman who has made a lawful custodial arrest of an automobile's occupant may contemporaneously search the automobile's passenger compartment and examine and seize the contents of containers found there. The Court upheld the admission into evidence of drugs seized from a closed pocket of a jacket on the back seat of an automobile. In Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753, 61 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1979), the Court had previously observed that the "automobile exception" is recognized because of the inherent mobility of automobiles and the diluted reasonable expectation of privacy that may exist with respect to property in an automobile, depending upon the circumstances of each case.

In Honea v. State, the evidence was seized from a vehicle owned by a party other than appellant, indicating that his expectation of privacy was minimal. On the other hand, because ownership was in the company and the truck was immobilized on company property and in the custody of responsible officials, exigent circumstances justifying a warrantless search were completely absent. Accordingly, dicta by the Court in Honea to the effect that New York v. Belton is dispositive may be less reliable than would appear at first blush.

In Harmon v. State, 277 Ark. 265, 641 S.W.2d 21 (1982), the Arkansas Supreme Court upheld the fruits of a "search" consented to by a sixteen-year-old. The viability of the Harmon decision as authority for the general proposition that sixteen-year-olds may consent to premises searches is uncertain. The target of the search had a turbulent relationship with the mother of the sixteen-year-old consentor and lived on uncertain terms with her in her home, the site of the "search." And, as the Court takes pains to point out, the sixteen-year-old consentor actually retrieved the murder weapon herself from an undisclosed place at the house. In fact, after police officers entered the house, they made no search, but stood by and took possession of items delivered by the child. Appellant was not the parent of the child. Whether under other circumstances the parent of a sixteen-year-old would be found to have a reasonable expectation of privacy in regard to items in a dresser drawer in his room in a house occupied by the family is a question that cannot be answered by reference to the Harmon decision. Compare United States v. Butler; Alford v. State.

Apparent Authority.

Although a motion to suppress may be based upon the fact that consent was not given by any person authorized to give consent, this limitation on this rule does not mean that the appearance of authority to give consent is not an important factor in determining validity of consent to search, if the searching officers could reasonably believe in good faith that the one giving consent had authority to do so. Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 589 S.W.2d 11 (1979).

Consent to search effective to validate a warrantless search and seizure may, in appropriate circumstances, be given by a person other than the victim of the search, this third person authority may be based upon the fact that the third person shares with the absent target of the search a common authority over, general access to, or mutual use of the place or object sought to be inspected under circumstances that make it reasonable to believe that the third person has the right to permit the inspection in his own right and that the absent target has assumed the risk that the third person may grant this permission to others; however, third party consent, no matter how voluntarily given, cannot validate a warrantless search when the circumstances manifest to the contrary that the absent target of the search retains an expectation of privacy in the place or object, notwithstanding some appearance of claim of authority by the third person. United States v. Butler, 495 F. Supp. 679 (E.D. Ark. 1980).

Although this rule does not, standing alone, govern admissibility of things seized during the search, the appearance of authority to give consent and the good faith of the officers are significant factors in determining the validity of the consent to search. Spears v. State, 270 Ark. 331, 605 S.W.2d 9 (1980).

Where woman consenting to search told officers the house belonged to her son, who had moved away, and that "she was taking care of it and was the overseer" and when asked if she would consent to a search, replied, "Yes you can. No one lives in there," and told them "if anything stolen is in the house, I want it out," and where officer who went into house at defendant's request saw that living room was unfurnished and electricity was off, it was not unreasonable for the officers to believe that the woman was vested with sufficient control over the premises, and in fact she did possess sufficient authority over the premises, to give a valid consent to a search without the issuance of a search warrant. Spears v. State, 270 Ark. 331, 605 S.W.2d 9 (1980).

Person sitting in driver's seat of parked car was in apparent control for purposes of consent to search where owner was sitting in passenger seat but ran away and did not return until after search was complete. Ferrell v. State, 7 Ark. App. 36, 644 S.W.2d 302 (1982).

An assistant manager of an industrial plant, who was the highest-ranking person on the scene when the driver of a truck owned by the plant owner was arrested, was the truck owner's agent and as such, was clearly acting within the bounds of his delegated authority in consenting to a search of the truck, even though the manager's responsibilities did not specifically include trucks. Honea v. State, 15 Ark. App. 382, 695 S.W.2d 391 (1985).

Where defendant made representations to police that he lived in the apartment, defendant had apparent authority to consent to search of premises, and police officer's search that led to defendant being charged with marijuana possession was valid. Strickland v. State, 80 Ark. App. 268, 94 S.W.3d 376 (2002).

It was apparent that wife had common authority over items she discovered in a part of the home jointly accessed and controlled by defendant and his wife as they cohabitated in the home and defendant took no steps to prevent his wife from obtaining the materials, other than hiding some of them on a shelf in a doorless closet; thus, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress the materials. Bruce v. State, 367 Ark. 497, 241 S.W.3d 728 (2006).

Deputy's initial intrusion into defendant's residence was not based on facts and circumstances that overcame the presumption that his warrantless intrusion was unreasonable; it was unreasonable for the deputy to rely on the owner's consent to enter defendant's residence without further inquiry and further evidence that defendant had been lawfully evicted. Breshears v. State, 94 Ark. App. 192, 228 S.W.3d 508 (2006).

Where the owner of a vehicle was riding as a passenger during a traffic stop, the driver of the car had the authority to consent to a police search of the vehicle under subsection (b) of this rule. When the owner was charged with theft of property found in the trunk, the trial court properly denied his motion to suppress evidence because the officer had valid consent to conduct the search of the vehicle. Cole v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 514, 324 S.W.3d 695 (2009).

Police officer may rely on the consent to search given by the driver of a vehicle, even in the presence of the owner of the vehicle, unless the owner asserts his or her right to refuse consent. When the owner of a car allows another person to drive his or her car, he or she gives that person temporary authority to consent to a search of that car; the consent given to a police officer by the driver is valid, absent an objection from the owner. Cole v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 514, 324 S.W.3d 695 (2009).

Effect of Rule.

Although this rule relieves the searching officer of any criminal or civil liability, it does not, standing alone, govern admissibility of things seized during the search. Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 589 S.W.2d 11 (1979).

Evidence.

Evidence held sufficient to support finding of consent. Hamm v. State, 296 Ark. 385, 757 S.W.2d 932 (1988).

Expectation of Privacy.

Where there were no exigent circumstances which would have justified a warrantless search, and where there was evidence that the defendant had a reasonable expectation of privacy in his bureau drawer and suitcase, the defendant's father had no lawful authority to consent to the search thereof, and the items obtained through the search would be suppressed. United States v. Butler, 495 F. Supp. 679 (E.D. Ark. 1980).

Where the owner of a self-storage garage asked the police to investigate a chemical odor coming from one of the rented compartments in his garage, the contents of a van found in the compartment were admissible as evidence since by the terms of the rental contract the van was abandoned property, the van owners no longer had any expectation of privacy in it, and the owner of the premises had requested the search. Harris v. State, 12 Ark. App. 181, 672 S.W.2d 905, rev'd, 284 Ark. 247, 681 S.W.2d 334 (1984).

Circuit court properly denied defendant's pretrial motion to suppress evidence gained in a search of an apartment because one of the apartment residents gave his consent to search, the resident characterized defendant as "an acquaintance" and was unaware that defendant was in the apartment when officers knocked on the door, defendant failed to present any evidence (testimony or otherwise) to support the assertion that he possessed a reasonable expectation of privacy in the apartment or in a nearby backpack that contained papers with a different person's name on them. Anderson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 92, 538 S.W.3d 279 (2018).

Foster Father.

Despite the facts that there was no limitation as to time, area, or items to be seized in a "consent to search" form signed by defendant's foster father, that the form failed to warn him that his consent could be withdrawn or limited at any time, that several police officers bearing weapons were present, that the request for consent was made at 3:30 a.m., shortly after the defendant had been arrested without warrant, that the foster father was scared when he signed the form, and that it would have been easy to have obtained a search warrant, where the search was limited to the kitchen and defendant's room, where the foster father who admitted he had, in fact, signed the form had been told that the only search was to be for a gun and the search was so limited, where no warning was required that consent could be withdrawn, and where there were practical difficulties in obtaining a search warrant at 3:30 a.m., the finding by the trial court that the consent was voluntary was not clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 589 S.W.2d 11 (1979).

Since it is clear that foster father, in addition to being the owner of the premises which constituted and were maintained as a single family dwelling, was the head of the single family household and had not surrendered or relinquished exclusive control of the defendant's bedroom or the ability to designate what use could be made of it, by lease or otherwise, he maintained the right to access and control over the entire premises, and had authority to consent to a search of the bedroom. Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 589 S.W.2d 11 (1979).

Where defendant, who was the foster son of his natural father, lived with his foster parents in a house owned by his foster father which was a one family dwelling and where his foster mother washed his clothes and put them in his dresser in his room, the fact that the defendant paid board and owned everything in the room did not prevent his foster father from being able to consent to a search in his absence under subsection (c) of this rule. Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 589 S.W.2d 11 (1979).

In Loco Parentis.

For the purposes of consenting to a search, the status of one in loco parentis and a natural parent should be the same; therefore, the fact defendant was a foster child made no difference. Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 589 S.W.2d 11

(1979); Winters v. State, 301 Ark. 127, 782 S.W.2d 566 (1990).

Lack of Authority.

Consent to search held invalid where the consent to search the vehicle was not obtained from the owner, who was sitting inside the car at the time the officer arrived. State v. Pruitt, 347 Ark. 355, 64 S.W.3d 255 (2002).

Registered Owner.

Motion to suppress evidence was properly denied in a drug case where the evidence showed that a search based on a pretextual stop was valid; the officer had probable cause for the stop since the vehicle was speeding, consent to search was given by the registered owner, and the consent was not limited to exclude containers found inside the vehicle. Flores v. State, 87 Ark. App. 327, 194 S.W.3d 207 (2004).

Trial court did not clearly err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence because the consent of defendant's fiancée to search her vehicle was obtained prior to the completion of the traffic stop and was freely given according to the officer; the officer testified that the fiancée had granted her consent and that she had additionally told him that defendant had entered her vehicle with a plastic bag. Rainey v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 427, 528 S.W.3d 288 (2017).

Rule 11.3. Search limited by scope of consent.

A search based on consent shall not exceed, in duration or physical scope, the limits of the consent given.

CASE NOTES

Implied Consent.

The defendant's mother-in-law did not give implied consent to a police officer to follow her down a hall into the defendant's bedroom where: (1) the mother-in-law testified that she asked the officer to step inside the house because the family dog was making a disturbance, and for no other reason, (2) the officer asked for the defendant, (3) the mother-in-law went to the defendant's bedroom to retrieve him, and (4) the officer followed the mother-in-law to the defendant's bedroom. Norris v. State, 338 Ark. 397, 993 S.W.2d 918, modified, 338 Ark. 397, 999 S.W.2d 183 (1999).

The defendant's wife did not give implied consent to a police officer to follow her mother down a hall into the defendant's bedroom where: (1) the mother-in-law testified that she asked the officer to step inside the house because the family dog was making a disturbance, and for no other reason, (2) the officer asked for the defendant, (3) the mother-in-law went to the defendant's bedroom to retrieve him, and (4) the officer followed the mother-in-law to the defendant's bedroom; no consent could be implied by the wife's presence in the living room and her failure to object when the officer followed her mother to the defendant's bedroom. Norris v. State, 338 Ark. 397, 993 S.W.2d 918, modified, 338 Ark. 397, 999 S.W.2d 183 (1999).

Search Exceeding Consent.

The entry by a police officer into the defendant's bedroom exceeded any consent given by the defendant's visiting mother-in-law where: (1) the mother-in-law testified that she asked the officer to step inside the house because the family dog was making a disturbance, and for no other reason, and that she never asked or verbally consented to the officer coming any further into the house, and specifically, not down the hall and into the defendant's bedroom; and (2) the officer never asserted that he perceived the initial invitation as anything more than entry inside the front door or that he relied on that invitation in any way as a basis for going into the interior of the defendant's home. Norris v. State, 338 Ark. 397, 993 S.W.2d 918, modified, 338 Ark. 397, 999 S.W.2d 183 (1999).

Search Not Exceeding Consent.

Search of defendant's vehicle did not exceed the scope of his consent because defendant did not claim that he placed a limit on what parts of the vehicle an officer could search; hence, the court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence of methamphetamine that was found behind a dashboard panel in the vehicle. Welch v. State, 364 Ark. 324, 219 S.W.3d 156 (2005).

Denial of the motion to suppress evidence was affirmed because consent was obtained prior to the completion of the traffic stop; the video indicated that the written warning was handed to appellant approximately nine minutes into the traffic stop. Freeman v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 144, 391 S.W.3d 682 (2012).

Rule 11.4. Items seized: receipt.

After making a seizure, the officer shall make a list of the things seized, and shall deliver a receipt fairly describing the things seized to the person consenting to the search.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 11.4

Failure to provide a list of things seized to the person consenting to a search will not invalidate a consensual search absent a showing of prejudice. King v. State, 262 Ark. 342, 557 S.W.2d 386 (1977). Rule 16.2(e) states that "a motion to suppress evidence shall be granted only that if Court finds that the violation upon which it is based was substantial . . ." Comment I(a)(iv) to Rule 16.2 does not make failure to provide an inventory list a ground for invalidating a consent search.

CASE NOTES

Delivery of Receipt.

In a prosecution for theft by receiving, defendant was not prejudiced by the delivery of a copy of the consent form with a list of the items seized to defendant's wife rather than to his mother-in-law who had given her consent to the warrantless search of the premises. King v. State, 262 Ark. 342, 557 S.W.2d 386 (1977), overruled in part, State v. Brown, 356 Ark. 460, 156 S.W.3d 722 (2004).

items seized, in the absence of prejudice, can amount to nothing more than harmless error. Wiman v. State, 266 Ark. 380, 583 S.W.2d 67 (1979).

Rule 11.5. Withdrawal or limitation of consent.

A consent given may be withdrawn or limited at any time prior to the completion of the search, and if so withdrawn or limited, the search under authority of the consent shall cease, or be restricted to the new limits, as the case may be. Things discovered and subject to seizure prior to such withdrawal or limitation of consent shall remain subject to seizure despite such change or termination of the consent.

Warning Unnecessary.

This rule does give one the right to withdraw or limit a consent previously given, but there is nothing in the rule requiring that the person giving the consent be advised of a right to revoke it. Pace v. State, 265 Ark. 712, 580 S.W.2d 689 (1979).

RULE 12.SEARCH AND SEIZURE INCIDENTAL TO ARREST*Rule

Rule 12.1. Permissible purposes.

Rule 12.2. Search of the person: permissible scope.

Rule 12.3. Search of the person: search of body cavities.

Rule 12.4. Search of vehicles: permissible circumstances.

Rule 12.5. Search of premises: permissible circumstances, time and scope.

Rule 12.6. Custodial taking of property pursuant to arrest; vehicles.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 12

In regard to warrantless searches, the Court has stated: "On appeal [the appellate court] make[s] an independent determination, based on the totality of the circumstances, as to whether evidence obtained by means of a warrantless search . . . should be suppressed, and the trial court's finding will not be set aside unless it is clearly against the preponderance of the evidence or clearly erroneous." State v. Tucker, 268 Ark. 427, 428-29, 597 S.W.2d 584, 585 (1980). See, also, Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 589 S.W.2d 11 (1979).

Rule 12.1. Permissible purposes.

An officer who is making a lawful arrest may, without a search warrant, conduct a search of the person or property of the accused for the following purposes only:

- (a) to protect the officer, the accused, or others;
- (b) to prevent the escape of the accused;
- (c) to furnish appropriate custodial care if the accused is jailed; or
- (d) to obtain evidence of the commission of the offense for which the accused has been arrested or to seize contraband, the fruits of crime, or other things criminally possessed or used in conjunction with the offense.

Comment to Rule 12.1

Searches of the person shall be carried out with all reasonable regard for privacy, and unless exceptional circumstances otherwise require, the search of an accused prior to his arrival at a police station shall be only as extensive as is reasonably necessary to effect the arrest with all practicable safety, or to prevent escape or the destruction of evidence.

As indicated in the original commentary to this rule, in cases involving searches — especially, of premises — incident to arrest, Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 23 L. Ed. 2d 685 (1969) is the fountainhead. Chimel held that a contemporaneous warrantless search incident to a lawful arrest may extend to the area from within which the person arrested might obtain either a weapon or something that could be used as evidence against him. Over ten years later, in New York v. Belton, 453 U.S. 454, 69 L. Ed. 2d 768 (1981), the Court held that the Chimel decision permits the conclusion that a law enforcement officer making an arrest of an automobile occupant may contemporaneously search the passenger compartment of the automobile, examining containers and seizing their contents as an incident of the arrest.

Pat-Down Search vs. Inventory Searches.

When the standard applied by the Arkansas Supreme Court in Webb v. State, 269 Ark. 415, 601 S.W.2d 848 (1980) is measured against tests previously adopted by both the Arkansas Supreme Court and the United States Supreme Court, the results reached in Webb are perplexing.

Police officers reported to a motel after being advised that a mattress was on fire in a room. The officers did not charge any of the five people in the room with an offense based upon that incident, but did obtain their names and communicate them to headquarters for an arrest warrant check. The officers were advised by headquarters that there was an outstanding arrest warrant for appellant. They thereupon advised him that he would have to come to the police station. Appellant was searched twice, first in a pat-down search immediately after his arrest under a warrant later declared invalid by the Court and, second, in an inventory search conducted prior to incarceration at the police station. Evidently, neither the parties nor the Court questioned that appellant had been arrested prior to the pat-down.

The Court then determined that the arrest warrant was invalid and that therefore the arrest preceding the pat-down was invalid. Yet the Court refused to follow Whiteley v. Warden, 401 U.S. 560, 28 L. Ed. 2d 306 (1971) and Rodrigues v. State, 262 Ark. 659, 559 S.W.2d 925 (1978), holding inadmissible items seized in searches pursuant to arrests under invalid warrants. Instead, the Court observed that "in both of these cases the search was made of an automobile, and we are not willing to extend the holding of those cases to apply to the facts here of a 'pat-down' search of an individual made incident to arrest." 269 Ark. at 421, 601 S.W.2d at 852.

The Court went on to discuss limited searches for weapons under Rule 3.4, perhaps because the Rule 3.4 standard turns on "reasonable suspicion," a lower hurdle to clear, so to speak, than the "reasonable cause" required for a valid arrest permitting a warrantless search. Ignoring that appellant was in fact arrested before the pat-down search, the Court appears to intimate that, had the officers made a pat-down search under Rule 3.4 as a result of a valid Rule 3.1 stop pursuant to a reasonable suspicion, the evidence disclosed by the pat-down would have been admissible. This hypothetical set of circumstances is then measured against Rule 3 standards.

The Court's ruling is also confounding in that it suppresses evidence seized during an inventory search under Rule 12.2 taking place a short time after the pat-down search, stating that Rule 12.2 "does not authorize such a search for [sic] incarceration under an invalid arrest warrant." Id. at 422, 601 S.W.2d at 853. It should be noted that Rule 12.1, governing the pat-down search immediately after the initial arrest under the invalid warrant, begins: "An officer who is making a lawful arrest . . ."

Justices Mays and Purtle filed a dissent protesting that no rule of criminal procedure authorizes even a pat-down search pursuant to an illegal arrest.

Webb can certainly be read as saying that evidence will be suppressed if it is discovered pursuant to an inventory search at a police station after an invalid arrest, though the same evidence is admissible if seized an hour before after being found while defendant is being patted down immediately after the illegal arrest.

Vehicle Searches Incident to Arrest.

In Jackson v. State, 266 Ark. 754, 585 S.W.2d 367 (Ark. App. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1017, 62 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1980), a law enforcement officer received a call that a theft was in progress nearby. While driving to the scene, he saw appellant's car approaching from the opposite direction. The officer had been told that persons had been seen rolling a large tire across a parking lot away from the scene of the crime. Appellant's car was "sitting low in the rear." Jackson at 759, 585 S.W.2d at 370.

The officer stopped the car, searched the trunk, and found the stolen tire, which was introduced into evidence over appellant's objections. The Arkansas Court of Appeals' conclusion that the search was lawful is unexceptionable under standards provided by Chambers v. Maroney, 399 U.S. 42, 26 L. Ed. 2d 419 (1970) and Carroll v. United States, 267 U.S. 132, 69 L. Ed. 543 (1925). As pointed out by the Court of Appeals, "the Arkansas Supreme Court has previously held that whenever a police officer has reasonable cause to believe that contraband is being unlawfully transported in a vehicle, then the vehicle may be the object of a warrantless search." Jackson at 759, 585 S.W.2d at 370. It must be remembered, however, that the scope of a permissible Carroll search will in many cases be broader than the scope of a search incident to the arrest of a vehicle occupant. In Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753, 61 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1979), the United States Supreme Court found invalid a search of a locked briefcase in the trunk of a vehicle being searched after the lawful arrest of an occupant of the vehicle. The Court emphasized that warrantless searches of vehicles incident to arrest are grounded on considerations of mobility of the vehicle and the lesser expectation of privacy in a vehicle. In fact, in Sanders v. State, 262 Ark. 595, 559 S.W.2d 704 (1978) (Arkansas v. Sanders below), the Arkansas Supreme Court placed emphasis on the fact that the suitcase was locked in the trunk of a taxicab and that the automobile's mobility was not a factor.

Arkansas v. Sanders must, in turn, be read in conjunction with New York v. Belton, 453 U.S. 454, 69 L. Ed. 2d 768 (1981), where the Court held that a policeman who has made a lawful custodial arrest of an automobile's occupant may contemporaneously search the automobile's passenger compartment and examine and seize the contents of containers in the passenger compartment. The Court upheld the admission into evidence of drugs seized from a closed pocket of a jacket on the back seat of the automobile. So, though it is difficult to reconcile the United States Supreme Court's holding in Arkansas v. Sanders and New York v. Belton, it is not safe to conclude that containers located in the trunk of a stopped vehicle may be searched without a warrant as an incident to a lawful arrest, though a trunk search in circumstances contemplated by Rule 14.1 will presumably be upheld.

Scope of Search vs. Right to Seize.

In Van Daley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 127, 725 S.W.2d 574 (1987), the Court of Appeals noted that "while Rules 12.1(d) and 12.4(a) limit the scope of a search to that for evidence connected with the offense for which one has been arrested, they do not so limit the items that can properly be seized. . . . Once [things criminally possessed] are discovered, they may be seized and used as evidence without regard to whether they are connected with the offense for which the accused was initially arrested." Id. at 131, 725 S.W.2d at 576 (Court's emphasis).

In Moore v. State, 261 Ark. 274, 551 S.W.2d 185 (1977) (Supplemental Opinion on Rehearing), evidence seized in a warrantless search of appellant's bedroom after he had been awakened, arrested, and while he was being taken to a police station was excluded, the Court finding that the police should have obtained a search warrant. The Court did not discuss Rule 12.5. In its original opinion, in response to an argument that the search was necessary to prevent destruction of evidence by appellant's family, the Court said, "There is no reason one of the officers could not have obtained a search warrant while the other officers remained at the scene." Id. at 277, 551 S.W.2d at 187. It should be noted, however, that in a previous decision, Haynes v. State, 269 Ark. 506, 602 S.W.2d 599, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1066 (1980), the Court invalidated a search on grounds that securing a residence after a warrantless arrest pending arrival of a warrant was an impermissible "intrusion" constituting a "search" under Rule 10.1(a).

Once one grants that exigent circumstances justify the warrantless arrest of a person at his residence, it appears anomalous to maintain that the same exigent circumstances do not justify securing the residence or a portion of it pending issuance of a search warrant that, ex hypothesi, could not have been secured previously. As Justice Hickman convincingly observed in dissent in Moore: I could accept the law that a person cannot be arrested in his home without an arrest warrant, and that his home at the same time could not be searched without a search warrant; or I could accept the law that a person can be arrested without an arrest warrant on probable cause, and at the same time his premises reasonably searched for any evidence connected with the alleged crime. These are propositions that are both reasonable and can be scrutinized by the courts to guarantee the reasonable use of police power. But to say that a person can be taken from his home in the early morning hours without an arrest warrant and at the same time that the police cannot lawfully use evidence taken from under his bed, obviously connected with the crime, cannot be defended logically. Which is the greater threat, or potential threat, to individual rights? 261 Ark. at 278-E, 551 S.W.2d at 190. (Court's emphasis.)

Reasonable Cause Test: Warrantless Searches.

Though Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 76 L. Ed. 2d 527 (1983), dealt with standards to be applied to ascertain whether reasonable cause exists to support the issuance of a search warrant, the Arkansas Court of Appeals has also applied the Gates "totality of the circumstances" test in analyzing whether reasonable cause exists to support a warrantless search. See, for example, Mock v. State, 20 Ark. App. 72, 723 S.W.2d 844 (1987).

Applicability.

Game and Fish officers are empowered to make arrests for violation of the game and fish laws and in making such arrests, those officers may also conduct a search of the person or property of the accused including his vehicle, in accordance with this rule. State v. Henry, 304 Ark. 339, 802 S.W.2d 448 (1991).

Consent.

It is well established that validly-obtained consent justifies an officer in conducting a warrantless search, with or without probable cause. Stout v. State, 320 Ark. 552, 898 S.W.2d 457 (1995).

Defendant's convictions for possession of drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture methamphetamine and possession of pseudoephedrine were upheld as his argument that the search and seizure were not authorized by this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 12.4 was inappropriate because the trial court concluded that defendant had consented to the search, making arguments based on those rules irrelevant. Nelson v. State, 365 Ark. 314, 229 S.W.3d 35 (2006).

Evidence of Criminal Offense.

Where, in prosecution for witnessing a dog fight presented as a public spectacle, a copy of the rules for dog fighting was lawfully seized by the officers as being incidental to the arrests, as being within the immediate control at least of one witness, and as being evidence of the offense, and the rules were relevant to the action, explaining the purpose of the pit and details shown by the video-tape, the copy of the rules was admissible even though the state did not show that the defendants were aware of its existence. Ash v. State, 290 Ark. 278, 718 S.W.2d 930 (1986).

It was not error to refuse to suppress the shotgun in defendant's trial for being a felon in possession of a firearm, despite the fact that the shotgun was originally seized as being evidence of an armed robbery, for, while subdivision (d) of this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 12.4(a) limit the scope of a search to that for evidence connected with the offense for which one has been arrested, they do not so limit the items that can properly be seized. These rules specifically provide that the arresting officer can seize contraband, the fruits of crime, and any other things criminally possessed which are discovered in the course of a proper search incident to arrest; once such items are discovered, they may be seized and used as evidence without regard to whether they are connected with the offense for which the accused was initially arrested. Van Daley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 127, 725 S.W.2d 574 (1987).

Where contraband articles are identified without a trespass on the part of the officer, there is no "search" that is prohibited by the constitution. Van Daley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 127, 725 S.W.2d 574 (1987).

Where defendant was arrested while in possession of a package which the police knew to contain illegal drugs, then even though the package was addressed to the defendant's son, the defendant had shown an interest in the package sufficient to lead authorities to conclude that he was aware of its contents; therefore, reasonable cause to arrest the defendant existed and the warrantless search of his person was justified. Heritage v. State, 326 Ark. 839, 936 S.W.2d 499 (1996).

Defendant's arrest for DWI and search incident to arrest were proper under the standards set forth in Ark. R. Crim. P. 4.1(a)(ii)(C) and subsection (d) of this rule because a restaurant manager had reported that defendant was intoxicated, the officer discovered defendant sitting in his vehicle, with the keys in the ignition, and defendant failed two field sobriety tests. Stewart v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 9, 373 S.W.3d 387 (2010).

Trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion to suppress his wallet and its contents because the wallet was discovered pursuant to a proper search incident to arrest. The officers who removed defendant's wallet had probable cause to believe that defendant had committed felony forgery as they had seen him stuff what was later revealed to be counterfeit bills into the car's seat cushions and they found items purchased with counterfeit currency at his feet in the car; and the arrest occurred very shortly after the search. Ezekiel v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 460, 588 S.W.3d 73 (2019).

Fruits or Instrumentalities of Crime.

A police officer who makes a lawful warrantless arrest is authorized to search the person or property of the accused to look not only for weapons but also for the fruits and instrumentalities of crime, and even if the fruits and instrumentalities of any other crime are found, they are properly seized. Stout v. State, 304 Ark. 610, 804 S.W.2d 686 (1991).

Inventory Search.

Inventory searches are recognized as an appropriate and necessary exception to the warrant requirement of the Fourth Amendment. Stout v. State, 304 Ark. 610, 804 S.W.2d 686 (1991).

Where both the investigative stop and frisk, plus the warrantless arrest, were reasonable, it was entirely proper for police officers to inventory defendant's personal property. Stout v. State, 304 Ark. 610, 804 S.W.2d 686 (1991).

Defendant was not entitled to suppress methamphetamine found in a little plastic bag in a partially zipped nylon bag on the passenger seat of defendant's car because defendant was arrested during a traffic stop for driving on a suspended license and the arresting officer found the methamphetamine when the officer called for a wrecker to come and tow defendant's vehicle and began an inventory search of the vehicle prior to the wrecker's arrival. Foster v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 630, 535 S.W.3d 291 (2017).

Purpose.

The purpose of this rule is to protect the arresting officer by allowing the search of the passenger compartment of a car incident to a lawful custodial arrest. Stout v. State, 320 Ark. 552, 898 S.W.2d 457 (1995).

Search for Weapons.

A police officer executing an arrest warrant acted reasonably in looking at a pill bottle in defendant's pants' pocket felt during the "pat-down" search for weapons and in returning the pill bottle to appellant's pants' pocket after determining that it was not a weapon where the officer testified he found two knives concealed on appellant, since a glass pill bottle is certainly similar enough to the size and shape of a knife to warrant further examination when felt. Webb v. State, 269 Ark. 415, 601 S.W.2d 848 (1980).

Justification for a limited search for weapons turns upon the question of whether the facts available to the officer at the moment of search would warrant a man of reasonable caution to believe that the action taken was appropriate; and it is only required that the police officer be able to point to specific and articulable facts which, taken together with rational inferences to be drawn from those facts, reasonably warrant a belief that his safety or that of others is in danger. Webb v. State, 269 Ark. 415, 601 S.W.2d 848 (1980).

The circumstance of finding a round of buckshot in a shotgun laying in a pickup truck occupied by defendants and spotting another round on the floorboard justified a reasonable belief on the part of arresting officers that the truck contained items connected with the offense of unlawful hunting of wildlife in closed season with a modern firearm. Blair v. State, 16 Ark. App. 1, 696 S.W.2d 755 (1985).

There was no error in seizure of defendant's purse as part of a search incident to her arrest although it was not in her possession at the time of her arrest, where the purse was brought to defendant by her daughter and the arresting officer had reason to suspect it contained a weapon. Bonebrake v. State, 51 Ark. App. 81, 911 S.W.2d 261 (1995).

Search of film canister found to contain a controlled substance held valid, where, during a weapons search incident to arrest for a separate offense, the police officer found the canister in defendant's pocket and defendant attempted to divest himself of its possession. Pyles v. State, 55 Ark. App. 201, 935 S.W.2d 570 (1996).

Search Prior to Arrest.

A search is valid as incident to a lawful arrest even if conducted before the actual arrest provided the arrest and search are substantially contemporaneous and there was probable cause to arrest prior to the search. Johnson v. State, 21 Ark. App. 211, 730 S.W.2d 517 (1987).

An officer was in compliance with subsection (d) of this rule where the officer smelled marijuana emanating from the defendant's vehicle, conducted a patdown search of the defendant, found marijuana, arrested the defendant, and then continued to search him following the arrest. Brunson v. State, 327 Ark. 567, 940 S.W.2d 440, cert. denied, 522 U.S. 898, 118 S. Ct. 244, 139 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1997).

Search Reasonable.

Where the officer had information that a crime was in progress, that the criminals had been observed rolling a large tire from the scene of the crime to a parking lot, and the hour was late at night, and where upon observing that the vehicle appeared to contain a heavy load as it seemed to be "sitting low in the rear," and was occupied by two suspects meeting the description of the information furnished him by radio, the officer stopped the vehicle, for the officer to have gone in quest of a search warrant at that hour of the night under the circumstances would have been impractical; thus a warrantless search incident to the arrest was not only reasonable but it would have rendered the officer subject to criticism had he not searched the automobile. Jackson v. State, 266 Ark. 754, 585 S.W.2d 367 (Ct. App. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1017, 100 S. Ct. 670, 62 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1980).

Search fell within guidelines of this rule. Johnson v. State, 21 Ark. App. 211, 730 S.W.2d 517 (1987); Jones v. State, 304 Ark. 328, 802 S.W.2d 447 (1991).

Where the officers effected a lawful arrest, the contemporaneous search of defendant was permitted and not violative of the Fourth Amendment or Arkansas's criminal rules. Hazelwood v. State, 328 Ark. 602, 945 S.W.2d 365 (1997).

No error was committed by the trial court in refusing to suppress evidence that was seized incident to the defendant's arrest because, given all the information known to the police officers, they had reasonable cause to believe that defendant had committed a felony and they had authority under Ark. R. Crim. P. 4.1, this rule, and Ark. R. Crim. P. 12.2 to make the warrantless arrest and to conduct a limited search. Edwards v. State, 360 Ark. 413, 201 S.W.3d 909 (2005).

Where a confidential informant appeared at a drug dealer's home to buy drugs, the drug dealer's wife contacted defendant, and defendant immediately left his home carrying a package, drove to the dealer's home, entered the home without knocking, and left a short time thereafter without the package, the police had probable cause to effect a warrantless arrest of defendant because the evidence essentially established a call by a known drug dealer requesting the delivery of narcotics from a supplier, immediate movement by a known drug supplier who was the suspected supplier, direct travel by that supplier to the source of the supply request, and the apparent delivery of a package. While this proof may not have been sufficient to convict defendant, it provided sufficient probable cause to make an arrest, and a search of defendant incident to that arrest was proper. Pullan v. State, 104 Ark. App. 78, 289 S.W.3d 180 (2008).

Seizure of Controlled Substances.

Where the defendant was arrested for public intoxication and such arrest was proper, a packet of heroin found on the defendant when he was searched for weapons was admissible in a trial for possession of controlled substances. Holmes v. State, 262 Ark. 683, 561 S.W.2d 56 (1978).

Hydromorphone discovered but not confiscated by police officer who was executing an invalid search warrant was admissible in evidence as the fruit of a reasonable and lawful "pat-down" search, and would also have been admissible as a controlled substance seized without a search due to the apparent abandonment of the pills by defendant when he subsequently hid them under the seat of the police car. Webb v. State, 269 Ark. 415, 601 S.W.2d 848 (1980).

If an officer should discover contraband other than weapons, he clearly cannot be required to ignore the contraband, and the Fourth Amendment does not require its suppression. Davis v. State, 33 Ark. App. 198, 804 S.W.2d 373 (1991).

Where police officer was lawfully conducting a pat-down search when defendant was arrested and had already found two weapons, it was reasonable for him to remove packages found to contain cocaine from defendant's pocket, which he said felt like a hard object. Davis v. State, 33 Ark. App. 198, 804 S.W.2d 373 (1991).

Rule 12.2. Search of the person: permissible scope.

An officer making an arrest and the authorized officials at the police station or other place of detention to which the accused is brought may conduct a search of the accused's garments and personal effects ready to hand, the surface of his body, and the area within his immediate control.

CASE NOTESIn General.

Strip searches of arrestees are permitted, in spite of an inherent intrusiveness into a person's privacy, in order to protect the safety of police officers, to maintain order in jails, and to disclose the fruit of a crime. McDaniel v. State, 20 Ark. App. 201, 726 S.W.2d 688, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 838, 103 S. Ct. 121, 98 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1987).

Area Within Control of Accused.

The purpose of this rule is to permit officers to seize weapons or evidence within the reach of the suspect which might be destroyed and where evidence was seized from the defendant's room, where he was arrested, and from the rest of the house after the defendant was on the way to jail, such evidence must be suppressed. Moore v. State, 261 Ark. 274, 551 S.W.2d 185 (1977).

Where the defendant took her purse with her to the police station following her arrest for first-degree murder, the inventory search of the contents of the defendant's purse was permissible under this rule, and the murder victim's personal effects that were found in the defendant's purse were admissible into evidence. Smith v. State, 282 Ark. 535, 669 S.W.2d 201 (1984).

Even though the officers did not have a search warrant to search defendant's hospital room, the seizure of her diary, which was only five or six feet from her bed, was permissible. Crow v. State, 306 Ark. 411, 814 S.W.2d 909 (1991).

Contemporaneous with Arrest.

A search of the person, performed substantially contemporaneously with the arrest, is permissible as where the defendant was arrested at the sheriff's office and a search of her person was conducted by a matron after the arrest. Moore v. State, 304 Ark. 257, 801 S.W.2d 638 (1990).

Where the officers effected a lawful arrest, the contemporaneous search of defendant was permitted and not violative of the Fourth Amendment or Arkansas's criminal rules. Hazelwood v. State, 328 Ark. 602, 945 S.W.2d 365 (1997).

No error was committed by the trial court in refusing to suppress evidence that was seized incident to defendant's arrest because, given all the information known to the police officers, they had reasonable cause to believe that defendant had committed a felony, and they had authority under Ark. R. Crim. P. 4.1, 12.1, and this rule to make the warrantless arrest and to conduct a limited search. Edwards v. State, 360 Ark. 413, 201 S.W.3d 909 (2005).

Invalid Arrest Warrant.

The trial court erred in allowing meperidine admitted in evidence, where the meperidine was not discovered during the “pat-down” search for weapons because the pills were not in a bottle or other hard container, but were in a clear plastic bag in the sleeve of defendant’s coat, but where the pills were discovered during the inventory search at the police station just prior to the incarceration of defendant who was arrested pursuant to an invalid warrant; although this rule allows the thorough search of an accused incident to incarceration, it does not authorize such search for incarceration under an invalid arrest warrant. Webb v. State, 269 Ark. 415, 601 S.W.2d 848 (1980).

Search for Contraband.

Where defendant was arrested for drinking while driving and for driving without a valid license, and there was nothing in the record to indicate that officers suspected defendant might be carrying contraband and arrested him on a pretext in order to conduct a search for contraband, the search was conducted pursuant to the authority granted by this rule. McDaniel v. State, 20 Ark. App. 201, 726 S.W.2d 688, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 838, 108 S. Ct. 121, 98 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1987).

Rule 12.3. Search of the person: search of body cavities.

(a) Search of an accused’s blood stream, body cavities, and subcutaneous tissues conducted incidental to an arrest may be made only:

(i) if there is a strong probability that it will disclose things subject to seizure and related to the offense for which the individual was arrested; and

(ii) if it reasonably appears that the delay consequent upon procurement of a search warrant would probably result in the disappearance or destruction of the objects of the search; and

(iii) if it reasonably appears that the search is otherwise reasonable under the circumstances of the case, including the seriousness of the offense and the nature of the invasion of the individual’s person.

(b) Any search pursuant to this rule shall be conducted by a physician or a licensed nurse.

CASE NOTES

Consent to Search.

Circuit court did not err in denying defendant’s motion to suppress the evidence of his blood-alcohol test results because he had signed both the Miranda and Arkansas Statements of Rights forms and agreed to submit to the blood-alcohol test and there was no conflict between subdivision (b) of this rule and Ark. Code Ann. § 5-65-204(c)(1) regarding the person(s) authorized to do blood testing where the Rule did not apply to blood tests obtained by consent. Roe v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 693, 477 S.W.3d 551 (2015).

Where police officers had a matron who was neither a physician or a licensed nurse search the defendant’s body cavities while in the defendant’s bathroom, and one of the officers entered the bathroom during the course of the search, the search was clearly a violation of this rule and was also a violation of the defendant’s rights guaranteed in the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, since a search warrant does not give officers the authority to conduct any type of search they deem necessary while on the premises. Freeman v. State, 268 Ark. 614, 594 S.W.2d 858 (Ct. App. 1980).

Rule 12.4. Search of vehicles: permissible circumstances.

(a) If, at the time of the arrest, the accused is in a vehicle or in the immediate vicinity of a vehicle of which he is in apparent control, and if the circumstances of the arrest justify a reasonable belief on the part of the arresting officer that the vehicle contains things which are connected with the offense for which the arrest is made, the arresting officer may search the vehicle for such things and seize any things subject to seizure and discovered in the course of the search.

(b) The search of a vehicle pursuant to this rule shall only be made contemporaneously with the arrest or as soon thereafter as is reasonably practicable.

Searches of Sealed Containers in Vehicles.

In his concurring opinion in Daigler v. State, 268 Ark. 249, 595 S.W.2d 653 (1980), Justice Purtle summarizes the law pertaining to searches of vehicles as follows: [W]hen the search of an automobile is contemporaneous with the arrest and the arresting officers have facts upon which to reasonably believe things connected with the offense are contained in the passenger compartment of the vehicle, the officers are authorized to look into the vehicle. If things which they have probable cause, based upon facts known to them, to believe are in the vehicle are seen by them, the search is reasonable. However, when the vehicle is secured or the container to be searched is within the exclusive control of the arresting authorities and there are no exigent circumstances and no danger of harm to anyone or loss of the items sought, a warrant is required. 268 Ark. at 253-54, 595 S.W.2d at 655.

This was an accurate statement of the law when it was written in 1980. In New York v. Belton, 453 U.S. 454, 69 L. Ed. 2d 768 (1981), the United States Supreme Court interpreted its previous decision in Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 23 L. Ed. 2d 685 (1969) to permit the search of the passenger compartment of an automobile and any containers such as coat pockets or luggage contained therein, as a contemporaneous incident of the lawful custodial arrest of the occupant of an automobile. A briefcase in the passenger compartment can be opened immediately, but a search of the same briefcase found in the trunk must await the issuance of a valid search warrant. Compare Belton with Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753, 61 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1979).

The lengthy dissent in Daigler of Chief Justice Fogleman, joined by Justice Mays, contains an excellent summary of Arkansas and United States Supreme Court cases on searches incidental to arrest. In addition, see Moore v. State, 268 Ark. 171, 594 S.W.2d 245 (1980).

What Constitutes Passenger Compartment. The hatchback portion of an automobile is part of the passenger compartment. Baxter v. State, 274 Ark. 539, 626 S.W.2d 935, cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1118, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1331 (1982).

Search Pursuant to "Reasonable Suspicion." Rule 3.1 permits a stop on a "reasonable suspicion" that does not require as much certainty as the "reasonable cause" needed to support a warrantless arrest under Rule 4.1. It is therefore worthy of mention that the state does not more frequently argue at trial and on appeal that justification for some searches — in particular, vehicle searches under Rule 12.4 and searches of the person under Rules 12.1-12.3 — are not grounded on Rule 3.1 read in conjunction with Rule 3.4 on the theory that where "reasonable cause" is not shown, a "reasonable suspicion" may nonetheless be found to justify a warrantless search. See dissent of Fogleman, J. in Moore v. State, 265 Ark. 20, 576 S.W.2d 211 (1979). See, also, Webb v. State, 269 Ark. 415, 601 S.W.2d 848 (1980).

Search Pursuant to Rule 3.1 Stop. Following Michigan v. Long, 463 U.S. 1032, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1201 (1983), the Arkansas Court of Appeals has found that police officers making a Rule 3.1 stop may make a limited search of those portions of the passenger compartment of an automobile in which weapons could be placed or hidden if the officers have a reasonable belief that the driver or a passenger is dangerous. Reeves v. State, 20 Ark. App. 17, 722 S.W.2d 880 (1987). In both Long and Reeves police officers making a "stop and frisk" stop observed weapons in plain view in the automobile. In Reeves, while seizing a pellet gun at first thought to be a rifle, the officer discovered drugs. The Arkansas Court of Appeals upheld the admissibility of the drugs.

The "Suitcase" Doctrine. As enacted in 1976, Rule 12.4 anticipated Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753, 61 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1979) and New York v. Belton, 453 U.S. 454, 69 L. Ed. 2d 768 (1981), so these cases did not result in dramatic changes in Arkansas law. See Burkett v. State, 271 Ark. 150, 607 S.W.2d 399 (1980); Berry v. State, 263 Ark. 446, 565 S.W.2d 418 (1978); Daigler v. State, 268 Ark. 249, 595 S.W.2d 653 (1980); Sanders v. State, 262 Ark. 595, 559 S.W.2d 704 (1977), aff'd sub nom. Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753, 61 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1979); Scisney v. State, 270 Ark. 610, 605 S.W.2d 451 (1980); and Arris v. State, 3 Ark. App. 134, 623 S.W.2d 537 (1981).

Reasonable Cause Test: Warrantless Searches. Though Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 76 L. Ed. 2d 527 (1983) dealt with standards to ascertain whether reasonable cause exists to support the issuance of a search warrant, the Arkansas Court of Appeals has also applied the Gates "totality of the circumstances" test as a framework for analyzing whether reasonable cause existed to support a warrantless search. See, for example, Mock v. State, 20 Ark. App. 72, 723 S.W.2d 844 (1987).

Scope of Search vs. Right to Seize. In Van Daley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 127, 725 S.W.2d 574 (1987), the Court of Appeals noted that "while Rules 12.1(d) and 12.4(a) limit the scope of a search to that for evidence connected with the offense for which one has been arrested, they do not so limit the items that can properly be seized. . . . Once [things criminally possessed] are discovered they may be seized and used as evidence without regard to whether they are connected with the offense for which the accused was initially arrested." Id. at 131, 725 S.W.2d at 576 (Court's emphasis).

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

Game and Fish officers are empowered to make arrests for violation of the game and fish laws and in making such arrests, those officers may also conduct a search of the person or property of the accused including his vehicle. State v. Henry, 304 Ark. 339, 802 S.W.2d 448 (1991).

Denial of inmate's petition for writ of certiorari was improper because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, a search incident to arrest was permissible under this rule, and the inmate did not set forth any legal theory upon which to challenge either the arrest or the search. Lowe v. State, 2012 Ark. 185, 423 S.W.3d 6 (2012).

Consent.

Defendant's convictions for possession of drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture methamphetamine and possession of pseudoephedrine were upheld as his argument that the search and seizure were not authorized by Ark. R. Crim. P. 12.1 and this rule was inappropriate because the trial court concluded that defendant had consented to the search, making arguments based on those rules irrelevant. Nelson v. State, 365 Ark. 314, 229 S.W.3d 35 (2006).

Construction.

The term "unreasonable search" in Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 15 is interpreted by Arkansas courts in the same manner that the Supreme Court interprets that term in U.S. Const., Amend. 4. Stout v. State, 320 Ark. 552, 898 S.W.2d 457 (1995).

Contemporaneous with Arrest.

Where a search of the defendant's purse, which was found between the two front seats of her vehicle at the time of her arrest, was conducted shortly after an illegal drug sale to undercover police officers had been made, the search did not violate this rule or the Fourth Amendment since the police had had the defendant's automobile in their sight since the time of the sale, the police had a reasonable belief that the marked bills they used to buy the drugs were in the automobile, and the search was made contemporaneously with the arrest. Daigger v. State, 268 Ark. 249, 595 S.W.2d 653 (1980).

Incident to a valid custodial arrest, a police officer may contemporaneously search the passenger compartment of a vehicle, as well as examine any containers found within the passenger compartment. Campbell v. State, 294 Ark. 639, 746 S.W.2d 37 (1988).

Purpose.

The purpose of this rule is to protect the arresting officer by allowing the search of the passenger compartment of a car incident to a lawful custodial arrest. Stout v. State, 320 Ark. 552, 898 S.W.2d 457 (1995).

Reasonable Belief.

Where two policemen were drawn to the scene of a possible burglary at 4:30 a.m. by a burglar alarm, and found no evidence of a break-in, but noticed defendants' car with a trailer as they left, when defendants' lights went on and off suddenly, there was no reasonable cause to believe defendants had committed a felony and, consequently, no authority to make an arrest, or a search pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. Moore v. State, 265 Ark. 20, 576 S.W.2d 211 (1979).

Where the police, after stopping the driver of a car for weaving across the center line, discovered several marijuana cigarettes in the passenger compartment of the vehicle, such discovery did not supply the probable cause required for a search of two sealed suitcases in the locked trunk of the car nor did it provide the reasonable belief required for such a search under this rule; therefore, the contraband found in the search of the suitcases should have been suppressed; it was unreasonable and reversible error that the police did not obtain a search warrant to search the trunk and suitcases after the vehicle was impounded. Scisney v. State, 270 Ark. 610, 605 S.W.2d 451 (1980).

The circumstance of finding a round of buckshot in a shotgun laying in a pickup truck occupied by defendants and spotting another round on the floorboard justified a reasonable belief on the part of arresting officers that the truck contained items connected with the offense of unlawful hunting of wildlife in closed season with a modern firearm. Blair v. State, 16 Ark. App. 1, 696 S.W.2d 755 (1985).

The presence of cigarette butts or marijuana seeds, without more, is just as consistent with having only that small amount for personal use as it is with having a cache of marijuana; there is simply no articulable fact to indicate a cache is located in the trunk, thus, under such circumstances there is no probable cause to search a car's trunk. State v. Villines, 304 Ark. 128, 801 S.W.2d 29 (1990).

Search Reasonable.

Where officer had information that a crime was in progress, that the criminals had been observed rolling a large tire from the scene of the crime to a parking lot, and the hour was late at night, and where upon observing that the vehicle appeared to contain a heavy load as it seemed to be "sitting low in the rear," and was occupied by two suspects meeting the description of the information furnished him by radio, the officer stopped and searched the vehicle, such warrantless search incident to arrest was not only reasonable but it would have rendered the officer subject to criticism had he not searched the automobile. Jackson v. State, 266 Ark. 754, 585 S.W.2d 367 (Ct. App. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1017, 100 S. Ct. 670, 62 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1980).

A warrantless search of the defendant's car incident to the arrest of the defendant was proper where the police were in possession of 2-day-old information that the defendant used his car to transport drugs, the defendant was outside his house in his carport where his car was located when he was arrested, he was found in possession of marijuana, and he stated that he thought there might be a derringer in his car. Fultz v. State, 332 Ark. 623, 966 S.W.2d 892 (1998).

Seizure of Items.

It was not error to refuse to suppress the shotgun in defendant's trial for being a felon in possession of a firearm, despite the fact that the shotgun was originally seized as being evidence of an armed robbery, for, while Ark. R. Crim. P. 12.1(d) and subsection (a) of this rule limit the scope of a search to that for evidence connected with the offense for which one has been arrested, they do not so limit the items that can properly be seized. These rules specifically provide that the arresting officer can seize contraband, the fruits of crime, and any other things criminally possessed which are discovered in the course of a proper search incident to arrest; once such items are discovered, they may be seized and used as evidence without regard to whether they are connected with the offense for which the accused was initially arrested. Van Daley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 127, 725 S.W.2d 574 (1987).

Having had probable cause to arrest the defendant for having committed robbery while armed with a double-barreled shotgun, the officer had every right to seize the shotgun found in the defendant's car as being evidence of the commission of the offense and an item used in conjunction with that offense. Van Daley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 127, 725 S.W.2d 574 (1987).

Contemporaneous search of the passenger compartment and the resulting seizure of the weapon were permissible incident to the arrest. Campbell v. State, 294 Ark. 639, 746 S.W.2d 37 (1988).

Where defendant failed to challenge both findings made by a trial court in denying his motion to suppress condoms and lubricating jelly that were found in his vehicle after he was arrested for computer child pornography, the reviewing court could affirm the judgment without addressing either basis of the trial court's decision. Fuson v. State, 2011 Ark. 374, 383 S.W.3d 848 (2011).

Vehicle.

The hatchback area of a station wagon, as part of the "passenger compartment" of an automobile, was properly part of a search incident to a lawful arrest. Stout v. State, 320 Ark. 552, 898 S.W.2d 457 (1995).

The search of the defendant's vehicle could not be justified as a search incident to arrest where he was not in the vehicle or its immediate vicinity at the time of the arrest. Izell v. State, 75 Ark. App. 377, 58 S.W.3d 400 (2001).

Rule 12.5. Search of premises: permissible circumstances, time and scope.

(a) If at the time of the arrest:

(i) the accused is in or on premises all or part of which he is apparently entitled to occupy; and

(ii) in view of the circumstances the officer has reason to believe that such premises or part thereof contain things which are:

(A) subject to seizure; and

(B) connected with the offense for which the arrest is made; and

(C) likely to be removed or destroyed before a search warrant can be obtained and served;

the arresting officer may search such premises or part thereof for such things, and seize any things subject to seizure.

(b) Search of premises pursuant to subsection (a) shall only be made contemporaneously with the arrest, and search of building interiors shall only be made consequent upon an entry into the building made in order to effect an arrest therein. In determining the necessity for and scope of the search to be undertaken, the officer shall take into account, among other things, the nature of the offense for which the arrest is made, the behavior of the individual arrested and others on the premises, the size and other characteristics of the things to be searched for, and whether or not any such things are observed while making the arrest.

In reliance upon standards formulated in Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 23 L.Ed.2d 685 (1969), Rule 12.5 contains broad authority for warrantless searches of premises incident to arrests. The rule does not limit the scope of searches to the arrestee's immediate surroundings. See original commentary to Rule 12.5. Pursuant to Rule 12.5(ii)(C), searches may only be made for articles "likely to be removed or destroyed before a search warrant can be obtained." Until recently, the Arkansas Supreme Court had decided no case countenancing a warrantless seizure pursuant to a search of an area beyond the reach of a person arrested at his residence. To the contrary, the Court suppressed evidence seized from an appellant's bedroom immediately after he had been taken to the police station following his arrest. Moore v. State, 261 Ark. 274, 551 S.W.2d 185 (1977). And, in Haynes v. State, 269 Ark. 506, 602 S.W.2d 599, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1066, 66 L.Ed.2d 611 (1980), the Arkansas Supreme Court set out a very restrictive view of the right to make a warrantless residence search incident to an arrest where grounds for a warrantless arrest existed. See supplementary commentary to Rule 10.1. But the Court did not cite or interpret Rule 12.5 in either Moore or Haynes. Holden v. State, 290 Ark. 458, 721 S.W.2d 614 (1986) departs from the restrictive views seemingly reflected by the Moore and Haynes opinions. It is discussed below after a brief review of Chimel and Moore.

Rule 12.5 is based upon the following language of the United States Supreme Court in Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 763, 23 L.Ed.2d 685, 694 (1969): There is ample justification, therefore, for a search of the arrestee's person and the area "within his immediate control" — construing that phrase to mean the area from within which he might gain possession of a weapon or destructible evidence. There is no comparable justification, however, for routinely searching any room other than that in which an arrest occurs — or, for that matter, for searching through all the desk drawers or other closed or concealed areas in that room itself. Such searches, in the absence of well-recognized exceptions, may be made only under the authority of a search warrant.

In Moore v. State, police arrested appellant without a warrant at his house. While he was being taken to the police station, police searched the room in which he was arrested and an adjacent room and found items that were admitted into evidence at his trial. On appeal, the issue was the admissibility of evidence seized from the house without a warrant but incident to an arrest. Though more appropriate circumstances for application of Rule 12.5 can scarcely be imagined, the Court discussed only Rule 12.2. Why the Court did not mention Rule 12.5, if only to point out it permitted searches contemporaneous with an arrest, is especially curious when one takes into account that the Court's first opinion in the case reversed and remanded on grounds that the State had not met its burden of proof in showing that appellant's parents had consented to the search. It was only on rehearing that the argument was made that the premises search after appellant had been removed was unlawful. Logically, therefore, it seems that the Court would have discussed Rule 12.5 after deciding that the State could not prove consent under Rule 11.4.

In Holden v. State, 290 Ark. 458, 721 S.W.2d 614 (1986), the Arkansas Supreme Court indicated a willingness to read Rule 12.5 more permissively. The Court upheld the admissibility of evidence seized pursuant to a warrantless search of defendant's bedroom, including the area under his bed. Without explicitly relying on Rule 12.1(a), the Court pointed to the arresting officer's concern for safety in justifying the seizure of this evidence, a police officer having testified that he was prompted to check under defendant's bed by his desire to make sure that there was no one else in the house. The Court did not discuss whether claimant had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the area under his bed. Instead, it held that the gun under the bed was "in plain view," even though the officer seizing it had to bend over and shine a light under the bed to find it. The Court gave great weight to considerations having to do with the safety of the officers even though the defendant was handcuffed and was being guarded by at least one officer while another officer searched.

The dissenting opinion of Justice Purtle argues that the case is controlled by Chimel v. California and Moore v. State. The difficulty experienced by the Court in upholding the search highlights the tension between common-sense notions of justice and judicially imposed restrictions on searches described in Justice Hickman's dissent in Moore v. State.

Warrantless seizure cases decided after 1980 frequently present issues concerning the validity of warrantless arrests. In Payton v. New York, 445 U.S. 573, 63 L.Ed.2d 639 (1980) and Riddick v. New York, 445 U.S. 573, 63 L.Ed.2d 639 (1980) the United States Supreme Court suppressed evidence seized during warrantless searches incident to warrantless arrests on grounds that the warrantless arrests of appellants at their homes were themselves impermissible because the police could not show exigent circumstances precluding the obtaining of an arrest warrant. Though Payton and Riddick are not instructive on the permissible scope of residence searches incident to arrests under exigent circumstances according to a theory based on Chimel, they do present hurdles to be cleared at the outset by the prosecution.

In Gaylor v. State, 284 Ark. 215, 681 S.W.2d 348 (1984), the Arkansas Supreme Court approved the seizure of evidence lying in plain view and found by police officers in appellant's residence after a warrantless entry to arrest appellant for a robbery committed half an hour previously. The Court observed: The United States Supreme Court has held that the Fourth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States prohibits police officers from making a warrantless and nonconsensual entry into a suspect's home in order to make a routine felony arrest absent exigent circumstances . . . Dorman v. U.S., 435 F.2d 385 (D.C. Cir. 1970), recently cited with approval in Welsh v. Wisconsin, 466 U.S. 740, 80 L.Ed.2d 732, 744 (1984), enumerates some exigent circumstances which may render a warrantless entry to arrest reasonable: 1) the commission of a grave offense, 2) belief that the suspect is armed, 3) a clear showing of probable cause to believe the suspect committed the crime, 4) strong reason to believe the suspect is in the premises being entered, and 5) likelihood that the suspect will escape if not swiftly apprehended. A sixth exigent circumstance to be considered is the danger of destruction of the evidence. See United States v. Santana, 424 U.S. 38 (1976). In addition, the peaceable entry of the premises may be considered in determining the reasonableness of police action. Gaylor at 217-18, 681 S.W.2d at 349-50.

Rule 12.5 recognizes that the danger that evidence may be destroyed continues after the arrest of an accused at his residence. The rule therefore authorizes an officer to search premises following an arrest for articles "likely to be removed or destroyed before a search warrant can be obtained and served." Rule 12.5(ii)(C). The danger recognized the rule has seemingly been discounted, however, by the Court, which on at least one occasion has opined that there was no reason for theorizing that an arrestee's family might destroy evidence. In Moore v. State, 261 Ark. 274, 278-C, 551 S.W.2d 185, 189 (1977), the Court observed: The trial court's theory that the possibility of destruction of the evidence by appellant's family was a sufficient exigency to support the officers' warrantless search was discounted in Chimel v. California, supra, — see dissent of White, J. There is no contention or suggestion that appellant's mother and father were confederates in the crime and to assume that they would willingly become accessories after the fact to such a crime is not a fact upon which one is entitled to rely as justification for the invasion of such a precious right.

While everyone would agree that such an assumption does not afford a basis for infringing upon any right of the parents, it is not obvious that the assumption makes no sense in the context of assessing whether exigent circumstances exist to justify a warrantless search affecting appellant. If the Court is unwilling to assume that one's family or friends would be willing to destroy evidence, it is difficult to see how a warrantless seizure could ever be justified as necessary to prevent the destruction of evidence under Rule 12.5, since normally all accomplices at the scene of a search will have been arrested.

Reasonable Cause Test: Warrantless Searches.

Though Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 76 L.Ed.2d 527 (1983) dealt with the standards to be applied in ascertaining whether reasonable cause exists to support the issuance of a search warrant, the Arkansas Court of Appeals has also applied the Gates "totality of the circumstances" test in analyzing whether reasonable cause exists to support a warrantless search. See, for example, Mock v. State, 20 Ark. App. 72, 723 S.W.2d 844 (1987).

CASE NOTES

Exigent Circumstances.

Where there was probable cause for an arrest independent of the search, and the arrest and search of the premises were substantially contemporaneous, probable cause and exigent circumstances justified the search for and seizure of evidence linking the defendant to an armed robbery. Gaylor v. State, 284 Ark. 215, 681 S.W.2d 348 (1984).

Scope of Search.

While federal marshals were arresting defendant at his apartment for a violation of probation, the marshals discovered what they suspected to be cocaine in the bathroom and called the city police, who determined that the substance in the bathroom, which was in plain view under Ark. R. Crim. P. 14.4, was cocaine; however, the city police officers improperly searched a black bag in another room without defendant's consent, and if the evidence found in the illegal search of black bag motivated the officers to obtain a search warrant, the illegal search would preclude application of the independent-source doctrine and the evidence would be inadmissible. Lauderdale v. State, 82 Ark. App. 474, 120 S.W.3d 106 (2003).

Seizure of Heroin.

Where there was probable cause for an arrest independent of the search, and the arrest and search were substantially contemporaneous, exigent circumstances would justify the warrantless search of a defendant about whom police had received reliable information that he had heroin in the automobile which he occupied, either under the "automobile exception" or as incidental to a lawful arrest. Horton v. State, 262 Ark. 211, 555 S.W.2d 226 (1977).

Rule 12.6. Custodial taking of property pursuant to arrest; vehicles.

(a) Things not subject to seizure which are found in the course of a search of the person of an accused may be taken from his possession if reasonably necessary for custodial purposes. Documents or other records may be read or otherwise examined only to the extent necessary for such purposes, including identity checking and ensuring the physical well-being of the person arrested. Disposition of things so taken shall be made in accordance with Rule 15 hereof.

(b) A vehicle impounded in consequence of an arrest, or retained in official custody for other good cause, may be searched at such times and to such extent as is reasonably necessary for safekeeping of the vehicle and its contents.

It is now established law that warrantless inventory searches aimed at securing or protecting vehicles, their contents, and the public, rather than at obtaining evidence of crimes, are supportable under the Fourth Amendment without a showing of probable cause or exigent circumstances. South Dakota v. Opperman, 428 U.S. 364, 49 L.Ed.2d 1000 (1976); Cady v. Dombrowski, 413 U.S. 433, 37 L.Ed.2d 706 (1973); Lipovich v. State, 265 Ark. 55, 576 S.W.2d 720 (1979). Automobiles are the object of most vehicle searches, attacks most frequently being mounted on grounds that the searches were pretextual.

In Colyer v. State, 9 Ark. App. 1, 652 S.W.2d 645 (1983), a divided Arkansas Court of Appeals upheld admission into evidence of items that were seized after police searched appellant's car following his arrest for intoxication and on outstanding warrants for other offenses. Police officers answered a report that a vehicle was stuck in mud at an intersection in Berryville. Finding appellant's station wagon hopelessly mired, the officers discussed the situation with appellant and called a wrecker. The automobile had no license tags, and when the police ran a routine computer check they discovered that there were outstanding warrants for appellant for undisclosed offenses. As the wrecker arrived, appellant was arrested for drunkenness, but he was never charged with this offense. Instead, he was charged with possession of marijuana with intent to deliver and with possession of a firearm by a convicted felon. The marijuana and the firearm were discovered during a thorough inventory search of the automobile. The marijuana was discovered in or under a seat and the weapon was found under the floor of the rear of the car where the spare tire is normally kept.

The court found that the officers acted reasonably in seizing and inventorying appellant's automobile, since the police "could not wait until he sobered up to arrange for its removal." Id. at 6, 652 S.W.2d at 648. The court recognized that pretextual searches were not protected by Opperman, but declined to overturn the trial court's finding of reasonableness. Relying on Miller v. State, 403 So.2d 1307 (Fla. 1981), a case in which the Florida Supreme Court decided that police officers must advise a vehicle owner that it will be impounded unless he can provide a reasonable alternative, the court found that alternatives to impoundment are "proper considerations" that are "to be considered in determining what is reasonable." Id. at 7, 652 S.W.2d at 649.

Two dissenting judges argued against the validity of the search, relying upon United States v. Wilson, 636 F.2d 1161 (8th Cir. 1980). In Wilson, the court found that the police offered "no special justification for the search" in question. 636 F.2d at 1165. The court also found that the defendant was present during the search and was capable of making his own arrangements to safeguard his property. The court was particularly critical of the search of Wilson's trunk, finding that it was unnecessary because the police intended to retain control of the vehicle for only a short period of time until defendant posted bond.

So, in view of the decision in Colyer and cases discussed below, though the ability of a vehicle owner to provide reasonable alternatives to impoundment may be considered by Arkansas courts in determining the reasonableness of an inventory search, the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States does not require that the vehicle's owner be afforded alternatives in every case.

The Arkansas Court of Appeals has upheld the search of an unlocked, closed briefcase on the back seat of an automobile following the arrest of its intoxicated owner, who was alone in the car. Henderson v. State, 16 Ark. App. 225, 699 S.W.2d 419 (1985). The court characterized the search as an inventory search of the vehicle. The Court of Appeals relied upon recent authority found in Illinois v. Lafayette, 462 U.S. 640, 77 L.Ed.2d 65 (1983) and United States v. Bloomfield, 594 F.2d 1200 (8th Cir. 1979) in finding that an inventory is a non-investigatory procedure not requiring a showing of reasonable cause, there being, at least in theory, no question of suspicion and thus no question of reasonable cause to entertain it.

In Illinois v. Lafayette, appellant was arrested for disturbing the peace and taken to a police station where his shoulder bag was inventoried in a routine administrative procedure incident to his incarceration. The inventory disclosed drugs which were the subject of a motion to suppress after he had been charged with their possession. The trial court suppressed the evidence, and the Illinois Court of Appeals affirmed, concluding that the defendant had a "greater privacy interest in a purse-type shoulder bag than in an automobile, and that the State's legitimate interests could have been met in a less intrusive manner, by 'sealing [the shoulder bag] within a plastic bag or box and placing it in a secured locker.'" 462 U.S. 643, 77 L.Ed.2d 69, quoting 99 Ill. App. 3rd at 834-35, 425 N.E.2d at 1386. The United States Supreme Court reversed, finding that the inventory search was reasonable and that the reasonableness of any particular governmental activity does not necessarily or invariably turn on the existence of less intrusive means to accomplish the same ends.

In United States v. Bloomfield, evidence seized from a knapsack belonging to defendant was suppressed. Defendant was found in his automobile unconscious, blocking traffic after suffering a seizure. His automobile was towed away and his knapsack that was zipper-closed and tied with a string was searched, yielding drugs and cash. On appeal, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals agreed with the lower court's conclusion that the knapsack should have been stored as a unit. The court recognized the "commonly avowed purposes of inventory searches" (594 F.2d at 1202) as follows: (1) 'the protection of the owners' property while it remains in custody'; (2) 'the protection of the police against claims or disputes over lost or stolen property'; and (3) 'the protection of the police from potential danger.' Bloomfield at 1202, quoting South Dakota v. Opperman, 428 U.S. at 369.

Reversing the decision of the lower court, the Supreme Court observed as follows: The Supreme Court of Colorado also expressed the view that the search in this case was unreasonable because Bertine's van was towed to a secure, lighted facility and because Bertine himself could have been offered the opportunity to make other arrangements for the safekeeping of his property. But the security of the storage facility does not completely eliminate the need for inventorying; the police may still wish to protect themselves or the owners of the lot against false claims of theft or dangerous instrumentalities. And while giving Bertine an opportunity to make alternate arrangements would undoubtedly have been possible, we said in Lafayette: "[t]he real question is not what 'could have been achieved,' but whether the Fourth Amendment requires such steps . . . The reasonableness of any particular governmental activity does not necessarily or invariably turn on the existence of alternative 'less intrusive' means." Lafayette, 462 U.S. at 647; 77 L.Ed.2d 65, 103 S.Ct. 2605 (emphasis in original). We conclude that here, as in Lafayette, reasonable police regulations relating to inventory procedures administered in good faith satisfy the Fourth Amendment, even though courts might as a matter of hindsight be able to devise equally reasonable rules requiring a different procedure. Bertine at 374, 93 L.Ed.2d at 746-47 (citations omitted).

In a concurring opinion in Henderson v. State, Judge Cooper, though agreeing with the majority opinion, nonetheless opined that the term "inventory search" is an oxymoron, and that inventories should be distinguished from searches because the former are non-investigatory procedures and treating inventories as searches promotes confusion. It should be noted, however, that courts routinely refer to inventories as "inventory searches." See Illinois v. Lafayette. For a comprehensive discussion of inventory searches, see Annot., Supreme Court's Views as to Constitutionality of Inventory Searches, 77 L.Ed.2d 1466 (1985).

Finally it should be noted that Rule 12.6 does not purport to deal with "inventory" searches of persons, this subject being left to common law development. Rule 12.6(a) deals with items not subject to seizure, while Rule 12.6(b) is instructive as to vehicles only.

Searches Under Forfeiture Statutes.

Where the circumstances do not disclose justification for the seizure of a vehicle pursuant to a statute imposing a forfeiture for use of a vehicle in the delivery of a controlled substance, evidence secured through a subsequent inventory search is inadmissible. Goodwin v. State, 263 Ark. 856, 568 S.W.2d 3 (1978). Compare Webb v. State, 269 Ark. 415, 601 S.W.2d 848 (1980) (evidence discovered in "pat-down" search admissible even though arrest subsequently invalidated).

CASE NOTESIn General.

The policies behind the warrant requirement are not implicated in the inventory search nor is the related concept of probable cause. Folly v. State, 28 Ark. App. 98, 771 S.W.2d 306 (1989).

Good Cause.

Where the police arrested the defendant driver, who was a self-proclaimed transient with no apparent ties to the local community, for being drunk on the highway and on outstanding warrants issued in two other counties, and the defendant had no license affixed to his vehicle, which vehicle was stuck in the mud in the intersection of two city streets, the police officers had good cause to impound the defendant's vehicle under subsection (b) of this rule and the police acted reasonably in doing so, as they could not wait until the defendant sobered up to arrange for its removal, and, as the defendant was to be transported elsewhere after his arrest, he could not take the vehicle with him. Colyer v. State, 9 Ark. App. 1, 652 S.W.2d 645 (1983).

The fact that a vehicle is legally parked does not necessarily negate the need to take the vehicle into protective custody. Folly v. State, 28 Ark. App. 98, 771 S.W.2d 306 (1989).

Defendant was not entitled to suppression of evidence seized from his vehicle after it was impounded following his arrest for assault of his ex-wife in her apartment because the police had good cause to impound the vehicle after defendant's violent crime and were justified in searching the vehicle as a caretaking function under subsection (b) of this rule. Pittman v. State, 99 Ark. App. 177, 258 S.W.3d 408 (2007).

Inventory Search.

Even assuming a warrantless seizure of defendant's motor vehicle could be justified as incident to his arrest, where there was no evidence that that particular truck had been used to transport controlled substances, an inventory search could not be sustained. Goodwin v. State, 263 Ark. 856, 568 S.W.2d 3 (1978).

Where the police impounded the defendant driver's motor vehicle after they arrested him for being drunk on the highway and on outstanding warrants issued in two other counties, the officer's subsequent inventory search was to safeguard the contents of the vehicle and to protect the department from any theft charges that the owner might later make; accordingly, once the officer unintentionally discovered a paper bag, it was the officer's duty to safeguard its contents and the officer did not act unreasonably when he determined what those contents were (marijuana) instead of closing up the bag and placing it back where it had been. Colyer v. State, 9 Ark. App. 1, 652 S.W.2d 645 (1983).

A police officer's inspection of the spare tire compartment, in which a rifle was discovered, did not exceed that which was reasonably necessary to safeguard the contents of an impounded vehicle during an inventory search. Colyer v. State, 9 Ark. App. 1, 652 S.W.2d 645 (1983).

Where both an investigative stop and a limited protective search were reasonable, a subsequent inventory search was both reasonable and authorized. Reeves v. State, 20 Ark. App. 17, 722 S.W.2d 880 (1987).

Subsection (b) of this rule provides that a vehicle retained in official custody for good cause may be searched at such time and to such an extent as is reasonably necessary for safekeeping of the vehicle and its contents, so where a vehicle was in a median area, had been severely damaged in a serious accident, and was subject to being towed, an officer could have inventoried the contents thereof in a routine procedure required by the state police, and as marijuana was lying in plain view and its nature was apparent to the officer, seizure of it would be justified under the so-called "plain view doctrine." Wood v. State, 20 Ark. App. 61, 724 S.W.2d 183 (1987).

Inventory search made in good faith and pursuant to regulations of standard procedure is valid. Folly v. State, 28 Ark. App. 98, 771 S.W.2d 306 (1989).

Where an inventory is otherwise permissible, its validity is not affected by a suspicion that contraband may be found. Folly v. State, 28 Ark. App. 98, 771 S.W.2d 306 (1989).

Validity of the inventory was upheld where the vehicle was searched before it was towed from the point of arrest. Folly v. State, 28 Ark. App. 98, 771 S.W.2d 306 (1989).

Search of defendant's vehicle was a proper inventory search. Asher v. State, 303 Ark. 202, 795 S.W.2d 350 (1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1048, 111 S. Ct. 757, 112 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1991).

Defendant's motion to suppress should have been granted where the officers lacked probable cause to arrest him for driving under a suspended or revoked driver's license, and consequently, were precluded from inventorying his impounded vehicle in which 60 kilograms (130 pounds) of cocaine were discovered. Mounts v. State, 48 Ark. App. 1, 888 S.W.2d 321 (1994).

A vehicle may be impounded and inventoried only as the consequence of a legal arrest; if an arrest was illegal, an inventory of the vehicle would also be improper. Mounts v. State, 48 Ark. App. 1, 888 S.W.2d 321 (1994).

An inventory search of the defendant's car was properly conducted after he was cited for not having a valid driver's license or proof of insurance since the defendant was legally "unable" to drive his car and it was standard practice to impound and inventory vehicles under such circumstances. Thompson v. State, 333 Ark. 92, 966 S.W.2d 901 (1998).

Search of defendant's vehicle could not be justified as an inventory search where the vehicle was parked outside while defendant was arrested inside the home, and there was no indication that the vehicle contained any objects that were evidence of a crime or that the officers had probable cause to believe the vehicle contained any evidence of a crime, fruit of a crime, or an instrumentality of a crime. Izell v. State, 75 Ark. App. 377, 58 S.W.3d 400 (2001).

Section 27-22-104 requires an officer to impound only the vehicle's license plate, not the car, in the event a driver is unable to present proof of insurance and, since this rule did not authorize the impoundment of the vehicle, but merely the search after the car had been properly impounded or retained, without an independent and proper basis for the impoundment itself, the authorization to search pursuant to this rule was inapplicable. State v. Kelley, 362 Ark. 636, 210 S.W.3d 93 (2005).

After defendant's arrest for driving without a valid driver's licence, an officer saw marijuana seeds under the driver's seat, detected a faint odor of marijuana in the vehicle, and noticed the gas tank exhibited signs of tampering, typical of drug-smuggling; the officer gleaned probable cause to search the vehicle under subsection (b) of this rule for narcotics as he waited for the wrecker to tow the vehicle to impound. Lopez v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 750 (2009).

Circuit court did not err in admitting certain items found in an inventory search of appellant's car prior to towing where appellant had wrecked the vehicle and had been transported to the hospital, and the officers' policies mandated the impoundment of the vehicle and an inventory of its contents under those circumstances. Lewis v. State, 2017 Ark. 211, 521 S.W.3d 466 (2017).

Defendant was not entitled to suppress methamphetamine found in a little plastic bag in a partially zipped nylon bag on the passenger seat of defendant's car because defendant was arrested during a traffic stop for driving on a suspended license and the arresting officer found the methamphetamine when the officer called for a wrecker to come and tow defendant's vehicle and began an inventory search of the vehicle prior to the wrecker's arrival. Foster v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 630, 535 S.W.3d 291 (2017).

SEARCH AND SEIZURE PURSUANT TO WARRANT

Rule 13.1. Issuance of search warrant.

Rule 13.2. Contents of search warrant.

Rule 13.3. Execution of a search warrant.

Rule 13.4. Return of a search warrant.

Rule 13.5. Execution and return of warrants for documents.

Rule 13.6. Issuance and execution of warrants for illegally possessed pictures and literature.

Rule 13.1. Issuance of search warrant.

(a) A search warrant may be issued only by a judicial officer.

(b) The application for a search warrant shall describe with particularity the persons or places to be searched and the persons or things to be seized, and shall be supported by one (1) or more affidavits or recorded testimony under oath before a judicial officer particularly setting forth the facts and circumstances tending to show that such persons or things are in the places, or the things are in possession of the person, to be searched. If an affidavit or testimony is based in whole or in part on hearsay, the affiant or witness shall set forth particular facts bearing on the informant's reliability and shall disclose, as far as practicable, the means by which the information was obtained. An affidavit or testimony is sufficient if it describes circumstances establishing reasonable cause to believe that things subject to seizure will be found in a particular place. Failure of the affidavit or testimony to establish the veracity and bases of knowledge of persons providing information to the affiant shall not require that the application be denied, if the affidavit or testimony viewed as a whole, provides a substantial basis for a finding of reasonable cause to believe that things subject to seizure will be found in a particular place.

(c) An application for a search warrant and the affidavit in support of the search warrant may be transmitted to the issuing judicial officer by facsimile or by other electronic means. Recorded testimony in support of a search warrant may be received by telephone or other electronic means provided the issuing judicial officer first administers an oath by telephone or other electronic means to the person testifying in support of the issuance of the warrant. After signing a search warrant, the judicial officer issuing the warrant may transmit a copy of the warrant by facsimile or other electronic means to the applicant for the warrant. The original signed search warrant shall be retained by the judicial officer issuing the warrant and shall be filed with the record of the proceeding as provided in Rule 13.4(c).

(d) Before acting on the application, the judicial officer may examine on oath the affiants or witnesses, and the applicant and any witnesses he may produce, and may himself call such witnesses as he deems necessary to a decision. He shall make and keep a fair written summary of the proceedings and the testimony taken before him, except that if sworn testimony alone is offered in support of the application, such testimony shall be recorded pursuant to subsection (b) hereof.

(e) If the judicial officer finds that the application meets the requirements of this rule and that, on the basis of the proceedings before him, there is reasonable cause to believe that the search will discover persons or things specified in the application and subject to seizure, he shall issue a search warrant based on his finding and in accordance with the requirements of this rule. If he does not so find, the judicial officer shall deny the application.

(f) The proceedings upon application for a search warrant shall be conducted with such secrecy as the issuing judicial officer deems appropriate to the circumstances.

HISTORY: Amended February 5, 1990, effective March 1, 1990; amended May 29, 2014, effective July 1, 2014.

Reporter's Note, 1990 Amendment:

The underlined language [the last two sentences of (b)], suggested by the United States Supreme Court's decision in Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 76 L. Ed. 2d 527 (1983), has been added to make it clear that failure to meet the "particular facts" requirement of the second sentence of subpart (b) does not require that the warrant be quashed on [or] the evidence suppressed if this affidavit provides "a substantial basis for a finding of reasonable cause to believe" that the things seized were in a particular place.

Reporter's Note, 2014:

In 2014, subsection (c) was added to address the transmission by electronic means of affidavits in support of a warrant. In addition, oaths and recorded testimony may be administered and received by telephone or other electronic means that permit audible communication. The remaining subsections were redesignated (d) - (f).

Totality of Circumstances Test for Issuance of Search Warrants. The requirements of Rule 13 should be considered in light of the consequences imposed by Rule 16 (Evidentiary Exclusion) for failure to comply with Rule 13's strictures. Just as important are recent developments embodied in two decisions of the United States Supreme Court, United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897, 82 L.Ed.2d 677 (1984) and Massachusetts v. Sheppard, 468 U.S. 981, 82 L.Ed.2d 737 (1984). These cases severely attenuate the impact of the exclusionary rule, a judicially created remedy to safeguard Fourth Amendment rights through deterrence of police misconduct. Leon at 906, 82 L.Ed.2d at 687. The Court held that the exclusionary rule will no longer bar the use of evidence obtained by police officers acting in reasonable reliance on search warrants issued by neutral magistrates but later found by a reviewing court to be unsupported by reasonable cause. The Court went on to say that "suppression of evidence obtained pursuant to a warrant should be ordered only on a case-by-case basis and only in those unusual cases in which the exclusion will further the purposes of the exclusionary rule." 468 U.S. at 918, 82 L.Ed.2d at 695. Reasonable cause as a touchstone for searches under warrant has been abandoned, and it is reasonably clear that exclusion of evidence seized pursuant to a defective warrant will be the exception, not the rule.

The Court has long held that the exclusionary rule is aimed at deterring police misconduct. Since suppression of evidence seized by a policeman acting in good faith in the execution of a search warrant has no deterrent effect, it does not carry out the purposes of the rule, the Court held in Leon. Even an erroneously issued warrant will protect such evidence from suppression. The Court did make it clear that not every warrant will afford complete protection: Deference to the magistrate, however, is not boundless. It is clear, first, that the deference accorded to a magistrate's finding of probable cause does not preclude inquiry into the knowing or reckless falsity of the affidavit on which that determination was based. . . . Second, the courts must also insist that the magistrate purport to "perform his 'neutral and detached' function and not serve merely as a rubber stamp for the police." . . . A magistrate failing to "manifest that neutrality and detachment demanded of a judicial officer when presented with a warrant application" and who acts instead as "an adjunct law enforcement officer" cannot provide valid authorization for an otherwise unconstitutional search. . . . Third, reviewing courts will not defer to a warrant based on an affidavit that does not "provide the magistrate with a substantial basis for determining the existence of probable cause." . . . "Sufficient information must be presented to the magistrate to allow that official to determine probable cause; his action cannot be a mere ratification of the bare conclusions of others." . . .

Even if the warrant application was supported by more than a "bare bones" affidavit, a reviewing court may properly conclude that, notwithstanding the deference that magistrates deserve, the warrant was invalid because the magistrate's probable-cause determination reflected an improper analysis of the totality of the circumstances, or because the form of the warrant was improper in some respect. 468 U.S. at 914-15, 82 L.Ed.2d 693-94 (citations omitted).

Sufficiency of Affidavits for Search Warrants. Generally speaking, pre-1983 cases in which the Arkansas Supreme Court found that an affidavit did not establish sufficient probable cause for issuance of a warrant are unreliable as precedent in view of the Court's recent adoption of the rationale of Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 76 L.Ed.2d 527 (1983).

The United States Supreme Court led up to the Gates decision, so to speak, with United States v. Harris, 403 U.S. 573, 29 L.Ed.2d 723 (1971) and United States v. Ventresca, 380 U.S. 102, 13 L.Ed.2d 684 (1965), where the Court delivered the admonition that affidavits for search warrants should be tested and interpreted by magistrates and courts in a commonsensical fashion, inasmuch as they are drafted by nonlawyers in the midst of criminal investigations. Even before Gates was handed down, these cases were occasionally relied upon by the Arkansas Supreme Court in order to temper the stringent requirements of Aguilar v. Texas, 378 U.S. 108, 12 L.Ed.2d 723 (1964). See, for example, Baxter v. State, 262 Ark. 303, 556 S.W.2d 428 (1977).

In Illinois v. Gates, the United States Supreme Court established a "totality of circumstances" standard to be used to decide whether reasonable cause for issuance of a search warrant can be found from information provided by an informant. The Court abandoned the two-pronged test previously established by Aguilar v. Texas and Spinelli v. United States, 393 U.S. 410, 21 L.Ed.2d 637 (1969). The Arkansas Supreme Court appears to have followed suit in cases such as Watson v. State, 291 Ark. 358, 363, 724 S.W.2d 478, 481 (1987), where it explained the standard as follows: In Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 103 S.Ct. 2317, 76 L.Ed.2d 527 (1983), the two-pronged test of Aguilar and Spinelli was replaced by a different test — "a practical, common sense decision," based on all the circumstances, including the veracity and basis for knowledge of persons supplying information. It is sufficient if "there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place." Under Gates it is the duty of the reviewing court simply to insure that the magistrate issuing the warrant had a substantial basis for concluding that probable cause existed. We are satisfied those requirements were met in this case.

The Court has also read Leon and Sheppard to relax the affidavit requirements. For example, in Lincoln v. State, 285 Ark. 107, 685 S.W.2d 166 (1985), in examining whether an affidavit for a search warrant was sufficient, the Court observed: Counsel for the appellant, in challenging the sufficiency of the affidavit for the search warrant, relies upon the law that was applicable before the Leon and Sheppard cases, although they were decided three months before the appellant's brief was filed. The earlier law is no longer applicable. Id. at 108, 685 S.W.2d at 167 (emphasis added).

It is accordingly clear that analysis of the sufficiency of the affidavit supporting a search warrant should begin with Gates, Leon, and Sheppard.

In Toland v. State, 285 Ark. 415, 688 S.W.2d 718 (1985), the Arkansas Supreme Court upheld the trial court's refusal to suppress evidence in the form of marijuana seized pursuant to a warrant obtained by a law enforcement officer affiant relying upon information obtained from an unidentified informant not alleged to be reliable. The officer, however, confirmed the information obtained from the informant by flying over the marijuana field in an airplane, and this information was apparently communicated in the sworn affidavit presented to the magistrate issuing the warrant. Though the warrant's instructions on how to find the property were unintelligible, the Court upheld the search and seizure in reliance on the "totality of the circumstances" test established by Illinois v. Gates and first adopted in Arkansas in Thompson v. State, 280 Ark. 265, 658 S.W.2d 350 (1983). The Arkansas Supreme Court also pointed out in Toland that had the warrant been found invalid the evidence would not be subject to suppression, since the officer was obviously acting in "good faith."

The new "totality of the circumstances" test is set out as follows in Wolf v. State, 10 Ark. App. 379, 381, 664 S.W.2d 882, 883 (1984): The magistrate issuing the warrant must make a common sense decision based on all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit. Under this test, "the duty of the reviewing Court is simply to ensure that the magistrate had a 'substantial basis for . . . concluding' that probable cause existed" to issue the warrant. [Illinois v. Gates] However, conclusory statements in affidavits which give no substantial basis for determining the existence of probable cause will not be accepted. There must still be enough information presented to the magistrate to allow him to determine that there exists probable cause.

Lack of Affidavit or Sworn Testimony. In State v. Anderson, 286 Ark. 58, 688 S.W.2d 947 (1985) the Arkansas Supreme Court observed that "how far below the standard of probable cause or a constitutionally valid warrant the United States Supreme Court is willing to go and still find good faith on the part of the police" is still an open question. 286 Ark. at 61, 688 S.W.2d at 949. The Court then recognized that its previous decisions in cases such as McFarland v. State, 284 Ark. 533, 684 S.W.2d 233 (1985) and Lincoln had not dealt with factual circumstances disclosing deficiencies of constitutional proportions. Moving to the issue at hand — whether a warrant issued in the absence of an affidavit or recorded testimony is valid under Rule 13.1(b) and, if not, whether evidence seized under the warrant should be admitted nonetheless under the rationale of Leon — the Court stated that "whereas probable cause and technical deficiencies in a warrant go to reasonable grounds to support a search, the requirements of the affidavit or recorded testimony additionally go to basic procedural safeguards afforded the defendant." Id. at 62, 688 S.W.2d at 950. Compliance with the affidavit or recorded testimony prescription of Rule 13.1 was found to be "a threshold requirement," Id. at 62, 688 S.W.2d at 950, to be resolved before addressing the question of good faith conduct on the part of the police. The Court concluded that without such a record, the defendant could not attack the warrant or have access to a "fair judicial determination of the legitimacy of the warrant." Id. at 62, 688 S.W.2d at 950. The Court refused to make a "good faith" finding under Leon, holding instead that the Rule 13.1(b) "affidavit or recorded testimony under oath before a judicial officer" requirement was mandatory.

Two years later the court reversed field after reviewing its post-Leon cases in Jackson v. State, 291 Ark. 98, 722 S.W.2d 831 (1987). In Jackson, a search warrant was supported by oral testimony under oath by a deputy sheriff and an informant before a magistrate and by a sworn affidavit. The prosecution refused to divulge the testimony taken under oath, so the Arkansas Supreme Court did not consider it. The Court found that the affidavit was insufficient because it merely stated in conclusory fashion that the informant was "reliable" without giving facts to support this statement. It then opined that "in determining whether to apply the Leon rationale, we must be guided by our own A.R.C.P. Rule 16.2(e)." 291 Ark. at 101, 722 S.W.2d at 833. It went on to point out that it had found "substantial" violations under Rule 16.2(e) in Anderson, Herrington, and in Stewart v. State, 289 Ark. 272, 711 S.W.2d 787 (1986). Technical violations not requiring reversal were found in McFarland, Lincoln, and in Toland. State v. Anderson was distinguished because in Anderson there was no affidavit or recorded testimony. The Court concluded that because the officer executed the warrant in good faith it would apply the Leon "good faith exception." Id. at 102, 722 S.W.2d at 834.

Significantly, the Court went to overrule Anderson to the extent that it indicated that compliance with Rule 13.1 is a “threshold requirement before [the Court] will consider the question of good faith on the part of the police.” Jackson at 102, 722 S.W.2d at 834. Cases such as Hendricks v. State, 15 Ark. App. 378, 695 S.W.2d 843 (1985) (failure to provide affidavit or recorded testimony to the magistrate issuing the warrant is such a deviation from normal procedure that the Court will not consider it a defect falling within the scope of “good faith error” rule) are now of doubtful precedential value, though the Court might reach the same result by holding that the Arkansas Constitution was violated by failure to provide an affidavit. See Herrington v. State, 287 Ark. 228, 697 S.W.2d 899 (1985). Justice Purtle in Jackson, dissented, arguing that the “majority opinion effectively emasculates A.R.Cr.P. Rule 13.1(b) without any warning.” Id. at 105, 722 S.W.2d at 835.

Thus, the continued viability of Rule 13.1(b), at least where a warrant is executed by an officer acting in good faith, is questionable.

As pointed out in Case Note, Criminal Procedure — Exclusionary Rule — No Good Faith Exception to the Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure — Yet, 8 UALR L.J. 513 (1985), while the requirement of an affidavit or recorded testimony is an important procedural safeguard, it seems anomalous to invalidate a search pursuant to a warrant for want of an affidavit and yet approve warrantless searches where no procedural safeguards such as affidavits are required. Though absence of an affidavit makes it difficult to determine whether a search was based on probable cause, the Leon decision does not require a showing of probable cause, only an objectively verifiable good faith belief on the part of the officer that he is executing a valid warrant. 8 UALR L.J. 513, 521-22.

State v. Hoffman, 273 Ark. 111, 617 S.W.2d 16 (1981) furnishes an example of the kind of case that might have been decided differently had it followed the United States Supreme Court’s decision in Leon. A service station owner suspected that his lessees were falsifying records pertaining to gasoline sales in order to pocket cash receipts. The Court found that a long detailed affidavit relating to records completed by the lessee of a service station, but never seen by the property owner-affiant, did not establish reasonable cause to believe that any specific document would be found in a search of the premises, even though the affiant, the magistrate issuing the warrant, and the officer executing the warrant all manifestly had reason to believe that the warrant was valid. Though the affidavit failed to establish reasonable cause under pre-Leon Arkansas law, the Arkansas Supreme Court might well uphold a search on these facts if the case arose today.

What Constitutes Oath. The Arkansas Court of Appeals has held that an affidavit has been sworn to when it states on its face that it was subscribed and sworn to before a judge, and the judge has testified that he questioned the witness about content of the affidavit, asked if the statements in it were true, and ensured that it was signed in his presence. Wilson v. State, 10 Ark. App. 176, 662 S.W.2d 204 (1983). Though the judge admitted that he probably did not require the affiant to take a formal oath, the Court of Appeals found that this was unnecessary, citing Cox v. State, 164 Ark. 126, 261 S.W. 303 (1924), where the Court found that a statement was made under oath where the maker knew that the person receiving the statement (a clerk) regarded the act of signing as an affirmation. In addition, the court relied upon Ark. Stat. Ann. § 41-2601(3) (Repl. 1977), which defines the word “oath” for the purposes of the Fraud chapter of the Arkansas Criminal Code. The definition provides, inter alia, that “written statements shall be treated as if made under oath if: . . . (b) the statement recites that it was made under oath, and the declarant was aware of such recitation at the time he signed the statement and intended that the statement should be considered a sworn statement.”

Lack of Reference to Time in Affidavit. In Herrington v. State, 15 Ark. App. 248, 692 S.W.2d 251 (1985), the Arkansas Court of Appeals found that an affidavit’s failure to specify the time at which an informant saw marijuana on the premises in question was not fatal. The Court of Appeals recognized that the Arkansas Supreme Court had previously reversed convictions for growing marijuana on grounds that the affidavit mentioned no time during which the criminal activity had occurred. See, e.g., Collins v. State, 280 Ark. 453, 658 S.W.2d 877 (1983). But the Court of Appeals noted that Collins was decided before the Leon and Shepard cases. The Court of Appeals’ reliance upon the Leon decision in Herrington was unnecessary, however, since it went on to find that a constitutionally permissible inference could be drawn from the face of the affidavit that the observation had occurred recently. Three judges dissented, claiming that the majority had used Leon to overrule the Arkansas Supreme Court’s decision in Collins.

On appeal, the Arkansas Supreme Court reversed, finding that the reviewing Court should look to the four corners of the affidavit to determine whether it was possible to establish with certainty the time during which criminal activity was observed. Herrington v. State, 287 Ark. 228, 697 S.W.2d 899 (1985). It answered the question in the negative. Though the Court discussed Leon at length, it concluded that an affidavit setting out no reference to time is violative of Article II, Section 15 of the Arkansas Constitution.

It is unclear whether the Court is engaging in the two step process inaugurated in Anderson (decided before Herrington) and abandoned in Jackson (decided after Herrington), where the Court first decides whether the deficiency compromises a substantial right to the extent that "good faith" the part of a police officer executing the warrant is irrelevant. Anderson at 62-63, 688 S.W.2d at 950-51. In Anderson, the Court was concerned with a "basic procedural safeguard afforded the defendant": a sworn affidavit that could be reviewed after the fact. Anderson at 62, 688 S.W.2d at 950. No such procedural safeguard was at issue in Herrington, though the Court could have found that the affidavit was "so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence entirely unreasonable," Leon at 923, 82 L.Ed.2d 699, quoting Brown v. Illinois, 422 U.S. 590, 610-11, 45 L.Ed.2d 416, 431 (1975). Instead, the Court concluded that it violated the Arkansas Constitution. Whether the Arkansas Supreme Court will apply the deterrence rationale underlying the Leon decision to cases involving application of the exclusionary rule for violations of the Arkansas Constitution was not explored.

Cumulative Effect of Minor Deficiencies. In Harris v. State, 264 Ark. 391, 572 S.W.2d 389 (1978), the Arkansas Supreme Court found that Rules 13.1(b), 13.2(c), 13.3(d), and 13.4 had been violated. Typically, the Court declines to order evidence suppressed without evidence of a substantial violation. Shackleford v. State, 261 Ark. 721, 551 S.W.2d 205 (1977). But in Harris, without referring to Rule 16.2, governing when motions to suppress evidence should be granted, the Court found that "an accumulation of errors requires us to reverse." 264 Ark. at 395, 572 S.W.2d at 391. Thus, the Court appeared to reverse on grounds that "the State has not demonstrated that a reasonably good faith effort was made to comply with the Rule." 264 Ark. at 395, 572 S.W.2d at 391. Compare, Watson v. State, 291 Ark. 358, 724 S.W.2d 478 (1987) (technical deficiencies do not require suppression of evidence, no prejudice having been shown).

Disclosure of Identity of Informants. Where an informant merely supplies information that steers a police investigation to the defendant so that the state's case stands or falls without the informant's testimony or participation, and where the informant was not present at the time of the illegal act charged, the Arkansas Supreme Court has held that it is not error for the state to refuse to disclose the informant's identity. Shackleford v. State, 261 Ark. 721, 551 S.W.2d 205 (1977), relying upon Brothers v. State, 261 Ark. 64, 546 S.W.2d 715 (1977) and West v. State, 255 Ark. 668, 501 S.W.2d 771 (1973). See, also, Cooper v. California, 386 U.S. 58, 17 L.Ed.2d 730 (1967). In addition, see Supplementary Commentary to Rule 17.5.

Reliability of Informants. Incriminating statements by an informant can go a long way toward establishing his reliability. Baxter v. State, 262 Ark. 303, 556 S.W.2d 428 (1977); State v. Lechner, 262 Ark. 401, 557 S.W.2d 195 (1977). This will no doubt continue to be the case in Arkansas cases decided on the authority of Illinois v. Gates.

CASE NOTES

In General.

A search warrant need not be based upon testimony taken before a judicial officer but may be based upon an affidavit presented to him or her. Jacobs v. State, 317 Ark. 454, 878 S.W.2d 734 (1994).

A five minute discrepancy between the issuance of the search warrant and the affidavit, where the swearing of the affidavit followed the issuance of the search warrant, did not violate the section of this rule that requires that the search warrant be supported by an affidavit. Cook v. State, 59 Ark. App. 24, 952 S.W.2d 677 (1997).

Affidavit.

Affidavit established probable cause to search defendant's home because it placed defendant with the codefendant when the victim disappeared, it described the victim's clothing, it stated defendant had been arrested at his home, and defendant's mother warned the co-defendant that police were looking for the stolen vehicle. Smith v. State, 2022 Ark. 95 (2022).

Failure to establish the bases of knowledge of the confidential informants is not a fatal defect if the affidavit viewed as a whole provides a substantial basis for a finding of reasonable cause to believe that things subject to seizure will be found in particular places. Langford v. State, 332 Ark. 54, 962 S.W.2d 358 (1998).

Conclusory statement in an affidavit for a search warrant as to a "reliable informant" was not sufficient to satisfy the indicia requirement; however, the affidavit, when viewed as a whole, provided a substantial basis for a finding of reasonable cause to believe that things subject to seizure might be found in a particular location, so the failure to establish the veracity of the informant was not fatal. Abshure v. State, 79 Ark. App. 317, 87 S.W.3d 822 (2002).

In a possession of cocaine case, denial of defendant's motion to suppress was proper as the warrant affidavit was not fatally defective: the affidavit contained a sufficient nexus between defendant's illegal activity and his residence, the State was not required to establish the veracity and reliability of the undercover officer to whom defendant made the comment during their phone conversation that he had plenty of dope, the affidavit as a whole provided a substantial basis for a finding of reasonable cause to believe that drugs would be found at defendant's residence, and, based on the information contained in the affidavit, there was no error in concluding that it was likely that criminal activity was occurring at defendant's residence at the time the search warrant was issued. Haynes v. State, 83 Ark. App. 314, 128 S.W.3d 33 (2003).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence because defendant did not satisfy his burden of establishing a Franks violation; the trial court found that the statements a detective made in his affidavit were not false or misleading, the facts in the affidavit provided sufficient information concerning the existence and timing of criminal activity, and based on information provided by defendant, there was reasonable cause to believe that there was drug paraphernalia at his home. Moss v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 14, 380 S.W.3d 479 (2011).

Assuming that references to a confidential informant and defendant's prior criminal history information in an affidavit for a search warrant were improper, they were of no consequence because probable cause for the issuance of the search warrant was established through statements provided by defendant. Moss v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 14, 380 S.W.3d 479 (2011).

Typographical errors in an affidavit supporting a search warrant for the search of defendant's phone, which were the result of the officer's leaving information in the form from a prior case, posed no invasive threat that the State would seize property that was not already in its possession; defendant's phone was precisely described. Hayes v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 725 (2013).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress because a police officer's affidavit was sufficient by itself to describe the circumstances and establish reasonable cause to believe that things subject to seizure would be found at a certain address. Jones v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 354, 498 S.W.3d 309 (2016).

Police officer's affidavit provided a substantial basis for the trial court's finding of reasonable cause to believe that things subject to seizure would be found at the address because it was based on the officer's own findings when he conducted a "trash pull" at the address. Jones v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 354, 498 S.W.3d 309 (2016).

Although an agent's affidavit failed to provide facts as to the reliability of the confidential informant, the defect was not fatal given that the events the agent witnessed corroborated the information and provided a substantial basis to find reasonable cause to believe that things subject to seizure would be found in defendant's apartment. Haley v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 18, 509 S.W.3d 692 (2017).

Applicability.

The victim's account of the crime and description of her attacker, included in an affidavit, was not the statement of an informant, and her statement was therefore exempt from the reliability requirement of this rule. Haynes v. State, 314 Ark. 354, 862 S.W.2d 275 (1993).

Burden of Proof.

The state has the burden of proving that the warrant was made in compliance with the law. Hendricks v. State, 15 Ark. App. 378, 695 S.W.2d 843 (1985).

Construction.

To meet the requirement of subsection (b) of this rule, the affiant must state more than a mere conclusion that the informant has "proved reliable in the past" and disclose enough information to show that the informant is worthy of belief. Akins v. State, 264 Ark. 376, 572 S.W.2d 140 (1978).

There is not an irreconcilable conflict between the procedural provision, in subsection (b) of this rule and the substantive statute, § 16-82-201(a); the purpose of the statute's providing that warrants could issue "only" upon affidavit sworn to before a magistrate was not to restrict the issuance of search warrants to affidavits, but to insure that the information presented to magistrates and upon which they relied, was sworn to and recorded to facilitate subsequent review. Costner v. State, 318 Ark. 806, 887 S.W.2d 533 (1994).

Use of the disjunctive “or” in subsection (b) makes it clear that both affidavits and recorded testimony are not required to support an application for a search warrant. Jones v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 354, 498 S.W.3d 309 (2016).

Credibility of Informant.

A search warrant affidavit may be based on hearsay information and need not necessarily be based on direct personal observations of the affiant; however, in such circumstances, the affiant must show some underlying basis for his belief that the informant is credible and reliable. Freeman v. State, 268 Ark. 614, 594 S.W.2d 858 (Ct. App. 1980).

Where affidavit for search warrant named the police informant, but did not state how the informant was acquainted with the affiant, so that there were no particular facts presented as to the informant’s reliability, the search warrant did not comply with the requirements of § 16-82-201 or this rule, so that the search violated Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 15, and the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. State v. Prue, 272 Ark. 221, 614 S.W.2d 221 (1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 863, 102 S. Ct. 322, 70 L. Ed. 2d 163 (1981), overruled in part, Thompson v. State, 280 Ark. 265, 658 S.W.2d 350 (1983). But see Thompson v. State, 280 Ark. 265, 658 S.W.2d 350 (1983).

A warrant and underlying affidavit will not be considered defective merely because the officer executing the affidavit was not a member of the law enforcement agency directly acquainted with the informant’s reliability. Moore v. State, 297 Ark. 296, 761 S.W.2d 894 (1988).

A search warrant is flawed where there are no indicia of the reliability of the confidential informant. Henry v. State, 29 Ark. App. 5, 775 S.W.2d 911 (1989).

It is not fatal if the affidavit fails to establish the veracity of the confidential informant if the affidavit viewed as a whole provides a substantial basis for a finding of reasonable cause to believe that things subject to seizure will be found in a particular place. State v. Mosley, 313 Ark. 616, 856 S.W.2d 623 (1993).

It is not necessary for an affiant applying for a search warrant to state reasons why a public official or public employee is a credible or reliable informant. Haynes v. State, 314 Ark. 354, 862 S.W.2d 275 (1993).

There was no need to establish the reliability of an informant referred to in an affidavit filed in support of an application for a search warrant, notwithstanding that the informant was identified only by a number, where, at the same time that the affidavit was presented to the judge, the informant’s own statement was also presented to the judge and that statement included the informant’s name, address, date of birth, and Social Security number. Stanton v. State, 344 Ark. 589, 42 S.W.3d 474 (2001).

Pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, the affidavit presented by the officer provided reasonable cause to issue the search warrant and, thus, there was no police misconduct to deter; further, there were sufficient facts to establish the veracity of the second informant, and his statements were clearly incriminating and were based on personal observations of recent criminal activity. Stevens v. State, 91 Ark. App. 55, 208 S.W.3d 224 (2005).

Search warrant was not defective and satisfied the requirements of this rule as a confidential informant’s information was corroborated by the personal observations of two police officers and the search warrant was not based on pure hearsay. Morgan v. State, 2009 Ark. 257, 308 S.W.3d 147 (2009).

Affidavit in support of a search warrant sufficiently established the reliability of two informants; one had provided reliable information in the past that led to the arrest of five individuals, and the other provided information that was personally incriminating, and the information was corroborated by surveillance and by the other informant. Wagner v. State, 2010 Ark. 389, 368 S.W.3d 914 (2010).

Credibility of Ordinary Citizen.

Although an affiant who is an informant must demonstrate particular facts bearing on the affiant’s reliability, no additional support for the reliability of a witness is required where the witness volunteered the information as a good citizen and not as a confidential informant whose identity is to be protected. Moore v. State, 323 Ark. 529, 915 S.W.2d 284 (1996).

Defective Search Warrants.

- Inadequate Description.
- Incorrect Address.
- Sufficiency of Affidavit.
- Supporting Documentation.
- Suppression of Evidence.
- Testimony Under Oath.
- Time of Criminal Activity.

—Inadequate Description.

Where a search warrant identified the scene of the search only by street address with no mention of the city so that it lacked particularity required by subsection (b) of this rule, the warrant was served at night without the finding required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.2(c), no receipt was given pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.3(d); the return required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.4, was invalid, and only one informant had supplied the information it was based upon, although the affidavit in support of it said there had been four, too many rules had been disregarded, so that, although any one alone might not justify reversal and suppression of the evidence, taken as a whole, this was required. Harris v. State, 264 Ark. 391, 572 S.W.2d 389 (1978).

That a search warrant listed the wrong address did not require the suppression of evidence found during its execution, as the officers personally knew which premises were to be searched, the intended location was under surveillance while an officer secured the warrant, and the premises intended to be searched were in fact searched. Ritter v. State, 2011 Ark. 427, 385 S.W.3d 740 (2011), cert. denied, 565 U.S. 1239, 132 S. Ct. 1644, 182 L. Ed. 2d 241 (2012).

—Incorrect Address.

Denial of defendant's motion to suppress was appropriate even though the search warrant was incorrect as to the address to be searched; the evidence showed that the mobile home that the police searched was the same one where the controlled buys by an informant from defendant occurred and the officers who observed the controlled buys applied for the warrant and executed the warrant. A search warrant is not automatically rendered invalid if it contains an incorrect address of the property to be searched. Kellensworth v. State, 2021 Ark. 5, 614 S.W.3d 804 (2021).

—Sufficiency of Affidavit.

Affidavit met the requirements of this rule regarding the particularity of facts bearing on the informant's reliability. Shackleford v. State, 261 Ark. 721, 551 S.W.2d 205 (1977).

While the conclusory statement, in an affidavit for a search warrant, that the informant had previously given reliable information to the police would not be sufficient under this rule, where the affidavit also stated that the informant witnessed and participated in recent drug sales and that the defendant had a reputation with police agents as a drug seller, such affidavit was sufficient to establish the informant's reliability, particularly since the informant's statements were declarations against interest. Baxter v. State, 262 Ark. 303, 556 S.W.2d 428 (1977).

Affidavit held sufficient. State v. Lechner, 262 Ark. 401, 557 S.W.2d 195 (1977).

Where a search warrant affidavit was based on hearsay, the affiant was required by subsection (b) of this rule to show that there was a substantial basis for crediting the hearsay information, and this requirement was not satisfied by the informant's own personal observations alone, nor was a statement by the affiant that the informant was reliable sufficient to support the issuance of a search warrant. Freeman v. State, 268 Ark. 614, 594 S.W.2d 858 (Ct. App. 1980).

Where a search warrant affiant stated in his affidavit that he had overheard a conversation in which the defendant discussed selling marijuana, but his testimony at trial showed that he had actually only overheard the defendant's wife's voice, there was a distinct inconsistency which diminished the accuracy of the affidavit, and in light of subsection (b) of this rule and cases requiring "particularity" in an affidavit when it is based on hearsay, the court held that the affidavit was insufficient to support the search warrant that was issued. Freeman v. State, 268 Ark. 614, 594 S.W.2d 858 (Ct. App. 1980).

The affidavit's language "could be removed" could not be construed to convey the meaning that the controlled substance was in "danger of imminent removal," which was required to justify a nighttime search. State v. Broadway, 269 Ark. 215, 599 S.W.2d 721 (1980).

An affidavit should speak in factual and not mere conclusory language, for it is the function of the judicial officer, before whom the proceedings are held, to make an independent and neutral determination based upon facts, not conclusions, justifying an intrusion into one's home. State v. Broadway, 269 Ark. 215, 599 S.W.2d 721 (1980).

Whereas probable cause and technical deficiencies in a warrant go to reasonable grounds to support a search, the requirements of the affidavit or recorded testimony additionally go to basic procedural safeguards afforded the defendant; without some record, the defendant is limited in his attack on the warrant and is without fair judicial determination of the legitimacy of the warrant. Thus, in view of the substantial nature of that requirement and its legislative sanction, it cannot be disregarded or found within any good faith exception. State v. Anderson, 286 Ark. 58, 688 S.W.2d 947 (1985).

Where affidavit did not provide the issuing magistrate any particular facts bearing on the informant's reliability as required by subsection (b) of this rule, the conclusory language "reliable informant" was not sufficient to satisfy the particular facts requirement. Jackson v. State, 291 Ark. 98, 722 S.W.2d 831 (1987).

Contention that judge violated subsection (c) of this rule by failing to keep the affidavit while the warrant was being executed was held of no consequence where the affidavit was returned with the warrant and no harm resulted. Watson v. State, 291 Ark. 358, 724 S.W.2d 478 (1987).

Affidavit held insufficient. Tatum v. State, 21 Ark. App. 237, 731 S.W.2d 227 (1987).

Critical flaw in the affidavit is the absence of any indication of when the criminal activity was observed. Henry v. State, 29 Ark. App. 5, 775 S.W.2d 911 (1989).

Where there is no claim that the contents of an affidavit do not support the issuance of a search warrant, the absence of an affidavit itself is inconsequential. Mays v. State, 308 Ark. 39, 822 S.W.2d 846 (1992).

Where the affidavit, viewed as a whole, established that drugs and a fugitive felon were seen inside the residence of defendant within the past four hours, this was sufficient to establish probable cause to issue a search warrant for the premises. State v. Mosley, 313 Ark. 616, 856 S.W.2d 623 (1993).

Subsection (c) of this rule requires the recodation of oral, sworn testimony given in support of an affidavit for a search warrant. Moya v. State, 335 Ark. 193, 981 S.W.2d 521 (1998).

This rule does not deal with misleading information or omissions in an affidavit supporting a warrant, and an affidavit does not have to contain facts establishing the veracity and reliability of nonconfidential informants such as police officers, public employees, victims, and other witnesses whose identity is known. State v. Rufus, 338 Ark. 305, 993 S.W.2d 490 (1999).

There was probable cause in a search warrant affidavit to issue a warrant to search defendant's shop because, in addition to the information obtained through the informants, the affidavit contained defendant's admission that he had left the shop about ten minutes before his vehicle was stopped, and information that the stop of his vehicle resulted in seizure of baggies of methamphetamine. Statements in the affidavit were not misleading in that they did not indicate to the magistrate that paraphernalia was being sold from the shop itself. Johnson v. State, 98 Ark. App. 245, 254 S.W.3d 794 (2007).

Where a detective presented to a magistrate an affidavit describing two controlled purchases of methamphetamine at defendant's residence, the affidavit met the requirements of subsection (b) of this rule by providing reasonable cause to believe that methamphetamine and material related to its sale would be found on the premises to be searched. Jones v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 676 (2009).

—Supporting Documentation.

Search warrant was defective where affidavit was unsigned, no written summary of the proceedings in front of the judge was made and no record was made of those proceedings, and there was no evidence that the witnesses were sworn. Hendricks v. State, 15 Ark. App. 378, 695 S.W.2d 843 (1985).

Although unrecorded oral testimony may not be considered by the trial court or appellate courts when determining whether there was sufficient probable cause to issue a search warrant, where there is a written affidavit in support of the search warrant that later is ruled deficient, an appellate court will go beyond the four corners of the affidavit and consider unrecorded oral testimony to determine whether the officers executing the search warrant did so in objective good faith reliance on the judge's having found probable cause to issue the search warrant. Moya v. State, 335 Ark. 193, 981 S.W.2d 521 (1998).

Motion to suppress evidence seized under the authority of a search warrant should have been granted, where the affidavit relied upon by the issuing magistrate did not contain sufficient information and where the state failed to prove that the sheriff's oral statement to the magistrate concerning the basis for the informant's knowledge was made under oath or was recorded. Lunsford v. State, 262 Ark. 1, 552 S.W.2d 646 (1977).

Where search warrant was obtained without either affidavits or recorded testimony, in violation of the provisions set forth in subsection (b) of this rule, the trial court should have granted the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence illegally obtained in the search of the defendant's home. Anderson v. State, 13 Ark. App. 68, 679 S.W.2d 806 (1984), aff'd, 286 Ark. 58, 688 S.W.2d 947 (1985).

If the magistrate issuing a warrant is misled by information in the affidavit and the affiant knew it was false or there was a reckless disregard for the truth, the evidence may be suppressed despite the good faith reliance of the police upon the warrant. Holloway v. State, 293 Ark. 438, 738 S.W.2d 796 (1987).

Trial court erred in not suppressing evidence seized pursuant to a search warrant based on an insufficient affidavit. Tatum v. State, 21 Ark. App. 237, 731 S.W.2d 227 (1987).

The trial court's denial of the defendant's suppression motion was appropriate based on the officers' objective good faith reliance on the issuance of a search warrant where (1) the officers prepared a valid anticipatory search warrant for one apartment, but before they could issue the warrant, the circumstances changed when a package containing a contraband was moved to a second apartment, (2) the investigating officer immediately informed the judge who issued the warrant of the change, and (3) they then acted together to make the necessary corrections on the warrant and both initialed the changes. Moya v. State, 335 Ark. 193, 981 S.W.2d 521 (1998).

Defendant's motion to suppress evidence found on his cell phone was properly denied, despite the finding that the first search warrant was defective. A substantial basis for probable cause existed, as the affidavit contained allegations by an 11-year-old girl that defendant had slid a phone that was recording under a door while she was changing out of a swimsuit. The investigator testified that her motivation to search defendant's cell phone was based on the girl's statement and was the same when she filed the affidavit for the second warrant as it was when she filed the affidavit for the warrant that was found to be insufficient, and not as a result of discovering the tainted information. Johnson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 429, 559 S.W.3d 767 (2018).

—Testimony Under Oath.

Although it is not necessary that all the information that furnishes the basis for the issuing magistrate's finding of probable cause be stated in an affidavit, it is necessary that the information be given to the magistrate under oath. Lunsford v. State, 262 Ark. 1, 552 S.W.2d 646 (1977).

—Time of Criminal Activity.

It is the uniform rule that some mention of time must be included in the affidavit used for a search warrant; the only softening of this position occurs when time can be inferred from the information in the affidavit. Time is crucial because a magistrate must know that criminal activity or contraband exists where the search is to be conducted at the time of the issuance of the warrant, not that it may have been there weeks or months before. Collins v. State, 280 Ark. 453, 658 S.W.2d 877 (1983).

Where an affidavit for a search warrant made no mention of the time during which the alleged criminal activity occurred or was taking place, the affidavit was insufficient to support the issuance of the search warrant, and therefore the evidence seized pursuant to the warrant had to be suppressed. Collins v. State, 280 Ark. 453, 658 S.W.2d 877 (1983).

Trial court erred in denying appellant's motion to suppress where the affidavit for the search warrant noted that a confidential informant had observed the drug paraphernalia nine months after the date of the affidavit, and there was no evidence that the magistrate took any testimony to clear up the erroneous dates. Bathrick v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 444, 504 S.W.3d 639 (2016).

Disqualification of Judge.

The circuit judge who tried the case was not required to disqualify himself when, in the process of a suppression hearing to determine the validity of the search warrant, it became apparent he would have to rule on the propriety of the warrant he had earlier approved. Holloway v. State, 293 Ark. 438, 738 S.W.2d 796 (1987).

Good Faith Reliance.

Notwithstanding that a recorded statement given by an investigator was not under oath as required by subsection (b) of this rule and that the contents of the written affidavit, standing alone, failed to give the judge probable cause for issuing the warrant, the search was valid because the executing officers acted with an objective good-faith reliance upon the judge's issuance of the warrant. Wray v. State, 69 Ark. App. 170, 11 S.W.3d 9 (2000).

Evidence seized in the defendants' homes was not subject to suppression, notwithstanding that search warrants for the defendants' homes were not supported by probable cause, where the officers who conducted the search acted in good faith on a determination of probable cause by the magistrate and did not mislead the magistrate to obtain the warrants. Yancey v. State, 345 Ark. 103, 44 S.W.3d 315 (2001).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence in his trial for possession of drugs based on the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule even though the deputy sheriff, in preparing the affidavit to support the search warrant, used a preexistent computer file to list the items that were sought during the search. Davidson v. State, 76 Ark. App. 464, 68 S.W.3d 331, cert. denied, 537 U.S. 820, 123 S. Ct. 98, 154 L. Ed. 2d 28 (2002).

Although there was circumstantial evidence to support the inference that defendant was a drug dealer, nothing in the search warrant affidavit supported the inference that he had evidence in his home and, thus, the affidavit failed to provide a substantial basis on which to find probable cause; however, the good-faith exception to the requirement of a valid warrant was proper because the officer acted in good-faith reliance on a facially-valid warrant as it was objectively reasonable for him to conclude that the search was supported by probable cause. Hampton v. State, 90 Ark. App. 174, 204 S.W.3d 572 (2005).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress because it was objectively reasonable for a well-trained police officer to conclude that a search was supported by probable cause where the seller of the methamphetamine at issue was identified in the warrant, the warrant stated that the seller informed an undercover officer through an interpreter where he obtained his methamphetamine, and a subsequently conducted surveillance of the residence corroborated his statements. Fuentes v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 736 (2013).

Good-faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply where there was no testimony by any officer either before the issuing magistrate or at either of the suppression hearings, and the only information presented to the trial court at the suppression hearings was contained in the defective affidavit itself. Bathrick v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 444, 504 S.W.3d 639 (2016).

Reasonable Cause.

Where affidavit in support of search warrant sought documentary evidence related to cash receipts, money and deposit slips, both personal and business, tending to show a violation of Arkansas law, such a dragnet description of anything incriminating which might be found in building occupied by operators of affiant's gasoline station did not establish the necessary reasonable cause to believe that any specific documents would actually be found by a search of the premises; thus the evidence seized was properly suppressed. State v. Hoffman, 273 Ark. 111, 617 S.W.2d 16 (1981).

Testimony of officers showed adequate probable cause to issue a search warrant, since the described activities met the statutory definition of the crime. Century Theaters, Inc. v. State, 274 Ark. 484, 625 S.W.2d 511 (1981).

Probable cause for a search warrant does not require an affiant to assert facts that establish conclusively or beyond a reasonable doubt that a violation of the law exists at the place to be searched. Vanderkamp v. State, 19 Ark. App. 361, 721 S.W.2d 680 (1986); Hawk v. State, 38 Ark. App. 1, 826 S.W.2d 824 (1992).

Subsection (c) of this rule requires recollection of oral testimony; the purposes of such a rule are to facilitate subsequent review for the existence of probable cause and to avoid the possibility of justification for a search becoming based upon facts or evidence discovered in the course of execution of the warrant and, in the event the probable cause is based upon hearsay, explaining the reliability of the informant. These considerations are particularly appropriate for the review of ex parte proceedings involving the valued right of privacy; they also serve to minimize the necessity of calling issuing magistrates to prove what can easily be documented. Jackson v. State, 291 Ark. 98, 722 S.W.2d 831 (1987).

Objective good faith reliance by a police officer on a facially valid search warrant will avoid the application of the exclusionary rule in the event the magistrate's assessment of probable cause is found to be in error. Jackson v. State, 291 Ark. 98, 722 S.W.2d 831 (1987).

Evidence sufficient to establish reasonable cause for issuance of search warrant. Brannon v. State, 26 Ark. App. 149, 761 S.W.2d 947 (1988).

Where officer did not act solely upon the advice or information given him by unnamed confidential informants and employed independent police work to corroborate or confirm many of the tips given by informants, affidavit offered the magistrate sufficiently verified information to show there was a fair probability that defendant's car contained controlled substances at the time the warrants were issued, and although it might not meet the "reliability" or "veracity" test established in Aguilar, officer's affidavit sufficed for the practical, common sense judgment called for in making a probable cause determination under the standard in Gates. Rainwater v. State, 302 Ark. 492, 791 S.W.2d 688 (1990).

The corroboration of three independent informants coupled with the confirmation of their information by police investigative work provided reasonable cause. Hawk v. State, 38 Ark. App. 1, 826 S.W.2d 824 (1992).

Search warrant upheld where investigator's affidavit set forth particular facts bearing on the informants' reliability, related the means by which the information was obtained, and provided a substantial basis for a finding of reasonable cause to believe that contraband subject to seizure would be found on defendant's property and that defendant was in the business of selling drugs. Beshears v. State, 320 Ark. 573, 898 S.W.2d 49 (1995).

Search warrants for the defendants' homes were not supported by reasonable cause where the warrants were obtained after an officer saw the defendants watering marijuana plants in a remote wooded area several miles from their homes; such conduct did not create reasonable cause to believe that contraband would be found in the defendants' homes. Yancey v. State, 345 Ark. 103, 44 S.W.3d 315 (2001).

There was no violation of defendants' Fourth Amendment rights when officers drove up the driveway to their house looking for a probationer in the area, discovered marijuana growing in plain view, and then obtained a search warrant as a result; further, under § 16-82-201(a), the argument that the warrant was issued by a magistrate in a separate county was of no merit. Lancaster v. State, 81 Ark. App. 427, 105 S.W.3d 365 (2003).

Court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence because the facts provided in the investigator's affidavit for a search warrant gave rise to an inference that a crime had been committed; hence, defendant's conviction for the capital murder of his wife was upheld. Coggin v. State, 356 Ark. 424, 156 S.W.3d 712 (2004).

Probable cause existed for a search warrant for defendants' home where it was based on officers' observations of one defendant, who purchased at various stores materials used to manufacture methamphetamine and returned to the home address afterward; hence, defendants' motion to suppress evidence obtained in the search was properly denied. Widen v. State, 86 Ark. App. 246, 185 S.W.3d 94 (2004).

Reasonable cause existed to issue search warrants where affidavits cited anonymous tips and indicated that a police canine alerted numerous times on defendant's storage unit; further, an officer testified that the dog cost $10,000, that he had used the dog in the past, and that "he did a good job", thus, there was information known to one of the executing officers that bolstered the reliability of the canine. Blevins v. State, 95 Ark. App. 218, 235 S.W.3d 921 (2006).

There was a substantial basis for finding reasonable cause that additional evidence of sexual assault would be found in defendant's home, because the affidavit supporting the search warrant of defendant's residence included facts that the victim alleged that defendant tried to rape her at his residence and defendant was able to escape, and police stopped defendant in his vehicle and found the victim's purse and shoes. Harris v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 674 (2012).

Reliability.

For purposes of subsection (b) of this rule, it is not necessary for the affidavit to establish the reliability of a public official. Owens v. State, 325 Ark. 110, 926 S.W.2d 650 (1996).

Factors which indicated reliability sufficient for the requirement of subsection (b) of this rule included the fact that the informants' statements tended to incriminate them, that their statements were based on personal observations of recent criminal activity, and that one statement could be corroborated. Owens v. State, 325 Ark. 110, 926 S.W.2d 650 (1996).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault, possession of drug paraphernalia, and maintaining a drug premises were proper because any failure to establish a confidential informant's reliability or basis of knowledge was not a fatal defect to this warrant under subsection (b) of this rule. The affidavit established probable cause to search the premises because it recited the affiant's monitoring of the informant's controlled buy of methamphetamine there on December 20, 2007. Ingle v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 410, 379 S.W.3d 32 (2010).

Defendant's motion to suppress evidence was properly denied as a search warrant did establish the reliability of a confidential informant (CI) under this rule by a police officer's affidavit independently confirming some of the information the CI gave him and stating that the CI had given the officer reliable information in the past. As the CI told the officer that defendant was attempting to clean up the crime scene by destroying the evidence, there was a reasonable cause to believe that the items identified in the warrant would be gone, which justified the nighttime search under Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.2(c)(ii). Fowler v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 321 (2011).

In a 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254 case in which a district court granted a certificate of appealability on the question of whether an inmate had established ineffective assistance of counsel on the suppression-preservation question, the inmate unsuccessfully argued that he was prejudiced by his trial counsel's failure to preserve the suppression issue because had his trial counsel properly moved for suppression of the evidence from the houseboat such a motion would have been meritorious under this rule and would therefore have changed the outcome of the proceeding. The three factors for valuating the reliability of an informant had been met, and the inmate failed to show that the Arkansas Supreme Court's presumptively correct finding that he had failed to provide a basis upon which trial counsel could have presented a meritorious argument regarding the informant's reliability was in error. Eastin v. Hobbs, 688 F.3d 911 (8th Cir. 2012).

As part of the detective's affidavit for a search warrant was based on hearsay, the affidavit should have stated, but did not state, particular facts bearing on the witness's reliability; however, considering the affidavit as a whole, there was substantial basis for a finding of reasonable cause to believe that evidence of the murder would be found in defendant's home. King v. State, 2019 Ark. 114, 571 S.W.3d 476 (2019).

Although defendant asserted that the detective failed to state in the affidavit for a search warrant that some of the information provided by the witness was inaccurate, defendant did not preserve this argument because he did not argue below that the statements were knowingly and intentionally false or made with reckless disregard of the truth. King v. State, 2019 Ark. 114, 571 S.W.3d 476 (2019).

Special agent's affidavit describing the controlled buy was sufficient to establish probable cause without establishing the reliability of the confidential informant. Deloney v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 36, 617 S.W.3d 717 (2021).

Requirements.

Appellant's claims that counsel did not conduct an adequate or thorough investigation were not supported by the evidence because appellant did not show that could have made any meritorious argument in support of a motion to suppress; the warrant describes the place to be searched and the things to be seized, and the rule does not require that a person's name be included on the warrant. Boatright v. State, 2014 Ark. 66 (2014).

Standing to Challenge Warrant.

Where there was no evidence to suggest that defendant was an overnight guest in the searched apartment, no evidence presented regarding defendant's relationship to the occupant-owners, and no evidence that defendant had any other purpose in the apartment aside from his illegal activity, the court could not reach the constitutionality of the search because defendant failed to show he had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the apartment that was ultimately searched. Whitham v. State, 69 Ark. App. 62, 12 S.W.3d 638 (2000).

Sufficient Nexus.

Circuit court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress a search warrant that resulted in the search of the contents of his cell phone where a detective's affidavit established that defendant was one of two suspects in a shooting incident, the phone was found on defendant at the time of his arrest, defendant and another individual were implicated in the shootings, and thus, it was reasonable to infer that the cell phone was used to communicate with others regarding the shootings. Johnson v. State, 2015 Ark. 387, 472 S.W.3d 486 (2015).

Time of Search.

The trial judge did not err in its denial of defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained pursuant to a nighttime search warrant where the affidavit filed to obtain the warrant showed drugs had been purchased at defendant's residence that day; there was a danger and difficulty because of a one-door entrance; the drugs were in danger of removal or disposal due to the small size of the pills; the defendant primarily sells late at night, and the issuing judge stated in the search warrant that he was satisfied there was probable cause to issue a search warrant that could be executed at any time, day or night. Houston v. State, 41 Ark. App. 67, 848 S.W.2d 430 (1993).

A nighttime search warrant was properly issued, where a confidential informant purchased drugs from the defendants during nighttime hours with marked bills, in order to permit the retrieval of the marked bills and to prevent the possible destruction of evidence. Hale v. State, 61 Ark. App. 105, 968 S.W.2d 627 (1998).

Totality of Circumstances.

The United States Supreme Court recently enunciated a new test for the review of search issues where an officer obtains a search warrant on the basis of an informant's statement; the new test is a totality of the circumstances test whereby the issuing magistrate is to make a practical, common sense decision based on all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit. The Arkansas Supreme Court adopted and hereafter will apply the new, more flexible, totality of the circumstances test. Thompson v. State, 280 Ark. 265, 658 S.W.2d 350 (1983).

Under the "totality of circumstances" test, the magistrate issuing the warrant must make a practical, commonsense decision based on all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit; it is then the duty of the reviewing court to simply ensure that the magistrate had a substantial basis for concluding the probable cause existed to issue the warrant. However, conclusory statements in affidavits, which give no substantial basis for determining the existence of probable cause, will not be accepted. Vanderkamp v. State, 19 Ark. App. 361, 721 S.W.2d 680 (1986); Tatum v. State, 21 Ark. App. 237, 731 S.W.2d 227 (1987).

Requirement that the magistrate make a practical, common sense determination whether there is probable cause for a search warrant based upon the totality of the circumstances, was met. Holloway v. State, 293 Ark. 438, 738 S.W.2d 796 (1987).

Considering totality of circumstances, issuance of search warrant was proper. Edwards v. State, 300 Ark. 4, 775 S.W.2d 900 (1989).

A search warrant was properly issued, notwithstanding a lack of particular facts bearing on the reliability of an informant, where (1) a number of sheriff's deputies and task force agents confirmed the smell of ether originating from the residence after receiving reports that a methamphetamine lab and a chop shop were located at the residence, (2) members of the drug task force personally observed counter-surveillance measures being employed at the residence, and (3) aerial surveillance corroborated the presence of a large collection of automobiles. Fouse v. State, 73 Ark. App. 134, 43 S.W.3d 158 (2001).

Court properly denied a motion to suppress evidence where defendant possessed numerous digital and still images of 14 year-old girls posing nude and exposing their breasts, the information was provided to officers by the girls themselves, and, based upon the nature of the criminal activity, defendant was likely to have possessed the materials at the time the search warrant was executed. George v. State, 358 Ark. 269, 189 S.W.3d 28 (2004), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1163, 125 S. Ct. 1329, 161 L. Ed. 2d 136 (2005).

Where a search warrant affidavit contained false statements, but was sufficient to establish probable cause after the false statements were corrected, evidence obtained through the warrant was admissible. Winters v. State, 89 Ark. App. 146, 201 S.W.3d 4 (2005).

Rule 13.2. Contents of search warrant.

(a) A search warrant shall be dated, issued in duplicate, and shall be addressed to any officer.

(b) The warrant shall state, or describe with particularity:

(i) the identity of the issuing judicial officer and the date and place where application for the warrant was made;

(ii) the judicial officer's finding of reasonable cause for issuance of the warrant;

(iii) the identity of the person to be searched, and the location and designation of the places to be searched;

(iv) the persons or things constituting the object of the search and authorized to be seized; and

(v) the period of time, not to exceed five (5) days after execution of the warrant, within which the warrant is to be returned to the issuing judicial officer.

(c) Except as hereafter provided, the search warrant shall provide that it be executed between the hours of six a.m. and eight p.m., and within a reasonable time, not to exceed sixty (60) days. Upon a finding by the issuing judicial officer of reasonable cause to believe that:

(i) the place to be searched is difficult of speedy access; or

(ii) the objects to be seized are in danger of imminent removal; or

(iii) the warrant can only be safely or successfully executed at nighttime or under circumstances the occurrence of which is difficult to predict with accuracy;

the issuing judicial officer may, by appropriate provision in the warrant, authorize its execution at any time, day or night, and within a reasonable time not to exceed sixty (60) days from the date of issuance.

(d) If the warrant authorizes the seizure of documents other than lottery tickets, policy slips, and other nontestimonial documents used as instrumentalities of crime, the warrant shall require that it be executed in accordance with the provisions of Rule 13.5 and may, in the discretion of the issuing judicial officer, direct that any files or other collections of documents, among which the documents to be seized are reasonably believed to be located, shall be impounded under appropriate protection where found.

Description of Places to Be Searched. In Watson v. State, 291 Ark. 358, 724 S.W.2d 478 (1987), the Court reviewed a warrant describing a place to be searched by reference to a legal description of a farm, complete with directions for reaching a house on it. The Court found that the warrant was not overly broad and that seizures of drugs and stolen property from appellant's barn and from a cattle feeder were lawful.

In Maryland v. Garrison, 480 U.S. 79, 94 L.Ed.2d 72 (1987), the United States Supreme Court decided that a search warrant setting out an ambiguous description of a place to be searched was nonetheless valid and that items seized from the wrong apartment on the third floor of a building were admissible into evidence. The Court found that the police officer who obtained the warrant reasonably believed that only one tenant occupied the third floor, when in fact two tenants lived there. Contraband discovered in the wrong apartment before police realized their mistake, was found to be admissible. The Court held that a warrant's validity must be judged in light of information available to officers at the time they obtained the warrant.

Nighttime Searches. In State v. Broadway, 269 Ark. 215, 599 S.W.2d 721 (1980), the Court decided that the affiant did not supply to the issuing magistrate information showing that reasonable cause existed to believe that drugs subsequently seized at night under a warrant were in danger of "imminent removal" under Rule 13.2(c). The Court ordered the evidence suppressed. The warrant permitted a search at night, and the search was in fact conducted after 8:00 p.m. If this case arose today, the Arkansas Supreme Court might well decide it differently on the authority of United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897, 82 L.Ed.2d 677 (1984) and Rule 16.2(e) (requiring suppression only upon showing of substantial violation of rules) as interpreted by cases such as Jackson v. State, 291 Ark. 98, 722 S.W.2d 831 (1987).

A warrant to search at night — i.e., [not] between the hours of 6:00 a.m. and 8:00 p.m. (Rule 13.2(c)) — must be supported by an affidavit providing the issuing official with "reasonable cause" to believe that the circumstances are as specified in Rule 13.2(c). Boyd v. State, 13 Ark. App. 132, 680 S.W.2d 911 (1984); Harris v. State, 262 Ark. 506, 558 S.W.2d 143 (1977). Prior to the United States Supreme Court decision in Leon, in nighttime search cases the state was called upon to negotiate two hurdles — viz., that the affidavit showed probable cause for a search and that it demonstrated reasonable cause to believe things specified by Rule 13.2(c). Under Leon, good faith can save a warrant not supported by probable cause. It should also be noted that in Harris the Arkansas Supreme Court found that evidence seized pursuant to a warrant executed at night, but not supported by an affidavit showing exigent circumstances justifying a nighttime search, need not be suppressed. The Court found that this was not a “substantial violation of appellant’s rights” under Rule 16.2 or Article 2, Section 15 of the Arkansas Constitution. 262 Ark. at 509, 558 S.W.2d at 145. The Court also found that no “substantial violation” flowed from the warrant’s failure to recite that the magistrate found reasonable cause for its issuance, that it be executed between 6:00 a.m. and 8:00 p.m., that it be executed within 60 days, or that a return be made within five days after execution. Id. at 509, 558 S.W.2d at 145.

It is not necessary for a valid nighttime search under a warrant that the affidavit provide reasonable cause for believing that the warrant can be safely or successfully executed only at night. Lewis v. State, 7 Ark. App. 38, 644 S.W.2d 303 (1983).

The Arkansas Supreme Court has not interpreted Rule 13.2(c) to require that officers executing a search warrant begin a search well before 8:00 p.m. in order to ensure completion by that time. Brothers v. State, 261 Ark. 64, 546 S.W.2d 715 (1977).

For an examination of United States v. Leon, see Comment, Arkansas’ Search and Seizure Law After United States v. Leon: In Search of a Standard, 40 Ark. L. Rev. 125 (1986).

Return Date. Rule 13.2(b)(v) provides that warrants are to be returned to the issuing judicial officer within five days of execution. Where a return is actually made within the time provided by the rule, the Court routinely finds that the warrant’s failure to state a return date is not grounds for suppression under Rules 13.2 and 16.2(e). Baxter v. State, 262 Ark. 303, 556 S.W.2d 428 (1977); Harris v. State, 262 Ark. 506, 558 S.W.2d 143 (1977).

Seizure of Items in Plain View. In Gatlin v. State, 262 Ark. 485, 559 S.W.2d 12 (1977), the Arkansas Supreme Court ordered suppressed several items, including a plastic bag containing $807 seized by officers conducting a search under a warrant only authorizing seizure of controlled substances. The Court held that the money and other items forming the basis for a conviction of theft by receiving would have been admissible had the state shown at trial that their discovery was inadvertent and that their incriminating nature was “immediately apparent.” Id. at 490, 559 S.W.2d at 15, relying on Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U.S. 443, 29 L.Ed.2d 564 (1971); and United States v. Johnson, 541 F.2d 1311 (8th Cir. 1976). There was no evidence that the officers making the search knew that the items seized had been stolen, so their incriminating nature could not have been immediately apparent. Neither was there any testimony that discovery of the goods was inadvertent. Therefore, the Court ruled, these items were not admissible under Rule 14.4.

The circumstances in Gatlin must be distinguished from those in cases such as McQueen v. State, 283 Ark. 232, 675 S.W.2d 358 (1984), where officers with a search warrant seized $640 cash not listed on the warrant as well as enumerated items in a search of defendant’s residence. The evidence was introduced at appellant’s trial for aggravated robbery and theft of property. The Supreme Court upheld the seizure of the money on testimony that its discovery was inadvertent, the incriminating nature of the money being “immediately apparent” since officers knew claimant had stolen a large sum of cash. See, also, Heard v. State, 272 Ark. 140, 612 S.W.2d 312 (1981), where officers executing a warrant seized a cash box that was subsequently introduced at appellant’s burglary trial, inadvertence having been shown and the incriminating nature of the article being immediately apparent to the officers.

These cases must, however, be read in conjunction with the most recent “plain view” case, Arizona v. Hicks, 480 U.S. 321, 94 L.Ed.2d 347 (1987). A man in his apartment was injured by a bullet fired through the floor of the apartment immediately above him. Police entered the upper apartment without a warrant and, upon noticing expensive stereo equipment incompatible with the other appointments, copied serial numbers of components, moving some of them in the process. The United States Supreme Court affirmed the lower court’s suppression of the stereo equipment, finding that the moving of the equipment was a search separate and apart from the search that was the lawful objective of entering the apartment. The Court found that the plain view doctrine did not protect the seizure because the officer inspecting the equipment concededly did not have reasonable cause to believe it stolen.

What is as noteworthy is that Justice White, in his concurring opinion, pointed out that the “inadvertent discovery” prong of the plain view exception has never been accepted by a majority of the Court and that the dissent’s assertions in reliance on this requirement were erroneous. 480 U.S. at 329, 94 L.Ed.2d at 357.

CASE NOTES

Contents of Affidavit.

Although affidavit did contain some general conclusory language, the language read in conjunction with additional factual information in the affidavit, such as the residence's location on a corner lot and the lack of immediate cover for the approaching officers, could support a finding of reasonable cause of a nighttime search; while the factual information in the affidavit was not extensive, the statements could not be characterized as wholly conclusory or as having no factual basis. Foster v. State, 46 Ark. App. 35, 876 S.W.2d 594 (1994).

In a possession of cocaine case, denial of defendant's motion to suppress was proper as the warrant affidavit was not fatally defective: the affidavit contained a sufficient nexus between defendant's illegal activity and his residence, the State was not required to establish the veracity and reliability of the undercover officer to whom defendant made the comment during their phone conversation that he had plenty of dope, the affidavit as a whole provided a substantial basis for a finding of reasonable cause to believe that drugs would be found at defendant's residence, and, based on the information contained in the affidavit, there was no error in concluding that it was likely that criminal activity was occurring at defendant's residence at the time the search warrant was issued. Haynes v. State, 83 Ark. App. 314, 128 S.W.3d 33 (2003).

Typographical errors in an affidavit supporting a search warrant for the search of defendant's phone, which were the result of the officer's leaving information in the form from a prior case, posed no invasive threat that the State would seize property that was not already in its possession; defendant's phone was precisely described. Hayes v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 725 (2013).

Items in Plain View.

Where police officers who entered defendant's home pursuant to search warrant for controlled substances seized certain items, including money, a television, and firearms, they claimed to have found in "plain view," such seizure was unlawful in the absence of any showing that the officers had knowledge of any particular stolen items at defendant's residence or that the discovery of the items was inadvertent. Gatlin v. State, 262 Ark. 485, 559 S.W.2d 12 (1977).

Night Searches.

- Affidavit.
- Appeal.

- Compliance with Rule.
- Good Cause.
- Imminent Removal.
- In general.
- Successful Execution.
- Vehicles.

Probable cause did not exist to support a nighttime search because none of the nighttime search conditions of subsection (c) of this rule applied, and the search of defendant's trailer by the police officer was invalid given that a search warrant should not have been issued; however, the evidence seized as a result of the search did not have to be suppressed as the evidence showed the officer believed in good faith that the search and seizure was justified under the circumstances. Crain v. State, 78 Ark. App. 153, 79 S.W.3d 406 (2002).

Although the language of the warrant could have been plainer, the warrant expressly stated that a warrant for a nighttime search had been applied for, grounds for a nighttime search existed, and it commanded that the search be conducted; even assuming that the language was insufficient to constitute an unambiguous command to execute a nighttime search, it was sufficient to justify the executing officers in the good-faith belief that they were authorized to do so. Wilson v. State, 88 Ark. App. 158, 196 S.W.3d 511 (2004).

In a case in which defendant pled guilty to possession of child pornography, in violation of 18 U.S.C.S. § 2252(a)(4)(B), reserving the right to appeal the district court's denial of his motion to suppress, the appellate court put aside his reliance on the Supreme Court of Arkansas ruling that the officer's affidavit and the state court warrant failed to comply with subsection (c) of this rule. Since the evidence obtained by the officer was offered in defendant's federal prosecution, the legality of the search and seizure was not determined by reference to a state statute, but rather was resolved by Fourth Amendment analysis. United States v. Kelley, 652 F.3d 915 (8th Cir. 2011).

—Affidavit.

A factual basis must be stated in the affidavit, or in sworn testimony, before a nighttime search warrant may be validly issued. Coleman v. State, 308 Ark. 631, 826 S.W.2d 273 (1992); Holmes v. State, 39 Ark. App. 94, 839 S.W.2d 226 (1992).

The affidavit was sufficient to support issuance of warrant for nighttime search. Coleman v. State, 308 Ark. 631, 826 S.W.2d 273 (1992).

An affidavit authorizing a nighttime search must set out facts showing reasonable cause to believe that circumstances exist which justify a nighttime search. Thompson v. State, 42 Ark. App. 254, 856 S.W.2d 319 (1993).

Affidavit in support of a nighttime search warrant met the requirements of this rule where it stated that the evidence sought was easily concealed or destroyed and that surveillance cameras on the outside of the residence to be searched would reveal the officers to the occupants and thereby create a risk to the officers' safety. Tate v. State, 357 Ark. 369, 167 S.W.3d 655 (2004).

Night time search was valid because an officer's reliance on the search warrant's nighttime provision was objectively reasonable. The affidavit did not contain any material false statements or misrepresentations, and testimony established specific knowledge that the contraband would be in imminent danger of removal if the search were executed during the day, as well as the fact that the warrant could only be safely executed at nighttime; therefore, under the good-faith exception the nighttime aspect of the search was valid. Johnson v. State, 98 Ark. App. 245, 254 S.W.3d 794 (2007).

Defendant's motion to suppress evidence was properly denied as a search warrant did establish the reliability of a confidential informant (CI) under Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.1 by a police officer's affidavit independently confirming some of the information the CI gave him and stating that the CI had given the officer reliable information in the past. As the CI told the officer that defendant was attempting to clean up the crime scene by destroying the evidence, there was a reasonable cause to believe that the items identified in the warrant would be gone, which justified the nighttime search under subdivision (c)(ii) of this rule. Fowler v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 321 (2011).

—Appeal.

Failure to request a ruling on the propriety of the nighttime search waived the issue and it could not be subsequently raised on appeal. Gatlin v. State, 262 Ark. 485, 559 S.W.2d 12 (1977); Holloway v. State, 293 Ark. 438, 738 S.W.2d 796 (1987).

—Compliance with Rule.

Where a search was started about eight p.m. and completed as soon thereafter as possible, the failure to strictly comply with this rule was not willful, no additional invasion of privacy occurred, defendant suffered no prejudice and therefore, suppression was not warranted. Brothers v. State, 261 Ark. 64, 546 S.W.2d 715 (1977).

The execution of a search warrant at 8:10 p.m. was not a substantial violation of subsection (c) of this rule, where the defendants refused the police officers' request for a consensual search of their home at 5:30 p.m., where the defendants allowed several officers to remain in their home until the warrant could be obtained, where the defendants' attorney was present at the house from 7:00 p.m. on, and where the search warrant was signed by the issuing judicial officer at 7:55 p.m.; therefore, the search was valid. United States v. Koller, 559 F. Supp. 539 (E.D. Ark. 1983).

Where police officers began a search pursuant to an apparently sufficient search warrant at 7:10 p.m., but interrupted the search for about two hours while they had the affidavit amended in order to give more credibility to the warrant, the evidence obtained in the search was admissible even though the search was not concluded until 10:40 p.m., since only an abundance of caution by the searching officers caused the delay. James v. State, 280 Ark. 359, 658 S.W.2d 382 (1983).

Where defendants contended that the court should have granted the motion to suppress because the search was commenced after dark, the argument was without merit since the search was commenced before eight p.m., which complies with subsection (c) of this rule. Moore v. State, 297 Ark. 296, 761 S.W.2d 894 (1988).

Insufficient facts were presented in the affidavit to support a nighttime search, where the facts that were presented simply traced this rule and were conclusory. Garner v. State, 307 Ark. 353, 820 S.W.2d 446 (1991).

The rule does not require that the search warrant must state, with particularity, the judicial officer's finding of reasonable cause to believe that circumstances are present justifying a nighttime search; thus, a judicial officer's failure to specifically state in the warrant that a night-time search is justified does not substantially violate a defendant's rights. Anhalt v. State, 70 Ark. App. 10, 13 S.W.3d 603 (2000).

Nighttime search warrant was properly issued as defendant's comments that he knew he was being watched and the fact that there were other individuals who had been transporting bags in and out of the business late at night were sufficient to give cause to believe that the requirements of this rule were met. Davis v. State, 367 Ark. 330, 240 S.W.3d 115 (2006), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1306, 127 S. Ct. 1875, 167 L. Ed. 2d 366 (2007).

Circuit court erred in denying appellant's motion to suppress evidence found during a nighttime search of his home because the affidavit and warrant lacked a factual basis to support a nighttime search; the affidavit only contained a conclusory statement that the objects to be seized were in danger of imminent removal and thus lacked all indicia of reasonable cause to justify a nighttime search. Under an objective standard, officers should have known that an affidavit not stating facts that supported a nighttime search was in violation of subsection (c) of this rule, and thus the Leon good-faith exception did not apply. Kelley v. State, 371 Ark. 599, 269 S.W.3d 326 (2007).

—Good Cause.

Good cause must exist and be found by the issuing judicial officer to exist to authorize entry into a citizen's privacy in the nighttime. Harris v. State, 264 Ark. 391, 572 S.W.2d 389 (1978).

Totality of information provided a sufficient basis for permitting search after eight p.m. Holloway v. State, 293 Ark. 438, 738 S.W.2d 796 (1987).

Where affidavit provided that illegal drugs were located at residence and that previous purchases of drugs had occurred there, but, there was nothing to give reasonable cause to believe the drugs would be disposed of, removed, or hidden before the next morning, issuance of nighttime search warrant was in error. Hall v. State, 302 Ark. 341, 789 S.W.2d 456 (1990); State v. Martinez, 306 Ark. 353, 811 S.W.2d 319 (1991).

Where no factual basis supports the issuance of a warrant for a nighttime search, the executing officers' good-faith exception is not applicable. Richardson v. State, 314 Ark. 512, 863 S.W.2d 572 (1993), superseded by statute as stated in Smith v. State, 367 Ark. 611, 242 S.W.3d 253 (2006).

While subjectively the police officers executing the warrant apparently believed they were complying with the law since the printed form appeared to authorize a search until ten (10) p.m., an objective standard is applied in deciding whether the executing officers acted in good faith; the objective standard requires officers to have a reasonable knowledge of what the criminal procedure rules require. Richardson v. State, 314 Ark. 512, 863 S.W.2d 572 (1993), superseded by statute as stated in Smith v. State, 367 Ark. 611, 242 S.W.3d 253 (2006).

Conclusory statements do not suffice to establish the requisite factual basis for reasonable cause to justify a nighttime search. Thompson v. State, 42 Ark. App. 254, 856 S.W.2d 319 (1993).

There was a sufficient factual basis to support the execution of a nighttime search of a house for drugs where (1) the house to be searched was located on a cul-de-sac, indicating that there was only one way for the police officers to approach it, (2) there were firearms and a vicious dog present at the house, and (3) the drugs were kept in a single container. Leftover materials used in the manufacturing process were disposed of and burned at a distant location, and sales of the drug were conducted away from the home. Townsend v. State, 68 Ark. App. 269, 6 S.W.3d 133 (1999).

Court found that facts were sufficient to justify a nighttime, no-knock search where, at the suppression hearing, an officer testified that a confidential informant was told by defendant's girlfriend that she could see the two staircases that led to defendant's apartment through the window and that, without being seen, she could see who was outside prior to unlocking the door; also, both defendant and his girlfriend told the informant that, if they were to see law enforcement through the window, they would attempt to flush the methamphetamine and destroy the evidence. Holt v. State, 85 Ark. App. 308, 151 S.W.3d 1 (2004).

—Imminent Removal.

Where there was ample evidence of the possible imminent removal of the objects of the search, nighttime search was properly authorized and did not violate this section. Miller v. State, 269 Ark. 341, 605 S.W.2d 430 (1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 1035, 101 S. Ct. 1750, 68 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1981); Murray v. State, 275 Ark. 46, 628 S.W.2d 549 (1982); Boyd v. State, 13 Ark. App. 132, 680 S.W.2d 911 (1984).

Where affidavit supporting the warrant stated that sheriff's deputies had observed known drug users enter house, stay a short time and leave; confidential informant had observed contraband in the house a short time before the warrant was issued; and the deputy executing the affidavit believed there was a danger the drugs would be sold or moved, information provided a sufficient basis for a nighttime search. Sossamon v. State, 31 Ark. App. 131, 789 S.W.2d 738 (1990).

Nighttime search held justified on the ground that it was necessary to conduct the search as quickly as possible after a drug purchase reported by confidential informants in order to prevent the marked money from being removed. Neal v. State, 320 Ark. 489, 898 S.W.2d 440 (1995).

Nighttime search of defendants' home was proper where the search warrant affidavit gave reasonable cause for the officers to believe that the specified items of the search would be disposed of or destroyed; defendant's comment to the police that he had photographs that were too revealing, coupled with defendant's knowledge an investigation was in progress, raised the real danger that he would attempt to destroy evidence such that it justified a nighttime search. Cummings v. State, 353 Ark. 618, 110 S.W.3d 272 (2003).

—In general.

The warrant must contain not only a finding of justification for a nighttime search, but also an appropriate order authorizing the same. Carpenter v. State, 36 Ark. App. 211, 821 S.W.2d 51 (1991).

The word "or" at the end of subdivision (c)(ii) of this rule makes it clear that the existence of any one of the factors enumerated in subsection (c) of this rule may justify a nighttime search. Owens v. State, 325 Ark. 110, 926 S.W.2d 650 (1996).

Trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress as the search warrant did not authorize a nighttime search; the warrant was executed at 8:35 p.m., without exigent circumstances, which was well beyond the 8:00 p.m. deadline set out in this rule and the a lapse of time that could not be regarded as negligible. Dodson v. State, 88 Ark. App. 380, 199 S.W.3d 115 (2004).

While the police violated the requirement in subsection (c) of this rule that they obtain a nighttime search warrant of defendant's residence, the admission of evidence seized during the nighttime search was harmless in light of the ample evidence to sustain her conviction for the first-degree murder of her husband. Livingston v. State, 2013 Ark. 264, 428 S.W.3d 474 (2013).

—Successful Execution.

Where the judicial officer who issued the warrant could have reasonably believed that the occurrence of daytime sales of drugs were so difficult to predict that the warrant could be successfully executed only at nighttime when many sales take place and when supplies were likely to be present in the back room of defendant's residence, evidence seized would not be suppressed because taken in nighttime search. Lewis v. State, 7 Ark. App. 38, 644 S.W.2d 303 (1982).

—Vehicles.

The policy considerations that led to the adoption of subsection (c) of this rule, restricting night-time searches of dwellings pursuant to a search warrant, simply do not pertain to a search of a van at a police station. Laine v. State, 347 Ark. 142, 60 S.W.3d 464 (2001), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 1055, 122 S. Ct. 1914, 152 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2002).

Particularity.

Search warrant was invalid with respect to the cigarettes because the warrant did not specifically list cigarettes and the designated portions of the warrant did not satisfy the constitutional requirements for particularity. However, the failure to suppress the cigarettes constituted harmless error because even excluding the cigarettes, the jury nevertheless had overwhelming evidence of defendant's commercial burglary and aggravated robbery offenses. Jemison v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 475, 588 S.W.3d 359 (2019).

Place to Be Searched.

Where a search warrant merely described the place to be searched as "the house occupied by [the defendant]" but the attached affidavit described the location and appearance of the house in detail, there was substantial compliance with the requirements of subdivision (b)(iii) of this rule. Baxter v. State, 262 Ark. 303, 556 S.W.2d 428 (1977).

Description contained in the search warrant of the premises to be searched identifying them as "the Butch Gatlin" residence was sufficient inasmuch as houses in rural areas are commonly known by the name of the owner rather than by any technical legal description. Gatlin v. State, 262 Ark. 485, 559 S.W.2d 12 (1977).

Warrant that included a legal description of the farm and directions for reaching the house met the requirements of subdivision (b)(iii) of this rule that the place to be searched be described with particularity. Watson v. State, 291 Ark. 358, 724 S.W.2d 478 (1987).

Search which mistakenly listed defendant's apartment as "4A" instead of "4B," did not fail to describe his apartment with sufficient particularity. Jones v. State, 45 Ark. App. 28, 871 S.W.2d 403 (1994).

Where scope of a search warrant authorized the search of the premises of a specific trailer, the term "premises" also encompassed the land of the property and other buildings and structures thereon. Norman v. State, 326 Ark. 210, 931 S.W.2d 96 (1996).

That a search warrant listed the wrong address did not require the suppression of evidence found during its execution, as the officers personally knew which premises were to be searched, the intended location was under surveillance while an officer secured the warrant, and the premises intended to be searched were in fact searched. Ritter v. State, 2011 Ark. 427, 385 S.W.3d 740 (2011), cert. denied, 565 U.S. 1239, 132 S. Ct. 1644, 182 L. Ed. 2d 241 (2012).

Probable Cause.

Where the affidavit set forth information: as to the presence of cocaine and drug paraphernalia, such as scales, pipes, baggies, and cutting agents, in appellant's home; the presence of records, documents, and U.S. currency believed to be associated with the distribution of controlled substances; that appellant had sold cocaine in his home to a reliable confidential informant; that the confidential informant had observed additional quantities of cocaine in addition to that purchased by the informant; that appellant was believed to be involved in heavy trafficking of the controlled substance; and that permission to execute a search of appellant's home at any time of the day or night was requested to prevent the further loss of evidence; there was probable cause to issue a search warrant that could be executed at any time, day or night. Holmes v. State, 39 Ark. App. 94, 839 S.W.2d 226 (1992).

Court properly denied a motion to suppress evidence where the search warrant contained an adequate description of the property to be seized as it properly identified evidence associated with the producing, directing, or promoting sexual performances and employing or consenting to the use of child in sexual performances; the evidence included nude photographs and video seen by the victims. George v. State, 358 Ark. 269, 189 S.W.3d 28 (2004),

Probable cause was shown where the affidavit stated that a member of defendant's family informed police officers that defendant was manufacturing methamphetamine at his home on a regular basis and also stated that the family member informed the affiant that materials used in the manufacture of methamphetamine were located on defendant's premises at that time. Wilson v. State, 88 Ark. App. 158, 196 S.W.3d 511 (2004).

Review.

In reviewing a trial court's ruling on a motion to suppress because of an alleged insufficiency of the affidavit, the Supreme Court makes an independent determination based upon the totality of the circumstances and reverses the trial court's ruling only if it is clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Coleman v. State, 308 Ark. 631, 826 S.W.2d 273 (1992); Holmes v. State, 39 Ark. App. 94, 839 S.W.2d 226 (1992).

In a possession of drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture and possession of a controlled substance case, the search warrant was valid and the trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized from the shared residence because: (1) the distinctive odor of a methamphetamine lab was a valid contributing factor in establishing probable cause for the warrant; (2) the search warrant was supported by more than mere conclusory statements; (3) the initial search of the residence was limited to the common area outside the residence where no warrant was required, and the search inside the residence was pursuant to a search warrant; (4) even if the landlord's statements were completely eliminated, there were still sufficient facts to support probable cause to search the residence; and (5) the partially incorrect address listed in the search warrant did not make the search warrant defective, especially since the affidavit correctly identified the residence and officer who had obtained the search warrant and had previously been to the residence would later, himself, conduct the search. Walley v. State, 353 Ark. 586, 112 S.W.3d 349 (2003).

Stale Information.

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault, possession of drug paraphernalia, and maintaining a drug premises were proper because the totality of the circumstances established that the warrant was not stale when it was executed; it was executed 17 days after it was issued, and 18 days after a controlled buy occurred at the premises. Further, even though it was not included in the affidavit, the confidential informant told the affiant that the residence was one of his regular stops and that he had bought drugs there many times; therefore, it was not error for the circuit court to determine that the warrant was timely executed two-and-one-half weeks after its issuance, given evidence of the controlled buy and of other drug purchases occurring over a period of time. Ingle v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 410, 379 S.W.3d 32 (2010).

Substantial Compliance.

Where there was no return date on a warrant as required by subdivision (b)(v) of this rule but return was made on the same date the warrant was issued and there was no showing of any prejudice to the defendants, the violation was not substantial and did not require suppression of the fruits of the search. Baxter v. State, 262 Ark. 303, 556 S.W.2d 428 (1977).

The requirement that the warrant state with particularity the finding of reasonable cause does not require the warrant to recite in detail each specific fact from which the judicial officer concludes that probable cause has been shown, but means that the warrant shall include a finding that there was probable cause for the search and, accordingly, where a search warrant stated that there was "reasonable grounds" for issuance of such warrant there was substantial compliance with this rule. Baxter v. State, 262 Ark. 303, 556 S.W.2d 428 (1977).

The absence of the recitations required by this rule did not substantially prejudice defendant where the warrant was executed and the return made within a few hours after the warrant was issued, the officer offered a sworn statement that evidence of the crimes might be disposed of by morning, and the magistrate's actual issuance of the search warrant established his finding of probable cause even more positively than the insertion of a conclusory finding to that effect would have. Harris v. State, 262 Ark. 506, 558 S.W.2d 143 (1977).

Where a search warrant identified the scene of the search only by street address with no mention of the city so that it lacked particularity required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.1(b); the warrant was served at night without the finding required by subsection (c) of this rule; no receipt was given pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.3(d); the return required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.4 was invalid, and only one informant had supplied the information it was based upon, although the affidavit in support of it said there had been four, too many rules had been disregarded, so that, although any one alone might not justify reversal and suppression of the evidence, taken as a whole this was required. Harris v. State, 264 Ark. 391, 572 S.W.2d 389 (1978).

Warrant was held not defective under subdivision (b)(i) of this rule as failing to state precisely where the application occurred where the date, county, and state stated in the absence of any showing as to why greater exactitude was required. Watson v. State, 291 Ark. 358, 724 S.W.2d 478 (1987).

Where warrant was returned on the seventh day, whereas five days are allowed under subdivision (b)(v) of this rule, but on the fifth day the officer called the magistrate to discuss returning the warrant and was informed that the following Monday would be acceptable, the warrant was executed within the allotted time, and there was a good faith reliance with no resulting prejudice to the defendant. Watson v. State, 291 Ark. 358, 724 S.W.2d 478 (1987).

Although a warrant did not describe with particularity the items sought from a defendant's home, an affidavit, which was issued simultaneously, stated with particularity the items sought; therefore, the warrant substantially complied with this rule and there was no clear error in denying defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized. Simmons v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 705 (2009).

Suppression of Evidence.

Defendant's claim that a nighttime search of his residence violated subsection (c) of this rule is irrelevant to determining whether the fruits of the search are admissible in federal court. United States v. Maholy, 1 F.3d 718 (8th Cir. 1993).

Based on a search pursuant to a federal warrant, the officers knew the mailed package contained drugs, but when the officers delivered the package to defendant, entered defendant's residence through a closed screen door without a warrant, then pursued defendant, who fled to the bathroom with the package, the purported exigent circumstances were manufactured by the officers and the trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress. Mann v. State, 84 Ark. App. 225, 137 S.W.3d 411 (2003), aff'd, 357 Ark. 159, 161 S.W.3d 826 (2004).

Time of Search.

Warrant which was defective for not stating the time within which it was to be returned and for failure to indicate reasonable cause for authorizing its execution at any time day or night was not invalid inasmuch as it was actually returned within five days as permitted by subdivision (b)(v) of this rule and the search was conducted at 12:15 p.m. which is within the hours provided by subsection (c) of this rule. Pridgeon v. State, 262 Ark. 428, 559 S.W.2d 4 (1977).

Nighttime search justified where co-defendants were close-knit members of a cult, and, upon discovering that one had been taken into custody, the other co-defendants were likely to destroy any evidence that might be in their possession or at their residence, such as photographs, knives, and clothing. Echols v. State, 326 Ark. 917, 936 S.W.2d 509 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1244, 117 S. Ct. 1853, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1055 (1997).

Technical violation on warrant, which contained a time frame of 6:00 a.m. through 8:00 a.m. instead of 6:00 a.m. through 8:00 p.m., held not a substantial violation requiring suppression of the evidence obtained with the warrant. Brown v. State, 55 Ark. App. 107, 932 S.W.2d 777 (1996).

In defendant's drug case, the court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence as a nighttime search warrant was proper where there was no evidence that the officer made any material false statements or misrepresentations in his affidavit, there was no evidence that the judicial officer who signed the search warrant abandoned his detached and neutral role, and the affidavit provided evidence which could create disagreement among judges as to the existence of probable cause; although a lack of manpower to secure the residence overnight to prevent a danger to anyone who entered was not a sound basis for a nighttime search warrant, the good-faith exception to the exclusionary rule was applicable because a reasonable, well-trained officer could have believed that a nighttime search was justified. Loy v. State, 88 Ark. App. 91, 195 S.W.3d 370 (2004).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained in a search of his home because the court had before it the competing testimony of the lead agent who executed the search and defendant and his spouse as to the time of execution of the search warrant. The lead agent's testimony that the search began at 6:03 a.m., based on the time on the dashcam clock in the agent's vehicle when the agent pulled into the driveway of defendant's home, was sufficient to establish what time the warrant was executed. King v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 532, 614 S.W.3d 823 (2020).

Rule 13.3. Execution of a search warrant.

(a) A search warrant may be executed by any officer. The officer charged with its execution may be accompanied by such other officers or persons as may be reasonably necessary for the successful execution of the warrant with all practicable safety.

(b) Prior to entering a dwelling to execute a search warrant, the executing officer shall make known the officer's presence and authority for entering the dwelling and shall wait a period of time that is reasonable under the circumstances before forcing entry into the dwelling. The officer may force entry into a dwelling without prior announcement if the officer reasonably suspects that making known the officer's presence would, under the circumstances, be dangerous or futile or that it would inhibit the effective investigation of the crime by, for example, allowing the destruction of evidence. For purposes of this rule, a "dwelling" means a vehicle, building, or other structure (i) where any person lives or (ii) which is customarily used for overnight accommodation of persons whether or not a person is actually present. Each unit of a structure divided into separately occupied units is itself a dwelling.

(c) In the course of any search or seizure pursuant to the warrant, the executing officer shall give a copy of the warrant to the person to be searched or the person in apparent control of the premises to be searched. The copy shall be furnished before undertaking the search or seizure unless the officer has reasonable cause to believe that such action would endanger the successful execution of the warrant with all practicable safety, in which case he shall, as soon as is practicable, state his authority and purpose and furnish a copy of the warrant. If the premises are unoccupied by anyone in apparent and responsible control, the officer shall leave a copy of the warrant suitably affixed to the premises.

(d) The scope of search shall be only such as is authorized by the warrant and is reasonably necessary to discover the persons or things specified therein. Upon discovery of the persons or things so specified, the officer shall take possession or custody of them and search no further under authority of the warrant. If in the course of such search, the officer discovers things not specified in the warrant which he reasonably believes to be subject to seizure, he may also take possession of the things so discovered.

(e) Upon completion of the search, the officer shall make and deliver a receipt fairly describing the things seized to the person from whose possession they are taken or the person in apparent control of the premises from which they are taken. If practicable, the list shall be prepared in the presence of the person to whom the receipt is to be delivered. If the premises are unoccupied by anyone in apparent and responsible control, the executing officer shall leave the receipt suitably affixed to the premises.

(f) The executing officer, and other officers accompanying and assisting him, may use such degree of force, short of deadly force, against persons, or to effect an entry or to open containers as is reasonably necessary for the successful execution of the search warrant with all practicable safety. The use of deadly force in the execution of a search warrant, other than in self-defense or defense of others, is justifiable only if the executing officer reasonably believes that there is a substantial risk that the persons or things to be seized will suffer, cause, or be used to cause death or serious bodily harm if their seizure is delayed, and that the force employed creates no unnecessary risk of injury to other persons.

Reporter's Notes, 2002 Amendment:

A new subsection ("b") was added which incorporates the "knock and announce" requirement into the rules governing the execution of a search warrant. The subsection requires an officer executing a search warrant to "make known the officer's presence and authority" rather than "knock and announce the officer's presence and authority" before forcing entry so as to cover the situation where knocking would be superfluous because the occupant of the dwelling is outside the dwelling when the officer approaches to serve the warrant. The remaining subsections were redesignated.

CASE NOTES

Affixing Warrant to Premises.

Where, at the time search was conducted, the defendant was not present and the officers left a copy of the search warrant on the kitchen table inside the residence, the officers' method of affixing the warrant and return to the premises was reasonable. Rogers v. State, 10 Ark. App. 19, 660 S.W.2d 949 (1983).

Authority of Officers.

It was not per se unreasonable for Sherwood officers to execute the search warrant, as the statute gave officers authorities to issue a warrant directed to any person in the state, and the warrant was properly issued by a judge in the Sherwood District Court, plus a warrant could be executed by any officer, and nothing indicated the officers purposefully avoided notifying other law enforcement agencies, and the court could not say that the execution of the warrant was per se unreasonable such that it warranted suppression. State v. Robinson, 2013 Ark. 425, 430 S.W.3d 105 (2013).

Copy of Warrant.

Where one of two defendants was present when a search warrant was executed and was allowed to read it but was not given a copy, this rule was not fully complied with. Baxter v. State, 262 Ark. 303, 556 S.W.2d 428 (1977).

Where defendant's asserted failure to exhibit the warrant to the owner of the residence or failure to leave a copy of the warrant and a receipt of the items seized, where two of the officers conducting the search testified that the warrant was shown and explained to owner of the residence, the search warrant stated that a copy of the warrant and a receipt were given, and the defendant offered no evidence to the contrary the search was valid. Pridgeon v. State, 262 Ark. 428, 559 S.W.2d 4 (1977).

Failure to provide property owner with a copy of a warrant to search his property will not necessarily lead to suppression of evidence seized pursuant to the warrant, unless prejudice or deliberate disregard of the rule is shown. United States v. Schroeder, 129 F.3d 439 (8th Cir. 1997).

Any violation of the requirement that a copy of a search warrant be delivered to the person in apparent control of the premises to be searched was not substantial and, therefore, did not constitute a ground for suppression of evidence found during the search where the defendant was present when the search was conducted and both he and his attorney later received a copy of the search warrant. Moya v. State, 335 Ark. 193, 981 S.W.2d 521 (1998).

The provisions of subsection (b) of this rule were complied with as soon as practicable where (1) upon entering an apartment to conduct a search, the first two officers through the door secured the first two suspects inside, (2) as another officer continued through the apartment, he heard a toilet flush, forced open the door to a bathroom, and discovered the defendant flushing bags of drugs down the toilet, and (3) the search warrant was served later that day. Moya v. State, 335 Ark. 193, 981 S.W.2d 521 (1998).

Entry Justified.

Where police officers executing a search warrant for drugs in a trailer home heard loud music coming from the trailer, knocked on the door, loudly called out "police officers" and, receiving no answer after a brief wait, pushed open the unlocked door, the entry was justified since the hour was reasonable, the officers knew that the trailer's owner had prior felony convictions and the physical evidence being searched for was particularly susceptible to easy destruction. Dodson v. State, 4 Ark. App. 1, 626 S.W.2d 624, cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1136, 102 S. Ct. 2966, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1355 (1982).

Defendant's Fourth Amendment rights were not violated when police executing a warrant conducted a no-knock entry because they were justified in feeling concern for their safety and the disposal of evidence based on cameras outside the residence, the drug operation, and the fact that there were blocked windows and doors. Hart v. State, 368 Ark. 237, 244 S.W.3d 670 (2006).

Failure to Comply with Rules.

Where a search warrant identified the scene of the search only by street address with no mention of the city so that it lacked the particularity required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.1(b); the warrant was served at night without the finding required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.2(c); no receipt was given pursuant to subsection (d) of this rule; the return required by Ark. R. Crim.

P. 13.4 was invalid, and only one informant had supplied the information it was based upon, although the affidavit in support of it said there had been four, too many rules had been disregarded, so that, although any one alone might not justify reversal and suppression of the evidence, taken as a whole, suppression was required. Harris v. State, 264 Ark. 391, 572 S.W.2d 389 (1978).

The Fourth Amendment governed the case, not this rule, and the officer was not required by the Fourth Amendment to show defendant the validly obtained search warrant prior to the search. Even if the Fourth Amendment required the officer to show defendant the warrant at some point, the officer met this burden by placing the warrant on the coffee table in the living room for defendant to review. United States v. Porter, 654 F. Supp. 2d 938 (E.D. Ark. 2009).

Length of Search.

Although the search was lengthy, it was not unreasonable, based upon the totality of the circumstances, where the evidence revealed that the item listed on the warrant was never found, and what transpired during the search gave the officers reasonable cause to believe that other items were subject to seizure. Campbell v. State, 27 Ark. App. 82, 766 S.W.2d 940 (1989).

Receipt of Things Seized.

Where all of the evidence was seized from one location, making the possibility of confusion virtually nonexistent, the failure to comply with the strict requirements of subsection (d) of this rule caused no prejudice to the defendant and did not require reversal of the conviction. Boyd v. State, 13 Ark. App. 132, 680 S.W.2d 911 (1984).

Where subsection (d) of this rule was not followed, but there was no dispute whatever over the identity or location of the things which were seized, the argument was held without substance. Watson v. State, 291 Ark. 358, 724 S.W.2d 478 (1987).

Scope of Search.

Where scope of a search warrant authorized the search of the premises of a specific trailer, the term “premises” also encompassed the land of the property and other buildings and structures thereon. Norman v. State, 326 Ark. 210, 931 S.W.2d 96 (1996).

Court properly denied a motion to suppress evidence where, although items other than those specified in the search warrant were seized, the officers properly seized the additional tapes, disks, gun, and drug paraphernalia because they were in plain view. George v. State, 358 Ark. 269, 189 S.W.3d 28 (2004), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1163, 125 S. Ct. 1329, 161 L. Ed. 2d 136 (2005).

Rule 13.4. Return of a search warrant.

(a) If a search warrant is not executed, the officer shall return the warrant to the issuing judicial officer within a reasonable time, not to exceed 60 days from the date of issuance, together with a report of the reasons why it was not executed. If the issuing judicial officer is unavailable, the warrant may be returned to any judicial officer of a circuit or district court within the county in which the warrant was issued. Upon its return, an unexecuted warrant and report shall be filed with the clerk and be publically accessible unless the court for good cause based upon reasonably specific facts orders them to be closed or sealed. The affidavit or sworn testimony on application shall not be publically accessible.

(b) An officer who has executed a search warrant or, if such officer is unavailable, another officer acting in his behalf, shall, as soon as possible and not later than the date specified in the warrant, return the warrant to the issuing judicial officer together with a verified report of the facts and circumstances of execution, including an inventory of things seized. If the issuing judicial officer is unavailable, the warrant may be returned to any judicial officer of a circuit or district court within the county in which the warrant was issued.

(c) The judicial officer to whom an executed warrant is returned shall cause the warrant, report, inventory of things seized, and affidavit or sworn testimony on application to be filed with the clerk, and they shall be publically accessible unless the court for good cause based upon reasonably specific facts orders that any of them should be closed or sealed.

(d) If the judicial officer to whom an executed warrant is returned does not have jurisdiction to try the offense in respect to which the warrant was issued or the offense apparently disclosed by the things seized, he or she may transmit copies of the affidavit or sworn testimony on application, warrant, inventory, return, report, and related papers to an appropriate court having jurisdiction to try the offense disclosed, but the issuing judicial officer's clerk shall keep a copy in the clerk's file.

(e) Affidavits or sworn testimony on application, warrants, inventories, returns, reports, and related papers shall be filed with the clerk of the issuing judicial officer in the warrant docket as described in Administrative Order Number 2 or 18.

(f) Administrative Order Number 19 governs public access to affidavits or sworn testimony on application, warrants, inventories, returns, reports, and related papers subject to the provisions of this rule (see section (VII)(A)(3); see section (VIII) for obtaining access to documents excluded from public access). Remote electronic access to the warrant docket by the general public, however, shall be governed by and subject to the policies or requirement of the court.

HISTORY: Amended October 6, 2011, effective November 1, 2011; amended July 2, 2015, effective September 1, 2015.

Reporter's Notes, 2011 Amendment:

The 2011 amendments added the last sentences of subparagraphs (a) and (b) and made conforming amendments to subparagraphs (c) and (d).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2015 Amendment:

This rule was amended to provide for the filing of search warrants upon their return, whether executed or unexecuted, in a warrant docket

Even where no return of a warrant is made within the five day period specified in Rule 13.2(b), absent prejudice, suppression of evidence seized under the warrant is not required. Boyd v. State, 13 Ark. App. 132, 680 S.W.2d 911 (1984). See, also, Supplementary Commentary to Rule 13.2; Harris v. State, 262 Ark. 506, 558 S.W.2d 143 (1977).

Arkansas' Search and Seizure Law After United States v. Leon: In Search of a Standard, 40 Ark. L. Rev. 125.

CASE NOTES

Failure to Return Warrant.

Where the officer failed to return the search warrant to the court from which it was issued within five days, pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, but such failure caused no prejudice to the defendant, a reversal of the conviction was not required. Boyd v. State, 13 Ark. App. 132, 680 S.W.2d 911 (1984).

Where the judicial officer had directed the prosecutor to file the search warrants with the circuit court and the failure to return the warrants was not willful and caused the defendant no prejudice, the motion to suppress evidence was properly denied. McFarland v. State, 284 Ark. 533, 684 S.W.2d 233 (1985).

Filing.

Failure of judge, pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule, to file the material until sometime later did not invalidate a warrant where no prejudice, nor even any inconvenience resulted and the delay was inconsequential. Watson v. State, 291 Ark. 358, 724 S.W.2d 478 (1987).

Where wrong date was put on return of service originally, and there was no evidence that it was willful and no evidence that defendant was prejudiced by the failure to originally file the return with the date of execution correctly stated, and an amended return was filed with the date corrected, making the filing timely, the trial court did not err in denying the motion to suppress that was based upon the contention that the return was not timely filed. Safley v. State, 32 Ark. App. 111, 797 S.W.2d 468 (1990).

Listing of Articles Seized.

A return of search warrant mistakenly marked "investigative report" and neglecting to itemize some of the articles seized was not prejudicial where the report contained all the essential information without any substantial omissions or inaccuracies. Brothers v. State, 261 Ark. 64, 546 S.W.2d 715 (1977).

A motion to suppress was properly denied where the itemization on the back of a returned search warrant listed only three grams of heroin, one and one-half ounces of marijuana and three credit cards, even though cocaine was also found in the course of the search, since the claimed irregularity resulted in no prejudice to the defendant's rights. Shackleford v. State, 261 Ark. 721, 551 S.W.2d 205 (1977).

Return Invalid.

Where a search warrant which identified the scene of the search only by street address with no mention of the city so that it lacked the particularity required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.1(b), was served at night without the finding required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.2(c), where no receipt was given pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.3(d), where the return required by this rule was invalid, and only one informant had supplied the information it was based upon, although the affidavit in support of it said there had been four, too many rules had been disregarded, so that, although any one alone might not justify reversal and suppression of the evidence, taken as a whole, this was required. Harris v. State, 264 Ark. 391, 572 S.W.2d 389 (1978).

Separate Return.

Warrant would not be invalidated because there was no return on the face of it, where the return was attached to the warrant; there is no rule or reason that would prevent the return being made on a separate, attached document. Wilson v. State, 10 Ark. App. 176, 662 S.W.2d 204 (1983).

Transfer.

Subsection (d) of this rule is not mandatory, as it states "he may transmit the warrant, etc." Watson v. State, 291 Ark. 358, 724 S.W.2d 478 (1987).

Verification.

Where officer's signature appeared under the statement, swearing to truth of his testimony and return was signed by the municipal judge return was valid even though there was no formal oathtaking and the return probably was not signed in the judge's presence, since substantial compliance with the requirement of subsection (b) of this rule that a "verified" return be made was all that was necessary. Wilson v. State, 10 Ark. App. 176, 662 S.W.2d 204 (1983).

Argument that there was no written verification of the report of the execution of the warrant was held without merit where officer testified judge placed him under oath before receiving the information and so the requirements of subsection (b) of this rule were adequately met. Watson v. State, 291 Ark. 358, 724 S.W.2d 478 (1987).

Rule 13.5. Execution and return of warrants for documents.

(a) If the warrant authorizes documentary seizure, the executing officer shall endeavor by all appropriate means to search for and identify the documents to be seized without examining the contents of documents not covered by the warrant.

(b) If the documents to be seized cannot be searched for or identified without examining the contents of other documents, or if they constitute items or entries in account books, diaries, or other documents containing matter not specified in the warrant, the executing officer shall not examine the documents but shall either impound them under appropriate protection where found, or seal and remove them for safekeeping.

(c) An executing officer who has impounded or removed documents pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule shall, as promptly as practicable, report the fact and circumstances of the impounding or removal to the issuing judicial officer. As soon thereafter as the interests of justice permit, and upon due and reasonable notice to all interested persons, a hearing shall be held before the issuing judicial officer or a judicial officer contemplated by Rule 13.4(d), at which the person from whose possession or control the documents were taken, and any other person asserting any right or interest in the documents, may appear, in person or by counsel, and move either for the return of the documents or for specification of such conditions and limitations on the further search for the documents to be seized as may be appropriate to prevent unnecessary or unreasonable invasion of privacy. If the motion for the return of the documents is granted, in whole or in part, the documents covered by the granting order shall forthwith be returned or released from impoundment. If the motion is not granted, the search shall proceed under such conditions and limitations as the order shall prescribe, and at the conclusion of the search all documents other than those covered by the warrant, or otherwise subject to seizure, shall be returned or released from impoundment.

(d) Documents seized shall thereafter be handled and disposed of in accordance with the other provisions of this rule and Rules 15 and 16 hereof. No statements or testimony given in support of a motion made pursuant to this rule shall thereafter be received in evidence against the witness in any subsequent proceeding, other than for purposes of impeachment or in a prosecution for perjury or contempt in the giving of such statements or testimony.

Rule 13.6. Issuance and execution of warrants for illegally possessed pictures and literature.

If a warrant issued under this rule shall provide for the seizure of tangible instruments of expression, including but not limited to moving or still pictures, recordings, books, or other literature, the warrant shall authorize the seizure only of such instruments or copies thereof as are reasonably necessary for evidentiary use in a proceeding to determine whether the content of such instruments is constitutionally protected. If the effect of seizing such instruments or copies thereof is to stop or substantially impede their showing or distribution, the warrant shall provide that the possessor of such instruments be given a reasonable opportunity to furnish duplicate copies for seizure, or that he may retain possession of them and must display them during an adversary proceeding or at such times and places, including trial, as the court having jurisdiction over the matter may direct.

RULE 14.

VEHICULAR, EMERGENCY AND OTHER SEARCHES AND SEIZURES

Rule

Rule 14.1. Vehicular searches.

Rule 14.2. Search of open lands.

Rule 14.3. Emergency searches.

Rule 14.4. Seizure independent of search.

Rule 14.1. Vehicular searches.

(a) An officer who has reasonable cause to believe that a moving or readily movable vehicle is or contains things subject to seizure may, without a search warrant, stop, detain, and search the vehicle and may seize things subject to seizure discovered in the course of the search where the vehicle is:

(i) on a public way or waters or other area open to the public;

(ii) in a private area unlawfully entered by the vehicle; or

(iii) in a private area lawfully entered by the vehicle, provided that exigent circumstances require immediate detention, search, and seizure to prevent destruction or removal of the things subject to seizure.

(b) If the officer does not find the things subject to seizure by his search of the vehicle, and if:

(i) the things subject to seizure are of such a size and nature that they could be concealed on the person; and

(ii) the officer has reason to suspect that one (1) or more of the occupants of the vehicle may have the things subject to seizure so concealed; the officer may search the suspected occupants; provided that this subsection shall not apply to individuals traveling as passengers in a vehicle operating as a common carrier.

(c) This rule shall not be construed to limit the authority of an officer under Rules 2 and 3 hereof.

Reasonable Cause for Search. In Tillman v. State, 275 Ark. 275, 630 S.W.2d 5 (1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1201, 75 L.Ed.2d 432 (1983), the Court decided that a seizure of evidence made pursuant to a warrantless search of a vehicle detained on a public road was invalid under Rule 14.1(a), the officer making the stop having seen the car stopped on the highway in front of a house reported burglarized shortly thereafter over the police radio by another officer. The Court found that when the police officer learned that the residence had been burglarized he had reasonable cause to believe that the vehicle in front of him contained evidence of a crime, so a vehicular search was supportable under Rule 14.1(a). Apparently in order to avoid having to resolve the question whether the officer had reasonable cause to arrest the occupants of the car without a warrant, the Court assumed that no arrest was made until after the property was seized. But, as pointed out by the dissent, the Court was thus constrained to hold by implication that a person handcuffed at gunpoint and placed in a police car after being patted down had not been arrested.

In the trunk of the automobile were two garment bags. The police officer conducting the search testified at trial that one bag was open, disclosing fruits of the burglary. Upon seeing it, the officer searched both bags. The Court upheld admission of the evidence on the theory that one of the bags was opened and its contents clearly visible to the officer. It is difficult to distinguish this case in principle from Scisney v. State, 270 Ark. 610, 605 S.W.2d 451 (1980), where it was held that the discovery of marijuana cigarettes in the passenger compartment did not justify opening a suitcase in the locked trunk of the car. The Court in Tillman pointed out that not all closed bags receive constitutional protection, quoting a footnote from Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753, 61 L.Ed.2d 235 (1979) to the effect that containers such as burglar tool kits and gun cases cannot support any reasonable expectation of privacy because their contents "can be inferred by their outward appearance." N. 13, id. at 764, 61 L.Ed.2d at 245. It is difficult to understand how the officer could infer that the garment bag in question contained the fruits of a burglary simply from observing its outward appearance, unless one is entitled to assume this because the bag beside it was said to be open with its contents in plain view.

In an earlier case involving another defendant named Charles Tillman, the Arkansas Supreme Court upheld the search of the trunk of a gold Cadillac driven by appellant, a black male, where the searching officer had arrested appellant before, clearing 23 burglary charges, and had received recent reports, the most recent having come in 20 to 25 minutes previously, that a black male driving a gold Cadillac was seen near a burglarized home. Tillman v. State, 271 Ark. 552, 609 S.W.2d 340 (1980).

The Tillman cases appear to demonstrate that the showing of reasonable cause required by the Arkansas Supreme Court varies inversely with the mobility of the place to be searched. Since mobility is the sine qua non of an automobile, the Court can be expected to find diminished expectations of privacy and exigent circumstances in warrantless automobile search cases.

Rule 10.1(i) defines searches in terms of intrusions upon an individual's property or privacy, and the Arkansas Supreme Court has correctly read this definition to impose a heavy burden on the prosecution in warrantless search cases. See, Haynes v. State, 269 Ark. 506, 602 S.W.2d 599, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1066 (1980), where the Court refused to countenance securing an apartment until the arrival of a search warrant. The burden is at its lightest in automobile cases. Perhaps on the theory that it would be anomalous to permit an automobile to be immobilized pending the securing of a warrant, while not according authority to search the car based upon the same probable cause supporting its immobilization, in cases such as Tillman v. State, 271 Ark. 552, 609 S.W.2d 340 (1980) the Court has apparently adopted the United States Supreme Court's thinking on this issue: On the facts before us, the blue station wagon could have been searched on the spot when it was stopped since there was probable cause to search and it was a fleeting target for search. The probable-cause factor still obtained at the station house and so did the mobility of the car unless the Fourth Amendment permits a warrantless seizure of the car and the denial of its use to anyone until a warrant is secured. In that event there is little to choose in terms of practical consequences between an immediate search without a warrant and the car's immobilization until a warrant is obtained. Chambers v. Maroney, 399 U.S. 42, 52, 26 L.Ed.2d 419, 428-29 (1970).

In Lipovich v. State, 265 Ark. 55, 576 S.W.2d 720 (1979) appellant was convicted of theft by receiving upon evidence disclosed in a warrantless search of a U-Haul truck police thought had been abandoned on a public highway. Appellant contended that Rule 14.1 did not permit the search because police officers did not have reasonable cause to believe that the vehicle contained stolen articles. The Court upheld the search, not by reference to Rule 14.1, but by adverting to the "community caretaking functions" recognized by the United States Supreme Court in South Dakota v. Opperman, 428 U.S. 364, 49 L.Ed.2d 1000 (1976). Both appellant and the Court were correct: Rule 14.1 does not authorize warrantless inventory searches. Rule 12.6 does, however, as do Opperman and other United States Supreme Court decisions. See supplementary commentary to Rule 12.6.

Search of Occupants of Vehicle Under Rule 14.1(b). Questions raised in the original commentary about the continuing validity of United States v. Di Re, 332 U.S. 581, 92 L.Ed. 210 (1948) remain unanswered, though recent decisions of the circuit courts of appeal have reiterated the Di Re Court's assumption that "a person, by mere presence in a suspected car, [does not] lose immunities of search of his person to which he would otherwise be entitled." United States v. Rodriguez, 525 F.2d 1313, 1317 (10th Cir. 1975), quoting Di Re, 332 U.S. at 587, 92 L.Ed. at 216.

In Di Re, appellant was a passenger in a car when a police informant purchased counterfeit gasoline ration coupons from the driver. Evidence seized in a search of Di Re at the police station shortly thereafter was suppressed by the Supreme Court.

In Rodriguez, police were given a tip that a U-Haul trailer containing marijuana was being towed by a commercially operated bus carrying twelve ticketed passengers. The police stopped the bus and searched the trailer. When they found marijuana, they ordered the passengers to get off the bus and open their luggage. Rodriguez was convicted of possession of heroin found in his luggage. The court of appeals overturned the conviction on grounds that Rodriguez was not subject to arrest upon discovery of the marijuana in the trailer, and there were simply no grounds to make a lawful search of his person, the search of the suitcase being considered a search of the person for the purposes of this case. No evidence was introduced to connect Rodriguez to the marijuana in the trailer or to the operator of the bus. See, also, United States v. Arrellano-Rios, 799 F.2d 520 (9th Cir. 1986).

Alex C. Carroll, An Uncomfortable Truth: Arkansas's Approach to Warrantless Vehicle Searches is Unconstitutional, Ark. L. Notes (Feb. 4, 2020).

CASE NOTES

In General.

Warrantless automobile searches are justified in circumstances in which a warrantless search in other contexts would be unreasonable either because of the inherent mobility of an automobile or because of the diminished expectation of privacy. Horton v. State, 262 Ark. 211, 555 S.W.2d 226 (1977).

"Area Open to Public."

A motel parking lot is an "area open to the public" as used in subdivision (a)(i) of this rule. Reyes v. State, 329 Ark. 539, 954 S.W.2d 199 (1997).

In Custody.

Persons temporarily detained pursuant to a routine traffic stop are not "in custody" for the purposes of Miranda because the stop is presumptively temporary and brief, it is in public, and the atmosphere surrounding an ordinary traffic stop is substantially less "police dominated" than that surrounding the kinds of interrogation at issue in Miranda. Lopez v. State, 29 Ark. App. 145, 778 S.W.2d 641 (1989).

A motorist detained pursuant to a traffic stop is entitled to a recitation of his rights only when he is "subjected to treatment that renders him 'in custody' for practical purposes. Lopez v. State, 29 Ark. App. 145, 778 S.W.2d 641 (1989).

Interrogation.

The officer may ask the detained a moderate number of questions to determine his identity and to try to obtain information confirming or dispelling the officer's suspicions. Lopez v. State, 29 Ark. App. 145, 778 S.W.2d 641 (1989).

"Moving or Readily Movable."

A car is readily movable, even if the owner and his keys are in police custody, if the threat exists that the car would be removed by a third party. Reyes v. State, 329 Ark. 539, 954 S.W.2d 199 (1997).

Exigent circumstances justified a warrantless search of defendant's truck, notwithstanding that the defendant had been arrested, where the defendant's friend, who had driven the truck to the detention center, was not under arrest, and the truck was thus readily movable. Vega v. State, 56 Ark. App. 145, 939 S.W.2d 322 (1997).

Privacy Rights.

Defendant, who was a suspect in a hit-and-run accident, had no right to privacy in the exterior of his van, which was parked in a public area; and, since probable cause existed, the search and seizure of the paint scrapings and auto parts by police officers, while the van was in the public area, was not unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment. Tackett v. State, 307 Ark. 520, 822 S.W.2d 834 (1992).

Probable Cause.

Evidence established probable (reasonable) cause to search vehicle. Tillman v. State, 271 Ark. 552, 609 S.W.2d 340 (1980); Tillman v. State, 275 Ark. 275, 630 S.W.2d 5 (1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1201, 103 S. Ct. 1185, 75 L. Ed. 2d 432 (1983); Munguia v. State, 22 Ark. App. 187, 737 S.W.2d 658 (1987).

The right of police officers to stop a vehicle on the public highway for the purpose of searching it exists when there is probable cause for that action, i.e., when the facts within the knowledge of the officers, or of which they have had reasonably trustworthy information, when they intercept the vehicle, amounts to more than a mere suspicion that it contains something subject to seizure. Tillman v. State, 271 Ark. 552, 609 S.W.2d 340 (1980).

Reasonable cause exists when the facts and circumstances within the officer's knowledge, or of which he has reasonably trustworthy information, are sufficient to warrant a man of reasonable caution in the belief that an offense has been or is being committed. Munguia v. State, 22 Ark. App. 187, 737 S.W.2d 658 (1987).

Reasonable cause as required by this rule exists when the officers have reasonably trustworthy information, which rises to more than mere suspicion, that the stopped vehicle contains evidence subject to seizure and a person of reasonable caution could be justified in believing an offense has been committed or is being committed. Willett v. State, 298 Ark. 588, 769 S.W.2d 744 (1989); Bohanan v. State, 324 Ark. 158, 919 S.W.2d 198 (1996).

Reasonable cause may be based upon a combination of verified information furnished by anonymous callers and evidence gathered by the police in furtherance of an investigation of the subject matter. Willett v. State, 298 Ark. 588, 769 S.W.2d 744 (1989).

Although anonymous tips standing alone do not constitute reasonable or probable cause, information verified as a result of such tips may support reasonable cause and may be acted upon as though the tips had never been received. Willett v. State, 298 Ark. 588, 769 S.W.2d 744 (1989).

The odor of marijuana is sufficient to arouse suspicion and provide probable cause for the search of a vehicle. Lopez v. State, 29 Ark. App. 145, 778 S.W.2d 641 (1989).

Where co-defendant informed officers that both he and defendant were in the car before and after the homicide, it had been less than forty-eight hours since the crime occurred, and the officers had more than a mere suspicion that the alleged assailants were in the vehicle before and after the crime, there was reasonable cause to believe the car contained items subject to seizure. Bohanan v. State, 324 Ark. 158, 919 S.W.2d 198 (1996).

Reasonable cause to search a vehicle without a warrant was supported by the following facts: (1) the car was found parked near the motel room to be searched; (2) a large amount of contraband was found in the motel room as were the defendants and the car keys; (3) one defendant was linked to the car by a confidential informant and by a NCIC search and had marked bills from a controlled contraband sale on his person; and (4) a police detective asserted that in his experience it was common to find items of contraband in the car of a dealer when the dealer is captured in possession of controlled substances at another location. Reyes v. State, 329 Ark. 539, 954 S.W.2d 199 (1997).

Circuit court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence discovered from a traffic stop because probable cause existed to justify the warrantless stop and arrest of defendant, regardless of an informant's reliability. Although a narcotics investigator did not actually see the purchase of methamphetamine that took place inside the informant's residence, the investigator observed defendant's arrival and departure, there was an audio of the conversation between the informant and defendant, and the informant possessed methamphetamine immediately after his interaction with defendant. Millsap v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 192, 488 S.W.3d 559 (2016).

Reasonable Cause.

The same standards govern reasonable (that is to say, probable) cause determinations, whether the question is the validity of an arrest or the validity of a search and seizure. Hudson v. State, 316 Ark. 360, 872 S.W.2d 68 (1994).

Reasonable cause to search a vehicle without a warrant was supported by the following facts: (1) the car was found parked near the motel room to be searched; (2) a large amount of contraband was found in the motel room as were the defendants and the car keys; (3) one defendant was linked to the car by a confidential informant and by a NCIC search and had marked bills from a controlled contraband sale on his person; and (4) a police detective asserted that in his experience it was common to find items of contraband in the car of a dealer when the dealer is captured in possession of controlled substances at another location. Reyes v. State, 329 Ark. 539, 954 S.W.2d 199 (1997).

The initial stop of the defendant's car was not reasonable where (1) police officers went to the defendant's house to execute a warrant to search the house, but the defendant was not at home, (2) the officers decided not to search the house at that time and, instead, to look for the defendant's car based on their suspicion that he might have drugs on him, and (3) the officers located the defendant's car and stopped the car, although the defendant was not speeding or committing any traffic violation. Colbert v. State, 340 Ark. 657, 13 S.W.3d 162 (2000).

Police officer had reasonable cause to believe that a pickup truck with a false compartment and nervous occupants contained contraband before the driver withdrew the driver's prior consent to a search of the truck during a traffic stop; thus, 120 pounds of marijuana found in the false compartment after consent was revoked was admissible. Espinoza v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 636 (2009).

Denial of defendant's motion to suppress was not clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Law enforcement officers had reasonable cause to believe that a car belonging to defendant was involved in a purported drug deal. Jones v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 683 (2011).

Reasonableness.

Warrantless searches of automobiles may be reasonable when, under the same circumstances, a search of a home, store or other fixed piece of property would not be, and the difference is based not only upon the mobility of the automobile, but upon the diminished expectation of privacy in an automobile. Tillman v. State, 271 Ark. 552, 609 S.W.2d 340 (1980).

Search Incidental to Arrest.

Where there was probable cause for an arrest independent of the search, and the arrest and search were substantially contemporaneous, exigent circumstances would justify the warrantless search of a defendant about whom police had received reliable information that he had heroin in the automobile which he occupied, either under the "automobile exception" or as incidental to a lawful arrest. Horton v. State, 262 Ark. 211, 555 S.W.2d 226 (1977).

Where the officer had information that a crime was in progress, that the criminals had been observed rolling a large tire from the scene of the crime to a parking lot, and the hour was late at night, and where upon observing that the vehicle appeared to contain a heavy load as it seemed to be "sitting low in the rear," and was occupied by two suspects meeting the description of the information furnished him by radio, the officer stopped the vehicle, for the officer to have gone in quest of a search warrant at that hour of the night under the circumstances would have been impractical; thus a warrantless search incident to the arrest was not only reasonable but it would have rendered the officer subject to criticism had he not searched the automobile. Jackson v. State, 266 Ark. 754, 585 S.W.2d 367 (Ct. App. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1017, 100 S. Ct. 670, 62 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1980).

Defendant's motion to suppress should have been granted where the officers lacked probable cause to arrest him for driving under a suspended or revoked driver's license and were consequently precluded from inventorying his impounded vehicle in which 60 kilograms (130 pounds) of cocaine were discovered. Mounts v. State, 48 Ark. App. 1, 888 S.W.2d 321 (1994).

Search of Vehicle.

Where police found apparently abandoned U-Haul truck on road side and notified the U-Haul dealer who identified the truck and opened it for inspection by the police to determine if it contained anything hazardous to motorists, the search, which uncovered two stolen organs and a piano, was reasonable and valid. Lipovich v. State, 265 Ark. 55, 576 S.W.2d 720 (1979).

The defendant was entitled to suppression of marijuana found in his truck since a constable who pulled the defendant's vehicle over for a traffic violation had no suspicion that the truck contained contraband until after he "stuck [his] head" into the truck and smelled marijuana where (1) the defendant got out of his truck after being pulled over, (2) the constable testified that he could smell alcohol on the defendant's breath, but a breathalyzer test indicated a 0.0 level of blood alcohol, (3) a patdown for weapons revealed nothing, and (4) the constable then looked into the defendant's truck. Davis v. State, 68 Ark. App. 346, 8 S.W.3d 36 (1999).

After defendant's arrest for driving without a valid driver's licence, an officer saw marijuana seeds under the driver's seat, detected a faint odor of marijuana in the vehicle, and noticed the gas tank exhibited signs of tampering, typical of drug-smuggling; the officer gleaned probable cause to search the vehicle under this rule for narcotics as he waited for the wrecker to tow the vehicle to impound. Lopez v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 750 (2009).

State trooper who found a speaker box in the trunk of defendant's rental car with some loose screws lying around and heard something sliding inside the box had probable cause to believe there was contraband in the box, establishing an exception to the warrant requirement under subsection (a) of this rule, although defendant then withdrew his consent to the search by scuffling with the trooper. Rockward v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 110 (2010).

Dog's alert constituted reasonable suspicion for a further detention and a search because the officer demonstrated a profound alert; after conducting the free-air sniff, the dog began pulling him toward the front-passenger side of the vehicle, to the point the dog was almost choking, and he exhibited excessive tail wagging and deep, labored breathing. At one point, the dog was trying to get in through the window, which was unusual behavior for him, and at another point, the dog stood and stared at the door, a sign of an indication. Jackson v. State, 2013 Ark. 201, 427 S.W.3d 607 (2013).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress the warrantless search of his vehicle because there was nothing inherently unconstitutional or invalid about the initial traffic stop; and a warrantless search was proper under this rule as the vehicle was in a parking lot open to the public and was readily movable, especially with defendant's relatives among the crowd of people that had gathered, and no further exigency was required for the search. Christopher v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 237, 520 S.W.3d 291 (2017).

Unforeseeable Circumstances.

When the circumstances furnishing probable cause to search a particular automobile are unforeseeable, so that, if an effective search is to be made, it must be made immediately and without a warrant or the car must be seized and held without a warrant for whatever period is necessary to obtain a search warrant, either course is reasonable. Tillman v. State, 271 Ark. 552, 609 S.W.2d 340 (1980).

Validity of Search.

Search and seizure was in full compliance with the rule. Cook v. State, 293 Ark. 103, 732 S.W.2d 462 (1987).

Rule 14.2. Search of open lands.

An officer may, without a search warrant, search open lands and seize things which he reasonably believes subject to seizure.

This Rule merely recognizes the common law doctrine that a search of open land without a warrant is permissible. Hester v. United States, 265 U.S. 57, 68 L.Ed. 898 (1924). Wooded lands are open land, Bedell v. State, 257 Ark. 895, 521 S.W.2d 200 (1975), even when the land is owned by the target of the search. Wyss v. State, 262 Ark. 502, 558 S.W.2d 141 (1977).

If probable cause justifies the search of a lawfully stopped vehicle, it justifies the search of every part of the vehicle and its contents that may conceal the object of the search. Lopez v. State, 29 Ark. App. 145, 778 S.W.2d 641 (1989).

Warrantless search of defendant's car is authorized when defendant is still at large; it does not matter whether the search is conducted at the scene or after the vehicle has been seized and removed to another location. Bohanan v. State, 324 Ark. 158, 919 S.W.2d 198 (1996).

On becoming lawfully aware that a pickup driven by the defendant contained beer, whiskey, and a pistol, an officer was permitted, without a search warrant, to search the truck and seize those things discovered in the course of such search. Wright v. State, 327 Ark. 558, 940 S.W.2d 432 (1997).

Stop of defendant was lawful and complied with Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.1, 2.2(a), and this rule as an officer arrived on the scene within 30 seconds of a police broadcast; defendant's was the only vehicle in the area; and the stop was brief, non-aggressive, and a minimal intrusion compared to the state's interest in investigating the crime. Penister v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 405 (2011).

Warrantless Search.

An immediate search of an automobile stopped on a public highway is constitutionally permissible when the occupant has been alerted and the car's contents may never be found again if a warrant must be obtained and, given probable cause to search, there is no difference between, on the one hand, seizing and holding a car before presenting the probable cause issue to a magistrate and, on the other hand, carrying out an immediate search without a warrant. Tillman v. State, 271 Ark. 552, 609 S.W.2d 340 (1980).

The curtilage surrounding a residence may not be the object of a search without a warrant or pursuant to other legal means. The Arkansas Supreme Court has accepted the following definition of a curtilage: "The curtilage of a dwelling-house is a space, necessary and convenient and habitually used for the family purposes and the carrying on of domestic employments. It includes the garden, if there be one, and it need not be separated from other lands by a fence.” Sanders v. State, 264 Ark. 433, 436, 572 S.W.2d 397, 398 (1978), quoting from Black’s Law Dictionary (4th Ed.).

In Sanders, the Court went on to find that a warrant was necessary for a search of a garden located between 100 and 200 yards behind appellant’s home and separated from his home by a fence. The garden was found to be part of the curtilage. Three judges dissented, primarily on grounds that appellant had no garden, the evidence showing that he grew one row of corn and a few vegetables among ten rows of marijuana, some of which were 100 yards in length. Later, in Gustafson v. State, 267 Ark. 830, 593 S.W.2d 187 (Ark. App. 1979), the court of appeals upheld admission into evidence of stolen property seized from a hiding place in the woods behind appellant’s apartment after a police officer watching the apartment saw him run from the apartment with an armload of what turned out to be stolen property and dump it in the woods. The court’s holding turned on the finding that appellant had no expectation of privacy in the wooded area behind his apartment, since this was not within the curtilage.

The Gustafson decision should be compared with Gaylord v. State, 1 Ark. App. 106, 613 S.W.2d 409 (1981), in which a marijuana field 50 yards behind appellant’s house was found not to be part of the curtilage because of lack of evidence of any family use or domestic employment.

Gaylord reiterated the caveat in the original commentary that the court’s ruling in Hester v. United States may have been modified sub silentio in Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 19 L.Ed.2d 576 (1967), where the Court said: [T]he Fourth Amendment protects people, not places. What a person knowingly exposes to the public, even in his own home or office, is not a subject of Fourth Amendment protection. . . . But what he seeks to preserve as private, even in an area accessible to the public, may be constitutionally protected. Katz at 351-52, 19 L.Ed.2d at 582 (citations omitted).

The United States Supreme Court has recently established a quadripartite test for examining curtilage questions in Fourth Amendment cases: [W]e believe that curtilage questions should be resolved with particular reference to four factors: the proximity of the area claimed to be curtilage to the home, whether the area is included within an enclosure surrounding the home, the nature of the uses to which the area is put, and the steps taken by the resident to protect the area from observation from people passing by. United States v. Dunn, 480 U.S. 294, 300-301, 94 L.Ed.2d 326, 334-35 (1987).

The Court examined these factors and held that a barn fifty yards from a house was outside the curtilage. Addressing an alternative argument about open field searches, the Court reiterated its previously expressed rejections of arguments that the erection of fences in open fields creates a constitutionally protected private interest. The Court went on to reaffirm that an open field for the purposes of the Hester rule need not literally be “open” or a “field” as those terms are used in ordinary parlance. Dunn stands for the proposition that, without infringing upon any reasonable expectation of privacy, law enforcement officers can cross fences and position themselves in places on private property that are inaccessible to the public in order to obtain a view of the interior of a building (here a barn) for the purpose of obtaining information on which to base the issuance of a search warrant.

Contraband seized in what would otherwise be an open field is inadmissible if police officers are led to it by evidence found pursuant to a warrantless and otherwise impermissible entry into the curtilage of the target’s home. Dever v. State, 14 Ark. App. 107, 685 S.W.2d 518 (1985). While investigating an incident in which appellant had received a gunshot wound, law enforcement officers noticed a small amount of marijuana around appellant’s cabin. Two days later officers returned to the cabin, found a path leading into the woods from the curtilage, and followed it to a marijuana field. It is not clear from the court’s opinion that the officers ever physically set foot on appellant’s curtilage during the second visit at which the marijuana was seized. In addition, it should be noted that the court did not find that the marijuana was located in a protected area. The court emphasized that the officers had ample time to obtain a search warrant, but did not go on to speculate whether probable cause existed to search a place other than appellant’s curtilage or whether marijuana seized by officers in the woods pursuant to a search warrant authorizing only a search of appellant’s home and curtilage would have been admissible. Compare, Dunn.

Observations From Aircraft. The Fourth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States is not violated by a naked-eye, warrantless, aerial observation of an individual’s fenced-in back yard by officers in an aircraft operating in a public air space, even if the observation is not made as part of a routine patrol but is particularly directed at identifying marijuana plants in the yard. California v. Ciraolo, 476 U.S. 207, 90 L.Ed.2d 210 (1986). Four justices dissented, arguing that the Court had ignored Justice Harlan’s concurring opinion in Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 19 L.Ed.2d 576 (1967) that any decision to construe the Fourth Amendment as proscribing only physical intrusions by police onto private property “is, in the present day, bad physics as well as bad law, for reasonable expectations of privacy may be defeated by electronic as well as physical invasion.” 476 U.S. at 215, 90 L.Ed.2d

Scope of Search.

A party has no reasonable expectation of privacy in the wooded area behind his apartment, and this area is not within the purview of one's "curtilage" so as to be considered free from governmental intrusion. Gustafson v. State, 267 Ark. 830, 593 S.W.2d 187 (Ct. App. 1979).

Wooded Area.

A wooded area a mile away from defendant's father's house, even though it belonged to the father, cannot be regarded as appurtenant to his house or curtilage and may be searched without a warrant. Wyss v. State, 262 Ark. 502, 558 S.W.2d 141 (1977).

Where a police officer had seen the defendant run out of his apartment and dump some CB equipment in a wooded area behind his garden, a warrantless seizure of the stolen CB equipment was permissible because wooded areas are open land. Gustafson v. State, 267 Ark. 830, 593 S.W.2d 187 (Ct. App. 1979).

Rule 14.3. Emergency searches.

An officer who has reasonable cause to believe that premises or a vehicle contain:

- (a) individuals in imminent danger of death or serious bodily harm; or
 - (b) things imminently likely to burn, explode, or otherwise cause death, serious bodily harm, or substantial destruction of property; or
 - (c) things subject to seizure which will cause or be used to cause death or serious bodily harm if their seizure is delayed;
- may, without a search warrant, enter and search such premises and vehicles, and the persons therein, to the extent reasonably necessary for the prevention of such death, bodily harm, or destruction.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 14.3

Haynes v. State, 269 Ark. 506, 602 S.W.2d 599, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1066, 66 L.Ed.2d 611 (1980) is a case that should have been decided under Rule 12.5. Police officers arranged for a "controlled purchase" of drugs by an informant who met them nearby immediately afterward and notified them that appellant, who lived in room 114, had sold him drugs in room 116. As one policeman went to get a search warrant others descended upon the motel, securing room 114 by removing appellant and his father to a nearby room. After three and one-half hours a search warrant arrived, and officers searched the room, seizing drugs. The Arkansas Supreme Court ordered the evidence suppressed in an opinion that found that the intrusion into claimant's room constituted an unreasonable search. A four judge majority held that no exigent circumstances existed to support a search under Rule 14.3 governing warrantless emergency searches. Chief Justice Fogleman, joined by Justices Smith and Stroud, dissented in an opinion pointing out that the testimony showed that appellant had been arrested at the time of the search and arguing that exigent circumstances existed and justified the search, since the officers had reasonable grounds for believing that narcotics were being dispensed and would either be sold or destroyed before a search warrant could be obtained and executed. It appeared that the search warrant was obtained as soon as possible under the circumstances.

As frequently happens in search and seizure cases, the facts became the focal point of the dispute between members of the majority and dissenters. Though the majority presumably would not gainsay that LSD can cause "serious bodily harm" and that further drug sales might have taken place had appellant not been arrested, it concluded without much explanation that the circumstances did not disclose grounds for an emergency search. The dissent, without adverting to Rule 14.3, concluded that manifest exigent circumstances justified the officers, remaining on the premises for three hours until a search warrant could be procured. The dissenting opinion argued that the search was "reasonable," but this argument does not meet the thrust of the majority's opinion, the question being whether a three hour "seizure" of an entire room prior to a search under warrant was constitutionally permissible. Though the United States Supreme Court has approved the "seizure" of an automobile pending the issuance of a search warrant to search its interior, Chambers v. Maroney, 399 U.S. 42, 26 L.Ed.2d 419 (1970), the Arkansas Supreme Court may have decided that a dwelling place, not being mobile, cannot be quarantined, so to speak.

The majority opinion also relied on Payton v. New York, 455 U.S. 573, 63 L.Ed.2d 639 (1980) and Riddick v. New York, 445 U.S. 573, 63 L.Ed.2d 639 (1980), but, as is pointed out in the Haynes dissent, Riddick and Payton were cases in which the United States Supreme Court was concerned with police authority to make warrantless arrests where no exigent circumstances exist. The Supreme Court in Payton and Riddick simply held that police cannot make warrantless and nonconsensual entries into suspects' homes in order to make routine felony arrests and that evidence seized incident to such illegal arrests was inadmissible. In neither case was it argued by appellant that no exigent circumstances justified the warrantless arrests, since in each case the trial court made the assumption that the arrests were lawful under state statutes. There being no evidence in the record on appeal in regard to exigent circumstances, the Supreme Court declined to make a finding on exigency, noting that it had "no occasion to consider the sort of emergency or dangerous situation described in our cases as 'exigent circumstances', that would justify a warrantless entry into a home for the purpose of either arrest or search." Payton at 583, 63 L.Ed.2d at 648-49.

Even if it is assumed that emergency circumstances as defined by Rule 14.3 were not present in Haynes, the circumstances justifying an emergency search under Rule 14.3 may not in all cases be equatable with "exigent circumstances." In deciding Haynes, the Arkansas Supreme Court could have found the warrantless intrusion into the hotel room to make an arrest justifiable on grounds of exigent circumstances which prevented an arrest warrant or a search warrant from being issued. In Moore v. State, 261 Ark. 274, 551 S.W.2d 185 (1977), decided before Payton, the Arkansas Supreme Court decided that "there [was] no reason one of the officers could not have obtained a search warrant while the other officers remained at the scene [i.e., the defendant's house]." 261 Ark. at 277, 551 S.W.2d at 187. The Arkansas Supreme Court evidently thought that the United States Supreme Court's guidelines in Payton invalidated the Moore option of securing the premises by the time the Haynes case came on to be decided. As pointed out above, the Payton decision does not explicitly invalidate securing premises under all circumstances and does not appear to preclude this remedy even by implication in cases where exigent circumstances do indeed justify warrantless intrusions into places of residence for the purpose of making an arrest. So, the Haynes Court could have avoided reversing the trial court by making findings that exigent circumstances existed and that police conduct in securing the premises was permissible as congruous with a procedure approved in dicta in Moore.

Perhaps more in point in the Haynes type of case is Warden v. Hayden, 387 U.S. 294, 18 L.Ed.2d 782 (1967), where the Court upheld the admissibility of evidence seized in the warrantless search of a robbery suspect's home contemporaneous with his warrantless arrest shortly after an armed robbery. Though the Court in Warden v. Hayden based its finding of exigent circumstances on the need for officers' to seize weapons that had been used in a robbery or might be used against them, the exigent circumstance rationale might be broad enough to cover situations where officers are attempting to interdict the sale of dangerous drugs under Rule 14.3.

Haynes would perhaps have been a less difficult case had it been treated as presenting Rule 12.5 issues, though these might also have proved intractable since the arrest in question may have taken place immediately outside the apartment, thereby requiring that the Court balance restrictions imposed on searches incident to arrest under Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 23 L.Ed.2d 685 (1969) against expanded authority to search conferred by exigent circumstances under Warden. Warden has not, of course, gone unnoticed by the Arkansas Supreme Court and was relied upon in Combs v. State, 270 Ark. 496, 606 S.W.2d 61 (1980) to uphold the warrantless seizure of a weapon from appellant in a motel room after police entered the room through an open door upon hearing a woman say, "Let me go." See, also, Gaylor v. State, 284 Ark. 215, 681 S.W.2d 348 (1984), in which the Court upheld a warrantless arrest and a "substantially contemporaneous" search of the home — officers walked through and found items in plain view — shortly after an armed robbery. Id. at 219, 681 S.W.2d at 350.

CASE NOTES

Constitutional Protection.

Absent exigent circumstances, an intrusion into an individual's place of abode without a warrant is a violation of that individual's rights under the Constitutions of the United States and the State of Arkansas. Haynes v. State, 269 Ark. 506, 602 S.W.2d 599, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1066, 101 S. Ct. 795, 66 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1980).

Danger of Bodily Harm.

Where police officers were responding to a call that a woman was being held at a motel by a man with a gun, it was clearly reasonable for the officers at the time they entered the motel room without a warrant to believe that there was a great risk of serious bodily harm to someone in that room. Combs v. State, 270 Ark. 496, 606 S.W.2d 61 (1980).

Police had no probable cause to search residence without a search warrant where an informant indicated victim had been dead for some time, so there was no risk of bodily harm. Mitchell v. State, 294 Ark. 264, 742 S.W.2d 895 (1988).

Police chief's warrantless search of defendant's garage was supported by exigent circumstances where the chief entered the garage only after he saw a large puddle of blood in the gravel outside the garage, with what he called a "drag mark" of blood going into the garage; clearly, given these circumstances, the chief had reasonable cause to believe someone else might be injured inside the garage. Baird v. State, 357 Ark. 508, 182 S.W.3d 136 (2004).

In defendant's drug case, the court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence as officer's properly entered the home where (1) based on what the officers saw and smelled when defendant opened the door, they believed that methamphetamine was being manufactured, which, based upon their knowledge of drug labs, posed a threat of immediate serious bodily harm to anyone in the residence, and (2) the officers also had reason to believe that there were other persons in the residence based upon the footsteps that they heard when they first arrived and the fact that there was a female sitting at the table who said that she thought there was a female in the back of the house. Loy v. State, 88 Ark. App. 91, 195 S.W.3d 370 (2004).

Danger of Death.

Although officer without a warrant entered homicide defendant's bedroom in search of the victim despite a bystander's statement that he believed the victim was already dead, this aspect of the search was consistent with subsection (a) of this rule because a bystander's assessment of the child's condition could well have been incorrect, and, frequently, the report of a death proves inaccurate and a spark of life remains, sufficient to respond to emergency police aid; in short, the officer's entry into the bedroom was clearly related to the objectives of the authorized intrusion into the residence. Wofford v. State, 330 Ark. 8, 952 S.W.2d 646 (1997).

A police officer was allowed to enter the defendant's home and seize that which was in plain view because of exigent circumstances where the victims (defendant's parents and his sister) had been missing for 3 days, the defendant informed the officer that the victims were in the home and were dead, he initially refused entry to the home, and he cryptically stated that he had not reported the victims' deaths because he was waiting to hear. Hodge v. State, 332 Ark. 377, 965 S.W.2d 766 (1998).

Search Improper.

Defendant's motions to suppress physical evidence recovered from his residence was improperly denied where, after getting defendant's name from the victim, officers went to his residence, entered without permission, and spoke to two other persons before finding and arresting him; based on the totality of the circumstances standard, the officers' claim of exigent circumstances was speculative at best where the officers had waited over an hour before going to the residence and had no information about other potential victims, and any blood seen at the residence would not have indicated that an attack, other than the known assault, had occurred. Baird v. State, 83 Ark. App. 392, 128 S.W.3d 459 (2003), rev'd, 357 Ark. 508, 182 S.W.3d 136 (2004).

Warrantless nighttime intrusion into defendants' home was improper as there were no exigent circumstances and the forced entry was not a tactic that comported with the Fourth Amendment or Ark. Const., Art. II, § 15; ample opportunity existed for the police to obtain a warrant. Robbins v. State, 94 Ark. App. 393, 231 S.W.3d 79 (2006).

Motion to suppress should have been granted in a drug case because there was no reasonable basis for officers to believe that appellant was present before executing an arrest warrant; moreover, there were no exigent circumstances under this rule because there was no movement observed in the surveillance conducted before the entry. Gutierrez v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 628 (2012).

Search Proper.

Probable cause existed under the Fourth Amendment and this rule for a deputy to enter defendants' resident without a warrant where a security alarm had been activated and a door to the house was open; it was reasonable for the deputy to believe that a crime might be in progress and for him to enter the residence and secure the premises. Steinmetz v. State, 366 Ark. 222, 234 S.W.3d 302 (2006).

Defendant's motion to suppress evidence found during a brief search of his home after defendant gave officers the keys to lock up as he left with them was properly denied because the officers had reason to check the apartment pursuant to this rule after noticing defendant's eagerness to leave, his admission that he had fought with his girlfriend, a bloodstain on the door, a foul odor in the apartment, and a photo showing defendant with young children. Miller v. State, 2010 Ark. 1, 362 S.W.3d 264 (2010).

Defendant's motion to suppress all physical evidence was properly denied where a female called 911 and requested the assistance of an officer before being disconnected, dispatch returned the call three times without reaching the caller, and dispatch determined that the call had originated at defendant's residence; thus, the officers had an objectively reasonable basis for believing that a person at that address could have been in need of immediate aid, permitting them to lawfully drive up defendant's driveway. Laird v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 27, 617 S.W.3d 273 (2021).

Rule 14.4. Seizure independent of search.

An officer who, in the course of otherwise lawful activity, observes the nature and location of things which he reasonably believes to be subject to seizure, may seize such things.

Seizure of Items in Plain View. In Gatlin v. State, 262 Ark. 485, 559 S.W.2d 12 (1977), the Arkansas Supreme Court ordered suppressed several items, including a plastic bag containing $807 seized by officers conducting a search under a warrant only authorizing seizure of controlled substances. The Court held that the money and other items forming the basis for a conviction of theft by receiving would have been admissible had the state shown at trial that their discovery was inadvertent and that their incriminating nature was "immediately apparent." Id. at 490, 559 S.W.2d at 15, relying on Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U.S. 443, 29 L.Ed.2d 564 (1971); United States v. Johnson, 541 F.2d 1311 (8th Cir. 1976). There was no evidence that the officers making the search knew that the items seized had been stolen, so their incriminating nature could not have been immediately apparent. Neither was there any testimony that discovery of the goods was inadvertent. Therefore, the Court ruled, these items were not admissible under Rule 14.4.

The circumstances in Gatlin must be distinguished from those in cases such as McQueen v. State, 283 Ark. 232, 675 S.W.2d 358 (1984), where officers with a search warrant seized $640 cash not listed on the warrant as well as enumerated items in a search of defendant's residence. The evidence was introduced at appellant's trial for aggravated robbery and theft of property. The Supreme Court upheld the seizure of the money on testimony that its discovery was inadvertent, the incriminating nature of the money being "immediately apparent," since officers knew claimant had stolen a large sum of cash. See, also, Heard v. State, 272 Ark. 140, 612 S.W.2d 312 (1981), where officers executing a warrant seized a cash box that was subsequently introduced at appellant's burglary trial, inadvertence having been shown and the incriminating nature of the article being immediately apparent to the officers.

"Inadvertent" Discovery Requirement. The Arkansas Supreme Court discussed the "plain view" doctrine, and, in particular, the requirement that the initial intrusion be inadvertent, in Johnson v. State, 291 Ark. 260, 724

S.W.2d 160 (1987), a case in which the Court upheld admissibility of marijuana seized as a result of a search stemming from police officers viewing appellant carrying marijuana plants in his field as the officers drove on a nearby public highway. Though the Court discussed inadvertence, the key to the decision appears to be that there was no cognizable "intrusion." Quoting Kelley v. State, 261 Ark. 31, 545 S.W.2d 919 (1977), the Court opined that "the basic test is whether the officer had a right to be in the position he was when the objects fell into his plain view." Johnson at 262-63, 724 S.W.2d at 162. The Court went on to say that the plain view doctrine "permits the admission of evidence seized only when (1) the initial intrusion was lawful, (2) the discovery of the evidence was inadvertent, and (3) the incriminating nature of the evidence was immediately apparent." Id. at 263, 724 S.W.2d at 162. About the meaning of the "inadvertent" prong of the standard the Court had the following to say: The inadvertence requirement has generally been interpreted to mean that "immediately prior to the discovery, the police lacked sufficient information to establish probable cause to obtain a warrant to search for the object." . . . Inadvertence does not "encompass total surprise" or mean "unexpected." Johnson at 263, 724 S.W.2d at 162. (Citations omitted.)

The most recent "plain view" case is Arizona v. Hicks, 480 U.S. 321, 94 L.Ed.2d 347 (1987). A man in his apartment was injured by a bullet fired through the floor of the apartment immediately above him. Police entered the upper apartment without a warrant and, upon noticing expensive stereo equipment incompatible with the other appointments, copied serial numbers of components, moving some of them in the process.

The Court affirmed the lower court's suppression of the stereo equipment, finding that the moving of the equipment was a search separate and apart from the search that was the lawful objective of entering the apartment and that the plain view doctrine did not protect the seizure because the officer inspecting the equipment concededly did not have reasonable cause to believe that the equipment was stolen.

Justice White, in his concurring opinion, pointed out that the "inadvertent discovery" prong of the plain view exception has never been accepted by a majority of the Court and that the dissent's assertions in reliance on this requirement were erroneous. 480 U.S. at 329, 94 L.Ed.2d at 357.

CASE NOTES

In General.

The inadvertence requirement has generally been interpreted to mean that "immediately prior to the discovery, the police lacked sufficient information to establish probable cause to obtain a warrant to search for the object." Johnson v. State, 291 Ark. 260, 724 S.W.2d 160, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 830, 108 S. Ct. 101, 98 L. Ed. 2d 61 (1987).

Plain View Doctrine.

The plain view doctrine permits the admission of seized evidence if: (1) the initial intrusion was lawful; (2) the discovery of the evidence was inadvertent; and (3) the incriminating nature of the evidence was immediately apparent. McQueen v. State, 283 Ark. 232, 675 S.W.2d 358 (1984); Johnson v. State, 291 Ark. 260, 724 S.W.2d 160, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 830, 108 S. Ct. 101, 98 L. Ed. 2d 61 (1987).

The observation of evidence in plain view is not a search, and therefore the resulting seizure is not the result of an unreasonable search. Johnson v. State, 291 Ark. 260, 724 S.W.2d 160, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 830, 108 S. Ct. 101, 98 L. Ed. 2d 61 (1987).

Under the plain view doctrine, seized evidence is admissible when the initial intrusion was lawful; the discovery of the contraband was inadvertent; and when the incriminating nature of the evidence was immediately apparent. Freeman v. State, 37 Ark. App. 81, 824 S.W.2d 403 (1992).

Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied where her co-tenant gave police officers consent to search the common areas of her residence and the officers saw drug paraphernalia, from the living room, through an open door in plain view on defendant's bed. Love v. State, 355 Ark. 334, 138 S.W.3d 676 (2003), overruled in part, Georgia v. Randolph,

While federal marshals were arresting defendant at his apartment for a violation of probation, the marshals discovered what they suspected to be cocaine in the bathroom and called the city police, who determined that the substance in the bathroom, which was in plain view, was cocaine; however, pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 12.5, the city police officers improperly searched a black bag in another room without defendant's consent and, if the evidence found in the illegal search of black bag motivated the officers to obtain a search warrant, the illegal search would preclude application of the independent-source doctrine and the evidence would be inadmissible. Lauderdale v. State, 82 Ark. App. 474, 120 S.W.3d 106 (2003).

Unlawful Seizure.

Where police officers who entered defendant's home pursuant to search warrant for controlled substances seized certain items, including money, a television, and firearms, they claimed to have found in "plain view," such seizure was unlawful in the absence of any showing that the officers had knowledge of any particular stolen items at defendant's residence or that the discovery of the items was inadvertent. Gatlin v. State, 262 Ark. 485, 559 S.W.2d 12 (1977).

The observation of evidence in plain view is not a search, and therefore the resulting seizure is not the result of an unreasonable search. Johnson v. State, 291 Ark. 260, 724 S.W.2d 160, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 830, 108 S. Ct. 101, 98 L. Ed. 2d 61 (1987).

The fact that the officers' initial intrusion was unlawful takes the evidence seized outside the plain view exception. Evans v. State, 33 Ark. App. 184, 804 S.W.2d 730 (1991).

RULE 15.

DISPOSITION OF SEIZED THINGS

Rule

Rule 15.1. Custody of seized things: retention by seizing officer.

Rule 15.2. Motions for return or restoration of seized things.

Rule 15.3. Custody of seized things: freshly stolen goods; perishables.

Rule 15.4. Custody of seized things: report of seizure.

Rule 15.5. Effect on civil remedies.

Rule 15.1. Custody of seized things: retention by seizing officer.

In all cases of seizure the law enforcement officer making the seizure shall provide for the appropriate safekeeping of the things seized.

CASE NOTESDestruction of Items.

The police violated this rule by destroying all the marijuana except that saved for testing without first obtaining a court order and making a full report of the circumstances of the seizure and a list of the items seized. Johnson v. State, 291 Ark. 260, 724 S.W.2d 160, cert.

denied, 484 U.S. 830, 108 S. Ct. 101, 98 L. Ed. 2d 61 (1987).

Rule 15.2. Motions for return or restoration of seized things.

(a) Who May File. Within thirty (30) days after notice of seizure, or at such later date as the court in its discretion may allow:

(i) the individual from whose person, property, or premises things have been seized may move the court to whom the warrant was returned, or the court having jurisdiction of the offense in question, as the case may be, to return things seized to the person or premises from which they were seized; and

(ii) any other person asserting a claim to rightful possession of the things seized may move the court having jurisdiction of the matter to restore the things seized to such person.

(b) Grounds. Motions for return or restoration of seized things shall be based on the ground that the moving party has a valid claim to rightful possession of things seized, because:

(i) the things had been stolen or otherwise converted, and the moving party is the owner or rightful possessor;

(ii) the things seized were not in fact subject to seizure;

(iii) the moving party, by license or otherwise, is lawfully entitled to possess things otherwise subject to seizure; or

(iv) although the things seized were subject to seizure, the moving party is or will be entitled to their return or restoration on the court's determination that they are no longer needed for evidentiary purposes.

(c) Custody Order. When a motion is made for the return or restoration of seized things, the court shall enter a custody order which shall provide for the safekeeping of the things seized, with conditions of appropriate privacy for documents and other records.

(d) Postponement of Return. In granting a motion for return or restoration of seized things, the court may postpone execution of the order for return or restoration, until such time as the things need no longer remain available for evidentiary use.

(e) Appellate Review. An order granting a motion for return or restoration of seized things shall be reviewable on appeal in regular course as a final order. An order denying such a motion, or entered under Rule 15.2(f), shall be reviewable on appeal upon certification by the court having custody of such things that they are no longer needed for evidentiary purposes.

(f) Disputed Possession Rights. If, upon consideration of a motion or motions for return or restoration of seized things, it appears that the things should be returned or restored, but there is a substantial question whether they should be returned to the person from whose possession they were seized or to some other person, or a substantial question among several claimants as to rightful possession, the court hearing the matter may, in its discretion, return the things to the person from whose possession they were seized, or impound the things seized and remit the several claimants to appropriate civil process for determination of the claims.

(g) Disposition of Contraband and Unclaimed Goods. At such time as the court finds that there is no further need for custody of the seized things, and if no motion for return or restoration of the seized things has been made, the court shall order the things to be delivered to the officials charged with responsibility under the applicable laws for the sale, destruction, or other disposition of contraband and unclaimed goods in official custody.

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

Where a towing company sold an arrestee's truck, the arrestee's due process claim survived summary judgment because, inter alia, (1) the towing company was acting under color of state law, and (2) this rule applied rather than the Arkansas Removal of Unattended or Abandoned Vehicles statute, § 27-50-1201 et seq., since the truck was not "abandoned" or "unattended." Smith v. Insley's, Inc., 499 F.3d 875 (8th Cir. 2007).

Construction.

There is no conflict between § 5-5-101 and subsection (f) of this rule; the latter is simply the procedural implementation of the former. Wilburn v. Topeka Corp., 265 Ark. 141, 577 S.W.2d 406 (1979).

In conjunction with Ark. R. Crim. P. 10.1, this rule permits the individual from whose person things are seized to move the court having jurisdiction over the offense in question to return things seized to the person from which they are seized. Drug Task Force v. Hoffman, 353 Ark. 182, 114 S.W.3d 213 (2003).

Where the $2000 defendant paid an agent for drugs had remained in possession of the drug task force (DTF) without a court order as evidence in a case which could not be filed, since the state failed to file timely criminal charges or a timely forfeiture action, the trial court properly held defendant's $2,000 was the subject of seizure and forfeiture under § 5-64-505, and defendant was entitled to return of the money; moreover, no jury was needed as, under Ark. R. Civ. P. 39(a), the right to trial by jury was not absolute and there were no factual issues to be decided. Drug Task Force v. Hoffman, 353 Ark. 182, 114 S.W.3d 213 (2003).

Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies.

Because defendant county animal control officer acted under a valid search warrant when she entered plaintiff dog owner's property to seize the dogs, and the owner's animal cruelty conviction plea agreement gave the officer authority to inspect the premises, there was no policy or custom to hold the county liable for alleged Fourth and Fifth Amendment violations, and further, the owner failed to exhaust her remedy under this rule after the second seizure by not petitioning for the dogs' return which provided for adequate state post-deprivation remedies that satisfied due process. Crawford v. Van Buren County, 678 F.3d 666 (8th Cir. 2012).

The issuance of a certification by a circuit court that items seized are no longer needed for evidentiary purposes is mandatory before a motion to return seized items may be made. Slots, Inc. v. State, 342 Ark. 609, 30 S.W.3d 105 (2000).

Motion Denied.

Appellant was not entitled to the return of the currency under this rule because it had already been forfeited to the prosecuting attorney's office when appellant filed his motion. Green v. State, 2014 Ark. 69 (2014).

Rule 15.3. Custody of seized things: freshly stolen goods; perishables.

If the identity of a person having a rightful claim to possession of freshly stolen seized things can be promptly established beyond a reasonable doubt to the satisfaction of the seizing officer, the things may be promptly returned to the rightful possessor. Perishable things seized may be disposed of by the seizing officers as justice and the necessities of the case dictate. A full report of the facts and circumstances of any seizure and the disposition of the things seized pursuant to this rule shall be made to a judicial officer.

Rule 15.4. Custody of seized things: report of seizure.

(a) In all cases of seizure other than pursuant to a search warrant, the officer making the seizure shall, as soon thereafter as is reasonably possible, report in writing the fact and circumstances of the seizure, with a list of things to the court before which the defendant will be brought for first appearance, or, if no arrest is made to a court having jurisdiction to entertain proceedings respecting the offense disclosed by the seizure.

(b) A copy of the list shall be given to the defendant or his counsel and the list shall be given such public notice as may be directed by a court of competent jurisdiction.

CASE NOTESApplicability.

This rule did not apply to a seizure of property by a humane society officer since no officer of the law conducted any search and no search warrant was required. Norton v. State, 307 Ark. 336, 820 S.W.2d 272 (1991).

Report of Seizure.

The failure of a sheriff to report the seizure of four expended .22 cartridge casings to the court as required by this rule was not a substantial violation sufficient to warrant suppression of the evidence pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 16.2 where there was consistent testimony by three law enforcement officials detailing the facts and circumstances of the search that led to the discovery of the casings, there was a receipt documenting the transfer of the evidence from the sheriff to the State Police Investigator that corroborated the date of the seizure and listed the items that were found, and there was testimony that a report was filed in the law enforcement file. Dansby v. State, 338 Ark. 697, 1 S.W.3d 403 (1999).

Nothing in this Article shall be construed to abrogate any civil remedy otherwise available.

Rule 16.1. Scope of rule.

The provisions of Rule 16.220.4(a) and (b) shall not apply in criminal prosecutions where omnibus hearing procedure is utilized.

Rule 16.2. Motions to suppress evidence.

(a) Objection to the use of any evidence, on the grounds that it was illegally obtained, shall be made by a motion to suppress evidence. The phrase “objection to the use of any evidence, on the grounds that it was illegally obtained,” shall include but is not limited to evidence which:

1. Consists of tangible property obtained by means of an unlawful search and seizure; or

2. Consists of a record of potential testimony reciting or describing declarations or conversations overheard or recorded by means of eavesdropping; or

3. Consists of a record or potential testimony reciting or describing a confession or admission of a defendant involuntarily made; or

4. Was obtained as a result of other evidence obtained in a manner described in subdivisions one, two, and three; or

5. Consists of the prospective in-court identification of the defendant based on an unlawful pre-trial confrontation.

The motion shall be made to the court which is to conduct the trial at which such evidence may be offered in evidence.

(b) The motion to suppress shall be timely filed but not later than ten (10) days before the date set for the trial of the case, except that the court for good cause shown may entertain a motion to suppress at a later time.

(c) Renewal of a motion to suppress which has been denied may be allowed on the ground of newly discovered evidence or as the interests of justice require.

(d) An order granting a motion to suppress prior to trial shall be reviewable on appeal pursuant to Rule of Appellate Procedure — Criminal 3.

(e) Determination. A motion to suppress evidence shall be granted only if the court finds that the violation upon which it is based was substantial, or if otherwise required by the Constitution of the United States or of this state. In determining whether a violation is substantial the court shall consider all the circumstances, including:

(i) the importance of the particular interest violated;

(ii) the extent of deviation from lawful conduct;

(iii) the extent to which the violation was willful;

(iv) the extent to which privacy was invaded;

(v) the extent to which exclusion will tend to prevent violations of these rules;

(vi) whether, but for the violation, such evidence would have been discovered; and

(vii) the extent to which the violation prejudiced moving party’s ability to support his motion, or to defend himself in the proceedings in which such evidence is sought to be offered in evidence against him.

HISTORY: Amended June 6, 1981, effective September 1, 1981; amended February 24, 2005.

Comment I to Rule 16.2

Determination of Motion to Suppress Evidence. (a) Grounds. A motion to suppress evidence may be based upon a violation of any of the provisions of these rules, including that:

(i) the things seized were not subject to seizure;

(ii) in the case of a seizure based on the authority of a search warrant:

(A) the issuing judicial officer was not authorized to issue warrants; or

(B) on the record before the issuing judicial officer, there was no reasonable cause to believe that the search would discover the individuals or things specified in the application; or

(C) the warrant was invalid for failure to describe with sufficient particularity the place to be searched, or the persons or things to be seized; or

(D) the warrant was executed at a time not authorized therein; or

(E) the scope of the search by which the things seized were discovered exceeded that authorized by the warrant; or

(iii) in the case of a seizure based on the authority of an arrest:

(A) the arrest was invalid; or

(B) the search by which the things seized were discovered, or the seizure, was not authorized;

(iv) in the case of a seizure based on consent,

(A) the consent was not voluntary; or

(B) the consent was not given by any person authorized to give consent; or

(C) a warning required was not given; or

(D) the scope of the search by which the things seized were discovered exceeded the scope of the consent; or

(v) in the case of a seizure resulting from a search of a movable vehicle, or an emergency search, the requirements of Rules 14.1 or 14.3, as the case may be, were not met; or

(vi) in the case of a seizure resulting from a search of open lands, or made independently of a search, the requirements of Rules 14.2 or 14.4, as the case may be, were not met; or

(vii) in the case of a seizure resulting from a search for dangerous weapons of a person stopped pursuant to Rules 2 and 3, such search or the stop was not authorized by or did not comply with Rules 2 and 3.

(b) No motion to suppress shall be granted upon any of the grounds enumerated in subsections (a) and (b) of this Comment if the search or seizure in question is authorized upon any basis, notwithstanding that the search or seizure was not authorized upon the basis on which it was purportedly undertaken.

Comment II to Rule 16.2 Rule 16.2 (d) is intended to make interlocutory review available to the prosecution under the circumstances described.

Other Commentary. Suppression of evidence is dealt with primarily in discussions of cases interpreting the rules governing searches, particularly Rules 10.1 through 14.4.

Amendments. As originally proposed, Rule 16.2(e) read as follows: "An order denying a motion to suppress shall be reviewable on appeal on behalf of a defendant thereafter convicted of the offense to which the evidence involved in the motion relates, irrespective of whatever plea the defendant entered in response to the charge." This subpart was struck by the Supreme Court in favor of the language now appearing as subpart (e). The next to the last paragraph in the original commentary to Rule 16 should be disregarded.

Subpart 16.2(a) was amended in 1981 by the Court to describe the kinds of evidence subject to suppression under the Rule. In Re: Amendments to Rule 16.2, 273 Ark. 550, 616 S.W.2d 493 (1981). Conforming amendments were made to subparts 16.2(a)(vi) and (vii).

Interlocutory Appeals by State. Interlocutory appeals of criminal cases cannot be taken after jeopardy attaches — i.e., when the jury is sworn in a jury trial or, in a trial to the court, when the testimony begins. Interlocutory appeals may be taken by the state from pre-trial orders suppressing evidence, but after jeopardy attaches an appeal is no longer interlocutory. State v. Glenn, 267 Ark. 501, 592 S.W.2d 116 (1980). State v. Russell, 271 Ark. 817, 611 S.W.2d 518 (1981) makes it clear that not every exclusion of evidence by the trial court constitutes "suppression" of evidence permitting an interlocutory appeal.

Abandonment of Premises. In State v. Tucker, 268 Ark. 427, 597 S.W.2d 584 (1980), the Arkansas Supreme Court reversed the trial court's granting of a motion to suppress evidence seized during the warrantless search of an apartment shared by appellant and his alleged murder victim. The evidence showed that appellant had left the apartment in question, moved to Dallas, rented another apartment, and secured employment in Dallas before being arrested 23 days after leaving Arkansas. He argued that he never intended to abandon the first apartment and the personal belongings he left there. The court found that abandonment "implies a renunciation of any reasonable expectation of privacy," United States v. Alden, 576 F.2d 772, 777 (8th Cir. 1978), and concluded that claimant's conduct indicated that he did not intend to return to the site of the search.

Standard of Review. The standard of review on appeal of a trial court ruling on a motion to suppress is now well established: "On appeal [the appellate court will] make an independent determination, based on the totality of the circumstances, as to whether evidence obtained by means of a warrantless search, as here, should be suppressed, and the trial court's finding will not be set aside unless it is clearly against the preponderance of the evidence or clearly erroneous." State v. Tucker, 268 Ark. 427, 428-29, 597 S.W.2d 584, 585 (1980).

Movant's Burden of Proof. It is now well established that "a motion to suppress evidence should only be granted under Rule 16.2(e) if the court finds that a substantial violation of our rules has occurred, or if the federal or state constitutions otherwise require suppression." Lipovich v. State, 265 Ark. 55, 57, 576 S.W.2d 720, 721 (1979). The Arkansas rule was formulated before the United States Supreme Court's decision in United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897, 82 L.Ed.2d 677 (1984), where the Court emphasized that the exclusionary rule was a judicial remedy to enforce the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, but was not itself required by the Constitution. While it has evidently been held that the federal constitution does not mandate suppression, though it may require a "judicial remedy," it remains to be seen whether the Arkansas Supreme Court will interpret the state constitution in like fashion or whether it will continue to find, pursuant to Rule 16.2(e), that the state constitution requires suppression to enforce Article 2, Section 15 of the state constitution. In this connection it should be noted that Comment I(a)(ii) to Rule 16.2 imposes a higher standard than does Leon; it permits suppression upon a showing of lack of reasonable cause, something that no longer requires suppression under Leon.

The good faith exception to the exclusionary rule enunciated by the United States Supreme Court in Leon has been summarized by the Arkansas Supreme Court as follows: In Leon, the Supreme Court not only announced the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule it also delineated four errors which an officer's objective good faith cannot cure. These occur (1) when the magistrate is misled by information the affiant knew was false; (2) if the magistrate wholly abandons his detached and neutral judicial role; (3) when the affidavit is "so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence entirely unreasonable", quoting Brown v. Illinois, 422 U.S. 590, 610-11, 95 S.Ct. 2254, 2265, 45 L.Ed.2d 416 (1975); and (4) when a warrant is so facially deficient "that the executing officers cannot reasonably presume it to be valid", Leon, supra, 104 S.Ct. at pp. 3421-22. In its discussion of the third exception, the Court explained, "sufficient information must be presented to the magistrate to allow that official to determine probable cause; his action cannot be a mere ratification of the bare conclusions of others," quoting Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 103 S.Ct. 2317, 76 L.Ed.2d 527 (1983). Herrington v. State, 287 Ark. 228, 232-33, 697 S.W.2d 899, 901 (1985).

The Arkansas Supreme Court has most recently reviewed its post-Leon cases in Jackson v. State, 291 Ark. 98, 722 S.W.2d 831 (1987). In Jackson a search warrant was supported by oral testimony under oath by a deputy sheriff and an informant before a magistrate and by a sworn affidavit. The prosecution refused to divulge the testimony taken under oath, so the Arkansas Supreme Court did not consider it. The Court found that the affidavit was insufficient because it merely stated in conclusory fashion that the informant was "reliable" without giving facts to support this statement. It then opined that "in determining whether to apply the Leon rationale, we must be guided by our own ARCP Rule 16.2(e)." 291 Ark. at 101, 722 S.W.2d 831. It went on to point out that it had found "substantial" violations under Rule 16.2(e) in Anderson, Herrington, and in Stewart v. State, 289 Ark. 272, 711 S.W.2d 787 (1986). Technical violations not requiring reversal were found in McFarland, Lincoln, and in Toland. State v. Anderson was distinguished because in Anderson there was no affidavit or recorded testimony. The Court concluded that because the officer executed the warrant in good faith it would apply the Leon good faith exception. Jackson at 102, 722 S.W.2d at 834.

Significantly, the Court went on to overrule Anderson to the extent that it indicated that compliance with Rule 13.1 is a "threshold requirement before [the Court] will consider the question of good faith on the part of the police." Jackson at 102, 722 S.W.2d at 834. Justice Purtle dissented, arguing that the "majority opinion effectively emasculates ARCP Rule 13.1(b) without any warning." Id. at 105, 722 S.W.2d at 835.

Thus, the continued viability of Rule 13.1(b), at least where a warrant is executed by an officer acting in good faith, is questionable.

Arkansas Constitution as Basis for Ruling. Though most search cases are deemed governed by the federal constitution, the Arkansas Supreme Court has relied upon the Arkansas Constitution in some decisions. For example, in Harris v. State, 262 Ark. 506, 558 S.W.2d 143 (1977), the Arkansas Supreme Court found that evidence seized pursuant to a warrant executed at night but not supported by an affidavit showing exigent circumstances justifying a nighttime search need not be suppressed. The Court found that this was not a "substantial violation of appellant's rights" under Rule 16.2 or Article 2, Section 15 of the Arkansas Constitution. 262 Ark. at 509, 558 S.W.2d at 145.

Delivery and Return Requirements. In several pre-Leon decisions the Arkansas Supreme Court held that insignificant violations of the Rule 14.4(b) return requirement and the warrant delivery requirement of Rule 13.3(b) are not sufficiently substantial to require suppression of evidence. Shackleford v. State, 261 Ark. 721, 551 S.W.2d 205 (1977) (return); Baxter v. State, 262 Ark. 303, 556 S.W.2d 428 (1977) (delivery).

CASE NOTES

In General.

Subsection (b) of this rule is reasonable and should be complied with in the absence of good cause, since it facilitates the orderly procedure of the trial court, and gives the court and the parties an opportunity to study preliminary issues before the trial proper and perhaps dispenses with the necessity for a trial. Dodson v. State, 4 Ark. App. 1, 626 S.W.2d 624, cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1136, 102 S. Ct. 2966, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1355 (1982); Rideout v. State, 22 Ark. App. 209, 737 S.W.2d 667 (1987).

Abuse of Discretion.

Circuit court abused its discretion in denying defendant's request for a hearing on his motion to suppress his statement because he was entitled to a hearing under statutory and case law; however, the admission of defendant's statement was harmless error beyond a reasonable doubt as to the convictions for delivery of methamphetamine and possession of methamphetamine because there was overwhelming evidence to support the jury's findings that defendant sold drugs to confidential informants. McKinney v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 10, 538 S.W.3d 216 (2018), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 1155, 206 L. Ed. 2d 206 (2020).

Circuit court abused its discretion in denying defendant's request for a hearing on his motion to suppress his statement because he was entitled to a hearing; the admission of the statement was not harmless error as to the convictions for maintaining a drug premises, simultaneous possession of drugs and a firearm, and possession with intent to deliver because it detailed defendant's drug business, and the jury could have found he possessed the firearm and drugs as part of his drug business. McKinney v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 10, 538 S.W.3d 216 (2018), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 1155, 206 L. Ed. 2d 206 (2020).

Appeal by State.

The Rules of Crim. Proc. permit an interlocutory appeal by the state only with respect to a pretrial order suppressing evidence since the rules are intended to permit the state to obtain a review of a ruling upon the admissibility of evidence essential to the prosecution's case. State v. Glenn, 267 Ark. 501, 592 S.W.2d 116 (1980).

Where the trial court, after a pretrial hearing, granted the defendants' motions to suppress the evidence, the state could not be granted an interlocutory appeal from that ruling once the taking of evidence began, since that appeal procedure was no longer available after the trial proceeded to the merits. State v. Glenn, 267 Ark. 501, 592 S.W.2d 116 (1980).

Where defendant's motion to suppress was granted by the trial court and the state argued that the trial court misapplied the holding of Arkansas precedent related to exigent circumstances to the facts before it, the record showed the resolution of the issues turned on the facts unique to the case and, thus, the matter was not appealable by the state under Ark. R. App. P. Crim. 3. State v. Nichols, 364 Ark. 1, 216 S.W.3d 114 (2005).

In a search and seizure case, the State was permitted to appeal the granting of a motion to suppress evidence because the issue presented was the interpretation of Arkansas' criminal case law regarding canine sniffs. The issue was not whether the circuit court applied the law incorrectly to a particular set of facts, but whether the circuit court misinterpreted the law and then applied a flawed interpretation of the law to suppress the seized drugs in this case; therefore, the correct and uniform administration of the criminal law was implicated. State v. Harris, 372 Ark. 492, 277 S.W.3d 568 (2008).

Pursuant to Ark. R. App. P.—Crim. 3(a), the State was not permitted to bring an interlocutory of appeal of the trial court's decision granting defendant's motion to suppress evidence under this rule, because the ruling turned on an application of the law to facts to determine whether an officer's warrantless search was reasonable. The state supreme court only reviewed appeals involving the interpretation of the law; here the trial court did not provide a ruling on any particular interpretation of the law. State v. Jones, 2012 Ark. 454 (2012).

Applicability.

Where defendant's motion did not pertain to the suppression of evidence legally obtained, it was not governed by the 10-day limitation set forth in subsection (b) of this rule. Hudgens v. State, 324 Ark. 169, 919 S.W.2d 939 (1996).

Because the breathalyzer test was not illegally obtained, this rule did not apply, and as no argument was made that a conflict existed between the rules and § 5-65-204, defendant's motion to prohibit the introduction of the breathalyzer test into evidence was not a motion to suppress and the trial court erred in admitting the breathalyzer results over the objection of defendant where the form used to advise defendant failed to meet the statutory requirements, because the rights form had been found defective. Mhoon v. State, 369 Ark. 134, 251 S.W.3d 244 (2007).

Confessions.

No single factor, but the totality of the circumstances is significant in determining voluntariness. Leach v. State, 311 Ark. 485, 845 S.W.2d 11 (1993).

A threat is not more odious per se than a promise; the real issue concerning incriminating statements made through hope or fear is based on broader considerations of voluntariness in light of the particular inducement, whatever its nature. Leach v. State, 311 Ark. 485, 845 S.W.2d 11 (1993).

The court will examine all of the circumstances to determine whether a statement was voluntary, and if a promise or threat was made, the court will look first to the police conduct and then to the vulnerability of the defendant. Leach v. State, 311 Ark. 485, 845 S.W.2d 11 (1993).

Where an officer was called to a disturbance at defendant's home, the officer's general question to defendant, who had been hiding in the woods, of "What's up?" was a general term of salutation, was not designed to elicit an incriminating response, and defendant's incriminating statements regarding incest made in reply to the responding officer's salutation were admissible. Arnett v. State, 353 Ark. 165, 122 S.W.3d 484 (2003).

Because defendant's confession was not introduced into evidence at trial, defendant could not demonstrate that he was prejudiced by the trial court's denial of his motion to suppress. As such, even if the trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress, such error did not warrant a reversal of defendant's conviction. Ray v. State, 2009 Ark. 521, 357 S.W.3d 872 (2009).

Consent to Search.

Where at a hearing on the defendant's motion to suppress, the arresting officer's undisputed testimony showed that the defendant had been given his Miranda warning upon his arrest for aggravated robbery, but he was not informed of his right to refuse consent to a search of his vehicle, and in answer to the officer's request to search the vehicle the defendant replied "I don't care. Go ahead," the defendant's consent to the warrantless search was freely and voluntarily given and the trial court properly overruled his motion to suppress. Scroggins v. State, 268 Ark. 261, 595 S.W.2d 219 (1980).

Three officers' uncontradicted statements met the state's burden of proving by clear and positive testimony that the consent to search was freely and voluntarily given without actual or implied duress or coercion. Garrison v. State, 13 Ark. App. 245, 682 S.W.2d 772 (1985).

Trial court's denial of motion to suppress evidence and ruling that consent was given voluntarily was not against the preponderance of the evidence, where the police officers testified that the defendant consented to their search of his car, trunk, and toolbox and additionally, the defendant was not a complete stranger to criminal proceedings. Duncan v. State, 304 Ark. 311, 802 S.W.2d 917 (1991).

Motion to suppress evidence was properly denied in a drug case where the evidence showed that a search based on a pretextual stop was valid; the officer had probable cause for the stop since the vehicle was speeding, consent to search was given by the registered owner, and the consent was not limited to exclude containers found inside the vehicle. Flores v. State, 87 Ark. App. 327, 194 S.W.3d 207 (2004).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress a crack pipe that was found in a vehicle in which he was a passenger because the officer's initial approach of the vehicle was valid under Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.2 as the vehicle was sitting in a parking lot early in the morning; although defendant might have been illegally seized when the officer ordered him out of the vehicle, the driver of the vehicle gave consent to the vehicle search independent of any violation of defendant's rights, thus, defendant lacked standing to challenge the vehicle search. Swan v. State, 94 Ark. App. 115, 226 S.W.3d 6 (2006).

Denial of Motion.

Where the defendant, who was charged with first degree murder, had not been at the apartment he shared with the deceased for almost a month preceding a warrantless search of the apartment, and he had taken a bus to another state where he established his residence and took a job, he had effectively abandoned the apartment so that the warrantless search did not violate his constitutional rights, and the trial court should not have granted the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized during that search. State v. Tucker, 268 Ark. 427, 597 S.W.2d 584 (1980).

Where the judicial officer who issued the warrant could have reasonably believed that the occurrence of daytime sales of drugs were so difficult to predict that the warrant could be successfully executed only at nighttime when many sales take place and when supplies were likely to be present in the back room of defendant's residence, evidence seized would not be suppressed because taken in nighttime search. Lewis v. State, 7 Ark. App. 38, 644 S.W.2d 303 (1982).

Where the judicial officer had directed the prosecutor to file them with the circuit court and the failure to return the warrants was not willful and caused the defendant no prejudice, the motion to suppress evidence was properly denied. McFarland v. State, 284 Ark. 533, 684 S.W.2d 233 (1985).

Where the magistrate administered an oath to the officer who prepared the affidavit for a search warrant and attached an addendum that stated with particularity the items to be seized, the trial court's decision to deny the defendant's motion to suppress was not against the preponderance of the evidence. Hill v. State, 64 Ark. App. 31, 977 S.W.2d 234 (1998).

Because an ambiguous police statement that they would "help" defendant if defendant explained why he had "messed up" did not amount to a false promise of leniency, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress his statement to police and physical evidence gathered afterwards. Roberts v. State, 352 Ark. 489, 102 S.W.3d 482 (2003), dismissed without prejudice, 2011 Ark. 502, 385 S.W.3d 792 (2011), overruled in part, Dimas-Martinez v. State, 2011 Ark. 515, 385 S.W.3d 238 (2011).

Trial court properly denied defense counsel's motion to suppress defendant's handwritten statement based on the claim that defendant was suffering from mental incompetency at the time; a physician testified that defendant was competent to stand trial, and defense counsel did not provide the trial court with any evidence that defendant might have been suffering from a mental illness at the time of making the statement. Newman v. State, No. CR 02-811, 2003 Ark. LEXIS 295 (Ark. May 22, 2003).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress; although defendant claimed that he confessed because an investigator promised leniency, the investigator disputed this, and defendant was given the proper warnings, which defendant understood and waived, before he voluntarily signed the statement. Winston v. State, 355 Ark. 11, 131 S.W.3d 333 (2003).

Defendant's conviction and sentence for capital murder were affirmed and the trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress statements made while in police custody as the statements in question were voluntary and were not coerced. Pilcher v. State, 355 Ark. 369, 136 S.W.3d 766 (2003).

Defendant's motion to suppress his custodial statement was properly denied, even though defendant was only 16 years old at the time he was charged with capital murder, where defendant admitted at the interrogation that he could read and write, had come voluntarily to be questioned, was advised by officers of his rights before each of the two stages of the interrogation, and had signed a form stating that he understood his rights. Jordan v. State, 356 Ark. 248, 147 S.W.3d 691 (2004).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress where affidavits had cited anonymous tips and indicated that a police canine alerted numerous times on defendant's storage unit; further, there was information known to one of the executing officers that bolstered the reliability of the canine. Blevins v. State, 95 Ark. App. 218, 235 S.W.3d 921 (2006).

Because the getaway car used in a robbery was owned by the father of defendant's accomplice and because defendant had never been granted permission to drive the vehicle, defendant had neither a property interest in the vehicle nor a possessory interest in the vehicle; as such, he lacked standing to challenge a search of that vehicle, and his motion to suppress evidence discovered during the search was properly denied. Ray v. State, 2009 Ark. 521, 357 S.W.3d 872 (2009).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence of his photo identification by a witness because, although the witness knew one of the men in the photographic lineup because he had been a high school classmate, the witness lineup was not unfairly prejudicial for suggesting who should not be identified. The proper inquiry was whether the suggestive nature of the identification procedure made it all but inevitable that the victim would identify only defendant as the perpetrator, and the fact that a witness recognized one person out of the six-person lineup did not make it inevitable that she would identify defendant as the perpetrator. Ray v. State, 2009 Ark. 521, 357 S.W.3d 872 (2009).

Court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress defendant's confession that defendant sold marijuana out of defendant's residence; the detective testified that defendant voluntarily waived defendant's Miranda rights while defendant was sober and defendant's answers were coherent, and there was no evidence that defendant was threatened in any way during the fifteen-minute interview. Wright v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 425, 375 S.W.3d 695 (2010).

Because a police officer had probable cause to stop defendant's vehicle based on an apparent invalid license tag, defendant's weaving and low-speed driving, and the officer's training, the stop was justified under Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1; therefore, defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied. Murrell v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 311 (2011).

Expectation of Privacy.

A child, either dependent or emancipated (having reached his majority) does not have the same constitutional right or expectation of privacy in the family home that he might have in a rented hotel room. Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 589 S.W.2d 11 (1979).

Where the defendants had placed their personal belongings in the trunk of a car and, because of a joint agreement to share driving, were to be lawfully in joint possession of the car for an interstate trip, they had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the trunk of the car to challenge the search of it on Fourth Amend-

Grounds.

A motion to suppress evidence should only be granted under subsection (e) of this rule if the court finds that a substantial violation of the rules has occurred or if the federal or state constitutions otherwise require suppression. Lipovich v. State, 265 Ark. 55, 576 S.W.2d 720 (1979).

A motion to exclude evidence of a breathalyzer test, on the grounds that the officer had failed to advise appellant of his right to an additional test and to assist him in obtaining such a test as required by § 5-65-204(e), is not a motion to suppress evidence under this rule. Kay v. State, 46 Ark. App. 82, 877 S.W.2d 957 (1994).

Motion Improperly Granted.

Motion to suppress evidence was improperly granted because, where police had known an informant to give reliable information in the past, and accurate information was received from the informant about defendant and his vehicle, officers had specific, particularized, and articulable reasons for thinking that defendant was involved in criminal activity, which justified a stop under Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1. Because the officers had reasonable suspicion to stop and detain the vehicle, any pretext on the part of the officers was irrelevant; moreover, the officers did not need any additional reasonable suspicion to justify a canine sniff, which was not a search under the Fourth Amendment. State v. Harris, 372 Ark. 492, 277 S.W.3d 568 (2008).

Power to Consent.

The power to consent to a search rests upon mutual use of the property by persons generally having joint access or control for most purposes; the pertinent question is whether the one giving consent possesses common authority or other sufficient relationship to the premises. Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 589 S.W.2d 11 (1979).

For the purposes of consenting to a search, the status of one in loco parentis and a natural parent should be the same; therefore, the fact defendant was a foster child made no difference. Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 589 S.W.2d 11 (1979).

Since it is clear that foster father, in addition to being the owner of the premises which constituted and were maintained as a single family dwelling, was the head of the single family household and had not surrendered or relinquished exclusive control of the defendant's bedroom or the ability to designate what use could be made of it, by lease or otherwise, he maintained the right to access and control over the entire premises, and had authority to consent to a search of the bedroom. Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 589 S.W.2d 11 (1979).

Preponderance of Evidence.

Despite the fact that there was no limitation as to time, area, or items to be seized in a "consent to search" form signed by defendant's foster father, that the form failed to warn him that his consent could be withdrawn or limited at any time, that several police officers bearing weapons were present, that the request for consent was made at 3:30 a.m., shortly after the defendant had been arrested without warrant, that the foster father was scared when he signed the form, and that it would have been easy to have obtained a search warrant, where the search was limited to the kitchen and defendant's room, where the foster father who admitted he had, in fact, signed the form, had been told that the only search was to be for a gun and the search was so limited, where no warning was required that consent could be withdrawn, and where there were practical difficulties in obtaining a search warrant at 3:30 a.m., the finding by the trial court that the consent was voluntary was not clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Grant v. State, 267 Ark. 50, 589 S.W.2d 11 (1979).

Where a defendant's communication was not made to a clergyman in his professional character as a spiritual adviser, denial of defendant's motion to suppress was not against the preponderance of the evidence. Magar v. State, 308 Ark. 380, 826 S.W.2d 221 (1992).

Probable Cause.

The presence of cigarette butts or marijuana seeds, without more, is just as consistent with having only that small amount for personal use as it is with having a cache of marijuana; there is simply no articulable fact to indicate a cache is located in the trunk, thus, under such circumstances there is no probable cause to search a car's trunk. State v. Villines, 304 Ark. 128, 801 S.W.2d 29 (1990).

Court did not err by denying the motion to suppress; officer had reasonable suspicion that defendant was driving while intoxicated before he administered the PBT because defendant admitted he had been drinking, the officer saw defendant driving, and the officer noticed that defendant smelled of intoxicants; there was probable cause to arrest even without consideration of the PBT results because defendant told the officer that he had been drinking, his eyes were bloodshot and watery, and he smelled of intoxicants and failed two field-sobriety tests. Fisher v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 301, 427 S.W.3d 743 (2013).

Review.

In reviewing a trial court's ruling on a motion to suppress, the Supreme Court makes an independent determination based on the totality of the circumstances and reverses only if the trial court's ruling was clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Magar v. State, 308 Ark. 380, 826 S.W.2d 221 (1992); Ward v. State, 308 Ark. 415, 827 S.W.2d 110, 831 S.W.2d 100, cert. denied, 506 U.S. 841, 113 S. Ct. 124, 121 L. Ed. 2d 79 (1992); Brown v. State, 38 Ark. App. 18, 827 S.W.2d 174 (1992).

Remand of a criminal case was necessary to conduct defendant's motion to suppress evidence on the record because an appellate court was unable to conduct a de novo review without the complete record. George v. State, 356 Ark. 345, 151 S.W.3d 770 (2004).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress marijuana seized after a search of his vehicle as the officer developed a reasonable suspicion that defendant was committing a felony, authorizing his continued detention of defendant; further, the officer detected a strong odor of fabric sheets, as opposed to air freshener, which the officer testified were often used to mask the odor of illegal controlled substances. Ayala v. State, 90 Ark. App. 13, 203 S.W.3d 659 (2005).

Where a state trooper discovered two kilograms of cocaine in duct-taped packages found in a car during a traffic stop, defendants gave incriminating statements; at trial, they made no pretrial motion to suppress the evidence or the statements under this rule. Defendants' motion for a directed verdict, which was labeled as a motion to dismiss, was not an adequate attempt to suppress the evidence; therefore, any issue concerning the admission of the evidence or defendants' statements was not preserved for review. Camacho-Mendoza v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 597, 330 S.W.3d 46 (2009).

Defendant's conviction for third-offense driving while intoxicated was proper because, although defendant specifically complained about his statements that he had been convicted of two previous DWIs, defendant did not timely file to suppress the statements as required by this rule. The failure to object at the first opportunity waived any right to raise that point on appeal. Heathman v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 601 (2009).

Juvenile's argument that the statements he gave should have been suppressed because the juvenile was not Mirandized and his parents were not present was not preserved for appellate review as no motion to suppress was made prior to the juvenile's hearing or during the State's case-in-chief. The issue was not raised until after the State had rested, which was not sufficient to preserve the issue for appeal. A.W. v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 34, 510 S.W.3d 811 (2017).

Substantial Violation.

A motion to suppress was properly denied where the itemization on the back of a returned search warrant listed only three grams of heroin, one and one-half ounces of marihuana and three credit cards, even though cocaine was also found in the course of the search, since the claimed irregularity resulted in no prejudice to the defendant's rights. Shackleford v. State, 261 Ark. 721, 551 S.W.2d 205 (1977).

The failure to give a copy of a search warrant to the defendants was not a substantial violation requiring suppression of the fruits of the search where one of the defendants was present at the search and was allowed to read the warrant and where a copy was furnished to the defendant's attorney. Baxter v. State, 262 Ark. 303, 556 S.W.2d 428 (1977).

Where there was no return date on a search warrant but the warrant was returned on the same day as issued and there was no showing of any prejudice to the defendants, the violation was not substantial and did not require suppression of the fruits of the search. Baxter v. State, 262 Ark. 303, 556 S.W.2d 428 (1977).

The absence of the recitations required by the Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.2, did not substantially prejudice defendant where the search warrant was executed and the return made within a few hours after the warrant was issued, the officer offered a sworn statement that evidence of the crimes might be disposed of by morning, and the magistrate's actual issuance of the search warrant established his finding of probable cause even more positively than the insertion of a conclusory finding to that effect would have. Harris v. State, 262 Ark. 506, 558 S.W.2d 143 (1977).

A motion to suppress shall be granted only if the court finds that a violation is substantial or contrary to the federal Fourth Amendment or Ark. Const. Art. 2, § 15, of the state constitution. State v. Broadway, 269 Ark. 215, 599 S.W.2d 721 (1980).

The execution of a search warrant at 8:10 p.m. was not a substantial violation of Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.2(c), where the defendants refused the police officers' request for a consensual search of their home at 5:30 p.m., where the defendants allowed several officers to remain in their home until the warrant could be obtained, where the defendants' attorney was present at the house from 7:00 p.m. on, and where the search warrant was signed by the issuing judicial officer at 7:55 p.m.; therefore, the search was valid. United States v. Koller, 559 F. Supp. 539 (E.D. Ark. 1983).

To exclude evidence because of a violation of the rules, the violation must be "substantial" under subsection (e) of this rule. Johnson v. State, 291 Ark. 260, 724 S.W.2d 160, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 830, 108 S. Ct. 101, 98 L. Ed. 2d 61 (1987).

Execution of an erroneously issued nighttime search warrant at private home between 1:00 a.m. and 3:00 a.m. was a substantial violation and motion to suppress was granted. Hall v. State, 302 Ark. 341, 789 S.W.2d 456 (1990).

Where warrant was immediately executed and the return filed, but return was not signed until after suppression hearing, the failure of the return to be signed immediately was merely an insignificant technicality, not a fatal defect. Sossamon v. State, 31 Ark. App. 131, 789 S.W.2d 738 (1990).

The failure to establish reasonable cause with sufficient facts on the affidavit was a substantial violation, so as to warrant suppression of the evidence obtained. Garner v. State, 307 Ark. 353, 820 S.W.2d 446 (1991).

Defendant had no standing to argue suppression of a knife which was obtained by police, after his arrest, in an inventory search of the tractor trailer he was driving, as there was no showing that he had a proprietary interest in the truck, and before conducting the inventory search of the impounded vehicle the officer obtained permission from the owners. Keaton v. State, 307 Ark. 389, 821 S.W.2d 11 (1991).

Where evidence was insufficient to constitute the reasonable suspicion necessary to justify an investigatory stop, the evidence from the investigatory stop should have been suppressed. Lambert v. State, 34 Ark. App. 227, 808 S.W.2d 788 (1991).

Where the search warrant was executed somewhere between 10:15 and 10:30 p.m. at defendant's home, and there were no facts set out justifying that any facts had been met justifying a night-time search, a substantial violation occurred requiring reversal. Ramey v. State, 42 Ark. App. 242, 857 S.W.2d 828 (1993).

It is well established that the nighttime intrusion into a private home upon a warrant issued in violation of Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.2(c) constitutes a substantial violation as prohibited by subsection (c) of this rule. Zeiler v. State, 46 Ark. App. 182, 878 S.W.2d 417 (1994).

The failure of a sheriff to report the seizure of four expended .22 cartridge casings to the court as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 15.4 was not a substantial violation sufficient to warrant suppression of the evidence pursuant to this rule. This despite: consistent testimony by three law enforcement officials detailing the facts and circumstances of the search that led to the discovery of the casings, there was a receipt documenting the transfer of the evidence from the sheriff to the State Police Investigator that corroborated the date of the seizure and listed the items that were found, and there was testimony that a report was filed in the law enforcement file. Dansby v. State, 338 Ark. 697, 1 S.W.3d 403 (1999).

Technical Violation.

Technical violation on warrant, which contained a time frame of 6:00 a.m. through 8:00 a.m. instead of 6:00 a.m. through 8:00 p.m., held not a substantial violation requiring suppression of the evidence obtained with the warrant. Brown v. State, 55 Ark. App. 107, 932 S.W.2d 777 (1996).

Timeliness.

While the right to object to an unlawful search is a constitutional right, even constitutional rights must be asserted in the manner specified by valid procedural requirements so that a motion to suppress evidence seized during a search of defendant's home which was not filed until a day or two before the date set for trial with no cause for delay asserted was correctly denied. Parham v. State, 262 Ark. 241, 555 S.W.2d 943 (1977).

The fact that the trial court permitted defense attorney to question the sheriff and other witnesses regarding the search warrant and affidavit did not mean the court approved the untimely filing of the motion to suppress and the motion was properly denied. Burnett v. State, 263 Ark. 225, 564 S.W.2d 211, cert. denied, 439 U.S. 929, 99 S. Ct. 316, 58 L. Ed. 2d 322 (1978).

Filing of motion to suppress evidence held untimely. Jackson v. State, 266 Ark. 754, 585 S.W.2d 367 (Ct. App. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1017, 100 S. Ct. 670, 62 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1980); Speed v. City of Jonesboro, 267 Ark. 1087, 594 S.W.2d 44 (Ct. App. 1980); Dodson v. State, 4 Ark. App. 1, 626 S.W.2d 624, cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1136, 102 S. Ct. 2966, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1355 (1982); Fisk v. State, 5 Ark. App. 5, 631 S.W.2d 626 (1982); Garrison v. State, 13 Ark. App. 245, 682 S.W.2d 772 (1985); Rideout v. State, 22 Ark. App. 209, 737 S.W.2d 667 (1987).

No good cause shown which would have warranted court in entertaining untimely motion to suppress. Jackson v. State, 266 Ark. 754, 585 S.W.2d 367 (Ct. App. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1017, 100 S. Ct. 670, 62 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1980); Speed v. City of Jonesboro, 267 Ark. 1087, 594 S.W.2d 44 (Ct. App. 1980); Dodson v. State, 4 Ark. App. 1, 626 S.W.2d 624, cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1136, 102 S. Ct. 2966, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1355 (1982); Garrison v. State, 13 Ark. App. 245, 682 S.W.2d 772 (1985); Gillie v. State, 305 Ark. 296, 808 S.W.2d 320 (1991).

This rule does not mandate the denial of every motion which is untimely. Vega v. State, 26 Ark. App. 172, 762 S.W.2d 1 (1988).

Where untimely motion to suppress was filed, court conducted a hearing on it, the state made no objection of the hearing that the motion was untimely, and state presented all of the evidence it had in opposition to the motion, court was not required to conclude that the motion to suppress was not properly before it or that the court's ruling on the motion was not properly preserved for review. Vega v. State, 26 Ark. App. 172, 762 S.W.2d 1 (1988).

Circuit court abused its discretion in finding that defendant's motions to suppress were untimely; the motions were filed 47 days before trial and the record did not demonstrate that an omnibus hearing was set and/or held. McKinney v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 10, 538 S.W.3d 216 (2018), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 1155, 206 L. Ed. 2d 206 (2020).

Untimely Motion.

This rule does not mandate the denial of every motion which is untimely, and in the absence of a timely objection, the motion to suppress was properly before the trial court, and its ruling was properly preserved for review. Butler v. State, 309 Ark. 211, 829 S.W.2d 412, cert. denied, 506 U.S. 998, 113 S. Ct. 597, 121 L. Ed. 2d 534 (1992).

This rule does not mandate the denial of every motion which is untimely, and in the absence of a timely objection by the State during trial, the appellate court cannot conclude that the motion to suppress was not properly before the trial court or that the trial court's ruling on it was not properly preserved for review. Kimble v. State, 331 Ark. 155, 959 S.W.2d 43 (1998).

Although defendant's failure to follow subsection (b) of this rule, which required the filing of a pre-trial motion to suppress, would have justified an outright denial of his at-trial motion, a circuit court exercised its discretion and decided the motion on the merits. Therefore, an appellate court also considered the merits. Lee v. State, 102 Ark. App. 23, 279 S.W.3d 496 (2008).

When Interlocutory Appeal Inapplicable.

Where state, in first-degree murder prosecution, was denied the right to enter a videotaped deposition of a deceased witness into evidence, such denial was not subject to interlocutory appeal under former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.10, since an interlocutory appeal can only be taken with respect to an order prior to commencement of a trial granting a motion to suppress evidence alleged to be illegally seized, as provided for under this rule. State v. Russell, 271 Ark. 817, 611 S.W.2d 518 (1981).

- Rule 17.5. Matters not subject to disclosure.

Commentary to Article V

The rules which follow trace the contours of a comprehensive discovery scheme characterized by broad reciprocal pretrial disclosure aimed at expediting the criminal justice process.

Broad pretrial disclosure would seem to be not only desirable but also necessary. By encouraging guilty pleas, reducing delays during trial, and in general lending more finality to the disposition of criminal cases, disclosure alleviates docket congestion and permits a more economical use of resources.

The need for expanded pretrial disclosure requirements has been accorded recognition recently by the Arkansas General Assembly which, in 1971, enacted Act 381. This legislation, now codified as Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-2011.1 et seq. (Supp. 1973), represents a desirable first step toward reform of the law in this area. The Commission has sought to follow the lead of the legislature, while, at the same time, setting out specific guidelines and requirements, and relaxing the formalistic aspects of the discovery process by eliminating, where feasible, written motion practice.

Article V is divided into four rules. The initial rule, Rule 17, addresses itself to required and discretionary disclosures by the prosecution. The scope of disclosure and the manner in which it may be accomplished are set out with particularity.

Rule 17.1 spells out the prosecutor's obligations respecting disclosure. The provisions of 17.1 are innovative not only in scope and design, but also in that they require certain information to be made available to a defendant upon request. A written motion addressed to the trial court's discretion is no longer an essential prerequisite. This, of course, is not to say that the rule divests the trial court of authority to exercise an appropriate degree of control over the discovery process. Neither does Article V mandate unlimited discovery. Rule 17.5 imposes limitations on required prosecutorial disclosure to protect the prosecutor's work product, the identity of an informant where his identity is not relevant or material to the issues at hand, and material the disclosure of which would involve a substantial risk of grave prejudice to national security. Additionally, under Rule 19.4, the trial court is specifically vested with authority to order disclosures restricted or deferred.

The prosecuting attorney's obligations under this rule extend to material and information within the knowledge, possession, or control of members of his staff and of any others who have participated in the investigation or evaluation of the case and regularly report, or with reference to the particular case, have reported to his office.

Rule 17.1(a)(i) is congruent with existing authority insofar as it requires disclosure of names of witnesses.

Rule 17.1(a)(ii) is also consonant with present law to the extent that it provides for discovery of written or recorded statements of a defendant. See, § 43-2011.2 (Supp. 1973). Insofar as discovery extends to the substance of oral statements by the defendant and written, recorded, and oral statements of codefendants, this provision is innovative.

Prior to the enactment of Act 381, a defendant apparently could not, as a matter of right, compel production prior to trial of a copy of a written confession, at least where the confession would not itself furnish evidence that it was involuntarily given. Howell v. State, 220 Ark. 278, 247 S.W.2d 952 (1952). Neither could he force the disclosure of relevant statements made by witnesses against him, unless a "fair trial" was impossible without such disclosure. Johnson v. State, 250 Ark. 132, 464 S.W.2d 611 (1971). See, also, Bates v. State, 210 Ark. 1014, 198 S.W.2d 850 (1947). Subsequent to the enactment of Act 381, it has been held error to require a defendant to cross-examine a witness without making available the witness' pretrial statement; however, such error will not be found to require reversal absent a showing of resulting prejudice. Rush v. State, 252 Ark. 814, 481 S.W.2d 696 (1972).

The rationale justifying discovery of statements of codefendants is aptly put by the commentary to Standards, Discovery § 2.1: The requirement that the defendant be allowed to inspect statements made by a codefendant rests on . . . grounds which make it . . . imperative that there be pretrial disclosure. In Bruton v. United States, 391 U.S. 123, [88 S. Ct. 1620, 20 L. Ed. 2d 476] (1968), the Supreme Court held that it was constitutional error to try one defendant under conditions where a codefendant's statement implicating the first defendant was before the jury, even under careful instructions that the statement was only admissible against the codefendant. If an adequate motion for severance is to be made or if the question of whether the codefendant's statement can be altered to remove the prejudice is to be decided at the appropriate time, it is clear that defense counsel must be able to examine it before trial. Id. at 61.

The effect of Rule 17.1(a)(iv) is primarily to confer as a matter of right a latitude for discovery now obtainable at the discretion of the trial court. The language of the proposed rule provides for somewhat greater disclosure than does that of its counterpart, § 43-2011.2(a) (Supp. 1973); discovery is not limited to results and reports of "physical or mental examinations" but extends to "any reports or statements of experts made in connection with the particular case" [emphasis supplied].

Adoption of this rule demonstrates the Commission's agreement with the Standards Reporters that nowhere is there greater need for pretrial disclosure or less risk of misuse of evidence than in this area. Unless adequate opportunity to examine this type of evidence is afforded, the chances for effective rebuttal are virtually foreclosed. On the other hand, disclosure in advance does not create any hazard, because distortion or improper use of the evidence is well nigh impossible. See commentary to Standards, Discovery at 66-68.

Rule 17.1(a)(v) contemplates slightly broader discovery than existing authority found at §§ 43-2010 (Repl. 1964), and 43-2011.2 (b) (Supp. 1973). The proposed rule provides not only for disclosures of documents, etc., to be used at trial but also of material obtained from the possession of a defendant. There is no requirement for a showing of materiality.

The last subpart of 17.1(a) is concerned with discovery of criminal records of state witness, a topic on which Arkansas statutory law speaks only briefly and restrictively. See, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 5-833 (Supp. 1973) [now § 5-1102].

The prosecuting attorney's obligations under subpart (b) of Rule 17.1, as under subpart (a), accrue only when a request is made by the defendant.

Rule 17.1(b)(i) again exposes to scrutiny evidence presented to a grand jury. The proposed rule requires that the prosecutor disclose the substance of any relevant testimony before the grand jury and, consequently, makes for economy in discovering information supplemental to that forthcoming via Rule 17.1(a)(iii).

Rule 17.1(b)(ii) fills a void in existing law by providing for discovery of the use of electronic surveillance. While the prosecutor is required by the rule to inform the defendant of the fact of such surveillance, the rule does not oblige the prosecuting attorney to make complete revelation of all relevant information at the outset. The prosecutor retains control of the disclosure process; the flexibility built into the discovery process allows him to seek a protective order or an in camera showing if a defendant presses for information more specific than the prosecutor is inclined to provide. (Rules 19.4-19.6).

The focus of Rule 17.1(b)(iii) is on the relationship to the prosecuting authority of persons the prosecuting attorney anticipates calling as witnesses. This rule, like the other provisions of Rule 17.1(a) and (b), is drawn from Standards, Discovery. As the commentary to Standards, Discovery § 2.3 points out, this section deals with

The term "prosecuting authority" is intended to encompass any governmental entity lending assistance to the prosecutor actually conducting the prosecution of the case; accordingly, agencies of this or another state or of the political subdivisions of either or of the federal government may all be so categorized under appropriate circumstances.

Rule 17.1(c) adverts to the circumstances surrounding searches and seizures and acquisition of statements from the defendant. It requires disclosure of material or information which might not be revealed by the prosecutor's response to a request under Rule 17.1(a) but which might raise and dispose of certain constitutional, or other issues. See, commentary to Standards, Discovery at 82.

Rule 17.1(d) incorporates the due process requirement that evidence favorable to a defendant on issues of guilt or punishment be disclosed by the prosecutor. Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1963); Giles v. Maryland, 386 U.S. 66, 87 S. Ct. 793, 17 L. Ed. 2d 737 (1967); Smith v. Urban, 245 Ark. 781, 434 S.W. 2d 283 (1968); and Murchison v. State, 249 Ark. 861, 462 S.W.2d 853 (1971). See, also, Code of Professional Responsibility, EC 7-13, DR 7-103 B.

In so far as the rule requires pretrial disclosure, it represents an extension of the mandate of Brady, supra, although that decision clearly requires that disclosure be timed so as to allow intelligent appraisal of the import of the matter disclosed. By obliging the prosecution to divulge information as part of a systematic process of pretrial discovery, the rule advances "the procedural objectives of permitting adequate preparation for, and minimizing interruptions of, a trial and providing for informed pleas . . ." Commentary to Standards, Discovery at 73.

Rule 17.2 deals generally with the time for and manner of making discovery. Prosecutorial responsibility is defined chiefly in terms of the existence and availability of information. Under the rule, the prosecutor must perform the obligations detailed by Rules 17.1(a)-(c) "as soon as practicable." Rule 17.2(b) provides a mechanism by which informal agreement as to disclosure may be reached.

The prosecuting attorney shall ensure that a flow of information is maintained between his office and his investigative personnel sufficient to place within his possession, control, or knowledge all material and information relevant to the defendant and the offense with which he is charged.

Rule 17.2(c) is drawn from Rule 15.1(c) of the Arizona Rules of Criminal Procedure and affords protection against mishaps and the rare instance of sharp dealing.

Rule 17.2(d) obliges the prosecutor to ensure that an adequate flow of information is maintained between investigative personnel and his office. It adopts the position taken by the Standards Advisory Committee that the problems in this area are more satisfactorily addressed by dealing in terms of what the prosecutor should do, not with what knowledge he should be charged. Arkansas law is silent in this area. See, Standards, Discovery at 81.

Rule 17.3 imposes a responsibility of a different sort on the prosecutor: on request of a defendant, the prosecuting attorney is required to make a "diligent good faith" effort to secure and convey to the defendant discoverable material in the hands of other governmental personnel. It should be observed that request and specification of material or information by the defendant are necessary to invoke the rule's requirements. Subject to the requirements of Rule 17.1(e), the prosecutor need not as a routine discovery procedure instigate a broad scale search for material relating to every defendant. It does not appear that there is any existing statutory or decisional law definitely providing solutions to problems in this area.

Rule 17.4 confers authority on the trial court to require disclosure of material or information not discoverable under the preceding provisions. The court's authority under this rule is considerable, being limited only by the requirement that discovery be restricted to "relevant" matter. In this regard, both the proposed rule and Standards, Discovery § 2.5 from which it is drawn contrast with present authority, which specifically delineates circumstances under which discovery is permissible. See, §§ 43-2011 (Repl. 1964); 43-2011.1 et seq. (Supp. 1973).

Rule 17.5 is concerned with matters not subject to compulsory disclosures except under circumstances where nondisclosure would operate as an infringement upon a constitutional right. Existing law on this subject is found at § 43-2011.2 (Supp. 1973) and precludes discovery of reports, memoranda, or other "internal state documents made by state agents." As is the case with the parallel Standards, Discovery provisions, the reports or statements of experts would remain discoverable pursuant to Rule 17.1(a)(iv).

Rule 17.5(b) speaks in language identical to that of Standards, Discovery § 2.6. The subject of the rule — informant identity — is perceived to require special treatment. In fact, "[t]he value of informants to effective law enforcement is so highly regarded that encouragement of their use, through protection of their identity, has resulted in the development of one of the few privileges accorded to the prosecution." Standards, Discovery at 91, 92. As a consequence, the identity of an informant is not discoverable absent an irreconcilable clash between a defendant's constitutional rights and the law enforcement interests sought to be protected. Both the majority and concurring opinions in the recent decision in Bennett v. State, 252 Ark. 128, 477 S.W.2d 497 (1972) dwell on the problem of disclosure of informant identity. See, also, McCray v. Illinois, 386 U.S. 300, 87 S. Ct. 1056, 18 L. Ed. 2d 62 (1967).

Rule 17.5(c) provides for nondisclosure in cases presenting a "substantial risk of grave prejudice to national security." Under this subpart, "... when national security information is only tangential to the prosecution of the case and the maintenance of secrecy is clearly of importance paramount to the advantages of disclosure to the criminal justice system, it was thought appropriate to indicate that disclosures should not be required." Standards, Discovery at 93.

Rule 18 treats permissible and required disclosures by the defendant. Rule 18.1 permits a judicial officer, subject to constitutional limitations, to compel a defendant to submit to a variety of examinations and procedures for the purpose of identification. The disclosures involved are nontestimonial ones not presently within the ambit of the constitutional right against self-incrimination. No Arkansas statutory law is addressed to this topic. The proposed rule is taken from Standards, Discovery § 3.1. See, commentary to Standards, Discovery at 94-97. Pertinent recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court are United States v. Dionisio, 410 U.S. 1, 93 S. Ct. 764, 35 L. Ed. 2d 67 (1973) (voice exemplars); United States v. Mara, 410 U.S. 19, 93 S. Ct. 774, 35 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1973) handwriting exemplars; Cupp v. Murphy, 412 U.S. 291, 93 S. Ct. 2000, 36 L. Ed. 2d 900 (1973) (fingernail scrapings).

Rule 18.2 is drawn from Standards, Discovery § 3.2 which in turn was adopted from Fed. R. Crim. P. 16(c). It represents a departure from Arkansas law in that it does not condition disclosure by a defendant upon his prior successful discovery efforts. See, § 43-2011.2(c) (Supp. 1973).

Rule 18.3, governing discovery of proposed defenses, might be said to have a very narrow counterpart in § 43-1304 (Supp. 1973) which construably imposes a "disclosure" requirement with respect to an insanity defense. This subpart is fashioned after the model provided by Standards, Discovery § 3.3 and is harmonious with the requirements of Williams v. Florida, 399 U.S. 78, 90 S. Ct. 1893, 26 L. Ed. 2d 446 (1970); and Wardius v. Oregon, 412 U.S. 470, 93 S. Ct. 2208, 37 L. Ed. 2d 82 (1973). As presently conceived the rule goes one step further than the Standards version by removing the matter from the court's discretion.

Rule 19 ensures that the discovery establishes procedures restricting the scope of discovery where extraordinary circumstances exist.

Rule 19.1 is drawn from Standards, Discovery § 4.1 and is without counterpart in present Arkansas law, which treats only the most egregious conduct involving threats and bribes. See, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 41-2804 (Repl. 1964); Davis v. State, 242 Ark. 43, 411 S.W.2d 531 (1967).

Rule 19.2 is consonant with present law. See, § 43-2011.2(g) (Supp. 1973). The language of the Standards, Discovery model, § 4.2, has been refined to make it clear that material discovered subsequent to a request seeking proper disclosure need be disclosed only if covered by that previous request.

Rule 19.3 imposes custody and use restrictions on discovered materials. It is substantially in accord with suggested methods of controlling records of electronic surveillance. Alderman v. United States, 394 U.S. 165, 89 S. Ct. 961, 22 L. Ed. 2d 176, rehearing denied sub nom., Ivanov v. United States, 394 U.S. 939, 89 S. Ct. 1177, 22 L. Ed. 2d 475 (1969).

Rule 19.4, fashioned after Standards, Discovery § 4.4 and Fed. R. Crim. P. 16(e) permits “application by the party concerned to the court for a protective order which can be tailored to the particular circumstances of the case.” Standards, Discovery at 101. The rule is accordant with Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 43-2011.2, 43-2011.3 (Supp. 1973).

Rule 19.5 is concerned with excision of non-discoverable portions of documents. Patterned after Standards, Discovery § 4.5, the rule is similar in substance to existing statutory authority. See, § 43-2011.3(c) (Supp. 1973).

Rule 19.6, providing for in camera proceedings, ensures preservation of the confidentiality of material sought to be made the subject of a protective order. The rule is cast so as to allow in camera proceedings upon the request of any interested person; present restrictive authority is rejected in favor of the Standards, Discovery formulation. Compare §§ 43-2011.2(e), 43-2011.3(c) (Supp. 1973) with Standards, Discovery § 4.6.

The last subpart of Rule 19 provides sanctions for willful violations of discovery rules. Decisions as to what sanctions to apply and when to apply them have been left to the discretion of trial courts.

Rule 20 sets out omnibus hearing procedure prior to trial. No complementary authority is found in Arkansas statutory or decisional law.

Rule 20.1 acknowledges the existence of three more or less distinct pretrial stages: exploratory, omnibus, and trial planning. The first is characterized by lack of trial court supervision; the second and third, by judicial guidance. The rule further makes clear that the discovery process is a flexible one, and, accordingly, all stages need not be given the same treatment in every case. They may be “telescoped.” For example, no need for a trial planning stage exists where it is anticipated that the defendant will enter a guilty plea. See, Standards, Discovery at 110.

Rule 20.2 provides a framework within which the omnibus hearing should be scheduled.

The nature and scope of the actual hearing are taken up by Rule 20.3. The hearing, and the second stage generally, function to ensure that discovery has been properly conducted and that issues are simply and efficiently raised. Standards, Discovery at 115. In other words, following the first stage, which is characterized by the absence of court supervision, there is need for court intervention to ensure that what has been done has been correctly done, and that what needs to be done will be done properly and without unnecessary delay. Standards, Discovery at 115.

Rule 20.3 is virtually a verbatim rendition of Discovery § 5.3, the commentary to which elucidates its scope and purposes as follows: The omnibus hearing is designed to serve the cases destined for guilty plea disposition as well as the cases destined for trial, the former category including the bulk of criminal cases. . . . In either event, it is essential that the accused be well informed as to the issues in the case . . . ; and there would seem to be no reason why a trial should be required in order for him to have an opportunity to evaluate the evidence against him. In either event, he must have an opportunity to raise procedural and constitutional issues, collateral to guilt or innocence. On one hand, the considerable expenditures of judicial resources required for a trial should not be made so long as the trial is subject to being invalidated on account of undecided constitutional or procedural issues. On the other hand, if the only issues an accused wishes to urge are such collateral ones, the need for the trial may be obviated by treating the issues during the proceedings prior to trial. . . . Thus, the Omnibus Hearing is designed to serve pretrial needs regardless of whether the given case is expected to go to trial. This is not to say, of course, that an Omnibus Hearing will be needed in every case. . . . However, unlike the Pretrial Conference, which is designed for the unusual case . . . , the processing of most cases covered by this report . . . should include an Omnibus Hearing, both as a matter of fair and expeditious processing and to record the disposition of issues which might affect the validity of a conviction. Four features distinguish the Omnibus Hearing from existing practices and procedures prior to trial: (1) its attempt to bring together at one court appearance as much as possible of the court actions required prior to trial [Rule 20.3 (a)(iv) and (b)], thus saving all persons concerned time, energy and other resources; (2) its requirement of routine trial court exploration of the claims customarily available to the accused, utilizing a check-list to ensure in so far as is possible that none remain unexposed, unnecessarily subjecting the proceedings to subsequent invalidation; (3) its requirement that these customary claims be raised and considered in so far as is possible without the preparation and filing of papers which so frequently perform no useful function in the proceedings [Rule 20.3(b)]; and (4) its requirement that claims which are available for assertion at this time be waived if not asserted [Rule 20.3(c)]. There are a number of other features essential to a properly conducted Omnibus Hearing which are set forth in the provisions of [Rule 20.3]. But it is this combination of these four provisions which renders it unique. Standards, Discovery at 116-117.

The focus of the omnibus hearing is initially upon whether the rules respecting representation by counsel have been complied with (20.3(a)(i)).

The next item for consideration is whether discovery has been completely effectuated (20.3(a)(ii) and (iii)). Issues turning on questions related to excisions, protective orders, etc., should be resolved at this point, or at least a date should be set for hearing and determination.

Pursuant to Rule 20.3(a)(iv), the court should then rule on all pending motions.

Rule 20.3(a)(v), (vi) and (vii) deal respectively with identifying and resolving constitutional issues, setting a time for pretrial conference, and permitting a defendant to change his plea.

Rule 20.3(c) provides for waiver, a concept essential to the orderly disposition of issues and finality of proceedings.

Rules 20.3(d) and (e) deal with stipulations and the making of a verbatim record and require no elucidation here.

The provisions of Rule 20.4 are addressed with some particularity to the scope of the pretrial conference, a procedural stage treated as a discrete entity to be distinguished from the omnibus hearing proper.

It is anticipated that a pretrial conference will be useful only in the exceptionally complex case. This fact, considered in light of experience showing that only a small number of cases actually go to trial, indicates that the need for the conference will arise only infrequently.

For an extended discussion of the pretrial conference and a collection of the authority on the subject, see, Standards, Discovery at 124-131.

Dismissal of Case Against Defendants with Prejudice as Discovery Sanction Against State. 10 ALR 7th Art. 6 (2016).

Rule 17.1. Prosecuting attorney's obligations.

(a) Subject to the provisions of Rules 17.5 and 19.4, the prosecuting attorney shall disclose to defense counsel, upon timely request, the following material and information which is or may come within the possession, control, or knowledge of the prosecuting attorney:

(i) the names and addresses of persons whom the prosecuting attorney intends to call as witnesses at any hearing or at trial;

(ii) any written or recorded statements and the substance of any oral statements made by the defendant or a codefendant;

(iii) those portions of grand jury minutes containing testimony of the defendant;

(iv) any reports or statements of experts, made in connection with the particular case, including results of physical or mental examinations, scientific tests, experiments or comparisons;

(v) any books, papers, documents, photographs or tangible objects, which the prosecuting attorney intends to use in any hearing or at trial or which were obtained from or belong to the defendant; and

(vi) any record of prior criminal convictions of persons whom the prosecuting attorney intends to call as witnesses at any hearing or at trial, if the prosecuting attorney has such information.

(b) The prosecuting attorney shall, upon timely request, inform defense counsel of:

(i) the substance of any relevant grand jury testimony;

(ii) whether, in connection with the particular case, there has been any electronic surveillance of the defendant's premises or of conversations to which he was a party;

(iii) the relationship to the prosecuting authority of persons whom the prosecuting attorney intends to call as witnesses.

(c) The prosecuting attorney shall, upon timely request, disclose and permit inspection, testing, copying, and photocopying of any relevant material regarding:

(i) any specific searches and seizures;

(ii) the acquisition of specified statements from the defendant.

(d) Subject to the provisions of Rule 19.4, the prosecuting attorney shall, promptly upon discovering the matter, disclose to defense counsel any material or information within his knowledge, possession, or control, which tends to negate the guilt of the defendant as to the offense charged or would tend to reduce the punishment therefor.

Sanctions for Non-Compliance. Imposing sanctions for non-compliance with a discovery rule is left to the discretion of the trial court under Rule 19.7. The movant must show prejudice. Renton v. State, 274 Ark. 87, 622 S.W.2d 171 (1981); Limber v. State, 264 Ark. 479, 572 S.W.2d 402 (1978).

In Masingill v. State, 7 Ark. App. 90, 644 S.W.2d 614 (1983), the Arkansas Court of Appeals held that reversal of a conviction was required because the state withheld details of a crime by failing to supply defense counsel with the name of an uncharged participant in the offense. A witness called by the state at trial implicated appellant and a city councilman in the commission of the crime. When appellant attempted to call the councilman to deny the allegations, the state objected on grounds that he was not listed as a defense witness, and the court sustained the objection. The court of appeals reversed, finding that “the State withheld details of the crime to which appellant was entitled and in doing so clearly served to frustrate his defense preparation.” 7 Ark. App. 90, 92, 644 S.W.2d 614, 615 (1983).

In a later decision, Speer v. State, 18 Ark. App. 1, 708 S.W.2d 94 (1986), the court refused to reverse the trial court’s overruling of appellant’s contention that judgment should not be entered because the state did not respond in writing to his motion for a bill of particulars. The court distinguished Masingill by observing that in Masingill the prosecution not only failed to comply properly with appellant’s discovery motion but, in addition, “improperly withheld details of the alleged crime which should have been set out in the state’s bill of particulars.” Id. at 6, 708 S.W.2d 94, 96 (1986). Because the details not revealed in Masingill were that appellant and another party had been implicated in the offense, these two cases suggest that in response to a Rule 17.1 motion the prosecutor should disclose any other persons involved in a crime.

Not all failures to file complete responses to Rule 17.1 discovery motions will result in reversal. See, e.g., Limber v. State, 264 Ark. 479, 572 S.W.2d 402 (1978).

The trial court need not impose sanctions under Rule 19.1 in the absence of prejudice. Smith v. State, 10 Ark. App. 390, 664 S.W.2d 505 (1984). And even where a defendant is sentenced to life without parole, reversal will not be found necessary absent prejudice where the prosecutor’s failure to disclose information in response to a Rule 17.1 motion is attributable to oversight. Lasley v. State, 274 Ark. 352, 625 S.W.2d 466 (1981); Henry v. State, 278 Ark. 478, 647 S.W.2d 419, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 835, 78 L.Ed.2d 119 (1983). Though knowledge of the police that a defendant has made a statement is imputed to the prosecutor who fails to disclose the statement, Williams v. State, 267 Ark. 527, 593 S.W.2d 8 (1979), where the state and defense actually find out about the statement at the same time, the trial court is not required to impose sanctions. Henry v. State.

The commentary language used as a basis for the court’s decision in Williams has a novel history. The April 1974 proposed official draft of the Rules of Criminal Procedure set out the following proposed Rule 17.1(e): The prosecuting attorney’s obligations under this rule extend to material and information within the knowledge, possession, or control of members of his staff and of any others who have participated in the investigation or evaluation of the case and regularly report, or with reference to the particular case, have reported to his office.

In its December 22, 1975 per curiam order adopting the rules, In Re: The Arkansas Criminal Code Revision Commission, Ex Parte, 259 Ark. 863, 866, 530 S.W.2d 672, 674 (1975), the Supreme Court amended the Rule as follows: 10. Rule 17.1(e) appearing on Lines 43-47 of Page 47 is eliminated from the Rule but is reclassified as part of the commentary on Rule 17.1.

In Williams, the court stated: “There is no doubt, then, that the police officer knew of these statements. That knowledge is imputed to the prosecuting attorney. See Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 17.1. See also commentary to Article V.” 267 Ark. 537, 531, 593 S.W.2d 8, 10 (1980). The Court’s decision, in other words, turned on language excised from the rule and placed in the commentary by the Court.

Time of Disclosure. In Earl v. State, 272 Ark. 5, 612 S.W.2d 98 (1981) the defendant moved under Rule 17.1 for production of all written and oral statements made by him. The prosecutor permitted defense counsel to review his file. Thereafter, defendant testified at trial that he had never admitted guilt, whereupon he was impeached on cross-examination by inquiries about a previously undisclosed statement to a sheriff. The Arkansas Supreme Court opined as follows: There is no doubt about the timeliness of the request for the information, about the State’s obligation to furnish the information, or about the prejudice resulting to defendant from use of such information in cross-examination, in rebuttal, and again in closing argument. If our discovery rules are to be meaningful, they must be complied with where, as here, a timely request is made, there is no finding of compliance by the State, and there is resulting prejudice to the defense. 272 Ark. at 13, 612 S.W.2d at 102.

Even though Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-2011.3 (Repl. 1977) only requires that the prosecution furnish a witness statement after the witness has testified on direct examination, the Arkansas Supreme Court, in reliance upon Rule 17.1, has held that the state must make such disclosures "in sufficient time to permit [defense] counsel to make beneficial use thereof." Williamson v. State, 263 Ark. 401, 405, 565 S.W.2d 415, 418 (1978). Compare, Blakemore v. State, 268 Ark. 145, 594 S.W.2d 231 (1980); Nelson v. State, 262 Ark. 391, 557 S.W.2d 191 (1977).

In Williamson, after a sheriff had testified, his notes were reviewed by appellant's counsel, who discovered that they disclosed a statement made by the prosecuting witness about her assailant's appearance. The prosecuting witness had previously testified and denied making any such statement. The Court reversed appellant's conviction. The decision did not explicitly strike down any portion of § 43-2011.3 but speaks broadly. In any event, it appears clear that the prosecutor cannot postpone delivering to the defense counsel a copy of an exculpatory statement of a witness until that witness has testified and cross-examination is about to begin. See Rule 17.1(d). And not only is counsel for defendant entitled to copies of statements, he is also entitled to copies of the tapes from which transcripts have been prepared so he can confirm the accuracy of the transcripts. Williamson, supra.

In Heffernan v. State, 278 Ark. 325, 645 S.W.2d 666 (1983), the Supreme Court found that the trial court did not err when it denied appellant's motion for a continuance on grounds that the prosecuting attorney failed to supply copies of lab reports until the day of the trial. The Court found that the prosecutor did not receive the reports himself until the same day. It would appear that the surprise and prejudice to appellant would, however, be the same, regardless of when the prosecuting attorney received the report in question and irrespective of whose fault it was that it was unavailable until the day of trial. The same may be said of the Court's reasoning in Henry as well.

Failure to Comply; Trial Court to Rule on Prejudicial Effect. Failure of the trial court to ascertain whether a failure to comply with Rule 17.1 has had prejudicial effect is itself prejudicial. Nelson v. State, 274 Ark. 113, 622 S.W.2d 188 (1981).

Knowledge of Co-Defendant's Counsel Not Imputed to Defendant's Counsel. In Thrasher v. State, 270 Ark. 322, 604 S.W.2d 931 (1980) the Arkansas Supreme Court overturned a conviction after finding that the trial court erred in overruling appellant's motion in limine based upon the prosecutor's failure to provide him with a copy of material requested pursuant to Rule 17.1, even though the prosecutor had supplied such information to counsel for appellant's co-defendant and assumed that he would make this material available to counsel for appellant.

Reciprocal Duty of Disclosure by Defendant. The sanctions for failure to make required disclosures have also been applied to defendants. See Roleson v. State, 277 Ark. 148, 640 S.W.2d 113 (1982), where the trial court was upheld in refusing to permit a witness to testify to exculpatory matters that appellant had already testified about upon a showing that the witness' identity had not been disclosed to the prosecution.

Also, see Tubbs v. State, 19 Ark. App. 306, 720 S.W.2d 331 (1986), where the Arkansas Court of Appeals upheld a trial court ruling that a defense witness should not be permitted to testify about the bias of a prosecution witness toward appellant. The statement giving rise to the claim of bias did not come to the attention of counsel for appellant until the morning of trial, although it occurred over a week before the trial date. The record did not disclose how notice of the statement was transmitted to appellant's counsel or why it was not received sooner. The Court of Appeals found that, had the statement been communicated to the prosecuting attorney sooner, he would have had the opportunity to investigate the statement.

Police Investigative Reports. In regard to discovery of police investigative reports, compare Brown v. State, 261 Ark. 683, 250 S.W.2d 776 (1977) with Goodwin v. State, 263 Ark. 856, 568 S.W.2d 3 (1978). Rule 17.1(a)(v), requiring disclosure of "any . . . documents . . . which the prosecuting attorney intends to use in any hearing or at trial" (emphasis added) is ambiguous. If a police investigator testifies from recently made notes summarizing the contents of previously made reports, are the reports being "used"? In Goodwin the Arkansas Supreme Court said no. In Brown the Court did require the prosecution to divulge reports filed by an undercover agent detailing his activities, apparently on grounds that the reports might negate guilt and therefore be discoverable under Rule 17.1(d). Under the authority of Williamson v. State, 263 Ark. 401, 565 S.W.2d 415 (1978), perhaps reports from which notes are made should be discoverable for the same reason that tapes from which transcripts are typed are discoverable. There appears to be no other means for defense counsel, the trial court, or the appellate court to ascertain whether the notes accurately reflect the substance of the reports on which they are based.

Witness Statements. Production of witness statements is governed by Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-2011.3 (Repl. 1977). Where statements of state witnesses are exculpatory, Rule 17.1(d) also requires disclosure. Moreover, upon timely motion, exculpatory statements should be made available to defense counsel as soon as practicable. The prosecutor may not wait until the witness has given testimony under direct examination and cross-examination is about to begin. Williamson v. State, 263 Ark. 401, 565 S.W.2d 415 (1978). Compare Blakemore v. State, 268 Ark. 145, 594 S.W.2d 231 (1980), where the Arkansas Supreme Court reversed the trial court's denial of a motion by defense counsel at the beginning of cross-examination for production of a typewritten statement. The trial court ruled that the case had been pending over a year and that the motion was untimely. The Supreme Court disagreed: The court's rulings were wrong. Criminal Procedure Rule 17.1(b), governing discovery, merely requires the State to disclose the names and addresses of the State's witnesses. It is provided by statute, however, that after a witness called by the State has testified on direct examination, the court "shall," on motion of the defendant, order the State to produce any relevant statement of the witness in its possession. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-2011.3(b) (Repl. 1977). Thus the requests for the statements were timely. Blakemore at 146-47, 594 S.W.2d at 232-33.

Ordinarily, written statements by witnesses given before trial are not discoverable until the witness has testified on direct examination, unless the statements are exculpatory. The inculpatory statement of any witness can be obtained after his testimony and before cross-examination. Blakemore; Nelson v. State, 262 Ark. 391, 557 S.W.2d 191 (1977). Exculpatory statements given by witnesses should be divulged promptly, regardless of whether a motion to disclose is made by defense counsel under Rule 17.1(d).

In Lewis v. State, 267 Ark. 933, 591 S.W.2d 687 (Ct. App. 1979), appellant contended that he was prejudiced by the state's failure to disclose to him after timely motion that original versions of statements by state witnesses existed, though he had been provided verbatim typewritten statements prior to trial. The court of appeals held that "no prejudice to the defendant could have occurred under the circumstances" and that appellant's argument that "what happened constituted a violation of Rule 17.1 . . . is without merit." 267 at 935, 991 S.W.2d at 688.

Two judges dissented, arguing that the statements should have been disclosed because they might have led appellant to discover information about the investigation conducted by the officer taking the statement, and that information could be exculpatory under Rule 17.1(d).

What Constitutes Showing of Prejudice.

What constitutes a showing of prejudice by appellant is uncertain. Compare Renton v. State, 274 Ark. 87, 622 S.W.2d 171 (1981) (no prejudice found where arresting officer permitted to testify to statement made by appellant at time of arrest, even though statement was not disclosed to appellant pursuant to Rule 17.1 motion) with Nelson v. State, 274 Ark. 113, 622 S.W.2d 188 (1981) (trial court erred by receiving testimony of state witness whose identity was not disclosed to appellant prior to trial). In Nelson, prejudice was presumed under circumstances similar to those in Renton, where the court summarily dismissed such a claim. See, also, Vasquez v. State, 287 Ark. 468, 472, 701 S.W.2d 357, 360 (1985): "We do not grant a reversal for error which is unaccompanied by a showing of prejudice." And, see Berna v. State, 282 Ark. 563, 670 S.W.2d 435 (1984).

Rebuttal Testimony. Difficulties presented when, without prior identification under Rule 17.1, the state calls witnesses as "rebuttal witnesses" are dealt with in Vasquez v. State, 287 Ark. 468, 701 S.W.2d 357 (1985). In Vasquez the trial court permitted the state to call a witness not previously disclosed to rebut answers given by appellant during cross-examination. The purpose of the testimony was to show that appellant had placed decedent in fear during a telephone conversation before his death, presumably to show purpose and premeditation. The Supreme Court held that the state should have presented all evidence as to premeditation in its case in chief but, in effect, found that if the evidence was admitted to prove premeditation it was harmless error, since the record contained enough other evidence of premeditation to support the verdict of guilt of first degree murder.

Not all testimony offered to impeach a defendant's response to questions on cross-examination may be characterized as rebuttal testimony. In Birchett v. State, 289 Ark. 16, 708 S.W.2d 625 (1986), the Arkansas Supreme Court reversed the conviction of a defendant found guilty after the state was permitted to call a theretofore undisclosed witness to rebut appellant's cross-examination testimony that he had not spoken to his girlfriend about committing the robbery in question. The Arkansas Supreme Court, relying on State v. Manus, 93 N.M. 95, 597 P.2d 280 (1979), found that the state intentionally withheld the witness' testimony until after posing questions to appellant on cross-examination "clearly designed to manufacture a rebuttal situation." 289 Ark. at 19, 708 S.W.2d at 627. The Court in Manus placed emphasis on the fact that genuine rebuttal evidence is that offered in reply to new matters. For the purposes of disclosure under Rule 17.1 it may now be necessary in Arkansas to show that testimony sought to be offered as rebuttal testimony is in response to new matters raised by evidence offered after the sponsor of the rebuttal witness has rested.

In addition, see Garcia v. State, 18 Ark. App. 110, 711 S.W.2d 176 (1986), where the court apparently held that a party knowing that a witness called by the opposing party will testify against him must attack his credibility at that time. Defendant Garcia sought to call as rebuttal witnesses at the end of the defense case the prosecutor and counsel for one Wells, a witness to the aggravated robbery, in order to rebut Wells's testimony for the state that he had not been promised leniency if he would testify against Garcia. The court held that Wells's identity had been disclosed under Rule 17.1 and noted that at a pretrial suppression hearing counsel for Garcia had cross-examined an officer who investigated the robbery and who at that time had testified that Wells had given a statement implicating Garcia. The court stated: "In sum, the record clearly reflects appellant was aware that Wells would be called as a witness and his credibility would be in issue. Nonetheless, appellant waited until the end of his case to call the prosecutor and Wells's attorney in appellant's efforts to impeach Wells's story." 18 Ark. App. at 113, 711 S.W.2d at 178.

The court of appeals upheld the trial court's ruling that the request was untimely. The court does not indicate when and how Garcia should have impeached Wells's testimony if not during Garcia's case.

In Parker v. State, 268 Ark. 441, 597 S.W.2d 586 (1980), the Arkansas Supreme Court held that Rule 17.1(a) does not require the prosecuting attorney to disclose names of rebuttal witnesses. A psychologist and a psychiatrist testified that appellant was sane after the defense presented testimony to the contrary. The court went on to point out that the defense had the burden of proving insanity. Under the State v. Manus test discussed above, the state's witnesses were not rebuttal witnesses.

Knowledge of Police Imputed to Prosecutor. Information within the knowledge of the police is imputed to the prosecutor. Dupree v. State, 271 Ark. 50, 607 S.W.2d 356 (1980); Browning v. State, 274 Ark. 13, 621 S.W.2d 688 (1981).

CASE NOTES

In General.

A defendant in a criminal case cannot rely upon discovery as a total substitute for his own investigation. Heffernan v. State, 278 Ark. 325, 645 S.W.2d 666 (1983); David v. State, 295 Ark. 131, 748 S.W.2d 117 (1988).

The duty of disclosure requires that the defendant have the opportunity to discover the state's evidence prior to trial. Clark v. State, 26 Ark. App. 268, 764 S.W.2d 458 (1989).

If a prosecutor's office intends to fulfill its discovery obligations by relying upon an open-file policy, it must make every practicable effort to ensure that the information and records contained in the file are complete and that the Reports or Statements of Experts. In Dumond v. State, 290 Ark. 595, 721 S.W.2d 663 (1986), the Arkansas Supreme Court held that a defendant is entitled to the opportunity, apart from his own investigations, to challenge conclusions drawn from tests performed by witnesses for the state. Fingerprints taken from an automobile were not made available to counsel for defendant, since the prints were indistinct and did not prove or exclude the possibility of guilt. The Arkansas Supreme Court held that the state should have furnished information about the tests to counsel for defendant. The court also held, however, that defendant waited too long to ask for a mistrial and waived his objection.

Statement of Witnesses Taken Pursuant to Prosecutor's Subpoena. Statements of witnesses taken pursuant to a prosecutor's subpoena are not subject to the Rule 17.1(b)(i) requirement that the substance of any relevant grand jury testimony be divulged. Alford v. State, 291 Ark. 243, 724 S.W.2d 151 (1987).

Appellate Review.

Where defendant argued that state witness should not have been permitted to testify because her name was not included on state's witness list, defendant's failure to abstract parts of the record relating to his discovery requests precluded the appellate court from considering the issues. Clark v. State, 323 Ark. 211, 913 S.W.2d 297 (1996).

Where prosecution used undisclosed documents during cross-examination, but objection thereto was made only during the rebuttal phase of the trial, the objection was untimely and failed to preserve the discovery-based objection for appellate review. Bayless v. State, 326 Ark. 869, 935 S.W.2d 534 (1996).

Applicability.

Sections 16-97-101 and 16-97-102 do not prevent the rules of discovery from applying to the sentencing phase of a bifurcated trial. Phillips v. State, 321 Ark. 160, 900 S.W.2d 526 (1995).

The disclosure rule in subsection (d) of this rule applies to exculpatory and impeachment evidence. Smith v. State, 326 Ark. 520, 932 S.W.2d 753 (1996).

Bill of Particulars.

In the absence of prejudice, there is no error in failing to supply a bill of particulars when complete discovery has been granted. Limber v. State, 264 Ark. 479, 572 S.W.2d 402 (1978).

Burden of Proof.

When testimony has not been properly disclosed by the prosecution, the burden is on the defendant to establish that the omission was sufficient to undermine confidence in the outcome of the trial. Nicholson v. State, 319 Ark. 566, 892 S.W.2d 507 (1995).

Change in Counsel.

The right of discovery is the right of the defendant, not the personal right of his attorney, and where substituted counsel failed to show circumstances that required a repetition of disclosures made to defendant's original attorney, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant a continuance because the prosecuting attorney did not repeat the disclosures. Rowland v. State, 263 Ark. 77, 562 S.W.2d 590 (1978).

Defendant's Letter to Judge.

Applying the plain language of the Rules of Criminal Procedure, including this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.2 and 19.2, it seemed at first glance that the state's conduct amounted to a violation of the discovery rules, but the Arkansas Supreme Court had interpreted the discovery rules to focus on prejudice to a defendant; appellant wrote the letter to the judge and knew of its existence, and he was unable to show that he was prejudiced by the state's failure to disclose the letter until the state cross-examined him, and in the absence of demonstrable prejudice, the court had to affirm. Smith v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 130, 390 S.W.3d 772 (2012), superseded, 2013 Ark. 364 (2013).

Discretion of Court.

There is no abuse of discretion in a trial court's failure to grant a continuance where there is sufficient time allowed the defense to make beneficial use of evidence. Clark v. State, 26 Ark. App. 268, 764 S.W.2d 458 (1989).

The circuit court lacked the authority to direct the prosecutor as to what scientific tests to perform in its investigation and trial preparation; a circuit court may not perform the duties of the prosecuting attorney. State v. Pulaski County Circuit Court, 316 Ark. 514, 872 S.W.2d 414 (1994).

Due Process.

Subsection (d) of this rule incorporates the due process requirement that evidence favorable to a defendant on issues of guilt or punishment be disclosed by the prosecutor. Yates v. State, 303 Ark. 79, 794 S.W.2d 133 (1990).

Effect of Noncompliance.

Where the prosecutor failed to comply properly with defendant's discovery motion requesting names of all state witnesses and also improperly withheld details of the alleged crime which should have been set out in the state's bill of particulars, defendant's conviction for tampering with evidence was reversed. Masingill v. State, 7 Ark. App. 90, 644 S.W.2d 614 (1983).

When the state is charged with knowledge of the existence of a material witness and fails in response to a discovery order to disclose that information, it should not be assumed that in every case a cursory opportunity to interview the witness will cure the omission because there are instances where the demands of a fair trial require the granting of a continuance. Lewis v. State, 286 Ark. 372, 691 S.W.2d 864 (1985).

The Supreme Court did not grant sanctions against the state for withholding the confession of another person, even though the confession, even with its inconsistencies, was clearly exculpatory of the defendant, and the arguments for withholding it were not impressive. State v. Scott, 289 Ark. 234, 710 S.W.2d 212 (1986).

Failure to disclose substance of statements by co-defendant did not warrant mistrial in view of nature of discovery violation, nature of testimony, and availability of other sanctions. Shamlin v. State, 23 Ark. App. 39, 743 S.W.2d 1, 744 S.W.2d 405, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 863, 109 S. Ct. 163, 102 L. Ed. 2d 133 (1988).

Where the petitioner did not establish that had evidence been disclosed to him the result probably would have been different, the petitioner was not entitled to relief under this rule. Snell v. Lockhart, 791 F. Supp. 1367 (E.D. Ark. 1992), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 14 F.3d 1289 (8th Cir. 1994).

When the state violates this rule, the court has four options under Rule 19.7: (1) the evidence may be excluded; (2) discovery or inspection may be ordered; (3) a continuance can be granted; and (4) an appropriate order may be entered depending on the circumstances; it is within the trial court's discretion which sanction to employ. Reed v. State, 312 Ark. 82, 847 S.W.2d 34 (1993).

A continuance may be sufficient to cure the state's failure to comply with this rule. Reed v. State, 312 Ark. 82, 847 S.W.2d 34 (1993).

The key in determining if a reversible discovery violation exists is whether the defendant was prejudiced by the prosecutor's failure to disclose. Scroggins v. State, 312 Ark. 106, 848 S.W.2d 400 (1993).

Defendant's motion for a continuance denied where the evidence from the state's alleged discovery violation was at most cumulative and no prejudice to defendant resulted. McNeese v. State, 326 Ark. 787, 935 S.W.2d 246 (1996).

Exclusion of Evidence Not Disclosed.

This rule requires that the prosecuting attorney disclose to defense counsel, upon timely request, any material and information the prosecutor intends to use in any hearing or at trial but the exclusion of evidence not so disclosed is not mandatory unless there is a likelihood that prejudice will result. Smith v. State, 10 Ark. App. 390, 664 S.W.2d 505 (1984).

Exculpatory Evidence Withheld.

Where the defendant claimed that information was withheld in violation of subsection (d) of this rule tending to negate his guilt, and the trial judge pronounced the statement free of exculpatory information, the record on appeal was supplemented to include the information. Snell v. State, 290 Ark. 184, 717 S.W.2d 818 (1986).

Under subsection (d) of this rule, the prosecuting attorney is obliged to disclose to defense counsel any material information within the prosecutor's knowledge, possession, or control that tends to negate the guilt of the defendant as to the offense charged or would tend to reduce any resulting punishment, but where defendant, not the state, called a witness, and there was no indication that defendant had been in any way prejudiced by defendant's failure to have received the witness' prior statement, the court would not reverse for nonprejudicial error. Alford v. State, 291 Ark. 243, 724 S.W.2d 151 (1987).

Where error consists of the withholding of significant evidence which denies defendant a fair trial, the case will be reversed and remanded for a new trial. Strobbe v. State, 296 Ark. 74, 752 S.W.2d 29 (1988).

Where state withheld laboratory report on marijuana until three days before trial and did not reveal exculpatory fingerprint until trial, case was reversed and remanded for new trial. Henry v. State, 29 Ark. App. 5, 775 S.W.2d 911 (1989).

Where the state concealed the fact that the officer who identified the defendant had filed a false police report in an unrelated incident prior to trial, the defense strategy depended on bringing the officer's credibility into question, and the evidence of defendant's guilt was not otherwise overwhelming, the defendant was prejudiced by this failure to disclose. Farmer v. State, 54 Ark. App. 66, 923 S.W.2d 876 (1996).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying a motion for mistrial or continuance on the basis of nondisclosure of exculpatory evidence since the defendant failed to show prosecutorial misconduct and since defense counsel already knew the identity of all potential witnesses and could have chosen to interview them himself. Rychtarik v. State, 334 Ark. 492, 976 S.W.2d 374 (1998).

State committed a reversible discovery violation where the prosecutor failed to timely disclose the existence of a suspect's DNA sample so that the defense could have the state crime laboratory test it and compare it to DNA on the outside of the victim's shirt. By denying defendant the opportunity to investigate the information in the affidavit and the opportunity to compare the newly revealed DNA with the DNA previously collected, the court denied him the opportunity to bolster his assertion of innocence and to impeach a police officer's testimony. Figueroa v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 30, 480 S.W.3d 888 (2016).

Expert Evidence.

State had a duty in accordance with subdivision (a)(iv) of this rule to provide for the discovery of fingerprint report. Dumond v. State, 294 Ark. 379, 743 S.W.2d 779 (1988).

The prosecutor must provide reports of scientific tests and any information or materials concerning witnesses he or she intends to call. Burton v. State, 314 Ark. 317, 862 S.W.2d 252 (1993).

Because the state met its obligation to provide information to defense counsel, there was no discovery violation; the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a continuance because defendant had the information six days prior to trial and defendant could have obtained the same information through defendant's own investigation. Smith v. State, 352 Ark. 92, 98 S.W.3d 433 (2003).

State did not violate subdivision (a)(iv) of this rule by failing to produce a counselor's records from when the child was 13. Subsection (a) applied only to statements or reports of experts, and the circuit court found that the counselor was not an expert. Green v. State, 2012 Ark. 19, 386 S.W.3d 413 (2012).

—Scientific Tests.

Hypnosis falls within the broad category of scientific tests, and disclosure is required of the fact that the memory of a prosecution witness was refreshed by hypnosis. Orndorff v. Lockhart, 707 F. Supp. 1062 (E.D. Ark. 1988), aff'd in part, vacated in part, 906 F.2d 1230 (8th Cir. 1990).

Where defendant's request to test the seized marijuana was untimely, his failure to cross-examine the state chemist on the tests administered by the State Crime Lab suggested that he had no independent grounds to contest the legitimacy of the marijuana, and the absence of testing caused him no prejudice. Lewis v. State, 309 Ark. 392, 831 S.W.2d 145 (1992).

A defendant should have the opportunity to challenge conclusions drawn from tests undertaken by the state; a serious interest in scientific testing, however, must be voiced in timely fashion under subsection (c) of this rule and before the eleventh hour. Lukach v. State, 310 Ark. 38, 834 S.W.2d 642 (1992), writ denied, 2014 Ark. 451 (2014).

A legitimate motive to test and challenge the state's results is best evidenced by (1) asking for independent testing sufficiently in advance of the trial, and (2) taking such steps as are necessary to arrange for the testing which would include obtaining an expert and making certain that the samples were available in sufficient time for the testing to occur. Lukach v. State, 310 Ark. 38, 834 S.W.2d 642 (1992), writ denied, 2014 Ark. 451 (2014).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in allowing state's expert witness to testify regarding "memory loss" test results which had not been made available to defendant prior to trial, where, instead of moving for a continuance, defendant's counsel studied the test results with the assistance of his expert witness, and when asked a short time later, told the judge that he was ready to proceed with the testimony of the state's expert witness. Tisdale v. State, 311 Ark. 220, 843 S.W.2d 803 (1992).

While a prosecuting attorney clearly has a duty to disclose all pertinent test on tangible items pursuant to this rule, the prosecutor is not required to make certain scientific tests on all materials seized. State v. Pulaski County Circuit Court, 316 Ark. 514, 872 S.W.2d 414 (1994).

Failure to Disclose.

Despite a proper defense motion expressly seeking disclosure of other act evidence, the State failed to disclose that it had such evidence and the information was not disclosed until the State was cross-examining defendant, at which time it was far too late for him to prepare any kind of defense or response to the allegation; the circuit court's failure to grant defendant's motion for mistrial in the face of the State's misconduct was an abuse of discretion. Honey v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 217, 547 S.W.3d 483 (2018).

Failure to Disclose Prior Convictions.

In a prosecution for capital murder and for four counts of first-degree battery, all stemming from shootings that took place at a nightclub, the failure of the prosecutor to disclose information about a victim's prior convictions did not require reversal since there was no prejudice where the victim testified at the trial while dressed in prison garb and was questioned on direct and cross-examination regarding his prior convictions. Lee v. State, 340 Ark. 504, 11 S.W.3d 553 (2000), writ denied, 2011 Ark. 508 (2011).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a new trial, as defendant was not prejudiced by the alleged lack of disclosure of a prosecution witness's alleged juvenile conviction; the witness's criminal record was made known to the jury and was used by the defense in an attempt to impeach him. Harrison v. State, 371 Ark. 652, 269 S.W.3d 321 (2007).

Failure to Disclose Statement.

Where state, in response to defendant's request to discover written, recorded or oral statements made by him with respect to the case, gave defendant's counsel access to the state's file, which defendant's attorney copied in its entirety, and did not reveal at Denno hearing that defendant had made inculpatory statement to the county sheriff, following his confession to other police officers, that he was glad to get it off his chest, the state had not complied with this rule in supplying all statements of defendant, since that inculpatory statement had not appeared in the copied file and had not been testified to at the Denno hearing; thus it was error for the court to admit the county sheriff's testimony at trial. Earl v. State, 272 Ark. 5, 612 S.W.2d 98 (1981).

Where defendant claimed continuance should have been granted because prosecutor failed to give defense counsel copies of certain lab reports until day of trial and allegedly failed to give defense copy of letter concerning defendant's companion in murder, but evidence showed the prosecutor did not receive report until day of trial and prosecutor claimed copy of letter had been furnished to defense, defendant failed to show that trial court abused its discretion in denying motion for continuance based on asserted failure of prosecutor to comply with court's discovery order. Heffernan v. State, 278 Ark. 325, 645 S.W.2d 666 (1983).

Trial court in capital murder prosecution did not err in admitting testimony by officer that when he first approached defendant at the scene of murder defendant stated: "Don't shoot, I give up," where although the statement was not provided in response to motion for discovery, the prosecutor contended the state itself did not know the statement had been made until revealed in the testimony at trial and there was no evidence that the state deliberately avoided obtaining this information in order to have it presented at the trial. Henry v.

Though subdivision (b)(i) of this rule requires the prosecuting attorney to disclose to the defendant the “substance of any relevant grand jury testimony,” where defendant argued statements taken of witnesses pursuant to a prosecutor’s subpoena should be treated and disclosed in the same manner as grand jury testimony, it was held that this rule fails to require a prosecutor to disclose statements or information merely because it is gained as a result of a subpoena. Alford v. State, 291 Ark. 243, 724 S.W.2d 151 (1987).

When the state fails to disclose information, the burden is on the defendant to show prejudice; however, prejudice does not exist when the defendant already has access to the information that the state did not disclose. Esmeyer v. State, 325 Ark. 491, 930 S.W.2d 302 (1996).

Testimony introduced by the state, specifically, a victim’s testimony that appellant stated “this is going to end tonight” was not improperly allowed because, even though the state was required to provide appellant with the evidence pursuant to this rule, but did not, appellant was not prejudiced by the introduction of the statement. Appellant did not show that the statement was proof that he was guilty of any of the charges against him, and there was ample other evidence indicating his desire to cause harm. Hill v. State, 370 Ark. 102, 257 S.W.3d 534 (2007).

Failure to Disclose Witness.

The state was properly permitted to call a witness, notwithstanding the defendant’s contention that the prosecutor failed to disclose the witness, where the state produced a copy of a fax to defense counsel summarizing the witness’ statement and defense counsel admitted that his investigator had reviewed the state’s file after the date of the fax. MacKintrush v. State, 334 Ark. 390, 978 S.W.2d 293 (1998).

There was no violation of this rule where the prosecutor did not decide to call an expert witness, who had been asked by the defendant to examine him, until after speaking with defense counsel the Wednesday before trial and after she was unable to obtain a report from the expert’s office. Newsome v. State, 73 Ark. App. 216, 42 S.W.3d 575 (2001).

In a hearing on motions to transfer a case to juvenile court under § 9-27-318, to dismiss the case, and to declare the transfer statute unconstitutional, the circuit court abused its discretion by not excluding the testimony of two key witnesses because the state blatantly violated subsection (a) of this rule by refusing to offer these witnesses’ names until late in the afternoon before the hearing and, as a result, the defense did not have time to interview the two witnesses. Although the hearing was not a trial or an adjudication, the state’s dilatory behavior nevertheless occurred at a pivotal point in the proceedings when the circuit court was deciding the critical issue of whether the juvenile would be tried as a juvenile or as an adult. N.D. v. State, 2011 Ark. 282, 383 S.W.3d 396 (2011).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant’s motion for a continuance because defendant failed to clearly demonstrate how the granting of a continuance would have altered the outcome of the probation revocation hearing; defendant failed to point to any specific information the continuance would have garnered that would have impacted or changed his cross-examination of the probation officer, and a recess granted for him to interview the officer cured a discovery violation. Arnold v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 22, 540 S.W.3d 298 (2018).

Failure to Produce Evidence.

Where the defendant’s counsel discovered three days before trial that he had not received information requested from prosecutor under discovery order, his duty to come forward as soon as possible with a request to obtain the information was not as great as the duty of the prosecuting attorney to furnish the information as required by this rule and the court was not authorized to overrule the defendant’s objection to the prosecuting attorney’s complete failure to produce the evidence as required by the rule and the order of the court; under the circumstances it was improper to force the defendant into a joint trial without the benefit of any of the information which had been sought through discovery. Thrasher v. State, 270 Ark. 322, 604 S.W.2d 931 (1980).

Even though the prosecution had an open file policy, it did not fulfill its discovery obligation when defense counsel was required to himself examine all other files in the county maintained by law enforcement officials. Dever v. State, 14 Ark. App. 107, 685 S.W.2d 518 (1985).

Defendant’s claim that the state’s failure to provide information concerning the hospitalization, statements, and reports made in connection with contact with the alleged sexual assault victims constituted a violation of this rule was rejected because defendant failed to preserve his argument for appellate review by failing to object and apprise the circuit court of the alleged discovery violations at the first opportunity. Defendant’s claim also lacked merit as the state fully met its discovery obligations under Rule 17, in that the state provided discovery to defendant relating to both cases and informed defendant that it maintained an “open-file policy” and urged defense counsel to review defendant’s files in the prosecuting attorney’s office. Barrow v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 589, 377 S.W.3d 481 (2010).

In a terroristic threatening case, although the state committed a discovery violation by failing to disclose a 911 call under this rule, defendant was not prejudiced because a witness was identified as a victim in the charging document, thus, his existence was not unknown and his status as a witness was not a surprise to the defense. Cornett v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 106, 389 S.W.3d 47 (2012).

Defendant's conviction for breaking or entering was proper; given that defendant refused lesser remedies that would have permitted the trial court to determine whether he had been prejudiced, denial of a mistrial was manifestly within the trial court's discretion. Although there was nothing to show that the surveillance video was in fact exculpatory under subsection (d) of this rule, as well as Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.3(a) and 19.7, the trial court plainly was ready to grant a continuance and to issue suitable orders to obtain the video recording for defense counsel; it was equally clear that defense counsel declined any remedy other than mistrial. Vilayvanh v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 561 (2012).

Defendant was not entitled to have the results of the searches of his person and vehicle suppressed on the ground that the State failed to preserve and provide to defendant the motor video recording of his encounter with the police because the circuit court found no bad faith on the part of the police in failing to preserve the evidence and the requested sanction was tantamount to dismissal of the charges against defendant. Jackson v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 379, 609 S.W.3d 418 (2020).

Failure to Provide Copies.

Where the defendant was charged with being a felon in possession of a firearm, the very nature of the crime charged necessarily placed the defendant on notice that the state would be required to prove that he was a felon; therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it allowed the state to introduce into evidence documents concerning the defendant's prior felony convictions despite the state's failure to provide copies of the documents to the defendant prior to the trial as the defendant had requested, where the evidence showed that the state had made the documents available to the defendant for inspection and the defendant's attorney was aware of and had reviewed the documents with the prosecuting attorney. Terry v. State, 9 Ark. App. 38, 652 S.W.2d 634 (1983).

Forged Checks.

Defendant's argument in a forgery prosecution that he was denied a fair trial due to his inability to discover the names of persons, or to view additional checks, which were involved in other alleged line-ups had no merit since, if there were other checks not the subject of the instant charge which defendant was supposed to have written, they were clearly unrelated with the case being tried and these alleged

"other" check(s) were never referred to by the prosecution, but rather were called to the attention of the jury by the defense on cross-examination so that any resulting prejudice was invited, and could not be raised as an error on appeal. Lewis v. State, 267 Ark. 933, 591 S.W.2d 687 (Ct. App. 1979).

Grounds for New Trial.

This rule does not expand the grounds upon which a new trial may be granted pursuant to § 16-89-130. Newberry v. State, 262 Ark. 334, 557 S.W.2d 864 (1977).

Imputation of Information.

The knowledge of a police officer is imputed to the prosecuting attorney. Williams v. State, 267 Ark. 527, 593 S.W.2d 8 (1980).

Where police did not give defendant a clearly exculpatory statement by a witness to a fatal shooting, and prosecutor's file did not contain this statement when examined by defendant's attorney, the trial court was incorrect in denying defendant's motion for continuance which was made after the jury had begun deliberations because the witness had not appeared at trial after being subpoenaed by the state, since the police knowledge of the statement was imputed to the prosecutor and the prosecutor failed to timely disclose the statement under this rule; accordingly, defendant's conviction was reversed and the case remanded for new trial. Lacy v. State, 272 Ark. 333, 614 S.W.2d 235 (1981).

Knowledge of a codefendant's statement to a police officer implicating the defendant in a rape case is imputed to the prosecutor, with this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 19.2 requiring disclosure to the defendant of the statement; accordingly, where the codefendant's statement was given five months before the rape trial, but the state's attorney only learned of it the day before the trial and mistakenly believed that the defendant's counsel was also aware of it, the trial court should not have permitted use of the undisclosed statement for any purpose. Browning v. State, 274 Ark. 13, 621 S.W.2d 688 (1981).

Information held by the police is imputed to the prosecution's office. Lewis v. State, 286 Ark. 372, 691 S.W.2d 864 (1985).

In determining whether the name of the witness should have been given to the defense as requested under subdivision (a)(i) of this rule, the knowledge by the police that the witness had material information about the crime was imputed to the prosecutor's office. Birchett v. State, 289 Ark. 16, 708 S.W.2d 625 (1986).

Where witness withheld information from the defense concerning his knowledge of activity by the defendants or his intent to testify, it was not the prosecutor who withheld information, and it was correct to allow the witness to testify. Cox v. State, 305 Ark. 244, 808 S.W.2d 306 (1991).

No Duty to Test Physical Evidence.

Where certain objects were seized at the scene of a murder and sent to the state crime lab for testing, but were never tested, and where there was disclosure by the prosecuting attorney of all material and information, including a copy of the state crime lab report, that were within the possession and control of members of his staff or others who had participated in the investigation or evaluation of the case and regularly reported to the prosecutor, there was no violation of the obligation to disclose under this rule, subject to Ark. R. Crim. P. 19.4, since these rules do not impose a duty on the state to make tests on all materials seized and the defendant cannot rely upon discovery as a total substitution for his own investigation. Thomerson v. State, 274 Ark. 17, 621 S.W.2d 690 (1981), overruled as stated in Munnerlyn v. State, 2018 Ark. 161, 545 S.W.3d 207 (2018).

No Prejudice.

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a continuance or for a mistrial, for purposes of Ark. R. Crim. P. 19.7; there was only one recording in question and it was simply in three different copies, and defendant declined the digital copy, which contained the same recording that was on a microcassette, and thus defendant was not prejudiced by any alleged failure to disclose under subdivision (a)(ii) of this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 19.2. Travis v. State, 371 Ark. 621, 269 S.W.3d 341 (2007).

While the prosecution failed to turn over, pursuant to this rule, to defense counsel an audio recording of a telephone interview conducted by the sheriff's office involving another individual who had made statements implicating another individual in the death of the victim, defendant failed to show prejudice. Lacy v. State, 2010 Ark. 388, 377 S.W.3d 227 (2010), cert. denied, 563 U.S. 964, 131 S. Ct. 2158, 179 L. Ed. 2d 942 (2011).

Although defendant's probation officer was not disclosed as a state's witness before trial in compliance with subdivision (a)(i) of this rule, defendant failed to demonstrate prejudice from the admission of the officer's testimony. Thus, no reversible error occurred. Populis v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 334 (2011).

Defendant failed to show prejudice from an alleged discovery violation under subdivision (a)(ii) of this rule; the information, defendant's own statement, was not exculpatory in light of the fact that defendant admitted to shooting the victim. Defendant already had knowledge of the information because it was a statement defendant had made to an informant. Wright v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 289 (2012).

Defendant convicted of aggravated robbery and theft of property did not establish a reversible error based on the introduction of a photo lineup as he offered no argument as to how he was prejudiced by the State's alleged failure to disclose the photo lineup because the issue of defendant's identifying another person involved in the robbery by using a photo lineup was completely tangential to the matter of defendant's guilt or innocence; and the evidence presented against defendant was overwhelming — particularly due to his recorded confession, his apprehension near the scene of the robbery, and his unexplained possession of several hundred dollars. Daniels v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 534, 561 S.W.3d 779 (2018).

Even assuming that the State failed to properly disclose an expert witness physician in a domestic battery case, defendant did not establish prejudice as the State presented other evidence that the victim suffered a serious physical injury. Allen v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 603, 567 S.W.3d 93 (2018).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion to exclude a supplemental crime lab report for violation of this rule. The State explained why the supplemental crime lab testing was delayed and necessary, and the supplemental crime lab report was provided to defendant within two days of the State's receipt; moreover, defendant could not establish that he was prejudiced given that all the DNA testing was inconclusive. Farmer v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 331, 580 S.W.3d 879 (2019).

Open-File Policy.

Prosecutor's reference to its "open-file" policy and list of witnesses was sufficient to satisfy defendant's discovery request. Tatum v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 80, 381 S.W.3d 124 (2011).

Other Suspects.

Although defendant contended that the State of Arkansas failed to abide by its discovery obligations in revealing only days before trial that there had been two other suspects and in failing to reveal the existence of a video (a dashboard-camera recording) of one of the other potential suspects, defendant did not establish that the fundamental fairness of the trial was manifestly affected. Turner v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 5, 538 S.W.3d 227 (2018).

Photograph of Defendant.

There was no reversible error arising from the state's failure to provide defendant with the photograph of defendant identified by witness and the names of state witnesses, where the record indicated that the state did provide the photograph after defense counsel requested it at the omnibus hearing before trial, and where, although the state did not disclose in advance of the trial the names of the two witnesses, one witness was listed by defendant as a defense witness and the other was interviewed by defense counsel in advance of his testimony after the court recessed explicitly for that purpose. Martinez v. State, 269 Ark. 231, 601 S.W.2d 576 (1980).

Police Reports.

Police reports which contained no exculpatory information, were not offered into evidence, and certainly did not belong to the defendant, were not wrongfully withheld from the defendant, and it was not an abuse of discretion to deny him access to them. Goodwin v. State, 263 Ark. 856, 568 S.W.2d 3 (1978).

Where a change in a police officer's crime report was passed on to the prosecuting attorney immediately, but the prosecutor unintentionally failed to pass the information on to the defendant's attorney, it was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to deny a mistrial, since the defendant was allowed to impeach the officer's testimony in regard to his prior inconsistent statement. Lasley v. State, 274 Ark. 352, 625 S.W.2d 466 (1981).

Where report of state trooper was received by defendant prior to trial and during discovery, and he testified to matters contained in that report, omission of trooper's name from witness list did no prejudice to defendant. Brooks v. State, 308 Ark. 660, 827 S.W.2d 119 (1992).

Polygraph Examinations.

Upon proper request, prosecuting attorney is required to make pretrial disclosure of polygraph examination materials to defendant during discovery. Yates v. State, 303 Ark. 79, 794 S.W.2d 133 (1990).

Prior Convictions.

Accused is entitled to know before trial the number of previous convictions the state will attempt to introduce. Malone v. State, 292 Ark. 243, 729 S.W.2d 167 (1987).

Where defendant made a timely request for prior convictions or charges of intended witnesses, but the prosecuting attorney failed to disclose one witness was on probation for arson, a new trial was properly refused because the failure to disclose was not prejudicial since evidence against the defendant was overwhelming. Hall v. State, 306 Ark. 329, 812 S.W.2d 688 (1991).

Where defense counsel was afforded sufficient time at trial to review prosecution witness' criminal record, and witness admitted to prior convictions on the witness stand, defense failed to show how it was prejudiced by the prosecution's failure to timely disclose this information. Nelson v. State, 324 Ark. 404, 921 S.W.2d 593 (1996).

Evidence of planned use of eleven-year-old conviction disclosed in a timely manner where the information alleged defendant was an habitual offender and he was advised of the specific conviction early enough for him to file a motion in limine asking the trial court to exclude proof of it. Mosley v. State, 325 Ark. 469, 929 S.W.2d 693 (1996).

Privileged Matters.

The psychotherapist-patient privilege preempts the need to discover all admissible evidence. Johnson v. State, 342 Ark. 186, 27 S.W.3d 405 (2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 944, 121 S. Ct. 1408, 149 L. Ed. 2d 350 (2001).

Purpose.

Purpose of rule is to reduce delays during trial. Williamson v. State, 263 Ark. 401, 565 S.W.2d 415 (1978).

The purpose of subdivision (a)(i) of this rule is to give the defendant adequate notice of the witnesses to be called against him or her in the state's efforts to present its case. Birchett v. State, 289 Ark. 16, 708 S.W.2d 625 (1986).

Rebuttal Evidence.

While the state is required, upon a timely request, to disclose to a defendant all statements made by the defendant of which the state has knowledge, the state is not required to disclose true rebuttal evidence. Weaver v. State, 56 Ark. App. 104, 939 S.W.2d 316 (1997).

Recorded Transcript.

In prosecution for robbery defendant was not only entitled to the written transcription prepared by the state from the recorded statements, but was entitled to discover the tapes not only because the tapes represented the best evidence, but without the tapes, defendant had no way of comparing the transcription in order to determine if the transcription was a correct reproduction of the recordings, for, the statement as well as the tapes would have been most helpful to defendant in his cross-examination of state's witnesses. Williamson v. State, 263 Ark. 401, 565 S.W.2d 415 (1978).

A tape recording should be kept available for a reasonable time after a statement has been transcribed, as its "unavailability" may not save a transcription from inadmissibility. Mitchell v. State, 295 Ark. 341, 750 S.W.2d 936 (1988), overruled, MacKintrush v. State, 334 Ark. 390, 978 S.W.2d 293 (1998).

Where state was unable to provide the defendant with the recording of the confession for the purpose of comparing the recording with the transcript, trial court's denial of motion to suppress, allowing transcript of the confession to be read into evidence, was error. Hamm v. State, 296 Ark. 385, 757 S.W.2d 932 (1988).

Request for Disclosure.

Where there was no request for disclosure by defense counsel as contemplated in this rule, it could not be said that the rule was violated by the admission of copy of prior conviction and criminal docket sheet, particularly since the prior felony conviction was an element of one of the offenses charged, and defendant was obviously put on notice that evidence of the conviction would be presented at trial; since both documents were properly certified, and the trial court sua sponte took judicial notice of the authenticity of the judgment of conviction and docket sheet there was no need to call a witness to introduce the document. Plummer v. State, 270 Ark. 11, 603 S.W.2d 402 (1980).

Statements by Defendants.

The plain language of subdivision (a)(ii) of this rule does not limit the discovery obligation of the state solely to statements made to the police or other authorities. To the contrary, it provides that upon timely request, the prosecution must disclose any written or recorded statement and the substance of any oral statement made by the defendant. Bowden v. State, 297 Ark. 160, 761 S.W.2d 148 (1988).

Subdivision (a)(ii) of this rule mandates that the prosecutor disclose statements made by the defendant; Ark. R. Crim. P. 19.2 imposes a continuing duty on the prosecutor to disclose this information. Rayford v. State, 326 Ark. 656, 934 S.W.2d 496 (1996).

Statements by Witnesses.

Where during the discovery period the defense counsel was provided with copies of typewritten statements given by two witnesses to the police, the defendant was not prejudiced by the failure of the state to provide copies of the original handwritten statements given by the witnesses since the typewritten copies of the statements were identical to the handwritten originals except for the fact that in the original statement of one of the witnesses, some words were underlined by her, and this underlining was not shown on the typewritten version. Lewis v. State, 267 Ark. 933, 591 S.W.2d 687 (Ct. App. 1979).

Where in a prosecution for possession of heroin, an objection at the trial by the defendant came in the form of a statement by the defense counsel that he did not recall the statement of a particular witness as having been in the prosecutor's file, that objection was not intended as a proffer of evidence that the prosecution had not complied with this section, and therefore the trial judge did not err in overruling the defense counsel's motion to suppress the witness' statement. Philmon v. State, 267 Ark. 1121, 593 S.W.2d 504 (Ct. App. 1980).

Where in a prosecution for interference with a law enforcement officer, the defense counsel requested a copy of a witness' prior written statements for purposes of cross-examination, it was error for the trial court to refuse such request as untimely even though the action had been pending for over a year, since the court was required to order the statements produced by the state on the defendant's motion under § 16-89-115. Blakemore v. State, 268 Ark. 145, 594 S.W.2d 231 (1980).

Where the state inadvertently failed to supply the name of a state's witness, and the trial court ruled, without inquiry as to actual surprise or prejudice, that the witness could testify because a subpoena had been issued 11 days before the trial, despite the defense attorney's statement that he was surprised and totally unprepared for her statement and despite the fact that the court made no inquiry as to whether the defense actually knew that the subpoena had been issued, this rule was violated and a new trial was ordered. Nelson v. State, 274 Ark. 113, 622 S.W.2d 188 (1981).

Neither subsection (a) of this rule nor § 16-89-115 requires the prosecutor to supply defendant with written statements from a witness before the trial. Brown v. State, 315 Ark. 466, 869 S.W.2d 9 (1994).

This rule does require the state to furnish defendant with a statement made by a non-expert witness. Thompson v. State, 322 Ark. 586, 910 S.W.2d 694 (1995).

It was immaterial that a police officer omitted her visual identification of the defendant from the report while including her voice identification; the fact that she could positively identify the defendant was the critical point, and that fact was disclosed. Turner v. State, 325 Ark. 237, 926 S.W.2d 843 (1996).

Where the written statement not disclosed to the defense prior to trial was not different in any significant detail from the oral testimony of the victim, which was received without objection, the defendant was not prejudiced by its admission into evidence. Weber v. State, 326 Ark. 564, 933 S.W.2d 370 (1996).

This provision does not require the state to disclose the substance of the testimony of the witnesses it intends to call. Travis v. State, 328 Ark. 442, 944 S.W.2d 96 (1997).

In a sexual abuse case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for continuance and in excluding testimony concerning "slow dancing" incidents which occurred outside the family group; the state was under no obligation to disclose the substance of the testimony of the witnesses it intended to call. Hathcock v. State, 357 Ark. 563, 182 S.W.3d 152 (2004).

Subpoena.

Prosecuting attorney does not have to furnish defendant with statements taken pursuant to a subpoena. Parker v. State, 292 Ark. 421, 731 S.W.2d 756 (1987).

Prosecutor's failure to disclose statement of defense expert taken pursuant to subpoena did not prejudice defendant and refusal of court to permit discovery of such statements was not error. Parker v. State, 292 Ark. 421, 731 S.W.2d 756 (1987).

Motion for a mistrial was properly denied because defendant did not request to see a prosecutor's subpoena after learning at trial that it was not disclosed by the State during discovery, and it was not apparent from the context that the subpoena contained any exculpatory information. Defendant made a conclusory statement that the State's failure to disclose the subpoena was prejudicial and warranted a mistrial, but the appellate court could not determine whether there was in fact prejudice without seeing the prosecutor's subpoena. Means v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 643, 476 S.W.3d 168 (2015).

Third-Party Filming of Search.

In a drug trafficking case, where an HBO film crew filmed the officers' search of defendant's home, the circuit court's refusal to order the State to obtain the video footage and identify the filmmakers was not an abuse of discretion where the filmmakers were neither law enforcement officers nor acting as state agents, and the State did not possess the video. Harmon v. State, 2020 Ark. 217, 600 S.W.3d 586 (2020).

State was not required to obtain and to provide defendant a video recording of the search of his home that was made by a film crew for a cable television documentary because the filmmakers were not law enforcement officers, nor were they acting as state agents. King v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 532, 614 S.W.3d 823 (2020).

Time of Disclosure.

The information requested must be furnished in sufficient time to permit beneficial use of it by defense. Williamson v. State, 263 Ark. 401, 565 S.W.2d 415 (1978); Lewis v. State, 286 Ark. 372, 691 S.W.2d 864 (1985); Malone v. State, 292 Ark. 243, 729 S.W.2d 167 (1987); Clark v. State, 26 Ark. App. 268, 764 S.W.2d 458 (1989).

The prosecution's delay in listing witness, the delay in affording defendant an interview with her, and the presence of FBI agents at the interview, did not violate the disclosure requirements of this rule since it only allows a criminal defendant the opportunity to discover the state's testimony prior to trial, but does not create a substitute for his own investigation. Renton v. State, 274 Ark. 87, 622 S.W.2d 171 (1981).

Where the prosecutor failed to disclose the identity of a material witness until the day of the trial, the prosecutor failed to comply with the rule, and the five minutes period granted to the defendant in order to interview the witness was insufficient to cure the prosecutor's non-compliance. Lewis v. State, 286 Ark. 372, 691 S.W.2d 864 (1985).

Where an evidentiary statement made by the defendant had not been disclosed by the prosecution because it did not know of the statement until ten o'clock the previous night, and where, under the plain language of subdivision (a)(ii) of this rule, this evidence should have been provided to defendant because the statement came within the knowledge of the prosecuting attorney after timely discovery requests had been made, the trial court's granting of a one-day continuance was an appropriate remedy. Caldwell v. State, 319 Ark. 243, 891 S.W.2d 42 (1995).

Testimony of witness was not excluded where the name of the state's witness came to the state's attention two days before trial, and was immediately disclosed to defendant. Lovelady v. State, 326 Ark. 196, 931 S.W.2d 430 (1996).

Defendant was not entitled to relief due to the state's alleged failure to timely provide exculpatory evidence as all such evidence was supplied within seven months of trial and defendant had every opportunity to conduct his own investigation regarding other suspects and other witnesses. Howard v. State, 348 Ark. 471, 79 S.W.3d 273, cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1051, 123 S. Ct. 606, 154 L. Ed. 2d 528 (2002).

Untimely Request for Disclosure.

Where defendant made the appropriate request under this rule and sought the basis of the results of a missing fingerprint report, pursuant to subdivision (a)(iv) of this rule, and the information testified to by the expert was neutral and nonprejudicial, the defendant was entitled to challenge the state's conclusion by having his own tests performed, but he had to timely object. The defendant could not wait to see the full strength of the state's case before bringing his mistrial request to the attention of the trial court. Dumond v. State, 290 Ark. 595, 721 S.W.2d 663 (1986).

Where the record clearly reflected that the defendant was aware from his pretrial discovery that a certain informant would be called as a witness and that his credibility would be in issue, but he waited until the end of his case to call the prosecutor and the informant's attorney in an effort to impeach the informant's story by showing that the informant had been promised leniency relating to his part in the crime, the defendant simply failed to make his proof request in a timely manner. Garcia v. State, 18 Ark. App. 110, 711 S.W.2d 176 (1986).

Waiver.

Discovery rights can be waived if the defense does not utilize them. Malone v. State, 292 Ark. 243, 729 S.W.2d 167 (1987).

Defendant's objection to the testimony of a police officer at trial based on the state's alleged failure to provide a statement in discovery was insufficient to preserve error for review because the objection was not made at the first opportunity. George v. State, 356 Ark. 345, 151 S.W.3d 770 (2004).

Witnesses.

- Criminal History.
- Informant.
- Notice.
- Rebuttal Witnesses.

Where the record reflected that defense counsel was informed that all codefendants were potential witnesses, the fact that the state did not notify defense counsel that a certain witness would be a witness until a few days before the trial did not violate this rule, where that witness had been a codefendant and had apparently entered into an agreement to plead guilty and to testify. Thompson v. State, 280 Ark. 265, 658 S.W.2d 350 (1983).

Where the state's action in calling a witness without giving the requested notice as required by subdivision (a)(i) of this rule did not prejudice the defendant, his conviction would not be reversed. Vasquez v. State, 287 Ark. 468, 701 S.W.2d 357 (1985).

If a witness is proper for the state's case in chief, the prosecution is required to notify the defendant of the name and address of that witness upon timely request; if a witness is a genuine rebuttal witness there is no such requirement. Birchett v. State, 289 Ark. 16, 708 S.W.2d 625 (1986).

Where witness was not a true rebuttal witness as her testimony was not merely in response to evidence presented by the defense, the name of the witness should have been given to the defense under subdivision (a)(i) of this rule. Birchett v. State, 289 Ark. 16, 708 S.W.2d 625 (1986).

Though subdivision (a)(i) of this rule requires the state to provide the defense with the name of witnesses it intends to call, the defense was not surprised when the defense had talked to the witness prior to the trial and the witness was called only after the defense asserted the need for an official to testify about certain reports; the state had met its burden before the witness was called, and there was no prejudicial error. Marx v. State, 291 Ark. 325, 724 S.W.2d 456 (1987).

This rule does not require the state to disclose the substance of a witness's testimony to a defendant, but requires only that the names and addresses of witnesses be disclosed by the prosecuting attorney. Cox v. State, 36 Ark. App. 173, 820 S.W.2d 471 (1991); Holloway v. State, 310 Ark. 473, 837 S.W.2d 464 (1992).

Where the trial court allowed defendant's attorney the time she requested to interview a previously unavailable witness before trial and she informed the trial court that further questioning of the witness would probably produce no more information, there was no abuse of discretion as a result of a denial of a continuance. Robinson v. State, 317 Ark. 407, 878 S.W.2d 405 (1994).

Where the trial court entered at least two discovery orders in which it directed the attorneys to file a list of witnesses, and where the state provided witness lists to defendant on two occasions, but neither list included witness's name, the state violated the discovery rules. Mosley v. State, 323 Ark. 244, 914 S.W.2d 731 (1996).

Subdivision (a)(i) of this rule requires the state to disclose the names and addresses of the witnesses it intends to call, but it does not require the state to disclose the substance of their expected testimony. Donihoo v. State, 325 Ark. 483, 931 S.W.2d 69 (1996).

In defendant's stalking case, the court erred by allowing the state's expert to testify when he was not disclosed as a witness prior to trial because the state acknowledged that they had identified the expert as a witness well in advance of the trial, but chose not to disclose that to defendant, and defendant did not open the door to the use of the witness in the state's case-in-chief. Lowry v. State, 90 Ark. App. 333, 205 S.W.3d 830, rev'd, 364 Ark. 6, 216 S.W.3d 101 (2005).

Defendant could not rely on discovery as a substitute for defendant's own investigation where the state had given defendant the name of a confidential informant mentioned in an email and, when defendant expressed dissatisfaction with this response, defendant's request to admit the email into evidence was granted, and defendant had ample opportunity to interview a police officer who was the source of the information. Bradley v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 714, 370 S.W.3d 263 (2009).

In a case involving first-degree murder and robbery, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by permitting a State's witness to testify, even though the witness was not listed on the State's final witness list prior to trial; the State fulfilled its discovery obligation by its open file policy. To the extent that the State failed to specifically list the witness at issue as its intended witness, defendant failed to demonstrate that he was prejudiced or that the omission affected the outcome of the trial; moreover, the testimony given by the witness did not touch on defendant's guilt or innocence. Rogers v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 133 (2014).

It was not an abuse of discretion to admit the testimony of a late-disclosed prosecution witness or to deny defendant's motion for a continuance because (1) the prosecution's disclosure of the witness and provision of the witness's statement to defense counsel within minutes of contacting the witness, and provision of the witness's criminal history as soon as available, sufficed, and (2) the trial court conducted a proper inquiry into bad faith and determined defense counsel had an opportunity to interview the witness. Duncan v. State, 2018 Ark. 71, 539 S.W.3d 581 (2018).

—Criminal History.

In a prosecution for capital murder and for four counts of first-degree battery, all stemming from shootings that took place at a nightclub, the failure of the prosecutor to fully disclose the prior criminal activities of the three state witnesses did not require reversal since there was no reasonable probability that the results of the trial would have been different even the testimony of those witnesses was excluded altogether. Lee v. State, 340 Ark. 504, 11 S.W.3d 553 (2000), writ denied, 2011 Ark. 508 (2011).

—Informant.

Question of whether or not informant's identity should be divulged calls for a balancing of the public interest in encouraging the flow of voluntary information against the defendant's right to prepare his defense. McDaniel v. State, 294 Ark. 416, 743 S.W.2d 795 (1988).

If an informant was present or participated in the crime with defendant, his testimony would be relevant and it would be prejudicial error for state not to reveal his identity. McDaniel v. State, 294 Ark. 416, 743 S.W.2d 795 (1988).

Where there was no showing that failure to identify informant was prejudicial to defendant's defense, it was not error for trial court to refuse to require identity to be revealed. McDaniel v. State, 294 Ark. 416, 743 S.W.2d 795 (1988).

—Notice.

Where prosecution witness' name was not on the witness list as required by this rule, but the defense had been given a copy of the witness' statement and was on notice that he was a potential witness, there was no prejudice to the defendant. Davis v. State, 318 Ark. 212, 885 S.W.2d 292 (1994).

Where defense was apprised of witnesses' identities, and that they would testify, six days before trial, there was sufficient prior notice and no attempt to conceal discoverable evidence from the defense. Nooner v. State, 322 Ark. 87, 907 S.W.2d 677 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1143, 116 S. Ct. 1436, 134 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1996).

Where defendant did not object to witness's testimony until witness had taken the stand and answered twenty-four questions, defendant did not object at the earliest opportunity, and his argument that witness should not have been permitted to testify because state failed to include her name on its witness list was meritless. Clark v. State, 323 Ark. 211, 913 S.W.2d 297 (1996).

—Rebuttal Witnesses.

If a witness called in rebuttal is a genuine rebuttal witness, offering evidence to rebut that presented by the defense, not pertaining to evidence the state would be obligated to present in its case in chief, then the state is not required to furnish the name of such a witness. Parker v. State, 268 Ark. 441, 597 S.W.2d 586 (1980).

The prosecuting attorney is not required by subsection (a) of this rule to furnish the defense counsel the names of witnesses he calls in rebuttal to testimony offered by the defendant. Parker v. State, 268 Ark. 441, 597 S.W.2d 586 (1980).

It is not error for the court to permit the state to present witnesses without giving the requested notice, if they were in the nature of rebuttal witnesses. Vasquez v. State, 287 Ark. 468, 701 S.W.2d 357 (1985).

If a witness called in rebuttal by the state is a genuine rebuttal witness, offering evidence to rebut that presented by the defense, not pertaining to evidence the state would be obligated to present in its case in chief, then the state is not required to furnish the name of such witness. Tubbs v. State, 19 Ark. App. 306, 720 S.W.2d 331 (1986).

Rule 17.2. Prosecuting attorney's performance of obligations.

(a) The prosecuting attorney shall perform his obligations under Rule 17.1 as soon as practicable.

(b) The prosecuting attorney may perform these obligations in any manner mutually agreeable to himself and defense counsel or by:

(i) notifying defense counsel that material and information, described in general terms, may be inspected, obtained, tested, copied, recorded or photographed, during specified reasonable times; or

(ii) making available to defense counsel at a time specified such material and information, and suitable facilities and arrangements for inspection, testing, copying, recording or photographing of such material and information.

(c) The prosecuting attorney may impose reasonable conditions, including an appropriate stipulation concerning chain of custody, to protect physical evidence produced under this Article.

Open File Policy. The open file policy of some prosecuting attorneys has received mixed reviews from the Arkansas Supreme Court. Compare Earl v. State, 272 Ark. 5, 612 S.W.2d 98 (1981) with Halfacre v. State, 277 Ark. 168, 639 S.W.2d 734 (1982). See, also, Dumond v. State, 290 Ark. 595, 721 S.W.2d 663 (1986) (dissent of Purtle, J.). The state has been permitted to avoid filing written responses to discovery motions by adopting an open file policy. Halfacre v. State.

CASE NOTES

Failure to Fulfill Obligation.

Even though the prosecution had an open file policy, it had not fulfilled its discovery obligation when defense counsel was required to himself examine all other files in the county maintained by law enforcement officials. Dever v. State, 14 Ark. App. 107, 685 S.W.2d 518 (1985).

The court did not abuse its discretion in failing to find a discovery violation where there was no indication that defense counsel was unaware that the state relied on an open-file policy and there was no assurance given to the trial judge that defense counsel had checked the state's file within the last 60 days prior to trial. Findley v. State, 64 Ark. App. 291, 984 S.W.2d 454 (1998).

When prosecution failed to provide to defendant, before trial, an inculpatory statement, it was not abuse of discretion for the trial court to deny defendant's motion for a new trial; upon introduction to the inculpatory statement at trial, defendant should have asked for a continuance, and defendant failed to preserve any alleged error for review by failing to object contemporaneously. Brooks v. State, 76 Ark. App. 164, 61 S.W.3d 916 (2001).

Harmless Error.

Where the trial court gave the defense a continuance to interview the chief prosecuting witness, even if the prosecutor had failed to supply the requested name of the witness as soon as he might, the granting of such a continuance cured the error rendering it harmless. Hughes v. State, 264 Ark. 723, 574 S.W.2d 888 (1978).

Obligations Met by Prosecution.

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to strike all of the state's witnesses; the state relied on the open-file policy under this rule and defendant made no objections to the state fulfilling its discovery obligations through the open-file policy until the day of trial. Smith v. State, 352 Ark. 92, 98 S.W.3d 433 (2003).

Tests.

While a prosecuting attorney clearly has a duty to disclose all pertinent tests on tangible items pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1, the prosecutor is not required to make certain scientific tests on all materials seized. State v. Pulaski County Circuit Court, 316 Ark. 514, 872 S.W.2d 414 (1994).

Applying the plain language of the Rules of Criminal Procedure, including this rule, Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1 and 19.2, it seemed at first glance that the state's conduct amounted to a violation of the discovery rules, but the Arkansas Supreme Court had interpreted the discovery rules to focus on prejudice to a defendant; appellant wrote the letter to the judge and knew of its existence, and he was unable to show that he was prejudiced by the state's failure to disclose the letter until the state cross-examined him, and in the absence of demonstrable prejudice, the court had to affirm. Smith v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 130, 390 S.W.3d 772 (2012), superseded, 2013 Ark. 364 (2013).

Rule 17.3. Material held by other governmental personnel.

(a) The prosecuting attorney shall use diligent, good faith efforts to obtain material in the possession of other governmental personnel which would be discoverable if in the possession or control of the prosecuting attorney, upon timely request and designation of material or information by defense counsel.

(b) If the prosecuting attorney's efforts are unsuccessful, the court shall issue suitable subpoenas or orders to cause such material to be made available to defense counsel where the material or other governmental personnel are subject to the jurisdiction of the court.

CASE NOTES

In General.

If a prosecutor's office intends to fulfill its discovery obligations by relying upon an open-file policy, it must make every practicable effort to ensure that the information and records contained in the file are complete and that the documents employed at trial are identical to the material available to the defense in the open file. Robinson v. State, 317 Ark. 512, 879 S.W.2d 419 (1994).

No discovery violation was found where: (1) there was no evidence, pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, indicating that certain files defendant sought were in the hands of any state agency or were subject to the jurisdiction of the court, (2) it was impossible to tell from the record precisely what information defendant had sought, and (3) there was no indication that material evidence existed that was required to be turned over to defendant based on due process considerations. Jimenez v. State, 83 Ark. App. 377, 128 S.W.3d 483 (2003).

Failure to Fulfill Obligation.

Even though the prosecution had an open file policy, it had not fulfilled its discovery obligation when defense counsel was required to himself examine all other files in the county maintained by law enforcement officials. Dever v. State, 14 Ark. App. 107, 685 S.W.2d 518 (1985); Bussard v. State, 295 Ark. 72, 747 S.W.2d 71 (1988).

In a speedy trial case, because petitioner had appointed counsel all along in the form of the public defender's office, which could have pursued the remedies of subsection (b) of this rule much earlier than it did, the trial court properly charged petitioner with the 173 days involved in the continuance to produce the discoverable evidence from the state. Doby v. Jefferson County Circuit Court, 350 Ark. 505, 88 S.W.3d 824 (2002).

Defendant's conviction for breaking or entering was proper; given that defendant refused lesser remedies that would have permitted the trial court to determine whether he had been prejudiced, denial of a mistrial was manifestly within the trial court's discretion. Although there was nothing to show that the surveillance video was in fact exculpatory under Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1(d), subsection (a) of this rule, and Ark. R. Crim. P. 19.7, the trial court plainly was ready to grant a continuance and to issue suitable orders to obtain the video recording for defense counsel; it was equally clear that defense counsel declined any remedy other than mistrial. Vilayvanh v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 561 (2012).

Obligation Fulfilled.

Where the evidence was not known to exist in the hands of Arkansas state agencies so that the evidence could be obtained by the prosecution, the prosecution did not violate this rule by not supplying this evidence to defendant pursuant to his discovery requests. Lukach v. State, 310 Ark. 119, 835 S.W.2d 852 (1992).

Preservation for Review.

Appellate court did not address defendant's argument based on this rule, because defendant made a passing argument that the state violated the rule by making no effort to obtain or preserve the tape that was later unable to be found, and this argument was never made before the trial court. Elliott v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 126, 389 S.W.3d 100 (2012).

Rule 17.4. Discretionary disclosures.

(a) The court in its discretion may require disclosure to defense counsel of other relevant material and information upon a showing of materiality to the preparation of the defense.

(b) The court may deny disclosure authorized by this Article if it finds there is a substantial risk to any person of physical harm, intimidation, bribery, economic reprisal, or unnecessary annoyance or embarrassment, resulting from such disclosure, and that the risk outweighs any usefulness of the disclosure to defense counsel.

CASE NOTES

Construction.

This rule does not provide that an accused has a right to take the deposition of a victim; rather, it confers authority on the trial court to require disclosure of material or information not produced under other provisions of this Article. Caldwell v. State, 319 Ark. 243, 891 S.W.2d 42 (1995).

Depositions.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's attempt to take the depositions of the interrogating officers, where the court offered to make the officers available for questioning. Misskelley v. State, 323 Ark. 449, 915 S.W.2d 702 (1996).

No Abuse of Discretion.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motions to compel discovery, to determine if a fair cross section of the community challenge to the jury was required because defendant received most of the information that he requested in his motions to compel, defendant failed to demonstrate that the clerk's office or the State actually possessed the information that he did not receive, and defendant's discovery requests—filed on the eve of trial—were untimely. Jenner v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 26, 615 S.W.3d 752 (2021).

Recording.

Defendant was not entitled to have the results of the searches of his person and vehicle suppressed on the ground that the State failed to preserve and provide to defendant the motor video recording of his encounter with the police because the circuit court found no bad faith on the part of the police in failing to preserve the evidence and the requested sanction was tantamount to dismissal of the charges against defendant. Jackson v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 379, 609 S.W.3d 418 (2020).

State was not required to obtain and to provide defendant a video recording of the search of his home that was made by a film crew for a cable television documentary because the filmmakers were not law enforcement officers, nor were they acting as state agents. King v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 532, 614 S.W.3d 823 (2020).

Privileged Matters.

The psychotherapist-patient privilege preempts the need to discover all admissible evidence. Johnson v. State, 342 Ark. 186, 27 S.W.3d 405 (2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 944, 121 S. Ct. 1408, 149 L. Ed. 2d 350 (2001).

Third-Party Filming of Search.

In a drug trafficking case, where an HBO film crew filmed the officers' search of defendant's home, the circuit court's refusal to order the State to obtain the video footage and identify the filmmakers was not an abuse of discretion where the filmmakers were neither law enforcement officers nor acting as state agents, and the State did not possess the video. Harmon v. State, 2020 Ark. 217, 600 S.W.3d 586 (2020).

State was not required to obtain and to provide defendant a video recording of the search of his home that was made by a film crew for a cable television documentary because the filmmakers were not law enforcement officers, nor were they acting as state agents. King v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 532, 614 S.W.3d 823 (2020).

Unrelated Evidence.

In a capital murder case, circuit court did not err in denying defendant access to evidence regarding general violence in the prison unit where the information was unrelated to his character, record, or other circumstances of the offense. Johnson v. State, 2016 Ark. 156, 489 S.W.3d 668, cert. denied, 580 U.S. 935, 137 S. Ct. 336, 196 L. Ed. 2d 265 (2016).

Rule 17.5. Matters not subject to disclosure.

(a) Work Product. Except as provided in Rule 17.1(a)(i) and (iv), disclosure shall not be required of research or of records, correspondence, reports or memoranda to the extent that they contain the opinions, theories or conclusions of the prosecuting attorney or members of his staff or other state agents.

(b) Informants. Disclosure shall not be required of an informant's identity where his identity is a prosecution secret and a failure to disclose will not infringe upon the constitutional rights of the defendant. This subsection shall not be construed to permit refusal to disclose the identity of witnesses to be produced at any hearing or at trial.

(c) National Security. Disclosure shall not be required where it involves a substantial risk of grave prejudice to national security and a failure to disclose will not infringe upon the constitutional rights of the defendant. This subsection shall not be construed to permit refusal to disclose the identity of witnesses to be produced at any hearing or at trial.

Informants. Rule 17.5(b) serves as notice that circumstances exist under which the informant's identity need not be disclosed.

Where an informant merely supplies information that steers a police investigation to the defendant so that the state's case stands or falls without the informant's testimony, and where the informant was not present at the time of the illegal act charged, the Arkansas Supreme Court has held that it is not error for the state to refuse to disclose the informant's identity. Shackleford v. State, 261 Ark. 721, 551 S.W.2d 205 (1977), relying upon Brothers v. State, 261 Ark. 64, 546 S.W.2d 715 (1977) and West v. State, 255 Ark. 668, 501 S.W.2d 771 (1973). See, also, Cooper v. California, 386 U.S. 58, 17 L.Ed.2d 730 (1967); Parks v. State, 11 Ark. App. 238, 669 S.W.2d 496 (1984).

CASE NOTES

Informants.

By balancing the public interest against the mere possibility that a disclosure of the identity of the informant would help defendant's defense, after considering all the circumstances, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's request for disclosure or in denying cross-examination designed to accomplish the same result. Hicks v. State, 28 Ark. App. 268, 773 S.W.2d 113 (1989).

The general rule is that when an informant is also a witness or a participant to the criminal incident, the identity of the informant should be disclosed, and the burden is placed on the defendant to show the existence of any facts or circumstances which would require the identity of the informant. Brown v. State, 310 Ark. 427, 837 S.W.2d 457 (1992).

Because the appellant failed to present sufficient evidence that the state's failure to identify the informant was not prejudicial to the appellant's defense. Brown v. State, 310 Ark. 427, 837 S.W.2d 457 (1992).

When an informant is also a witness or a participant to the criminal incident, the identity of the informant should be disclosed. Heard v. State, 316 Ark. 731, 876 S.W.2d 231 (1994).

Disclosure of an informant's identity was not required where defendant was arrested for fleeing from police and for being in possession of contraband that was found in his pocket, not for behavior specifically witnessed or participated in by the informant and where the elements of the State's case were proven without the informant's testimony or participation. Miller v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 554, 386 S.W.3d 65 (2011).

Defendant was not charged with any crimes as a result of the controlled buys, and instead he was charged with possession of methamphetamine with purpose to deliver after execution of the search warrant; the informant was not at the execution of the warrant and only provided information that led to its issuance, and thus defendant was not entitled to the identity of and information about the informant. Deloney v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 36, 617 S.W.3d 717 (2021).

Motion to Reveal Informant's Identity.

In a drug case, a court did not err by denying defendant's motion to reveal an informant's identity because an officer's testimony revealed that the informant never actually witnessed defendant possessing or manufacturing drugs; the testimony revealed that the informant witnessed methamphetamine on the houseboat but not while defendant was actually there, and the informant was not present at the time the search warrant was executed. Further, defendant provided no evidence that the informant participated in any criminal activity. Eastin v. State, 370 Ark. 10, 257 S.W.3d 58 (2007).

RULE 18.

DISCLOSURES BY DEFENDANT

Rule

Rule 18.1. The person of the defendant.

Rule 18.2. Medical and scientific reports.

Rule 18.3. Nature of defense.

Rule 18.1. The person of the defendant.

(a) Notwithstanding the initiation of judicial proceedings, and subject to constitutional limitations, a judicial officer may require the defendant to:

- (i) appear in a line-up or show up;
- (ii) speak for identification by witnesses to an offense;
- (iii) be fingerprinted;
- (iv) pose for photographs not involving reenactment of a scene;
- (v) try on articles of clothing;
- (vi) permit the taking of specimens of material under his fingernails;
- (vii) permit the taking of samples of his blood, hair and other materials of his body which involve no unreasonable intrusion thereof;
- (viii) provide specimens of his handwriting; and
- (ix) submit to a reasonable physical or medical inspection of his body.

(b) Whenever the personal appearance of the defendant is required for the foregoing purposes, reasonable notice of the time and place of such appearance shall be given by the prosecuting attorney to the defendant and his counsel. Provision may be made for appearances for such purposes in an order admitting the defendant to bail or providing for his release.

CASE NOTES

Appeals.

The Supreme Court had no jurisdiction to hear the interlocutory appeal under this rule for want of reasonable cause. A defendant does not have any general right to an interlocutory appeal in criminal cases. Butler v. State, 311 Ark. 334, 842 S.W.2d 435 (1992).

Order.

Where the order allowing samples to be taken did not specifically refer to the evidence taken, but the order did refer to the motion which requested these things, subsection (a) of this rule requires a judicial officer to order a defendant to submit to taking samples.

Davasher v. State, 308 Ark. 154, 823 S.W.2d 863, cert. denied, 504 U.S. 976, 112 S. Ct. 2948, 119 L. Ed. 2d 571 (1992).

Pretrial Identification.

A pretrial identification violates the due process clause where there are suggestive elements in the identification procedure that make it all but inevitable that the victim will identify one person as the culprit. Prowell v. State, 324 Ark. 335, 921 S.W.2d 585 (1996), overruled, State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

Even when pretrial identification procedure is impermissibly suggestive, the trial court may determine that under the totality of circumstances the identification was sufficiently reliable for the matter to be submitted to the jury to decide the weight the identification testimony should be given; in determining reliability, the following factors are considered: (1) the prior opportunity of the witness to observe the alleged act; (2) the accuracy of the prior description of the accused; (3) any identification of another person prior to the pretrial identification; (4) the level of certainty demonstrated at the confrontation; (5) the failure of the witness to identify the defendant on a prior occasion; and (6) the lapse of time between the alleged act and the pretrial identification procedure. Prowell v. State, 324 Ark. 335, 921 S.W.2d 585 (1996), overruled, State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

A trial court's decision to allow in-court identifications by two witnesses was not clearly erroneous because the photo spread was not unduly suggestive and defendant was not the only one shown wearing a gold mouthpiece. Bradley v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 714, 370 S.W.3d 263 (2009).

Rule 18.2. Medical and scientific reports.

Subject to constitutional limitations, the trial court may require that the prosecuting attorney be informed of and permitted to inspect and copy or photograph any reports or statements of experts, made in connection with the particular case, including results of physical or mental examinations and of scientific tests, experiments or comparisons.

Review.

The standard of review on imposing sanctions for discovery violations is whether there has been an abuse of discretion. Davasher v. State, 308 Ark. 154, 823 S.W.2d 863, cert. denied, 504 U.S. 976, 112 S. Ct. 2948, 119 L. Ed. 2d 571 (1992); Moore v. State, 323 Ark. 529, 915 S.W.2d 284 (1996).

When there has been a failure to comply with discovery procedures, a trial court is not required to suppress evidence unless prejudice will result. Davasher v. State, 308 Ark. 154, 823 S.W.2d 863, cert. denied, 504 U.S. 976, 112 S. Ct. 2948, 119 L. Ed. 2d 571 (1992); Moore v. State, 323 Ark. 529, 915 S.W.2d 284 (1996).

Right to Counsel.

Although defendant argued on appeal that he was deprived of counsel when his blood was drawn, it was clear that he initially caused the delay in the appointment of counsel by representing to the judge at his probable cause hearing that he had already hired an attorney; defendant cannot decline appointed counsel on the one hand and later claim he was denied the assistance of counsel. Moore v. State, 323 Ark. 529, 915 S.W.2d 284 (1996).

This rule does not give a defendant a right to consult with counsel prior to giving a sample; it merely states that if a defendant has an attorney, notice of the taking of the samples will be given to that attorney. Birmingham v. State, 342 Ark. 95, 27 S.W.3d 351 (2000).

Samples.

A consensual taking of blood does not contravene subdivision (a)(vii) of this rule because the rule does not require a court order when the drawing of blood is voluntary. Mills v. State, 322 Ark. 647, 910 S.W.2d 682 (1995).

cident reconstructionist's employee were confidential, privileged communications that could not be subpoenaed. Holt v. McCastlain, 357 Ark. 455, 182 S.W.3d 112 (2004).

Rule 18.3. Nature of defense.

Subject to constitutional limitations, the prosecuting attorney shall, upon request, be informed as soon as practicable before trial of the nature of any defense which defense counsel intends to use at trial and the names and addresses of persons whom defense counsel intends to call as witnesses in support thereof.

The term “defense” is defined for purposes of the Arkansas Criminal Code by Ark. Stat. Ann. § 41-110(3) (Repl. 1977). In Weaver v. State, 290 Ark. 556, 720 S.W.2d 905 (1986), appellant argued that the court should give meaning to the word “defense” as used in Rule 18.3 by reference to the § 41-110 definition, the Code and the Rules of Criminal Procedure having been written by the same Commission. The court rejected this argument, finding that the term “defense” in Rule 18.3 encompasses a general denial and upholding the trial court’s rejection of appellant’s argument that his witnesses would not testify about a “defense.” The Court upheld the trial court’s refusal to permit two defense witnesses to testify upon a showing that their identities had not been disclosed in response to a timely request for disclosure filed by the state.

CASE NOTES

Affirmative Defenses.

There is no requirement in the criminal law requiring the pleading of affirmative defenses. Sumner v. State, 35 Ark. App. 203, 816 S.W.2d 623 (1991).

Any Defense.

Where defense is a general denial, the phrase “any defense” in this rule does apply. Weaver v. State, 290 Ark. 556, 720 S.W.2d 905 (1986).

Applicability.

This rule applies with equal force to testimony offered in support of a general denial defense and testimony offered in an affirmative defense. Mitchell v. State, 306 Ark. 464, 816 S.W.2d 566 (1991).

Limitation upon Disclosure.

An accused must reveal, upon the state’s request, the nature of any defense which he intends to establish at trial, and the names and addresses of the witnesses who will testify in support of these defenses; therefore, at the in camera hearing, it appears that the accused is not forced to reveal any more of his defense strategy than he is required to do under existing procedural rules. Marion v. State, 267 Ark. 345, 590 S.W.2d 288 (1979).

Notice.

The trial court was incorrect in ruling that the defense should not refer to the word “entrapment” during the trial because even though the defense of entrapment had not been pled, the state acknowledged that it had been put on notice that the defense would be raised. Sumner v. State, 35 Ark. App. 203, 816 S.W.2d 623 (1991).

Refusal to Disclose.

Where court granted prosecutor’s motion under this rule to require defendant to disclose the nature of the defense to be asserted and the names and addresses of persons whom defendant intended to call as witnesses in support thereof and defendant on advice of counsel refused to furnish such information and defendant’s counsel stated that he was not presenting a certain witness because of the court’s ruling and later stated that he had not received the witness’ name until after the court’s order had been made, since court’s order did not require disclosure of the identity of a witness of which defendant at the time was unaware and there was no showing that by the exercise of proper diligence defendant or his attorney could not have discovered the witness or obtained his name, but the witness was not present to testify and no effort was made to subpoena him and no proffer was made, trial court did not err in granting the motion for discovery and precluding testimony of defendant’s witness. Russell v. State, 262 Ark. 447, 559 S.W.2d 7 (1977).

Request Required.

Without a showing that the prosecutor actually requested information regarding defendant’s defense and potential witnesses pursuant to this rule, it was error to sanction defendant for not providing this information to the prosecutor. Watson v. State, 50 Ark. App. 98, 902 S.W.2d 253 (1995).

Witnesses.

Genuine rebuttal witnesses need not be disclosed, for neither the state nor the defense would necessarily know in advance of the need for their testimony. Weaver v. State, 290 Ark. 556, 720 S.W.2d 905 (1986).

Defendant failed to comply with this rule where he failed to disclose the identity of a witness as soon as practicable before trial. Tubbs v. State, 19 Ark. App. 306, 720 S.W.2d 331 (1986).

The trial court did not err in refusing to give defendant the benefit of the rebuttal witness exception to the discovery rule, since defendant knew in advance of the need for the witnesses’ testimony. Mitchell v. State, 306 Ark. 464, 816 S.W.2d 566 (1991).

The defendant is not required to inform the state of the names of rebuttal witnesses until the state's case has been presented, because until that time, the defendant cannot know of witnesses needed for rebuttal. Williams v. State, 338 Ark. 178, 992 S.W.2d 89 (1999).

Where defendant did not identify his alibi witness until the morning of trial, the trial court's exclusion of the witness was proper under Ark. R. Crim. P. 19.7; the state was surprised by the identification of the witness and it would have been unfair to allow defendant to proceed with the witness's testimony. McEwing v. State, 366 Ark. 456, 237 S.W.3d 43 (2006).

District court did not abuse its discretion by limiting defense counsel's questioning of certain state witnesses whom defendant alleged were accomplices because defendant's argument that the accomplice liability of these witnesses was part of the state's burden of proof was a de facto attempt to establish an accomplice defense by circumventing this rule. Boldin v. State, 373 Ark. 295, 283 S.W.3d 565 (2008).

In defendant's trial on charges of capital murder and kidnapping, although the trial court erroneously ruled on the credibility of a proffered witness in holding that the witness would not be permitted to testify at trial, the trial court's decision was nevertheless affirmed on appeal because discovery was a two-way street and it would be unfair to the state under this rule to permit a defense witness who came forward on the morning of trial to testify. Neal v. State, 375 Ark. 389, 291 S.W.3d 160 (2009).

Trial court did not err in excluding a proffered defense witness, where the state filed its discovery motion requesting the names and address of all defense witnesses eight months before trial and submitted its list to the defense at that time, but the defense did not inform the prosecutor about the excluded witness until the day before trial. Hardaway v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 99 (2011).

Circuit court did not err in excluding the testimony of an undisclosed expert witness, given that the proposed testimony would not have qualified as rebuttal evidence because it was being presented to rebut testimony elicited by defendant, not the State. Further, defendant could not establish prejudice, given that counsel failed to proffer the witness's testimony; and even assuming that the witness would have testified to the authenticity of certain time stamps, the exact timing of the events was not material. Moore v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 39, 511 S.W.3d 880 (2017).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to give defendant the benefit of the rebuttal-witness exception to the discovery rule where defendant had planned to use the witnesses in his case-in-chief until the trial court excluded their testimony as a discovery sanction, and defendant did not identify anything about the victim's testimony of which he was unaware or could not have anticipated. Hoyle v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 498, 562 S.W.3d 253 (2018).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in not allowing defense counsel's law partner to testify as a rebuttal witness for defendant and in preventing the partner from testifying under Ark. R. Crim. P. 19.7 because the partner was not a true rebuttal witness, and his name should have been provided to the prosecutor as a potential witness for trial under this rule. Defendant was aware that his cousin allegedly told the partner that defendant was not the person who had fired shots into the vehicle and that she wanted the prosecutor to drop the case against him; defendant would not have been surprised that his cousin would not testify in the same manner that she allegedly recounted events to the partner; and defendant should have been prepared to present the partner as a witness. Lowe v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 231, 575 S.W.3d 589 (2019).

REGULATION OF DISCOVERY

Rule

Rule 19.1. Investigation not to be impeded.

Rule 19.2. Continuing duty to disclose.

Rule 19.3. Custody of materials.

Rule 19.4. Protective orders.

Rule 19.5. Excision.

Rule 19.6. In camera proceedings.

Rule 19.7. Failure to comply: sanctions.

Rule 19.1. Investigation not to be impeded.

Subject to the provisions of Rules 17.5 and 19.4, neither the prosecuting attorney, the defense counsel, nor members of their staffs shall advise persons other than the defendant having relevant material or information to refrain from discussing the case with opposing counsel or from showing opposing counsel any relevant material.

Rule 19.2. Continuing duty to disclose.

If before trial, but subsequent to compliance with these rules, or an order entered pursuant thereto, a party discovers additional material or information comprehended by a previous request to disclose, he shall promptly notify opposing counsel or the other party of the existence of such material or information. If additional material or information is discovered during trial, the party shall notify the court and opposing counsel of the existence of the material or information.

Disclosure of Theory of Case. In Masingill v. State, 7 Ark. App. 90, 644 S.W.2d 614 (1983) the Arkansas Court of Appeals reviewed the conviction of an appellant prosecuted for tampering with physical evidence. Appellant filed a discovery motion under Rule 17.1 prior to trial. At trial a prosecution witness implicated both appellant and a city councilman in the offense. Appellant had no reason to believe that the state's witness would implicate another person in the crime. Appellant attempted to call the councilman as a defense witness, but the court sustained the prosecution's objection on grounds that appellant had not disclosed to the prosecution the name of this witness before trial. The Court did not attempt to fashion a remedy permitting such testimony by an undisclosed defense witness where defendant is clearly surprised by testimony of a prosecution witness. Neither did it characterize it as rebuttal testimony. Instead, the court reversed, finding that,

Under Rule 19.2 . . . the prosecutor had a continuing duty to notify appellant of any additional material or information comprehended by appellant's prior discovery motion. . . . [T]he prosecutor . . . improperly withheld details of the alleged crime which should have been set out in the State's Bill of Particulars.

7 Ark. App. at 93, 644 S.W.2d at 615.

The court also found that the state failed to comply properly with a discovery motion, apparently because it failed to identify its main witness by name. Counsel for appellant knew the witness' identity, however, and attempted to interview her prior to trial, so it appears that reversal stemmed mainly from failure to disclose that there was an uncharged accomplice. The case seems to stand for the proposition that in response to a Rule 17.1 motion the state should disclose the identity of any other participant in the crime if it intends to produce evidence that there was another participant. Failure to do so places the defendant in the position of being unable to present testimony from a witness who would in some cases be both available and eager to dispute the state's evidence. See Speer v. State, 18 Ark. App. 1, 708 S.W.2d 94 (1986), where the court of appeals observed that the Masingill decision was required because "withholding of details of the crime . . . clearly served to frustrate the appellant's defense preparation." 18 Ark. App. at 6, 708 S.W.2d at 96. In addition, see supplementary commentary to Rule 17.1.

CASE NOTES

Appellate Review.

Where defendant argued that state witness should not have been permitted to testify because her name was not included on state's witness list, defendant's failure to abstract parts of the record relating to his discovery requests precluded the appellate court from considering the issue. Clark v. State, 323 Ark. 211, 913 S.W.2d 297 (1996).

Construction.

Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1(a)(ii) mandates that the prosecutor disclose statements made by the defendant; this rule imposes a continuing duty on the prosecutor to disclose this information. Rayford v. State, 326 Ark. 656, 934 S.W.2d 496 (1996).

Failure to Disclose.

Where the attorney for the defendant mother in a child abuse case had filed a motion for discovery prior to trial and had requested all statements that might at any time have been made by the defendant to police officers or others, and the state had responded to the motion without disclosing that the defendant had made a statement to the doctor who treated her child, that if she knew he was going to call the police she would not have taken the child to him, the trial court should have excluded that statement or granted the defendant a continuance since the state failed in its obligation to timely inform the defendant of all information it had been properly requested to furnish. Williams v. State, 267 Ark. 527, 593 S.W.2d 8 (1980).

There was no reversible error arising from the state's failure to provide defendant with the photograph of defendant identified by witness and the names of state witnesses, where the record indicated that the state did provide the photograph after defense counsel requested it at the omnibus hearing before trial, and where, although the state did not disclose in advance of the trial the names of the two witnesses, one witness was listed by defendant as a defense witness and the other was interviewed by defense counsel in advance of his testimony after the court recessed explicitly for that purpose. Martinez v. State, 269 Ark. 231, 601 S.W.2d 576 (1980).

Knowledge of a codefendant's statement to a police officer implicating the defendant in a rape case is imputed to the prosecutor, with Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1 and this rule requiring disclosure to the defendant of the statement; accordingly, where the codefendant's statement was given five months before the rape trial, but the state's attorney only learned of it the day before the trial and mistakenly believed that the defendant's counsel was also aware of it, the trial court should not have permitted use of the undisclosed statement for any purpose. Browning v. State, 274 Ark. 13, 621 S.W.2d 688 (1981).

Where the prosecutor failed to comply properly with defendant's discovery motion requesting names of all state witnesses and also improperly withheld details of the alleged crime which should have been set out in the state's bill of particulars, defendant's conviction for tampering with evidence was reversed. Masingill v. State, 7 Ark. App. 90, 644 S.W.2d 614 (1983).

When the state is charged with knowledge of the existence of a material witness and fails in response to a discovery order to disclose that information, it should not be assumed that in every case a cursory opportunity to interview the witness will cure the omission because there are instances where the demands of a fair trial require the granting of a continuance. Lewis v. State, 286 Ark. 372, 691 S.W.2d 864 (1985).

Where defendant did not object to witness's testimony until witness had taken the stand and answered twenty-four questions, defendant had not objected at the earliest opportunity, and his argument that witness should not have been permitted to testify because state failed to include her name on its witness list was held without merit. Clark v. State, 323 Ark. 211, 913 S.W.2d 297 (1996).

Where the trial court entered at least two discovery orders in which it directed the attorneys to file a list of witnesses, and where the state provided witness lists to defendant on two occasions, but neither list included witness' name, the state violated the discovery rules. Mosley v. State, 323 Ark. 244, 914 S.W.2d 731 (1996).

Despite a proper defense motion expressly seeking disclosure of other act evidence, the State failed to disclose that it had such evidence and the information was not disclosed until the State was cross-examining defendant, at which time it was far too late for him to prepare any kind of defense or response to the allegation; the circuit court's failure to grant defendant's motion for mistrial in the face of the State's misconduct was an abuse of discretion. Honey v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 217, 547 S.W.3d 483 (2018).

No Prejudice.

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a continuance or for a mistrial, for purposes of Ark. R. Crim. P. 19.7; there was only one recording in question and it was simply in three different copies, and defendant declined the digital copy, which contained the same recording that was on a microcassette, and thus defendant was not prejudiced by any alleged failure to disclose under Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1(a)(ii) and this rule. Travis v. State, 371 Ark. 621, 269 S.W.3d 341 (2007).

Applying the plain language of the Rules of Criminal Procedure, including Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1, 17.2, and this rule, it seemed at first glance that the state's conduct amounted to a violation of the discovery rules, but the Arkansas Supreme Court had interpreted the discovery rules to focus on prejudice to a defendant; appellant wrote the letter to the judge and knew of its existence, and he was unable to show that he was prejudiced by the state's failure to disclose the letter until the state cross-examined him, and in the absence of demonstrable prejudice, the court had to affirm. Smith v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 130, 390 S.W.3d 772 (2012), superseded, 2013 Ark. 364 (2013).

Timely Disclosure.

The was no violation of this rule where the prosecutor immediately forwarded a witness' testimony to defense counsel upon his learning of it. Tester v. State, 342 Ark. 549, 30 S.W.3d 99 (2000).

Timely Request.

The state, by filing a timely motion for discovery, discharged its duty and was not required to request an order from the court to compel defendant to comply. Tubbs v. State, 19 Ark. App. 306, 720 S.W.2d 331 (1986).

Witness.

It was not an abuse of discretion to admit the testimony of a late-disclosed prosecution witness or to deny defendant's motion for a continuance because (1) the prosecution's disclosure of the witness and provision of the witness's statement to defense counsel within minutes of contacting the witness, and provision of the witness's criminal history as soon as available, sufficed, and (2) the trial court conducted a proper inquiry into bad faith and determined defense counsel had an opportunity to interview the witness. Duncan v. State, 2018 Ark. 71, 539 S.W.3d 581 (2018).

Rule 19.3. Custody of materials.

Any materials furnished to counsel pursuant to this Article shall remain in his custody and be used only for the purposes of preparation and trial of the case. The court may provide that the material be furnished subject to other reasonable terms and conditions.

Act as a Discovery Device, 1994 Ark. L. Notes 59.

Rule 19.4. Protective orders.

Upon a showing of cause, the court may at any time order that specified disclosures be restricted or deferred, or make such other order as is appropriate, provided that all material and information to which a party is entitled must be disclosed in time to permit his counsel to make beneficial use thereof.

CASE NOTESNondisclosure of Untested Materials.

Where certain objects were seized at the scene of a murder and sent to the state crime lab for testing, but were never tested, and where there was disclosure by the prosecuting attorney of all material and information, including a copy of the state crime lab report, that were within the possession and control of members of his staff or others who had participated in the investigation or evaluation of the case and regularly reported to the prosecutor, there was no violation of the obligation to disclose under Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1, subject to this rule, since these rules do not impose a duty on the state to make tests on all materials seized and the defendant cannot rely upon discovery as a total substitution for his own investigation. Thomerson v. State, 274 Ark. 17, 621 S.W.2d 690 (1981), overruled as stated in Munnerlyn v. State, 2018 Ark. 161, 545 S.W.3d 207 (2018).

Refusal to Sign.

Defendant was asked to acknowledge a protective order and the potential consequences for its violation but he refused to sign; the trial court correctly found that his refusal was the only reason he did not have access to the requested information. Thus, defendant's contention that he was denied discovery of exculpatory material failed. Sharp v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 718, 479 S.W.3d 568 (2015).

Rule 19.5. Excision.

(a) When some parts of certain material are discoverable under the provisions of these rules, and other parts are not discoverable, the discoverable material shall be made available pursuant to the rules after excision of the remainder.

(b) Material excised pursuant to judicial order shall be sealed and preserved in the records of the court to be made available to the appellate court in the event of an appeal.

Rule 19.6. In camera proceedings.

The court may permit any showing of cause in whole or in part for denial or regulation of disclosures to be made in camera. A record shall be made of such proceedings. If the court enters an order granting relief following a showing in camera, the entire record of such showing shall be sealed and preserved in the records of the court, to be made available to the appellate court in the event of an appeal.

CASE NOTESPermissiveness of Rule.

This rule is permissive in nature. Yates v. State, 303 Ark. 79, 794 S.W.2d 133 (1990).

Polygraph Examinations.

Polygraphic examination of defendant qualified as a "scientific test" for the purpose of discovery, and all materials relating thereto should, upon request, have been made available to defendant for his examination, or the examination of his experts, without need or necessity of an in camera proceeding. Yates v. State, 303 Ark. 79, 794 S.W.2d 133 (1990).

Reviewability.

In a sexual abuse/rape case involving a child victim who recanted the initial allegations and later reaffirmed them, the appellate court was unable to reach a decision on the issue of whether the circuit court erred by denying defendant's request for the prosecutor's notes from an interview with the child victim where the circuit court did not conduct an in camera hearing or place the notes under seal for appellate review; thus, the appellate court had to remand for further proceedings. Harper v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 163, 573 S.W.3d 596 (2019).

Cozad v. State, 303 Ark. 137, 792 S.W.2d 606 (1990).

Rule 19.7. Failure to comply: sanctions.

(a) If at any time during the course of the proceedings it is brought to the attention of the court that a party has failed to comply with an applicable discovery rule or with an order issued pursuant thereto, the court may order such party to permit the discovery or inspection of materials not previously disclosed, grant a continuance, prohibit the party from introducing in evidence the material not disclosed, or enter such other order as it deems proper under the circumstances.

(b) Willful violation by counsel or a defendant of an applicable discovery rule or an order issued pursuant thereto may subject counsel or a defendant to appropriate sanctions by the court.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 19.7

Rule 19.7(a) creates four avenues of relief for failure to disclose. On appeal, the appellate court will reverse only on a showing that the trial court abused the discretion explicitly conferred by this rule. See, for example, Lear v.

State, 278 Ark. 70, 643 S.W.2d 550 (1982); Hunter v. State, 8 Ark. App. 283, 653 S.W.2d 159 (1983).

In order to show on appeal that the trial court erred in refusing to grant a continuance, it is necessary to show "such a clear abuse of the court's discretion as to amount to a denial of justice." Heffernan v. State, 278 Ark. 325, 329, 645 S.W.2d 666, 668 (1983).

Waiver of Discovery Rights. If the prosecution fails to disclose information under circumstances that should reasonably alert the defendant that, through inadvertence, incomplete disclosure has been made, the defendant must act promptly or risk being found to have waived discovery. Rubio v. State, 18 Ark. App. 277, 715 S.W.2d 214 (1986). This may be so even if appellant is genuinely, albeit unjustifiably, surprised. But see, Thrasher v. State, 270 Ark. 322, 604 S.W.2d 931 (1980). See, also, Heffernan v. State.

CASE NOTES

Change of Counsel.

The right of discovery is the right of the defendant, not the personal right of his attorney, and where substituted counsel failed to show circumstances that required a repetition of disclosures made to defendant's original attorney, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant a continuance because the prosecuting attorney did not repeat the disclosures. Rowland v. State, 263 Ark. 77, 562 S.W.2d 590 (1978).

Compliance.

If the court's discovery rules are to be meaningful, the rules must be complied with where there has been a timely request, there is no finding of compliance by the state and there is prejudice to the defense. Thomas v. State, 312 Ark. 158, 847 S.W.2d 695 (1993).

Continuance.

Where defendant claimed continuance should have been granted because prosecutor failed to give defense counsel copies of certain lab reports until day of trial and allegedly failed to give defense copy of letter concerning defendant's companion in murder, but evidence showed the prosecutor did not receive report until day of trial and prosecutor claimed copy of letter had been furnished to defense, defendant failed to show that trial court abused its discretion in denying motion for continuance based on asserted failure of prosecutor to comply with court's discovery order. Heffernan v. State, 278 Ark. 325, 645 S.W.2d 666 (1983).

The granting of a continuance rests within the sound discretion of the trial court and the trial court's decision will not be set aside in the absence of abuse. Hunter v. State, 8 Ark. App. 283, 653 S.W.2d 159 (1983).

Where, at a pretrial hearing held five days prior to the jury trial, the state provided a list of the names of five additional possible witnesses after the defendant announced that there would be no plea bargain agreement, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it refused the defendant's motion for a continuance based on the belated disclosure of additional witnesses, where the evidence showed that the prosecuting attorney's office maintained an open file policy, that the names of all the additional witnesses were to be found in the file, that the defendant's counsel had examined the file, and that all of the additional witnesses were residents of the city where the offense occurred. Hunter v. State, 8 Ark. App. 283, 653 S.W.2d 159 (1983).

When the state is charged with knowledge of the existence of a material witness and fails in response to a discovery order to disclose that information, it should not be assumed that in every case a cursory opportunity to interview the witness will cure the omission because there are instances where the demands of a fair trial require the granting of a continuance. Lewis v. State, 286 Ark. 372, 691 S.W.2d 864 (1985).

Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1 imposes a duty on the prosecutor to disclose information in sufficient time to permit the defense to make beneficial use of it; therefore, where the prosecutor failed to disclose the identity of a material witness until the day of the trial, the prosecutor failed to comply with the rule, and the five minutes period granted to the defendant in order to interview the witness was insufficient to cure the prosecutor's noncompliance and a continuance was proper. Lewis v. State, 286 Ark. 372, 691 S.W.2d 864 (1985).

A continuance may be sufficient to cure the state's failure to comply with Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1. Reed v. State, 312 Ark. 82, 847 S.W.2d 34 (1993); Furlough v. State, 314 Ark. 146, 861 S.W.2d 297 (1993).

Where an evidentiary statement made by the defendant had not been disclosed by the prosecution because it did not know of the statement until ten o'clock the previous night, and where, under the plain language of Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1(a)(ii), this evidence should have been provided to defendant because the statement came within the knowledge of the prosecuting attorney after timely discovery requests had been made, the trial court's granting of a one-day continuance was an appropriate remedy. Caldwell v. State, 319 Ark. 243, 891 S.W.2d 42 (1995).

Even assuming state violated its discovery obligations by failing to disclose name of prospective witness, defendant could have requested a continuance. Clark v. State, 323 Ark. 211, 913 S.W.2d 297 (1996).

A 10-day continuance was properly granted to the defendant so that he could interview witnesses who observed the murder victim's earlier battery of another person where the state failed to disclose an offense report related to that incident; the defendant was not entitled to a mistrial, notwithstanding his contention that the prejudice was not cured by the continuance as he was denied the opportunity to use the report in his jury voir dire and in his opening statement, since the defendant already knew of the incident because of his presence at it and intervened to protect the person attacked by the murder victim. Henry v. State, 337 Ark. 310, 989 S.W.2d 894 (1999).

When prosecution failed to provide to defendant, before trial, an inculpatory statement, it was not abuse of discretion for the trial court to deny defendant's motion for a new trial; upon introduction to the inculpatory statement at trial, defendant should have asked for a continuance, and defendant failed to preserve any alleged error for review by failing to object contemporaneously. Brooks v. State, 76 Ark. App. 164, 61 S.W.3d 916 (2001).

Defendant failed to show how he was prejudiced by late discovery and entitled to a continuance where the state never attempted to introduce the fire inspector's report and made no attempt to introduce defendant's cellular telephone records until after defendant himself referenced the records in his direct examination; there could be no prejudice from the admission of the phone records because they were defendant's own records, and the prosecution was not required to disclose information that was already accessible by the defendant. Lowry v. State, 364 Ark. 6, 216 S.W.3d 101 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a continuance. For purposes of this rule; there was only one recording in question and it was simply in three different copies, and defendant declined the digital copy, which contained the same recording that was on a micro-cassette, and thus defendant was not prejudiced by any alleged failure to disclose under Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1(a)(ii) and 19.2. Travis v. State, 371 Ark. 621, 269 S.W.3d 341 (2007).

Only remedy requested by defendant at the trial level for an alleged discovery rule violation by the State was the exclusion of the testimony, and when the trial court denied that relief, at no time did defendant request a continuance; given that he objected on appeal only to the timing of the disclosure, any possible prejudice caused by the State's failure to comply with the pretrial discovery rule would have been cured by a continuance and his failure to request a continuance was fatal to his claim of prejudice. Thomas v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 195, 487 S.W.3d 415 (2016).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a continuance because defendant failed to clearly demonstrate how the granting of a continuance would have altered the outcome of the probation revocation hearing; defendant failed to point to any specific information the continuance would have garnered that would have impacted or changed his cross-examination of the probation officer, and a recess granted for him to interview the officer cured a discovery violation. Arnold v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 22, 540 S.W.3d 298 (2018).

Exclusion of Evidence Not Disclosed.

Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1 requires that the prosecuting attorney disclose to defense counsel, upon timely request, any material and information the prosecutor intends to use in any hearing or at trial but the exclusion of evidence not so disclosed is not mandatory unless there is a likelihood that prejudice will result. Smith v. State, 10 Ark. App. 390, 664 S.W.2d 505 (1984).

Under this rule, the trial court has the discretion to exclude or to admit material not disclosed through discovery, based upon the likelihood that prejudice will result. Beck v. State, 12 Ark. App. 341, 12 Ark. App. 350, 680 S.W.2d 110 (1984).

The exclusion of undisclosed evidence is not the only remedy available under subsection (a) of this rule, the trial court may remedy the failure to disclose by granting appropriate relief, such as the opportunity for defense counsel to interview the undisclosed witness. Burton v. State, 314 Ark. 317, 862 S.W.2d 252 (1993).

In defendant's stalking case, the court erred by allowing the state's expert to testify when he was not disclosed as a witness prior to trial because the state acknowledged that they had identified the expert as a witness well in advance of the trial, but chose not to disclose that to defendant, and defendant did not open the door to the use of the witness in the state's case-in-chief. Lowry v. State, 90 Ark. App. 333, 205 S.W.3d 830, rev'd, 364 Ark. 6, 216 S.W.3d 101 (2005).

Trial court's exclusion of an alibi witness who defendant identified for the first time on the morning of trial was proper as the state was surprised by the identification of the witness and it would have been unfair to allow defendant to proceed with the witness's testimony. McEwing v. State, 366 Ark. 456, 237 S.W.3d 43 (2006).

Trial court did not err in excluding a proffered defense witness, where the state filed its discovery motion requesting the names and address of all defense witnesses eight months before trial and submitted its list to the defense at that time, but the defense did not inform the prosecutor about the excluded witness until the day before trial. Hardaway v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 99 (2011).

Circuit court did not err in excluding the testimony of an undisclosed expert witness, given that the proposed testimony would not have qualified as rebuttal evidence because it was being presented to rebut testimony elicited by defendant, not the State. Further, defendant could not establish prejudice, given that counsel failed to proffer the witness's testimony; and even assuming that the witness would have testified to the authenticity of certain time stamps, the exact timing of the events was not material. Moore v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 39, 511 S.W.3d 880 (2017).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to give defendant the benefit of the rebuttal-witness exception to the discovery rule where defendant had planned to use the witnesses in his case-in-chief until the trial court excluded their testimony as a discovery sanction, and defendant did not identify anything about the victim's testimony of which he was unaware or could not have anticipated. Hoyle v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 498, 562 S.W.3d 253 (2018).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in not allowing defense counsel's law partner to testify as a rebuttal witness for defendant and in preventing the partner from testifying under this rule because the partner was not a true rebuttal witness, and his name should have been provided to the prosecutor as a potential witness for trial under Ark. R. Crim. P. 18.3. Defendant was aware that his cousin allegedly told the partner that defendant was not the person who had fired shots into the vehicle and that she wanted the prosecutor to drop the case against him; defendant would not have been surprised that his cousin would not testify in the same manner that she allegedly recounted events to the partner; and defendant should have been prepared to present the partner as a witness. Lowe v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 231, 575 S.W.3d 589 (2019).

Failure to Request Discovery.

Where police officer in search under search warrant for stolen bottles of whiskey and gin, found a cashbox stolen in a separate burglary under a counter in a night club owned by defendants, and identified it as such immediately, it was not an abuse of discretion by the trial court under this rule to prohibit the prosecution from introducing into evidence the affidavit for the search warrant, the search warrant itself, and the cashbox, even though the existence of those three items had not been disclosed by the state during pretrial discovery, since defendants had not filed a request for discovery, claimed surprise or filed a motion for continuance and since the sheriff's return shows that he left a copy of the warrant listing the cashbox as an item taken with the defendant. Heard v. State, 272 Ark. 140, 612 S.W.2d 312 (1981).

Harmless Error.

Although the State may have committed a discovery violation in the late disclosure of voice-mails to the defense, the defense did not bring the matter to the circuit court's attention until 10 days later on the day the jury had been called and trial was scheduled to begin. Any error in the admission of the voice-mail messages was harmless because the remaining evidence of defendant's guilt was overwhelming and defendant could not show prejudice as the voice-mails were merely cumulative. Farmer v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 148, 571 S.W.3d 78 (2019).

Mistrial.

Where defendant does not seek any of the sanctions provided for in this rule, such as a continuance, choosing instead to ask only for a mistrial, the most extreme recourse open to a trial court, a mistrial is to be avoided except where the fundamental fairness of the trial itself is at stake. Snell v. State, 290 Ark. 503, 721 S.W.2d 628 (1986), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 872, 108 S. Ct. 202, 98 L. Ed. 2d 153 (1987).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial. For purposes of this rule; there was only one recording in question and it was simply in three different copies, and defendant declined the digital copy, which contained the same recording that was on a microcassette, and thus defendant was not prejudiced by any alleged failure to disclose under Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1(a)(ii) and 19.2. Travis v. State, 371 Ark. 621, 269 S.W.3d 341 (2007).

Defendant's conviction for breaking or entering was proper; given that defendant refused lesser remedies that would have permitted the trial court to determine whether he had been prejudiced, denial of a mistrial was manifestly within the trial court's discretion. Although there was nothing to show that the surveillance video was in fact exculpatory under Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1(d), 17.3(a), and this rule, the trial court plainly was ready to grant a continuance and to issue suitable orders to obtain the video recording for defense counsel; it was equally clear that defense counsel declined any remedy other than mistrial. Vilayvanh v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 561 (2012).

Even assuming the State's failure to disclose the social media photo to the defense constituted a violation of the rules of discovery, the judgment was affirmed because defendant sought only the drastic remedy of a mistrial rather than a less extreme remedy under this rule that might have cured any resulting prejudice. Blanks v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 495, 562 S.W.3d 865 (2018).

Objection by Defendant.

Where the defendant's counsel discovered three days before trial that he had not received information requested from prosecutor under discovery order, his duty to come forward as soon as possible with a request to obtain the information was not as great as the duty of the prosecuting attorney to furnish the information as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1 and the court was not authorized to overrule the defendant's objection to the prosecuting attorney's complete failure to produce the evidence as required by the rule and the order of the court; under the circumstances it was improper to force the defendant into a joint trial without the benefit of any of the information which had been sought through discovery. Thrasher v. State, 270 Ark. 322, 604 S.W.2d 931 (1980).

Prejudice.

Whether defendant was prejudiced by the trial court's refusal to grant her request for a continuance after its decision to admit the luminol test results was evident from the state's announced intention to nol pros its case when the trial court had earlier ruled the luminol test results inadmissible. Thomas v. State, 312 Ark. 158, 847 S.W.2d 695 (1993).

The key in determining if a reversible discovery violation exists under subsection (a) of this rule is whether the defendant was prejudiced by the prosecutor's failure to disclose. Burton v. State, 314 Ark. 317, 862 S.W.2d 252 (1993).

Although the state clearly violated the letter of this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1(d), the defendant was not prejudiced where the court granted time so that the defense could interview the witness whose identity was improperly withheld. Mills v. State, 322 Ark. 647, 910 S.W.2d 682 (1995).

Recorded Transcript.

In prosecution for robbery, defendant was not only entitled to the written transcription prepared by the state from the recorded statements, but was entitled to discover the tapes not only because the tapes represented the best evidence, but without the tapes, defendant had no way of comparing the transcription in order to determine if the transcription was a correct reproduction of the recordings, for the statement as well as the tapes would have been most helpful to defendant in his cross-examination of state's witnesses. Williamson v. State, 263 Ark. 401, 565 S.W.2d 415 (1978).

Sanctions.

The prosecution's delay in listing the former girlfriend of a defendant in a capital murder case as a witness, the delay in affording that defendant an interview with her, and the presence of FBI agents at the interview, did not violate the disclosure requirements of Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.1 since Rule 17.1 only allows a criminal defendant the opportunity to discover the state's testimony prior to trial, but does not create a substitute for his own investigation; any delay was cured by granting the interview as a permissible sanction under subsection (a) of this rule. Renton v. State, 274 Ark. 87, 622 S.W.2d 171 (1981).

The prosecutor's admitted oversight in neglecting to inform defense counsel of a statement by the defendant to the FBI agents who arrested him that the agents were lucky because they "should have been hurt" was not sufficient to cause suppression of the statement under subsection (a) of this rule, since suppression is based upon a showing of prejudice or abuse of discretion, which was not shown by the defendant's version of the statement ("I am glad nobody got hurt") that at best was susceptible of similar inferences and at worst, equivocal. Renton v. State, 274 Ark. 87, 622 S.W.2d 171 (1981).

A trial court is not required under this rule to prohibit the introduction of evidence where there has been a failure to comply with discovery procedures, unless there is a likelihood that prejudice will result. Fisk v. State, 5 Ark. App. 5, 631 S.W.2d 626 (1982).

It is within the trial court's discretion which sanction to employ. Reed v. State, 312 Ark. 82, 847 S.W.2d 34 (1993).

It is within the trial court's discretion which subsection (a) of this rule sanction to employ. Furlough v. State, 314 Ark. 146, 861 S.W.2d 297 (1993).

Trial court did not err by excluding the testimony of a defense expert witness because of an alleged discovery violation as defense counsel failed to properly prepare the witness's findings and give them to the state well in advance of the trial so that the state could prepare its cross-examination and any rebuttal witness; the trial court correctly noted that the witness's findings did not provide anything more than common knowledge where, in two exhibits, the witness stated that she claimed that an interviewer led the child victims with her questions and the expert failed to suggest how she would have conducted the interviews of the victims. White v. State, 367 Ark. 595, 242 S.W.3d 240 (2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 904, 127 S. Ct. 2114, 167 L. Ed. 2d 815 (2007).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the testimony of defendant's wife due to defendant's failure to include her name on the witness list for voir dire; the circuit court stated that the discovery order was necessary so the jury could be questioned on conflicts, and the circuit court also pointed out that it had enforced the order against the State and had excluded one of its witnesses. Torres-Garcia v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 174 (2021).

Sanctions Not Imposed.

Trial court in capital murder prosecution did not err in admitting testimony by officer that when he first approached defendant at the scene of murder defendant stated: "Don't shoot, I give up," where although the statement was not provided in response to motion for discovery, the prosecutor contended the state itself did not know the statement had been made until revealed in the testimony at trial and there was no evidence that the state deliberately avoided obtaining this information in order to have it presented at the trial. Henry v. State, 278 Ark. 478, 647 S.W.2d 419, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 835, 104 S. Ct. 121, 78 L. Ed. 2d 119 (1983).

Defendant was not entitled to have the results of the searches of his person and vehicle suppressed on the ground that the State failed to preserve and provide to defendant the motor video recording of his encounter with the police because the circuit court found no bad faith on the part of the police in failing to preserve the evidence and the requested sanction was tantamount to dismissal of the charges against defendant. Jackson v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 379, 609 S.W.3d 418 (2020).

Waiver.

Failure to object to the admission of evidence at trial, which was illegally withheld during discovery, waives the provisions of this rule. Brenneman v. State, 264 Ark. 460, 573 S.W.2d 47 (1978), cert. denied, 442 U.S. 931, 99 S. Ct. 2863, 61 L. Ed. 2d 299 (1979).

RULE 20.

PROCEDURE BEFORE TRIAL: OMNIBUS HEARING

Rule

Rule 20.1. General procedural requirements: policy statement.

Rule 20.2. Setting of omnibus hearing.

Rule 20.3. Omnibus hearing.

Rule 20.4. Pretrial conference.

Rule 20.1. General procedural requirements: policy statement.

(a) In all criminal cases, procedures prior to trial should reflect recognition of the possible need for the following three (3) stages:

(i) an exploratory stage, initiated by counsel and conducted without court supervision to implement discovery required or authorized under these rules;

(ii) an omnibus stage, supervised by the trial court and requiring court appearance when necessary;

(iii) a trial planning stage, requiring pretrial conferences when necessary.

(b) These stages should be adapted to the needs of the particular case and may be modified or eliminated as appropriate.

Rule 20.2. Setting of omnibus hearing.

(a) If a plea of guilty is not entered at the time the defendant is first called upon to plead by a court having jurisdiction to try the defendant, the court may set a time for an omnibus hearing.

(b) In determining the date for the omnibus hearing the court shall allow counsel sufficient time:

- (i) to initiate and complete discovery required or authorized under these rules;
- (ii) to conduct further investigation necessary to the defendant's case; and
- (iii) to continue plea discussions.

Rule 20.3. Omnibus hearing.

(a) At the omnibus hearing, the trial court on its own initiative shall:

(i) ensure that standards regarding provision of counsel have been complied with;

(ii) ascertain whether the parties have completed the discovery required in Rule 17.1, and if not, make orders appropriate to expedite completion;

(iii) ascertain whether there are requests for additional disclosures under Rules 17.3, 17.4, 18.2, and 18.3;

(iv) make rulings on any motions, demurrers or other requests then pending, and ascertain whether any additional motions, demurrers or requests will be made at the hearing or continuations thereof;

(v) ascertain whether there are any procedural or constitutional issues which should be considered;

(vi) upon agreement of counsel, or upon a finding that the trial is likely to be protracted or otherwise unusually complicated, set a time for a pretrial conference; and

(vii) permit a defendant to change his plea.

(b) Unless the court otherwise directs, all motions, demurrers and other requests prior to trial should be reserved for the omnibus hearing and presented orally. All issues presented at the omnibus hearing may be raised without prior notice either by counsel or by the court. If discovery, investigation, preparation, or evidentiary hearing, or a formal presentation is necessary for a fair determination of any issue, the omnibus hearing should be continued until all matters are properly disposed of.

(c) Any pretrial motion, request or issue which is not raised at the omnibus hearing shall be deemed waived, unless the party concerned did not have the information necessary to make the motion or request or raise the issue.

(d) Stipulations by any party or his counsel shall be binding upon the parties at trial unless set aside or modified by the court in the interests of justice.

(e) A verbatim record or comprehensive summary of the omnibus hearing shall be made and preserved. This record shall include the disclosures made, all rulings and orders of the court, stipulations of the parties, and an identification of other matters determined or pending.

Rule 20.4. Pretrial conference.

(a) Whenever a trial is likely to be protracted or unusually complicated, or upon request by or agreement of counsel, the trial court, whether or not an omnibus hearing has been held, may hold one (1) or more pretrial conferences with trial counsel present to consider such matters as will promote a fair and expeditious trial. Matters which might usefully be considered include, but are not limited to:

- (i) stipulations as to facts about which there is no dispute;

(ii) marking for identification various documents and other exhibits of the parties;

(iii) waivers of foundation as to such documents;

(iv) excision from admissible statements of material prejudicial to a codefendant;

(v) severance of defendants or offenses;

(vi) seating arrangements for defendant and counsel;

(vii) use of jurors and questionnaires;

(viii) number and use of peremptory challenges;

(ix) procedure on objections where there are multiple counsel;

(x) order of presentation of evidence and arguments where there are multiple defendants;

(xi) order of cross-examination where there are multiple defendants; and

(xii) temporary absence of defense counsel during trial.

(b) Pretrial conferences should be recorded. At the conclusion of the conference a memorandum of the matters agreed upon should be signed by counsel, approved by the court, and filed. Such memorandum should be binding upon the parties at trial, on appeal and in post-conviction proceedings unless set aside or modified by the court in the interests of justice. However, admissions of fact should bind a defendant only if they are included in the pretrial order and are signed by him and his counsel.

JOINDER OF OFFENSES AND DEFENDANTS

- Rule 21.3. Failure to join related offenses.

Commentary to Article VI

Rules 21 through 23 are calculated to promote expeditious disposition of criminal cases without, in the process, causing undue strain on prosecutorial or judicial resources or, of course, prejudice to defendants. The language of the rules closely tracks that of the ABA Standards relating to Joinder and Severance, here cited Standards, Joinder and Severance.

In concept and practice, joinder has traditionally enjoyed popularity among prosecutors, courts, and scholars in as much as it produces savings of time, money and effort.

As pointed out by Standards, Joinder and Severance, "[s]everance, on the other hand, is typically sought on the ground that a unified disposition of several charges or several defendants would put those proceeded against at an unfair disadvantage, due to confusion of law and evidence by the trier of fact and the 'smear' effect such confusion can produce." Id. at 1.

It is felt that the following rules treat the subject matter at hand with a specificity not attended by unwarranted narrowness, and that proper recognition and protection is accorded the legitimate concerns of all parties. Particularly, it should be noted that the following rules do not unreasonably restrict a trial court's authority to exercise discretion for the purpose of accommodating reason and justice with the facts of particular cases.

Rule 21 is concerned with joinder of both offenses and defendants. Present Arkansas statutory authority respecting joinder of offenses is found in Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 43-1009, 43-1010 (Repl. 1964). The latter provision is a very narrowly drawn statute which limits offenses which may be joined to certain groups of crimes identified therein.

Rules 21.1 and 21.2 provide the prosecution with broad latitude to effect joinder absent objection by defendant and as such demarcate the limits of permissible joinder.

Rule 21.1 allows joinder of offenses based on the same conduct or on acts which are parts of a single scheme or plan. In addition, the provision is uncommonly broad in that it permits, without requiring, joinder of offenses of the same or similar character whether or not they were committed as a part of a common scheme or plan. Rule 21.1 will replace §§ 43-1009, 43-1010 (Repl. 1964).

Rule 21.2 treats joinder of defendants with the liberality characterizing Rule 21.1. For example, defendants alleged to have committed different offenses can be jointly indicted or informed against and tried, although the offenses charged were not part of a common scheme or plan, if the offenses were so intimately connected respecting time, place, and occasion that it would be difficult to separate proof of one from proof of the other.

It should be borne in mind, of course, that Rules 21.1 and 21.2 are "permissive" in nature and do not withdraw prosecutorial discretion as to when to seek joinder. As the introductory comments to Standards, Joinder and Severance, note, "[i]t must be emphasized . . . that [Rules 21.1 and 21.2] state the outer limits of joinder, that is, what the prosecutor may do absent any objection from a defendant. Such joinder is not required of the prosecutor, nor is there any assurance that such joinder would always withstand a motion for severance." Standards, Joinder and Severance at 3.

The last of Rules 21-21.3 is designed to provide relief for a defendant faced with the prospect of a number of trials involving related offenses. This rule is without counterpart in present Arkansas law and permits a defendant in such circumstances to compel joinder if joinder would not work to defeat the ends of justice. The provisions of this rule are also designed to encompass a situation in which a defendant, having been tried for one offense, finds himself confronted with a related charge of which he was unaware prior to the other trial. Again, if the ends of justice would not be defeated — for example, because the prosecuting attorney does not have sufficient evidence to warrant trying the offense — the defendant is entitled to a dismissal of the charge.

Finally, this rule makes it clear that the entry of a plea of guilty or nolo contendere to one offense does not bar subsequent prosecution for a related offense.

Severance of both offenses and defendants is dealt with in Rule 22. Rule 22.1 is concerned with the concept of timeliness, waiver, and double jeopardy in the severance context. These are problems of procedure unique to the motion for severance. The rule seeks to eliminate double jeopardy problems by providing that a successful motion to sever made by defendant during a trial will not bar a subsequent prosecution of that defendant for the offense served.

Arkansas statutory authority pertaining to the subject of Rule 22.1 is found at Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 43-1213, 43-1216 (Repl. 1964). These provisions indicate that at present the appropriate way of raising the issue of misjoinder is by demurrer. Harris v. State, 140 Ark. 46, 215 S.W. 620 (1919), overruling Gramlich v. State, 135 Ark. 243, 204 S.W. 848 (1918); Malone v. State, 202 Ark. 796, 152 S.W.2d 1019 (1941). Under 22.1 misjoinder must be attacked by "motion to sever."

Rule 22.2(a) embodies the Commission's recognition of the grave risk of prejudice from joint disposition of unrelated charges and, accordingly, provides a defendant with an absolute right to severance of offenses joined solely on the ground that they are of the same or similar character.

Rule 22.2 (b) permits severance if fairness so requires.

Rule 22.3 deals with the problematical situation created by the proffer as evidence of an out-of-court statement referring to a defendant but not admissible against him. As is the case with Rule 22.2, the criteria for severance include distinctions between rulings before and during trial.

Rule 22.4 comes to grips with the knotty problem arising when the prosecution's case discloses insufficient evidence to support the allegation upon which the defendants were initially joined for trial. Again fairness is the touchstone supplied by the rule.

Finally, Rule 23 simply constitutes a recognition of the authority of a court to consolidate or sever offenses and defendants on its own motion.

Rule 21.1. Joinder of offenses.

Two (2) or more offenses may be joined in one (1) information or indictment with each offense stated in a separate count, when the offenses, whether felonies or misdemeanors or both:

- (a) are of the same or similar character, even if not part of a single scheme or plan; or
- (b) are based on the same conduct or on a series of acts connected together or constituting parts of a single scheme or plan.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Comment to Rule 21.1

Status Offenses Joined With Other Offenses. The Arkansas Court of Appeals has held that a defendant charged with burglary, attempted theft, and with being a felon in possession of a firearm under Rule 21 is not entitled to a severance under Rule 22.1(a), which accords the defendant a right to a severance of offenses joined solely on grounds that they are of "the same or similar character." Parker v. State, 18 Ark. App. 252, 715 S.W.2d 210 (1986). The Court then pointed out that appellant was arrested with a gun as he fled from the scene of a burglary and that "if the offenses had been severed, it would have required two trials and the State would have had to call the same witnesses to testify to the same facts." 18 Ark. App. at 256, 715 S.W.2d at 212.

Parker may be seen as indicating that under these circumstances, when status offenses such as felon in possession of a firearm are joined with offenses such as burglary or theft, for purposes of ruling on a motion for severance the joinder will be treated as one permitted by Rule 21.1(b). See, also, Guy v. State, 282 Ark. 424, 668 S.W.2d 952 (1984); Rubio v. State, 18 Ark. App. 277, 715 S.W.2d 214 (1986).

"Single Scheme or Plan" vs. "Criminal Episode." The Arkansas Supreme Court has differentiated between a "single scheme or plan" and a "criminal episode." In Ruiz v. State, 273 Ark. 94, 617 S.W.2d 6, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1093, 70 L.Ed.2d 631 (1981), appellants argued that two murders were not part of a single scheme or plan. The Supreme Court upheld the trial court's refusal to sever the offenses, stating: "They argue that the offenses are not part of a single scheme or plan. That assertion is debatable, but whether they were part of a single plan or simply random, disconnected crimes, is beside the point, because they constitute one criminal episode and when a series of acts are connected, that is enough to give the state a right to join them in a single information." 273 Ark. at 99, 617 S.W.2d at 9.

One who burglarizes an office on January 1 and a home on February 1 may be charged in the same information with both offenses, since they are "of similar character." He would be entitled to a severance under Rule 22.2(a), however, unless the offenses were part of a single scheme or plan or criminal episode. Even though roughly the same type of conduct might be argued to be involved in both burglaries, justifying joinder under Rule 21.1(b), the term "same conduct" in Rule 21.1(b) was probably intended to be read literally to refer to contemporaneous events and to permit joinder in a situation where, for example, a defendant robs three persons simultaneously.

Permissible Joinder (Rule 21.1) vs. Right to Severance (Rule 22.2). In Parker v. State, 18 Ark. App. 252, 715 S.W.2d 210 (1986), the court of appeals had the following to say about joinder and severance: "A defendant has a right to a severance whenever two or more offenses have been joined solely on the grounds that they are of the same or similar character. . . . Otherwise, granting or refusing a severance is within the discretion of the trial court." 18 Ark. App. at 256, 715 S.W.2d at 212.

Parker should not be read to say that any two offenses may be joined on the whim of the prosecutor or that a defendant has a right to a severance only where offenses have been joined solely on grounds that they are of the same or similar character. Rule 21.1 establishes the outer boundaries of joinder. Where offenses that are proposed to be joined cannot be brought within any standard established by the rule, they should not be joined and, if joined, should be severed on motion of the defendant. On the other hand, Rule 22.2, authorizing severances, appears to address only situations where joinder was originally made within Rule 21.1 limits, permitting severances of offenses permissibly joined under Rule 21 solely on grounds of "same or similar character," but not explicitly conferring a right to severance where not even a tenuous "same or similar character" connection can be shown. Rule 22.2 could thus be read to allow the trial court to permit joinder of a January 1 rape and a June 1 theft upon a finding that such joinder would "promote a fair determination of the defendant's guilt" under Rule 22.2(b)(i). But since such a joinder is beyond the bounds permitted by Rule 21.1, a defendant should be accorded an absolute right to severance under these circumstances. See supplementary commentary to Rule 22.2.

History of Rule. It should be mentioned that the source of this Rule, the American Bar Association's Standards, Joinder and Severance, has an interesting history post-dating the Arkansas Supreme Court's adoption of the Standards language. The text of Rule 21 was drawn from Standards, Joinder and Severance approved on August 6, 1968 by the Association's House of Delegates. See original commentary to Rule 21. Subsequently, on August 9, 1978, the House of Delegates approved modifications to both joinder and severance standards, so unlimited joinder of offenses and absolute rights of severance of unrelated offenses are now permitted. ABA Standards for Criminal Justice, 2d Ed., Chapter 13, Little & Brown Co. (1986). The amendments have been explained as follows: "The unlimited joinder of unrelated offenses has been authorized for the occasional case when the prosecutor and the defendant agree that a joint trial of the offenses is desirable. In most cases, however, joint trials of unrelated offenses are difficult to justify because the defendant suffers all of the disadvantages of a joint trial while the prosecutor achieves few, if any, of the benefits of a joint trial. . . . The revised standard has adopted the unlimited joinder of unrelated offenses subject to the coextensive right to severance." Id. at 13.30-13.31.

The relationship between Rule 21 and statutes contemporaneously adopted to define the scope of the former jeopardy defense is examined in the commentary to Ark. Stat. Ann. § 41-107 (Repl. 1977). But see commentary to Rule 21.3.

CASE NOTES

In General.

This joinder rule is much broader than the prior statutes, A.S.A. §§ 43-1009 and 43-1020, and is designed to establish the outer boundaries of joinder of offenses; however, the liberal joinder rule is accompanied by a limiting severance rule that recognizes the grave risk of prejudice from joint disposition of unrelated charges and, accordingly, provides a defendant with an absolute right to a severance of offenses joined solely on the ground that they are of same or similar character. Clay v. State, 318 Ark. 550, 886 S.W.2d 608 (1994).

This rule is permissive and not mandatory; thus, once defendant was charged in the Sixth Judicial District, the trial court possessed no power to transfer the case outside the district. State v. Brooks, 360 Ark. 499, 202 S.W.3d 508 (2005).

Conspiracy to Commit Crime.

Where in arson charge in indictment it was alleged that the defendant and his codefendant burned the house and the burning of the house was alleged to be a part of the conspiracy charged, under the Rules of Criminal Procedure which were in effect at the time of defendant's trial, the court had the authority to consolidate the two indictments of arson and conspiracy to commit arson subject to defendant's right to move for a severance. Owen v. State, 263 Ark. 493, 565 S.W.2d 607 (1978).

Continuous Criminal Episode.

Where the proof showed that defendant, a stranger in town with no means of transportation, had committed a serious felony by shooting first victim and the judge and the jury could infer that he took flight, flagged down a passing driver, and held him up at gunpoint in order to flee in the driver's truck, leaving the driver out in the country without clothing, trial court did not err in denying motion for separate trials of battery and robbery charges since offenses were part of a continuous criminal episode. Jones v. State, 282 Ark. 56, 665 S.W.2d 876 (1984).

In a prosecution for two counts of rape, the offenses were part of a single criminal episode, where the victims were picked up together, ordered simultaneously to remove their clothing, driven together to a remote location where they were both raped and otherwise abused until one escaped. Johnson v. State, 290 Ark. 166, 717 S.W.2d 805 (1986).

Prosecutor's Discretion.

Joinder is not required of a prosecutor, nor is there any assurance that such joinder will always withstand a motion for severance. Lockhart v. State, 314 Ark. 394, 862 S.W.2d 265 (1993).

Right to Severance.

A trial court's decision to deny a motion for severance is discretionary. Easter v. State, 306 Ark. 517, 815 S.W.2d 391 (1989).

Where defendant was accused of committing five unconnected sexual assaults against five different girls, the alleged offenses occurred over a twelve-month period, involved different charges, and were committed in different manners, against different victims, and at different locations, the charges should not have been consolidated for trial; since these five crimes were of a similar character, but were not part of a single scheme or plan, the defendant had a right to a severance of the offenses. Clay v. State, 318 Ark. 550, 886 S.W.2d 608 (1994).

A defendant has an absolute right to a severance of offenses joined solely on the ground that they are of same or similar character but not in a case where the offenses were a part of a common scheme or plan. Passley v. State, 323 Ark. 301, 915 S.W.2d 248 (1996).

Series of Connected Acts.

Where defendants, who were escaped convicts, abducted three men and placed two in the trunk of a car, fatally shooting one and critically wounding the other, then had the third man guide them through wooded areas and killed him in another county, the two murders were a single criminal episode or series of connected acts sufficient to permit joinder of the offenses under this rule, since the second man's murder was deferred only until he could guide them through unfamiliar territory. Thus the charges were not joined solely on the ground that they were of the same or similar character and defendants did not have the right under Ark. R. Crim. P. 22.2, to a severance of the offenses. Ruiz v. State, 273 Ark. 94, 617 S.W.2d 6, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1093, 102 S. Ct. 659, 70 L. Ed. 2d 631 (1981).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion to sever the offenses where the two crimes were committed within one hour of each other and were factually intertwined. Gillie v. State, 305 Ark. 296, 808 S.W.2d 320 (1991).

Two or more criminal offenses are based on a series of acts connected together when the offenses occurred close together in time and place. Easter v. State, 306 Ark. 517, 815 S.W.2d 391 (1989).

Court properly granted state's motion to consolidate the offenses of capital murder, kidnapping, aggravated robbery, and attempted capital murder as the officer was shot during a shootout between defendant and law enforcement where defendant participated in a previous murder, fled, armed himself, and used weapons in an attempt to evade capture as law enforcement closed in and tried to execute a search warrant. Holsombach v. State, 368 Ark. 415, 246 S.W.3d 871 (2007).

Rule 21.2. Joinder of defendants.

Two (2) or more defendants may be joined in one (1) information or indictment

(a) when each of the defendants is charged with accountability for each offense included; or

(b) when each of the defendants is charged with conspiracy and some of the defendants are also charged with one (1) or more offenses alleged to be in furtherance of the conspiracy; or

(c) when, even if conspiracy is not charged and all of the defendants are not charged in each count, it is alleged that the several offenses charged:

(i) were part of a common scheme or plan; or

(ii) were so closely connected in respect to time, place, and occasion that it would be difficult to separate proof of one (1) charge from proof of others.

CASE NOTES

Joinder Upheld.

Joint trial of capital murder defendants upheld where joint trial was lengthy, lasting seventeen days, and perhaps separate trials would have taken twice as long and required twice as many jurors; the evidence was not difficult for the jury to segregate; the evidence was not significantly stronger against one defendant than the other; the testimony of one did not compel the other to testify; there was no significant disparity in criminal records of the defendants; and the trial judge thought the jurors could distinguish the evidence and apply the law intelligently to each offense and to each defendant. Echols v. State, 326 Ark. 917, 936 S.W.2d 509 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1244, 117 S. Ct. 1853, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1055 (1997).

Court properly granted state's motion to consolidate the offenses of capital murder, kidnapping, aggravated robbery, and attempted capital murder as the officer was shot during a shootout between defendant and law enforcement where defendant participated in a previous murder, fled, armed himself, and used weapons in an attempt to evade capture as law enforcement closed in and tried to execute a search warrant. Holsombach v. State, 368 Ark. 415, 246 S.W.3d 871 (2007).

Sentencing.

A joint sentencing trial does not, per se, deprive any defendant of the right to individualized sentencing; where the evidence relating to the separate defendants is readily identifiable, and the jury is properly instructed, there is no problem. Ruiz v. Norris, 868 F. Supp. 1471 (E.D. Ark. 1994), aff'd, 71 F.3d 1404 (8th Cir. 1995).

Rule 21.3. Failure to join related offenses.

(a) Two (2) or more offenses are related offenses for the purposes of this rule if they are within the jurisdiction and venue of the same court and are based on the same conduct or arise from the same criminal episode.

(b) When a defendant has been charged with two (2) or more related offenses, his timely motion to join them for trial shall be granted unless the court determines that because the prosecuting attorney does not have sufficient evidence to warrant trying some of the offenses at that time, or for some other reason, the ends of justice would be defeated if the motion is granted. A defendant's failure to so move constitutes a waiver of any right of joinder as to related offenses with which the defendant knew he was charged.

(c) A defendant who has been tried for one (1) offense may thereafter move to dismiss a charge for a related offense, unless a motion for joinder of these offenses was previously denied or the right of joinder was waived as provided in subsection (b). The motion to dismiss must be made prior to the second trial, and shall be granted unless the court determines that because the prosecuting attorney did not have sufficient evidence to warrant trying this offense at the time of the first trial, or for some other reason, the ends of justice would be defeated if the motion were granted.

(d) Entry of a plea of guilty or nolo contendere to one (1) offense does not bar the subsequent prosecution of a related offense. A defendant may enter a plea of guilty or nolo contendere on the basis of a plea agreement in which the prosecuting attorney agrees to seek or not to oppose dismissal of other related charges or not to prosecute other potential related charges.

The Arkansas Supreme Court has apparently held that Rule 21.3 has constitutional dimensions based on the double jeopardy prohibitions of the United States and Arkansas Constitutions. Cozzaglio v. State, 289 Ark. 33, 709 S.W.2d 70 (1986). In Cozzaglio, appellant kidnapped a teenager in Washington County and drove her to Madison County, raping her during and after the journey. The court found that "the acts or effects" (Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-1414 (Re A. 1977)) of rape occurred in both counties and went on to hold that appellant's motion under Rule 21.3 to join the offenses for a single trial in Washington County should have been granted. The court affirmed a Washington County kidnapping conviction, but reversed a Madison County rape conviction. If one assumes that venue for the rape charge was properly in Washington County, elements of the offense of rape having occurred in both counties, then the Cozzaglio decision is correct. As explained by the court: Cozzaglio's argument that the trials should have been joined under A.R.Cr.P. Rule 21.3 does have merit. . . . This rule has three requirements: the offenses must be within the jurisdiction of the same court, arise from the same conduct or criminal episode, and a timely motion to join must be made. All three requirements were met in this case and when that motion to join was made in Washington County, the trial judge should have granted it. Necessarily that means the second trial was barred; the conviction of rape must be reversed and the charged dismissed. See People v. White, 390 Mich. 245, 212 N.W.2d 222 (1973). Cozzaglio could have been tried in either county for both offenses, but not separately on separate charges. 289 Ark. at 38-39, 709 S.W.2d at 72-73. See, also, Ellis v. State, 291 Ark. 72; 722 S.W.2d 575 (1987). Compare Gardner v. State, 263 Ark. 739, 569 S.W.2d 74 (1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 911, 59 L. Ed. 2d 460 (1979) (if elements of a crime are committed in different jurisdictions, any state in which an essential part of the crime occurs may take jurisdiction).

Cozzaglio has been followed in Crook v. State, 290 Ark. 163, 717 S.W.2d 803 (1986). Appellant was arrested in a stolen car with a firearm and cocaine in his possession in June 1984. He was charged in August 1984 with theft by receiving and with being a felon in possession of a firearm. Because of a clerical error, he was not charged with possession of cocaine. In February 1985, the clerical error was detected and he was charged with possession of cocaine, but he was not notified that the information had been amended. In July he was tried and convicted by a jury of theft by receiving after the felon in possession of firearm charge had been dismissed. Then the state, evidently contending that a clerical error had resulted in appellant's not being prosecuted for the cocaine possession, demanded a trial on that charge. Appellant's motion to dismiss under Rule 21.3(c) was denied, and he was convicted at a bench trial. The Arkansas Supreme Court reversed, finding that the cocaine charge was related to the other offenses for which claimant had been convicted and that "clerical oversights" did not excuse the state's failure to join the related offenses for trial. 290 Ark. at 166, 717 S.W.2d at 805.

Less than a month after the decision in Crook, the court decided Martin v. State, 290 Ark. 293, 718 S.W.2d 938 (1986), where appellant was convicted of murder and first degree battery for shooting different victims within the space of a few minutes. The court affirmed the murder conviction but reversed the battery conviction because the trial court erroneously refused to give a justification instruction on the battery charge, which was remanded for another trial. Three justices dissented from the remand, arguing that appellant's trial would place him in jeopardy twice in violation of Rule 21 and that the decision departed from the interpretation of Rule 21 approved in Crook.

Related offenses may be joined under Rule 21.1, which is permissive in nature. See supplementary commentary to Rule 21. But if the prosecution does not join related charges for trial and the defendant knowingly waives joinder, a later trial for a related offense is not barred. It is only where at the time of the earlier trial the defendant was unaware of the charge that is the subject of the proposed later trial that the defendant is entitled to a dismissal. In Martin, this rule was not violated, and when the three judge dissent states that "the murder and battery charges were required to be tried together because they were of a similar character . . ." 290 Ark. App. at 298, 718 S.W.2d at 940, it oversimplifies the rule. Rule 21.1 is permissive and only "requires" joinder in the sense that, under Rule 21.3, multiple trials on charges that could have been joined under Rule 21.1 will not be permitted if the defendant has moved to join the charges for trial.

Reading Rule 21 as embodying constitutional guarantees against former jeopardy rather than as merely promoting efficient disposition of criminal cases is, perhaps, unnecessarily complicating the law of former jeopardy. The retrial in Martin certainly would not violate Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 41-106 to -109 (Repl. 1977), the new statutory scheme exhaustively defining the sweep of the former jeopardy defense in Arkansas.

In this connection, it should be noted that Ark. Stat. Ann. § 41-107 (Repl. 1977) is not perfectly congruous with Rule 21.1, inasmuch as § 41-107 may preclude consecutive trials for different offenses based on the same conduct, while Rule 21.1 permits such trials in the sense that it does not require joinder of such charges unless a defendant demands this. See commentary to § 41-107, which incorrectly states that Rule 21.1 compels disposition in a single trial of all offenses arising out of the same conduct. In fact, this is "compelled" only where the defendant moves to join. But, however one interprets the relationship between § 41-107 and Rule 21, it does not appear that a retrial of one offense originally joined for trial with a related offense, as was the case in Martin, is barred. Ashe v. Swenson, 397 U.S. 436, 25 L.Ed.2d 469 (1970), relied upon by the dissent in Martin, stands for the proposition that "when an issue of ultimate fact has once been determined by a final and valid judgment, that issue cannot again be litigated between the same parties in any future lawsuit," 397 U.S. at 443, 25 L.Ed.2d at 475, and is not germane to a decision about whether to permit a retrial in circumstances such as those presented in Martin. The rule of Martin is also consistent with the public policy considerations set forth in United States v. Tateo, 377 U.S. 463, 12 L. Ed. 2d 448 (1964).

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

The rules regarding severance do not apply to offenses used as aggravating circumstances in a capital murder case. Lee v. State, 327 Ark.

692, 942 S.W.2d 231, cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1002, 118 S. Ct. 572, 139 L. Ed. 2d 412 (1997).

Where prior charges against defendant for making false insurance claims had been dismissed, a subsequent prosecution for defrauding Medicaid was not subject to dismissal under subsection (c) of this rule since there was no single episode or single act of conduct due to the fact the fraud was against different entities. Dilday v. State, 369 Ark. 1, 250 S.W.3d 217 (2007).

Basis for Rule.

This rule has its basis in the double jeopardy clause of the United States Constitution, contained in the Fifth Amendment. Cozzaglio v. State, 289 Ark. 33, 709 S.W.2d 70 (1986).

Elements of Rule.

This rule has three requirements: the offenses must be within the jurisdiction of the same court, they must arise from the same conduct or criminal episode, and a timely motion to join must be made. Cozzaglio v. State, 289 Ark. 33, 709 S.W.2d 70 (1986).

Failure to Join.

Where the kidnapping occurred in Washington County, continued into Madison County and culminated with a rape in Madison County, both counties had jurisdiction and venue over both the kidnapping and rape charges as they arose from the same continuing course of conduct. Thus, this rule required the judge to grant the defense motion to join the charges in one trial, and when joinder was denied, the latter conviction had to be reversed and the charge dismissed. Cozzaglio v. State, 289 Ark. 33, 709 S.W.2d 70 (1986).

Where, five months after his trial for theft by receiving, charges for possession of a controlled substance arising out of the same episode were brought against the defendant, the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to dismiss, where the failure to include the possession charge was due to a clerical oversight. Crook v. State, 290 Ark. 163, 717 S.W.2d 803 (1986).

Unless the "ends of justice" would be defeated by doing so, this rule requires the trial court to grant a motion to dismiss when a defendant has been tried for one offense and then later learns that he is to be tried for a related charge of which the defendant was unaware prior to the first trial; in exercising its discretion to determine whether the "ends of justice" would be defeated, the trial court must do so with the purpose of accommodating reason and justice with the facts of particular cases. Crook v. State, 290 Ark. 163, 717 S.W.2d 803 (1986).

Where defendant's motion, although entitled motion for severance of offenses, plainly showed on its face that defendant intended some charges be joined together and others severed, the trial court erroneously denied the motion, and defendant was entitled to dismissal of capital felony murder charge after being convicted of conspiracy to commit theft. McMillan v. Donovan, 301 Ark. 393, 784 S.W.2d 752 (1990).

Unrelated Offenses.

This rule did not preclude a prosecution for second-degree sexual assault because it did not occur in the same jurisdiction and venue as other offenses; the sexual assault in Sebastian County did not arise from the same criminal episode as similar offenses charged in Crawford County, which allegedly occurred within a span of four years. Rape was not a continuing offense, § 16-88-108 did not apply because the charged offenses of sexual assault was alleged to have been committed entirely within Sebastian County, and the offenses were not related under this rule. Bean v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 643 (2012).

Because the rape offenses charged in the second prosecution did not occur within the same jurisdiction and venue of the initial prosecution, the offenses were not "related offenses" and this rule did not require dismissal; the requisite inquiry for purposes of this rule was not whether the offenses were committed in Craighead County but whether the offenses were committed in the same separate judicial district of Craighead County. Schoolfield v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 575, 564 S.W.3d 558 (2018).

Waiver.

Issues concerning this rule not presented at trial cannot be considered on appeal. Stephens v. State, 293 Ark. 366, 738 S.W.2d 91 (1987).

Defendant's failure to make a request for joinder pursuant to this rule constituted a waiver of any right of joinder as to the related offenses with which he knew he had been charged. Gonzalez v. State, 306 Ark. 1, 811 S.W.2d 760 (1991).

RULE 22.

SEVERANCE OF OFFENSES AND DEFENDANTS

Rule

Rule 22.1. Timeliness of motion; waiver; double jeopardy.

Rule 22.2. Severance of offenses.

Rule

Rule 22.3. Severance of defendants.

Rule 22.4. Failure to prove grounds for joinder of defendants.

Rule 22.1. Timeliness of motion; waiver; double jeopardy.

(a) A defendant's motion for severance of offenses of defendants must be timely made before trial, except that a motion for severance may be made before or at the close of all the evidence if based upon a ground not previously known. Severance is waived if the motion is not made at the appropriate time.

(b) If a defendant's pretrial motion for severance was overruled, he may renew the motion on the same grounds before or at the close of all the evidence. Severance is waived by failure to renew the motion.

(c) Unless consented to by the defendant, a motion by the prosecuting attorney for severance of offenses or defendants may be granted only if timely made prior to trial.

(d) If a motion for severance is granted during the trial and the motion was made or consented to by the defendant, the granting of the motion shall not bar a subsequent trial of that defendant on the offenses severed.

Timeliness of Motion. The Arkansas Court of Appeals has held that where two cases have been consolidated for trial for over a month and no motion for severance is made on Rule 22.2(a) grounds until after a jury is qualified and sworn, the motion is not timely, and the trial court's refusal to grant it will not be reversed without a showing of abuse of discretion. Parks v. State, 11 Ark. App. 238, 669 S.W.2d 496 (1984). See, also, Owen v. State, 263 Ark. 493, 565 S.W.2d 607 (1978).

Renewal of Motion Required. In James v. State, 11 Ark. App. 1, 665 S.W.2d 883 (1984) the record showed that counsel for appellant moved under Rule 22.2(a) for a severance, but he presented no evidence in support of the motion, which was denied. Since the record was devoid of evidence, the court of appeals declined to overturn the trial court's decision and, because appellant failed to renew the motion under Rule 22.1(b), affirmed the conviction. The court gave no indication how it would have ruled had appellant introduced enough evidence at the first hearing on the motion to convince it that the motion should have been granted at that time. Under Rule 22.1(b) the same result might be required inasmuch as "severance is waived by failure to renew the motion." Rule 22.1(b).

CASE NOTESAppeal.

Where defendant, prior to the day of the trial, moved for severance and premised his argument on certain prejudicial testimony, and where defendant then made severance motions twice on the day of the trial before and after voir dire — once in connection with peremptory challenges and once without specifying the grounds — but failed to raise the motion pertaining to the challenged testimony, the defendant failed to preserve the severance issue relating to the testimony for appeal. Rockett v. State, 319 Ark. 335, 891 S.W.2d 366 (1995).

Denial of Motion.

A defendant in a prosecution for the manufacture of marijuana was not prejudiced by the court's denial of his severance motion since his codefendant's testimony tended to exonerate him of any illegal knowledge or conduct relative to the two marijuana patches. Brown v. State, 5 Ark. App. 181, 636 S.W.2d 286 (1982).

The trial court did not err in refusing the defendant's motion to sever the two controlled substances charges against him that the trial court had consolidated where the record reflected that the fact that these two offenses had been consolidated for trial was known to the defendant at least 34 days before the date of trial, that no pretrial motion for severance was made, and that the defendant did not make his motion until the morning of the trial and after the jury had been qualified and sworn. Parks v. State, 11 Ark. App. 238, 669 S.W.2d 496 (1984).

Discretion of Court.

The matter of severance lies within the sound discretion of the trial judge and will not be reversed absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. Brown v. State, 5 Ark. App. 181, 636 S.W.2d 286 (1982).

The trial court's action with regard to matters of severance lies within the sound discretion of the trial judge and will not be reversed absent a showing of abuse. Parks v. State, 11 Ark. App. 238, 669 S.W.2d 496 (1984).

In a fleeing and drug case, the trial court did not err by failing to sever the offenses where defendant's act of fleeing occurred within hours of the initial traffic stop at an intersection located about one-half mile from where the contraband was found. Garner v. State, 355 Ark. 82, 131 S.W.3d 734 (2003).

Information.

State's amendment of an information did not violate § 16-85-407 because the amendment did not constitute a severance of offenses under subsection (c) of this rule, and the evidence would have been introduced in any case as part of the events leading up to the shooting whether it was included in the charging instrument or not; the only offense charged in the case was first-degree battery under § 5-13-201(a)(3), and the amendment did not change the nature or degree of the crime but merely clarified the manner in which the offense was committed. Reed v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 352, 383 S.W.3d 881 (2011).

Motion Requirements.

An attorney's statement that "I renew all motions, including motion for directed verdict" was insufficient under the renewal requirement of subsection (b) of this rule to preserve the issue of severance for appeal. Jacobs v. State, 317 Ark. 454, 878 S.W.2d 734 (1994); Goins v. State, 319 Ark. 689, 890 S.W.2d 602 (1994).

To preserve the issue of the sufficiency of the evidence in a criminal case, the appellant must move for a directed verdict both at the close of the state's case and at the close of all of the entire case; both times, the motion must state specific grounds. Jones v. State, 318 Ark. 704, 889 S.W.2d 706 (1994).

A "bright line" has been drawn: all directed verdict motions must state specific grounds. Jones v. State, 318 Ark. 704, 889 S.W.2d 706 (1994).

Renewal of Motion.

Even if a general renewal of all "objections" could be said to constitute renewal of all motions, it does not make clear to the court the grounds for severance, and is, therefore, insufficient. Wynn v. State, 316 Ark. 414, 871 S.W.2d 593 (1994).

Subsection (b) of this rule does not require that a motion to sever be renewed at the end of all the evidence, but before or at the close of all proof. Rockett v. State, 319 Ark. 335, 891 S.W.2d 366 (1995).

Failure to renew severance motion before or at the close of all the evidence after denial of a pretrial severance motion precludes review of the issue on appeal. Gray v. State, 327 Ark. 113, 937 S.W.2d 639 (1997).

Waiver.

Where a defendant in a joint trial failed to move before the trial for severance of defendants or offenses, her objections were waived. Burnett v. State, 262 Ark. 235, 556 S.W.2d 653 (1977), cert. denied, 435 U.S. 944, 98 S. Ct. 1525, 55 L. Ed. 2d 540 (1978).

Where defendant's objection came after the jury was selected and sworn, there was a waiver of severance. Owen v. State, 263 Ark. 493, 565 S.W.2d 607 (1978); King v. State, 300 Ark. 3, 775 S.W.2d 897 (1989).

Where the defendant's severance motion was not filed until immediately before the state called its first witness, her motion was untimely since she waited to raise the severance objection until after the jury was selected and sworn. Brown v. State, 5 Ark. App. 181, 636 S.W.2d 286 (1982).

Court did not abuse discretion by not granting the severance of offenses of carnal abuse and sexual abuse of two different victims where the allegation that both offenses occurred on the same day between members of the same household might have been indicative of a single scheme or plan. At point at which motion was made the two victims had not testified as to the circumstances under which the two crimes were committed and there was no evidence indicating that the two acts were not parts of a single episode; even if the evidence disclosed that the two offenses were not a part of a single scheme or plan, and were joined solely because they were of similar character, failure to renew the motion constituted a waiver of a right to severance under the clear wording of subsection (b) of this rule. James v. State, 11 Ark. App. 1, 665 S.W.2d 883 (1984).

Where defendant made a pretrial motion for severance, but failed to renew the motion at the trial, under subsection (b) of this rule, defendant waived any right to a severance. Brown v. State, 315 Ark. 466, 869 S.W.2d 9 (1994).

Failure to renew a motion for severance in accordance with the rule constitutes a waiver of the objection. Wynn v. State, 316 Ark. 414, 871 S.W.2d 593 (1994).

Even if one has a right to sever, that right can be waived, and the issue cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Thompson v. State, 338 Ark. 564, 999 S.W.2d 192 (1999).

Rule 22.2. Severance of offenses.

(a) Whenever two (2) or more offenses have been joined for trial solely on the ground that they are of the same or similar character and they are not part of a single scheme or plan, the defendant shall have a right to a severance of the offenses.

(b) The court, on application of the prosecuting attorney, or on application of the defendant other than under subsection (a), shall grant a severance of offenses:

(i) if before trial, it is deemed appropriate to promote a fair determination of the defendant's guilt or innocence of each offense; or

(ii) if during trial, upon consent of the defendant, it is deemed necessary to achieve a fair determination of the defendant's guilt or innocence of each offense.

Comment to Rule 22.2

The court should consider whether, in view of the number of offenses charged and the complexity of the evidence to be offered, the trier of fact will be able to distinguish the evidence and apply the law intelligently as to each offense.

Severance of Same or Similar Character Offenses Under Rule 22.2(a). Cases examining joinder and severance on Rule 22.2(a) grounds are discussed above in the supplementary commentary to Rules 21.1 and 21.3.

Rule 21.1 establishes the outer boundaries of joinder. Where offenses that are proposed to be joined cannot be brought within any standard established by the rule, they should not be joined and, if joined, should be severed on motion of the defendant. Rule 22.2 authorizing severances appears to address only situations where joinder was originally made within Rule 21.1 limits. Rule 22.2 permits severances of offenses permissibly joined under Rule 21 solely on grounds of "same or similar character," but does not explicitly confer a right to severance where not even a tenuous "same or similar character" connection can be shown. Rule 22.2 could be read to allow the trial court to permit joinder of a January 1 rape and a June 1 theft upon a finding that such joinder would "promote a fair determination of the defendant's guilt" under Rule 22.2(b)(i). But since such a joinder is beyond the bounds permitted by Rule 21.1, the defendant should be accorded an absolute right to severance.

CASE NOTES

In General.

A defendant has an absolute right to a severance of offenses joined solely on the ground that they are of same or similar character but not in a case where the offenses were a part of a common scheme or plan. Passley v. State, 323 Ark. 301, 915 S.W.2d 248 (1996).

Applicability.

The rules regarding severance do not apply to offenses used as aggravating circumstances in a capital murder case. Lee v. State, 327 Ark. 692, 942 S.W.2d 231, cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1002, 118 S. Ct. 572, 139 L. Ed. 2d 412 (1997).

Discretion of Court.

Granting or refusing a severance is within the discretion of the trial court. Henry v. State, 278 Ark. 478, 647 S.W.2d 419, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 835, 104 S. Ct. 121, 78 L. Ed. 2d 119 (1983); Fisher v. State, 290 Ark. 490, 720

S.W.2d 900 (1986); McArdell v. State, 38 Ark. App. 261, 833 S.W.2d 786 (1992); Passley v. State, 323 Ark. 301, 915 S.W.2d 248 (1996).

Harmless Error.

Any prejudice resulting from the refusal to sever was rendered harmless where: (1) the evidence against the defendant was overwhelming; (2) a curative instruction was given concerning evidence on prior convictions; (3) the defendant voluntarily took the stand where his prior conviction was brought out on cross-examination; and (4) no further objection was made by the defense counsel that the defendant was in any way compelled to testify by introduction of the prior conviction. Ferrell v. State, 305 Ark. 511, 810 S.W.2d 29 (1991).

Improper Joining.

Where the only connection between two sales of drugs was the fact that both were made to an informer, this showing alone was insufficient to connect the two sales by a single scheme or plan, thus the trial court erred in joining the two offenses for purpose of trial. Teas v. State, 266 Ark. 572, 587 S.W.2d 28 (1979).

Circuit court abused its discretion by refusing to sever the offenses of breaking and entering and failure to appear for trial because an assertion that the failure to appear was some evidence of consciousness of guilt was not a permissible reason for joinder. Clark v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 142, 457 S.W.3d 305 (2015).

Prejudice.

Joinder of a felon/firearm charge with a second felony charge does not constitute prejudice by that fact alone in all instances, however, the danger that the jury's perception of the defendant will be adversely affected is so strong as to create a presumption favoring severance. Sutton v. State, 311 Ark. 435, 844 S.W.2d 350 (1993).

Trial court erred in denying a motion to sever the first-degree murder count from the firearms possession count where the two offenses were not part of a single scheme or plan nor did they require the same evidence; the error was not prejudicial, however, given the overwhelming eyewitness testimony that defendant had shot the victim and the trial court's instruction that the jury should not take the proof that defendant had a felony conviction as proof of guilt of murder. Harrison v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 580, 533 S.W.3d 146 (2017).

Purpose.

Where defendant contended that the purpose of this rule is to give effect to the principle that the state cannot bolster its case against the accused by proving that he committed other similar offenses in the past, assuming that this is the underlying purpose of the rule, that purpose would not be served by granting a severance in a case where evidence of the earlier conduct would very likely be admissible in a prosecution for the later offense. Starks v. State, 33 Ark. App. 165, 804 S.W.2d 728 (1991).

Separate Crimes and Victims.

There are circumstances under which separate crimes committed upon different individuals close in time may constitute a single scheme or plan within the meaning of subsection (a) of this rule. James v. State, 11 Ark. App. 1, 665 S.W.2d 883 (1984).

Where defendant was accused of committing five unconnected sexual assaults against five different girls, the alleged offenses occurred over a twelve-month period, involved different charges, and were committed in different manners, against different victims, and at different locations, the charges should not have been consolidated for trial; since these five crimes were of a similar character, but were not part of a single scheme or plan, the defendant had a right to a severance of the offenses. Clay v. State, 318 Ark. 550, 886 S.W.2d 608 (1994).

Severance Denied.

A defendant was not entitled to separate trials on charges of burglary and conspiracy, where all the charges were related and grew out of the same conversation and course of conduct. Gustafson v. State, 267 Ark. 278, 590 S.W.2d 853 (1979), overruled in part as stated in Rogers v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 521, 536 S.W.3d 128 (2017).

Murders were a single criminal episode or series of connected acts sufficient to permit joinder of the offenses under Ark. R. Crim. P. 21.1; thus the charges were not joined solely on the ground that they were of the same or similar character and defendants did not have the right to a severance of the offenses. Ruiz v. State, 273 Ark. 94, 617 S.W.2d 6, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1093, 102 S. Ct. 659, 70 L. Ed. 2d 631 (1981).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for severance of the offenses of hindering apprehension and accomplice to capital murder where the facts necessary to prove the offenses would almost all be required in each trial, if a severance were granted, in order to establish a plan, scheme, motive or state of mind. The conduct of defendant, both before and after the murder, would be admissible for the purpose of showing a plan or scheme. Henry v. State, 278 Ark. 478, 647 S.W.2d 419, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 835, 104 S. Ct. 121, 73 L. Ed. 2d 119 (1983).

Court did not abuse discretion by not granting the severance of offenses of carnal abuse and sexual abuse of two different victims where the allegation that both offenses occurred on the same day between members of the same household might have been indicative of a single scheme or plan. Even if the evidence disclosed that the two offenses were not a part of a single scheme or plan, and were joined solely because they were of similar character, failure to renew the motion constituted a waiver of a right to severance under the clear wording of Ark. R. Crim. P. 22.1(b). James v. State, 11 Ark. App. 1, 665 S.W.2d 883 (1984).

Severance properly denied. Parker v. State, 292 Ark. 421, 731 S.W.2d 756 (1987).

Denial of a motion to sever is proper if the offenses at issue are part of a single scheme or plan or if the same body of evidence would be offered to prove each offense. Henry v. State, 309 Ark. 1, 828 S.W.2d 346 (1992).

Where the facts necessary to prove the rape offenses would be required in both trials, and where each of the girls' testimonies would be admissible in the trial of the other's rape to show appellant's intent, motive, or common scheme or plan, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to sever the two cases.

Lukach v. State, 310 Ark. 119, 835 S.W.2d 852 (1992).

Where acts alleged with respect to each victim occurred within a few blocks of each other about thirty minutes apart, the proximity in time and place provided an ample basis for denial of severance under this rule. Kimbley v. State, 315 Ark. 653, 869 S.W.2d 692 (1994).

There was a sufficient basis for the trial court's denial of the motion for severance given the proximity in time and place of a series of burglaries committed over a two-day period. Passley v. State, 323 Ark. 301, 915 S.W.2d 248 (1996).

Severance of counts denied where defendant picked up amphetamines and had metamphetamine in his jeans pocket; defendant was in possession of two distinct amounts of the same type of controlled substance at the same time and at the same location. Heritage v. State, 326 Ark. 839, 936 S.W.2d 499 (1996).

The defendant was not entitled to severance of 2 charges of sexual abuse where the defendant obtained access to each victim through his relationships with their parents, the similarity of the manner in which the defendant committed the acts was remarkable, and the acts overlapped in time. Dillard v. State, 333 Ark. 418, 971 S.W.2d 764 (1998).

Four murders committed by defendant occurred at the same location, at the same time, and were clearly the result of a single scheme or plan; since the evidence offered at trial to establish each offense would be identical, a severance of the offenses was not proper and trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to move for severance. Kemp v. State, 348 Ark. 750, 74 S.W.3d 224 (2002).

Trial court was not required to sever a charge for exposure to the Human Immuno-Deficiency Virus (HIV) under this rule because the exposure to HIV was committed as part of a single scheme with a sexual assault in the fourth degree. It was discretionary whether or not to sever under subdivision (b)(i) of this rule. White v. State, 370 Ark. 284, 259 S.W.3d 410 (2007).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to sever the rape charge from the other charges as the record contained nothing suggesting that the victim was not raped or that she was raped by someone else; evidence of the other charges was admissible to prove defendant's scheme as the evidence showed that defendant would invite the children to his residence and that he would take pictures and touch the children while they were there. Mason v. State, 330 S.W.3d 445 (Ark. Ct. App. 2009).

In a family doctor's trial on two counts of second-degree sexual abuse, violations of § 5-14-125, the trial court correctly refused to sever the offenses under this rule because the two charges were for the same crime, the alleged assaults occurred within a one-day period at the same location and in the same manner, and the victims' narrative of events were virtually identical. Arendall v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 358, 377 S.W.3d 404 (2010).

In a case where defendant was convicted of rape and sexual assault, there was no abuse of discretion by refusing to sever the offenses because the testimony of each of the victims would have been admissible at each trial as prior bad acts; moreover, a second mental evaluation was not necessary because the crimes occurred during the same time frame, and there had been no change in defendant's mental status since a November 2013 determination that he was fit to proceed. Thompson v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 275, 461 S.W.3d 368 (2015).

Single Scheme or Plan.

Denial of severance was proper where proximity in time and place of two robberies indicated the crimes were part of a single scheme or plan and where some evidence was pertinent to both offenses. Brown v. State, 304 Ark. 98, 800 S.W.2d 424 (1990).

The trial judge erred in refusing to sever a firearm/felon count from a murder count for trial because an offense based in part on a prior conviction is not part of a single scheme or plan with first degree murder, as subsection (a) of this rule requires. Ferrell v. State, 305 Ark. 511, 810 S.W.2d 29 (1991).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in denying defendant's severance motion, and in deciding that rapes by father of his two daughters were part of a single scheme or plan, where there was ample evidence that the sexual activity relating to the two daughters was inextricably connected, defendant admitted, according to the testimony of witnesses, that he had fondled his children, there was additional testimony that deviate sexual activity had occurred involving the children more than once over a period of a year, and the victims and defendant were all residing in the same household at the time. Simpson v. State, 310 Ark. 493, 837 S.W.2d 475 (1992).

When offenses are based on the same conduct or a series of acts connected together or constituting parts of a single scheme or plan, they may be joined for trial. McArdell v. State, 38 Ark. App. 261, 833 S.W.2d 786 (1992).

There are circumstances under which separate crimes committed upon different individuals close in time may constitute a single scheme or plan within the meaning of this rule. McArdell v. State, 38 Ark. App. 261, 833 S.W.2d 786 (1992).

Where offenses of rape and sexual abuse comprised a common scheme: the victims were sisters, step-daughters of the defendant; the sexual conduct all occurred in the home of the defendant and the victims; and contact continued over a period of eighteen months; the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to sever the offenses. These acts constituted a continuing course of conduct which, in effect, constituted a single scheme or plan. McArdell v. State, 38 Ark. App. 261, 833 S.W.2d 786 (1992).

Severance is not necessary to promote a fair determination of the defendant's guilt or innocence, where the facts necessary to prove the offenses would almost all be required in each trial if a severance were granted, and such evidence would be used in order to establish a plan, scheme, motive, or state of mind. Kimbley v. State, 315 Ark. 653, 869 S.W.2d 692 (1994).

In a fleeing and drug case, the trial court did not err by failing to sever the offenses where defendant's act of fleeing occurred within hours of the initial traffic stop at an intersection located about one-half mile from where the contraband was found. Garner v. State, 355 Ark. 82, 131 S.W.3d 734 (2003).

In a sexual assault case, a court properly denied defendant's motion to sever offenses because both victims' testimony was admissible in the trial of the other to show defendant's intent, motive, common scheme, or plan. Parish v. State, 357 Ark. 260, 163 S.W.3d 843 (2004).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion to sever the charges of committing a terroristic act and first-degree murder because the acts giving rise to the charges constituted a single scheme or plan; the evidence showed that within a 12-hour period an argument between defendant and the victim led to defendant's taking a gun from a sibling's car, defendant's shooting a gun into the victim's home, the victim's throwing a brick through defendant's window, and defendant's fatally shooting the victim. Rankin v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 481, 588 S.W.3d 379 (2019).

Defendant's motion to sever was properly denied as the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the acts giving rise to the murder and battery charges constituted a single scheme or plan because bullet casings collected revealed that both victims were shot with the same weapon; both crimes were committed in the same manner; and defendant was the last person known to have seen the murder victim alive, and the battery victim identified defendant as the person who had shot him. Johnson v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 157, 596 S.W.3d 83 (2020).

Rule 22.3. Severance of defendants.

(a) When a defendant moves for a severance because an out-of-court statement of a codefendant makes reference to him but is not admissible against him, the court shall determine whether the prosecution intends to offer the statement in evidence at the trial. If so, the court shall not use a joint trial with dual juries but shall instead require the prosecuting attorney to elect one (1) of the following courses:

(i) a joint trial at which the statement is not admitted into evidence against any defendant;

(ii) a joint trial at which the statement is admitted into evidence only after all references to the moving defendant have been deleted, provided that, as deleted, the statement will not prejudice the moving defendant; or

(iii) severance of the moving defendant.

(b) The court, on application of the prosecuting attorney, or on application of the defendant other than under subsection (a), shall grant a severance of defendants:

(i) if before trial it is deemed necessary to protect a defendant's right to a speedy trial, or it is deemed appropriate to promote a fair determination of the guilt or innocence of one (1) or more defendants; or

(ii) if before trial the court determines that one (1) or more of the defendants will not receive a fair trial because of potentially prejudicial publicity against another defendant; or

(iii) if during trial, upon consent of the defendant to be severed, it is deemed necessary to achieve a fair determination of the guilt or innocence of one (1) or more defendants.

(c) When such information would assist the court in ruling on a motion for severance of defendants, the court may order the prosecuting attorney to disclose any statements made by the defendant which he intends to introduce in evidence at the trial.

HISTORY: Amended July 13, 1987, effective October 1, 1987; amended February 24, 2005.

Reporter's Note, 2005 Amendment:

In Woolbright v. State, 357 Ark. 63, 160 S.W.3d 315 (2004), the Supreme Court barred the use of dual juries until development of a rule that specifically addresses the practical considerations necessary to safeguard the rights of defendants. The 2005 amendments modified subsection (a) to incorporate this holding.

Factors Justifying Severance of Defendants. The Arkansas Supreme Court has construed Rule 22.3 to permit, but not required, a severance in a capital case. McDaniel v. State, 278 Ark. 631, 648 S.W.2d 57 (1983). In McDaniel, the court found that the two appellants had antagonistic defenses, citing with approval a Delaware case observing that “defenses are antagonistic when to believe one defendant, it is necessary to disbelieve the other.” Jenkins v. State, 230 A.2d 262 (Del. 1967). The McDaniel court pointed out that the following conclusions may be drawn from two A.L.R. annotations (82 A.L.R.3d 245 and 54 A.L.R.2d 858): The issue of severance is to be determined on a case by case basis, considering the totality of the circumstances, with the following factors favoring severance: (1) where defenses are antagonistic; (2) where it is difficult to segregate the evidence; (3) where there is a lack of substantial evidence implicating one defendant except for the accusation of the other defendant; (4) where one defendant could have deprived the other of all peremptory challenges; (5) where if one defendant chooses to testify the other is compelled to do so; (6) where one defendant has no prior criminal record and the other has; (7) where circumstantial evidence against one defendant appears stronger than against the other. 278 Ark. at 638, 648 S.W.2d at 60.

As pointed out subsequently in Rhodes v. State, 280 Ark. 156, 655 S.W.2d 421 (1983), McDaniel does not say that in every case — even capital cases — where antagonistic defenses are presented the trial court must grant a severance, but merely that when defenses are antagonistic the trial court must be particularly careful that neither defendant is “unduly jeopardized” by a joint trial. Id. at 158-59, 655 S.W.2d at 422, quoting McDaniel at 639, 648 S.W.2d at 57. See, also, Chappell v. State, 18 Ark. App. 26, 710 S.W.2d 214 (1986); Burnett v. State, 287 Ark. 158, 697 S.W.2d 95 (1985); Baird v. State, 12 Ark. App. 71, 671 S.W.2d 191 (1984); Spears v. State, 280 Ark. 577, 660 S.W.2d 913 (1983); and Clines v. State, 280 Ark. 77, 656 S.W.2d 684 (1983).

Last, the most recent version of the ABA Standards on severance of defendants contains a new subsection (c) that provides: (c) When evaluating whether severance is “appropriate to promote” or “necessary to achieve” a fair determination of one or more defendants’ guilt or innocence for each offense, the court should consider among other factors whether, in view of the number of offenses and defendants charged and the complexity of the evidence to be offered, the trier of fact will be able to distinguish the evidence and apply the law intelligently as to each offense and as to each defendant. American Bar Association, Standards for Criminal Justice, Joinder and Severance, Chapter 13 at pp. 13, 34, Little Brown & Co., 2d Ed. (1986).

Deletion of References to Co-Defendant. In Washington v. State, 267 Ark. 1040, 594 S.W.2d 29 (Ark. App. 1980) and Hallman v. State, 264 Ark. 900, 575 S.W.2d 688 (1979) the Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court explicitly approved altering confessions by one defendant mentioning a co-defendant by removing all references to the co-defendant’s identity.

CASE NOTES

In General.

There is no abuse of the trial court's discretion in denying a severance where it is not manifest in the record that a severance was necessary in order to have a fair determination of defendant's guilt or innocence. Legg v. State, 262 Ark. 583, 559 S.W.2d 22 (1977).

Former § 43-1802 has been superseded by this rule; moreover, the section has been repealed. Echols v. State, 326 Ark. 917, 936 S.W.2d 509 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1244, 117 S. Ct. 1853, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1055 (1997).

Where defendant and co-defendant were tried together, the trial court committed reversible error by admitting co-defendant's statement because it violated defendant's Sixth Amendment right to confront witnesses; even when defendant's name was changed to a pronoun, it was obvious that the references were indirect or veiled references to him, and substantiated his existence and identity in the highly incriminating statement of co-defendant. Jefferson v. State, 86 Ark. App. 325, 185 S.W.3d 114, superseded, 359 Ark. 454, 198 S.W.3d 527 (2004).

While defendant made a prima facie case of a speedy-trial violation under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1, as continuances filed by defendant and a codefendant were excluded by Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, and as defendant's severance motion did not comply with subdivision (b)(i) of this rule, less than 365 days expired between his arrest and trial; therefore, his motion to dismiss was properly denied. Raymond v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 179 (2011).

Antagonistic Defenses.

Where the defenses relied on by codefendants are antagonistic, particularly in capital cases, careful consideration should be given to all the factors which weigh for or against achieving substantial justice in the trial process, and where it can be seen that either defendant is unduly jeopardized by a joint trial, severance should be granted. McDaniel v. State, 278 Ark. 631, 648 S.W.2d 57 (1983).

Where a review of the proceedings indicated that the defenses relied on by the codefendants in a capital felony murder prosecution were wholly antagonistic, where each defendant admitted being present at the murder scene but that the other had murdered the victim, and where the jury, after telling the trial judge that it was unable to determine who had actually pulled the trigger, found both men guilty and fixed punishment at life without parole, the totality of the circumstances showed that the defendants were entitled to separate trials and should have been granted a severance. McDaniel v. State, 278 Ark. 631, 648 S.W.2d 57 (1983).

Where there was no effort among the defendants to point to another defendant as the murderer; but, rather, the proof on behalf of each defendant (only one of whom testified) was aimed for the most part at proving he was not in the bedroom, where the murder occurred, these defenses were not in the least antagonistic so as to require separate trials. Clines v. State, 280 Ark. 77, 656 S.W.2d 684 (1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1051, 104 S. Ct. 1328, 79 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1984), cert. denied sub nom. Clines v. Norris, 512 U.S. 1272, 115 S. Ct. 17, 129 L. Ed. 2d 916 (1994).

Defendant's convictions for rape and kidnapping were appropriate because the trial court did not err in refusing to grant his pretrial motion for severance under subdivision (b)(i) of this rule since defendant failed to present any evidence at the pretrial hearing supporting the conclusion that he and his codefendant had antagonistic defenses. Childs v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 454 (2010).

Discretion of Court.

A matter of severance, or separate trials for multiple defendants, is one within the sound discretion of the trial judge to grant or deny and will not be reversed unless that discretion is abused. Hallman v. State, 264 Ark. 900, 575 S.W.2d 688 (1979); Chappell v. State, 18 Ark. App. 26, 710 S.W.2d 214 (1986).

Where in a prosecution for rape, the trial court denied a motion for severance made by one of the three defendants, and ruled that the confession of each of the defendants would be allowed into evidence only against the defendant giving the statement and that any reference to the other defendants by name would be excluded, the trial court did not abuse its discretion since the instructions of the court were followed, and each of the defendants was permitted by cross-examination to refute any adverse testimony to his cause. Washington v. State, 267 Ark. 1040, 594 S.W.2d 29 (Ct. App. 1980).

The current state of the Arkansas law pertaining to severance of defendants in capital cases rests upon the sound discretion of the trial court, but while the discretionary power is broad, it is not unlimited, and the overriding duty of the trial judge is to determine that defendants can be tried together without substantial injustice. McDaniel v. State, 278 Ark. 631, 648 S.W.2d 57 (1983).

This rule superseded former § 43-1802 and gives the trial court discretion to grant or deny a severance in all cases; the Supreme Court will not disturb that ruling on appeal in the absence of an abuse of discretion. McDaniel v. State, 278 Ark. 631, 648 S.W.2d 57 (1983).

Severance of defendants rests within the sound discretion of the trial court; such discretion is broad, though to be exercised judiciously in capital cases, with careful scrutiny to be given to a number of elements which could affect the fairness of the trial. Clines v. State, 280 Ark. 77, 656 S.W.2d 684 (1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1051, 104 S. Ct. 1328, 79 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1984), cert. denied sub nom. Clines v. Norris, 512 U.S. 1272, 115 S. Ct. 17, 129 L. Ed. 2d 916 (1994).

This rule gives the trial court broad discretion in determining whether to grant or deny a motion to sever. Rockett v. State, 319 Ark. 335, 891 S.W.2d 366 (1995).

The trial court erred in denying severance motions as untimely without considering this rule or any of the seven factors that favor severance. Eveland v. State, 54 Ark. App. 393, 929 S.W.2d 165 (1996).

Unless conflicting strategies go to the essence of co-defendants' defenses, and the conflicting strategies are so great that both defendants' defenses cannot be accommodated by the jury, a trial court is not required to grant a severance. Echols v. State, 326 Ark. 917, 936 S.W.2d 509 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1244, 117 S. Ct. 1853, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1055 (1997).

Dual Juries.

In a murder case, where the prosecutor chose to have a joint trial at which the first defendant's statement was not admitted into evidence against the second defendant and two juries would be impaneled, the Arkansas Supreme Court could find no prejudice in the defendants' case from the use of dual juries and declined to reverse their convictions. Woolbright v. State, 357 Ark. 63, 160 S.W.3d 315 (2004).

Regardless of the propriety of the dual-jury procedure under the Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure, the Arkansas Supreme Court condemned the practice and prohibited the use of dual juries until such time as a rule had been implemented to specifically address the practical considerations necessary for safeguarding a defendant's rights. Woolbright v. State, 357 Ark. 63, 160 S.W.3d 315 (2004).

Factors Favoring Severance.

The issue of severance is to be determined on a case by case basis, considering the totality of the circumstances, with the following factors favoring severance: (1) where defenses are antagonistic; (2) where it is difficult to segregate the evidence; (3) where there is a lack of substantial evidence implicating one defendant except for the accusation of the other defendant; (4) where one defendant could have deprived the other of all peremptory challenges; (5) where if one defendant chooses to testify the other is compelled to do so; (6) where one defendant has no prior criminal record and the other has; (7) where circumstantial evidence against one defendant appears stronger than against another. Chappell v. State, 18 Ark. App. 26, 710 S.W.2d 214 (1986); Rockett v. State, 319

Ark. 335, 891 S.W.2d 366 (1995); Eveland v. State, 54 Ark. App. 393, 929 S.W.2d 165 (1996).

Failure to Enter Motion.

Where the defendant had not moved for severance of his trial from that of his codefendant, the defendant could not argue on appeal that the trial court erred in denying the codefendant's motion for severance. Spillers v. State, 268 Ark. 217, 595 S.W.2d 650 (1980).

Out-of-Court Statements.

Pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, where two defendants are tried jointly, neither testifies, and the state chooses to introduce the out-of-court statement of one which implicates the other, the court shall sever the trial upon motion by the latter defendant unless: (1) the prosecution decides not to introduce the statement; or (2) all references in the statement to the moving defendant are deleted, and the statement does not, as altered, prejudice the moving defendant. The rule is mandatory. Moore v. State, 297 Ark. 296, 761 S.W.2d 894 (1988).

Where the prosecution chose to proceed under subsection (a) of this rule by changing the pronoun "they" in defendant's statement to "he" in order to limit the statement to defendant and avoid any reference to the other defendants, the state's effort to comply with this rule collapsed when the officer inadvertently used the pronoun "they," reflecting defendant's statement as recorded but not as altered by the state during trial pursuant to the rule, and it was clear that the other defendants who raised this issue were prejudiced. Moore v. State, 297 Ark. 296, 761 S.W.2d 894 (1988).

When two or more defendants are tried jointly, the pretrial confession of one which implicates the other is not admissible unless the confessing defendant takes the stand and is subject to cross-examination. Holbird v. State, 299 Ark. 245, 771 S.W.2d 775 (1989).

Severance Denied.

The trial court correctly denied severance to the codefendants where neither accused the other of having participated in the crime, and there was nothing in the record to indicate that either defendant suffered a substantial injustice as the result of a joint trial. Chappell v. State, 18 Ark. App. 26, 710 S.W.2d 214 (1986).

Severance properly denied. Parker v. State, 292 Ark. 421, 731 S.W.2d 756 (1987); Ruiz v. State, 299 Ark. 144, 772 S.W.2d 297 (1989); Williams v. State, 304 Ark. 279, 801 S.W.2d 296 (1990); Cox v. State, 305 Ark. 244, 808 S.W.2d 306 (1991).

In a prosecution for kidnapping, aggravated robbery, and theft of property, the defendant was not entitled to a severance, notwithstanding his argument that the evidence against his codefendant was stronger than that against him and that the codefendant was a habitual offender, while he had no criminal record, since the testimony of the victim implicated both defendants and a prior criminal record of a codefendant is only one of multiple factors to be considered; further, the jury was appropriately instructed to consider the evidence for or against each of them separately and to render verdicts as if each were being tried separately, which sufficiently offset any prejudice. Nichols v. State, 69 Ark. App. 212, 11 S.W.3d 19 (2000).

Severance Granted.

The trial court erred in failing to sever Count III from Counts I and II where Counts I and II each alleged that defendant had illegally delivered approximately ¼ gram of crack cocaine to a confidential informant in exchange for $50.00 on October 21, 1993, and Count III alleged that defendant had delivered approximately ¼ gram of crack cocaine to a different confidential informant in exchange for $50.00 on October 23, 1993, as the offenses did not involve a single scheme or plan. Bunn v. State, 320 Ark. 516, 898 S.W.2d 450 (1995).

Defendant's convictions for rape and kidnapping were appropriate because the trial court did not err in granting the codefendant's motion for severance on the second day of trial under subdivision (b)(iii) of this rule since the trial court was concerned about the effect on the codefendant if the jury chose not to believe defendant's testimony. The trial court was also concerned that the codefendant might be forced to testify against his will. Childs v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 454 (2010).

Timing of Severance.

Subdivision (b)(iii) of this rule indicates that the trial court should continue to be sensitive to the advisability of a severance as the trial evolves. Ruiz v. Norris, 868 F. Supp. 1471 (E.D. Ark. 1994), aff'd, 71 F.3d 1404 (8th Cir. 1995).

Rule 22.4. Failure to prove grounds for joinder of defendants.

If a defendant moves for severance at the conclusion of the prosecution's case or of all the evidence, and there is not sufficient evidence to support the allegation upon which the moving defendant was joined for trial with the other defendant or defendants, the court shall grant a severance if, in view of this lack of evidence, severance is deemed necessary to achieve a fair determination of that defendant's guilt or innocence.

Rule 23.1. Consolidation; severance of defendants and offenses.

Rule 23.1. Consolidation; severance of defendants and offenses.

(a) The court may order consolidation of two (2) or more charges for trial if the offenses, and the defendants if there are more than one (1), could have been joined in a single indictment or information without prejudice to any defendant's rights to move for severance under preceding provisions.

(b) The court may order a severance of offenses or defendants before trial if a severance could be obtained on motion of a defendant or the prosecution.

CASE NOTES

In General.

Where in arson charge in indictment it was alleged that the defendant and his codefendant burned the house and the burning of the house was alleged to be a part of the conspiracy charged, under the Rules of Criminal Procedure which were in effect at the time of defendant's trial, the court had the authority to consolidate the two indictments of arson and conspiracy to commit arson subject to defendant's right to move for a severance. Owen v. State, 263 Ark. 493, 565 S.W.2d 607 (1978).

Court properly granted state's motion to consolidate the offenses of capital murder, kidnapping, aggravated robbery, and attempted capital murder as the officer was shot during a shootout between defendant and law enforcement where defendant participated in a previous murder, fled, armed himself, and used weapons in an attempt to evade capture as law enforcement closed in and tried to execute a search warrant. Holsombach v. State, 368 Ark. 415, 246 S.W.3d 871 (2007).

Showing of Prejudice.

Where in a child abuse case, the fact that the defendant mother and the man she was living with were separately charged by information as defendants, did not preclude a joint trial where there was no allegation of prejudice and none was shown to have resulted from their joint trial. *Williams v. Commentary to Article VII

The following rules deal with the related pleas of guilty and nolo contendere. Each rule focuses on a different aspect of the standards and procedures to be followed in negotiation and acceptance of such pleas. The breadth of the Article is considerable, encompassing and delineating with all practicable precision the proper roles of the prosecuting attorney, the court, and the defendant and his counsel.

The scope and specificity of these rules are born of a recognition of the fundamental role played by the guilty plea in the criminal justice system. Not only is the plea of guilty the most common means of conviction,¹ but, because it eliminates the necessity for trial, it is also a means which not only properly is, but will almost assuredly continue to be, one of the most frequently used methods of disposition of criminal causes.¹

These rules also reflect the Commission's efforts to devise standards and procedures which will expedite the disposition of criminal causes through the process of "plea agreement," while ensuring that the results accomplished will be equitable with respect to both the defendant and society.

The practice of "plea agreement," variously referred to in different jurisdictions as "plea bargaining" or "plea negotiations," is scarcely a new one. It finds support both in history and in the context of various considerations bearing on the effective administration of criminal justice. A partial enumeration of these considerations appears in the ABA Standards, Pleas of Guilty, hereafter cited Standards, Pleas of Guilty: By his plea, the defendant aids in ensuring the prompt and certain application of correctional measures to him. He also aids in avoiding delay in the disposition of other cases, thereby increasing the probability of prompt and certain application of correctional measures to other offenders. In addition, the plea provides a means by which the defendant may acknowledge his guilt and manifest a willingness to assume responsibility for his conduct. Also, in some cases the plea will make it possible to avoid a public trial when the consequences of such publicity outweigh any legitimate need for a public trial. Pleas to lesser offenses make possible alternative correctional measures better adapted to achieving the purposes of correctional treatment, and often prevent undue harm to the defendant from the form of conviction. Such pleas also make it possible to grant concessions to a defendant who has given or offered cooperation in the prosecution of other offenders. Id. at 2.

Accordingly, the Commission feels that "plea agreement" has an attractiveness independent of mere considerations of administrative convenience or expediency. It also serves in diverse ways to ensure and protect the quality and integrity of the administration of criminal justice.

In attempting to follow the Standards the Commission acknowledges that "plea bargaining" does not meet with unanimous approval and that some of the critics of the practice are responsible authorities who have studied the subject in connection with surveys of the administration of criminal justice. However, for the reasons stated above the practice has become an integral component of the criminal process. Because of this widespread acceptance and the recommendations made in the Standards, the Commission has deemed it advisable to recognize plea agreement practices while incorporating procedures designed to minimize abuses of the system. This is done in the belief that much of the criticism arises from the lack of uniform guidelines for the administration of the practice.

Rule 24 sets standards governing a court's receipt of a guilty plea.

Rule 24.1 defines the ambit of the Article's application. The language of the rule is intended to encourage application of the Article's provisions by courts subject to the superintending jurisdiction of circuit courts, while permitting a necessary degree of flexibility.

Rule 24.2 is one of expansive scope. It provides that no defendant shall be required to enter any plea whatever without first having had an opportunity to retain counsel or, in appropriate cases, having had counsel appointed for him. Present Arkansas law is in accord. See, Swaggar v. State, 227 Ark. 45, 296 S.W.2d 204 (1956), following Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 58 S. Ct. 1019, 82 L. Ed. 1461 (1938). See, also, Meeks v. State, 239 Ark. 1066, 396 S.W.2d 306 (1965).

The rule is also consistent with the opinion of the United States Supreme Court in the recent case of Argersinger v. Hamlin, 407 U.S. 25, 92 S. Ct. 2006, 32 L. Ed. 2d 530 (1972). The precise holding of Argersinger is that "no person may be imprisoned" for any offense unless represented by counsel at trial. 407 U.S. at 37, 32 L. Ed. 2d at 538 [emphasis supplied]. However, there is language in the opinion recognizing the importance of advice of counsel respecting entry of a guilty plea:

Beyond the problem of trials and appeals is that of the guilty plea, a problem which looms large in misdemeanor as well as felony cases. Counsel is needed so that the accused may know precisely what he is doing, so that he is fully aware of the prospect of going to jail or prison, and so that he is treated fairly by the prosecution. 407 U.S. at 34, 32 L. Ed. 2d at 536, 537. See, also, Kitchens v. Smith, 401 U.S. 847, 91 S. Ct. 1089, 28 L. Ed. 2d 519 (1971).

Rule 24.3 requires that, except in narrowly defined circumstances, a plea of guilty or nolo contendere be entered only by the defendant himself in open court. This requirement is currently imposed by Arkansas law. See, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-1221 (Repl. 1964).

To the extent that it makes express provision for the entrance of a plea of guilty by a corporation, Rule 24.3 apparently breaks new ground.

Also, that part of Rule 24.3 which sets out criteria to be followed by a court in determining whether to accept a plea of nolo contendere is a new addition to Arkansas law, as is 24.3(c), requiring that the prosecutor in the district in which the offense occurred be accorded the opportunity to be heard at the time the plea is tendered.

Rule 24.4 is a comprehensive one, making it incumbent upon a court to explain to the defendant, and determine that he understands, the nature and possible consequences of conviction of the charges facing him. No corollary to Rule 24.4 exists in Arkansas statutory law, although cases have dealt with some of the requirements imposed by the rule. See, e.g., Medley v. Stephens, 242 Ark. 215, 412 S.W.2d 823 (1967).

To the extent that the rule requires that the consequences of a charge under the Habitual Criminal Act [Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-2328 et seq. (Supp. 1973)] be explained to the defendant, it restates in clarified form the requirements of present law. See, e.g., Wilson v. State, 251 Ark. 900, 475 S.W.2d 543 (1972).

Rules 24.5 and 24.6 require, among other things, that prior to acceptance of a plea of guilty or nolo contendere the court must determine that the plea is voluntarily proffered and that there is a factual basis for the plea. Thus, the rules follow recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court and the Arkansas Supreme Court. See, e.g., Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1969); North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25, 91 S. Ct. 160, 27 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1970); Cullum v. State, 244 Ark. 290, 424 S.W.2d 523 (1968). Although Arkansas law is silent on the question of whether a court must satisfy itself that there is a factual basis for a guilty plea, it is believed that most courts now make such a determination as a matter of course.

Rule 24.5 requires that a court determine whether a tendered plea is the result of a plea agreement. Neither the Arkansas Supreme Court nor the General Assembly has required such a prior inquiry regarding the plea agreement.

The Arkansas Supreme Court has made it clear that it favors, but does not require, the making of a verbatim record of guilty pleas. Turner v. State, 245 Ark. 439, 432 S.W.2d 757 (1968); Orman v. Bishop, 243 Ark. 609, 420 S.W.2d 908 (1967), and Medley, supra. Rule 24.7 goes further by requiring the making of a verbatim record of any proceeding at which a defendant enters a plea of guilty or nolo contendere.

Rule 24.8 facilitates simultaneous disposition of several offenses committed by a defendant by allowing him to waive venue and enter a guilty plea to any offense committed in this state, whether or not he has been formally charged with that offense. This provision is grounded on the assumption that the contemplated waiver of venue is permissible if effected pursuant to the detailed requirements of the rule. See, Cockrell v. Dobbs, 238 Ark. 348, 381 S.W.2d 756 (1964). See, also, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-1426 (Repl. 1964) and interpretive case authority respecting presumption as to venue.

The Comment to Rule 24 gives explicit recognition to charge and sentence concession practice already universally followed.

Rule 25 is addressed to plea discussions and agreements. "Plea bargaining" has, of course, received the explicit approval of the Arkansas Supreme Court. Meyers v. State, 252 Ark. 367, 479 S.W.2d 238 (1972). Consequently, Rule 25.1 follows existing case law and practice in permitting "plea discussions" where "it would serve the interest of the public in the effective administration of justice." The comment sets out guidelines for prosecutors and is virtually a verbatim rendition of Standards, Pleas of Guilty § 3.1(b).

Rule 25.2 and the comment accompanying it set out the roles to be played by the defendant and his attorney in the negotiation and decision making process.

The trial judge's responsibilities in this area are governed by Rule 25.3 which is without counterpart in present Arkansas statutory law. The rule is fashioned to eliminate to the maximum extent possible the chance of a defendant misunderstanding the nature and consequences of the plea bargaining procedure.

Rule 25.4 is drawn from Rules 29(d) and 32(e) of the Uniform Rules of Criminal Procedure (Second Tentative Draft; 1973), proposed by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, hereafter cited Uniform Rules. The rule is designed to promote free and open plea negotiations by eliminating the possibility that the substance of statements made during such discussions will be used against a defendant. Evidence that discussions took place is also declared inadmissible. As is pointed out in the commentary to the Uniform Rules, the provision is similar in concept to Standards, Pleas of Guilty § 3.4.

There is no Arkansas statutory or decisional authority with regard to permitting testimony as to a withdrawn guilty plea. There is a split of authority in other jurisdictions. See, Annot., 86 A.L.R.2d 326 (1962); commentary to Standards, Pleas of Guilty § 2.2 at 59. Cf., Barnhardt v. State, 169 Ark. 567, 275 S.W. 909 (1925), holding admissible testimony that a defendant entered guilty plea, in a justice of the peace court, to a charge related to an offense for which he was subsequently tried in circuit court. See, also, Comment, Evidence — Admissibility of Withdrawn Plea of Guilty in Criminal Trial, 3 Ark. L. Rev. 471 (1949).

Rule 26 deals with the circumstances under which a defendant must be allowed to withdraw a plea of guilty or nolo contendere, and the effect of such a withdrawal on pending or subsequent criminal, civil, or administrative proceedings.

Present Arkansas statutory authority is found at Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-1222 (Repl. 1964). This statute apparently curtails the trial court's discretion to permit withdrawal in so far as it provides that the plea may be withdrawn before judgment. See, Thornton v. State, 243 Ark. 829, 422 S.W.2d 852 (1968). Of course, notwithstanding the foregoing statutory language, a circuit court may set aside a judgment of conviction prior to the expiration of the term of court in which it was entered. Morris v. State, 226 Ark. 472, 290 S.W.2d 624 (1956).

In setting out specific guidelines to facilitate a determination of whether "manifest injustice" requires that withdrawal be permitted, Rule 26.1(c) speaks where current statutory law is silent. For decisional law respecting with-

Rule 24.1. Scope of article.

The provisions of this Article shall be applied in all criminal cases in circuit courts of this state and, to the extent constitutionally required and whenever otherwise practicable, in criminal cases in other courts.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 24.1

Rule 37. Virtually all cases arising under all subparts of Rule 24 are decisions on petitions for post-conviction relief under Rule 37. That rule and the annotations thereto should be consulted. Analysis of rules of pleading, burden of proof, and the standard of review in Rule 37 proceedings is beyond the scope of the commentary to this rule.

CASE NOTES

In General.

A plea of guilty is in effect until the trial court orders it withdrawn. Kennedy v. State, 297 Ark. 488, 763 S.W.2d 648 (1989).

Failure to Ascertain If Plea Voluntary.

Failure of the trial court to ascertain whether a guilty plea is voluntarily given in accordance with this rule does not automatically make the plea involuntary. Smith v. State, 264 Ark. 329, 571 S.W.2d 591 (1978).

Rule Mandatory.

This rule is mandatory. McDaniel v. State, 288 Ark. 629, 708 S.W.2d 613 (1986); Peterson v. State, 296 Ark. 324, 756 S.W.2d 897 (1988).

Substantial Compliance.

Where the defendant was advised of his rights before his guilty plea was accepted and where the trial court was informed of the details of the crime and the circumstances surrounding the defendant's arrest, the defendant's contention that the trial court ignored provisions of this rule in that the court was not advised of the facts of the case, and that the sentencing judge stated that he did not know what had happened, was without basis and there was substantial compliance with this rule. Shipman v. State, 261 Ark. 559, 550 S.W.2d 424 (1977).

Compliance with Ark. R. Crim. P. 24 is mandatory, but substantial compliance will suffice. Snelgrove v. State, 292 Ark. 116, 728 S.W.2d 497 (1987).

Rule 24.2. Aid of counsel.

A defendant shall not be required to plead until he has had an opportunity to retain counsel, or, if he is eligible for the appointment of counsel, until counsel has been appointed, or, in either case, unless he has waived or refused the assistance of counsel.

CASE NOTES

Substantial Compliance.

Where the evidence showed that the defendant had been in jail for two months without representation when he was sentenced, the defendant's father had been unable or unwilling to procure counsel, and the defendant had been represented by a public defender, the defendant was not denied the aid of counsel required by this rule. Shipman v. State, 261 Ark. 559, 550 S.W.2d 424 (1977).

Where trial judge explained to defendant that he was charged with having conspired with others to promote the commission of the capital murder and that the range of punishment was not less than 5 nor more than 50 years or life and/or a fine not to exceed $15,000 the record contained a prima facie showing of substantial compliance with this rule. Welch v. State, 283 Ark. 281, 675 S.W.2d 641 (1984).

Rule 24.3. Pleading by defendant.

(a) A plea of guilty or nolo contendere shall be received only from the defendant himself in open court, except that counsel may enter a plea of guilty or nolo contendere on behalf of a defendant in misdemeanor cases where only a fine is imposed by the court. If the defendant is a corporation the plea may be received from counsel or an authorized corporate officer.

(b) With the approval of the court and the consent of the prosecuting attorney, a defendant may enter a conditional plea of guilty or nolo contendere, reserving in writing the right, on appeal from the judgment,

(i) to review an adverse determination of a pretrial motion to suppress seized evidence or a custodial statement;

(ii) to review an adverse determination of a pretrial motion to dismiss a charge because not brought to trial within the time provided in Rule 28.1(b) or (c); or

(iii) to review an adverse determination of a pretrial motion challenging the constitutionality of the statute defining the offense with which the defendant is charged.

(c) A defendant may plead nolo contendere only with the consent of the court. The court shall not accept a plea of nolo contendere unless it is satisfied, after due consideration of the views of the parties, that the interest of the public in the effective administration of justice would thereby be served.

(d) No plea of guilty or nolo contendere shall be accepted by any court unless the prosecuting attorney for the governmental unit in which the offense occurred is given the opportunity to be heard at the time the plea is tendered. In any criminal case in which trial by jury is a right, a court shall not accept a plea of guilty or nolo contendere unless the prosecuting attorney has assented to the waiver of trial by jury.

CONDITIONAL PLEA FORM

[For use with Rule 24.3(b), Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure]

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF _____, ARKANSAS
_____ Division

No. _____

v.
_____, Defendant

CONDITIONAL PLEA

I, _____ (name of defendant), with the approval of the court, and the consent of the Prosecuting Attorney am entering a plea of [guilty] [no contest] to

- Count 1. _____
- Count 2. _____
- Count 3. _____

I understand my plea is conditioned upon the filing of an appeal on the issue of _____ (describe [motion to suppress seized evidence] [motion to suppress custodial statement] [motion to dismiss a charge because not brought to trial within the time provided in Rule 28.1 (b) or (c)] or [challenge to the constitutionality of Ark. Code Ann. § _____] upon which appeal will be based).

I understand that, if the judge approves my plea of [guilty] [no contest], a judgment and sentence will be entered, and that I may appeal on the issue specified above in the manner provided by the rules of court.

I understand that if I win my appeal on the issue specified above, that I may withdraw my plea of [guilty] [no contest].

I have read and understand the above. I have discussed the case and my constitutional rights with my lawyer. I understand that by pleading [guilty] [no contest], if my plea is not later withdrawn, I will be giving up my right to a trial by jury, to confront, cross-examine, and compel the attendance of witnesses, and my privilege against self-incrimination. I agree to enter my plea as indicated above on the terms and conditions set forth herein.

HISTORY: Amended July 13, 1987, effective October 1, 1987; amended February 15, 2001; amended October 2, 2003; amended September 18, 2008, effective October 1, 2008; amended April 9, 2009, effective June 1, 2009; amended February 23, 2012, effective April 1, 2012.

Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

The last sentence was added to subdivision (d). It does not change prior practice, but incorporates the requirement found in Rule 31.1 that the prosecuting attorney must not only be given the opportunity to be heard in response to a plea, but also he must assent if a jury trial is to be waived.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2003

Amendment: Subsection (b) was amended to clarify that a defendant may reserve the right to appeal following an adverse determination on a motion to suppress a custodial statement as well as a motion to suppress seized evidence.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2009

Amendment: The 2009 change permitted a defendant to enter a conditional plea of guilty following the court's denial of a motion to dismiss due to a violation of the defendant's right to speedy trial as provided in Rule 28.1.

Amendment: Prior to the 2012 amendments, subsection (a) allowed the court to take a guilty plea to a misdemeanor not involving imprisonment even though the defendant was not present in the courtroom. The 2012 amendment made it clear that the court could also accept a plea of nolo contendere in such circumstances. A plea of guilty or nolo contendere when the defendant is absent is still subject to the requirements of subsections (c) and (d).

The 2012 amendment also broadened conditional pleas to include subsection (b)(iii).

Comment to Rule 24.3

It is not the purpose of this rule to impose any limitation on a court's discretion to refuse to accept either a plea of guilty or a plea of nolo contendere.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 24.3No Constitutional Right to Plead Guilty.

The Arkansas Supreme Court has held that the Constitution of the United States does not guarantee a criminal defendant the right to have a guilty plea accepted, but a state may confer such a right by statute or rule. Numan v. State, 291 Ark. 22, 722 S.W.2d 276 (1987). The Court went on to hold that Arkansas has no such statute or rule and that an Arkansas defendant does not have a right to plead guilty. The Court distinguished Ruiz v. State, 275 Ark. 410, 630 S.W.2d 44 (1982), Hayes v. State, 280 Ark. 509, 660 S.W.2d 648 (1983), and Fretwell v. State, 289 Ark. 91, 708 S.W.2d 630 (1986), pointing out that these were capital cases specifically governed by Rule 31.4, which does not apply to non-capital cases. Even in a capital case the defendant cannot avoid a jury trial by entering a plea of guilty under Rule 24. See Fretwell.

CASE NOTESIn General.

Under the express language of this rule, if a defendant makes a conditional guilty plea but, on appeal, does not obtain a favorable determination, there is no further direct appeal; at that time, the conditional plea becomes final and is treated the same as any other plea of guilty. Owens v. State, 318 Ark. 61, 883 S.W.2d 471 (1994).

Subsection (b) of this rule requires an appeal from the judgment, not the order denying the motion to suppress, thus, where defendant's attorney failed to appeal from the June 4, 2003, judgment and instead attempted to appeal from the November 4, 2002, denial of the motion to suppress, the May 7, 2003, appeal was rejected as untimely; had the notice of appeal listed the judgment and commitment order, rather than the denial of the motion to suppress, it would have been timely even though filed early. McDonald v. State, 354 Ark. 680, 124 S.W.3d 438 (2003).

By the terms of subsection (b) of this rule, conditional pleas, and the accompanying right to appeal, are limited to an adverse determination on a pretrial motion to suppress and it was not clear from the partial record that the requirements of this rule had been met; therefore, the appellate court abated defendant's appeal and remanded the matter for a determination of whether he ever informed his counsel that he wanted to appeal, whether the trial court ever made an adverse ruling on defendant's motion to suppress, and whether his guilty plea was entered conditionally. Smothers v. State, 359 Ark. 55, 194 S.W.3d 206 (2004).

Defendant's motion to file a belated appeal was granted where, although a notice of appeal was filed by defendant's attorney, he failed to appeal from the judgment as required under this rule; defendant was not at fault for counsel's failure to file a timely notice of appeal and he showed good cause for the motion to be granted. Lawson v. State, 367 Ark. 235, 238 S.W.3d 931 (2006).

Subdivision (b) of this rule did not apply as defendant did not enter a conditional plea of guilty. Spires v. State, 2013 Ark. 6 (2013).

Acceptance of Plea.

Court violated subsection (a) of this rule where it accepted a plea of nolo contendere through defendant's attorney, and sentenced defendant to a fine, imprisonment, and suspension of his driver's license even though he was not present. Elms v. State, 299 Ark. 419, 773 S.W.2d 89 (1989).

If evidence at a post-conviction hearing supplies the factual basis for a plea of guilty, the failure of the trial court to establish it at the plea hearing is not reversible error. Strafaci v. State, 300 Ark. 298, 778 S.W.2d 602 (1989).

After refusing to set aside an unconditional plea of guilty, a trial court has no authority to approve a conditional plea arrangement under subsection (b) of this rule. Mangrum v. State, 70 Ark. App. 46, 14 S.W.3d 889 (2000).

Circuit court properly rejected the juvenile's guilty plea and ordered a hearing on the State's transfer motion as there was no right constitutionally, statutorily, or otherwise for a criminal defendant to have his guilty plea accepted by the circuit court, and thus, no such right existed for a juvenile delinquent. Moreover, under Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.3, the circuit court had the right to exercise its discretion in deciding whether to accept the juvenile's plea. J.M. v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 78, 618 S.W.3d 190 (2021).

Appeals.

This rule does not provide for an appeal following a plea of nolo contendere where the appeal challenges the admissibility of evidence as distinguished from evidence illegally obtained. Pickett v. State, 301 Ark. 345, 783 S.W.2d 854 (1990).

Defendant who entered a guilty plea could not directly appeal the validity of his guilty plea insofar as he wished to appeal some aspect of the procedure followed at his guilty plea hearing that was an integral part of his plea. Matthews v. State, 305 Ark. 207, 807 S.W.2d 29 (1991).

The statute of limitations is "jurisdictional" in the sense of not being subject to waiver in a criminal case, but the jurisdictional nature of the alleged error does not create a basis for direct appeal to the Supreme Court from a judgment of conviction resulting from a guilty plea. Eckl v. State, 312 Ark. 544, 851 S.W.2d 428 (1993).

Absent showing that the defendant conditioned his guilty plea by reserving, in writing, his right to appeal, nor any indication that the trial court or the prosecutor consented, defendant's appeal will be dismissed. Noble v. State, 314 Ark. 240, 862 S.W.2d 234 (1993).

Subsection (b) of this rule was added to allow pleas of guilty conditioned on the reversal of a pretrial determination of a motion to suppress illegally obtained evidence; if the express terms of this rule are not complied with, the appellate court acquires no jurisdiction to hear the appeal of a conditional plea. Owens v. State, 318 Ark. 61, 883 S.W.2d 471 (1994).

Defendant who entered a conditional plea of guilty pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule could, on appeal, challenge the validity of a search warrant; challenges that an informant was unreliable and that incriminating statements made by her during the search should not be admissible were not within the ambit of subsection (b) of this rule. Costner v. State, 318 Ark. 806, 887 S.W.2d 533 (1994).

It is of no consequence when the trial court, the prosecutor, and the defense counsel agree that a defendant can enter a conditional plea and reserve his right to appeal, if the determination appealed from is not encompassed within subsection (b) of this rule. Fullerton v. State, 47 Ark. App. 141, 886 S.W.2d 887 (1994).

There is no right to appeal from a guilty plea except: an appeal from a conditional plea of guilty following the denial of a motion to suppress; an appeal on the issue of the application of jail time credit appears to be permissible; the denial of a post-judgment motion, filed after a guilty plea to correct an illegal sentence, is appealable; and a defendant may also appeal after a guilty plea when a jury sets punishment under the bifurcated procedure established by § 16-97-101(6). Hampton v. State, 48 Ark. App. 93, 890 S.W.2d 279 (1995).

Appeal from a conditional guilty plea dismissed where defendant's issue did not involve a suppression issue as contemplated by subsection (b) of this rule. Payne v. State, 327 Ark. 25, 937 S.W.2d 160 (1997).

Issues such as the trial court's upward departure from the sentencing guidelines, or an alleged violation of Ark. Sup. Ct. Admin. Order No. 6 having to do with cameras in the courtroom, are two points of appeal not permitted by subsection (b) of this rule; the issues must concern suppression of evidence. Wofford v. State, 330 Ark. 8, 952 S.W.2d 646 (1997).

When a defendant enters a conditional guilty plea, he may retain a right to appeal an adverse suppression ruling. Green v. State, 334 Ark. 484, 978 S.W.2d 300 (1998).

Denial of the inmate's petition for postconviction relief was proper where an agreement between parties did not convert an otherwise incognizable claim into a cognizable one; Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 did not provide an avenue to raise matters that could have been raised on direct appeal, including constitutional claims, and a defendant ordinarily did not have a right to appeal a guilty plea, except as provided in subsection (b) of this rule. Beulah v. State, 352 Ark. 472, 101 S.W.3d 802 (2003).

Where defense attorney filed an untimely appeal of the court's denial of defendant's motion to suppress evidence, rather than waiting to file a notice appeal of the judgment and commitment order, the notice of appeal was rejected and the court ordered defense attorney to file a motion and affidavit accepting full responsibility for her error. McDonald v. State, 354 Ark. 28, 124 S.W.3d 438 (2003).

Dismissal of defendant's appeal was proper where the court lacked jurisdiction because defendant failed to strictly comply with subsection (b) of this rule in that the conditional plea did not specifically state that defendant reserved his right to appeal the outcome of the suppression hearing; moreover, the document failed to demonstrate that the trial court ap-

State argued that defendants were not entitled to a conditional-plea appeal because the specific requirements of this rule were not met as to approval of the court and the consent of the prosecuting attorney; however, the commitment orders with an attached sheet entitled "Additional Terms/Conditions of Disposition" indicated that the pleas entered were conditional, the hearing transcript showed the trial court asked defense counsels "whether they were going to have some conditional pleas or not" and the prosecutor appeared and acquiesced to the entry of the negotiated plea agreement, thus, defendants were entitled to appeal the suppression issue. Miller v. State, 81 Ark. App. 401, 102 S.W.3d 896 (2003).

Defendant's appeal of his conviction for manufacturing methamphetamine and possession of methamphetamine with intent to deliver was dismissed for want of jurisdiction where the judgment and commitment order commemorating defendant's oral entry of guilty pleas, specifically reserving his right to appeal the suppression issue, was signed six days later and, thus, was not a contemporaneous writing for purposes of subsection (b) of this rule. Grupa v. State, 83 Ark. App. 389, 128 S.W.3d 470 (2003).

Defendant could not proceed with a pro se appeal because his guilty pleas were not conditionally entered pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. Smothers v. State, 359 Ark. 412, 198 S.W.3d 119 (2004).

Defendant could not appeal the denial of his motion to withdraw his guilty plea where the plea was not conditionally premised on the denial of a suppression motion under this rule, there was no challenge to evidence presented in a sentencing hearing, and the appeal was not a post-trial motion challenging the validity of the sentence. Hewitt v. State, 362 Ark. 369, 208 S.W.3d 185 (2005).

Because subsection (b) of this rule required an appeal from the judgment, not the order denying the motion to suppress, defendant's notice appealing the order denying his motion to suppress was defective and of no effect; therefore, neither the court of appeals nor the Arkansas Supreme Court had jurisdiction to hear his appeal. Hill v. State, 363 Ark. 505, 215 S.W.3d 586 (2005).

Dismissal of defendant's appeal was appropriate where defendant did not appeal from the judgment and conviction order that was entered based on his conditional guilty plea but, instead, appealed from the plea agreement itself, which was insufficient to grant the court jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Webb v. State, 94 Ark. App. 234, 228 S.W.3d 527 (2006).

Inmate's attorney stated in the motion for a belated appeal that he erred in filing a notice of appeal from the inmate's entry of a conditional plea of guilty on April 6, 2006, rather than from the April 6, 2006, judgment, as required by subsection (b) of this rule; while the supreme court no longer required an affidavit admitting fault before it would consider the motion for a belated appeal, an attorney should candidly admit fault where he erred and was responsible for the failure to perfect the appeal. The inmate's attorney candidly admitted fault; thus, the supreme court granted the inmate's motion for a belated appeal. Downing v. State, 369 Ark. 180, 251 S.W.3d 243 (2007).

Motion for rule on clerk was granted because defendant's attorney candidly admitted that he was at fault for failing to timely perfect an appeal when he erroneously appealed the denial of a motion to suppress rather than a judgment of conviction, which the attorney recognized as an error under this rule. Fuller v. State, 370 Ark. 469, 261 S.W.3d 452 (2007).

Court dismissed an appeal of the denial of defendant's motions to suppress all evidence obtained as a result of an allegedly unlawful stop because the appeal involved the admissibility of evidence as distinguished from evidence illegally obtained as the basis for an alleged unlawful traffic stop, which was not contemplated by subsection (b) of this rule. Nicholas v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 696 (2010).

Defendant was precluded from raising on appeal that the trial court abused its discretion when it sentenced him to a term of years without just cause for departure from the sentencing guidelines, because defendant pled guilty and neither of the exceptions under subsection (b) of this rule applied. Howerton v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 331, 413 S.W.3d 861 (2012).

Appeal challenging the denial of the posttrial petition to withdraw a plea of guilty was dismissed, because in his affidavit, the petitioner verified that the statements in his affidavit were true and correct, however, he did not verify that the statements in his petition for postconviction relief were true and correct. Keck v. State, 2013 Ark. 139 (2013).

Appellate Review.

Under former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.1, juvenile defendants may not appeal from a plea of guilty or nolo contendere, except as provided by subsection (b) of this rule, which permits a defendant to enter a guilty plea conditioned on the reversal of a pretrial determination of a motion to suppress illegally obtained evidence; thus, where juveniles' guilty pleas for burglary and theft were not conditional and did not fall within the terms of subsection (b) of this rule, the appellate court was precluded from hearing their appeals. Mason v. State, 323 Ark. 361, 914 S.W.2d 751 (1996).

Subsection (b) of this rule permits review of conditional guilty pleas solely with respect to adverse rulings on motions to suppress illegally obtained evidence. Payne v. State, 327 Ark. 25, 937 S.W.2d 160 (1997).

Appellate court declined to consider challenges to the sufficiency of the evidence and the factual basis of defendant's plea where defendant entered a plea under subsection (b) of this rule. Frette v. City of Springdale, 331 Ark. 103, 959 S.W.2d 734 (1998).

Where defendant entered a plea of guilty conditioned upon the Supreme Court of Arkansas affirming the trial court's decision that the city had the authority to regulate defendant's racing activities and the trial court's decision that a city ordinance was constitutional, the Supreme Court of Arkansas lacked jurisdiction to hear defendant's appeal because subsection (b) of this rule only allowed conditional pleas of guilty to adverse determinations of pretrial motions to suppress evidence. Berry v. City of Fayetteville, 354 Ark. 470, 125 S.W.3d 171 (2003).

Appellate court acquired no jurisdiction to hear an appeal from a conditional plea in the absence of compliance with the express terms of subsection (b) of this rule; because defendant's argument pertaining to the evidence of the tanks went to its admissibility, and not to whether the tanks themselves were illegally obtained, the appellate court did not have jurisdiction of this point on appeal. Dondanville v. State, 85 Ark. App. 532, 157 S.W.3d 571 (2004).

Report of plea negotiations between state and defendant denoted a conditional guilty plea that allowed defendant to be free during his appeal of the suppression issue as it was in writing and was signed by the prosecutor, defense counsel and defendant; thus, the report was a sufficient writing to memorialize defendant's intent to enter a conditional plea, and the appellate court had jurisdiction over defendant's appeal. Gonder v. State, 95 Ark. App. 144, 234 S.W.3d 887 (2006).

Appeal from an adverse ruling on a defendant's motion to reveal the identities of the confidential informants who gave information for a search warrant was rejected because subsection (b) of this rule did not provide any appellate relief following a conditional guilty plea for such an argument. Wagner v. State, 2010 Ark. 389, 368 S.W.3d 914 (2010).

Appeal of defendant who had entered a plea of nolo contendere to two counts of theft of property was dismissed where she was arguing on appeal that the trial court erred in sentencing her to the maximum sentence when the presentence report recommended probation and in not advising her of her right to withdraw her plea, but she did not file a posttrial motion challenging the validity and legality of the sentence, and her appeal fell within none of the other exceptions to the rule against appeals from guilty pleas. Smalley v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 221 (2012).

Construing subdivision (b)(iii) of this rule just as it reads, an appeal can be heard from a conditional plea following the denial of a pre-trial motion challenging the constitutionality of the statute defining the offense to which the defendant pled guilty, regardless of whether the challenge to the statute is an as-applied challenge or a facial challenge; therefore, the appellate court had jurisdiction to consider the appeal. Laymon v. State, 2015 Ark. 485, 478 S.W.3d 203 (2015).

Supreme Court of Arkansas lacked jurisdiction to consider defendant's appeal of the denial of his pre-plea request for continuance to hire private counsel because he did not enter a conditional guilty plea or challenge the legality of the sentence or the admission of evidence during his sentencing trial, and defendant specifically acknowledged he was waiving his right to appeal. Burns v. State, 2017 Ark. 280, 528 S.W.3d 269 (2017).

Under subsection (b)(iii) of this rule, in defendant's appeal after his conditional no-contest plea, he was only allowed to challenge the constitutionality of Ark. Code Ann. § 5-73-103 as that was the only statute under which he was charged, and his arguments pertaining to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-93-303 were not considered. Kimbrell v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 555, 533 S.W.3d 114 (2017).

Appellate jurisdiction existed under the Bailey exception where defendant had pled guilty, a sentencing hearing was held separate and apart from the guilty plea, there was no agreement setting out the amount of restitution to be paid before he entered the plea, and the appeal raised only an issue of the amount of the restitution order. Bushnell v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 566, 614 S.W.3d 476 (2020).

Compliance.

The reservation-in-writing requirement under subsection (b) of this rule must be strictly followed. Payne v. State, 327 Ark. 25, 937 S.W.2d 160 (1997).

Absent compliance with this rule, the court has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal, even where there has been an attempt at trial to enter a conditional plea. Ray v. State, 328 Ark. 176, 941 S.W.2d 427 (1997).

Appellate court dismissed defendants' appeal for lack of jurisdiction due to the precedent mandating that it strictly construe the requirements of subsection (b) of this rule; the conditional-guilty pleas were not signed by the prosecutor, and the appellate court had no record that indicated acquiescence by the prosecutor to a conditional plea. Bristow v. State, 82 Ark. App. 145, 119 S.W.3d 527 (2003).

Where defendant's attorney filed a notice of appeal following the denial of his motion to suppress, but failed to file an appeal of the order of conditional plea entered a month later, the Court granted defendant's motion to file a belated appeal as defendant was not at fault for the attorney's error. Williams v. State, 366 Ark. 583, 237 S.W.3d 93 (2006).

Defendant's purported conditional guilty plea did not conform with subsection (b) of this rule because there was no reservation in writing of his right, on appeal from the judgment, to review the trial court's denial of his motion to suppress; hence, an appellate court lacked jurisdiction over his appeal. Southern v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 623 (2013).

Consent of Prosecutor.

Where the prosecutor is present when a defendant enters a conditional guilty plea, contests any objectionable aspects of the disposition of the case, and allows the plea to be entered as a negotiated plea of guilty, the requirement of subsection (b) of this rule that the State consent to a conditional guilty plea is satisfied. McCormick v. State, 74 Ark. App. 349, 48 S.W.3d 549 (2001).

Construction.

Both former § 16-91-101(c) and the corresponding rule, former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.1, provide that there shall be no appeal from a plea of guilty; however, one exception is found in subsection (b) of this rule, which provides a procedure for a defendant to seek review of an adverse determination of a pretrial motion to suppress evidence. Hill v. State, 318 Ark. 408, 887 S.W.2d 275 (1994).

This rule does not provide for a conditional plea with reservation of the right to review of an adverse speedy trial determination, nor does this rule provide for a conditional guilty plea reserving the right to an appeal from a motion to dismiss based on double jeopardy grounds. Fullerton v. State, 47 Ark. App. 141, 886 S.W.2d 887 (1994).

Even though this rule contains no express requirement that the State assent to a guilty plea except in cases of conditional pleas of guilty or nolo contendere, subsection (d) of this rule does require that the trial court give the prosecutor the opportunity to be heard before accepting a guilty plea, and thus this rule can be read in harmony with Ark. R. Crim. P. 31.1. State v. Vasquez-Aerreola, 327 Ark. 617, 940 S.W.2d 451 (1997).

As a general rule, one is not allowed to appeal from a conviction resulting from a plea of guilty or nolo contendere under RAP-Crim 1(a); subsection (b) of this rule presents an exception, but only for the purpose of determining on appeal whether a defendant should be allowed to withdraw her plea if it is concluded that evidence should have been, but was not, suppressed. Wofford v. State, 330 Ark. 8, 952 S.W.2d 646 (1997).

Motion to Set Aside Plea.

Where the accumulation of errors, the obvious confusion at the plea hearing, and the complete failure to obtain a plea on one charge cast serious doubt on the intelligent nature of the defendant's plea, the defendant's motion to set aside his plea should have been granted. Brundage v. State, 298 Ark. 606, 770 S.W.2d 122 (1989).

Where defendant was stopped and cited for driving while intoxicated, the roadblock orchestrated by the police was not an illegal detention; thus, defendant was not entitled to withdraw his plea of guilty to driving while intoxicated. Sheridan v. State, 368 Ark. 510, 247 S.W.3d 481 (2007).

Motion to Suppress Evidence.

A motion in limine to suppress the use of a prior conviction as evidence is distinguishable from the suppression of evidence contemplated in subsection (b) of this rule. A motion to suppress evidence presupposes that the evidence was illegally obtained, whereas a motion to suppress use of a prior conviction deals with the admissibility of evidence, rather than "illegally obtained" evidence. Jenkins v. State, 301 Ark. 20, 781 S.W.2d 461 (1989).

A question of admissibility is distinguishable from the suppression of evidence contemplated by this rule. Scalco v. State, 42 Ark. App. 134, 856 S.W.2d 23 (1993).

Subsection (b) of this rule does not encompass a mere motion to exclude evidence as inadmissible; instead, suppression of evidence as contemplated by subsection (b) of this rule presupposes that the evidence was illegally obtained. Scalco v. State, 42 Ark. App. 134, 856 S.W.2d 23 (1993).

Defendant's motion to suppress should have been granted where the officers lacked probable cause to arrest him for driving under a suspended or revoked driver's license and were consequently precluded from inventorying his impounded vehicle in which 60 kilograms (130 pounds) of cocaine were discovered. Mounts v. State, 48 Ark. App. 1, 888 S.W.2d 321 (1994).

The defendant failed to comply with the requirements of this rule and, therefore, his appeal with regard to the suppression of evidence was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction where (1) there was no indication that the prosecuting attorney consented to a conditional plea, and (2) the defendant's "Guilty Plea Statement" explicitly contradicted the notion that his plea was conditional and that he reserved the right to challenge the court's disposition of his motion to suppress. Simmons v. State, 72 Ark. App. 238, 34 S.W.3d 768 (2000).

In a case in which defendant, pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, appealed the trial court's denial of his motion to suppress evidence, he unsuccessfully argued that two deputies had no reasonable suspicion to believe that he was armed and dangerous, thereby justifying the pat-down search. Immediately prior to their encounter with defendant, the deputies were dealing with three individuals who appeared to be hiding from them, one of whom had a weapon on his person, defendant approached the deputies unprovoked and appeared to be under the influence of a drug, and the deputies saw a bulge in his pants soon after finding a knife on another suspect after seeing a similar bulge. Blount v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 219 (2010).

Suppression of drugs found in a strip search of defendant was properly denied because defendant was on parole and the conditions of his release required submission to search and seizure at any time, even without a search warrant, when requested by his probation officer. Johnson v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 476 (2012).

Even if the stop started when the officer knocked on appellant's window, the officer had reasonable suspicion that appellant was endangering other officers on the street, and the officer had authority to require appellant to stop; when the odor of alcohol became apparent, the officer had reasonable suspicion to ask appellant to get out of the vehicle, and as there was probable cause to arrest him for driving while intoxicated, the trial court did not err in denying appellant's motion to suppress. Ward v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 649 (2012).

Defendant entered a conditional plea of guilty to the charge against him, then appealed the denial of his motion to suppress, which was permitted under the rule. Lee v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 691, 449 S.W.3d 709 (2014).

Reserving Right to Review.

Although the record of trial revealed a reference by the trial court to "a document entitled Guilty Plea Statement," where neither the abstract nor the record of trial contained any reference to a writing reserving the right to review, the appeal was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction because there was a lack of strict compliance with the provisions of subsection (b) of this rule. Burress v. State, 321 Ark. 329, 902 S.W.2d 225 (1995).

Failure to comply strictly with the writing requirement in subsection (b) of this rule divests the appellate courts of jurisdiction. Tabor v. State, 326 Ark. 51, 930 S.W.2d 319 (1996).

The defendant met the rule's requirement of "reserving in writing" his right to appellate review where the record reflected that the handwritten word "conditional" appeared above the typed heading "PLEA STATEMENT" at the top of the plea statement he signed. Green v. State, 334 Ark. 484, 978 S.W.2d 300 (1998).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear a defendant's appeal of an adverse suppression ruling because, although defendant entered a conditional guilty plea under subsection (b) of this rule, he did not comply with the rule's requirement that the right to appeal an adverse suppression ruling be reserved in writing. Wa- ters v. State, 102 Ark. App. 8, 279 S.W.3d 493 (2008).

Defendant entered a conditional plea of nolo contendere to one count of sexual indecency with a child, reserving in writing his right to appeal the denial of his motion to dismiss for a speedy-trial violation under subsection (b) of this rule. The Court of Appeals of Arkansas held that defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated by the passage of 713 days after his arrest for sexual indecency with a child, because at least 435 days were excluded under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3 due to defendant's motions for continuances, reset trial dates, and his change of plea to not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect. Federick v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 552, 423 S.W.3d 649 (2012).

Appellant had waived his right to appeal where he stipulated to the violation of nonpayment of a fine and agreed not to contest the State's petition to revoke his suspended imposition of sentence, and he did not argue that his case fell under one of the established exceptions to the rule that appeals from unconditional guilty pleas are not allowed. Zemel v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 438 (2017).

Rule 24.4. Advice by court.

The court shall not accept a plea of guilty or nolo contendere from a defendant without first addressing the defendant personally, informing him of and determining that he understands:

- (a) the nature of the charge;
- (b) the mandatory minimum sentence, if any, on the charge;
- (c) the maximum possible sentence on the charge, including that possible from consecutive sentences;
- (d) that if the offense charged is one for which a different or additional punishment is authorized because the defendant has previously been convicted of an offense or offenses one (1) or more times, the previous conviction or convictions may be established after the entry of his plea in the present action, thereby subjecting him to such different or additional punishment; and
- (e) that if he pleads guilty or nolo contendere he waives his right to a trial by jury and the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him, except in capital cases where the death penalty is sought.

Voluntary Plea Made Without Advice From Court. Atkins v. State, 287 Ark. 445, 701 S.W.2d 109 (1985) illustrates that a voluntary guilty plea made without advice from the court as required by this rule is subject to being overturned. The Court held that the trial judge cannot determine that a plea is voluntary without having made certain that the accused has information about the nature of the charge and other things specified by Rule 24.4. Clark v. State, 271 Ark. 866, 611 S.W.2d 502 (1981), upholding a plea upon a finding of substantial compliance with Rule 24.4, was distinguished on grounds that the appellant in Clark was given more detailed advice and also because the court ascertained that there was a factual basis for the guilty plea in accordance with Rule 24.6.

Erroneous Advice About Parole Eligibility. In Clark, the defendant pleaded guilty to theft and was advised by the trial court that he would have to serve one-third of his sentence before becoming eligible for parole. The trial court was informed that the petitioner had a prior felony conviction. Upon arriving at the Department of Correction, petitioner learned that under Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-2829(B)(3) (Repl. 1977) he would not be eligible for parole until he had served one-half of his sentence because of the prior conviction. In a Rule 37 proceeding, he contended that the period of his incarceration should be reduced to comply with the advice he received from the trial judge. The Arkansas Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's denial of the petition, noting that credible testimony was adduced below that claimant had in fact been advised by counsel that the Department of Correction might take the position it ultimately did. The Court found that "there is ample evidence that appellant's plea was voluntary and with the knowledge that the provisions of § 43-2829(B)(3) . . . might eventually be applied to him . . ." 271 Ark. at 869, 611 S.W.2d at 503. Thus, the Court took into account information obtained not from the trial court but from defendant's attorney. More recent cases have cast considerable doubt on the court's continued willingness to uphold sentences on this theory. See McDaniel v. State, 288 Ark. 629, 708 S.W.2d 613 (1986); Atkins v. State. For a case remarkably similar to Clark on its facts, see Houff v. State, 268 Ark. 19, 593 S.W.2d 39 (1980).

Erroneous advice concerning parole eligibility does not automatically render a guilty plea involuntary. Garmon v. State, 290 Ark. 371, 374, 719 S.W.2d 699, 700 (1986), relying upon Haywood v. State, 288 Ark. 266, 704 S.W.2d 168 (1986). Neither does bad advice from defense counsel about the defendant's maximum exposure if convicted of the crime charged, so long as the defendant does not plead guilty out of fear of a long term of imprisonment that could not, in fact, be imposed. Garmon. Nor does vague and only partially correct advice from defense counsel about parole eligibility. Brown v. State, 291 Ark. 393, 725 S.W.2d 544 (1987). See, also, Carter v. State, 283 Ark. 23, 670 S.W.2d 439 (1984), where the Arkansas Supreme Court held that an attack stemming from asserted misinformation about parole eligibility is an attack on the execution of a sentence, not on the validity of the sentence imposed, and, is as such, not a proper matter to be considered in a petition for post-conviction relief.

Substantial Compliance. Earlier cases pointing out that there is no constitutional requirement under Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1969) that the maximum sentence and the right to a jury trial be explained to the defendant by a court accepting a guilty plea held that a reversal was not required if the record showed that defendant entered a plea "voluntarily and intelligently." Irons v. State, 267 Ark. 469, 474, 591 S.W.2d 650, 652; Sims v. State, 271 Ark. 142, 607 S.W.2d 393 (1980); Clark v. State. But McDaniel v. State, 288 Ark. 629, 708 S.W.2d 613 (1986) and Atkins v. State, 287 Ark. 445, 701 S.W.2d 109 (1985) signal the advent of a standard requiring strict compliance with Rule 24.4.

CASE NOTES

Duty of Court.

It is not enough that the prosecutor recite into the record the allegations against the accused; the court must ascertain from the accused whether he is pleading guilty because he believes he in fact is guilty. McDaniel v. State, 288 Ark. 629, 708 S.W.2d 613 (1986).

While it is a good practice for a trial judge to make a record concerning the recent use of drugs or alcohol, this rule does not mandate such an inquiry. Madewell v. State, 290 Ark. 580, 720 S.W.2d 913 (1986).

In accepting nolo contendere plea, trial court shall ask accused personally whether the facts proffered by the prosecution are those which accused does not contest. Snelgrove v. State, 292 Ark. 116, 728 S.W.2d 497 (1987).

Failure to Give Advice.

Because the defendant did not state that he would not have pled guilty had he been informed by the trial court that as a second offender, he would have to serve one half of his sentence before becoming eligible for parole, the defendant failed to establish that he was prejudiced by the trial court's failure to so inform him and he was not entitled to post-conviction relief on the ground that his plea was rendered involuntarily. Carter v. State, 283 Ark. 23, 670 S.W.2d 439 (1984).

Where the defendant was not personally informed by the court of the nature of the burglary charge or any of the other items required by this rule, except that he could have a jury trial, nor was there any compliance with Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.6 which requires the court to make such inquiry as will establish that there is a factual basis for the plea, the defendant's plea of guilty to the burglary charge had to be set aside. Atkins v. State, 287 Ark. 445, 701 S.W.2d 109 (1985).

This rule does not require that, without some indication in the record to show that the trial court fully advised the defendant, an uncounseled DWI conviction may not be allowed to enhance the sentence in any subsequent DWI conviction. Dickerson v. State, 24 Ark. App. 36, 747 S.W.2d 122 (1988).

State failed in its burden to show that defendant's guilty plea to a charge of Class Y felony possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver was voluntarily and intelligently entered because there was no showing that the trial court complied with this rule or Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.4, 24.5, 24.6, or 24.7 and no showing that defendant actually pled guilty. The guilty plea statement signed by defendant indicated only that he was pleading guilty to three Class D felonies, and there was no recording of any guilty plea made before the trial court as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.7. Dorsey v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 183, 393 S.W.3d 578 (2012).

Full Disclosure by Court.

Where the record showed the trial court addressed the defendant directly and stated the charges and the factual circumstances surrounding each count, the defendant acknowledged his guilty plea was consistent with the facts as he knew them regarding the assault and kidnapping charges, and he declared his guilt on each charge, the court followed the requirements regarding the receipt of a guilty plea, and the defendant's guilty plea was voluntary. Garmon v. State, 290 Ark. 371, 719 S.W.2d 699 (1986).

There is no requirement that the defendant himself must furnish the entire factual basis for accepting a guilty plea. Robinson v. State, 296 Ark. 89, 752 S.W.2d 2 (1988).

Trial court properly revoked defendant's suspended sentence for nonsupport because defendant's purported lack of knowledge and understanding of the obligation was inconsistent with what defendant was told and what defendant admitted during the process of pleading guilty. Rhoades v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 730, 379 S.W.3d 659 (2010).

Purpose.

The purpose of this rule is to inform the defendant before he makes the ultimate decision to plead guilty. McDaniel v. State, 288 Ark. 629, 708 S.W.2d 613 (1986).

Sentences.

No prejudice resulted from the failure to mention consecutive sentences because the sentences were pronounced to be served concurrently. Smith v. State, 300 Ark. 291, 778 S.W.2d 924 (1989).

Substantial Compliance.

Where defendant was advised by his attorney that discovery of his prior felony conviction in another state by the department of corrections might result under § 16-93-604 in his not being eligible for parole until he had served one-half of his sentence, there was a voluntary plea on his part, even though judge advised him at trial that only one-third of the sentence would have to be served prior to being eligible for parole, since there was substantial if not technical compliance with this rule by the trial judge; thus defendant's remedy, if any, was an action against the department of corrections rather than a Rule 37 proceeding. Clark v. State, 271 Ark. 866, 611 S.W.2d 502 (1981).

Substantial compliance with this rule is sufficient and the critical question is whether the plea was voluntary. Carter v. State, 283 Ark. 23, 670 S.W.2d 439 (1984); Van Harris v. State, 297 Ark. 573, 764 S.W.2d 606 (1989).

Despite a trial judge's failure to comply strictly with this Rule in accepting a plea of guilty, deficiencies may be supplied at the post-conviction hearing; the key question is whether the plea of guilty was made intelligently and voluntarily. Welch v. State, 283 Ark. 281, 675 S.W.2d 641 (1984).

Where the record reflected that the defendant understood the rights he was waiving by his entry of a guilty plea and that he entered the plea of his own free will, in that in open court the defendant admitted that after premeditation and deliberation he caused the death of the victim, the evidence was sufficient to support his conviction. Travis v. State, 283 Ark. 478, 678 S.W.2d 341 (1984).

Where the defendant, charged with failure to appear, at first indicated uncertainty of the extent to which his attorney had advised him of the matters mentioned in this rule, the public defender stated in open court substantially all of the information required by the rule, and the defendant ultimately acknowledged he had been advised, the record was sufficient to show substantial compliance with this rule and the voluntariness of the guilty plea. Atkins v. State, 287 Ark. 445, 701 S.W.2d 109 (1985).

A substantial, though not technical, compliance with this rule is sufficient. Peterson v. State, 296 Ark. 324, 756 S.W.2d 897 (1988).

Compliance held not to be substantial. Van Harris v. State, 297 Ark. 573, 764 S.W.2d 606 (1989).

Trial court held in substantial compliance. Wallace v. Willock, 301 Ark. 69, 781 S.W.2d 484 (1989); White v. State, 301 Ark. 74, 781 S.W.2d 478 (1989).

Defendant was advised of the possible sentences and understood the plea agreement, including the application of the habitual offender enhancement, before the plea was accepted and, from the testimony, the trial court had before it evidence that defendant was well aware of the maximum sentence on the highest level charge, the effect of his habitual criminal status on the sentencing ranges, and the possibility that the other shorter sentences could be run consecutively to the life sentence; thus, the trial court properly determined that the plea was voluntary and defendant's conviction was not void, even were the state was required to provide evidence at the plea hearing of the previous conditions and failed to do so. Pardue v. State, 363 Ark. 567, 215 S.W.3d 650 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's petition for a writ of error coram nobis after defendant pled guilty to aggravated robbery, possession of a firearm by certain persons, and robbery because the rule was followed during the plea hearing; none of the evidence allegedly withheld by the prosecution would have prevented the trial court from accepting a plea under the rule. Carter v. State, 2012 Ark. 186 (2012).

Rule 24.5. Determining voluntariness of plea.

The court shall not accept a plea of guilty or nolo contendere without first determining that the plea is voluntary. The court shall determine whether the tendered plea is the result of a plea agreement. If it is, the court shall require that the agreement be stated. The court shall also address the defendant personally and determine whether any force or threats, or any promises apart from a plea agreement, were used to induce the plea.

Duty of Trial Judge. The Arkansas Supreme Court has ruled that Rule 24.5, read with Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1969) and Byler v. State, 257 Ark. 15, 513 S.W.2d 801 (1974), requires that the trial judge ascertain whether a plea of guilty is voluntary. Irons v. State, 267 Ark. 469, 591 S.W.2d 650 (1980). The Court went on to rule, however, that: There is no constitutional requirement that the trial judge make the explanations of the right to jury trial and of the maximum possible sentence required by Boykin, and a silent record does not require automatic reversal if it be proved at a post-conviction evidentiary hearing that the plea was voluntarily and intelligently made. Irons, at 474, 591 S.W.2d at 652, relying upon Smith v. State, 264 Ark. 329, 571 S.W.2d 591 (1978).

The judge must make inquiries of the defendant personally to determine that his plea is voluntary under Rule 24.5. Simmons v. State, 265 Ark. 48, 578 S.W.2d 12 (1979).

Pleas by Minors. Just as parental consent is not essential to a voluntary custodial confession, it is not required for a voluntary plea of guilty in open court. Shipman v. State, 261 Ark. 559, 550 S.W.2d 424 (1977).

Mandatory Plea Agreement Disclosure. The Arkansas Supreme Court has ruled that "it [is] mandatory that the trial court determine whether the plea [is] the result of a plea agreement [and] require that the agreement be stated" Irons v. State; Zoller v. State, 282 Ark. 380, 669 S.W.2d 434 (1984); Marshall v. State, 262 Ark. 726, 561 S.W.2d 76 (1978).

CASE NOTES

In General.

The polestar when a guilty plea is challenged is to determine whether the plea was made intelligently and voluntarily. Peterson v. State, 296 Ark. 324, 756 S.W.2d 897 (1988).

Trial court clearly determined that defendant's testimony showed that he had a good understanding of consecutive and concurrent sentences, the difference between the actual sentence and the down time discussed, and the age fifty-five rule; further, any deficiencies in substantial compliance with the requirement that the plea agreement be stated were overcome by the evidence presented in the postconviction relief hearing concerning the information provided to defendant and defendant's knowledge and understanding of the sentencing range and actual plea agreement. Pardue v. State, 363 Ark. 567, 215 S.W.3d 650 (2005).

Collateral Attack.

A guilty plea received under Arkansas' procedures is not immune from an attack in a habeas corpus petition. Pennington v. Housewright, 666 F.2d 329 (8th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 918, 102 S. Ct. 1775, 72 L. Ed. 2d 178 (1982).

Where the record before a federal district court on a petition for a writ of habeas corpus showed that the petitioner, pursuant to a plea bargaining agreement, pleaded guilty to first-degree murder after being charged with capital felony murder, that he had executed three plea statements which provided that his guilty plea was voluntarily and knowingly made, that he had admitted his guilt and described the crimes to the trial court, and that he had responded affirmatively to the trial court's questions about understanding the consequences of such a plea, the Arkansas procedures governing the acceptance of guilty pleas were followed and the federal court was justified in dismissing the habeas corpus petition without holding an evidentiary hearing on the voluntariness of the guilty plea. Pennington v. Housewright, 666 F.2d 329 (8th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 918, 102 S. Ct. 1775, 72 L. Ed. 2d 178 (1982).

Evidence.

Where the defendant claimed that his guilty plea was involuntarily made and the records of the trial court and the post-conviction hearing were silent on the issue, the judgment of conviction was set aside. Irons v. State, 267 Ark. 469, 591 S.W.2d 650 (1980).

Evidence established that plea was voluntary. Travis v. Lockhart, 787 F.2d 409 (8th Cir. 1986); Snelgrove v. State, 292 Ark. 116, 728 S.W.2d 497 (1987).

Trial court properly revoked defendant's suspended sentence for nonsupport because defendant's purported lack of knowledge and understanding of the obligation was inconsistent with what defendant was told and what defendant admitted during the process of pleading guilty. Rhoades v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 730, 379 S.W.3d 659 (2010).

Parole Information.

The United States Constitution does not require the state to furnish a defendant with information about parole eligibility in order for the defendant's plea of guilty to be voluntary. Hill v. Lockhart, 474 U.S. 52, 106 S. Ct. 366, 88 L. Ed. 2d 203 (1985).

Plea Bargaining Agreement.

In a prosecution for attempted robbery, the trial court's failure to determine whether defendant's guilty pleas were the result of a plea agreement raised the possibility of prejudice; thus, defendant's sentence on the attempted robbery conviction would be modified on appeal to conform with an alleged plea bargaining agreement. McGee v. State, 262 Ark. 473, 557 S.W.2d 885 (1977).

Where a plea agreement was made whereby a defendant would receive a five year sentence in return for his guilty plea and the court did not advise the defendant that such an agreement was not binding on the court and did not inquire in open court as to such agreement, the 20 year sentence pronounced by the trial court would be reduced to five years if acceptable to the state, or, if the reduction was not acceptable to the state, then the defendant would be permitted to plead anew. Marshall v. State, 262 Ark. 726, 561 S.W.2d 76 (1978).

Where a guilty plea was entered in a rape prosecution it was mandatory that the trial court determine whether the plea was the result of a plea agreement, require that the agreement be stated, and, if the judge had not previously concurred in the agreement, advise the defendant that the agreement was not binding on the trial court and that the disposition, if the plea was entered, might be different from that contemplated by the agreement. Irons v. State, 267 Ark. 469, 591 S.W.2d 650 (1980).

Where the proof was sufficient that the defendant in a drug prosecution did not receive the sentence concession contemplated by the plea agreement and in which the court had indicated its concurrence, and it was furthermore apparent that the prosecuting attorney failed to seek the first offender treatment the defendant had been promised, the defendant should have been allowed to withdraw his plea of nolo contendere when he realized that he was not going to be sentenced according to the plea agreement in which the judge had indicated concurrence. Zoller v. State, 282 Ark. 380, 669 S.W.2d 434 (1984).

This rule which requires the trial court to have the plea agreement stated for the record is mandatory, and where the failure to state the plea negotiation for the record allowed questions to be raised as to the trial court's understanding of the agreement, the defendant should have been allowed to plead anew to remove any possibility of prejudice. Zoller v. State, 282 Ark. 380, 669 S.W.2d 434 (1984).

Testimony was sufficient to overcome the mandatory requirement that the record of a guilty plea agreement be made part of the contemporaneous record when the plea is entered, where the plea agreement was stated to the extent necessary to a resolution of the arguments advanced by the state, and all parties and the trial court fully understood the terms and conditions of the plea agreement and the record of that proceeding was reasonably faithful to that understanding. State v. Gaddy, 313 Ark. 677, 858 S.W.2d 81 (1993).

Purpose.

The purpose of this rule's requirements is to avoid the chance of a misunderstanding by the accused of the law and his rights. Pettit v. State, 296 Ark. 423, 758 S.W.2d 1 (1988).

Questioning by Court.

It is the duty and responsibility of the trial judge to determine beyond doubt that a plea of guilty is voluntary and, in order to do so, he should inquire of the defendant personally. Simmons v. State, 265 Ark. 48, 578 S.W.2d 12 (1979).

Where the trial judge, after explaining the possible penalties for aggravated robbery and theft of property, asked the defendant if he wanted to plead guilty or have a jury trial, and the defendant at least three times in responses to the judge's questions stated that he wanted to enter a guilty plea, the record showed that the trial judge had sufficiently determined that the guilty plea was voluntarily made. Scott v. State, 267 Ark. 628, 593 S.W.2d 27 (1980).

Inasmuch as this rule requires the trial court to address the defendant personally to determine whether or not any force or threats, or any promises apart from the plea agreement were used to induce the plea, the trial court could, and should, comply with Rule 24.6 by continuing a direct inquiry of the defendant as to the factual basis for his plea. Jones v. State, 288 Ark. 375, 705 S.W.2d 874 (1986).

Where the record showed the trial court addressed the defendant directly and stated the charges and the factual circumstances surrounding each count, the defendant acknowledged his guilty plea was consistent with the facts as he knew them regarding the assault and kidnapping charges, and he declared his guilt on each charge, the court followed the requirements regarding the receipt of a guilty plea, and the defendant's guilty plea was voluntary. Garmon v. State, 290 Ark. 371, 719 S.W.2d 699 (1986).

In accepting nolo contendere plea, trial court shall ask accused personally whether the facts proffered by the prosecution are those which accused does not contest. Snelgrove v. State, 292 Ark. 116, 728 S.W.2d 497 (1987).

Unlike this rule, which requires that the court address the defendant personally before accepting a plea, Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.6 only requires that the court shall make "such inquiry as will establish that there is a factual basis for the plea." Ashby v. State, 297 Ark. 315, 761 S.W.2d 912 (1988).

Trial court did not err in determining that defendant was competent where defendant responded that his medication did not affect his ability to understand the proceedings and that he had agreed to the plea agreement knowingly and soberly, and his psychiatric evaluation indicated that he was competent and did not have a mental defect; further, the judge at a postconviction relief hearing was not required to believe the testimony of any witness, particularly that of the accused. Pardue v. State, 363 Ark. 567, 215 S.W.3d 650 (2005).

In a rape case, although the trial court failed to determine whether defendant's guilty plea was the result of a plea agreement or that the terms of any such agreement were stated, because no objection was made to the trial court's failure to follow this rule the merits of defendant's complaint regarding his plea could not be reached on appeal. McDonald v. State, 364 Ark. 491, 221 S.W.3d 349 (2006).

This rule is mandatory. Reed v. State, 276 Ark. 318, 635 S.W.2d 472 (1982); Atkins v. State, 287 Ark. 445, 701 S.W.2d 109 (1985); Pettit v. State, 296 Ark. 423, 758 S.W.2d 1 (1988).

State failed in its burden to show that defendant's guilty plea to a charge of Class Y felony possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver was voluntarily and intelligently entered because there was no showing that the trial court complied with this rule or Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.4, 24.6, or 24.7 and no showing that defendant actually pled guilty. The guilty plea statement signed by defendant indicated only that he was pleading guilty to three Class D felonies, and there was no recording of any guilty plea made before the trial court as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.7. Dorsey v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 183, 393 S.W.3d 578 (2012).

Statutory Language Unnecessary.

The failure of the trial judge to specifically ask a defendant the precise question, "Have any threats or force, or any promises, apart from a plea agreement, been used to induce your plea of guilty?" does not render the plea and the sentence thereon subject to collateral attack for constitutional infirmity. Simmons v. State, 265 Ark. 48, 578 S.W.2d 12 (1979).

Substantial Compliance.

It is the duty and responsibility of the trial court to determine beyond doubt that a plea of guilty is voluntary, and in order to do so, he should inquire of the defendant personally, substantial compliance being sufficient. However, reversal is not mandated where the deficiencies in plea proceeding are supplied at a postconviction hearing. Reed v. State, 276 Ark. 318, 635 S.W.2d 472 (1982); Flaherty v. State, 297 Ark. 198, 761 S.W.2d 167 (1988).

Post-conviction relief petition was properly denied because, inter alia, the record showed that, at the plea hearing, the trial court inquired of the inmate whether she was under the influence of any substance or medication that would cause her not to understand her plea, to which she responded that she was not and whether she felt she understood what was "going on," to which she responded that she did; the inmate stated that she was pleading guilty freely and voluntarily and that she had not been threatened or promised anything to change her plea to guilty. Shortly after her plea hearing, the inmate filed a motion to withdraw her plea of guilty, but later directed her counsel to withdraw it, and she acknowledged to the court that it was her decision, and hers alone, after talking with her attorney and receiving his advice. Biddle v. State, 2011 Ark. 358 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's petition for a writ of error coram nobis after defendant pled guilty to aggravated robbery, possession of a firearm by certain persons, and robbery because the rule was followed during the plea hearing; none of the evidence allegedly withheld by the prosecution would have prevented the trial court from accepting a plea under the rule. Carter v. State, 2012 Ark. 186 (2012).

Rule 24.6. Determining accuracy of plea.

The court shall not enter a judgment upon a plea of guilty or nolo contendere without making such inquiry as will establish that there is a factual basis for the plea.

What Constitutes Factual Basis. Evidently, a factual basis is established by a defendant's statement that he is guilty, though this is, of course, a legal conclusion drawn by a person who would not be permitted to testify to such a conclusion in any other context. Recently, however, the Arkansas Supreme Court has indicated a preference for testimony about the facts: An inquiry by the court of the prosecutor whether there is a basis for the charge against the accused does not establish that there is a factual basis for the plea as required by Rule 24.6. That can only be done by the court asking the defendant if he did the things of which he stands accused and is pleading guilty because he is guilty. McDaniel v. State, 288 Ark. 629, 633, 708 S.W.2d 613, 615 (1986).

No case has been found in which the Arkansas Supreme Court overturned a conviction pursuant to a guilty plea at a hearing at which the defendant merely testified that he was guilty rather than recounting facts to support this conclusion. In addition, see Garmon v. State, 290 Ark. 371, 719 S.W.2d 699 (1986), where the Court observed that "to determine the accuracy of the plea in satisfaction of Rule 24.6, the Court must ask the defendant if he did the things of which he stands accused, and if he is pleading guilty because he is guilty." Id. at 373, 719 S.W.2d at 700.

Recently, the Court has held that the factual basis for a plea does not have to be supplied by the defendant, though the defendant does have to confirm that he did what he is accused of doing. See, Smith v. State, 291 Ark. 496, 498, 725 S.W.2d 849, 851 (1987): Appellant complains, however, that the trial judge failed to make personal inquiry of appellant in order to establish that there was a factual basis for his plea. While the trial court must determine if a defendant's plea is voluntarily proffered and there is a factual basis for it, we have no rule that the factual basis must be furnished by the defendant. See ARCrP 24.6. We have, however, held that the court must ask the defendant if he did the things of which he stands accused and is pleading guilty because he is guilty. McDaniel v. State, 288 Ark. 629, 708 S.W.2d 613 (1986). Here, the prosecutor recited, in detail, the underlying facts of the crimes with which appellant and his accomplices were charged, and appellant admitted his guilt. The judge, having complied with the dictates of Rule 24, correctly received and acted upon appellant's plea of guilty.

As one might predict, evidence in the form of a signed confession introduced into evidence at the time the plea is entered or at a Rule 37 hearing goes a long way toward establishing a factual basis for the plea. See, for example, Thomas v. State, 277 Ark. 74, 639 S.W.2d 353 (1982).

Duties of Trial Judge. In Jones v. State, 288 Ark. 375, 705 S.W.2d 874 (1986) the trial court, determined to achieve literal compliance with the rule, asked the defendant, "Is there a factual basis for the plea?" Id. at 380, 705 S.W.2d at 877, (1986). The defendant responded "Yes." His conviction was upheld against attack on Rule 24.6 grounds.

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

Assuming a violation of this rule occurred, defendant was not denied due process because North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25, 37, 91 S. Ct. 160, 167, 27 L.Ed.2d 162 (1970) allows a defendant to plead guilty notwithstanding a denial of guilt, and it was defendant's voluntary act of pleading guilty to the two charges of rape that resulted in his deprivation of liberty. Cranford v. Lockhart, 975 F.2d 1347 (8th Cir. 1992).

In General.

This particular inquiry is far and away the most important single phase of plea-taking.

When the record of the proceeding clearly proves that the accused understood the nature of the offense and unmistakably admitted guilt, the possibility of a successful postconviction challenge to the validity of the plea is remote. Schneider v. State, 290 Ark. 454, 720 S.W.2d 709 (1986).

The polestar when a guilty plea is challenged is to determine whether the plea was made intelligently and voluntarily. Peterson v. State, 296 Ark. 324, 756 S.W.2d 897 (1988).

Applicability.

This rule applies to either a guilty plea or a plea of nolo contendere. No distinction is made between the two in the rule. Ashby v. State, 297 Ark. 315, 761 S.W.2d 912 (1988).

Duty of Judge.

It is the duty and responsibility of the trial court to determine beyond doubt that a plea of guilty is voluntary, and in order to do so, he should inquire of the defendant personally, substantial compliance being sufficient. However, reversal is not mandated where the deficiencies in plea proceeding are supplied at a post-conviction hearing. Reed v. State, 276 Ark. 318, 635 S.W.2d 472 (1982).

Denial of motion to recuse trial judge based upon circumstances supposedly indicating bias in that the trial judge had recently presided at the trial of another accused of the same murder as defendant and the judge mentioned some facts brought out at that trial in questioning defendant to determine whether he was in fact guilty was proper since under this rule it was the trial judge's duty to make that determination and since it was not shown that his having presided at the other trial was in any way a disqualification; moreover complaint that after original plea of guilty had been accepted at hearing in open court, defendant was brought back to court the next day, sworn, and asked if his answers to the questions put to him the day before would still be the same and he said they would he did not indicate that the trial judge was so biased as to call for his recusal at Rule 37 proceeding for since a plea of guilty need not be made under oath, the second proceeding was unnecessary. Welch v. State, 283 Ark. 281, 675 S.W.2d 641 (1984).

No court should accept a plea of guilt without determining whether the accused believes he is guilty and that belief has a substantial factual basis. Atkins v. State, 287 Ark. 445, 701 S.W.2d 109 (1985).

Inasmuch as Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.5 requires the trial court to address the defendant personally to determine whether or not any force or threats, or any promises apart from the plea agreement were used to induce the plea, the trial court could, and should, comply with this rule by continuing a direct inquiry of the defendant as to the factual basis for his plea. Jones v. State, 288 Ark. 375, 705 S.W.2d 874 (1986).

Court must ask defendant if he did the things of which he stands accused and is pleading guilty because he is guilty. Muck v. State, 292 Ark. 310, 730 S.W.2d 214 (1987).

Ineffective Counsel.

Where petitioner's plea of guilty was the result of ineffective counsel in that, at no time during his two appearances before the trial court did petitioner possess an understanding of either the law or the facts and circumstances applicable to his case, his guilty plea was not knowingly, voluntarily and intelligently made and thus the conviction, sentence, and judgment entered against him were vacated. Thomas v. Lockhart, 569 F. Supp. 454 (E.D. Ark. 1983), aff'd, 738 F.2d 304 (8th Cir. 1984).

Jurisdiction Issues.

Although defendant claimed he believed he was pleading guilty to rape in Conway County when he appeared in the Perry County circuit court, he did not provide the transcripts of the plea hearings, and a guilty plea could not be accepted without a factual basis; the circuit court did not err in finding that defendant failed to demonstrate probable cause that the Perry County circuit court lacked territorial jurisdiction to convict and sentence him on the charge to which he pleaded guilty. Fields v. Hobbs, 2013 Ark. 416 (2013).

Purpose.

The evident purpose of the factual basis requirement is to prevent an accused from unwittingly pleading guilty on the mistaken assumption that his conduct was unlawful when in fact it was not. Furr v. State, 297 Ark. 233, 761 S.W.2d 160 (1988).

The purpose of making a factual inquiry, from whatever source, is to be certain that the accused could be found guilty of the offense and is not entering his plea based upon a misunderstanding of the law. Ashby v. State, 297 Ark. 315, 761 S.W.2d 912 (1988).

Rule Mandatory.

Compliance with this rule is mandatory. Irons v. State, 267 Ark. 469, 591 S.W.2d 650 (1980); Reed v. State, 276 Ark. 318, 635 S.W.2d 472 (1982); Muck v. State, 292 Ark. 310, 730 S.W.2d 214 (1987); Ashby v. State, 297 Ark. 315, 761 S.W.2d 912 (1988); Van Harris v. State, 297 Ark. 573, 764 S.W.2d 606 (1989).

State failed in its burden to show that defendant's guilty plea to a charge of Class Y felony possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver was voluntarily and intelligently entered because there was no showing that the trial court complied with this rule or Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.4, 24.5, or 24.7 and no showing that defendant actually pled guilty. The guilty plea statement signed by defendant indicated only that he was pleading guilty to three Class D felonies, and there was no recording of any guilty plea made before the trial court as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.7. Dorsey v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 183, 393 S.W.3d 578 (2012).

Substantial Compliance.

Arkansas procedures governing the acceptance of guilty pleas were followed and the federal court was justified in dismissing the habeas corpus petition without holding an evidentiary hearing on the voluntariness of the guilty plea. Pennington v. Housewright, 666

F.2d 329 (8th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 918, 102 S. Ct. 1775, 72 L. Ed. 2d 178 (1982).

The trial court substantially complied with this rule where the judge asked the defendant and his attorney if there were a factual basis for the guilty pleas. Jones v. State, 288 Ark. 375, 705 S.W.2d 874 (1986).

Where the court did not inquire of the defendant whether he was in fact guilty, there was not substantial compliance with this rule. McDaniel v. State, 288 Ark. 629, 708 S.W.2d 613 (1986).

Substantial compliance with the rule is all that is required. Muck v. State, 292 Ark. 310, 730 S.W.2d 214 (1987); Ashby v. State, 297 Ark. 315, 761 S.W.2d 912 (1988).

Trial court held in substantial compliance. White v. State, 301 Ark. 74, 781 S.W.2d 478 (1989).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's petition for a writ of error coram nobis after defendant pled guilty to aggravated robbery, possession of a firearm by certain persons, and robbery because the rule was followed during the plea hearing; none of the evidence allegedly withheld by the prosecution would have prevented the trial court from accepting a plea under the rule. Carter v. State, 2012 Ark. 186 (2012).

Sufficient Factual Basis.

The factual basis of a plea of guilty, if not sufficiently determined by the court during the plea proceedings, may be established at an Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 post-conviction hearing. Davis v. State, 267 Ark. 507, 592 S.W.2d 118 (1980); Grover v. State, 291 Ark. 508, 726 S.W.2d 268 (1987); Knee v. State, 297 Ark. 346, 760 S.W.2d 874 (1988).

Evidence established sufficient factual basis for the guilty plea. Davis v. State, 267 Ark. 507, 592 S.W.2d 118 (1980); Treadwell v. State, 271 Ark. 823, 610 S.W.2d 884 (1981); Muck v. State, 292 Ark. 310, 730 S.W.2d 214 (1987); Branham v. State, 292 Ark. 355, 730 S.W.2d 226 (1987); Parks v. State, 301 Ark. 513, 785 S.W.2d 213 (1990).

Where there was no compliance with this rule which requires the court to make such inquiry as will establish that there is a factual basis for the plea, the defendant's plea of guilty had to be set aside. Atkins v. State, 287 Ark. 445, 701 S.W.2d 109 (1985).

The court's inquiry of the prosecutor of whether there is a basis for the charge against the accused does not establish that there is a factual basis for the plea as required by this rule. McDaniel v. State, 288 Ark. 629, 708 S.W.2d 613 (1986).

Where the record showed the trial court addressed the defendant directly and stated the charges and the factual circumstances surrounding each count, the defendant acknowledged his guilty plea was consistent with the facts as he knew them and he declared his guilt on each charge, the court followed the requirements regarding the receipt of a guilty plea, and the defendant's guilty plea was voluntary. Garmon v. State, 290 Ark. 371, 719 S.W.2d 699 (1986).

"A factual basis" means that the accused is actually guilty. Schneider v. State, 290 Ark. 454, 720 S.W.2d 709 (1986).

While the trial court must determine if a defendant's plea is voluntarily proffered and there is a factual basis for it, there is no rule that the factual basis must be furnished by the defendant. The court must ask the defendant if he did the things of which he stands accused and is pleading guilty because he is guilty. Smith v. State, 291 Ark. 496, 725 S.W.2d 849 (1987).

Deficiencies in establishing a factual basis for nolo contendere pleas at a plea hearing may be remedied by evidence from the post-conviction hearing. Snelgrove v. State, 292 Ark. 116, 728 S.W.2d 497 (1987).

Evidence sufficient to establish factual basis for nolo contendere plea. Snelgrove v. State, 292 Ark. 116, 728 S.W.2d 497 (1987); Ashby v. State, 297 Ark. 315, 761 S.W.2d 912 (1988).

The better practice is to ask the accused if he committed the acts with which he is charged, but failure to do so will not automatically result in setting aside a guilty plea, as this rule contains no requirement that the accused be addressed personally. Flaherty v. State, 297 Ark. 198, 761 S.W.2d 167 (1988).

Significantly, this rule, unlike Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.4 and Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.5, contains no requirement that the accused be addressed personally by the trial judge in determining the factual basis for a guilty plea. By separating this step in the procedure from those steps which must be addressed directly to the accused, the framers of the rules did not contemplate that only the accused could establish a factual basis for a plea of guilty or nolo contendere. Furr v. State, 297 Ark. 233, 761 S.W.2d 160 (1988).

There is no distinction in the factual inquiry required for acceptance of a guilty plea and a plea of nolo contendere. Ashby v. State, 297 Ark. 315, 761 S.W.2d 912 (1988).

The factual basis to support the plea does not have to come from the accused himself. Ashby v. State, 297 Ark. 315, 761 S.W.2d 912 (1988).

Unlike Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.5, which requires that the court address the defendant personally before accepting a plea, this rule only requires that the court shall make "such inquiry as will establish that there is a factual basis for the plea." Ashby v. State, 297 Ark. 315, 761 S.W.2d 912 (1988).

The requirement of a factual basis for a plea does not require that the defendant be proven guilty, but merely that there is sufficient evidence from which the trial court can conclude that the defendant would be found guilty if he elected to proceed to trial. Knee v. State, 297 Ark. 346, 760 S.W.2d 874 (1988).

Even if a factual basis had been wanting at the guilty plea hearing, it can be adequately supplied by testimony at an Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 hearing, which is sufficient. Gibson v. State, 301 Ark. 44, 781 S.W.2d 469 (1989).

Defendant had the capacity to enter the guilty plea and understood the sentence ranges and agreement; further, at the time of the guilty plea, it was established that the prosecution would present a positive eyewitness identification and another witness, which was evidence sufficient to convict. Pardue v. State, 363 Ark. 567, 215 S.W.3d 650 (2005).

Appellate court affirmed the denial of an inmate's petition for postconviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 because, while the court failed to ask the inmate if he agreed with the facts at the plea hearing, the trial court established that the facts presented were sufficient to find the inmate guilty, as required by this rule. O'Connor v. State, 367 Ark. 173, 238 S.W.3d 104 (2006).

Trial court properly revoked defendant's suspended sentence for nonsupport because defendant's purported lack of knowledge and understanding of the obligation was inconsistent with what defendant was told and what defendant admitted during the process of pleading guilty. Rhoades v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 730, 379 S.W.3d 659 (2010).

Rule 24.7. Record of proceedings.

The court shall cause a verbatim record of the proceedings at which a defendant enters a plea of guilty or nolo contendere to be made and preserved.

CASE NOTES

Absence of Record.

In the absence of the required record, the state has the burden of proving the plea was voluntarily and intelligently entered. Reed v. State, 276 Ark. 318, 635 S.W.2d 472 (1982).

State failed in its burden to show that defendant's guilty plea to a charge of Class Y felony possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver was voluntarily and intelligently entered because there was no showing that the trial court complied with Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.4, 24.5, 24.6, or this rule and no showing that defendant actually pled guilty. The guilty plea statement signed by defendant indicated only that he was pleading guilty to three Class D felonies, and there was no recording of any guilty plea made before the trial court as required by this rule. Dorsey v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 183, 393 S.W.3d 578 (2012).

Rule 24.8. Pleading to other offenses.

(a) Upon a plea of guilty or nolo contendere, or after conviction on a plea of not guilty, the defendant may make a written request, indorsed by his attorney, if any, for permission to plead guilty or nolo contendere as to any other offense or offenses he has committed which are within the jurisdiction of other courts of this state.

(b) Upon receipt of written approval of the prosecuting attorney in that governmental unit in which an offense has been or could be charged, together with either a certified copy of the charge filed in the unit or with a statement of that prosecuting attorney describing the offense, the defendant may be allowed to enter the plea.

(c) In making a request for transfer of a charge under the provisions of this rule, the defendant shall be deemed to have waived:

(i) venue as to an offense committed in another governmental unit of the state; and

(ii) return of an indictment or filing of an information as to an offense not yet formally charged.

(d) Before accepting any plea to other offenses contemplated by this rule, the court shall follow the procedure prescribed for any other plea of guilty or nolo contendere.

Comment to Rule 24.8

Consideration of Plea in Final Disposition. (a) It is proper for the court to grant charge and sentence concessions to a defendant who enters a plea of guilty or nolo contendere when the interest of the public in the effective administration of justice would thereby be served. Among the considerations which are appropriate in determining whether such concessions should be granted are:

(i) that the defendant by his plea has aided in ensuring the prompt and certain application of correctional measures to him;

(ii) that the defendant has indicated his guilt and shown a willingness to assume responsibility for his conduct;

(iii) that the concessions will make possible the application of alternative correctional measures which are better adapted to achieving rehabilitative, protective, deterrent or other purposes of correctional treatment, or will prevent undue harm to the defendant from the form or description of the conviction;

(iv) that the defendant has made public trial unnecessary when there are good reasons for not having the case dealt with in a public trial;

(v) that the defendant has given or offered cooperation when such cooperation has resulted or may result in the successful prosecution of other offenders;

(vi) that the defendant by his plea has aided in avoiding delay in the disposition of other cases and thereby has contributed to the efficient administration of criminal justice and the prompt and certain application of correctional measures to other convicted offenders.

(b) The court shall not impose upon a defendant any sentence in excess of that which would be justified by any of the rehabilitative, protective, deterrent or other purposes of the criminal law because the defendant has chosen to require the prosecution to prove his guilt at trial rather than to enter a plea of guilty or nolo contendere.

CASE NOTES

Withdrawn Guilty Plea.

Defendant's four alleged points of "detrimental reliance" on his withdrawn guilty plea were illusory as all of the facts he asserted would have occurred if, and only if, the trial court had accepted the plea agreement, which it stated it would not have done because of the victim's objection to the agreement. Diggs v. State, 93 Ark. App. 332, 219 S.W.3d 654 (2005).

Rule 25.1. Propriety of plea discussions and plea agreements.

(a) In cases in which it appears that it would serve the interest of the public in the effective administration of justice, the prosecuting attorney may engage in plea discussions for the purpose of reaching a plea agreement. He shall engage in plea discussions and reach a plea agreement with the defendant only through defense counsel, except when the defendant has waived or refused his right to be represented by appointed or retained counsel.

(b) to seek or not to oppose dismissal of the charge if the defendant enters a plea of guilty or nolo contendere to a charge or another offense reasonably related to the offense charged;

(c) to seek or not to oppose dismissal of other charges or not to prosecute potential charges against the defendant if he enters a plea of guilty or nolo contendere to one or more of the charges against him.

CASE NOTES

Duty of Defense Counsel.

A plea agreement is an agreement between the accused and the prosecutor, not between the defense counsel and the prosecutor; as such, counsel has the duty to advise his client of an offer of a negotiated plea. Rasmussen v. State, 280 Ark. 472, 658 S.W.2d 867 (1983).

Under this rule the decision to enter a guilty plea ultimately rests with the defendant; thus, it would have been plainly contrary to this rule for the defense counsel to have resisted the plea which the defendant wanted to make. Camp- bell v. State, 283 Ark. 12, 670 S.W.2d 800 (1984).

A plea agreement is an agreement between the accused and the prosecutor, not an agreement between counsel and the prosecutor. Counsel has the duty to advise his client of an offer of a negotiated plea, but before the Supreme Court will order an evidentiary hearing in circuit court, the petitioner must allege that he would have accepted the plea had he known of it. Elmore v. State, 285 Ark. 42, 684 S.W.2d 263 (1985).

Rule 25.3. Responsibilities of the trial judge.

(a) The judge shall not participate in plea discussions.

(b) If a plea agreement has been reached which contemplates entry of a plea of guilty or nolo contendere in the expectation that the charge or charges will be reduced, that other charges will be dismissed, or that sentence concessions will be granted, upon request of the parties the trial judge may permit the disclosure to him of the agreement and the reasons therefor in advance of the time for tender of the plea. He may then indicate whether he will concur in the proposed disposition. If, after the judge has indicated his concurrence with a plea agreement and the defendant has entered a plea of guilty or nolo contendere, but before sentencing, the judge decides that the disposition should not include the charge or sentence concessions contemplated by the agreement, he shall so advise the parties and then in open court call upon the defendant to either affirm or withdraw his plea.

(c) If the parties have not sought the concurrence of the trial judge in a plea agreement or if the judge has declined to indicate whether he will concur in the agreement, he shall advise the defendant in open court at the time the agreement is stated that:

(i) the agreement is not binding on the court; and

(ii) if the defendant pleads guilty or nolo contendere the disposition may be different from that contemplated by the agreement.

(d) A verbatim record of all proceedings had in open court pursuant to subsections (b) and (c) of this rule shall be made and preserved by the court.

In Mabry v. Johnson, 467 U.S. 504, 104 S. Ct. 2557, 81 L. Ed. 2d 437 (1984), the defendant was offered a 21 year sentence to be served concurrently with sentences for other offenses. He accepted the offer, but was then told that because of a mistake the offer was withdrawn. It was replaced by a second offer involving a recommendation that the sentence be served consecutively with his other sentences. This offer was rejected, and he stood trial. After a mistrial, he accepted the second offer and received a 21 year consecutive sentence. The defendant then attacked the sentence by filing a habeas corpus petition in a federal district court, which denied the petition. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed in a decision holding that fairness precluded the prosecution's withdrawal of the plea proposal after the defendant had accepted it. The United States Supreme Court reversed, holding that the defendant's inability to enforce the terms of the prosecutor's offer was without constitutional significance, since the defendant clearly entered a plea of guilty voluntarily and intelligently, knowing that he would receive precisely the sentence meted out.

CASE NOTES

Advice to Defendant.

In a prosecution for attempted robbery, the trial court's failure to determine whether defendant's guilty pleas were the result of a plea agreement raised the possibility of prejudice; thus, defendant's sentence on the attempted robbery conviction would be modified on appeal to conform with an alleged plea bargaining agreement. McGee v. State, 262 Ark. 473, 557 S.W.2d 885 (1977).

Where a plea agreement was made whereby a defendant would receive a five year sentence in return for his guilty plea and the court did not advise the defendant that such an agreement was not binding on the court and did not inquire in open court as to such agreement, the 20 year sentence pronounced by the trial court would be reduced to five years if acceptable to the state, or, if the reduction was not acceptable to the state, then the defendant would be permitted to plead anew. Marshall v. State, 262 Ark. 726, 561 S.W.2d 76 (1978).

In the context of an entry of a guilty plea pursuant to a plea agreement and the requirement that the trial court advise defendant of the right to either affirm or withdraw a guilty plea, compliance with subsection (b) of this rule is mandatory; although defendant pled guilty and was sentenced in open court, because he was not advised by the trial court of his right to affirm or withdraw his earlier guilty plea at the resentencing hearing, the trial court judgment was reversed. Bradford v. State, 351 Ark. 394, 94 S.W.3d 904 (2003).

Nonbinding Agreements.

The trial court is not required to accept a plea agreement signed only by defendant and his counsel. Kilgore v. State, 313 Ark. 198, 852 S.W.2d 810 (1993).

Notice Requirements.

Trial judge advised defendant that the plea agreement was not binding and the disposition might be different from that contemplated by the agreement, and thus the notice requirements of this rule were met before any variance in defendant's sentence, and because this case did not meet the requirements for any of the exceptions to Ark. R. App. P.—Crim. 1 that would allow for an appeal from the sentence, this part of the appeal was dismissed (trial judge increased defendant's active sentence from the 3 years in the agreement to 12 years and then to 20 years). Lee v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 116, 544 S.W.3d 71 (2018).

Plea Bargain.

A defendant's acceptance of a prosecutor's proposed plea bargain does not create a constitutional right to have the bargain specifically enforced. Mabry v. Johnson, 467 U.S. 504, 104 S. Ct. 2543, 81 L. Ed. 2d 437 (1984), abrogated in part, Puckett v. United States, 556 U.S. 129, 129 S. Ct. 1423, 173 L. Ed. 2d 266 (2009).

Defendant did not demonstrate error under subsection (b) of this rule because the concessions were no longer applicable when defendant failed to abide by his duty under the plea agreement to make restitution within seven days. Folk v. State, 96 Ark. App. 73, 238 S.W.3d 640 (2006).

In a case in which defendant appealed his conviction and 20-year sentence for second-degree sexual assault, he also contended that the trial court's obligations under Ark. R. Crim. P. 26.1(b)(v) were to be strictly construed. The trial court based its denial on Rule 26.1, however, defendant never raised that rule, relying solely on subsection (b) of this rule in open court and citing no rule in his written motion to reconsider. Although the trial court rejected a Rule 26.1(b)(v) claim, it did not preserve by so ruling an argument that defendant never made. Ru'nnel v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 412, 421 S.W.3d 324 (2012).

In a case in which defendant appealed his conviction and 20-year sentence for second-degree sexual assault, he argued that the trial court failed to strictly comply with this rule. Even though he cited subsection (b) when he initially moved to withdraw his plea, the trial court did not consider that rule when denying the motion to withdraw; thus, the trial court did not rule on any subsection (b) claim, which precluded appellate court review. Ru'nnel v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 412, 421 S.W.3d 324 (2012).

Recommended Sentence.

Under Arkansas law, there is no entitlement to have the trial court impose a recommended sentence since a negotiated sentence recommendation does not bind the court; there is a critical difference between an entitlement and a mere hope or expectation that the trial court will follow the prosecutor's recommendation. Mabry v. Johnson, 467 U.S. 504, 104 S. Ct. 2543, 81 L. Ed. 2d 437 (1984), abrogated in part, Puckett v. United States, 556 U.S. 129, 129 S. Ct. 1423, 173 L. Ed. 2d 266 (2009).

Scope of Authority.

This rule does not authorize a circuit judge to reduce a charge to a lesser included offense; nor does it permit pleading to another charge that the judge believes to be appropriate. State v. Knight, 318 Ark. 158, 884 S.W.2d 258 (1994).

Where defendant pled guilty to possession with the intent to deliver, and should have been sentenced to at least ten years imprisonment without probation under § 5-64-401(a)(1)(i) [repealed], the trial judge had no authority to order probation based on the judge's sua sponte reduction of the charge to mere possession. State v. Knight, 318 Ark. 158, 884 S.W.2d 258 (1994).

The trial court violated this rule by dismissing a count against the defendant without first calling upon him in open court to affirm or withdraw the plea. State v. Vasquez-Aerreola, 327 Ark. 617, 940 S.W.2d 451 (1997).

Rule 25.4. Discussions, agreements, statements, pleas and judgments not admissible.

(a) No evidence of any discussion between the parties, of any statement made by the defendant, or of the fact that the parties engaged in plea discussions shall be admissible in any criminal, civil, or administrative proceeding, except in a proceeding to:

- (i) terminate or modify such an agreement;
 - (ii) secure concurrence in a plea agreement;
 - (iii) secure acceptance of a plea;
 - (iv) secure withdrawal of a plea; or
 - (v) cause a judgment based upon a plea to be reversed or held invalid.
- (b) Irrespective of whether a plea of guilty or nolo contendere is the result of a plea agreement, if it is not accepted or is withdrawn, or results in a judgment which is reversed or held invalid on direct or collateral review, neither the plea nor any judgment resulting therefrom, nor any statement by the defendant in connection with the making or acceptance of the plea or as a basis for sentence or other disposition thereon, is admissible in evidence against the defendant in any criminal, civil, or administrative proceeding.

RULE 26.
PLEA WITHDRAWAL

Rule
Rule 26.1. Plea withdrawal.

CASE NOTES

In General. A trial court can treat an untimely motion under this rule as a Rule 37 motion. Rowe v. State, 318 Ark. 25, 883 S.W.2d 804 (1994).

Rule 26.1. Plea withdrawal.

- (a) A defendant may withdraw his or her plea of guilty or nolo contendere as a matter of right before it has been accepted by the court. A defendant may not withdraw his or her plea of guilty or nolo contendere as a matter of right after it has been accepted by the court; however, before entry of judgment, the court in its discretion may allow the defendant to withdraw his or her plea to correct a manifest injustice if it is fair and just to do so, giving due consideration to the reasons advanced by the defendant in support of his or her motion and any prejudice the granting of the motion would cause the prosecution by reason of actions taken in reliance upon the defendant’s plea. A plea of guilty or nolo contendere may not be withdrawn under this rule after entry of judgment.
- (b) Withdrawal of a plea of guilty or nolo contendere shall be deemed to be necessary to correct a manifest injustice if the defendant proves to the satisfaction of the court that:
- (i) he or she was denied the effective assistance of counsel;
 - (ii) the plea was not entered or ratified by the defendant or a person authorized to do so in his or her behalf;
 - (iii) the plea was involuntary, or was entered without knowledge of the nature of the charge or that the sentence imposed could be imposed;
 - (iv) he or she did not receive the charge or sentence concessions contemplated by a plea agreement and the prosecuting attorney failed to seek or not to oppose the concessions as promised in the plea agreement; or

(v) he or she did not receive the charge or sentence concessions contemplated by a plea agreement in which the trial court had indicated its concurrence and the defendant did not affirm the plea after receiving advice that the court had withdrawn its indicated concurrence and after an opportunity to either affirm or withdraw the plea.

(c) The defendant may move to withdraw his or her plea of guilty or nolo contendere to correct a manifest injustice without alleging that he or she is innocent of the charge to which the plea was entered.

HISTORY: Amended October 29, 1990, effective January 1, 1991; amended May 21, 1998, effective May 21, 1998.

Reporter's Notes, 1998 Amendment:

Paragraphs (a) and (e) were amended and combined as new paragraph (a). It now provides that prior to acceptance of the plea by the court, the defendant may withdraw his or her plea as a matter of right. After acceptance and before entry of judgment, the court in its discretion may allow a plea withdrawal upon proof that it is necessary to correct a manifest injustice. After entry of the written judgment, the plea may not be withdrawn under this rule. Paragraph (b) was deleted and the remaining paragraphs were redesignated.

These changes were made to clarify when a plea could be withdrawn under this rule [i.e., after acceptance of the plea, after pronouncement of sentence, after entry of judgment, see Johninson v. State, 330 Ark. 381 (1997), Scalco v. City of Russellville, 318 Ark. 65, 883 S.W.2d 813 (1993)], and under what standard; and also to clarify when a motion to withdraw a plea was proper under this rule as opposed to Rule 37 of these rules. Under Rule 26.1, a motion to withdraw a plea must be filed prior to entry of the written judgment.

Manifest Injustice. The fact that circumstances beyond the control of the trial court and prosecutor prevent a defendant from getting the benefit of sentence concessions does not constitute "manifest injustice" allowing plea withdrawal under Rule 26.1. In Ellis v. State, 288 Ark. 186, 703 S.W.2d 452 (1986), petitioner entered a guilty plea and received a 10 year sentence pursuant to plea negotiations where it was agreed that he would begin serving a federal sentence and receive credit for time served against the 10 year state sentence. Federal authorities refused to accept petitioner. The Arkansas Supreme Court found that because the prosecuting attorney actually sought the concessions and because the trial court did everything it could to persuade federal authorities to accept petitioner, Rule 26.1(c)(iv) was not violated. The Court found that "appellant gambled on the cooperation of the federal authorities and lost," id. at 189, 703 S.W.2d at 454, and that appellant was not entitled to withdraw his guilty plea.

Timeliness of Motion Geared to Sentencing. In Shipman v. State, 261 Ark. 559, 550 S.W.2d 424 (1977), the Arkansas Supreme Court ruled that a motion to withdraw a guilty plea was timely only if filed before sentencing. A motion under Rule 37 is necessary after a sentence has been carried into execution. Shipman has been consistently followed. See, for example, Pennington v. State, 286 Ark. 503, 697 S.W.2d 85 (1985).

Mandatory Plea Withdrawal. The court must allow the defendant to withdraw a guilty plea where the prosecutor fails to follow through with his end of the bargain, notwithstanding the trial judge's advice that the court is not bound by the plea agreement. Williams v. State, 272 Ark. 207, 613 S.W.2d 94 (1981) (where appellant entered guilty plea but failed to appear for sentencing, prompting prosecutor to withdraw recommendation of 30 year suspended sentence, the judge should have permitted appellant to withdraw his plea of guilty). See, also, Zoller v. State, 282 Ark. 380, 669 S.W.2d 434 (1984). And, where the prosecutor seeks sentence concessions according to a plea agreement, the defendant is not entitled to withdraw the plea under Rule 26.1 on grounds that the judge failed to sentence according to the agreement. Tolley v. State, 1 Ark. App. 1, 611 S.W.2d 798 (1981). See, also, Ellis v. State, 288 Ark. 186, 703 S.W.2d 452 (1986).

Undisclosed Threats Not Appearing of Record. In Stanley v. State, 280 Ark. 245, 657 S.W.2d 205 (1983) the Court refused to overturn the trial court's finding on the record in a Rule 37 proceeding that appellant was not entitled to withdraw his guilty plea despite his contention that he entered the plea involuntarily as a result of prosecutorial threats to prosecute his wife first. The Court credulously observed that the record did not demonstrate any such threat, though the gist of appellant's petition was that he capitulated in the face of coercion and, as might be expected, did not disclose this for fear that disclosure would lead to the threat being carried out.

CASE NOTESAcceptance of Plea.

Trial court did not err under subsection (a) of this rule in denying defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea to residential burglary, kidnapping, and attempted first-degree murder because the trial court had in fact accepted the plea; it was implicit in the colloquy between the trial court and defendant that the trial court had accepted the plea. Drake v. State, 103 Ark. App. 87, 286 S.W.3d 728 (2008).

Subsection (a) of this rule includes no requirement that a court accept a guilty or nolo contendere plea by express words. Drake v. State, 103 Ark. App. 87, 286 S.W.3d 728 (2008).

Benefit of Bargain.

No accused is guaranteed that he will actually receive the benefit of his plea bargain, but he is guaranteed that the prosecutor will seek or not oppose the concessions promised. Ellis v. State, 288 Ark. 186, 703 S.W.2d 452 (1986).

Burden of Proof.

Counsel is presumed competent, and the burden of overcoming that presumption rests with the petitioner. Stobaugh v. State, 298 Ark. 577, 769 S.W.2d 26 (1989).

Denial of defendant's motion to withdraw his guilty plea was appropriate because he failed to prove that he did not receive the sentence contemplated by the plea agreement. The guilty-plea statement he signed showed the range of sentences that the circuit court might impose, which included imprisonment within the range that defendant received. McDaniels v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 824 (2009).

Denial of Motion to Withdraw.

Where a defendant entered a guilty plea and stated at that time that no one had compelled such plea and that he was satisfied with his attorney and where, a few days thereafter, the defendant asked to withdraw his plea on the ground that his original attorney had threatened to walk out on him if he did not enter the guilty plea, such plea would not be set aside. Pettigrew v. State, 262 Ark. 359, 556 S.W.2d 880 (1977).

Court did not abuse its discretion in denying request to withdraw guilty plea. Cockrum v. State, 299 Ark. 321, 772 S.W.2d 341 (1989).

Denial of defendant's pro se motion to withdraw his guilty plea was proper where there was insufficient evidence presented by the defendant to support his claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Duncan v. State, 304 Ark. 311, 802 S.W.2d 917 (1991).

Trial judge was not required to accept repudiation of earlier statements regarding the voluntariness of the defendant's pleas. Hall v. State, 51 Ark. App. 1, 906 S.W.2d 692 (1995).

Where defendant alleged error by the circuit court in failing to appoint him counsel and in failing to set a hearing on his motion to withdraw his guilty plea, he was not appealing or attacking the plea itself and, thus, defendant had a right to appeal the denial of his motion. Green v. State, 362 Ark. 459, 209 S.W.3d 339 (2005).

Trial court did not violate defendant's absolute right to withdraw his guilty plea pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule because it was clear from the hearing transcript that the trial court expressly accepted the guilty plea during the week prior to the attempted withdrawal. Brown v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 148 (2010).

In a case in which defendant appealed his conviction and 20-year sentence for second-degree sexual assault, he also contended that the trial court's obligations under subdivision (b)(v) of this rule were to be strictly construed. The trial court based its denial on this rule, however, defendant never raised that rule, relying solely on Ark. R. Crim. P. 25.3(b) in open court and citing no rule in his written motion to reconsider. Although the trial court rejected a subdivision (b)(v) claim, it did not preserve by so ruling an argument that defendant never made. Ru'nnel v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 412, 421 S.W.3d 324 (2012).

Circuit court did not err in denying defendant's motion to set aside his plea of nolo contendere because he failed to demonstrate that the withdrawal of his plea was necessary to avoid a manifest injustice where he was motivated to accept the plea to avoid the risk of receiving a greater sentence at trial and out of financial concerns and the best interests of his family. Martin v. State, 2015 Ark. 147, 460 S.W.3d 289 (2015).

Trial court expressly accepted defendant's no-contest plea to domestic battery in the second degree after a lengthy discussion, and because the trial court accepted the plea, it was within the trial court's discretion to determine whether it would allow defendant to withdraw his plea; defendant failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion by not allowing him to withdraw his plea after entry or that a manifest injustice occurred when the trial court increased his active sentence from the 3 years in the agreement to 12 years and then to 20 years because the trial court was within its authority to sentence him under § 5-4-501. Lee v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 116, 544 S.W.3d 71 (2018).

Failure to Honor Plea Bargain.

Where prosecutor withdrew recommended suspended sentence because of failure of defendant to appear for sentencing but defendant had fully complied with his portion of the plea bargain, the judge could not, under this rule, refuse to allow defendant to withdraw his guilty plea, since this rule contemplates that the trial judge will either hold both parties to a plea bargain or release both. Williams v. State, 272 Ark. 207, 613 S.W.2d 94 (1981).

Where the proof was sufficient that the defendant in a drug prosecution did not receive the sentence concession contemplated by the plea agreement and in which the court had indicated its concurrence, and it was furthermore apparent that the prosecuting attorney failed to seek the first offender treatment the defendant had been promised, the defendant should have been allowed to withdraw his plea of nolo contendere when he realized that he was not going to be sentenced according to the plea agreement in which the judge had indicated concurrence. Zoller v. State, 282 Ark. 380, 669 S.W.2d 434 (1984).

Failure to Seek Concessions.

Where state and defendant reached plea bargain agreement whereby defendant would receive a 30-year suspended sentence in return for a plea of guilty and providing truthful information about another crime, court informed defendant that it would not be bound by the agreement, and defendant pled guilty, but failed to appear at scheduled sentencing, state could not withdraw its recommendation, since this rule requires the prosecution to seek the concessions agreed to and there is no implied bargain that the defendant be on good behavior until judgment and sentence are entered. Williams v. State, 272 Ark. 207, 613 S.W.2d 94 (1981).

Where defendant in open court indicated that he understood that the judge did not have to give him the sentence which had been negotiated with the prosecuting attorney, and the trial court indicated that it would allow defendant to withdraw his guilty plea when it decided not to accept the negotiated sentence, but then withdrew that offer when the prosecutor advised it that the trial had been set for that day and that all witnesses were present, there was no indirect breach under this rule by the state of its plea agreement by not actively seeking the concessions agreed upon, since the state merely objected to a delay in defendant's decision regarding a plea or trial since it was the day of trial and this was in no way a failure of the prosecutor to seek the concessions agreed upon. Tolley v. State, 1 Ark. App. 1, 611 S.W.2d 798 (1981).

Findings.

Although both Ark. R. Crim. P. 26 and Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 are in the nature of post-conviction relief, the latter is designed to allow attacks on constitutionality, jurisdiction and excess sentences and other collateral attacks, and requires written findings; whereas the former is designed to correct manifest injustices, and requires no such findings. Rawls v. State, 576 S.W.2d 191 (Ark. 1979).

Since post-conviction petitions which raise grounds for relief cognizable under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 are considered petitions to proceed under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37, regardless of the label given them by the petitioner, trial court could simply have dismissed the petition under this rule to withdraw guilty pleas as being a subsequent Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition. Walker v. State, 283 Ark. 339, 676 S.W.2d 460 (1984).

Grounds for Withdrawal.

The fact that defendant hoped for, or even expected, a lighter sentence than he received is not grounds to allow the plea to be withdrawn. Rawls v. State, 576 S.W.2d 191 (Ark. 1979).

Where the record showed defendant's attorney explained the charges to him, that the defendant never mentioned coercion or threat, and that the court advised the defendant as to his plea to which he replied he wanted to plead guilty, the defendant knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily entered a plea of guilty, and he was not entitled to withdraw his guilty plea on the ground that his plea was made involuntarily because the prosecuting attorney threatened to put his wife, a codefendant, on trial first and the defendant feared that she might receive a substantial sentence. Stanley v. State, 280 Ark. 245, 657 S.W.2d 205 (1983).

Defendant was not entitled to withdrawal of his guilty plea which was negotiated on the basis of an agreement that his state sentence would run concurrently with his federal sentence where, after sentencing, the federal authorities refused to take him, as no “manifest injustice” had occurred as defined in this rule. Ellis v. State, 288 Ark. 186, 703 S.W.2d 452 (1986).

Where no pressure was exerted by the court or the prosecutor on defendant to plea guilty, but he argued that the anguish demonstrated by his son testifying against him created a coercive pressure on him, although the circumstance caused a wrenching experience for the defendant, it did not constitute the sort of coercion necessary to withdraw a guilty plea entered knowingly and in strict adherence to the Rules of Criminal Procedure. Wilmoth v. State, 291 Ark. 233, 724 S.W.2d 148 (1987).

Motion to withdraw guilty plea denied where defendant received a greater punishment than he expected, and claimed that the pleas were therefore not voluntarily and intelligently made. Seek v. State, 330 Ark. 833, 957 S.W.2d 709 (1997).

Trial court did not err in refusing to permit defendant to withdraw his no-contest plea; defendant’s no-contest plea had been accepted, but he failed to comply with the terms of the recommendation in that he did not pay restitution within seven days and, thus, there was no manifest injustice. Folk v. State, 96 Ark. App. 73, 238 S.W.3d 640 (2006).

Grounds for Withdrawal Not Shown.

Withdrawal of defendant’s guilty plea to prevent a manifest injustice, pursuant to subdivision (b)(iv) of this rule, was not appropriate because the transcript of the plea hearing showed that defendant was well-advised that his recommended sentence was ten years’ imprisonment; he received the sentence concession contemplated by his plea agreement and the prosecuting attorney sought that same sentence. Brown v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 148 (2010).

No manifest injustice required withdrawal of defendant’s guilty plea where he was never promised good-time credit in the instant case for good-time credit earned in another case, and he did not allege that either the State or defense counsel provided incorrect advice as to parole eligibility, which was the basis of the bargain. Moreover, because defendant voluntarily entered into and received the sentence contemplated under the plea agreement, the circuit court correctly concluded that his complaints concerned his eligibility for parole. Accordingly, the withdrawal of the plea was not necessary to correct a manifest injustice, and the circuit court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant’s motion to withdraw his

Jurisdiction of Court.

Where a motion to vacate a judgment was filed after the sentencing of the defendant, the trial judge could not consider the motion unless it was amended so as to be treated under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37; however, since a valid sentence had been put into execution, the trial court was without jurisdiction to modify, amend or revise it in any event. Shipman v. State, 261 Ark. 559, 550 S.W.2d 424 (1977); Redding v. State, 293 Ark. 411, 738 S.W.2d 410 (1987).

Motion to withdraw a plea pursuant to this rule must be made and acted on before the sentence is placed into execution, and where the sentence had been imposed, the commitment order issued, and the appellant transported to the department of correction before the motion was acted on, the trial court was without jurisdiction to set aside the sentence. Wooten v. State, 32 Ark. App. 194, 799 S.W.2d 555 (1990).

Because defendant was in custody when the trial court ultimately disposed of his motion to withdraw and because his motion was otherwise timely under this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2, the trial court had jurisdiction to consider the merits of his Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 motion. State v. Herred, 332 Ark. 241, 964 S.W.2d 391 (1998).

Motion Untimely.

Where the defendant filed a motion for post-conviction relief pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1(d), seeking to set aside two guilty pleas he had made to a charge of rape and a charge of possession of stolen property, on the ground of ineffective assistance of counsel, the petition was a backhanded attempt to withdraw the guilty pleas and not a timely presentation within this rule. Jones v. State, 267 Ark. 79, 589 S.W.2d 16 (1979).

Because sentencing had already transpired and judgment entered when the defendant petitioned to withdraw his guilty plea, the trial court was correct to treat the petition as one for postconviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37. McCuen v. State, 328 Ark. 46, 941 S.W.2d 397 (1997).

Perjury.

Ark. R. Evid. 410 and subsection (b) of this rule did not apply to prevent a state trial court from admitting the transcript of a federal plea hearing in defendant’s perjury trial because those rules only applied when a guilty plea had been withdrawn or set aside, and the rules were not intended to bar perjury charges. Stewart v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 323, 374 S.W.3d 811 (2010).

Provisions Mandatory.

The language of this rule is mandatory in that it provides that the withdrawal of the plea shall be deemed to be necessary when any of the enumerated factors are present. Zoller v. State, 282 Ark. 380, 669 S.W.2d 434 (1984).

A guilty plea may be set aside before sentencing; however, once the guilty plea has been accepted, and the sentencing has taken place, the trial court is without jurisdiction to set aside a plea of guilty, unless there was some kind of stay of the sentence. Owens v. State, 318 Ark. 61, 883 S.W.2d 471 (1994).

Purpose.

In adopting this rule, the Arkansas Supreme Court sought to avoid any problem that might arise as a result of the different times for the conviction and sentence and sanctioned a plea withdrawal only prior to pronouncement of sentence. Owens v. State, 318 Ark. 61, 883 S.W.2d 471 (1994).

There are sound public policy reasons for treating a defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea differently when the request is made before sentencing rather than afterward. Owens v. State, 318 Ark. 61, 883 S.W.2d 471 (1994).

Time for Motion.

A motion pursuant to this rule must be made prior to sentencing. Rawls v. State, 264 Ark. 954, 581 S.W.2d 311 (1979); Carter v. State, 285 Ark. 256, 685 S.W.2d 812 (1985); Travis v. State, 286 Ark. 26, 688 S.W.2d 935 (1985); Pennington v. State, 286 Ark. 503, 697 S.W.2d 85 (1985); Brown v. State, 290 Ark. 289, 718 S.W.2d 937 (1986); Malone v. State, 294 Ark. 376, 742 S.W.2d 945 (1988).

Guilty pleas may not be directly withdrawn after the sentence is put into execution; at this state of the proceeding a withdrawal of plea can be had only after a successful collateral attack on the conviction under a Rule 37 proceeding. Woods v. State, 278 Ark. 271, 644 S.W.2d 937 (1983).

Motion to withdraw guilty plea was untimely. Redding v. State, 22 Ark. App. 81, 733 S.W.2d 424, rev'd, 293 Ark. 411, 738 S.W.2d 410 (1987); Malone v. State, 294 Ark. 376, 742 S.W.2d 945 (1988).

A motion to withdraw a plea of guilty is untimely after the sentence is placed into execution. Rowe v. State, 318 Ark. 25, 883 S.W.2d 804 (1994); McCuen v. State, 328 Ark. 46, 941 S.W.2d 397 (1997).

If a sentence has been entered and placed in execution prior to the filing of a motion to withdraw the guilty plea upon which it was based, the motion must be treated as having been made pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 37, not this rule, and the provisions of Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 govern the timeliness of the motion. John- son v. State, 330 Ark. 381, 953 S.W.2d 883 (1997).

Trial court properly denied defendant's oral motion to withdraw his guilty plea to first-degree murder and battery because the motion was made three days after the judgment and commitment orders were entered; hence, it was untimely. Webb v. State, 365 Ark. 22, 223 S.W.3d 796 (2006).

When a motion to withdraw a guilty plea is untimely, a court reviews it on appeal as a motion for postconviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37. Webb v. State, 365 Ark. 22, 223 S.W.3d 796 (2006).

Defendant's oral motion to withdraw a guilty plea made after the trial court announced defendant's sentence for domestic battery but prior to the entry of a written judgment was sufficient under this rule. The trial court erred in requiring defendant to file a written motion and entering judgment before he could do so. Hagen v. State, 2010 Ark. 54 (2010).

Inmate's second petition for habeas corpus arising out of a jury trial after entering a guilty plea and being sentenced failed because his claim that the trial violated his speedy trial right was not cognizable in a habeas corpus proceeding, and he failed to develop his argument that the guilty plea could not be vacated under this rule. Kelly v. Norris, 2013 Ark. 90 (2013).

Waiver of Defenses.

If a plea of guilty is entered voluntarily and is not the result of ineffective assistance of counsel, any other possible defenses, except for jurisdictional defects, are waived. Zoller v. State, 282 Ark. 380, 669 S.W.2d 434 (1984).

ARTICLE VIII. SPEEDY TRIAL

Rule 27. The Trial Calendar

Rule 28. Rule 28. Limitations, Excluded Periods and Consequences

Rule 29. Rule 29. Special Procedures: Person Serving Term of Imprisonment

Rule 30. Consequences of Denial of Speedy Trial

Commentary to Article VIII

In considering ways to alleviate problems arising from universal docket congestion, several types of approaches readily suggest themselves. These cover a wide spectrum ranging from efforts by social scientists to identify and eradicate the causes of criminal conduct to attempts to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of the criminal justice process itself.

The focus of the following rules, like that of their counterparts in ABA Standards, Speedy Trial, is different. "The emphasis . . . is not upon techniques for improving the efficiency of the criminal process. Rather, the concern here is with how the interest of defendants and the public in prompt trial should be defined and protected. Implicit in these standards is the notion that, either by improved efficiency or increased resources, every jurisdiction should be able to afford all defendants a speedy trial, as that right is defined herein." ABA Standards, Speedy Trial (Approved Draft: 1968) at 2. (This volume is hereafter cited as Standards, Speedy Trial.)

Although the Federal Constitution and Article 2, § 10 of the Arkansas Constitution provide that an accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy trial, what constitutes a "speedy trial" has not been defined with any precision either by constitutional provision, statute, or case law at the federal or state level. Existing case law in Arkansas makes it apparent that Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 43-1708, 43-1709 (Repl. 1964) go only so far as to set out what periods of delay will be countenanced before absolute discharge will be granted.

The proposed provisions respecting speedy trial take the form of four rules. The first, Rule 27, concerns the trial calendar. It regulates calendar scheduling practices and explicitly imposes certain priorities with regard to scheduling trials of criminal cases.

Rule 27.1 embodies a recognition that the interest of the public in the prompt disposition of criminal cases is as important as a defendant's right to a speedy trial. The rule adopts the substance of what were heretofore Rules 2 and 3 of the Rules for Criminal Procedure, promulgated by the Arkansas Supreme Court as per curiam order dated June 28, 1971. The fact that the Supreme Court of Arkansas felt a clear and unambiguous statement respecting speedy trial to be necessary underscores the importance of this rule. The Comment to the rule strongly advocates elimination of the practice of scheduling trials by mere designation of the period of time, in some instances weeks, within which designated cases are subject to call.

Rule 27.2 is intended to preclude prosecutorial control of the criminal docket, in as much as such control might give the prosecutor an unfair advantage over a particular defendant or defendants generally. The rule differs from its analogue in Standards, Speedy Trial only in that the rule does not require the prosecutor to file periodic reports with the court setting forth reasons for delay as to each case concerning which he has not requested trial within some prescribed time after the charge was filed.

Rule 27.3 attends to continuances, expressing the notion that the need for prompt disposition of criminal cases transcends the desires of the immediate participants in such proceedings. Consequently, the trial court is obliged to make an independent determination as to whether there is in fact good cause for a continuance and to grant a continuance only for so long as necessary under the circumstances at hand.

Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-1705 (Repl. 1964) currently provides that a trial court has discretion to grant a continuance for "sufficient cause." See, Perez v. State, 236 Ark. 921, 370 S.W.2d 613 (1963). The proposed rule refines existing Arkansas authority by explicitly setting out the factors to be weighed in making the determination.

Rule 28 sets out with specificity the time limitations on bringing a defendant to trial. Because the judicial system in Arkansas is presently grounded on legislation providing for terms of court, the Commission felt constrained to incorporate into the provisions of Rule 28 the concept of "terms of court" for purposes of calculating time limitations. It is hoped that the Arkansas judiciary will eventually be unified and that this will result in the abandonment of the circuit riding practices necessitated by the term of court structure. When this occurs, it will be possible to express speedy trial provisions in terms of fixed periods of time running from specified events.

Arkansas statutory authority dealing with limitations is found at Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 43-1708, 43-1709 (Repl. 1964). Rule 28.1(a) closely parallels § 43-1708; 28.1(b) tracks § 43-1709. Both Rule 28.1(a) and (b) differ from present statutory authority in that they refer to a different rule which indicates when time for trial begins to run. Rule 28.1(a) differs from § 43-1708 in that it sets out an absolute limit of nine months within which a defendant must be tried, subject to the provisions of Rule 30.

Rule 28.2 is Standards, Speedy Trial § 2.2 almost verbatim. Under 28.2 time commences to run irrespective of whether the defendant demands to be brought to trial. In so providing, the rule is in accord with recent Arkansas authority construing §§ 43-1708, 43-1709 (Repl. 1964), at least in situations where the defendant is not incarcerated in another state. See, Holland v. State, 252 Ark. 730, 480 S.W.2d 597 (1972); State v. Davidson, 254 Ark. 172, 492 S.W.2d 246 (1973). In rejecting the “demand-waiver” approach under these circumstances, the provision is in compliance with Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101 (1972).

By specifying when time begins to run following a mistrial, the granting of a motion for a new trial, or a successful appeal or collateral attack, Rule 28.2(c) fills a virtual void in Arkansas law. For decisional authority with respect to commencement of the running of time subsequent to a mistrial, see, Montgomery v. State, 251 Ark. 645, 473 S.W.2d 885 (1971).

Rule 28.3 is another example of an explicit adoption of an ABA Standard: Speedy Trial § 2.3. The present Arkansas statutory scheme has no correlative provision excluding particular kinds of delay from consideration in computing the time for trial.

Rule 29 confronts the problem of providing speedy trials to persons already imprisoned in Arkansas, other jurisdictions, or in federal prisons.

Rule 29.1 restates current law requiring a prosecutor to undertake to obtain the presence of a prisoner for trial where the prisoner is jailed in Arkansas. For recent authority in this area, see, Davidson, supra; Merritt v. State, 244 Ark. 921, 428 S.W.2d 66 (1968).

Rule 29.1(b) complements Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-3201 (Supp. 1973) by adding the requirement that a prosecutor promptly cause a detainer to be filed with an appropriate official.

Rule 29.1(c) requires that “[u]pon receipt from a prisoner of a demand for trial upon a pending charge, the prosecuting attorney shall promptly seek to obtain the presence of the prisoner for trial.” In so doing, the rule does not change Arkansas law.

Rule 30 is concerned with the consequences flowing from a denial of a speedy trial. The provisions reflect a departure from present law: failure to commence trial of an incarcerated person within the time set out by Rule 28 results not in absolute discharge of the defendant but instead in termination of continued custody. Subsequently, for limitation purposes, he is treated, under Rule 28.1(b), like a defendant set at liberty at the outset. In so providing, the rule follows Standards, Speedy Trial § 4.2.

Rule 30.2 recognizes the doctrine of waiver. The requirement that a defendant move for a dismissal prior to trial or plea of guilty or nolo contendere is apparently now acknowledged in all jurisdictions. See, Annot., 57 A.L.R.2d 302 (1958).

RULE 27.

THE TRIAL CALENDAR

Rule

Rule 27.1. Priorities in scheduling criminal cases.

Rule 27.2. Assignment of cases.

Rule 27.3. Continuances.

Rule 27.1. Priorities in scheduling criminal cases.

All courts of this state having jurisdiction of criminal offenses shall:

(a) except for extraordinary circumstances, give precedence to the trials of criminal felony offenses over other matters before said court; and

(b) in the absence of unusual or exceptional conditions requiring the expeditious trial of an accused person free on bail, or otherwise lawfully set at liberty, give precedence to the trials of those criminal offenses in which the accused person is incarcerated, whether such incarceration be for the offense awaiting trial or for conviction of another offense.

HISTORY: Amended June 30, 1980, effective July 1, 1980.

Absent extraordinary circumstances, the trial of a criminal cause should be set for a date certain.

Calendar scheduling practices which require that attorneys, defendants, and witnesses hold themselves available over extended periods of time to appear for trial produce unnecessary inconvenience and, consequently, do not advance the interests of justice generally or the expeditious disposition of criminal causes, in particular.

Accordingly, practices of this nature should be eliminated to the maximum extent possible.

CASE NOTES

Speedy Trial.

Where there was no finding that giving precedence to criminal cases was a practice followed by the civil divisions of Crittenden County Circuit Court — a legal responsibility of these divisions, as well as the criminal division — and where there was no finding the congestion was greater than before, or that relief was sought by asking for additional judges, the trial court's findings, entered only after a motion to dismiss was filed, did not constitute sufficient grounds to exclude any term of court, in considering whether speedy trial rule had been violated. Harkness v. Harrison, 266 Ark. 59, 585 S.W.2d 10 (1979).

Rule 27.2. Assignment of cases.

The court shall control the trial calendar and shall provide for the scheduling of cases upon the calendar.

CASE NOTES

Change of Date.

The setting of the trial calendar and the scheduling of cases upon the calendar, is tantamount to a direct order of the court, and attorneys do not have the authority to vary a trial date set by the court. Rischar v. State, 307 Ark. 429, 821 S.W.2d 25 (1991).

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 27.3

Motion for Continuance Based on Firing of Attorney. The Arkansas Court of Appeals has decided that where an incarcerated defendant dismisses his lawyer on the morning of trial and asks for a continuance,

[s]ome of the factors to be considered [by the trial court] include whether there was adequate opportunity for the defendant to employ counsel; whether other continuances have been requested and granted; the length of the requested delay; whether the requested delay is for legitimate reasons; whether the motion for a continuance was timely filed; whether the defendant contributed to the circumstances giving rise to the request for continuance; whether the reason for the discharge of existing counsel was solely for the purpose of obtaining a continuance; whether the request is consistent with the fair, efficient and effective administration of justice; whether denying the continuance resulted in identifiable prejudice to the defendant's case of a material or substantial nature; and in the case of a pro se proceeding, where a proper waiver of counsel existed, whether the accused had sufficient time to prepare for his defense.

Parker v. State, 18 Ark. App. 252, 258-59, 715 S.W.2d 210, 213 (1986), relying on Thorne v. State, 269 Ark. 556, 601 S.W.2d 886 (1980). See, also, Pickens v. State, 6 Ark. App. 58, 638 S.W.2d 682 (1982).

Standard of Review: Discretion of Court. It is now well settled that it is within the sound discretion of the trial court to grant or deny a continuance. The trial court's decision will not be overturned absent a showing of a clear abuse of discretion. In the absence of a showing of prejudice, the reviewing court will not find the refusal of a continuance erroneous. Jared v. State, 17 Ark. App. 223, 707 S.W.2d 325 (1986).

Motion for Continuance Based upon Missing Witness. In Vann v. State, 14 Ark. App. 1, 684 S.W.2d 265 (1985), the Arkansas Court of Appeals upheld the trial court's refusal to grant a continuance to permit defense counsel to search for a missing witness who appeared in court early in the day but left, ostensibly to go to a job interview and to take his sick wife to a doctor.

Vann supplies the following test for such circumstances: Factors which must be considered by a trial court in exercising its discretion in granting or denying a motion for continuance are the probable effect of the testimony or evidence, the likelihood of procuring the evidence, and the relevance of the testimony or evidence. Id. at 4, 684 S.W.2d at 267.

In Golden v. State, 265 Ark. 99, 576 S.W.2d 955 (1979), the Arkansas Supreme Court upheld the conviction of appellant at a trial at which the trial court refused to grant a continuance when a physician who examined the victim of a battery and who was subpoenaed by appellant failed to appear at trial. Appellant's attorney had not spoken to the physician and had only third-hand information about his anticipated testimony. The decision might have been different if counsel had been able to state with more certainty what the witness would have said.

In Christian v. State, 6 Ark. App. 138, 639 S.W.2d 78 (1982), the Arkansas Court of Appeals upheld the trial court's refusal to grant a continuance asked for by appellant when his co-defendant did not appear for trial, his argument being that the co-defendant would have testified that appellant did not participate in the crime. The court of appeals was greatly influenced by appellant's written statement introduced into evidence admitting that he was with the co-defendant at the time and place of the crime, though it is by no means clear from the majority's description of the statement that it was as inculpatory as the majority found.

Motion for Continuance Based on Amendment of Information. The Arkansas Supreme Court has held that where the information charging an offense is amended shortly before trial, it is not an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court to deny a motion for continuance so long as the amendment is a minor one such as substituting a different date of the alleged offense charged. Payne v. State, 224 Ark. 309, 272 S.W.2d 829 (1954). But where the trial court permits an amendment to the information under Ark. Stat. Ann. § 41-2202(1) (Repl. 1977) (consolidation of theft offenses), and the amendment is such that additional witnesses not essential to the original charge are required by the defense, then the trial court's refusal to grant the continuance is an abuse of discretion. Prokos v. State, 266 Ark. 50, 582 S.W.2d 36 (1979). See, also, Robinson v. State, 11 Ark. App. 18, 665 S.W.2d 890 (1984); Jones v. State, 275 Ark. 12, 627 S.W.2d 6 (1982).

Lack of Due Diligence. Failure to exercise due diligence is a ground for denying a motion for a continuance. See Walls v. State, 280 Ark. 291, 658 S.W.2d 362 (1983), where the Arkansas Supreme Court upheld the trial court's denial of a motion for a continuance based upon the unavailability of a defense witness, affirming a 3-3 decision of the Arkansas Court of Appeals in which three judges dissented on the continuance issue.

CASE NOTES

In General.

Trial court's refusal to reopen suppression hearing can be likened to a denial of a motion for continuance. Oliver v. State, 322 Ark. 8, 907 S.W.2d 706 (1995), writ denied, Rhoades v. State, No. CR 93-1096, 1999 Ark. LEXIS 260 (Ark. May 6, 1999).

Affidavit.

Where a party has missing witnesses or other absence of evidence, and moves for a continuance pursuant to this rule, the filing of an affidavit by the movant is required under § 16-63-402(a). Wilson v. State, 320 Ark. 142, 895 S.W.2d 524 (1995).

Section 16-63-402(a) mandates an affidavit to justify a continuance due to a missing witness when the state objects to the continuance. Wilson v. State, 320 Ark. 142, 895 S.W.2d 524 (1995).

Appellate Review.

The burden of proving an abuse of discretion due to resulting prejudice in denying a continuance is upon the movant/appellant; prejudice is not presumed in this context, but, instead, the appellant must demonstrate prejudice before an appellate court will consider a trial court's denial of a continuance to be an abuse of discretion. Verdict v. State, 315 Ark. 436, 868 S.W.2d 443 (1993).

Trial court abused its discretion in denying defendant's request for a continuance based on the unavailability of a witness because the denial deprived him of the opportunity to present relevant, exculpatory, and noncumulative evidence that the State failed to make available to him, and therefore his conviction of second-degree sexual assault was reversed. Defendant was diligent in that his request was made 64 days before trial was to begin, he subpoenaed the investigator, and repeatedly and thoroughly informed the trial court of the substance of her expected testimony; defendant was prejudiced because the investigator would have testified that the daughter had previously falsified the same charge against defendant based on the same conduct; the State conceded that it would not have been prejudiced by a continuance. Brown v. State, 100 Ark. App. 172, 265 S.W.3d 772 (2007), rev'd, 374 Ark. 341, 288 S.W.3d 226 (2008).

Burden of Proof.

The burden is on the movant to show good cause for a continuance. David v. State, 295 Ark. 131, 748 S.W.2d 117 (1988).

The burden is on the movant to show good cause for a continuance; a mere assertion of error is not sufficient to warrant reversal. Verdict v. State, 315 Ark. 436, 868 S.W.2d 443 (1993).

The burden is on the movant to show good cause for a continuance. King v. State, 317 Ark. 293, 877 S.W.2d 583 (1994).

Construction.

Continuances are governed in part by this rule, which requires good cause and a consideration of the public's interest in a prompt disposition of cases, and by § 16-63-402(a), which requires a showing of the materiality of the evidence expected to be obtained, and if the motion is for an absent witness, what facts the witness will prove; the courts have further required that the movant for a continuance show by affidavit the likelihood of procuring the absent witnesses. Landreth v. State, 331 Ark. 12, 960 S.W.2d 434 (1998).

Discretion of Court.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for continuance in light of the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic because defendant failed to show how defendant was prejudiced as there was no indication that defendant was unable to speak to defendant's attorney before the hearing, and, if anything, there was more time for defendant to prepare because of the prior continuances granted by the court. Furthermore, there was no showing that more time would have changed the outcome of the revocation hearing. Quijada v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 321, 633 S.W.3d 797 (2021).

The matter of continuances is addressed to the sound judicial discretion of the trial court, and its action will not be reversed on appeal in the absence of such a clear abuse of that discretion as to amount to a denial of justice, and the burden of demonstrating that there has been an abuse rests upon appellant. Russell v. State, 262 Ark. 447, 559 S.W.2d 7 (1977); Parker v. State, 18 Ark. App. 252, 715 S.W.2d 210 (1986), overruled, Burns v. State, 300 Ark. 469, 780 S.W.2d 23 (1989), overruled, Ferrell v. State, 305 Ark. 511, 810 S.W.2d 29 (1991); Mincy v. State, 19 Ark. App. 80, 717 S.W.2d 213 (1986); Parker v. State, 292 Ark. 421, 731 S.W.2d 756 (1987); David v. State, 295 Ark. 131, 748 S.W.2d 117 (1988).

The grant or denial of a continuance is a matter within the trial court's discretion. Golden v. State, 265 Ark. 99, 576 S.W.2d 955 (1979).

Granting or failing to grant a continuance is within the discretion of the court, and the burden is on the appellant to show that there has been an abuse of that discretion. Cotton v. State, 265 Ark. 375, 578 S.W.2d 235 (1979); Harris v. State, 12 Ark. App. 181, 672 S.W.2d 905, rev'd, 284 Ark. 247, 681 S.W.2d 334 (1984).

In order to show that the trial judge was wrong in refusing to grant a continuance it must be proved that there was a clear abuse of discretion and that the ruling of the court prejudiced the defendant, and where there was no record of a hearing on the motion for continuance and, based on the bare motion and affidavit that were filed, it cannot be said that the court abused its discretion. McCree v. State, 266 Ark. 465, 585 S.W.2d 938 (1979).

In considering on appeal whether a defendant's motion for continuance should have been granted, the trial court's action will not be reversed absent a clear abuse of discretion amounting to a denial of justice and the burden is one the defendant to demonstrate such abuse. The matter is within the discretion of the trial court and not every denial of a request for a continuance violates due process, even if the party is compelled to defend without counsel. Brown v. State, 5 Ark. App. 181, 636 S.W.2d 286 (1982).

A motion for continuance is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge and his or her judgment will not be reversed on appeal in the absence of clear abuse. Simmons v. State, 314 Ark. 310, 862 S.W.2d 245 (1993).

The denial of a continuance when the motion is not in substantial compliance with § 16-63-402(a) is not an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Wilson v. State, 320 Ark. 142, 895 S.W.2d 524 (1995).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that testimony by an unavailable psychologist would be cumulative and in denying the defendant's motion for a continuance where the defendant did not file his motion until one day before trial and where 4 other mental health experts had examined the defendant and all of the experts, including the unavailable expert, agreed that the defendant lacked the requisite mental intent to commit the charged offense. Morgan v. State, 333 Ark. 294, 971 S.W.2d 219 (1998).

Murder defendant failed to show that denial of a continuance for him to procure a pathologist as a witness was an abuse of discretion where the motion came only two days before trial and defendant had five months to procure him, defendant did not state what the pathologist would testify to, and defendant had opportunity to cross-examine and discredit the state's expert. Cherry v. State, 347 Ark. 606, 66 S.W.3d 605 (2002).

Court could not say that the circuit court abused its discretion by not finding good cause to grant the motion for continuance under this rule and that defendant did not establish that prejudice amounting to a denial of justice had occurred by the denial. Jackson v. State, 2009 Ark. 336, 321 S.W.3d 260 (2009).

When a trial court denied defendant's motion to continue defendant's trial in a death penalty case, defendant was not entitled to a writ of certiorari because (1) defendant had an adequate remedy at law, which was an appeal, and (2) certiorari was not available to review matters within a trial court's discretionary authority. Pedraza v. Circuit Court of Drew County, 2013 Ark. 116, 426 S.W.3d 441 (2013).

When defendant sought a writ of certiorari after a trial court denied defendant's motion to continue defendant's trial in a death penalty case, defendant's argument that direct testimony by defense witnesses and cross-examination of State witnesses in a first trial, which might be flawed by lack of information or a full understanding of the case, could be admissible in a retrial under Ark. R. Evid. 801(d)(1), failed because this concern applied to every criminal case reversed on appeal and remanded for retrial. Pedraza v. Circuit Court of Drew County, 2013 Ark. 116, 426 S.W.3d 441 (2013).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in granting the State's request for a continuance in a prosecution for residential burglary and theft. The State learned of the second crowbar found at a material witness's residence the Friday before filing its motion on Monday, the State had scheduled that witness's deposition and asked only for a two-day continuance, and defendant asserted below only the issue of the State's diligence and failed to prove he was prejudiced by the continuance; even without the witness's testimony, the link between the crowbar, defendant, and the victims' home was established. Andruszczak v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 183, 518 S.W.3d 114 (2017).

Based upon the totality of the circumstances, the appellate court could not say the circuit court abused its discretion in denying defendant's request for a continuance after allowing a substitution of counsel less than 10 days before trial. Counsel did not condition his entry of appearance on the grant of a continuance, but simply pointed out that the circuit court had an open date approximately one month later and requested a continuance until that time. Baugh v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 191, 597 S.W.3d 156 (2020).

Factors Considered.

A motion for continuance shall be granted only upon a showing of good cause and the trial judge shall take into account not only the request or consent of the prosecuting attorney or defense counsel, but also the public interest in prompt disposition of the case. Prokos v. State, 266 Ark. 50, 582 S.W.2d 36 (1979).

If the defendant's request for a change of counsel would require the postponement of trial because of inadequate time for a new attorney to properly prepare the defendant's case, the motion for a change of counsel is viewed as a motion for a continuance, and in denying or granting the change, the court may consider such factors as the reasons for the change, whether other counsel has already been identified, whether the defendant has acted diligently in seeking the change, and whether the denial is likely to result in any prejudice to defendant. Pickens v. State, 6 Ark. App. 58, 638 S.W.2d 682 (1982), aff'd, 279 Ark. 457, 652 S.W.2d 626 (1983).

Factors which must be considered by a trial court in exercising its discretion in granting or denying a motion for continuance are the probable effect of the testimony or evidence, the likelihood of procuring the evidence and the relevance of the testimony or evidence. Vann v. State, 14 Ark. App. 1, 684 S.W.2d 265 (1985).

When making its decision whether to grant the continuance, the court must look at the particular circumstances of each case, considering the request for a change of counsel in the context of the public's interest in the prompt dispensation of justice. Mincy v. State, 19 Ark. App. 80, 717 S.W.2d 213 (1986).

Several factors to be considered by a trial court in deciding a continuance motion are: (1) the diligence of the movant; (2) the probable effect of the testimony at trial; (3) the likelihood of procuring the attendance of the witness in the event of a postponement; and (4) the filing of an affidavit, stating not only what facts the witness would prove, but also that the appellant believes them to be true. Wilson v. State, 320 Ark. 142, 895 S.W.2d 524 (1995).

Continuance denied even though psychiatric report had not been filed in strict compliance with § 5-2-305(d) where defendant failed to show any prejudice. Turner v. State, 326 Ark. 115, 931 S.W.2d 86 (1996).

In defendant's murder case, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it refused to grant the defense a continuance so that it could consult an expert regarding autopsy photographs allegedly given to the defense one working day before trial because defendant made no argument as to how the inability to consult an expert prejudiced him, and defendant had four days in which he could have e-mailed the photographs to an expert he had already consulted with on other issues in the case. Navarro v. State, 371 Ark. 179, 264 S.W.3d 530 (2007).

Revocation of defendant's suspended imposition of sentence was appropriate because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting the state's motion for a short continuance. Even though lack of diligence was sufficient to deny a request for continuance, it did not require a denial of the request. Dotson v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 731 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying a juvenile's motion to continue a mental capacity hearing in proceedings alleging that he raped his sister because his attorney moved for a continuance days before the hearing even though he knew about it for months; the juvenile was allowed to press the same defensive issues through his experts during the final-adjudication hearing. H.C. v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 284 (2013).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a continuance because absent a prompt disposition of defendant's probation violation, it was entirely possible that another domestic altercation would have occurred or that defendant's wife would have refused to testify, and it might have become impossible to hold defendant accountable. Mahomes v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 215, 427 S.W.3d 123 (2013).

Grant or Denial.

Motion for continuance properly denied. Russell v. State, 262 Ark. 447, 559 S.W.2d 7 (1977); Daigger v. State, 268 Ark. 249, 595 S.W.2d 653 (1980); Pickens v. State, 6 Ark. App. 58, 638 S.W.2d 682 (1982), aff'd, 279 Ark. 457, 652 S.W.2d 626 (1983); Christian v. State, 6 Ark. App. 138, 639 S.W.2d 78 (1982); Walls v. State, 280 Ark. 291, 658 S.W.2d 362 (1983); Wade v. State, 290 Ark. 16, 716 S.W.2d 194 (1986); Clay v. State, 290 Ark. 54, 716 S.W.2d 751 (1986); Jared v. State, 17 Ark. App. 223, 707 S.W.2d 325 (1986); Mincy v. State, 19 Ark. App. 80, 717 S.W.2d 213 (1986); Parker v. State, 292 Ark. 421, 731 S.W.2d 756 (1987); Oliver v. State, 312 Ark. 466, 851 S.W.2d 415 (1993); King v. State, 314 Ark. 205, 862 S.W.2d 229 (1993).

Where the amendment of the information, although it did not change the nature or the degree of the offense charged, was of great enough significance that the conduct of defendant's defense was prejudiced by lack of fair notice, the denial of the defendant's motion for a continuance was an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Prokos v. State, 266 Ark. 50, 582 S.W.2d 36 (1979).

There is no error in the denial of a motion for a continuance to obtain evidence that is not material and not relevant. Parker v. State, 292 Ark. 421, 731 S.W.2d 756 (1987).

Trial court properly denied the motion for a continuance finding there was nothing to show either that the unavailable witness was a material witness or that there would be any assurance she would be found and produced if the trial were delayed. Ray v. State, 304 Ark. 489, 803 S.W.2d 894, cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1222, 111 S. Ct. 2837, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1005 (1991).

Denial of continuance was proper where defendant charged as accomplice to murder moved for a continuance the day before the trial on the basis that the actual perpetrator of the bludgeoning, according to the defendant, was undergoing a mental evaluation and was unavailable to testify. Weaver v. State, 305 Ark. 180, 806 S.W.2d 615 (1991).

Where the state objected to the continuance, and defendant filed no affidavit or verified motion in support of his motion to postpone the trial, defendant's motion failed. Hill v. State, 321 Ark. 354, 902 S.W.2d 229 (1995).

Trial court had the discretion to deny defendant's request for postponement notwithstanding defendant's contention that alibi witness's testimony had become more important where defendant offered no evidence or likelihood such witness could be procured even if a continuance was given. Wilkins v. State, 324 Ark. 60, 918 S.W.2d 702 (1996).

Where the witness's arrival would delay the court only a few hours and, under the circumstances, a bare stipulation would not be a genuine substitute for the live testimony of a pivotal witness, the trial court abused its discretion by refusing the request for a brief recess. Rankin v. State, 57 Ark. App. 125, 942 S.W.2d 867 (1997).

Upon escaping from prison, defendant committed felonies in two different counties, and where defendant was given all the discovery materials relating to the crimes in both counties months before trial, and where the state amended the information a week before trial to include all the charges in a trial in one county, defendant's motions to continue were properly denied for lack of diligence as defendant had ample opportunity to interview certain local witnesses whose names and proposed testimony was contained in the discovery materials. Green v. State, 354 Ark. 210, 118 S.W.3d 563 (2003).

Where eight days before trial the state amended the information against defendants reducing the charge from rape to sexual assault in the first degree, notwithstanding that the proof under the two charges was not the same, defendants were not prejudiced as to their defense based on the totality of the circumstances test and the fact they waited until the day before trial to file their motion for continuance was further grounds for denying same. Murphy v. State, 83 Ark. App. 72, 117 S.W.3d 627 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion for continuance, based on defense counsel's difficulty in finding a witness, as defendant failed to demonstrate how he was prejudiced by the denial of his motion since the matter defendant sought to introduce into evidence was introduced through the testimony of another witness; the fact that the other witness testified for the state was not of consequence. Stenhouse v. State, 362 Ark. 480, 209 S.W.3d 352 (2005).

Court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a continuance after he found out during his case-in-chief that the prosecutor had released the detectives that both parties planned to call as witnesses because defendant was not entitled to rely on the state's witness list for his own defense; defendant also failed to show that he was prejudiced by the denial of the continuance. Lagrone v. State, 90 Ark. App. 183, 204 S.W.3d 568 (2005).

In a capital murder case, the denial of a continuance did not prejudice defendant because the trial date had been established eight months in advance, there was no objection by defendant at that time concerning his counsel's other obligations, and defendant did not provide any evidence that he did not receive effective assistance of counsel or that he was not adequately represented. There was also no evidence that the trial testimony of an unavailable witness would differ from his testimony given in a pretrial hearing. Thomas v. State, 370 Ark. 70, 257 S.W.3d 92, cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1025, 128 S. Ct. 620, 169 L. Ed. 2d 399 (2007).

In a rape case, requests for a continuance under this rule and for the appointment of additional experts were properly denied because a court-ordered mental evaluation complied with § 5-2-305(d), defendant had several months to secure a deoxyribonucleic acid expert, and it was unlikely that he could have procured an alibi witness. Creed v. State, 372 Ark. 221, 273 S.W.3d 494, cert. denied, 555 U.S. 823, 129 S. Ct. 130, 172 L. Ed. 2d 37 (2008).

Because the jury had before it ample evidence that the victim previously made claims of sexual abuse that no one believed, defendant was not prejudiced during his trial for sexual assault by the trial court's denial of his motion for a continuance to provide an investigator who could testify as to the victim's inconsistencies and untruths. Brown v. State, 374 Ark. 341, 288 S.W.3d 226 (2008).

Where defendant was charged with negligent homicide and second offense driving while intoxicated, his trial date had been set for over a month and the trial court had already granted defendant four continuances; when defendant announced on the morning of trial that he had discharged his attorney, the trial court did not abuse its discretion for not allowing him another continuance under this rule so that he could obtain another attorney. Proceeding pro se, defendant obtained an acquittal on the most serious charge of negligent homicide, and the jury convicted him of lesser-included offenses on two other charges; defendant did not suffer a denial of justice. Hayes v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 663 (2009).

Circuit court did not err in denying a continuance when defendants' two main witnesses did not appear at trial because the subpoena was not valid, and even if a male witness had been present, the witness's testimony would have been excluded by the rape-shield statute. Riddell v. State, 2011 Ark. 21 (2011).

There was no abuse of discretion in the denial of defendant's motion for a continuance, as defendant effectively delayed sentencing by absconding while the jury was deliberating and when defendant fired the trial attorney familiar with defendant's case. Hayes v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 79, 381 S.W.3d 117 (2011).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a motion for continuance, as, arguably, remarks from defendant and counsel showed that they did exercise some diligence in attempting to locate a missing witness, but defendant made the motion just before trial was set to begin (as opposed to days before), and there was nothing in the record to suggest that defendant or counsel would have been able to procure the missing witness's testimony; both defendant and counsel stated before the court that they were otherwise ready for trial. Smith v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 110, 381 S.W.3d 144 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a continuance; defendant claimed that his trial should have been continued until after the disposition of another man's murder charge, as that was a way for defendant to have access to the man's file, but all he had to do to secure the file was sign a protective order, which he refused to do. Sharp v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 718, 479 S.W.3d 568 (2015).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion to continue the trial until after his attorney's contempt hearing; prejudice could not be determined. Sharp v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 718, 479 S.W.3d 568 (2015).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's requests for a continuance on the day of the postconviction relief hearing, where appellant contended he had been given incorrect information by the clerk's office about the procedures for having subpoenas issued for his witnesses; appellant's lack of diligence as demonstrated by a delay of more than two months from the time that he had fully formulated his claims was sufficient cause for the denial. Flemons v. State, 2016 Ark. 460, 505 S.W.3d 196 (2016).

Motions for a continuance were properly denied as defendant was not diligent in his efforts to locate a potential witness and had not established the probable effect of the witness's testimony. In addition, defendant failed to demonstrate any likelihood that he could produce the witness and failed to provide an affidavit under § /n 16-63-402. Wynn v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 132 (2021).

Illustrative Cases.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting defendant only an overnight continuance to prepare to cross-examine defendant's alleged accomplice because defense counsel was aware that the alleged accomplice was on the witness list prior to trial, counsel listed the alleged accomplice as a potential witness, and counsel was provided the alleged accomplice's statement at least a day prior to trial. Moreover, defendant failed to demonstrate any resulting prejudice as defense counsel was able to effectively cross-examine the alleged accomplice. Copeland v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 104, 513 S.W.3d 885 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's request for a continuance to secure a witness where neither defendant nor his attorney had spoken to the witness as to the parameters of his testimony, the witness's impending court date and the potential for in-crimination from his testimony meant that he might well have invoked the Fifth Amendment, and defendant offered no argument as to the prejudice resulting from the ruling on the continuance. Davis v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 496, 532 S.W.3d 589 (2017).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a continuance because defendant failed to clearly demonstrate how the granting of a continuance would have altered the outcome of the probation revocation hearing; defendant failed to point to any specific information the continuance would have garnered that would have impacted or changed his cross-examination of the probation officer, and a recess granted for him to interview the officer cured a discovery violation. Arnold v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 22, 540 S.W.3d 298 (2018).

Defendant's motion for continuance filed the day before trial to obtain an independent examination to support an affirmative defense of lack of criminal responsibility was properly denied as he had ample time to pursue an independent evaluation before trial, but instead planned to wait and see what the state hospital's report would conclude before seeking to obtain his own experts for an evaluation; although the state hospital's report was not provided until shortly before trial, a defendant who employs such a "wait and see" strategy is not acting diligently in attempting to secure the necessary information on which to build a defense of mental disease or defect. In addition, defendant failed to show any prejudice from the denial of the continuance. Hendrix v. State, 2019 Ark. 351, 588 S.W.3d 17 (2019).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a continuance to secure a witness and obtain new counsel because the case was pending for more than one year and defendant received multiple continuances, including one for the specific purpose of allowing her to obtain private counsel. Despite being given an adequate opportunity to hire counsel, defendant had not yet hired counsel and needed an unspecified amount of time to raise more money to hire counsel. Brooks v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 592, 591 S.W.3d 389 (2019).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to continue the sentencing hearing because a character witness was unable to attend; defendant had already been given a one-month continuance and was informed that sentencing was going to happen at the reset date, defendant admitted that he failed to present an affidavit, failed to demonstrate diligence in getting his employer to appear, failed to demonstrate the likelihood that the employer could be at another hearing if a continuance were granted, and the information he sought to elicit from the absent witness was introduced at the sentencing hearing. Law v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 39 (2020).

Circuit court's denial of defendant's motion for continuance based on its finding that he did not exercise due diligence in obtaining new counsel was not an abuse of discretion because the case had been pending for over a year, yet defendant waited until the day of trial to request a continuance to obtain new counsel; even if defendant demonstrated that the circuit court abused its discretion in denying his continuance request, he failed to allege particular facts showing prejudice. Galvin v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 121, 618 S.W.3d 475 (2021).

Lack of Preparedness.

The remedy for a party's lack of preparedness would not be the exclusion of the evidence at the trial but more time to prepare his defense by use of a timely request for a continuance at trial. Baldrige v. State, 32 Ark. App. 160, 798 S.W.2d 127 (1990).

Where defendant's counsel argued generally that he lacked time to prepare for trial, but the only specific given was that he did not receive the discovery materials until 10 days before trial, counsel did not show how he was prejudiced, and a continuance was properly denied. Davis v. State, 318 Ark. 212, 885 S.W.2d 292 (1994).

Lack of diligence in securing appearance of witnesses is a legitimate ground for denying a motion for continuance. Nelson v. State, 324 Ark. 404, 921 S.W.2d 593 (1996).

Continuance denied where defendant was not diligent in attempting to secure the necessary information on which to build a defense of mental disease or defect. Miller v. State, 328 Ark. 121, 942 S.W.2d 825 (1997).

The court properly denied a continuance sought by the defendant because he had failed to communicate with his attorney in order to prepare for trial where the record showed that the trial court had previously granted a continuance motion because the defendant was unprepared to present his defense. Goodman v. State, 74 Ark. App. 1, 45 S.W.3d 399 (2001).

Denial of a continuance to a defendant did not violate due process; although the information was amended the day before trial from a charge of rape of someone less than 14 years old by forcible compulsion to rape by forcible compulsion in violation of § 5-14-103(a)(1), the nature of the crime charged did not change, pursuant to § 16-85-407(b). Green v. State, 2012 Ark. 19, 386 S.W.3d 413 (2012).

Right to Counsel.

Trial court did not err by denying defendant's request to dismiss his trial counsel because he moved to dismiss counsel during voir dire, complaining that he and his counsel had not discussed the case, but defendant had retained his counsel five months prior to trial, he had not obtained substitute counsel, and the case had already been continued. Staggs v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 259 (2021).

Stipulation to Evidence.

Motion for continuance, by attorney who claimed that had he had more time, he would have subpoenaed two witnesses who would have testified regarding test results from the crime scene that might tend to exculpate the defendant, denied where the State agreed to stipulate to their reports. Lee v. State, 326 Ark. 529, 932 S.W.2d 756 (1996).

RULE 28.

LIMITATIONS, EXCLUDED PERIODS AND CONSEQUENCES

Rule

Rule 28.1. Limitations and consequences.

Rule 28.2. When time commences to run.

Rule 28.3. Excluded periods.

Rule 28.1. Limitations and consequences.

(a) Any defendant charged with an offense and incarcerated in a city or county jail in this state pending trial shall be released on his own recognizance if not brought to trial within nine (9) months from the time provided in Rule 28.2, excluding only such periods of necessary delay as are authorized in Rule 28.3.

(b) Any defendant charged with an offense and incarcerated in prison in this state pursuant to conviction of another offense shall be entitled to have the charge dismissed with an absolute bar to prosecution if not brought to trial within twelve (12) months from the time provided in Rule 28.2, excluding only such periods of necessary delay as are authorized in Rule 28.3.

(c) Any defendant charged with an offense and held to bail, or otherwise lawfully set at liberty, including released from incarceration pursuant to subsection (a) hereof, shall be entitled to have the charge dismissed with an absolute bar to prosecution if not brought to trial within twelve (12) months from the time provided in Rule 28.2, excluding only such periods of necessary delay as are authorized in Rule 28.3.

(d) Any defendant who is charged with an offense in circuit court, including a defendant who appeals a district court conviction to circuit court, and who is entitled to a dismissal of the charge because not brought to trial in the circuit court as provided in subsection (b) or (c) hereof may move the circuit court for dismissal of the charge. If the circuit court denies the motion to dismiss, the defendant may raise the denial in a posttrial appeal of a conviction as grounds for reversing the conviction and dismissing the charge. The defendant whose motion is denied by the circuit court shall not be entitled to seek interlocutory review of the denial by appeal or by petition for writ of prohibition, but the defendant may, in appropriate cases, seek interlocutory review by petition for writ of certiorari. The failure of a defendant to seek interlocutory review by petition for writ of certiorari shall not constitute a waiver of the defendant's right to raise the denial of rights under subsection (b) or (c) hereof in a posttrial appeal.

(e) Any defendant charged with an offense in district court who is entitled to dismissal of the charge because not brought to trial in the district court as provided in subsection (b) or (c) may move the district court for dismissal of the charge. If the district court denies the motion for dismissal, there shall be no right to interlocutory review of the denial, but the defendant who appeals a district court conviction to the circuit court may move the circuit court for dismissal of the charge because not brought to trial in the district court as provided in subsection (b) or (c) hereof. If the circuit court denies the motion for dismissal, there shall be no right to interlocutory review of the denial except by writ of certiorari as provided in subsection (d) hereof, but the defendant who appeals a conviction in the circuit court may raise the denial as grounds for reversing the conviction and dismissing a charge.

(f) The dismissal of a charge pursuant to subsection (b) or (c) hereof shall also be an absolute bar to prosecution for any other offense required to be joined with the charge dismissed.

(g)(1) If the district court denies a defendant's motion to dismiss because not brought to trial in the district court as provided in subsection (b) and (c) hereof, the defendant may thereafter enter a plea of guilty in district court without waiving the right to move the circuit court for dismissal of the charge because the defendant was not brought to trial in the district court as provided in subsection (b) or (c) hereof.

(2) If the circuit court denies a defendant's motion to dismiss because not brought to trial in either the circuit court or the district court as provided in subsection (b) or (c) hereof, the defendant may enter a conditional plea of guilty in the circuit court as provided in Rule 24.3(b).

(3) Failure of a defendant to move for dismissal of a charge pursuant to subsection (b) or (c) hereof prior to a plea of guilty or trial shall constitute a waiver of rights under this rule.

(h) This rule shall have no effect in those cases which are expressly governed by the “Interstate Agreement on Detainers Act” (Act 705 of 1971).

HISTORY: Amended June 30, 1980, effective July 1, 1980; amended July 13, 1987, effective October 1, 1987; corrected February 23, 1988; amended April 9, 2009, effective June 1, 2009.

Scope of Commentary. The following commentary discusses only cursorily problems that arose under the pre-1980 version of this Rule and that have been eliminated by the 1980 and 1981 amendments. See, In The Matter of Rules of Criminal Procedure, Amendment of Article VIII Speedy Trial, Per Curiam, June 30, 1980 (269 Ark. 988) and Re: Amendment to Rule 28.3(f) of the Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure, Per Curiam, June 8, 1981, 273 Ark. 551.

Rules 28.1 to 28.3 are interrelated. Cases interpreting these provisions are discussed in the commentary to Rules 28.2 and 28.3 as well as in the commentary to Rule 28.1.

History. Defining speedy trial rights by using terms of court rather than more clearly defined periods of time engendered a good deal of confusion, resulting in the 1980 amendments to this rule. The uncertainty (and, in some cases, unfairness) was especially acute when it was necessary to resolve compliance issues in jurisdictions having circuit courts with multiple divisions having overlapping terms. See State v. Messer, 269 Ark. 431, 601 S.W.2d 857 (1980), where the Court, pointing out problems created by lack of uniformity, observed: The inequity it sometimes creates is emphatically illustrated by our decisions in Alexander v. State, supra, finding a speedy trial violation when a defendant was brought to trial within 7 months, and Matthews v. State, 268 Ark. 484, 598 S.W.2d 58 (1980), finding no violation when a defendant was not brought to trial within 18 months. 269 Ark. 433-34, 601 S.W.2d at 858.

Issues of Byzantine complexity were frequently encountered. For instance, the issue in Messer was posed by the Court as follows: “The issue we now must determine is whether an overlapping term of a division should be excluded when a term which is substantially contemporaneous with it is excluded in another division because of a requested continuance.” 269 Ark. at 434, 601 S.W.2d at 858.

The dissatisfaction culminating in amendment of Rule 28 is evinced in cases such as Williams v. State, 275 Ark. 8, 627 S.W.2d 4 (1982), where a three judge dissent observed: “This decision marks the end of any pretense that this Court may have posed regarding enforcement of the speedy trial provisions of the Rules of Criminal Procedure.” 275 Ark. at 11, 627 S.W.2d at 5 (1982).

Burden of Proof. Where a prima facie violation of the speedy trial rules emerges from the evidence — for example, when the trial takes place more than 18 months from the date of arrest — it devolves on the state to show good cause for the delay. Glover v. State, 287 Ark. 19, 695 S.W.2d 829 (1985); Walker v. State, 288 Ark. 52, 701 S.W.2d 372 (1986).

Incarceration on Other Charges. Disposition of offenders jailed pending trial on other charges or pursuant to previous convictions is explicitly dealt with in Rules 28.1(a) and (b). See, also, Mackey v. State, 279 Ark. 307, 651 S.W.2d 82 (1983).

Incarceration in Jail Followed by Incarceration in Prison. When a defendant is charged, incarcerated in jail pending trial, and then incarcerated in prison pursuant to conviction of another offense, the time for trial is governed by the site of the latest incarceration under Rules 28.1(b) and 28.2(a). Foyt v. State, 280 Ark. 226, 656 S.W.2d 701 (1983).

Speedy Trial Rights Not Waived by Plea of Guilty. The Arkansas Supreme Court has held that failure to file a timely speedy trial motion constitutes ineffective assistance of counsel. Clark v. State, 274 Ark. 81, 621 S.W.2d 857 (1981). The Court is not of one mind on whether a plea of guilty should be deemed a waiver of the requirements of the speedy trial rule. See, for example, Hall v. State, 281 Ark. 282, 663 S.W.2d 926 (1984), where the Court held that appellant was entitled to a dismissal where he pleaded guilty after more than 12 months’ incarceration and, as a result of ineffective assistance of counsel, did not knowingly and intelligently waive his right to a speedy trial.

A three judge dissent argued that a guilty plea is a waiver and that a defendant who waives his remedies and admits guilt assumes the risk of error in his or counsel’s assessment of the law and facts. The dissent also called for the overruling of Clark v. State, which related the rights to speedy trial and to effective assistance of counsel as follows: If, in the original trial, the defendant knowingly and intelligently waived his speedy trial rights he cannot raise that argument in a post-conviction proceeding. Questions which might have been raised at the original trial are not permissible issues at a Rule 37 proceeding. . . . However, if the defendant did not knowingly and understandingly waive his speedy trial rights he is entitled to seek post-conviction relief on the basis of ineffective assistance of counsel. 274 Ark. at 84, 85, 621 S.W.2d at 859.

Trial Delays Arising from Attorney’s Conflicts of Interests. The Arkansas Supreme Court held that an excludable period of delay should be charged to appellant under Rules 28.1 and 29.3(h) where a continuance was necessitated by designation of defense counsel as a deputy prosecutor and by appointment of a special prosecutor on motion of appellant to avoid the appearance of a conflict. Divanovich v. State, 273 Ark. 117, 617 S.W.2d 345 (1981). Divanovich was distinguished by the Court from Norton v. State, 273 Ark. 289, 618 S.W.2d 164 (1981), where the state unsuccessfully argued that there was good cause for delay when a deputy prosecutor, who was previously an attorney for appellant's co-defendant, recused on motion of appellant. The Court opined that it was not appellant's fault that the prosecutor in the judicial district hired co-defendant's counsel to serve as a deputy prosecutor on his staff.

Remedy for Violation of Rule 28.1(a). Even though Rule 28.1(a) is on its face mandatory, the Arkansas Supreme Court has consistently held that prosecution of a defendant incarcerated for more than nine months, is not barred, the Rule 30.1(b) remedy not being available in these cases. Jackson v. State, 290 Ark. 375, 720 S.W.2d 282 (1986) (appellant concededly incarcerated for 284 days in violation of Rule 28.1(a) not entitled to dismissal). See, also, Orsini v. State, 281 Ark. 348, 665 S.W.2d 245 (1984) (failure to set bond does not violate an otherwise valid conviction).

Application to De Novo Trials in Misdemeanor Cases. The Arkansas Court of Appeals has decided that the time within which the defendant must be brought to trial after appeal of a misdemeanor conviction begins running under Rule 28.1(c) and 28.2 on the day a case is appealed to circuit court. Shaw v. State, 18 Ark. App. 243, 712 S.W.2d 338 (1986). In Shaw, appellant was convicted in municipal court of driving while intoxicated on August 4, 1983. He appealed his conviction to circuit court on August 17, 1983, but the case was not set for trial until July 10, 1985. A trial followed on November 15, 1985. The Court held that time for trial began running on August 17 and that the trial court should have dismissed the charge because appellant's 1985 trial occurred more than 18 months after August 17, 1983.

The Court also observed that Rules 28.3(b), (c), and (i) require that the trial judge make certain docket entries. Where, because of the Court's failure to make entries, the record does not disclose whether periods of time should be deemed excluded, a later ruling by the trial judge not supported by the court docket that excluded periods exist will not be upheld.

Publisher's Notes.

The introductory paragraph of the per curiam order of the Supreme Court of Arkansas issued on June 30, 1980 read: "Article VIII is amended by this restatement of the article which shall become effective on July 1, 1980. The time for trial of all defendants that has commenced to run pursuant to Rule 28.2 prior to July 1, 1980, shall continue to be governed by Article VIII as it existed prior to this amendment, but the time for trial of all defendants that commences to run pursuant to Rule 28.2 (not changed by this amendment) on July 1, 1980, or thereafter, shall be governed by this amendment of Article VIII."

Reporter's Notes to 2009 Amendments:

The 2009 amendments deleted references to the "circuit court" in subsections (a), (b), and (c) of this rule. The supreme court had previously held that the speedy trial requirements of the rule applied to a proceeding in municipal court, the predecessor of the district court. Stephens v. State, 295 Ark. 541, 750 S.W.2d 52 (1988); Whittle v. Washington County Circuit Court, 325 Ark. 136, 925 S.W.2d 383 (1996).

Prior to the change, a defendant whose speedy trial motion was denied by the circuit court could seek interlocutory supreme court review of the decision by filing a writ of prohibition. See former Rule 28.1(d). Similarly, the defendant in district court could file a petition for writ of prohibition in the circuit court, and if the circuit court also denied the speedy trial motion, the defendant could seek supreme court review by writ of prohibition. Cf. Prine v. State, 370 Ark. 232, 258 S.W.3d 347 (2007); McFarland v. Lindsey, 338 Ark. 588, 2 S.W.3d 48 (1999). As a result of such interlocutory review, a rule designed to encourage prompt disposition of criminal cases often resulted in lengthy delays in the trial of such cases.

The 2009 amendments substantially limit the defendant's right to seek interlocutory review of an adverse ruling on a speedy trial motion. Subsection (e) makes it clear that there is no right to interlocutory review of a district court's denial of a speedy trial motion. Under revised subsection (d), a circuit court's denial of a speedy trial motion is not reviewable prior to trial except by writ of certiorari.

It is anticipated that a writ of certiorari will be issued to a circuit court only in extraordinary cases where the record clearly demonstrates that the circuit court has grossly abused its discretion by denying the defendant's speedy trial motion. The standards for determining the propriety of a writ of certiorari are set out in numerous recent supreme court opinions:

1. A writ of certiorari is extraordinary relief.
2. The appellate court will not look beyond the face of the record to ascertain the actual merits of a controversy, or to control discretion, or to review a finding of fact, or to reverse a trial court's discretionary authority.
3. A writ of certiorari lies only where it is apparent on the face of the record that there has been a plain, manifest, clear, and gross abuse of discretion, or that there is a lack of jurisdiction, an act in excess of jurisdiction on the face of the record, or the proceedings are erroneous on the face of the record.

4. Certiorari is available in the exercise of the supreme court's review of a tribunal that is proceeding illegally where no other mode of review has been provided.

5. There can be no other adequate remedy but for the writ of certiorari. See Evans v. Blankenship, 374 Ark. 104, — S.W.3d — (2008); Helena-West Helena Sch. Dist. #2 of Phillips County v. Phillips County Circuit Court, 368 Ark. 549, 247 S.W.3d 823 (2007); Ark. Game & Fish Comm'n v. Herndon, 365 Ark. 180, 226 S.W.3d 776 (2006); Ark. Dep't of Human Servs. v. Collier, 351 Ark. 506, 95 S.W.3d 772 (2003) (writ of certiorari granted when trial court made a decision that was contrary to the plain language of a statute); Cooper Communities, Inc. v. Benton County Circuit Court, 336 Ark. 136, 984 S.W.2d 429 (1999); and Oliver v. Pulasaki County Circuit Court, 340 Ark. 681, 13 S.W.3d 156 (2000).

Prior to the 2009 amendments, a guilty plea waived the defendant's right to raise an alleged denial of speedy trial. Revised subsection(g)(1) makes it clear that a defendant whose speedy trial motion is denied by the district court may thereafter plead guilty in the district court, file an appeal with the circuit court, and renew the speedy trial motion in the circuit court. A similar procedure does not apply in circuit court, but revised subsection(g)(2) does permit the defendant whose speedy trial motion is denied by the circuit court to enter a conditional plea of guilty and still appeal the speedy trial issue to an appellate court provided the requirements of Rule 24.3(b) are otherwise satisfied.

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

This rule, as applied to deny a motion to dismiss brought by a defendant who had resisted every attempt to bring him to trial, was not unconstitutional under Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 10 guaranteeing a right to speedy trial. Faulk v. State, 261 Ark. 543, 551 S.W.2d 194 (1977).

The 18 (now 12) month period set by subsection (c) of this rule for a speedy trial is reasonable and is consistent with constitutional standards. Jennings v. State, 276 Ark. 217, 633 S.W.2d 373, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 862, 103 S. Ct. 137, 74 L. Ed. 2d 117 (1982).

In General.

It is plain from the provisions of this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.2 and Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3 that the drafters recognized that an accused who is incarcerated on pending charges, or on different charges, is at a disadvantage simply by virtue of his confinement. Hence, for such defendants, shorter periods for trial are provided by the speedy trial rule. Miller v. Langston, 296 Ark. 486, 757 S.W.2d 562 (1988).

Appeal.

There is no authority for an interlocutory appeal of the denial of a motion to dismiss for lack of a speedy trial. Gammel v. State, 318 Ark. 880, 890 S.W.2d 240 (1994).

A pretrial detainee may seek a writ of habeas corpus in the Supreme Court, following an adverse ruling below, for the purpose of determining whether he or she is being detained in violation of the rule. Simpson v. Sheriff of Dallas County, 333 Ark. 277, 968 S.W.2d 614 (1998).

There is no authority for an interlocutory appeal of the denial of a motion for dismissal on speedy trial grounds; the proper method for bringing a denial of a speedy trial motion to the attention of the Supreme Court is by petition for writ of prohibition. Richards v. State, 338 Ark. 801, 2 S.W.3d 766 (1999).

Because delay for good cause is allowed to be excluded under speedy trial rules, state was allowed to have the time in which it appealed the trial court's grant of a new trial on defendant's motion excluded from defendant's speedy trial calculation. Cherry v. State, 347 Ark. 606, 66 S.W.3d 605 (2002).

Defendant's speedy-trial issue was not preserved for appellate review where he filed a general speedy-trial motion that asserted only that 781 total days had elapsed since he was arrested, he did not contemporaneously object to any of the excluded periods announced by the court, and, thus, he did not inform the court of the reason for his disagreement with its proposed action prior to or at the time it ruled on the matter. Killian v. State, 96 Ark. App. 92, 238 S.W.3d 629 (2006).

Appeal by State.

State's appeal was dismissed because defendant had asserted, and the State conceded, that he had not been brought to trial within the time specified by this rule, and while purporting to raise purely an issue of law, the legal issue raised by the State on appeal could not be separated from the unique facts of the case, and contrary to the State's assertions, Arkansas's speedy-trial jurisprudence did not offend the requirements set forth by the United States Supreme Court in Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514 (1972), which dictated only that a trial court conduct an "ad hoc" determination of whether a defendant's right to a speedy trial had been violated. State v. Owens, 2017 Ark. 362, 533 S.W.3d 582 (2017).

Applicability.

Because subsection (c) of this rule, as amended, is procedural it can be validly applied to all criminal trials commencing on or after July 1, 1980 (now October 1, 1987). Jennings v. State, 276 Ark. 217, 633 S.W.2d 373, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 862, 103 S. Ct. 137, 74 L. Ed. 2d 117 (1982).

Speedy trial rules are not substantive law, they are procedural law, and the rule in effect at the time of trial applies. Jennings v. State, 276 Ark. 217, 633 S.W.2d 373, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 862, 103 S. Ct. 137, 74 L. Ed. 2d 117 (1982).

The present wording of subsection (c) of this rule was adopted by amendment on July 13, 1987, and expressly provides that the change applies to defendants charged after October 1, 1987. Kain v. State, 296 Ark. 123, 752 S.W.2d 265 (1988); Roberts v. State, 302 Ark. 4, 786 S.W.2d 568 (1990).

Subsection (b) of this rule is applicable only while a defendant is charged with one crime and is incarcerated in prison pursuant to conviction of another crime. It does not apply while a defendant is at liberty on bond. Cooper v. Langston, 296 Ark. 306, 756 S.W.2d 896 (1988).

A municipal court speedy trial violation motion to dismiss pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 30.1(a) may be raised in the de novo circuit court proceeding even though this rule only refers to trial in a circuit court. Whittle v. Washington County Circuit Court, 325 Ark. 136, 925 S.W.2d 383 (1996).

Although a probation revocation hearing must be held within a reasonable time, there is no absolute right, as in criminal prosecutions, to be heard within twelve months. Dority v. State, 329 Ark. 631, 951 S.W.2d 559 (1997).

Burden of Proof.

Where a defendant's trial was held after allowable period had passed, the trial court erred in not granting a motion to dismiss pursuant to this rule, since the state did not carry its burden of proving the excludable periods of time under Rule 28.3 by merely alleging that its witness, a deputy, had been admitted to the hospital on the date of the hearing for an emergency, but failing to show that the unavailability of that witness was for amount of time alleged. Van Sandt v. State, 274 Ark. 7, 621 S.W.2d 681 (1981) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

The burden is upon the state to prove good cause for any delay in the trial or that it was legally justified. Williams v. State, 275 Ark. 8, 627 S.W.2d 4 (1982).

The burden is upon the state to show good cause for an untimely delay in the trial. Chandler v. State, 284 Ark. 560, 683 S.W.2d 928 (1985).

Where the speedy trial rules have been prima facie violated, the burden is upon the State to show good cause for the untimely delay. Glover v. State, 287 Ark. 19, 695 S.W.2d 829 (1985); Lowe v. State, 290 Ark. 403, 720 S.W.2d 293 (1986), overruled, Richards v. State, 338 Ark. 801, 2 S.W.3d 766 (1999); Meine v. State, 309 Ark. 124, 827 S.W.2d 151 (1992); Henson v. State, 38 Ark. App. 155, 832 S.W.2d 269 (1992).

Once the defendant has moved for dismissal and has shown that the trial was being or was going to be held after the speedy trial period expired, the prosecutor has the burden of showing the delay beyond the speedy trial period was the result of the defendant's conduct. Walker v. State, 288 Ark. 52, 701 S.W.2d 372 (1986).

When the time allowed by the speedy trial rule under subsection (c) of this rule has been exceeded, the prosecution has the burden of proving that the delay was legally justified. Harwood v. Lofton, 288 Ark. 173, 702 S.W.2d 805 (1986); Williams v. State, 290 Ark. 286, 718 S.W.2d 935 (1986), cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1068, 107 S. Ct. 2460, 95 L. Ed. 2d 869 (1987); Horn v. State, 294 Ark. 464, 743 S.W.2d 814 (1988); Stephens v. State, 295 Ark. 541, 750 S.W.2d 52 (1988); Keys v. State, 23 Ark. App. 219, 745 S.W.2d 628 (1988); Woods v. State, 26 Ark. App. 109, 760 S.W.2d 392 (1988); Campbell v. State, 26 Ark. App. 133, 761 S.W.2d 613 (1988).

Burden is on courts and state to assure a defendant receives a speedy trial. Novak v. State, 294 Ark. 120, 741 S.W.2d 243 (1987).

Once it is shown that the trial was scheduled to be held after the speedy trial period had expired, the state has the burden of showing that any delay was the result of the defendant's conduct or was otherwise legally justified. Mc-

Conaughy v. State, 301 Ark. 446, 784 S.W.2d 768 (1990); Glover v. State, 307 Ark. 1, 817 S.W.2d 409 (1991); Scroggins v. State, 312 Ark. 106, 848 S.W.2d 400 (1993); Tanner v. State, 324 Ark. 37, 918 S.W.2d 166 (1996).

The state failed to carry its burden in showing that the delay in bringing defendant to trial was legally justified. Towe v. State, 303 Ark. 441, 798 S.W.2d 56 (1990).

Although defendant established a prima facie case that a speedy-trial violation occurred, the state met its burden of showing that the delay was the result of the defendant's conduct or was otherwise legally justified. Jones v. State, 323 Ark. 655, 916 S.W.2d 736 (1996).

Where twenty-six months passed from the date the information was filed until the date defendant filed his motion to dismiss, defendant presented a prima facie case that the speedy-trial rule was violated. Lively v. State, 326 Ark. 398, 930 S.W.2d 339 (1996).

Because defendant presented a prima facie case of a speedy-trial violation, the burden shifted to the State to show that the delay resulted from defendant's conduct or was otherwise justified. Miller v. State, 100 Ark. App. 391, 269 S.W.3d 400 (2007).

Calculation of Period.

For cases discussing calculation of court terms under rule prior to 1980 amendment, see Wade v. State, 264 Ark. 320, 571 S.W.2d 231 (1978); State v. Lewis, 268 Ark. 359, 596 S.W.2d 697 (1980); Alexander v. State, 268 Ark. 384, 598 S.W.2d 395 (1980); State v. Messer, 269 Ark. 431, 601 S.W.2d 857 (1980); Archer v. State, 271 Ark. 365, 609 S.W.2d 91 (Ct. App. 1980); Hayes v. State, 274 Ark. 440, 625 S.W.2d 498 (1981).

Where state filed nolle prosequi order and later refiled charges of first-degree battery, the period between the order and the refileing could not be excluded under subsection (f) of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, in calculating the period under this rule since the action by the state of entering a nolle prosequi or dismissing with leave to refile does not toll the running of the speedy trial provisions under subsection (f) of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3 absent a showing of good cause for the period of delay nor is the state relieved of the speedy trial limitation merely because the defendant is permitted absolute release pending disposition of the charges. State v. Washington, 273 Ark. 82, 617 S.W.2d 3 (1981) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Where the defendant is at liberty when arrested on other charges, the time for trial should commence running when the accused is deprived of his liberty. Miller v. Langston, 296 Ark. 486, 757 S.W.2d 562 (1988).

The date the charges are filed is the beginning for the calculation of the time for a speedy trial. Keys v. State, 23 Ark. App. 219, 745 S.W.2d 628 (1988).

Time limitations for trial begin running on the date the charge is filed; there is no requirement that a defendant be arrested before the 12-month time period for speedy trial begins to run. Nettles v. State, 303 Ark. 8, 791 S.W.2d 702 (1990).

Trial court did not clearly err by excluding the 30 days during which defendant's motion to suppress was under advisement. Smith v. State, 303 Ark. 524, 798 S.W.2d 94 (1990).

Where defendant was in prison in another state, for a different crime, and was extradited to Arkansas to stand trial, he would have had to affirmatively request a trial in order to activate the speedy trial rule, and where defendant did not, his right to a speedy trial did not begin to run until his actual return to the state. Gillie v. State, 305 Ark. 296, 808 S.W.2d 320 (1991).

The period of delay resulting from an examination and hearing on the competency of the defendant was excludable from the 12-month period. Hubbard v. State, 306 Ark. 153, 812 S.W.2d 107 (1991).

The period of delay, due to the appointment of new defense counsel, was not excludable as a delay for good cause, because the defendant did nothing to cause his trial to be delayed beyond the time for a speedy trial. Glover v. State, 307 Ark. 1, 817 S.W.2d 409 (1991).

When the defendant is scheduled for trial within the time for speedy trial and the trial is postponed because of the defendant, that is "good cause" to exclude the time attributable to the delay. Lewis v. State, 307 Ark. 260, 819 S.W.2d 689 (1991).

The time for trial commenced running anew on the date the mandate was issued by the Supreme Court Clerk. Clements v. State, 312 Ark. 528, 851 S.W.2d 422 (1993).

Where the state charge against defendant was dropped in favor of a federal indictment, which was never pursued, the time between the nolle prosequi and the refileing of the state charges was not excludable because the state failed to show good cause. Caulkins v. Crabtree, 319 Ark. 686, 894 S.W.2d 138 (1995).

Speedy trial period on defendant's trial de novo appeal from municipal court decision began to run on the date the city attorney became aware of the appeal. McClung v. State, 53 Ark. App. 196, 920 S.W.2d 867 (1996).

The time it took defendant to obtain a mental capacity report from the state hospital was excluded in calculating the one-year period prescribed by this rule. Hulsey v. Smitherman, 328 Ark. 234, 943 S.W.2d 568 (1997).

The entry of a guilty plea for manufacturing a controlled substance, ephedrine, and its later withdrawal had the effect of restarting the time for speedy trial on an amended information charging the manufacturing of a controlled substance, methcathinone, at the time of the withdrawal of the guilty plea. Kelch v. Erwin, 333 Ark. 567, 970 S.W.2d 255 (1998).

By establishing a period of delay beyond 12 months from the date of the charge, petitioner made a prima facie case for a speedy-trial violation; however, there was no violation of the speedy-trial rule because, after attributing excludable time periods to petitioner and the state pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, the time charged to the state was less than 12 months. Doby v. Jefferson County Circuit Court, 350 Ark. 505, 88 S.W.3d 824 (2002).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated because he was brought to trial within 12 months after several excludable time periods were subtracted from a 464-day period; therefore, defendant's motion to dismiss several drug and weapons charges was properly denied. Gondolfi v. Clinger, 352 Ark. 156, 98 S.W.3d 812 (2003).

Trial court did not err in excluding any of the four periods from the speedy-trial time calculation because defendant was tried within the 12 months as required by subsection (b) of this rule; defendant requested the continuances and did not object to the orders or their exclusion from the speedy trial calculation under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, and excluded periods without a written order or docket entry have been upheld where the record demonstrated that the delays were attributable to defendant or legally justified for "good cause" under Rule 28.3(h). Autrey v. State, 90 Ark. App. 131, 204 S.W.3d 84 (2005).

Defendant's right to speedy trial was not violated because he was brought to trial within the time required under this rule; the state met its burden to show that there were 414 days that were permissibly excluded pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, which included a continuance requested by defendant, discovery, an unavailable witness, and a joint motion to investigate new evidence. May v. State, 94 Ark. App. 202, 228 S.W.3d 517 (2006).

In a stalking and terroristic threats case, denial of defendant's motion to dismiss on speedy-trial grounds was proper because subtracting the *nol pro*s and continuance periods from the overall 426-day period between his arrest and the day his speedy-trial motion was filed left 347 days, well within the one-year period of this rule. Branning v. State, 371 Ark. 433, 267 S.W.3d 599 (2007).

Where petitioner's speedy trial argument was based solely upon the time that elapsed between his arrest and his guilty plea and failed to consider excludable periods resulting from his requests for a psychological evaluation and a continuance, no speedy trial violation occurred, counsel was not ineffective for failing to raise the issue, and petitioner was not entitled to postconviction relief. Johnson v. State, 2009 Ark. 553 (2009).

While defendant made a prima facie case of a speedy-trial violation under this rule, as continuances filed by defendant and a codefendant were excluded by Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, and as defendant's severance motion did not comply with Ark. R. Crim. P. 22.3(b)(i), less than 365 days expired between his arrest and trial; therefore, his motion to dismiss was properly denied. Raymond v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 179 (2011).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated by the passage of 713 days after his arrest for sexual indecency with a child, because at least 435 days were excluded under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3 due to defendant's motions for continuances, reset trial dates, and his change of plea to not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect. As only 278 days counted toward his speedy-trial time, the State did not violate the 365-day speedy-trial limitation set forth in this rule. Federick v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 552, 423 S.W.3d 649 (2012).

Appellant's motion to dismiss the fraudulent use of a credit card, theft of property, and being a habitual offender charges was properly denied where a Missouri fugitive-from-justice charge was separate and distinct from the Arkansas charges, he entered his conditional plea within 12 months of the date he was served with the Arkansas bench warrant, and thus, his rights to a speedy trial were not violated. Davis v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 73 (2016).

Continuance.

Motions for continuance made after speedy trial deadline had passed did not constitute acquiescence in delay. Duncan v. State, 294 Ark. 105, 740 S.W.2d 923 (1987).

The record of the trial judge's finding that a continuance should be granted, which was agreed to by defendant, is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of former Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(i). Key v. State, 300 Ark. 66, 776 S.W.2d 820 (1989).

Where continuances were requested by defense counsel, defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated. Roark v. State, 46 Ark. App. 49, 876 S.W.2d 596 (1994).

A 212-day continuance was chargeable to the defendant, notwithstanding that the continuance was caused by the unavailability of a witness for the state, where the court specifically stated that it was granting defense counsel's motion for a continuance and no objection was made at the time of the ruling. Dean v. State, 339 Ark. 105, 3 S.W.3d 228 (1999).

Where defendant was granted a continuance of over four months, this time period was not counted for speedy trial purposes and there was no violation of the speedy trial requirement. George v. State, 84 Ark. App. 275, 140 S.W.3d 492 (2003), rev'd, 358 Ark. 269, 189 S.W.3d 28 (2004).

In a child pornography case, defendant's speedy trial rights were not violated where he was arrested on March 28, 2001, and his trial began on May 15, 2002, because defendant moved for a continuance on January 10, 2002, and the trial court granted the continuance until May 15, 2002; the additional 48 days beyond the 12 month period were during that continuance, and all of the time from January 10, 2002, until May 15, 2002, was properly excluded from the calculation of the speedy-trial period. George v. State, 358 Ark. 269, 189 S.W.3d 28 (2004), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1163, 125 S. Ct. 1329, 161 L. Ed. 2d 136 (2005).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was violated where defendant was not brought to trial within 12 months. The State failed to present sufficient evidence to make an 84-day continuance attributable to defendant; the associated docket sheet was neither part of the transcript submitted to the circuit court nor independently verified and certified by the clerk of the district court. Rhoden v. State, 98 Ark. App. 425, 256 S.W.3d 506 (2007).

Defendant was timely brought to trial because the case was passed from November 17, 2005, through January 5, 2006 at the request of the defendant, it was again passed at defendant's request from March 2, 2006, through May 4, 2006, and defendant failed to appear on May 4, 2006, and next appeared 28 days later on June 1, 2006. Layton v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 96, 302 S.W.3d 610 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of a speedy trial under subsection (c) of this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.2(a) because each of the three delays in defendant's trial dates were a result of defendant's own motions for continuances, which, pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(c), were time that was properly excluded in calculating the time for trial. Wade v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 346, 308 S.W.3d 178 (2009).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of a speedy trial; every continuance granted in the case was on defendant's motion and thus his speedy trial right was not denied. Cox v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 462 (2015).

Date of Arrest.

This rule changed former statute by providing that the time for trial runs from the date of arrest and not from the filing of the information. Bakri v. State, 261 Ark. 765, 551 S.W.2d 215 (1977).

Where the defendant was tried 19 months after the charges were filed and nine months after his arrest, the defendant was not denied his right to a speedy trial because the time did not begin to run until the date of arrest. Coleman v. Lofton, 289 Ark. 573, 715 S.W.2d 435 (1986).

The period for determining defendant's right to a speedy trial commenced on the day defendant was arrested, not when the original indictment was filed four days later. Birmingham v. State, 346 Ark. 78, 57 S.W.3d 118 (2001).

Where defendant was charged with a felony, as opposed to a misdemeanor, the time for speedy trial commenced on November 26, 2001, the date that defendant was arrested, and not March 1, 2001, the date that the affidavit for probable cause to obtain an arrest warrant was filed in district court; while an affidavit for an arrest warrant may have been a sufficient charging instrument for filing a misdemeanor charge, it was not sufficient for filing a felony charge. Watson v. State, 358 Ark. 212, 188 S.W.3d 921 (2004).

Circuit court correctly denied defendant's motion to dismiss because in the course of arrest for a parole violation, he made statements that formed the basis for the terroristic threatening charges and the speedy-trial time period did not commence on the current terroristic threatening charges until the date of defendant's arrest on those charges. Flippo v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 525 (2020).

Defendant in Foreign Jurisdiction.

Where a defendant was incarcerated in Arkansas, then voluntarily surrendered to Oklahoma authorities and was incarcerated there and resisted every effort to bring him to trial in Arkansas, he was not denied his constitutional right to a speedy trial and was not entitled to a dismissal of all charges. Faulk v. State, 261 Ark. 543, 551 S.W.2d 194 (1977).

Where defendant was on bail for the present charges and was also incarcerated out of state in a federal institution, and made no demand for a speedy trial, the three term requirements of subsection (b) of this rule applied. Williams v. State, 271 Ark. 435, 609 S.W.2d 37 (1980) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

An accused in prison in another state, for a different crime, must affirmatively request trial in order to activate the speedy trial rule. White v. State, 310 Ark. 200, 833 S.W.2d 771 (1992).

Appellant's speedy trial period did not begin to run until he waived extradition, therefore, his trial was well within the 12-month speedy trial period. White v. State, 310 Ark. 200, 833 S.W.2d 771 (1992).

Where defendant was arrested in Texas, the one year time for the purposes of subsection (c) of this rule began to run from when he waived extradition from Texas, not from the arrest date. Caulkins v. Crabtree, 319 Ark. 686, 894 S.W.2d 138 (1995).

The defendant's right to a speedy trial was not denied where (1) he failed to appear for trial, which was set for a date 18 days before the expiration of the period allowed for his trial, and (2) after he was arrested out-of-state and returned for trial, trial was next set for 118 days later, which was the next available trial date. Once the defendant was arrested and returned to Arkansas, he was not entitled to a trial within 18 days, as that would have had the effect of disrupting the trial court's entire docket. Osborn v. State, 340 Ark. 444, 11 S.W.3d 528 (2000).

Because defendant did not affirmatively request a trial while in custody in a different state, the speedy trial period did not begin to run until defendant waived extradition; therefore, defendant's motion to dismiss several drug and weapons charges was properly denied. Gondolfi v. Clinger, 352 Ark. 156, 98 S.W.3d 812 (2003).

Because the authorities took the proper steps to procure defendant's presence in court for trial by putting a "hold" on him while he was in custody in another county, the disputed period of time was properly excluded under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(a); therefore, the speedy-trial rule in this rule was not violated. Arnold v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 452 (2011).

Defendant Under Sentence.

A situation in which the defendant is serving a sentence and not being held in jail on a pending charge is the equivalent of the defendant being held to bail or at liberty, since his confinement was not under the pending charge. Jones v. State, 266 Ark. 855, 586 S.W.2d 258 (Ct. App. 1979).

Although the State claimed that defendant's whereabouts were unknown because there was no way the Faulkner County prosecutor could have known that defendant was serving time in a state prison on charges that originated in Pulaski County, the period between the time the information was filed and the denial of defendant's motion to dismiss was not excludable where there was no proof that there was an attempt to serve the warrant. Lively v. State, 326 Ark. 398, 930 S.W.2d 339 (1996).

Defendant's Obligation.

The defendant has an affirmative obligation to offer proof that any delay was not at his insistence. Roberts v. City of Conway, 266 Ark. 825, 586 S.W.2d 13 (Ct. App. 1979).

Where in prosecution for rape, the defendant was free on bond, and the trial was held within the 18 (now 12) month limit prescribed by subsection (c) of this rule, the defendant failed to prove that the delay in his trial caused the loss of some physical evidence taken during the alleged victim's medical examination, because he did not explain the manner in which his cross-examination of the physician who took the evidence would have been enhanced had the evidence been available. Timmons v. State, 290 Ark. 121, 717 S.W.2d 208 (1986) (decision based on rule prior to 1987 amendment).

The petitioner was not entitled to be released in accordance with the rule since he remained within the 9-month-period that commenced on his arrest as he had filed numerous pretrial motions, many of which were still under advisement, and, therefore, much of the period since the arrest was chargeable to him. Simpson v. Sheriff of Dallas County, 333 Ark. 277, 968 S.W.2d 614 (1998).

Delay.

—Necessary.

—Reasons.

Where defendant was not tried within nine months after his arrest and incarceration, that delay did not entitle him to an absolute discharge, at most, he was entitled to be released and then to be tried within the time allowed by this rule, which is ordinarily within the third full term of court, not counting the term in which he was arrested. Bell v. State, 270 Ark. 1, 603 S.W.2d 397 (1980) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Where, in the circuit court in which defendant was tried, no speedy trial right violation could occur before the expiration of 18 (now 12) months since the court had only two six-month terms a year and where defendant conceded that at least three and one-half and possibly eight and one-half months of this 19 and one-half month trial delay could be properly excluded, he obviously was brought to trial within the time limitation established by the Rules of Criminal Procedure; although defendant may have been entitled to pre-trial release at the end of nine months, as opposed to absolute discharge, such entitlement did not affect his convictions. Wallace v. State, 270 Ark. 17, 603 S.W.2d 399 (1980) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 and 1987 amendments).

Actions by defendant did not amount to delays chargeable to defendant. Horn v. State, 294 Ark. 464, 743 S.W.2d 814 (1988); Woods v. State, 26 Ark. App. 109, 760 S.W.2d 392 (1988).

Failure of the record to specifically set out the state's reasons for the delay of defendant's trial made it necessary to grant defendant permission to apply to the trial court for an evidentiary hearing limited to the issue of whether counsel could have made a successful motion to dismiss the charges for failure to hold trial within the time limits set by this rule. Spivey v. State, 299 Ark. 412, 773 S.W.2d 446 (1989).

When a case is delayed by the accused and that delaying act is memorialized by a record taken at the time it occurred, that record may be sufficient to satisfy the requirements of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(i). Key v. State, 300 Ark. 66, 776 S.W.2d 820 (1989).

Where the record itself demonstrated that the delays were attributable to the accused and were memorialized in the proceedings at the time of occurrence, delays were excludable under the rationale that defendant cannot agree with a ruling by the trial court and then attack that ruling on appeal. Hudson v. State, 303 Ark. 637, 799 S.W.2d 529 (1990).

Where the failure to effectuate service on a witness for a date on which trial was set was unexplained, in spite of the fact that the state was approaching the end of the speedy trial period, and the state failed to inquire of the witness to ascertain a good date prior to scheduling the trial and released the witness without first obtaining his deposition, lack of diligence on the part of the prosecution was clear. Meine v. State, 309 Ark. 124, 827 S.W.2d 151 (1992).

The state met its burden of showing cause for delay. Lynch v. State, 315 Ark. 47, 863 S.W.2d 834 (1993).

Defendant's speedy-trial right was not violated and the trial court did not err when it denied his motion to dismiss because the trial was postponed due to the need for the appointment of new counsel, which was excludable for good cause pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(h), and due to defendant's pretrial motions, including his motions for a polygraph examination, to admit certain evidence under the Rape Shield law, to compel discovery, and for a mental evaluation, which was excludable under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(a). Parker v. State, 93 Ark. App. 472, 220 S.W.3d 238 (2005).

Defendant's speedy trial rights were not violated because the arraignment had to be rescheduled due to defendant's failure to appear and subsequent late arrival. It was clear that the delay was defendant's fault, and therefore the State met its burden of showing that the delay was the result of defendant's conduct or was otherwise justified and that the circuit court was correct in excluding that twelve-day period from its speedy-trial calculations. Yarbrough v. State, 370 Ark. 31, 257 S.W.3d 50 (2007).

Defendant was afforded a speedy trial, and the trial court properly denied his motion to dismiss because although he made a prima facie case of a speedy-trial violation, the state identified an additional time period charged against him that put his trial within the required twelve-month period contained in this rule; the delay was properly charged against defendant, he made no objection, and that excludable period put his trial within twelve months of his arrest as calculated under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28. Barber v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 210, 374 S.W.3d 709 (2010).

—Necessary.

Where delay in bringing petition for revocation of suspended sentences did not exceed time allowed by this rule and there was nothing in the record to show that the actual delay amounted to a denial of due process, argument that revocation petition should have been dismissed must fail. Walker v. State, 263 Ark. 485, 565 S.W.2d 605 (1978).

Where a case was set for trial well within the time allowed by this rule but was delayed to allow the defendant to obtain new counsel after his assault on his original counsel led them to withdraw, there was no denial of a speedy trial.

Foxworth v. State, 263 Ark. 549, 566 S.W.2d 151 (1978).

Where defendant's trial began 109 days after the 12 month period for speedy trial had run, but the delay was due in part to a continuance on defendant's motion and in larger part because the state was granted a continuance under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(d)(1) while awaiting scientific lab results that were material to the case, defendant was not denied his right to a speedy trial. Miles v. State, 348 Ark. 544, 75 S.W.3d 677 (2002).

—Reasons.

If a case is continued beyond the time provided by the rule, the record should timely show the reasons for such delay. Findings of the trial court entered after a motion to dismiss has been filed are not valid grounds for excluding a term of court in applying this rule. Archer v. State, 271 Ark. 365, 609 S.W.2d 91 (Ct. App. 1980) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Where the prosecutor could not remember why the case had been continued, leaving the possibility that the delay might have been excludable even though requested by defense counsel, and she failed to make certain that the docket entry reflected which side was responsible for the delay, the prosecution failed to sustain its burden of proving that the trial delay was legally justified. Harwood v. Lofton, 288 Ark. 173, 702 S.W.2d 805 (1986).

Where the record did not contain any written order or docket entry setting forth the excluded periods or the number of days in each period, and there was neither an order continuing the case nor an order setting forth the "exceptional circumstances" necessitating the delay, the trial judge failed to comply with subsections (b), (c), and former (i) of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, and the defendant's conviction was reversed and dismissed. Shaw v. State, 18 Ark. App. 243, 712 S.W.2d 338 (1986).

Where it was apparent that defendant's trial was held outside of the applicable speedy-trial period found in this rule, the State failed to meet its burden to show that the delay was the result of the defendant's conduct or otherwise justified. Bradford v. State, 329 Ark. 620, 953 S.W.2d 549 (1997).

A 104-day delay for a mental examination of the defendant was chargeable to the defendant where he requested such examination, notwithstanding his contention that the delay in obtaining the examination was caused by the state's failure to promptly forward the order for a mental examination to the state hospital. Scott v. State, 337 Ark. 320, 989 S.W.2d 891 (1999), cert. denied, No. CR 05-477, 2005 Ark. LEXIS 313 (Ark. May 19, 2005).

As the state had good cause to seek the nolle prosequi of a felony controlled substance charge pursuant to a plea negotiation, as there was no indication that the state was merely trying to evade the speedy-trial requirement, and as the time period during which the felony charge was not-prosessed was permissibly excluded under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, denial of defendant's motion to dismiss the refiled felony controlled substance charge on speedy-trial grounds was proper. Subtracting the nolle prosequi time period from the overall time period left 183 days, which was well within the one-year period of the speedy-trial requirement under this rule. State v. Crawford, 373 Ark. 95, 281 S.W.3d 736 (2008).

Docket Error.

Where one discovers a docket error which affects his speedy trial rights, he must either notify the court of the error, or affirmatively request trial, in order to activate the statute and avail himself of its protection, and where the docket error is later corrected the court must be supplied the reason, in order to rule on whether the time should be included or excluded. Anderson v. Hargraves, 272 Ark. 259, 613 S.W.2d 587 (1981).

Where the term in which the defendant was charged with public servant bribery was excluded under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.2, the two succeeding terms were excluded under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, because of continuances granted at defendant's request, and the prosecutor was granted a continuance in the next following term which was incorrectly recorded on the docket as being granted to defendant, defendant was not entitled to have charges against him dismissed on speedy trial grounds since he failed to notify court of docket error prior to bringing motion to dismiss. Anderson v. Hargraves, 272 Ark. 259, 613 S.W.2d 587 (1981) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Where "pocket docket" entry, excluding period of time from calculation of speedy trial, was made several months after the delay occurred, 2 months after the 12-month period had elapsed, and 6 weeks after defendant filed his motion to dismiss, it was untimely and ineffectual. Reed v. State, 35 Ark. App. 161, 814 S.W.2d 560 (1991), superseded by statute as stated in May v. State, 94 Ark. App. 202, 228 S.W.3d 517 (2006).

Effect of Amendment.

Present revised subsection (c) of this rule permits a defendant to be brought to trial within 18 (now 12) months after arrest and eliminates the complications occasioned by the old rule which computed time by court terms. Archer v. State, 271 Ark. 365, 609 S.W.2d 91 (Ct. App. 1980).

Effective Assistance of Counsel.

Where defendant was entitled to have the prosecution barred because of lapse of more than 12 months from filing of charge, where counsel at the time of entering guilty plea offered no testimony of trial strategy or other reason for the failure to assert the right to a speedy trial and where defendant did not knowingly and intelligently waive his right to a speedy trial, the defendant did not receive effective assistance of counsel and, as a result, suffered prejudice. Hall v. State, 281 Ark. 282, 663 S.W.2d 926 (1984).

Where the defendant made a motion for an omnibus hearing pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 20 and then waived that motion 55 days later, no trial date was set until almost a year after the defendant waived the hearing, and the defendant was tried more than 18 (now 12) months after being charged, the delay beyond the speedy trial period was not the result of defendant's conduct. Therefore, the failure of defendant's counsel to make a dismissal motion pursuant to this rule was ineffective assistance of counsel, and defendant's conviction was reversed. Walker v. State, 288 Ark. 52, 701 S.W.2d 372 (1986).

In light of the Arkansas Supreme Court denying his state speedy trial claim, appellant surely could neither claim that the state claim was a "winnable" speedy trial claim, nor that his counsel was ineffective for advising him to abandon the state claim and take the plea. The district court found that counsel's advice to forego the appeal of the motion to dismiss and accept the plea offer was a reasonable tactical decision. Cox v. Lockhart, 970 F.2d 448 (8th Cir. 1992).

Where speedy-trial question hinged on whether the trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to dismiss his trial counsel and to proceed pro se, there was no indication that defendant's court-appointed counsel was not competent and defendant could not manipulate that right for the purpose of delaying the trial or playing "cat-and-mouse" with the trial court; thus, defendant was not denied his right to a speedy trial. Wilson v. State, 88 Ark. App. 158, 196 S.W.3d 511 (2004).

Pro se post-conviction relief petitioner's ineffective assistance of counsel claim was rejected because, although petitioner alleged that his counsel failed to object to a violation of the speedy-trial rule, petitioner did not assert that the two periods during which the running of the period under this rule was tolled were not properly excluded but merely stated that his attorney should have objected at trial on the basis of the rule. Shipman v. State, 2010 Ark. 499 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to file a motion to dismiss on the ground of a speedy-trial violation because such a motion would have lacked merit as the excluded period of delay exceeded the period of time for which the State would have had to account. Moten v. State, 2013 Ark. 503 (2013).

Because an inmate failed to show that the outcome of the trial would have been any different if he had been released on his own recognizance while awaiting trial, he was not entitled to relief on his claim that his trial counsel was ineffective in failing to seek his release after he was in jail for nine months awaiting trial. Breeden v. State, 2014 Ark. 159, 432 S.W.3d 618 (2014).

Equal Protection.

Defendant in capital felony murder case was not denied equal protection of the law on ground that the speedy trial provisions of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 — 30.2 distinguish between persons serving a term of imprisonment on another conviction while awaiting trial on the principal charge and persons incarcerated as a result of the principal charge to be tried, since neither was entitled to absolute discharge until after 18 (now 12) months under Ark. R. Crim. P. 30; furthermore, defendant failed to show any prejudice resulting from his incarceration prior to trial. Hayes v. State, 278 Ark. 211, 645 S.W.2d 662, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 198, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983).

Factual Findings Not Made.

Remand was necessary on the inmate's claim that counsel was ineffective for failing to move for dismissal for lack of a speedy trial, as the circuit court's order did not include factual findings regarding periods excludable for speedy trial, but merely determined that most continuances were at defendant's request. Turner v. State, 2016 Ark. 96, 486 S.W.3d 757 (2016).

Failure to Preserve for Appeal.

While defendant claimed that the circuit court did not properly explain the basis upon which it granted five orders of continuance that tolled the speedy trial time period of this rule, defendant failed to make a contemporaneous objection or to move for dismissal; thus, the issue was not preserved for appeal. Barrow v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 589, 377 S.W.3d 481 (2010).

Because defendant did not argue to the circuit court that his speedy trial right had been violated, the appellate court could not decide defendant's speedy-trial argument for the first time on appeal. Radford v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 89, 538 S.W.3d 894 (2018).

Defendant was brought to trial within a time acceptable because defendant failed to make timely objections to scheduling orders indicating that he agreed to continuances and tolling speedy trial; without contemporaneous, or at a minimum, first-opportunity, objections to those orders, defendant's arguments were not preserved. Smith v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 253, 624 S.W.3d 718 (2021).

Federal Court Review.

Generally, a claim that a state has violated its own speedy trial rules presents a question of state law for determination by state courts; a federal court's review of such a claim is limited to whether the state's violation of its own speedy trial rules was so fundamentally unfair and prejudicial to petitioner as to deny him due process. Wallace v. Lockhart, 701 F.2d 719 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 934, 104 S. Ct. 340, 78 L. Ed. 2d 308 (1983).

A federal habeas corpus petitioner failed to demonstrate that a 19½-month delay between his arrest and his trial violated his Sixth Amendment right to a speedy trial where he had not established any improper reason for the delay, had not alleged that he asserted his right to a speedy trial, and had not shown that he was materially prejudiced because of the delay. Wallace v. Lockhart, 701 F.2d 719 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 934, 104 S. Ct. 340, 78 L. Ed. 2d 308 (1983).

Jurisdiction.

This rule is jurisdictional inasmuch as it requires a defendant to be brought to trial within twelve months or it be absolutely discharged pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 30.1(a). Turbyfill v. State, 312 Ark. 1, 846 S.W.2d 646 (1993); Rhodes v. Capeheart, 313 Ark. 16, 852 S.W.2d 118 (1993).

Objection Required.

A contemporaneous objection to the excluded period is necessary to preserve the argument in a subsequent speedy-trial motion. Smith v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 253, 624 S.W.3d 718 (2021).

Presumption of Timeliness.

There may be a denial of one's constitutional right to a speedy trial after a period of delay shorter than those permitted under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28 and Ark. R. Crim. P. 30, but a strong showing of prejudice would be necessary to overcome the presumption that a time within the prescribed limits of these rules meets constitutional requirements. Matthews v. State, 268 Ark. 484, 598 S.W.2d 58 (1980).

The rules of criminal procedure requiring trial within a specified period are the outer limits of time to bring a defendant to trial, and trials occurring within those limits are not presumptively prejudicial. Coleman v. Lofton, 289 Ark. 573, 715 S.W.2d 435 (1986).

Presumption that a trial occurring within time limits set out in this rule meets constitutional requirements was not overcome where appellant did not show any prejudice. Halfacre v. State, 292 Ark. 329, 731 S.W.2d 182 (1987); Halfacre v. State, 292 Ark. 331, 731 S.W.2d 179 (1987).

Probation Revocation.

The constitutional right to a speedy trial does not apply to probation revocation hearings.

White v. State, 330 Ark. 720, 957 S.W.2d 683 (1997).

Prompt Presence at Trial.

Where defendant was arrested for burglary in July, 1978, convicted of unrelated offenses and sentenced in February, 1979, and trial on the burglary charges were set for November, 1979, which was within three terms of court as required by this rule, and Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.2, defendant could not, in the absence of proof of prejudice or testimony in support of his motion to dismiss, show that state failed to "promptly" seek his presence at trial as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 29.1. Miller v. Lofton, 272 Ark. 164, 612 S.W.2d 732 (1981) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Purpose.

This rule was adopted for the purpose of enforcing the constitutional provisions requiring a speedy trial. Mackey v. State, 279 Ark. 307, 651 S.W.2d 82 (1983); Davis v. State, 319 Ark. 171, 889 S.W.2d 769 (1994).

An accused, the victim, and the public are entitled to have criminal trials promptly held; in order to ensure compliance, the speedy trial rules provide that an accused, if not promptly tried, will be absolutely discharged. Chandler v. State, 284 Ark. 560, 683 S.W.2d 928 (1985).

One purpose of the speedy trial rule is to protect the accused, but that rule is also to protect the victim of the crime and, perhaps above all, to serve the interests of the public. Weaver v. State, 313 Ark. 55, 852 S.W.2d 130 (1993).

The concept of the prompt and speedy trial is based upon sound public policy; the only meaningful way to ensure that the public policy is effectuated is to discharge an accused who is not promptly tried, which is the purpose of subsection (c) of this rule. Weaver v. State, 313 Ark. 55, 852 S.W.2d 130 (1993).

Review.

Trial court's determination was not subject to appeal, where the trial court conducted a hearing, made a factual determination based on the pleadings and representations of the parties, and concluded that charges against defendant should be dropped because his right to a speedy trial had been violated. This determination was well within the trial court's discretion and did not require an interpretation of the court's rules, but merely its application to the facts at hand. State v. Edwards, 310 Ark. 516, 838 S.W.2d 356 (1992).

Right to Speedy Trial.

Where defendant was tried within the time allowed by this rule, and the defendant was in the penitentiary rather than in jail, and no prejudice was shown to have resulted to the defendant from the delay of five months, after which time his attorney asked for a continuance, the defendant was not denied his constitutional right to a speedy trial. Woods v. State, 260 Ark. 882, 545 S.W.2d 912 (1977) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

A writ of prohibition is the proper remedy where a petitioner is brought to trial after three full terms of court have expired since the date the petitioner was released on bond. Callender v. State, 263 Ark. 217, 563 S.W.2d 467 (1978) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Subsection (a) of this rule is mandatory, but if a judge refuses to release a defendant after nine months as provided in the rule, the remedy is to seek a writ of mandamus from the Supreme Court. Jackson v. State, 290 Ark. 375, 720 S.W.2d 282 (1986).

Right to speedy trial held not to have been denied. Townsend v. State, 292 Ark. 157, 728 S.W.2d 516 (1987).

There are four basic factors to be considered in determining whether a defendant's right to a speedy trial has been violated. These are: (1) the length of the delay, (2) the reason for the delay, (3) the defendant's assertion of his rights, and (4) the prejudice to the defendant. Stephens v. State, 295 Ark. 541, 750 S.W.2d 52 (1988); Cox v. Lockhart, 970 F.2d 448 (8th Cir. 1992).

Where speedy trial issue was never raised in the trial court, it cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. The appellant's remedy is to challenge the adequacy of his attorney's representation in a petition for post-conviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37. Spivey v. State, 25 Ark. App. 269, 757 S.W.2d 186 (1988); Jurney v. State, 298 Ark. 91, 766 S.W.2d 1 (1989).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was violated where defendant was first tried on a murder charge and then on a charge of possession with intent to distribute, which occurred 83 days after the 12-month period required. Raglin v. State, 35 Ark. App. 181, 816 S.W.2d 618 (1991).

Charges dismissed where defendant presented a prima facie case of violation of her right to a speedy trial by establishing that 483 days had passed since her arrest, and the State did not meet their burden of establishing legally justified excludable periods of time in excess of 118 days. Webb v. Ford, 340 Ark. 281, 9 S.W.3d 504 (2000).

There was no violation of the right to a speedy trial where defendant established a prima facie case because 483 days had elapsed since his arrest, but the state was able to show excludable periods of delay attributable to defendant for hearings on pretrial motions under Rule 28.3(a). Gwin v. State, 340 Ark. 302, 9 S.W.3d 501 (2000).

Basic rule regarding speedy trial was that any defendant in circuit court who was not brought to trial within 12 months from the date of his arrest was entitled to have the charges dismissed with an absolute bar to prosecution. Jones v. State, 347 Ark. 455, 65 S.W.3d 402, cert. denied, 536 U.S. 909, 122 S. Ct. 2366, 153 L. Ed. 2d 187 (2002).

Trial court properly excluded time to hear motions filed by defendant, to complete a mental examination requested by defendant, to honor continuances requested by defendant, and for the state to obtain a witness who was unavailable to testify from the 12-month period which the state had to try defendant, who was charged with capital murder, aggravated robbery, and theft of property. Romes v. State, 356 Ark. 26, 144 S.W.3d 750 (2004).

Defendant's argument that the charge of theft by receiving the second vehicle should have been dismissed as having arisen out of the same criminal episode when the charge of breaking and entering the first vehicle was dismissed for violation of the speedy-trial rule failed because the charges involved different vehicles, different locations and different victims, and the time for speedy trial consideration commenced to run on the date of arrest for the theft by receiving the second vehicle, August 18, 2001, and the trial conducted on that charge in July 2002 was timely for speedy trial purposes. Yancy v. State, 85 Ark. App. 53, 146 S.W.3d 375 (2004).

Defendant's motion pursuant to this rule to dismiss for lack of a speedy trial was improper because it was made after defendant had been tried and convicted on theft of property charges but before defendant's sentencing. State v. Richardson, 2010 Ark. 207 (2010).

As a juvenile's objection to the failure to have an extended juvenile jurisdiction hearing within 90 days was untimely, as the juvenile waived the right to insist on a timely hearing, and as the juvenile cited no authority as to what principle of fundamental fairness had been violated, there was no penalty for noncompliance with this rule under § 9-27-503(a). D.B. v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 151 (2011).

Defendant's residential burglary conviction was dismissed as his right to a speedy trial was violated because he was not brought to trial within 12 months of his arrest; the time period between the arrest and the filing of the motion to dismiss was 468 days; defendant did not contest the exclusion of 28 days from February 7 to March 7, 2017, and another exclusion of 70 days from June 13 to August 22, 2017, as both delays were due to continuances he had requested; when 98 days were excluded from the 468-day period, 370 days remained; and the trial court's October 23, 2017, sua sponte order continuing defendant's trial until March 2018 did not meet the requirements for a continuance based on docket congestion under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(b). Robertson v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 73, 568 S.W.3d 323 (2019).

Speedy Trial Rights Not Violated.

Because defendant's trial did not occur until 639 days after defendant was arrested, defendant made a prima facie case that his right to a speedy trial was violated, but because only 146 days were chargeable to the state, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of speedy trial; defendant's attorney filed a motion for continuance, stating that the speedy trial requirement was waived, and defendant was bound by the acts of his attorney. Block v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 603, 377 S.W.3d 476 (2010).

Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a motion to dismiss based on speedy trial violations; four periods of time, when excluded from the 442-day period between arrest and trial, left 287 days, which was well within the one-year period for a speedy trial in subsection (c) of this rule. Rueda v. State, 2012 Ark. 144, 400 S.W.3d 226 (2012).

Although defendant's retrial commenced 491 days after a mistrial, subtracting a 168-day continuance from 491 days meant that defendant's trial commenced on day 323; because defendant was brought to trial within one year from the date of the mistrial, there was no violation of defendant's right to a speedy trial under subsection (c) of this rule. Eubanks v. State, 2012 Ark. 142 (2012).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated because periods of time were excludable due to defendant's injuries from a car accident, defendant's conduct in failing to appear for trial, and defendant's extradition to Texas to serve a sentence there on other charges. Sullivan v. State, 2012 Ark. 74, 386 S.W.3d 507 (2012).

There was no speedy trial violation in a rape case because defendant was tried within approximately 269 days after certain periods of time were excluded; although defendant was represented by different counsel when a ruling was originally made on the speedy trial issue, trial counsel failed to object and hold the State to its proof when the matter was raised again at a hearing on September 19, 2014. Tatum v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 80 (2016).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated, although he was tried 457 days after his arrest. The circuit court did not err in rejecting defendant's argument that the jury could have been called the next day after the discovery of the notification-system error, which resulted in not enough jurors being present to hold the trial; and the circuit court's decision to set the trial for the next available court date one month later did not constitute undue delay as logistical issues, including scheduling the two necessary court interpreters for a jury trial, notifying jurors, and subpoenaing witnesses, could not be accomplished in a just few days. Vasquez v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 241, 548 S.W.3d 828 (2018).

Supersession of Statutes.

Former statute concerning length of time accused could be jailed prior to trial was superseded by this rule. Cassell v. State, 273 Ark. 59, 616 S.W.2d 485 (1981).

Former statute concerning the time for which an accused may be held to bail was superseded by this rule. Jennings v. State, 276 Ark. 217, 633 S.W.2d 373, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 862, 103 S. Ct. 137, 74 L. Ed. 2d 117 (1982).

Tolling.

Defendant's motion to dismiss on speedy trial grounds pursuant to this rule was properly denied because the state's time for speedy trial tolled on the date that the motion to dismiss was filed; therefore, only 273 days of the 12-month period available had expired. Eagle v. State, 2012 Ark. 371 (2012).

Trial.

—Absolute Discharge.

—Not Timely Held.

—Timely Held.

—Absolute Discharge.

Where the record revealed no reason for the approximately six and one-half month delay in defendant's trial, and more than three full terms of court expired before his trial, he was discharged for violation of his speedy trial right. Alexander v. State, 268 Ark. 384, 598 S.W.2d 395 (1980) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

An incarcerated defendant not brought to trial before the running of time is not entitled to absolute discharge, instead he is entitled to be recognized and released on order to appear, and the time for his trial is then computed pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.2. Matthews v. State, 268 Ark. 484, 598 S.W.2d 58 (1980).

In a prosecution for murder, a three-year delay in bringing the defendant to trial caused by the failure of the municipal court to forward a copy of defendant's bond to the circuit court necessitated the defendant's absolute discharge. The failure of the State to check the available court records or otherwise demonstrate any diligence in locating the accused over a two-and-one half year period could not be excused. Chandler v. State, 284 Ark. 560, 683 S.W.2d 928 (1985).

Defendant was absolutely discharged by a writ of prohibition where he was not tried within 18 (now 12) months from the date of his arrest, no alias warrant was ever issued, and there was no evidence that defendant was unavailable or that he was notified of a court setting and failed to appear. Glover v. State, 287 Ark. 19, 695 S.W.2d 829 (1985) (decision based on rule prior to 1987 amendment).

A person held in violation of the rule is only entitled to release on his or her own recognizance, not dismissal of the charges or absolute discharge. Simpson v. Sheriff of Dallas County, 333 Ark. 277, 968 S.W.2d 614 (1998).

—Not Timely Held.

Where the accused made a motion to dismiss for lack of speedy trial on October 3, 1979, the fact that the accused had been granted a continuance in August of 1979 did not affect the timeliness of his dismissal motion, because the accused asserted, and the State did not contest the assertion, that the third term of court after the date the accused was arrested and charged expired May 9, 1979, and the accused did not waive his right to a speedy trial under Ark. R. Crim. P. 30.2 because he did not plead guilty and his motion was made before he was tried. Garrison v. State, 270 Ark. 426, 605 S.W.2d 467 (Ct. App. 1980) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Where three full terms of court passed before defendant was tried and no good cause was shown for the delay, the speedy trial rules were not complied with, and it was error not to dismiss the charges. Cash v. State, 271 Ark. 881, 611 S.W.2d 510 (1981) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Where state in second term after defendant's arrest intended to try defendant on a certain date but cancelled the trial because the lead investigating officer intended to attend a law enforcement conference on that date and there was no request for a continuance, such explanation for not trying defendant was not a valid reason to pass the case for a full term of court. Cash v. State, 271 Ark. 881, 611 S.W.2d 510 (1981) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Where defendant was in custody on January 1, 1979, and trial was not set until October 8, 1980, in the fourth term of court, he was entitled to dismissal of the charges under Ark. R. Crim. P. 30.1, because the state had not carried its burden of showing that certain time periods should be excluded under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3. The period between recusal of the prosecuting attorney, who had been counsel to defendant's codefendant, and the filing of the appeal, could not be excluded since trial court did not immediately appoint a substitute state's attorney, and since it was not defendant's fault that the prosecutor hired the codefendant's counsel or that defendant had not been granted a severance, so that there was not good cause for exclusion of the period under subsection (h) of Rule 28.3. Norton v. State, 273 Ark. 289, 618 S.W.2d 164 (1981), overruled, Richards v. State, 338 Ark. 801, 2 S.W.3d 766 (1999) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Where the time for trial commenced running on the date defendant was incarcerated in jail to await trial on the charge, and defendant remained in jail awaiting trial for five months until he was incarcerated in prison pursuant to conviction on another charge, but was not tried on the first charge until 14 months and 26 days from the date the time commenced to run, and where the state failed to show any authorized cause for delay, the conviction had to be reversed and dismissed. Floyd v. State, 280 Ark. 226, 656 S.W.2d 701 (1983).

Resetting of defendant's trial from its original date to a date more than 1 year after charges were filed, without appropriate orders or docket entries, violated the speedy trial rule because it fell outside the 1 year period provided in subsection (b) of this rule to perfect trial. Turbyfill v. State, 312 Ark. 1, 846 S.W.2d 646 (1993).

Alleged violation of subsection (a) of this rule is not a basis for reversal. Matthews v. State, 313 Ark. 327, 854 S.W.2d 339 (1993).

Since the record reflects that defendant was not tried within the allowable time, the trial court refused to settle the record, the Attorney General was left with no choice other than to confess error and recognize that defendant's conviction must be reversed and dismissed. Dupree v. State, 316 Ark. 324, 871 S.W.2d 570 (1994).

The state's speedy trial rules patently barred the defendant's prosecution; even though the state's time to bring the defendant to trial was legally extended from his date of arrest by 505 days (giving the state allowance for its appeal and delays due to defendant's pretrial trial motions after remand), the state still failed to meet the required 12-month speedy trial deadline provided under this rule. Thornton v. State, 317 Ark. 257, 878 S.W.2d 378 (1994).

Speedy trial violation shown. Durbin v. State, 59 Ark. App. 207, 955 S.W.2d 912 (1997).

Appellant's right to a speedy trial was violated when his trial commenced on the 600th day following his arrest where only 168 days of delay were excludable as attributed to appellant and the state failed to show cause for the additional 70 days of delay. Zangerl v. State, 352 Ark. 278, 100 S.W.3d 695 (2003).

Defendant successfully showed, and the state conceded, that defendant's prosecution was 113 days over the 12-month limit for speedy trial purposes; therefore, defendant's motion to dismiss should have been granted. Berry v. Henry, 364 Ark. 26, 216 S.W.3d 93 (2005).

—Timely Held.

Where defendant was arrested in January, 1977, during the October, 1976 term of court, charged by information a month later during the next term of court, had trial set for about 9 weeks after the charge and had an attorney appointed for him, had a hearing on the date set for trial at which his appointed attorney was relieved and he was given 10 days to find an attorney, and finally the trial was held some 53 weeks after the initial arrest, the case was tried within the time provided in these rules, after the continuance, and was not a violation of his right to speedy trial since the delay was at his request and not prejudicial. Campbell v. State, 264 Ark. 372, 571 S.W.2d 597 (1978) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Since defendant was brought to trial within the first full term of the county circuit court following his arrest, he was not denied his constitutional right to a speedy trial. Wright v. State, 267 Ark. 264, 590 S.W.2d 15 (1979), (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Where four terms of court expired in 1979 before defendant who was charged in October, 1978, was brought to trial but one 1979 term was excluded because of unavailability of court facilities and one 1979 term and two 1978 terms were excluded because of defendant's request for a continuance, defendant's right to speedy trial was not violated. State v. Messer, 269 Ark. 431, 601 S.W.2d 857 (1980) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

The term in which a defendant is charged is not counted in computing the terms and the expiration of full terms is required; thus, where the first full term after defendant's arrest on November 10, was the term commencing in March, 1979, and the second was that commencing in September, 1979, defendant's trial, being in October, 1979, was well within the statutory limit. Wright v. State, 270 Ark. 78, 603 S.W.2d 408 (1980) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Regardless of the number of judges, there are but two terms of court in Jefferson County in any one-year period — the one term that begins in March and the one that begins in October; therefore, where the first term that was counted began March 5, 1979, the second term began October 1, 1979, and the third term began March 3, 1980, and where the case was set for trial on April 21, 1980, and the third full term of court did not end until October 6, 1980, there was no denial of a speedy trial. Kemp v. State, 270 Ark. 835, 606 S.W.2d 573 (1980) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Where defendant was not tried until 31 days after the third term of court had expired following his arrest, there was good cause for two delays under subsection (h) of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, since, after defendant's trial was set for April 3, defendant's counsel was relieved of his appointment because he was named deputy prosecuting attorney and a replacement was named on May 14, and then further delay occurred where, on defendant's motion, the prosecuting attorney was disqualified on the ground that his professional association with defendant's first attorney created a conflict of interest and the delay continued until a special prosecutor was appointed on August 18; thus defendant was not entitled to discharge under this rule. Divanovich v. State, 273 Ark. 117, 617 S.W.2d 345 (1981) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Where defendant was arrested in November 1978, the next four terms of court began on January 1, April 1, July 1 and October 1, and the judge found that there had been a period of excusable delay, defendant was not entitled to dismissal when the case was set for trial in September, within three terms as provided by this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 30.1; even if there was no excusable delay, defendant would only have been entitled to a release on his own recognizance under Ark. R. Crim. P. 30.1, not absolute discharge. Cassell v. State, 273 Ark. 59, 616 S.W.2d 485 (1981) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Where a period of only four and one-half months had elapsed between the date of the defendant's arrest and his trial for burglary, the defendant was brought to trial well within the time period required in this state by this rule, and the fact that the defendant was not brought to trial within the time frame of the federal act governing federal criminal trials was irrelevant, since the federal act did not purport to preempt this area of state law. Bongfeldt v. State, 6 Ark. App. 102, 639 S.W.2d 70 (1982).

Where approximately one year elapsed between defendant's arrest in California and commencement of trial in Arkansas, but arrest was for parole violation as well as for avoiding prosecution for murder, and parole was revoked while defendant still had time to serve on former sentence, it could be concluded that defendant, who was extradited to Arkansas one month after arrest, was being held in prison in Arkansas for conviction of another crime for nine of the 11 months between his return to Arkansas and commencement of murder trial; accordingly, defendant was not entitled to relief pursuant to this rule. Mackey v. State, 279 Ark. 307, 651 S.W.2d 82 (1983).

The period of delay resulting from the absence of a defendant is excludable under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(e); accordingly, where defendant fled the state and disappeared for ten months, the trial which was held within 21 months of the date on which he was charged, was held within the required 18 (now 12) months when the ten-month absence was excluded. Wilson v. State, 10 Ark. App. 176, 662 S.W.2d 204 (1983).

Where the defendant's trial began four months after his last mistrial was declared and his case was speedily processed from its inception, the defendant was not denied a speedy trial simply because just over nine months elapsed from the time the defendant was charged until he was ultimately convicted. Glenn v. State, 281 Ark. 454, 664 S.W.2d 868 (1984).

When excludable periods were added, defendant was tried within statutory period of time. Allen v. State, 294 Ark. 209, 742 S.W.2d 886 (1988); Foster v. State, 38 Ark. App. 245, 832 S.W.2d 293 (1992).

Where trial was originally delayed due to the defendant's unavailability, the trial court's giving defendant the first available date, which was five days after the time for speedy trial expired, was one of the "exceptional circumstances" contemplated by Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3. Henson v. State, 38 Ark. App. 155, 832 S.W.2d 269 (1992).

No violation of this rule shown where there were any number of excludable periods including defendant's delay in hiring counsel, his filing of a motion to suppress evidence, and his waiver and then withdrawal of his right to a jury trial. Cupples v. State, 326 Ark. 31, 929 S.W.2d 150 (1996).

Although defendant was tried on a date eighty-two days beyond the twelve-month constraint of this rule, his constitutional right to a speedy trial was not violated where there were 127 days of "excludable time" under this Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(c). Jones v. State, 329 Ark. 603, 951 S.W.2d 308 (1997).

In a sexual abuse case, the court did not err by denying defendant's motion to dismiss on speedy trial grounds where the trial court stated on the record that it was continuing the rape-shield hearing until March 25, and all attorneys agreed to that date; further, the court entered its February 14, 2002, order stating that a hearing on the rape shield motions and all other motions filed herein would be heard on March 25, 2002, at 11:00 a.m., and the matter was set for trial on May 22, 2002, and that memorialization of the delay and the reasons therefore satisfied the requirements of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3. Standridge v. State, 357 Ark. 105, 161 S.W.3d 815 (2004).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss because of a speedy-trial violation as 505 days were properly excluded and the state was only required to account for 493 days. Dodson v. State, 358 Ark. 372, 191 S.W.3d 511 (2004).

Defendant was not deprived of his right to a speedy trial where he was arrested for the rape of his step-daughter on April 8, 2004, and tried on September 29, 2004, because the fact that defendant had been arrested in September 2003 for the charge of rape of his step-daughter in a different county had no bearing on the speedy trial calculations in this case as the time began to run with the arrest in this case. Anderson v. State, 93 Ark. App. 454, 220 S.W.3d 225 (2005).

Waiver.

Where defendant did not raise his motion to dismiss revocation petition for lack of a speedy hearing before the hearing, he waived his rights. Summers v. State, 292 Ark. 237, 729 S.W.2d 147 (1987), decided prior to 1987 amendment.

A defendant, by plea of guilty, waives a number of significant rights, including the right to a speedy trial. Kennedy v. State, 297 Ark. 488, 763 S.W.2d 648 (1989); Nettles v. State, 303 Ark. 8, 791 S.W.2d 702 (1990).

Where an accused is offered a speedy trial but requests that the case be tried at a later date, and that delaying act is memorialized by a record taken at the time it occurred, he cannot complain that his right to speedy trial was denied. Jenkins v. State, 301 Ark. 586, 786 S.W.2d 566 (1990).

Defendant did not waive his right to a speedy trial where his motion for dismissal was made well in advance of his trial and was thus timely raised. Hicks v. State, 305 Ark. 393, 808 S.W.2d 348 (1991), decided under former version of rule before 1999 amendment.

Defendant was not required to object to the delay of his second trial, caused by holding the murder trial first and, thereby, did not lose his right to contend that the delay violated his right to a speedy trial. Raglin v. State, 35 Ark. App. 181, 816 S.W.2d 618 (1991).

The State has a right to be notified prior to the hearing that a defendant will raise a speedy-hearing objection; defendant waived his objection by failing to move for dismissal of the petition prior to the hearing. Wilkerson v. State, 53 Ark. App. 52, 920 S.W.2d 15 (1996).

The defendant effectively waived his right to speedy trial where he affirmatively waived his right well within the 12-month-period for speedy trial and attached no conditions or limitations to his waiver. Eubanks v. Humphrey, 334 Ark. 21, 972 S.W.2d 234 (1998).

The defendant revoked his waiver of his right to speedy trial when his counsel apprised the trial court that he no longer wished to waive the right; the fact that counsel did not convey this message through a formal motion does not change the character of the message itself. Eubanks v. Humphrey, 334 Ark. 21, 972 S.W.2d 234 (1998).

Witness Unavailable.

Where the trial court found that certain state witnesses were unavailable for the third term of court because of previous court commitments, the third term was properly excluded under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, in calculating the three terms within which the case must be tried; thus, the court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to try the case within three terms. Roleson v. State, 272 Ark. 346, 614 S.W.2d 656 (1981) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment).

Where defendant's employment was known, then even though he had moved to a new residence and had his telephone disconnected, he was not absent or unavailable. Caulkins v. Crabtree, 319 Ark. 686, 894 S.W.2d 138 (1995).

Writ of Prohibition.

Petition for a writ of prohibition, seeking to prevent a trial in violation of speedy-trial limits, denied without addressing the merits of the petition, where defendant failed to produce a record that demonstrated that the writ was warranted. Sherwood v. Glover, 331 Ark. 124, 958 S.W.2d 526 (1998).

Where a criminal information was filed charging defendant with rape on January 5, 2005, he filed a motion to dismiss for denial of a speedy trial on February 2, 2007; the trial court denied the motion. The state supreme court declined to address defendant's speedy-trial argument during the interlocutory appeal; the proper method for addressing the denial of a motion to dismiss for a speedy-trial violation under this rule was by a petition for writ of prohibition. Williams v. State, 371 Ark. 550, 268 S.W.3d 868 (2007).

Petitioner was not entitled to a writ of prohibition or mandamus in a second criminal case filed against him because the record did not contain any of the alleged motions to dismiss filed under this rule regarding speedy trial violations. Glaze v. Reynolds, 2012 Ark. 330 (2012).

Rule 28.2. When time commences to run.

(a) The time for trial shall commence running from the date of arrest or service of summons.

(b) When the charge is dismissed upon motion of the defendant and subsequently the dismissed charge is reinstated, or the defendant is arrested or charged with the same offense, the time for trial shall commence running from the date the dismissed charge is reinstated or the defendant is subsequently arrested or charged, whichever is earlier; and when the charge is dismissed upon motion of the defendant and subsequently the charge is reinstated following an appeal, the time for trial shall commence running from the date the mandate is issued by the appellate court.

(c) If the defendant is to be retried following a mistrial, the time for trial shall commence running from the date of mistrial.

(d) If the defendant is to be retried following an order by the trial court granting a new trial, the time for trial shall commence running from the date of the order granting a new trial, unless the state appeals the order granting a new trial, in which case the time for trial shall commence running from the date the mandate is issued by the appellate court.

(e) If the defendant is to be retried following an appeal of a conviction, the time for trial shall commence running from the date the mandate is issued by the appellate court.

(f) If the defendant is to be retried following a collateral attack of a conviction, the time for trial shall commence running from the date of the order invalidating the conviction, unless the state appeals the order invalidating the conviction, in which case the time for trial shall commence running on the date of remand by the appellate court.

HISTORY: Amended June 30, 1980, effective July 1, 1980; amended February 19, 1996; amended September 26, 2002; amended April 26, 2007.

Court's Notes, 1996 Amendment:

Subsection (b) was amended to address situations where the defendant successfully moves to have charges dismissed but charges are subsequently reinstated by the trial court or on appeal. See Thornton v. State, 317 Ark. 257, 878 S.W.2d 378 (1994).

Reporter's Notes, 2002 Amendment:

Prior to the amendment, subsection (c) applied to retrials following a mistrial, retrials following an order granting a new trial, retrials following an appeal, and retrials following a collateral attack. The amendments split these various proceedings into new separate subsections.

The amendments also change the rule regarding a retrial following an appeal of an order granting a new trial. Under new subsection (d), the time for retrial begins running when the appellate court returns the case to the trial court. This changes the rule applied, but not the result reached in Cherry v. State, 347 Ark. 606, 66 S.W. 3d 605 (2002) (time for retrial started running when the trial court entered order granting a new trial but the period during which the new trial order was on appeal treated as an excluded period under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3).

The amendments were not intended to change the rule that time for trial begins to run without demand by the defendant.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2007 Amendment: Prior to the 2007 amendment, this rule provided that the time for trial began to run on the date the charge was filed, except when the defendant was held in custody or on bail prior to the filing of the charge, in which case the time for trial began to run on the date of arrest. The 2007 amendment changed the speedy trial start date to the date of arrest, whether the charge is filed before or after that date. The reference to "service of summons" applies to those cases in which the defendant is brought before the court via a summons, rather than an arrest. See Rule 6 — Issuance of Summons in Lieu of Arrest Warrant.

The 2007 amendment applies to prosecutions initiated after the effective date of the amendment. If a person was charged with an offense before the effective date of the amendment, but arrested after the effective date of the amendment, the time for trial commences on the date the charge was filed.

Scope of Commentary. The following commentary discusses only cursorily problems that arose under the pre-1980 version of this Rule and that have been eliminated by the 1980 and 1981 amendments. See, In The Matter of Rules of Criminal Procedure, Amendment of Article VIII Speedy Trial, Per Curiam, June 30, 1980 (269 Ark. 988) and Re: Amendment to Rule 28.3(f) of the Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure, Per Curiam, June 8, 1981, 273 Ark. 551.

Rules 28.1 and 28.3 are interrelated. Cases interpreting these provisions are discussed in the commentary to Rules 28.1 and 28.3 as well as in the commentary to Rule 28.2.

When Time Begins to Run. Though there is language in recent cases to the contrary, time begins to run under Rule 28.2 from the date a charge is filed in circuit court, unless the defendant has been arrested and is in custody, out on bail, or has been lawfully set at liberty, in which case time runs from date of arrest. Compare Coleman v. Lofton, 289 Ark. 573, 715 S.W.2d 435 (1986) (time runs from the date of arrest, not from the date charges are filed) with Hall v. State, 281 Ark. 282, 663 S.W.2d 926 (1984) and Walker v. State, 288 Ark. 52, 701 S.W.2d 372 (1986) (time runs from date charge is filed). In most cases, defendants are not charged in circuit court until after they are arrested either without a warrant or pursuant to a warrant issued by an inferior court. Where a defendant whose whereabouts are unknown is charged in circuit court, the delay resulting from his absence or unavailability is excludable under Rule 28.3(e).

In Coleman, 19 months passed between the date arrest warrants were issued and the date of appellant's trial. The decision does not explicitly say whether the arrest warrants were issued pursuant to an information filed in circuit court or, alternatively, by an inferior court. If the latter was the case, there was no genuine issue relating to the lapse of time following the "charge," because, when Rule 28.2 is read in conjunction with Rule 28.1, it is reasonably clear that Rule 28.2 is geared to charges filed in circuit court.

In any event, though the Court has consistently held that when speedy trial rules have been prima facie violated the burden is upon the state to show good cause for the delay — see, e.g., Glover v. State, 287 Ark. 19, 20, 695 S.W.2d 829, 830 (1985) — the Court in Coleman did not hold the prosecution to this standard, remarking instead that "any delay between the time the charge is made and the arrest, unless deliberately intended to prejudice the defendant, is not a consideration when determining if his constitutional rights have been violated." 289 Ark. at 576, 715 S.W.2d at 436-37. For this proposition, the Court relied on United States v. Marion, 404 U.S. 307, 30 L.Ed.2d 468 (1971). Marion dealt with prejudice claimed to flow from the delay between the criminal conduct charged and the indictment, not the delay between indictment and arrest or trial, however. Also, the Coleman Court's reliance on the Glover decision is puzzling in that Glover was a case in which the defendant was arrested and set at liberty, clearly requiring that the time for trial be calculated from the date of arrest under Rule 28.2(a). Walker v. State, 288 Ark. 52, 701 S.W.2d 372 (1986), the other case relied upon in Coleman, apparently dealt with a situation in which the defendant was lawfully at liberty on bond or recognizance prior to trial, not one where the defendant was not arrested for over ten months following the issuance of the arrest warrants as in Coleman.

In Coleman, arrest warrants were issued on April 4, 1984 but remained unserved until February 26, 1985, over ten months later, because appellant's whereabouts were unknown. Instead of ruling that under 28.2(a) the time for trial ran from the date the charge was filed as extended by a Rule 28.3(e) excluded period resulting from appellant's absence or unavailability, the Court held that time began to run on the date of defendant's arrest. The Court may have interpreted the Rule 28.2(a) language "lawfully at liberty" to encompass a situation where defendant's whereabouts are unknown at the time an arrest warrant is issued, though that language in the context of 28.2(a) appears to refer to circumstances under which a defendant is, for example, released on his own recognizance after arrest "to answer for . . . an offense." This was the situation in Glover v. State relied upon by the Court in Coleman.

Application to De Novo Trials in Misdemeanor Cases. The Arkansas Court of Appeals has decided that the time within which the defendant must be brought to trial after appeal of a misdemeanor conviction begins running under Rule 28.1(c) and 28.2 on the day a case is appealed to circuit court. Shaw v. State, 18 Ark. App. 243, 712 S.W.2d 338 (1986). In Shaw, appellant was convicted in municipal court of driving while intoxicated on August 4, 1983. He appealed his conviction to circuit court on August 17, 1983, but the case was not set for trial until July 10, 1985. A trial followed on November 14, 1985. The Court held that time for trial began running on August 17 and that the trial court should have dismissed the charge because appellant's 1985 trial occurred more than 18 months after August 17, 1983.

The Court also observed that Rules 28.3(b), (c), and (i) require that the trial judge make certain docket entries. Where, because of the court's failure to make entries, the record does not disclose whether periods of time should be deemed excluded, a later ruling by the trial judge not supported by the court docket that excluded periods exist will not be upheld.

Effect of Material. Trials following mistrials are explicitly governed by Rule 28.2(c), which has been found constitutional. Glenn v. State, 281 Ark. 454, 664 S.W.2d 868 (1984).

Defendant Charged While in Prison. Where a defendant commits a crime, is returned to prison for a parole violation, is charged with the crime while in prison, but is not arrested on the charge until the day he is to be released from prison months later, time for trial begins running on the date the charge is filed. Hall v. State, 281 Ark. 282, 663 S.W.2d 926 (1984), interpreting Rules 28.1 and 28.2.

Publisher's Notes.

The introductory paragraph of the per curiam order of the Supreme Court of Arkansas issued on June 30, 1980 read: "Article VIII is amended by this restatement of the article which shall become effective on July 1, 1980. The time for trial of all defendants that has commenced to run pursuant to Rule 28.2 prior to July 1, 1980, shall continue to be governed by Article VIII as it existed prior to this amendment, but the time for trial of all defendants that commences to run pursuant to Rule 28.2 on July 1, 1980, or thereafter, shall be governed by this amendment of Article VIII.”.

This rule was set out in the per curiam order of the Supreme Court issued June 30, 1980, but no change was made in the rule.

CASE NOTES

In General.

It is plain from the provisions of this rule, Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 and Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3 that the drafters recognized that an accused who is incarcerated on pending charges, or on different charges, is at a disadvantage simply by virtue of his confinement. Hence, for such defendants, shorter periods for trial are provided by the speedy trial rule. Miller v. Langston, 296 Ark. 486, 757 S.W.2d 562 (1988).

Defendant did not waive his right to move for dismissal based on a speedy trial violation where his motion to dismiss was made before trial, and, under the circumstances, he was not required to challenge the court-ordered exclusion of time immediately upon issuance of the court's order; it is the burden of the prosecution and the courts to see that a defendant is brought to trial on time. Tanner v. State, 324 Ark. 37, 918 S.W.2d 166 (1996).

Appeal by State.

When defendant was arrested on April 12, 2006 for 257 counts of felony theft of property, the state requested his release pending further investigation and a felony information was filed against him on December 6, 2006; the trial was delayed due to continuances and the recusal of the judge. When the circuit court dismissed the case for lack of speedy trial on December 10, 2008, the state was not permitted to bring an appeal under Ark. R. App. P. Crim. 3; because this rule, the speedy trial rule, was amended in 2007, the state's challenge to an interpretation of a prior version of Rule 28.2 was not important to the correct administration of the criminal law and would not have widespread ramifications. State v. Weatherspoon, 2009 Ark. 459 (2009).

Appeals to Circuit Court.

Even though this rule does not specifically address appeals from municipal court, upon an appeal of a municipal court decision to circuit court, the speedy trial rule begins to run from the day the appeal is filed in circuit court.

McBride v. State, 297 Ark. 410, 762 S.W.2d 785 (1989).

Applicability.

Before subsection (c) of this rule applies, the provision plainly presumes, at the least, the state had commenced trying its case against the defendant and the trial concluded in a mistrial or the defendant had been tried but his conviction had been set aside, appealed, or collaterally attacked. Thornton v. State, 317 Ark. 257, 878 S.W.2d 378 (1994).

Burden of Proof.

The burden is upon the state to show good cause for delay if the accused is not brought to trial within the time limitations established in the speedy trial rules. Chandler v. State, 284 Ark. 560, 683 S.W.2d 928 (1985); Williams v. State, 290 Ark. 286, 718 S.W.2d 935 (1986), cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1068, 107 S. Ct. 2460, 95 L. Ed. 2d 869 (1987); Allen v. State, 294 Ark. 209, 742 S.W.2d 886 (1988).

Once the accused has shown that the trial was held after the speedy trial period expired, the burden rests upon the state to show the delay was legally justified. Keys v. State, 23 Ark. App. 219, 745 S.W.2d 628 (1988).

Calculation of Time.

The date the charges are filed is the beginning for the calculation of the time for a speedy trial. Keys v. State, 23 Ark. App. 219, 745 S.W.2d 628 (1988).

An order allowing the withdrawal of a plea of guilty is analogous to an order granting a new trial, and the time for a trial begins to run anew after an order is entered allowing the withdrawal of a guilty plea. Kennedy v. State, 297 Ark. 488, 763 S.W.2d 648 (1989); Nettles v. State, 303 Ark. 8, 791 S.W.2d 702 (1990); Towe v. State, 304 Ark. 239, 801 S.W.2d 42 (1990).

Right to a speedy trial held not infringed. Scott v. State, 298 Ark. 31, 764 S.W.2d 616 (1989).

Pursuant to Rule 28.3(a), the period of delay resulting from an examination and hearing on the competency of the defendant as provided under § 5-2-305 and the period during which he is incompetent to stand trial is excludable. McConaughy v. State, 301 Ark. 446, 784 S.W.2d 768 (1990).

Time limitations for trial begin running on the date the charge is filed; there is no requirement that a defendant be arrested before the 12-month time period for speedy trial begins to run. Nettles v. State, 303 Ark. 8, 791 S.W.2d 702 (1990).

The state failed to show that there were excludable periods under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(e) resulting from the absence or unavailability of the defendant, where the defendant lived in the same city, was at the same job during the time in question, and was in the police department on 4 separate occasions for other violations before he was finally arrested. Tlapek v. State, 305 Ark. 272, 807 S.W.2d 467 (1991).

Where defendant was in prison in another state, for a different crime, and was extradited to Arkansas to stand trial, he would have had to affirmatively request a trial in order to activate the speedy trial rule and where defendant did not, his right to a speedy trial did not begin to run until his actual return to the state. Gillie v. State, 305 Ark. 296, 808 S.W.2d 320 (1991).

The period of delay resulting from an examination and hearing on the competency of the defendant was excludable from the 12-month period. Hubbard v. State, 306 Ark. 153, 812 S.W.2d 107 (1991).

When the defendant is scheduled for trial within the time for speedy trial and the trial is postponed because of the defendant, that is "good cause" to exclude the time attributable to the delay. Lewis v. State, 307 Ark. 260, 819 S.W.2d 689 (1991).

Although mistrial allegedly resulted from the prosecutor's actions, this rule should have applied and the speedy trial time period commenced at the time of filing of charges, not at time of arrest. Odum v. State, 311 Ark. 576, 845 S.W.2d 524 (1993).

The twelve-month period runs from the date of arrest for a person who has been held in custody, and not from the date of the filing of the information. Bradford v. State, 328 Ark. 701, 947 S.W.2d 1 (1997).

The speedy trial period commenced when the defendant was arrested on June 25, 1997, rather than when the felony information was later filed on November 6, 1997. Jackson v. State, 334 Ark. 406, 976 S.W.2d 370 (1998).

The issuance of a detainer to an inmate who is serving time on an unrelated charge does not trigger the commencement of the speedy trial period. Jackson v. State, 334 Ark. 406, 976 S.W.2d 370 (1998).

The speedy trial rules do not commence running until all the elements of the charged offense have been completed. Cheatham v. State, 63 Ark. App. 106, 974 S.W.2d 490 (1998).

The speedy trial rules with respect to a murder charge did not begin to run on the date the defendant was arrested for the battery which eventually caused the victim's death since all of the elements of murder were not completed on that date. Cheatham v. State, 63 Ark. App. 106, 974 S.W.2d 490 (1998).

Where defendant stole a car with a passenger inside in Pulaski County, and proceeded to Faulkner County and committed crimes, and was arrested in Faulkner County on November 13, 1999, but not arrested in Pulaski County until May 12, 2000, and was convicted of the Pulaski County crimes on January 24, 2001, the theft-by-receiving charge for which defendant was arrested in Faulkner County did not link the distinct crimes committed in Faulkner County to the distinct crimes, including the theft-of-property charge, for which defendant was subsequently arrested in Pulaski County for purposes of the running of the speedy trial period in Pulaski County. Nelson v. State, 350 Ark. 311, 86 S.W.3d 909 (2002).

Appellant's right to a speedy trial was violated when his trial commenced on the 600th day following his arrest where only 168 days of delay were excludable as attributed to appellant and the state failed to show cause for the additional 70 days of delay. Zangerl v. State, 352 Ark. 278, 100 S.W.3d 695 (2003).

Defendant's argument that the charge of theft by receiving the second vehicle should have been dismissed as having arisen out of the same criminal episode when the charge of breaking and entering the first vehicle was dismissed for violation of the speedy-trial rule failed because the charges involve different vehicles, different locations and different victims, and the time for speedy trial commenced to run on the date of arrest for the theft by receiving the second vehicle, August 18, 2001, and the trial conducted on that charge in July 2002 was timely for speedy trial purposes. Yancy v. State, 85 Ark. App. 53, 146 S.W.3d 375 (2004).

Defendant successfully showed, and the state conceded, that defendant's prosecution was 113 days over the 12-month limit for speedy trial purposes; therefore, defendant's motion to dismiss should have been granted. Berry v. Henry, 364 Ark. 26, 216 S.W.3d 93 (2005).

Defendant's speedy-trial right was not violated and the trial court did not err when it denied his motion to dismiss because the trial was postponed due to the need for the appointment of new counsel, which was excludable for good cause pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(h), and due to defendant's pretrial motions, including his motions for a polygraph examination, to admit certain evidence under the Rape Shield law, to compel discovery, and for a mental evaluation, which was excludable under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(a). Parker v. State, 93 Ark. App. 472, 220 S.W.3d 238 (2005).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated by the passage of 713 days which began to run under subsection (a) of this rule after his arrest for sexual indecency with a child, because at least 435 days were excluded due to defendant's motions for continuances, reset trial dates, and his change of plea to not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect. As only 278 days counted toward his speedy-trial time, the State did not violate the 365-day speedy-trial limitation set forth in Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1. Federick v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 552, 423 S.W.3d 649 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to file a motion to dismiss on the ground of a speedy-trial violation because such a motion would have lacked merit as the excluded period of delay exceeded the period of time for which the State would have had to account. Moten v. State, 2013 Ark. 503 (2013).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to file a motion to dismiss based on a speedy trial claim where the inmate failed to show that the periods of delay should not have been excluded from the speedy-trial calculation. Breeden v. State, 2014 Ark. 159, 432 S.W.3d 618 (2014).

Appellant's motion to dismiss the fraudulent use of a credit card, theft of property, and being a habitual offender charges was properly denied where a Missouri fugitive-from-justice charge was separate and distinct from the Arkansas charges, he entered his conditional plea within 12 months of the date he was served with the Arkansas bench warrant, and thus, his rights to a speedy trial were not violated. Davis v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 73 (2016).

Circuit court properly denied defendant's motion to dismiss based on an alleged speedy-trial violation where the time periods between the date of his mistrial and his motion for continuance and between the order granting the continuance and the trial date were tolled, and when that time period was excluded, the trial was timely under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.2 and 28.3. Hinton v. State, 2017 Ark. 207, 515 S.W.3d 121 (2017).

While defendant's first trial occurred more than 12 months after his arrest, he waived his speedy-trial rights by failing to file a motion to dismiss before the trial and mistrial, and his second trial was held within 12 months of the mistrial. Dodson v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 435, 586 S.W.3d 701 (2019).

Construction.

The twelve-month period in this rule is interrelated with Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, which sets out the periods of delay that "shall" be excluded in computing time for a speedy trial. Patterson v. State, 318 Ark. 358, 885 S.W.2d 667 (1994).

Continuance.

Motions for continuance made after speedy trial deadline has passed did not constitute acquiescence in delay. Duncan v. State, 294 Ark. 105, 740 S.W.2d 923 (1987).

In a child pornography case, defendant's speedy trial rights were not violated where he was arrested on March 28, 2001, and his trial began on May 15, 2002, because defendant moved for a continuance on January 10, 2002, and the trial court granted the continuance until May 15, 2002; the additional 48 days beyond the 12 month period were during that continuance, and all of the time from January 10, 2002, until May 15, 2002, was properly excluded from the calculation of the speedy-trial period. George v. State, 358 Ark. 269, 189 S.W.3d 28 (2004), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1163, 125 S. Ct. 1329, 161 L. Ed. 2d 136 (2005).

Where defense counsel requested that defendant's capital murder trial be scheduled for a minimum of three days because of the nature of the offense and the number of witnesses, the trial court did not err in interpreting this request as a request for a continuance to the first date that the trial court's docket was free for three days, and the days for which the trial was continued were properly excluded in evaluating whether defendant's right to a speedy trial had been violated. Davis v. State, 375 Ark. 368, 291 S.W.3d 164 (2009).

Defendant was timely brought to trial because the case was passed from November 17, 2005, through January 5, 2006 at the request of the defendant, it was again passed at defendant's request from March 2, 2006, through May 4, 2006, and defendant failed to appear on May 4, 2006, and next appeared 28 days later on June 1, 2006. Layton v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 96, 302 S.W.3d 610 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of a speedy trial under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1(c) and subsection (a) of this rule because each of the three delays in defendant's trial dates were a result of defendant's own motions for continuances, which, pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(c), were time that was properly excluded in calculating the time for trial. Wade v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 346, 308 S.W.3d 178 (2009).

Conviction Reversed.

Where the time for trial commenced running on the date defendant was incarcerated in jail to await trial on the charge, and defendant remained in jail awaiting trial for five months until he was incarcerated in prison pursuant to conviction on another charge, but was not tried on the first charge until 14 months and 26 days from the date the time commenced to run, and where the state failed to show any authorized cause for delay, the conviction had to be reversed and dismissed. Floyd v. State, 280 Ark. 226, 656 S.W.2d 701 (1983).

Date Charge is Filed.

Subsection (a) of this rule is silent with respect to which particular charging instruments must be filed to satisfy the requirement that charges are filed; this silence is no doubt due to the fact that the requisite charging instruments in any case vary according to the classification of the crimes charged and the jurisdiction of the charging courts. Archer v. Benton County Circuit Court, 316 Ark. 477, 872 S.W.2d 397 (1994).

Defendant's right to receive notice of the felony charges against him is protected by Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 8, and Ark. Const., Amend. 21, which require those criminal charges to be filed by indictment or information; therefore, for purposes of his speedy trial rights and subsection (a) of this rule, the date charges were filed against defendant was the date the felony information was filed in circuit court, rather than the date the affidavit of probable cause to arrest him was filed. Archer v. Benton County Circuit Court, 316 Ark. 477, 872 S.W.2d 397 (1994).

Date of Arrest.

Where the defendant was tried 19 months after the charges were filed and nine months after his arrest, the defendant was not denied his right to a speedy trial because the time did not begin to run until the date of arrest. Coleman v. Lofton, 289 Ark. 573, 715 S.W.2d 435 (1986).

Where the deputy sheriff issued a citation to appear in court in lieu of arrest, as authorized under Ark. R. Crim. P. 5.1(a) and 5.2(a), and the defendant was arrested when he appeared on his court date, the twelve-month speedy-trial time commenced from the date of arrest, not from the citation date. Clifton v. State, 326 Ark. 251, 930 S.W.2d 354 (1996).

Where the defendant was arrested prior to the filing of a felony information against her, the time for speedy trial began running on the date of her arrest. Marks v. State, 332 Ark. 374, 965 S.W.2d 764 (1998).

Where defendant was charged with a felony, as opposed to a misdemeanor, the time for speedy trial commenced on November 26, 2001, the date that defendant was arrested, and not March 1, 2001, the date that the affidavit for probable cause to obtain an arrest warrant was filed in district court; while an affidavit for an arrest warrant may have been a sufficient charging instrument for filing a misdemeanor charge, it was not sufficient for filing a felony charge. Watson v. State, 358 Ark. 212, 188 S.W.3d 921 (2004).

Defendant was not deprived of his right to a speedy trial where he was arrested for the rape of his step-daughter on April 8, 2004, and tried on September 29, 2004, because the fact that defendant had been arrested in September 2003 for the charge of rape of his step-daughter in a different county had no bearing on the speedy trial calculations in this case as the time began to run with the arrest in this case. Anderson v. State, 93 Ark. App. 454, 220 S.W.3d 225 (2005).

Because defendant was released on bond before trial, his arrest date started the one-year, speedy-trial clock. Miller v. State, 100 Ark. App. 391, 269 S.W.3d 400 (2007).

Court rejected commercial burglary defendant's arguments that his speedy-trial period began to run on either the date police were informed that DNA from the crime scene matched his, or on the date arrest warrants were issued; the seven-month delay between the issuance of the warrants and his arrest did not violate this rule. Robinson v. State, 2013 Ark. 60 (2013).

Court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss, because defendant did not contest that there was not a speedy-trial violation if his time began to run on the date of his arrest, and his time began to run on the date of his arrest. Smith v. State, 2013 Ark. 364 (2013).

Defendant's speedy trial rights were not violated as the Cleburne County trial occurred within 12 months of his arrest for the Cleburne County charges. Defendant raped his 11-year-old daughter in Cleburne County in July 2015; a hotline call alleging sexual abuse of the victim was received in July 2015; the victim when interviewed alleged sexual abuse that occurred in Cleburne, Arkansas, and Jefferson Counties; defendant was arrested by Arkansas County officers in August 2015 and convicted of rape in Arkansas County in December 2016; defendant was served with an arrest warrant in January 2018 for the Cleburne County rape, and was tried in Cleburne County in February 2018. Rayburn v. State, 2019 Ark. 254, 583 S.W.3d 385 (2019).

Defendant in Foreign Jurisdiction.

An accused in prison in another state, for a different crime, must affirmatively request trial in order to activate the speedy trial rule. White v. State, 310 Ark. 200, 833 S.W.2d 771 (1992).

Appellant's speedy trial period did not begin to run until he waived extradition, therefore, his trial was well within the 12-month speedy trial period. White v. State, 310 Ark. 200, 833 S.W.2d 771 (1992).

Defendant's Obligation.

The defendant has an affirmative obligation to offer proof that any delay was not at his insistence. Roberts v. City of Conway, 266 Ark. 825, 586 S.W.2d 13 (Ct. App. 1979).

Where defendant was arrested for burglary in July, 1978, convicted of unrelated offenses and sentenced in February, 1979, and trial on burglary charges was set for November, 1979, which was within three terms of court as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1, and this rule, defendant could not, in the absence of proof of prejudice or testimony in support of his motion to dismiss, show that state failed to “promptly” seek his presence at trial as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 29.1. Miller v. Lofton, 272 Ark. 164, 612 S.W.2d 732 (1981) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1).

Docket Error.

Where the term in which the defendant was charged with public servant bribery was excluded for that reason under this rule, the two succeeding terms were excluded under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, because of continuances granted at defendant's request, and the prosecutor was granted a continuance in the next following term which was incorrectly recorded on the docket as being granted to defendant, defendant was not entitled to have charges against him dismissed on speedy trial grounds since he failed to notify court of docket error prior to bringing motion to dismiss. Anderson v. Hargraves, 272 Ark. 259, 613 S.W.2d 587 (1981).

Where “pocket docket” entry, excluding period of time from calculation of speedy trial, was made several months after the delay occurred, 2 months after the 12-month period had elapsed, and 6 weeks after defendant filed his motion to dismiss, it was untimely and ineffectual. Reed v. State, 35 Ark. App. 161, 814 S.W.2d 560 (1991), superseded by statute as stated in May v. State, 94 Ark. App. 202, 228 S.W.3d 517 (2006).

Filing of Charge.

The time for a timely trial commenced running on the day armed robbery charge was filed against defendant who was incarcerated in prison in this state pursuant to conviction on a prior offense. Hall v. State, 281 Ark. 282, 663 S.W.2d 926 (1984).

The calculation of the time for a speedy trial does not commence running at the date the crime was committed or the date of arrest; rather, subsection (a) of this rule provides that the time begins to run when the charge is filed in circuit court. Howard v. State, 291 Ark. 633, 727 S.W.2d 830 (1987).

Where a felony information was filed against the defendant on October 16, 1996, that was “the date charges were filed” under the rule. Marks v. State, 332 Ark. 374, 965 S.W.2d 764 (1998).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated under subsection (a) of this rule because excludable periods of time charged against defendant prior to the later filing of a possession-with-intent to deliver a controlled substance charge applied, as each of the offenses arose from the same criminal episode that occurred on the day of defendant's arrest.

Rueda v. State, 2012 Ark. 144, 400 S.W.3d 226 (2012).

Late Filing of Information.

Late filing of information did not start time running anew from day of the second arrest where defendant had been released on bail after first arrest and was later arrested again as a result of evidence obtained during the first search and arrest. Williams v. State, 271 Ark. 435, 609 S.W.2d 37 (1980).

Nolle Prosequi.

Where, just before defendant mother was to be tried for murder, it was learned for the first time that her daughter would testify it was she, not the defendant, who killed father, the state had good cause to nolle prosequi the charge; consequently, when it was determined there was insufficient evidence to find daughter a juvenile delinquent and, almost immediately, the state refiled the murder charge against the mother, the period of delay occasioned by the nolle prosequi was properly excluded under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(f) for purposes of meeting the speedy trial requirements of this rule. Carter v. State, 280 Ark. 34, 655 S.W.2d 379 (1983).

Preservation for Review.

Defendant's speedy-trial issue was not preserved for appellate review because he filed a general speedy-trial motion that asserted only that 781 total days had elapsed since he was arrested, he did not contemporaneously object to any of the excluded periods announced by the court, and, thus, he did not inform the court of the reason for his disagreement with its proposed action prior to or at the time it ruled on the matter. Killian v. State, 96 Ark. App. 92, 238 S.W.3d 629 (2006).

Prosecution Barred.

Where charges of possession of certain drugs with intent to deliver, which were added by an amended information, arose out of the same criminal episode for which the defendants were arrested, and where three full terms of court had expired since the date defendants were released on bond, the state was barred from prosecuting the defendants on any of the charges. Callender v. State, 263 Ark. 217, 563 S.W.2d 467 (1978).

In a prosecution for murder a three-year delay in bringing the defendant to trial caused by the failure of the municipal court to forward a copy of defendant's bond to the circuit court necessitated the defendant's absolute discharge. The failure of the State to check the available court records or otherwise demonstrate any diligence in locating the accused over a two and one half year period could not be excused. Chandler v. State, 284 Ark. 560, 683 S.W.2d 928 (1985).

Retrial Following Mistrial.

Where the defendant's trial began four months after his last mistrial was declared and his case was speedily processed from its inception, the defendant was not denied a speedy trial simply because just over nine months elapsed from the time the defendant was charged until he was ultimately convicted. Glenn v. State, 281 Ark. 454, 664 S.W.2d 868 (1984).

Defendant was not denied his right to speedy trial where defendant's trial at which he was convicted occurred within the required period following his mistrial. Birmingham v. State, 346 Ark. 78, 57 S.W.3d 118 (2001).

Although defendant's retrial commenced 491 days after a mistrial, subtracting a 168-day continuance from 491 days meant that defendant's trial commenced on day 323; because defendant was brought to trial within one year from the date of the mistrial, there was no violation of defendant's right to a speedy trial under subsection (c) of this rule. Eubanks v. State, 2012 Ark. 142 (2012).

Retrial on Remand.

The time for trial commenced running anew on the date the mandate was issued by the Supreme Court Clerk, where the supreme court issued an order granting a new trial on remand. Clements v. State, 312 Ark. 528, 851 S.W.2d 422 (1993).

Right to Speedy Trial.

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was violated where defendant was first tried on a murder charge and then on a charge of possession with intent to distribute, which occurred 83 days after the 12-month period required.

Raglin v. State, 35 Ark. App. 181, 816 S.W.2d 618 (1991).

Defendant was afforded a speedy trial, and the trial court properly denied his motion to dismiss because although he made a prima facie case of a speedy-trial violation, the state identified an additional time period charged against him that put his trial within the required twelve-month period contained in Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1; the delay was properly charged against defendant, he made no objection, and that excludable period put his trial within twelve months of his arrest as calculated under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28. Barber v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 210, 374 S.W.3d 709 (2010).

Waiver.

Where an accused is offered a speedy trial but requests that the case be tried at a later date, and that delaying act is memorialized by a record taken at the time it occurred, he cannot complain that his right to speedy trial was denied. Jenkins v. State, 301 Ark. 586, 786 S.W.2d 566 (1990).

Defendant was not required to object to the delay of his second trial, caused by holding the murder trial first and, thereby, did not lose his right to contend that the delay violated his right to a speedy trial. Raglin v. State, 35 Ark. App. 181, 816 S.W.2d 618 (1991).

Rule 28.3. Excluded periods.

The following periods shall be excluded in computing the time for trial. Such periods shall be set forth by the court in a written order or docket entry, but it shall not be necessary for the court to make the determination until the defendant has moved to enforce his right to a speedy trial pursuant to Rule 28 unless it is specifically provided to the contrary below. The number of days of the excluded period or periods shall be added to the time applicable to the defendant as set forth in Rules 28.1 and 28.2 to determine the limitations and consequences applicable to the defendant.

(a) The period of delay resulting from other proceedings concerning the defendant, including but not limited to an examination and hearing on the competency of the defendant and the period during which he is incompetent to stand trial, hearings on pretrial motions, interlocutory appeals, and trials of other charges against the defendant. No pretrial motion shall be held under advisement for more than thirty (30) days, and the period of time in excess of thirty (30) days during which any such motion is held under advisement shall not be considered an excluded period.

(b) The period of delay resulting from a continuance attributable to congestion of the trial docket if in a written order or docket entry at the time the continuance is granted:

- (1) the court explains with particularity the reasons the trial docket does not permit trial on the date originally scheduled;
 - (2) the court determines that the delay will not prejudice the defendant; and
 - (3) the court schedules the trial on the next available date permitted by the trial docket.
- (c) The period of delay resulting from a continuance granted at the request of the defendant or his counsel. All continuances granted at the request of the defendant or his counsel shall be to a day certain, and the period of delay shall be from the date the continuance is granted until such subsequent date contained in the order or docket entry granting the continuance.
- (d) The period of delay resulting from a continuance (calculated from the date the continuance is granted until the subsequent date contained in the order or docket entry granting the continuance) granted at the request of the prosecuting attorney, if:
- (1) the continuance is granted because of the unavailability of evidence material to the state's case, when due diligence has been exercised to obtain such evidence and there are reasonable grounds to believe that such evidence will be available at a later date; or
 - (2) the continuance is granted in a felony case to allow the prosecuting attorney additional time to prepare the state's case and additional time is justified because of the exceptional complexity of the particular case.
- (e) The period of delay resulting from the absence or unavailability of the defendant. A defendant shall be considered absent whenever his whereabouts are unknown. A defendant shall also be considered unavailable whenever his whereabouts are known but his presence for the trial cannot be obtained or he resists being returned to the state for trial.
- (f) The time between a dismissal or nolle prosequi upon motion of the prosecuting attorney for good cause shown, and the time the charge is later filed for the same offense or an offense required to be joined with that offense.
- (g) A reasonable period of delay when the defendant is joined for trial with a codefendant as to whom the time for trial has not run and there is good cause for not granting a severance. In all other cases the defendant acting with due diligence shall be granted a severance so that he may be tried within the time limits applicable to him.
- (h) Other periods of delay for good cause.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 28.3

Rules 28.1-28.3 are closely interrelated. Cases interpreting Rule 28.3 are also found in the commentary to Rules 28.1 and 28.2.

Proof of Exceptional Circumstances Justifying Delay.

Interpreting Rule 28.3(b), the Arkansas Supreme Court has observed that "a crowded docket is not an acceptable excuse for denying a speedy trial absent 'exceptional circumstances.'" Garrison v. State, 270 Ark. 426, 430, 605 S.W.2d 467, 468 (1980). The Court then quoted a passage from the commentary to the ABA Standards, Speedy Trial (1967): Although it is fair to expect the state to provide the machinery needed to dispose of the usual business of the courts promptly, it does not appear feasible to impose the same requirements when certain unique, nonrecurring events have produced an inordinate number of cases for court disposition. Thus, when a large-scale riot or mass public disorder has occurred, some leeway for additional time is required to ensure that the many resulting cases may receive adequate attention . . . Garrison at 431, 605 S.W.2d at 469.

Apparently adopting the “exceptional circumstance” definition above, the Court found no such circumstances in Garrison.

In Cash v. State, 271 Ark. 881, 611 S.W.2d 510 (1981) the Arkansas Supreme Court held that a good cause for delay was not shown by proof that a witness was attending a law enforcement conference on the date of the trial. In Roleson v. State, 272 Ark. 346, 614 S.W.2d 656 (1981), the Court found that where state witnesses were unavailable because of “previous court commitments,” Id. at 351, 614 S.W.2d at 658, good cause was shown.

Delay Caused by Nolle Prosequi. Following Klopper v. North Carolina, 386 U.S. 213, 18 L. Ed.2d 1 (1967), the Arkansas Supreme Court has ruled that entering a nolle prosequi does not toll the running of the speedy trial rule under Rule 28.3(f) absent a showing of good cause for the period of delay. State v. Washington, 273 Ark. 82, 617 S.W.2d 3 (1981). A nolle prosequi cannot be used to evade Sixth Amendment rights: “The State is not relieved of a speedy trial limitation placed on it merely because the defendant is permitted absolute release pending disposition of the charges.” Id. at 88, 617 S.W.2d at 6. See, also, Carter v. State, 280 Ark. 34, 655 S.W.2d 379 (1983), where the Arkansas Supreme Court found good cause tolling the running of time in a case where murder charges against a mother were nolle pressed after her daughter confessed to the murder. The charges were later reinstated, leading to conviction of the mother for murder, when the evidence against the daughter turned out to be insufficient.

Application to De Novo Trials in Misdemeanor Cases. The Arkansas Court of Appeals has decided that the time within which the defendant must be brought to trial after appeal of a misdemeanor conviction begins running under Rule 28.1(c) and 28.2 on the day a case is appealed to circuit court. Shaw v. State, 18 Ark. App. 243, 712 S.W.2d 338 (1986). In Shaw, appellant was convicted in municipal court of driving while intoxicated on August 4, 1983. He appealed his conviction to circuit court on August 17, 1983, but the case was not set for trial until July 10, 1985. A trial followed on November 14, 1985. The Court held that time for trial began running on August 17 and that the trial court should have dismissed the charge because appellant’s 1985 trial occurred more than 18 months after August 17, 1983.

The Court also observed that Rules 28.3(b), (c), and (i) require that the trial judge make certain docket entries. Where, because of the Court’s failure to make entries, the record does not disclose whether periods of time should be deemed excluded, a later ruling by the trial judge not supported by the court docket that excluded periods exist will not be upheld.

Rule 28.3 as Guide to Interpretation of Other Statutes. The Arkansas Supreme Court has stated that in the absence of controlling authority dictating how to calculate excluded periods of time in unrelated statutes, the Court will look to Rule 28.3(a) for guidance. Lark v. State, 276 Ark. 441, 637 S.W.2d 529 (1982) (interpreting Ark. Stat. Ann. § 41-1209(2) (Repl. 1977)). See, also, Cheshire v. State, 16 Ark. App. 34, 696 S.W.2d 322 (1985).

Defendant Incarcerated in Prison in Another State. A defendant incarcerated in a prison in another jurisdiction as a result of a felony conviction must be tried within the time specified by Rule 29.1 read together with Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 43-3201 to -3208 (Repl. 1977) (the Interstate Agreement on Detainers). The Detainers Act requires that a petitioner be brought to trial within 180 days after filing a request for final disposition with the prosecutor. The 180 day period within which trial must be held does not begin running until a demand for trial is made. Dukes v. State, 271 Ark. 674, 609 S.W.2d 924 (1981). Also, see Blackmon v. Weber, 277 Ark. 393, 642 S.W.2d 294 (1982).

Though Rule 28.1(g) provides that the speedy trial rule shall have no effect on cases governed by the Detainers Act, it should be noted that the 180 day period for trying a defendant under the Detainers Act may be triggered by a disposition request in response to a prosecutor’s Rule 29.1(b) filing. Dukes v. State.

The Arkansas Court of Appeals has interpreted Blackmon v. Weber to require that a conviction be reversed and dismissed where appellant was brought to trial more than 120 days after he arrived in Arkansas pursuant to an Arkansas detainer in violation of Article IV(c), Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-2301 (Repl. 1977). Loane v. State, 12 Ark. App. 374, 677 S.W.2d 864 (1984). Appellant was paroled by Oklahoma authorities shortly after arriving in Arkansas. He then was released on bond. The trial court found that Rule 28 governed his right to speedy trial after release. The Arkansas Court of Appeals, pointing to Rule 28.1(g) providing that the rule has no effect on cases governed by the Detainers Act, disagreed. It reversed and dismissed, relying on Blackmon v. Weber, where the Arkansas Supreme Court held that the Detainers Act, not Rule 28.1, governed a situation where appellant was returned to Arkansas pursuant to a detainer.

The dissent in Loane observed that the rationale underlying the Detainers Act is that a speedy trial promotes the rehabilitative efforts of the incarcerating state and, since appellant in Loane had been paroled by Oklahoma after returning to Arkansas, the purposes of the Detainers Act were no longer germane, and the Arkansas speedy trial rule should have been deemed controlling.

Reporter's Notes to 1999 Amendments: Subsection (b) has been amended and subsection (i) has been moved to the opening paragraph. These changes have been made to address recurrent problems arising in cases. E.g., Hicks v. State, 305 Ark. 393, 808 S.W.2d 348 (1991).

The opening paragraph was added which includes language formerly in subsection (i), but further provides that the trial court may determine the excluded periods when the defendant has moved for dismissal pursuant to Rule 28.1 rather than at an earlier date although the judge is still free to do so earlier. This finding is a determination of the excluded periods.

Subsection (b) was amended to make more practical a continuance granted because of congestion of the trial docket. The three-pronged finding was substituted for the previous standard which required a finding of "exceptional circumstances." This requirement of the entry of a contemporaneous written order explaining the reasons for the continuance, finding that the defendant is not prejudiced, and scheduling a new trial date is in addition to the finding required as to the periods to be excluded. Typically, the period to be excluded under subsection (b) will be from the date on which the trial was scheduled as specified in (b)(1) to the rescheduled date as specified in (b)(3).

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

This rule, as applied to deny a motion to dismiss brought by a defendant who had resisted every attempt to bring him to trial, was not unconstitutional under Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 10, guaranteeing a right to speedy trial. Faulk v. State, 261 Ark. 543, 551 S.W.2d 194 (1977).

In General.

It is plain from the provisions of this rule, Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 and Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.2 that the drafters recognized that an accused who is incarcerated on pending charges, or on different charges, is at a disadvantage simply by virtue of his confinement. Hence, for such defendants, shorter periods for trial are provided by the speedy trial rule. Miller v. Langston, 296 Ark. 486, 757 S.W.2d 562 (1988).

Any excludable periods under this rule must be figured into the speedy-trial calculation and applied to all charges stemming from the same criminal episode for which the original arrest was made; otherwise, the prosecutor would be forced to calculate a different speedy-trial period for each charge filed and to try the most recently filed charge first, thereby producing an illogical result. Johnson v. State, 337 Ark. 477, 989 S.W.2d 525 (1999).

Defendant's speedy-trial argument was not preserved for review because defendant and his counsel were present and failed to make a contemporaneous objection at the numerous hearings in which time was excluded for speedy trial purposes due to defendant's incomplete mental evaluation. DeAsis v. State, 360 Ark. 286, 200 S.W.3d 911 (2005).

Applicability.

Subsection (a) of this rule applies to criminal charges brought in circuit court and subsequently transferred to juvenile court. State v. McCann, 313 Ark. 286, 853 S.W.2d 886 (1993).

Availability of Defendant.

Where the authorities did not know the whereabouts of the defendant, the defendant was absent or unavailable within the meaning of this rule. Grooms v. State, 260 Ark. 879, 545 S.W.2d 610 (1977); Keys v. State, 23 Ark. App. 219, 745 S.W.2d 628 (1988).

The period of delay resulting from the absence of a defendant is excludable under subsection (e) of this rule; accordingly, where defendant fled the state and disappeared for ten months, the trial which was held within 21 months of the date on which he was charged, was held within the required 18 months when the ten-month absence was excluded. Wilson v. State, 10 Ark. App. 176, 662 S.W.2d 204 (1983).

Defendant must be available for trial, excluding time delays which result from his resisting appearance for trial. Allen v. State, 294 Ark. 209, 742 S.W.2d 886 (1988); Henson v. State, 38 Ark. App. 155, 832 S.W.2d 269 (1992).

Accused could not be charged with time required for transport from state of arrest to prosecuting state. Horn v. State, 294 Ark. 464, 743 S.W.2d 814 (1988).

A defendant shall be considered absent when his whereabouts are unknown, or when his whereabouts are known but his presence for trial cannot be obtained. Holmes v. State, 33 Ark. App. 168, 803 S.W.2d 563 (1991).

Where trial was originally delayed due to the defendant's unavailability, the trial court's giving defendant the first available date, which was five days after the time for speedy trial expired, was one of the "exceptional circumstances" contemplated by this rule. Henson v. State, 38 Ark. App. 155, 832 S.W.2d 269 (1992).

The two-year delay between date of information and date of arrest was not excludable for good cause under subsection (h) of this rule where the state failed to show that the defendant's use of an alias impeded service of the arrest warrant. Duncan v. Wright, 318 Ark. 153, 883 S.W.2d 834 (1994).

Out-of-state defendant was "unavailable" for trial for the purpose of computing the 60 days, until he waived extradition. Rodgers v. State, 49 Ark. App. 136, 898 S.W.2d 475 (1995).

Whether or not a defendant's refusal to communicate with his attorney has any bearing on his unavailability for trial as described in this rule, testimony by the attorney or his staff regarding possibly excludable periods held inadmissible under Evid. Rule 502(b). Byrd v. State, 326 Ark. 10, 929 S.W.2d 151 (1996).

Whether or not a defendant's refusal to communicate with his attorney has any bearing on his unavailability for trial as described in this rule, testimony by the attorney or his staff regarding possibly excludable periods held inadmissible under Evid. Rule 502(b). Byrd v. State, 326 Ark. 10, 929 S.W.2d 151 (1996).

Although the State claimed that defendant's whereabouts were unknown because there was no way the Faulkner County prosecutor could have known that defendant was serving time in a state prison on charges that originated in Pulaski County, the period between the time the information was filed and the denial of defendant's motion to dismiss was not excludable where there was no proof that there was an attempt to serve the warrant. Lively v. State, 326 Ark. 398, 930 S.W.2d 339 (1996).

Defendant's motion to dismiss for speedy-trial reasons was denied where the trial delay was attributable to defendant's unavailability, excludable under subsection (e) of this rule. Brown v. State, 330 Ark. 239, 952 S.W.2d 673 (1997).

The defendant was not entitled to a writ of prohibition dismissing the proceeding against him on speedy trial grounds as there were disputed questions of fact as to whether the state made a diligent, good-faith effort to locate him or whether his absence or unavailability was due to his own conduct. Holbert v. Arkansas County, 339 Ark. 462, 5 S.W.3d 474 (1999).

An 11-day delay was chargeable to the defendant on the basis of his absence or unavailability where the court mailed a notice of a hearing on December 22 to the defendant on December 11 before the defendant filed a notice of a second address to the court. Smith v. Plegge, 342 Ark. 232, 27 S.W.3d 402 (2000).

Pursuant to subsection (e) of this rule, because petitioner fled the jurisdiction to evade capture, that time was chargeable to petitioner; the state was diligent in procuring petitioner's attendance in Arkansas two days after learning of petitioner's whereabouts and the two days that were necessary to transport him back to Arkansas were charged to petitioner. Doby v. Jefferson County Circuit Court, 350 Ark. 505, 88 S.W.3d 824 (2002).

Burden of State.

It is the burden of the state to prove the delay in bringing the defendant to trial was legally justified. State v. Lewis, 268 Ark. 359, 596 S.W.2d 697 (1980); Williams v. State, 290 Ark. 286, 718 S.W.2d 935 (1986), cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1068, 107 S. Ct. 2460, 95 L. Ed. 2d 869 (1987); Keys v. State, 23 Ark. App. 219, 745 S.W.2d 628 (1988).

Where defendants were arrested prior to March, 1979, and should have been tried, but were not, by September, 1980, where the defendants were either on bail or lawfully at liberty prior to the date charges were filed in circuit court, and where the record showed that the defendants were unavailable because the sheriff failed to follow through in the serving of the proper notice or warrants, dismissal of the charges under Ark. R. Crim. P. 30.1, was proper where the state, in attempting to prove that the delay was legally justified under this rule and thus excludable in calculating the three terms of court, relied solely on inconclusive and sketchy court docket sheet notations. State v. Washington, 273 Ark. 82, 617 S.W.2d 3 (1981).

Where a defendant's trial was held after allowable period, the trial court erred in not granting a motion to dismiss pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1, since the state did not carry its burden of proving the excludable periods of time under this rule by merely alleging that its witness, a deputy, had been admitted to the hospital on the date of the hearing for an emergency, but failing to show that the unavailability of that witness was for period alleged. Van Sandt v. State, 274 Ark. 7, 621 S.W.2d 681 (1981) (decision prior to 1980 amendment of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1).

The burden is upon the state to prove good cause for any delay in the trial or that it was legally justified. Williams v. State, 275 Ark. 8, 627 S.W.2d 4 (1982).

Once defendant establishes that he was not tried within the twelve-month period, the burden shifts to the state to show that any delay was the result of defendant's conduct, or was otherwise justified. Collins v. State, 304 Ark. 587, 804 S.W.2d 680 (1991).

There is a presumption that a trial occurring within the time limit set out in this rule meets constitutional requirements, and as the prosecutor's delay in bringing criminal charges did not constitute prejudice, the presumption was not overcome. Cox v. State, 36 Ark. App. 173, 820 S.W.2d 471 (1991).

It is the state's burden to show that a delay was a result of the defendant's conduct or otherwise justifiable by the excluded period recognized by the criminal rules. Bowen v. State, 73 Ark. App. 240, 42 S.W.3d 579 (2001).

Defendant's right to speedy trial was not violated as the state met its burden to show that there were 414 days that were permissibly excluded pursuant to this rule; further, it was of no consequence that the order granting a continuance to defendant with specificity was filed after the speedy-trial period had run because this rule provides that the excludable period of time shall be set forth by the court in a written order or docket entry, but it shall not be necessary for the court to make the determination until the defendant has moved to enforce his right to a speedy trial. May v. State, 94 Ark. App. 202, 228 S.W.3d 517 (2006).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was violated where defendant was not brought to trial within 12 months. The State failed to present sufficient evidence to make an 84-day continuance attributable to defendant; the associated docket sheet was neither part of the transcript submitted to the circuit court nor independently verified and certified by the clerk of the district court. Rhoden v. State, 98 Ark. App. 425, 256 S.W.3d 506 (2007).

Calculation of Time.

The date the charges are filed is the beginning for the calculation of the time for a speedy trial. Keys v. State, 23 Ark. App. 219, 745 S.W.2d 628 (1988).

The state failed to show that there were excludable periods under subsection (e) of this rule resulting from the absence or unavailability of the defendant where the defendant lived in the same city, at the same job during the time in question and was in the police department on 4 separate occasions for other violations before he was finally arrested. Tlapek v. State, 305 Ark. 272, 807 S.W.2d 467 (1991).

Where defendant was in prison in another state, for a different crime, and was extradited to Arkansas to stand trial, he would have to affirmatively request a trial in order to activate the speedy trial rule and where defendant did not, his right to a speedy trial did not begin to run until his actual return to the state. Gillie v. State, 305 Ark. 296, 808 S.W.2d 320 (1991).

The period of delay resulting from an examination and hearing on the competency of the defendant was excludable from the 12-month period. Hubbard v. State, 306 Ark. 153, 812 S.W.2d 107 (1991).

The period of delay, due to the appointment of new defense counsel, was not excludable as a delay for good cause because the defendant did nothing to cause his trial to be delayed beyond the time for a speedy trial. Glover v. State, 307 Ark. 1, 817 S.W.2d 409 (1991).

A period of delay resulting from subsection (a) of this rule's "trial of other charges against the defendant" in a foreign jurisdiction commences when the accused is taken to the foreign jurisdiction and ends when the trial in that jurisdiction is completed and the accused becomes available for extradition. Patterson v. State, 318 Ark. 358, 885 S.W.2d 667 (1994).

While subsection (a) of this rule does provide that the period of delay resulting from hearings on pretrial motions are excluded in computing the time for trial, Arkansas speedy-trial rules do not contemplate that the filing of a suppression motion by one defendant should toll the time as to another defendant who is facing different charges filed in a distinct case. Webb v. Ford, 340 Ark. 281, 9 S.W.3d 504 (2000).

The excluded time period contemplated by the phrase "hearings on pretrial motions" begins at the time the pretrial motion is made and includes those periods of delay attributable to the defendant until the motion is heard by the court and not more than thirty days thereafter. Gwin v. State, 340 Ark. 302, 9 S.W.3d 501 (2000).

Although the docket sheet did not set out which of the 91 days between the filing of defendant's pretrial motions and the hearing were to be excluded, no argument was made that any of the delay was attributed to the state; thus, the 91 days was excluded against the speedy trial calculations. Turner v. State, 349 Ark. 715, 80 S.W.3d 382 (2002).

By establishing a period of delay beyond 12 months from the date of the charge, petitioner made a prime facie case for a speedy-trial violation; however, there was no violation of the speedy-trial rule because, after attributing excludable time periods to petitioner and the state pursuant to this rule, the time charged to the state was less than 12 months. Doby v. Jefferson County Circuit Court, 350 Ark. 505, 88 S.W.3d 824 (2002).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated because he was brought to trial within 12 months after several excludable time periods were subtracted from a 464-day period; therefore, defendant's motion to dismiss several drug and weapons charges was properly denied. Gondolfi v. Clinger, 352 Ark. 156, 98 S.W.3d 812 (2003).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss because of a speedy-trial violation as 505 days were properly excluded and the state was only required to account for 493 days. Dodson v. State, 358 Ark. 372, 191 S.W.3d 511 (2004).

In a stalking and terroristic threats case, denial of defendant's motion to dismiss on speedy-trial grounds was proper because subtracting the nol pros and continuance periods from the overall 426-day period between his arrest and the day his speedy-trial motion was filed left 347 days, well within the one-year period of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1. Branning v. State, 371 Ark. 433, 267 S.W.3d 599 (2007).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated by the passage of 713 days between his arrest for sexual indecency with a child and his motion to dismiss for a speedy-trial violation. Only 278 days counted toward his speedy-trial time, as 435 days were excluded under this rule because defendant filed a motion for a continuance of his arraignment hearing, two motions for a continuance of his trial date, and changed his plea to not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect; the excludable period ended when the report from his mental examination was filed with the trial court. Federick v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 552, 423 S.W.3d 649 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to file a motion to dismiss on the ground of a speedy-trial violation because such a motion would have lacked merit as the excluded period of delay exceeded the period of time for which the State would have had to account. Moten v. State, 2013 Ark. 503 (2013).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to file a motion to dismiss based on a speedy trial claim where the inmate failed to show that the periods of delay should not have been excluded from the speedy-trial calculation. Breeden v. State, 2014 Ark. 159, 432 S.W.3d 618 (2014).

Competency Evaluation.

The literal language of this rule states simply that the period required by a competency examination is excluded; therefore, contrary to defendant's contention, the burden did not shift back to the State after defendant showed that the delay involved in missing an appointment for the evaluation was not attributable to him personally. Brawley v. State, 306 Ark. 609, 306 Ark. 614A, 307 Ark. 614A, 819 S.W.2d 704 (1991).

State demonstrated that the delay in bringing defendant to trial was caused by defendant's request for a competency evaluation, and the period from when the trial court granted the motion for evaluation to when defendant withdrew his motion was excluded from the speedy-trial calculation; excluding those days, defendant was tried within the time allowed to be considered a speedy trial. Jackson v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 603, 474 S.W.3d 525 (2015).

Exclusion from the 12-month speedy-trial period of the time period between when defendant was committed for restoration until he was determined to be competent was appropriate; the circuit court was unable to determine that defendant was fit to proceed during that time primarily because defendant refused to submit to an evaluation. Newman v. Cottrell, 2016 Ark. 413, 503 S.W.3d 74 (2016).

Defendant's speedy trial right was not violated as he was brought to trial within 365 days; although the speedy-trial clock began to run on December 29, 2016, and he was not brought to trial until 574 days later, the 212 days from the filing of the circuit court's written order until the filing of the mental evaluation report were excluded in computing the time for trial despite the repeated transportation complications. Perkins v. State, 2019 Ark. 247, 582 S.W.3d 1 (2019).

Congested Trial Docket.

Subsection (b) of this rule contemplates that a trial judge will regularly call the docket, and if a case is to be continued beyond the time permitted by law, then the reasons must be stated. Novak v. State, 294 Ark. 120, 741 S.W.2d 243 (1987).

Docket congestion was not reason for excluding period where court did not state those circumstances in its docket or order continuing the case. Novak v. State, 294 Ark. 120, 741 S.W.2d 243 (1987).

There is no requirement under this rule that an order setting forth a guilty plea and the authorization to withdraw the plea be entered prior to a petition for prohibition as there is for a continuance due to docket congestion. Kennedy v. State, 297 Ark. 488, 763 S.W.2d 648 (1989).

Where trial court entered an order explaining that it appeared that another trial would carry over into the following week, this situation constituted the type of an order contemplated by subsection (b) of this rule and was sufficient to exclude the period until the date of the next criminal docket. Stanley v. State, 297 Ark. 586, 764 S.W.2d 426 (1989) (decided under former version of rule before 1999 amendment).

Where the action of the trial judge in rescheduling defendant's case due to an exceptional circumstance was reasonable at the time taken, the fair administration of justice was best served by postponing defendant's trial to the next criminal docket, rather than having the defendant, his attorney, and a whole jury panel come in to see if a courtroom might be available. Stanley v. State, 297 Ark. 586, 764 S.W.2d 426 (1989).

Trial court erred in continuing defendant's case due to a crowded court docket without a showing of exceptional circumstances stated in an order continuing the case or on the docket prior to the expiration of the speedy trial period as required by this section. Hicks v. State, 305 Ark. 393, 808 S.W.2d 348 (1991) (decided under former version of rule before 1999 amendment).

Court's ruling about docket congestion was insufficient, where the order did not address any prejudice that might have resulted to defendant from the delay, nor did it explain why defendant was not brought to trial on any of the open days on the trial calendar. Miller v. State, 100 Ark. App. 391, 269 S.W.3d 400 (2007).

Subdivision (b)(1)'s requirement of a contemporaneous written order or docket entry explaining with particularity the reasons the trial docket does not permit trial was not met in the present case. Thus, defendant was correct that the trial court erred in excluding the period from May 13 to July 22, 2013 in its speedy-trial calculation. However, the record revealed that the March trial date was continued at defense counsel's request and the exclusion of that period brought defendant's trial date well within the one-year period for speedy trial. Carter v. State, 2016 Ark. 152, 484 S.W.3d 673 (2016).

Defendant's residential burglary conviction was dismissed as his right to a speedy trial was violated because he was not brought to trial within 12 months of his arrest; the time period between the arrest and the filing of the motion to dismiss was 468 days; defendant did not contest the exclusion of 28 days from February 7 to March 7, 2017, and another exclusion of 70 days from June 13 to August 22, 2017, as both delays were due to continuances he had requested; when 98 days were excluded from the 468-day period, 370 days remained; and the trial court's October 23, 2017, sua sponte order continuing defendant's trial until March 2018 did not meet the requirements for a continuance based on docket congestion under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3(b). Robertson v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 73, 568 S.W.3d 323 (2019).

Construction.

The language of this rule is mandatory. Smith v. State, 303 Ark. 524, 798 S.W.2d 94 (1990).

The exclusion of those periods identified under this rule is mandatory. State v. McCann, 313 Ark. 286, 853 S.W.2d 886 (1993).

The twelve-month period in Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.2 is interrelated with this rule, which sets out the periods of delay that "shall" be excluded in computing time for a speedy trial. Patterson v. State, 318 Ark. 358, 885 S.W.2d 667 (1994).

Filing a pretrial motion does not toll the speedy-trial period; some delay attributable to the defendant must actually result from the motion. Miller v. State, 100 Ark. App. 391, 269 S.W.3d 400 (2007).

Continuance to Obtain Counsel.

Where the defendant assaulted his counsel a few days before the scheduled trial, leading them to request permission to withdraw, the court's action in ordering a continuance to allow the defendant to obtain other counsel was a delay for good cause. Foxworth v. State, 263 Ark. 549, 566 S.W.2d 151 (1978).

Where petitioner appeared at his scheduled arraignments and requested continuances in order to retain private counsel, that time was clearly chargeable to petitioner under subsection (c) of this rule. Doby v. Jefferson County

Circuit Court, 350 Ark. 505, 88 S.W.3d 824 (2002).

Continuances.

The period of delay resulting from a continuance granted at the request of the defendant or his counsel is an excluded period in applying the speedy trial rules. Matthews v. State, 268 Ark. 484, 598 S.W.2d 58 (1980); Woods v. State, 26 Ark. App. 109, 760 S.W.2d 392 (1988).

Continuances granted at a defendant's attorney's request are excludable from the speedy-trial time, even if the defendant does not approve or is not consulted. Huddleston v. State, 339 Ark. 266, 5 S.W.3d 46 (1999).

A continuance was excludable where the motion for continuance was a joint motion; the motion was considered to be joint as defense counsel approved the order as to form and did not raise any objections to the excluded period of time. Bowen v. State, 73 Ark. App. 240, 42 S.W.3d 579 (2001).

Where defendant was granted a continuance of over four months, this time period was not counted for speedy trial purposes and there was no violation of the speedy trial requirement. George v. State, 84 Ark. App. 275, 140 S.W.3d 492 (2003), rev'd, 358 Ark. 269, 189 S.W.3d 28 (2004).

In a child pornography case, defendant's speedy trial rights were not violated where he was arrested on March 28, 2001, and his trial began on May 15, 2002, because defendant moved for a continuance on January 10, 2002, and the trial court granted the continuance until May 15, 2002; the additional 48 days beyond the 12 month period were during that continuance, and all of the time from January 10, 2002, until May 15, 2002, was properly excluded from the calculation of the speedy-trial period. George v. State, 358 Ark. 269, 189 S.W.3d 28 (2004), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1163, 125 S. Ct. 1329, 161 L. Ed. 2d 136 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of a speedy trial under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1(c) and 28.2(a) because each of the three delays in defendant's trial dates were a result of defendant's own motions for continuances, which, pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule, were time that was properly excluded in calculating the time for trial. Wade v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 346, 308 S.W.3d 178 (2009).

While defendant made a prima facie case of a speedy-trial violation under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1, as continuances filed by defendant and a codefendant were excluded by this rule, and as defendant's severance motion did not comply with Ark. R. Crim. P. 22.3(b)(i), less than 365 days expired between his arrest and trial; therefore, his motion to dismiss was properly denied. Raymond v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 179 (2011).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of a speedy trial; every continuance granted in the case was on defendant's motion and thus his speedy trial right was not denied. Cox v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 462 (2015).

Record revealed that a March trial date was continued at defense counsel's request because counsel's wife had the flu, and the doctor had informed counsel that he and his three young children were likely to get sick as well. The exclusion of the 67 days between March 7 and May 13, 2013, brought defendant's trial date well within the one-year period for speedy trial, and this period was excludable under both subsections (c) and (h) of this rule. Carter v. State, 2016 Ark. 152, 484 S.W.3d 673 (2016).

Circuit court properly ruled that defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to move to dismiss the charges based on a speedy-trial violation because defense counsel requested all continuances with defendant's consent, the continuances with agreed excludable periods amounted to over 581 days, each order stated that the period following the continuance until the date a trial was set would be an excluded period, and the failure to continue the proceedings until a date certain did not result in automatic reversal. Turner v. State, 2017 Ark. 253, 526 S.W.3d 822 (2017).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of a speedy trial; although defendant was not brought to trial within the requisite period, the trial court properly excluded from the speedy trial calculation the periods of delay defendant's attorney sought. Continuances granted at the request of a defendant's counsel are excluded from the speedy trial computation even if the defendant does not approve or was not consulted. McCray v. State, 2020 Ark. 172, 598 S.W.3d 509 (2020).

Defendant in Foreign Jurisdiction.

An accused in prison in another state, for a different crime, must affirmatively request trial in order to activate the speedy trial rule. White v. State, 310 Ark. 200, 833 S.W.2d 771 (1992).

Appellant's speedy trial period did not begin to run until he waived extradition, therefore, his trial was well within the 12-month speedy trial period. White v. State, 310 Ark. 200, 833 S.W.2d 771 (1992).

Because the authorities took the proper steps to procure defendant's presence in court for trial by putting a "hold" on him while he was in custody in another county, the disputed period of time was properly excluded under subsection (a) of this rule; therefore, the speedy-trial rule in Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 was not violated. Arnold v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 452 (2011).

Defendant's speedy trial right was not violated because the delay due to defendant's incarceration in another state was excluded under subdivision (e) of this rule; the fact defendant had to be extradited showed defendant did not invoke his right to trial or otherwise cooperate in being returned to Arkansas for trial. Berkley v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 206, 575 S.W.3d 190 (2019).

The speedy trial rule and the Interstate Agreement on Detainers Act (IAD), § 16-95-101 et seq., are separate and distinct. Defendant's argument improperly combined the speedy trial limit with the separate statutory procedure for bringing a defendant incarcerated out of state to trial under the IAD and the State's obligation to seek a detainer imposed by Ark. R. Crim. P. 29.1, and his arguments concerning compliance with the IAD were irrelevant to the speedy trial calculation under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28. Berkley v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 206, 575 S.W.3d 190 (2019).

Although defendant's general whereabouts were known, his speedy trial rights were not violated when he was unavailable due to the federal prosecutor's refusal to release him to return to Arkansas despite the county prosecutor's pleas, and without those 250 days, the trial had occurred well within one year. Badger v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 490, 588 S.W.3d 779 (2019), aff'd, 2021 Ark. App. 246, 626 S.W.3d 447 (2021).

Defendant Serving Sentence.

A situation in which the defendant is serving a sentence and not being held in jail on a pending charge is the equivalent of the defendant being held to bail or at liberty, since his confinement was not under the pending charge. Jones v. State, 266 Ark. 855, 586 S.W.2d 258 (Ct. App. 1979).

Defendant's Obligation.

The defendant has an affirmative obligation to offer proof that any delay was not at his insistence. Roberts v. City of Conway, 266 Ark. 825, 586 S.W.2d 13 (Ct. App. 1979).

Prosecutor's failure to pursue a sentencing hearing for nearly six years was prejudicial to defendant, who had pleaded guilty to rape; in addition, defendant was not required under subsection (a) of this rule to request a sentencing hearing in order for the speedy trial period, which extended to sentencing, to run. Jolly v. State, 358 Ark. 180, 189 S.W.3d 40 (2004), cert. denied, 544 U.S. 948, 125 S. Ct. 1695, 161 L. Ed. 2d 524 (2005), overruled in part, Betterman v. Montana, 578 U.S. 437, 136 S. Ct. 1609, 194 L. Ed. 2d 723 (2016), abrogated as stated in State v. Owens, 2017 Ark. 362, 533 S.W.3d 582 (2017).

Defendant's speedy trial rights were not violated because the arraignment had to be rescheduled due to defendant's failure to appear and subsequent late arrival. It was clear that the delay was defendant's fault, and therefore the State met its burden of showing that the delay was the result of defendant's conduct or was otherwise justified and that the circuit court was correct in excluding that twelve-day period from its speedy-trial calculations. Yarbrough v. State, 370 Ark. 31, 257 S.W.3d 50 (2007).

Delay at Defendant's Request.

Where defendant was arrested in January, 1977, during the October, 1976 term of court, charged by information a month later during the next term of court, had trial set for about 9 weeks after the charge and an attorney appointed for him, had a hearing on the date set for trial at which his appointed attorney was relieved and he was given 10 days to find an attorney, and finally the trial was held some 53 weeks after the initial arrest, the case was tried within the time provided in these rules, after the continuance, and was not a violation of his right to speedy trial since the delay was at his request and not prejudicial. Campbell v. State, 264 Ark. 372, 571 S.W.2d 597 (1978).

The defendants were not denied their right to a speedy trial because the time during which the interlocutory appeal was pending was excluded in computing the time for trial. Williams v. State, 290 Ark. 286, 718 S.W.2d 935 (1986), cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1068, 107 S. Ct. 2460, 95 L. Ed. 2d 869 (1987).

Relevant, excludable periods involved delays that resulted from the defendant's pretrial motion to dismiss, his request for a competency evaluation, and his unauthorized absence from both the state and various trial dates. Nelson v. State, 297 Ark. 58, 759 S.W.2d 215 (1988).

The period of time a trial judge takes a motion to dismiss under advisement is excludable under subsection (a) of this rule. McBride v. State, 297 Ark. 410, 762 S.W.2d 785 (1989).

Trial court did not clearly err by excluding the 30 days during which defendant's motion to suppress was under advisement. Smith v. State, 303 Ark. 524, 798 S.W.2d 94 (1990).

Where a letter from defendant's attorney did not consent to a trial date past the speedy trial period, but merely asked to be notified as soon as the new date was determined, there was no indication that defense counsel knew the trial would be continued past the required time period, and the letter cannot be viewed as a delaying act. Hicks v. State, 305 Ark. 393, 808 S.W.2d 348 (1991), decided under former version of rule before 1999 amendment.

Postponement in bringing defendant to trial, that was prompted by appellant's motion to sever was excluded under the speedy trial rules. Cash v. State, 40 Ark. App. 40, 842 S.W.2d 440 (1992).

Where an accused is offered a speedy trial but requests that the trial take place at a later date because he will be filing a writ of prohibition, and the delaying act is memorialized by a record taken at the time it occurred, he cannot complain that his right to speedy trial was denied. Rhodes v. Capeheart, 313 Ark. 16, 852 S.W.2d 118 (1993).

No violation of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 shown where there were any number of excludable periods including defendant's delay in hiring counsel, his filing of a motion to suppress evidence, and his waiver and then withdrawal of his right to a jury trial. Cupples v. State, 326 Ark. 31, 929 S.W.2d 150 (1996).

Delays caused by defendant's request for psychiatric evaluations were excludable periods under either subsections (a), (c), or (h) of this rule. Goston v. State, 326 Ark. 106, 930 S.W.2d 332 (1996).

In determining the defendant's motion to dismiss on speedy trial grounds, the court properly excluded an 89-day-period from the day the court entered an order for a mental evaluation and the day the results of the examination were filed with the court. Morgan v. State, 333 Ark. 294, 971 S.W.2d 219 (1998).

A 25-day continuance was properly charged to the defendant where two court documents stated that the trial had been "reset by attorney" and "reset at the request of the defendant." Chenoweth v. State, 341 Ark. 722, 19 S.W.3d 612 (2000).

Two periods of delay were excluded from the speedy trial calculation where they were caused by a motion to suppress filed by the defendant and an agreement by the parties for a continuance to obtain additional information from the lead police investigator that was pertinent to the defendant's pretrial motions. Ferguson v. State, 343 Ark. 159, 33 S.W.3d 115 (2000).

Because petitioner had appointed counsel all along in the form of the public defender's office, which could have pursued the Ark. R. Crim. P. 17.3(b) remedies much earlier than it did, the trial court properly charged petitioner with the 173 days involved in the continuance to produce the discoverable evidence from the state. Doby v. Jefferson County Circuit Court, 350 Ark. 505, 88 S.W.3d 824 (2002).

Defendant was timely brought to trial because the case was passed from November 17, 2005, through January 5, 2006 at the request of the defendant, it was again passed at defendant's request from March 2, 2006, through May 4, 2006, and defendant failed to appear on May 4, 2006, and next appeared 28 days later on June 1, 2006. Layton v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 96, 302 S.W.3d 610 (2009).

Delay by Hospital.

The fact that the state hospital was undergoing renovations and was not able to examine defendant for five months was regrettable, but did not make the period of delay nonexcludable. Where defendant had requested the competency examination, and the trial court had issued an emergency commitment order, there was no indication that the state had deliberately sought to delay the trial. Collins v. State, 304 Ark. 587, 804 S.W.2d 680 (1991).

The state hospital is not an integral part of the criminal justice system. It is wholly independent of the judiciary or prosecuting attorney's office. Accordingly, delays caused by its operations would not be subject to the same level of scrutiny pursuant to this rule as delays caused by the criminal justice system itself. Collins v. State, 304 Ark. 587, 804 S.W.2d 680 (1991).

The time required to prepare a competency report is not excluded because of the alleged bias of the examining physician. Mack v. State, 321 Ark. 547, 905 S.W.2d 842 (1995).

In determining the defendant's motion to dismiss on speedy trial grounds, the court properly excluded a 199-day-period from the day the defendant requested a transfer to a state hospital because of his deteriorating mental condition and the day the state hospital noted in a report that the defendant was fit to proceed to trial. Morgan v. State, 333 Ark. 294, 971 S.W.2d 219 (1998).

Delay Fighting Extradition.

Where a defendant, while incarcerated in another state, resisted extradition to Arkansas for trial there, the delay caused by such resistance would be excluded in computing the time in which he must be brought to trial. Faulk v. State, 261 Ark. 543, 551 S.W.2d 194 (1977); Allen v. State, 294 Ark. 209, 742 S.W.2d 886 (1988).

There was no denial of a speedy trial where defendant resisted extradition in another state and was tried with sufficient promptness after he was returned to Arkansas. O'Riordan v. State, 281 Ark. 424, 665 S.W.2d 255 (1984).

Refusal to sign a waiver of extradition amounted to resisting return to this state for trial within framework of this rule. Allen v. State, 294 Ark. 209, 742 S.W.2d 886 (1988).

Discretion of Court.

Where the state failed to show that there was good cause for the delay in bringing the accused to trial on manslaughter charges, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it granted the defendant's motion to dismiss the charges because the state had not brought him to trial within three terms of court. State v. Lewis, 268 Ark. 359, 596 S.W.2d 697 (1980).

Indefinite continuance ordered by judge for good cause, and not by request of either party, held excludable. Strickland v. State, 331 Ark. 402, 962 S.W.2d 769 (1998).

Docket Error.

Where the term in which the defendant was charged with public servant bribery was excluded for that reason under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.2, the two succeeding terms were excluded under this rule because of continuances granted at defendant's request, and the prosecutor was granted a continuance in the next following term which was incorrectly recorded on the docket as being granted to defendant, defendant was not entitled to have charges against him dismissed on speedy trial grounds since he failed to notify court of docket error, prior to bringing motion to dismiss. Anderson v. Hargraves, 272 Ark. 259, 613 S.W.2d 587 (1981).

If a defendant discovers a docket error which affects his speedy trial rights or takes exception to the wording of an order, it is incumbent on him to bring the matter to the attention of the trial court within a reasonable time. Clements v. State, 312 Ark. 528, 851 S.W.2d 422 (1993).

Where the record showed that the defendant delayed the case by not showing up for trial and that the trial court reset the case for the next available trial date, the failure of the court to make a docket entry or written order did not constitute reversible error. Osborn v. State, 340 Ark. 444, 11 S.W.3d 528 (2000).

Evidentiary Hearings.

Failure of the record to specifically set out the state's reasons for the delay of defendant's trial made it necessary to grant defendant permission to apply to the trial court for an evidentiary hearing limited to the issue of whether counsel could have made a successful motion to dismiss the charges for failure to hold trial within the time limits set by this rule. Spivey v. State, 299 Ark. 412, 773 S.W.2d 446 (1989).

Failure to Request Dismissal.

Where the record revealed no delays resulting from other proceedings concerning the defendant under subsection (a) of this rule, no continuance was granted at the defendant's request under subsection (c) of this rule, no delay resulted from any absence of the defendant under subsection (e) of this rule, the only request for a continuance by the state under subsection (d) of this rule was made after allowable period expired, and, although the docket was congested due to exceptional circumstances, the court did not comply with subsection (b) of this rule by stating the circumstances, there was no reasonable legal basis for the failure of counsel to object to the violation of the defendant's right to a timely trial and, therefore, the defendant's rape conviction was reversed and dismissed. Clark v. State, 274 Ark. 81, 621 S.W.2d 857 (1981) (decision prior to 1980 amendment of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1).

Good Cause.

Where defendant was not tried until after allowable period had expired, there was good cause for two delays under subsection (h) of this rule, since, after defendant's trial was set for April 8, defendant's counsel was relieved of his appointment because he was named deputy prosecuting attorney and a replacement counsel was named on May 14, and then further delay occurred where, on defendant's motion, the prosecuting attorney was disqualified on the ground that his professional association with defendant's first attorney created a conflict of interest, and the delay continued until a special prosecutor was appointed on August 18 and defendant was not entitled to discharge under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1. Divanovich v. State, 273 Ark. 117, 617 S.W.2d 345 (1981) (decision based on rule prior to 1980 amendment of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1).

Delays held not for good cause. Campbell v. State, 26 Ark. App. 133, 761 S.W.2d 613 (1988) (judge's surgery and holidays).

When the defendant is scheduled for trial within the time for speedy trial and the trial is postponed because of the defendant, that is "good cause" to exclude the time attributable to the delay. Lewis v. State, 307 Ark. 260, 819 S.W.2d 689 (1991).

A 126-day delay was properly charged to the defendant where the appointment of new counsel was required as a result of the defendant's inability to work with his (second) counsel and because the state's case involved a "massive" amount of documents. Blackwell v. State, 338 Ark. 671, 1 S.W.3d 399 (1999).

Trial court did not err in excluding any of the four periods from the speedy-trial time calculation because defendant was tried within the 12 months as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1(b); defendant requested the continuances and did not object to the orders or their exclusion from the speedy trial calculation, and excluded periods without a written order or docket entry have been upheld where the record demonstrated that the delays were attributable to defendant or legally justified for "good cause" under subsection (h) of this rule. Autrey v. State, 90 Ark. App. 131, 204 S.W.3d 84 (2005).

—Not Shown.

The commencement of someone else's capital murder trial on defendant's scheduled trial date, does not, standing alone, constitute an exceptional circumstance justifying exclusion of time for docket congestion; likewise, in the absence of any explanation other than that the court preferred to try another case, the time period in question cannot be excluded for "good cause" pursuant to this rule. Tanner v. State, 324 Ark. 37, 918 S.W.2d 166 (1996).

Grounds Insufficient.

Where there was no finding that giving precedence to criminal cases was a practice followed by the civil divisions of county circuit court — a legal responsibility of these divisions, as well as the criminal division — and where there was no finding the congestion was greater than before, or that relief was sought by asking for additional judges, the trial court's findings, entered only after a motion to dismiss was filed, did not constitute sufficient grounds to exclude any term of court, in considering whether speedy trial rule had been violated. Harkness v. Harrison, 266 Ark. 59, 585 S.W.2d 10 (1979).

Incapacity of Judge.

Illness or incapacity of a judge does not justify a delay in bringing an accused to trial. Novak v. State, 294 Ark. 120, 741 S.W.2d 243 (1987).

The court would reject the contention that a death in the family of the trial judge constituted good cause for a 113-day delay. Eubanks v. Humphrey, 334 Ark. 21, 972 S.W.2d 234 (1998).

Ineffective Assistance of Counsel.

Where the defendant made a motion for an omnibus hearing pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 20 and then waived that motion 55 days later, no trial date was set until almost a year after the defendant waived the hearing, and the defendant was tried more than 18 months after being charged, the delay beyond the speedy trial period was not the result of defendant's conduct. Therefore, the failure of defendant's counsel to make a dismissal motion pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 on the ground that the trial was held after the speedy trial period had expired was ineffective assistance of counsel, and defendant's conviction was reversed. Walker v. State, 288 Ark. 52, 701 S.W.2d 372 (1986).

Intent.

This rule contemplates that a trial judge will regularly call the docket, and if a case is to be continued beyond the time permitted by law, then the reasons will be stated. Harkness v. Harrison, 266 Ark. 59, 585 S.W.2d 10 (1979).

Subsection (b) of this rule was not intended to and should not permit the state to deny a speedy trial on the basis of crowded docket conditions absent an "exceptional circumstance." Garrison v. State, 270 Ark. 426, 605 S.W.2d 467 (Ct. App. 1980).

Mental Evaluation.

The excluded period related to a mental evaluation of the defendant began on the day the trial judge ruled from the bench that she was to undergo mental evaluation, rather than the later date on which the order for her mental evaluation was entered. Dillehay v. State, 74 Ark. App. 100, 46 S.W.3d 545 (2001).

Defendant was not denied his right to a speedy trial where the total days excluded between hearings on pretrial motions and continuances was 217 days, or four days short of the amount needed to bring the days to trial down to 12 months and the time consumed in obtaining a mental evaluation, which was also an excludable period, consumed more days than were required to bring defendant's trial within 12 months. Turner v. State, 349 Ark. 715, 80 S.W.3d 382 (2002).

Defendant's speedy-trial right was not violated and the trial court did not err when it denied his motion to dismiss because the trial was postponed due to the need for the appointment of new counsel, which was excludable for good cause pursuant to subsection (h) of this rule, and due to defendant's pretrial motions, including his motions for a polygraph examination, to admit certain evidence under the Rape Shield law, to compel discovery, and for a mental evaluation, which was excludable under subsection (a) of this rule. Parker v. State, 93 Ark. App. 472, 220 S.W.3d 238 (2005).

Because defendant's trial did not occur until 639 days after defendant was arrested, defendant made a prima facie case that his right to a speedy trial was violated, but because only 146 days were chargeable to the state, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of speedy trial; the date on the mental health evaluation report controlled as the date that the tolling period for the mental health evaluation ended. Block v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 603, 377 S.W.3d 476 (2010).

Defendant was not denied the right to a speedy trial because the trial occurred within the 12-month period allowed; defendant was ordered to undergo mental health examinations to determine his criminal responsibility and his fitness to proceed, and the period of 120 days from the date the exams were ordered until the date the reports were filed was excludable from the 12-month speedy trial period. Galvin v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 121, 618 S.W.3d 475 (2021).

Motion to Transfer.

Speedy trial rule was violated where the time from the defendant's arrest until his trial was 527 days; the period of time from when defendant first moved to transfer to a different municipal court until the date his trial was set in that court was not excludable. Bennett v. State, 54 Ark. App. 154, 925 S.W.2d 432 (1996).

Nolle Prosequi.

Where, just before defendant mother was to be tried for murder, it was learned for the first time that her daughter would testify it was she, not the defendant, who killed father, the state had good cause to nolle prosequi the charge; consequently, when it was determined there was insufficient evidence to find daughter a juvenile delinquent and, almost immediately, the state refiled the murder charge against the mother, the period of delay occasioned by the nolle prosequi was properly excluded under subsection (f) of this rule for purposes of meeting the speedy trial requirements of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.2. Carter v. State, 280 Ark. 34, 655 S.W.2d 379 (1983).

The court rejected the contention that a nolle prosequi was not granted for good cause and that the delay caused by the nolle prosequi should not be excluded because the defendant did not make a contemporaneous objection to the trial court's finding that the nolle prosequi was granted for good cause. Ferguson v. State, 343 Ark. 159, 33 S.W.3d 115 (2000).

As the state had good cause to seek the nolle prosequi of a felony controlled substance charge pursuant to a plea negotiation, as there was no indication that the state was merely trying to evade the speedy-trial requirement, and as the time period during which the felony charge was not-prossed was permissibly excluded under this rule, denial of defendant's motion to dismiss the refiled felony controlled substance charge on speedy-trial grounds was proper. State v. Crawford, 373 Ark. 95, 281 S.W.3d 736 (2008).

Defendant was entitled to a writ of certiorari because her speedy trial right was not tolled until the charges were either dismissed or nolle prossed and the nolle prosequi did not become effective until the written order was entered. Although the circuit court orally granted the State's motion to nolle prosequi and indicated that the motion was granted on the record of appearance for October 21, 2013, the record of appearance was not stamped or marked "filed" by the clerk and thus there was no document, filed of record, dismissing the charges by nolle prosequi until the written order was filed on March 17, 2014. Zimmerman v. Circuit Court of Miller Cty., 2018 Ark. 264, 555 S.W.3d 406 (2018).

Where the State had nolle prossed the failure-to-appear charge and then refiled the charge about 11 months later, the circuit court properly granted the State's motion to exclude time for speedy trial purposes because defendant failed to object and raise the issue of whether the State had good cause to nolle prosequi at the time the State moved to nolle prosequi. Hall v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 135, 594 S.W.3d 175 (2020).

Objection Required.

A contemporaneous objection to the excluded period is necessary to preserve the argument in a subsequent speedy-trial motion. Smith v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 253, 624 S.W.3d 718 (2021).

Orders and Docket Entries.

When a case is delayed by the accused and that delaying act is memorialized by a record taken at the time it occurred, that record may be sufficient to satisfy the requirements of former subsection (i) of this rule. Key v. State, 300 Ark. 66, 776 S.W.2d 820 (1989); Clements v. State, 312 Ark. 528, 851 S.W.2d 422 (1993); Wallace v. State, 314 Ark. 247, 862 S.W.2d 235 (1993).

The record of the trial judge's finding that a continuance should be granted, which was agreed to by defendant, is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of former subsection (i) of this rule. Key v. State, 300 Ark. 66, 776 S.W.2d 820 (1989).

Failure to raise the issue that no written order was entered setting out the excluded period as required by former subsection (i) of this rule precluded its consideration on appeal. Johnson v. State, 27 Ark. App. 217, 769 S.W.2d 37 (1989).

A trial court should enter written orders, or make docket notations at the time continuances are granted to detail reasons for the continuances and to specify to a day certain the time covered by such excluded periods, but, a trial court's failure to comply with former subsection (i) of this rule does not result in automatic reversal. McConaughy v. State, 301 Ark. 446, 784 S.W.2d 768 (1990); Henson v. State, 38 Ark. App. 155, 832 S.W.2d 269 (1992).

A written order or docket entry is obligatory under the plain wording of this rule. Hudson v. State, 303 Ark. 637, 799 S.W.2d 529 (1990).

Where records show the accused made 1 petition for commitment and 2 motions for psychiatric evaluation, all three of which resulted in commitment orders and consequent psychiatric evaluations, the record was sufficient to satisfy the requirements of former subsection (i) of this rule. Hubbard v. State, 306 Ark. 153, 812 S.W.2d 107 (1991).

Where "pocket docket" entry, excluding period of time from calculation of speedy trial, was made several months after the delay occurred, 2 months after the 12-month period had elapsed, and 6 weeks after defendant filed his motion to dismiss, it was untimely and ineffectual. Reed v. State, 35 Ark. App. 161, 814 S.W.2d 560 (1991), superseded by statute as stated in May v. State, 94 Ark. App. 202, 228 S.W.3d 517 (2006).

When a case is delayed by the accused, and that delaying act is memorialized by a record taken at the time it occurred, that record may be sufficient to satisfy the requirements of former subsection (i) of this rule. Henson v. State, 38 Ark. App. 155, 832 S.W.2d 269 (1992).

Failure to make written entries, required by former subsection (i) of this rule, is not, in itself, reversible error. Foster v. State, 38 Ark. App. 245, 832 S.W.2d 293 (1992); Wallace v. State, 314 Ark. 247, 862 S.W.2d 235 (1993).

Where docket entry spoke to defendant's motion to sever, the notation of new trial date was made contemporaneously to the granting of the motion, and it specified the date upon which the trial was rescheduled, there was compliance with former subsection (i) of this rule. Cash v. State, 40 Ark. App. 40, 842 S.W.2d 440 (1992).

For the trial court to wait some twenty days after defendant appeared for trial court before making any docket entry whatsoever does not satisfy the requirements of this rule. Turbyfill v. State, 312 Ark. 1, 846 S.W.2d 646 (1993).

Excludable periods without a written order or docket entry are upheld when the record itself demonstrates the delays were attributable to the accused and where the reasons were memorialized in the proceedings at the time of occurrence. Lynch v. State, 315 Ark. 47, 863 S.W.2d 834 (1993).

A trial court's failure to comply with former subsection (i) of this rule does not result in automatic reversal; the record may be sufficient to satisfy the subsection's requirements. Goston v. State, 326 Ark. 106, 930 S.W.2d 332 (1996).

A 20-day time period was not excludable where the order memorializing the continuance was never filed, there was no docket notation at the time the continuance was granted, and there was no record memorializing the continuance. Bowen v. State, 73 Ark. App. 240, 42 S.W.3d 579 (2001).

Requirement of a written order or docket entry was satisfied when there was such an order or docket entry as well as when the record itself demonstrated the delays were attributable to the accused and where the reasons were memorialized in the proceedings at the time of the occurrence. Jones v. State, 347 Ark. 455, 65 S.W.3d 402, cert. denied, 536 U.S. 909, 122 S. Ct. 2366, 153 L. Ed. 2d 187 (2002).

Preservation for Review.

Defendant's speedy-trial issue was not preserved for appellate review because he filed a general speedy-trial motion that asserted only that 781 total days had elapsed since he was arrested, he did not contemporaneously object to any of the excluded periods announced by the court, and thus he did not inform the court of the reason for his disagreement with its proposed action prior to or at the time it ruled on the matter. Killian v. State, 96 Ark. App. 92, 238 S.W.3d 629 (2006).

Defendant was brought to trial within a time acceptable because defendant failed to make timely objections to scheduling orders indicating that he agreed to continuances and tolling speedy trial; without contemporaneous, or at a minimum, first-opportunity, objections to those orders, defendant's arguments were not preserved. Smith v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 253, 624 S.W.3d 718 (2021).

Proceedings Concerning Defendant.

Delay resulting from an examination on the competence of the defendant is excluded in computing the twelve-month period; therefore, the defendant was not denied a speedy trial where he was tried within 12 months of his arrest, where the time for conducting a mental examination requested by him was excluded. Scott v. State, 286 Ark. 339, 691 S.W.2d 859 (1985).

Delay period due to trial on another charge was excludable. Allen v. State, 294 Ark. 209, 742 S.W.2d 886 (1988).

Where it was defendant's failure to keep appointments that caused the examination to be delayed, the court properly excluded pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule the period from the date of the letter from defendant's counsel requesting mental examination, to the date the court received the examination report. Johnson v. State, 27 Ark. App. 217, 769 S.W.2d 37 (1989).

The period of delay resulting from an examination and hearing on the competency of the defendant as provided under § 5-2-305 and the period during which he is incompetent to stand trial is excludable. McConaughy v. State, 301 Ark. 446, 784 S.W.2d 768 (1990).

The time necessary to complete a mental examination requested by a defendant, including the time between the order and the evaluation, is excluded from the twelve-month period in the speedy trial rule. Hufford v. State, 314 Ark. 181, 861 S.W.2d 108 (1993).

Defendant's trial for four state crimes allegedly committed while he was on furlough from a forty-year sentence in the Arkansas Department of Corrections did not violate the speedy trial rule, because the delay caused by defendant's arrest and trial on federal charges was excludable. Patterson v. State, 318 Ark. 358, 885 S.W.2d 667 (1994).

No violation of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 shown where there were any number of excludable periods including defendant's delay in hiring counsel, his filing of a motion to suppress evidence, and his waiver and then withdrawal of his right to a jury trial. Cupples v. State, 326 Ark. 31, 929 S.W.2d 150 (1996).

Purpose.

One purpose of the speedy trial rule is to protect the accused, but that rule is also to protect the victim of the crime and, perhaps above all, to serve the interests of the public. Weaver v. State, 313 Ark. 55, 852 S.W.2d 130 (1993).

The concept of the prompt and speedy trial is based upon sound public policy; the only meaningful way to ensure that the public policy is effectuated is to discharge an accused who is not promptly tried, which is the purpose of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1(c). Weaver v. State, 313 Ark. 55, 852 S.W.2d 130 (1993).

Recusal of Judge.

Where circuit judge recused from the case and requested the Judicial Department to appoint a new trial judge, the delay during the time that the first judge recused and another judge was appointed was necessary and reasonable under the circumstances. Clements v. State, 312 Ark. 528, 851 S.W.2d 422 (1993).

Refiling Charges.

Where state filed nolle prosequi order and later refiled charges of first-degree battery, the period between the order and the refileing could not be excluded under subsection (f) of this rule since the action by the state of entering a nolle prosequi or dismissing with leave to refile does not toll the running of the speedy trial provisions under subsection (f) of this rule absent a showing of good cause for the period of delay; the state is not relieved of a speedy trial limitation placed upon it merely because the defendant is permitted absolute release pending disposition of the charges. State v. Washington, 273 Ark. 82, 617 S.W.2d 3 (1981) (decision prior to 1980 amendment of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1).

Where the state first charged defendant with DWI, fourth offense, in circuit court, and later refiled the charge in municipal court as DWI, third offense, time in between first filing and refileing was not a delay for good cause. Lukehart v. State, 32 Ark. App. 152, 798 S.W.2d 117 (1990).

Requests for Continuances.

Petitions by court appointed counsel to be relieved on the sole ground of conflict of interest in that the attorney had counseled with another individual whose interest conflicted with that of defendant could not be considered as requests for continuances within the meaning of this rule. Archer v. State, 271 Ark. 365, 609 S.W.2d 91 (Ct. App. 1980).

On the defendant's motion to dismiss for violation of his right to a speedy trial, a 71-day-period was excludable as a period of delay resulting from a continuance granted at the request of the defendant or his counsel where the delay occurred after defense counsel announced his intent to file a writ of prohibition seeking to prohibit trial. Cheatham v. State, 63 Ark. App. 106, 974 S.W.2d 490 (1998).

Right to Speedy Trial.

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was violated where defendant was first tried on a murder charge and then on a charge of possession with intent to distribute which occurred 83 days after the 12-month period required. Raglin v. State, 35 Ark. App. 181, 816 S.W.2d 618 (1991).

Defendant was not required to object to the delay of his second trial, caused by holding the murder trial first and, thereby, did not lose his right to contend that the delay violated his right to a speedy trial. Raglin v. State, 35 Ark. App. 181, 816 S.W.2d 618 (1991).

When delays under this rule were excluded from the time for speedy trial, the speedy trial period was met. Smith v. State, 313 Ark. 93, 852 S.W.2d 109 (1993).

There was no violation of the right to a speedy trial where defendant established a prima facie case because 483 days had elapsed since his arrest, but the state was able to show excludable periods of delay attributable to hearings on pretrial motions under subsection

(a) of this section. Gwin v. State, 340 Ark. 302, 9 S.W.3d 501 (2000).

Trial Held Timely.

Although defendant was tried on a date eighty-two days beyond the twelve-month constraint of ARCrp 28.1, his constitutional right to a speedy trial was not violated where there were 127 days of “excludable time” under this rule. Jones v. State, 329 Ark. 603, 951 S.W.2d 308 (1997).

Defendant’s trial commenced within the required 12 months since the periods during which defendant obtained continuances and a mental exam did not count towards calculation of the 12-month period. Birmingham v. State, 346 Ark. 78, 57 S.W.3d 118 (2001).

In a sexual abuse case, the court did not err by denying defendant’s motion to dismiss on speedy trial grounds where the trial court stated on the record that it was continuing the rape-shield hearing until March 25, and all attorneys agreed to that date; further, the court entered its February 14, 2002, order stating that a hearing on the rape shield motions and all other motions filed herein would be heard on March 25, 2002, at 11:00 a.m., and the matter was set for trial on May 22, 2002, and that memorialization of the delay and the reasons therefore satisfied the requirements of this rule. Standridge v. State, 357 Ark. 105, 161 S.W.3d 815 (2004).

Defendant was not deprived of his right to a speedy trial where he was arrested for the rape of his step-daughter on April 8, 2004, and tried on September 29, 2004, because the fact that defendant had been arrested in September 2003 for the charge of rape of his step-daughter in a different county had no bearing on the speedy trial calculations in this case as the time began to run with the arrest in this case; thus, the court did not need to even look to excludable time periods. Anderson v. State, 93 Ark. App. 454, 220 S.W.3d 225 (2005).

Defendant was afforded a speedy trial, and the trial court properly denied his motion to dismiss because although he made a prima facie case of a speedy-trial violation, the state identified an additional time period charged against him that put his trial within the required twelve-month period contained in Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1; the delay was properly charged against defendant, he made no objection, and that excludable period put his trial within twelve months of his arrest as calculated under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28. Barber v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 210, 374 S.W.3d 709 (2010).

Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a motion to dismiss based on speedy trial violations; four periods of time, when excluded from the 442-day period between arrest and trial, left 287 days, which was well within the one-year period for a speedy trial. Rueda v. State, 2012 Ark. 144, 400 S.W.3d 226 (2012).

Defendant’s right to a speedy trial was not violated because periods of time were excludable due to defendant’s injuries from a car accident, defendant’s conduct in failing to appear for trial, and defendant’s extradition to Texas to serve a sentence there on other charges. Sullivan v. State, 2012 Ark. 74, 386 S.W.3d 507 (2012).

There was no speedy trial violation in a rape case because defendant was tried within approximately 269 days after certain periods of time were excluded; although defendant was represented by different counsel when a ruling was originally made on the speedy trial issue, trial counsel failed to object and hold the State to its proof when the matter was raised again at a hearing on September 19, 2014. Tatum v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 80 (2016).

Circuit court properly denied defendant’s motion to dismiss based on an alleged speedy-trial violation where the time periods between the date of his mistrial and his motion for continuance and between the order granting the continuance and the trial date were tolled, and when that time period was excluded, the trial was timely under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.2 and 28.3. Hinton v. State, 2017 Ark. 207, 515 S.W.3d 121 (2017).

Pursuant to subsections (a) and (e) of this rule, the time that defendant was in federal custody on unrelated charges was excludable from the time period for calculating a speedy trial because his presence could not be obtained. Estell v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 17 (2017).

Defendant’s right to a speedy trial was not violated, although he was tried 457 days after his arrest. The circuit court did not err in rejecting defendant’s argument that the jury could have been called the next day after the discovery of the notification-system error, which resulted in not enough jurors being present to hold the trial; and the circuit court’s decision to set the trial for the next available court date one month later did not constitute undue delay as logistical issues, including scheduling the two necessary court interpreters for a jury trial, notifying jurors, and subpoenaing witnesses, could not be accomplished in a just few days. Vasquez v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 241, 548 S.W.3d 828 (2018).

Trial court did not err by refusing to dismiss the charges against defendant on speedy-trial grounds because defendant failed to object to the propriety of excluding 42 days and waived any complaint, and excluding that period, defendant was tried 334 days after his arrest, which was less than the 12-month period. Pitts v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 107, 571 S.W.3d 64 (2019).

Trial Not Held Timely.

recusal of the prosecuting attorney, who had been counsel to the defendant's codefendant, and the filing of the appeal under consideration could not be excluded because the trial court did not immediately appoint a substitute state's attorney and because it was not the defendant's fault that the prosecutor hired the codefendant's counsel or that the defendant had not been granted a severance; accordingly, good cause for exclusion did not exist under subsection (h) of this rule and the defendant was entitled to dismissal of the charges pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 30.1. Norton v. State, 273 Ark. 289, 618 S.W.2d 164 (1981), overruled, Richards v. State, 338 Ark. 801, 2 S.W.3d 766 (1999) (decision prior to 1980 amendment).

Where the record did not contain any written order or docket entry setting forth the excluded periods or the number of days in each period, and there was neither an order continuing the case nor an order setting forth the "exceptional circumstances" necessitating the delay, the trial judge failed to comply with subdivisions (b), (c), and former (i) of this rule, and the defendant's conviction was reversed and dismissed. Shaw v. State, 18 Ark. App. 243, 712 S.W.2d 338 (1986).

Appellant's right to a speedy trial was violated when his trial commenced on the 600th day following his arrest where only 168 days of delay were excludable as attributed to appellant and the state failed to show cause for the additional 70 days of delay. Zangerl v. State, 352 Ark. 278, 100 S.W.3d 695 (2003).

Although defendant's retrial commenced 491 days after a mistrial, subtracting a 168-day continuance under subsection (c) of this rule from 491 days meant that defendant's trial commenced on day 323; because defendant was brought to trial within one year from the date of the mistrial, there was no violation of defendant's right to a speedy trial. Eubanks v. State, 2012 Ark. 142 (2012).

Unavailability of Material Evidence.

A 116-day continuance was properly excluded under subdivision (d)(1) of this rule where the state sought a continuance in order to obtain DNA testing as (1) the evidence sought was material to the state's case, (2) the state exercised due diligence to obtain the evidence, and (3) there were reasonable grounds to believe that the evidence would be available at a later date. Chenoweth v. State, 341 Ark. 722, 19 S.W.3d 612 (2000).

Where defendant's trial began 109 days after the 12 month period for speedy trial had run, but the delay was due in part to a continuance on defendant's motion and in larger part because the state was granted a continuance under subdivision (d)(1) of this rule while awaiting scientific lab results that were material to the case, defendant was not denied his right to a speedy trial. Miles v. State, 348 Ark. 544, 75 S.W.3d 677 (2002).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss the murder charges for lack of a speedy trial because, despite the passing of 789 days, the only time at issue related to that requested by the State to perform a test on the alleged murder weapon, and the State made its request only after being made aware that the crime lab would attempt further testing if the gun could be made operable. Barefield v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 151 (2021).

Witness Unavailable.

Where the trial court found that certain state witnesses were unavailable for the third term of court because of previous court commitments, the third term was properly excluded under this rule, in calculating the three terms within which the case must be tried; thus, the court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to try the case within three terms under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1. Roleson v. State, 272 Ark. 346, 614 S.W.2d 656 (1981) (decision prior to 1980 amendment of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1).

A witness is not unavailable unless the prosecutorial authorities have made a good faith effort to obtain his presence at trial. Meine v. State, 309 Ark. 124, 827 S.W.2d 151 (1992).

Continuance granted due to the unavailability of a state's witness was excludable pursuant to subdivision (d)(1) of this rule. Henson v. State, 38 Ark. App. 155, 832 S.W.2d 269 (1992).

The State exercised due diligence in obtaining a material witness for trial; the fact that when the continuance to obtain the witness was granted, the case was not reset for trial, did not render the time unexcludable under subdivision (d)(1) of this rule. Strickland v. State, 331 Ark. 402, 962 S.W.2d 769 (1998).

In determining the defendant's motion to dismiss on speedy trial grounds, the court properly excluded a 42-day-delay caused by the defendant's request for a continuance based on the unavailability of a witness. Morgan v. State, 333 Ark. 294, 971 S.W.2d 219 (1998).

On the defendant's motion to dismiss for violation of his right to a speedy trial, a 7-day-period was excludable where the state requested a continuance due to the unavailability of an expert witness and the defendant did not oppose the continuance. Cheatham v. State, 63 Ark. App. 106, 974 S.W.2d 490 (1998).

Writ of Prohibition.

A statement by defense counsel that he would seek a writ of prohibition after the trial court denied a motion to dismiss for lack of speedy trial resulted in the exclusion of the period of time from the making of that statement until further actions in the case made it obvious that he did not file such a writ. Ferguson v. State, 343 Ark. 159, 33 S.W.3d 115 (2000).

RULE 29.SPECIAL PROCEDURES: PERSON SERVING TERM OF IMPRISONMENT*Rule

Rule 29.1. Prosecutor's obligations.

Rule 29.1. Prosecutor's obligations.

(a) If the prosecuting attorney has information that a person charged with a crime is imprisoned in a penal institution in the State of Arkansas, he shall promptly seek to obtain the presence of the prisoner for trial.

(b) If the prosecuting attorney has information that a person charged with a crime is imprisoned in a penal institution of a jurisdiction other than the State of Arkansas, he shall promptly cause a detainer to be filed with the official having custody of the prisoner and request such officer to advise the prisoner of the filing of the detainer and of the prisoner's right to demand trial.

(c) Upon receipt from a prisoner of a demand for trial upon a pending charge, the prosecuting attorney shall promptly seek to obtain the presence of the prisoner for trial.

Publisher's Notes.

This rule was set out in the per curiam order of the Supreme Court of Arkansas issued on June 30, 1980, but no change was made in the rule.

CASE NOTESDemand for Trial.

Subsection (b) of this rule places the duty upon the prosecutor to promptly file a detainer upon learning that an accused is imprisoned elsewhere; the prisoner then has the right to demand trial and such trial must be had within 180 days unless there is good cause for a delay. Dukes v. State, 271 Ark. 674, 609 S.W.2d 924 (1981).

Duty of Prisoner.

There is a positive duty upon a prisoner to seek a trial after he is notified that charges are pending; an accused in prison in another state, for a different crime, must affirmatively request trial in order to activate the speedy trial rule or statute. Dukes v. State, 271 Ark. 674, 609 S.W.2d 924 (1981).

Equal Protection.

Defendant in capital felony murder case was not denied equal protection of the law on ground that the speedy trial provisions of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 — 30.2, distinguish between persons serving a term of imprisonment on another conviction while awaiting trial on the principal charge (must be brought to trial within 18 months), and persons incarcerated as a result of the principal charge to be tried (must be brought to trial within 18 months, but entitled to release from incarceration after nine months), since neither is entitled to absolute discharge until after 18 months under Ark. R. Crim. P. 30; furthermore, defendant failed to show any prejudice resulting from his incarceration prior to trial. Hayes v. State, 278 Ark. 211, 645 S.W.2d 662, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 198, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983).

Promptly Seek Presence.

Where defendant was tried within period required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 and 28.2, defendant could not, in the absence of proof of prejudice or testimony in support of his motion to dismiss, show that state failed to "promptly" seek his presence at trial as required by this rule. Miller v. Lofton, 272 Ark. 164, 612 S.W.2d 732 (1981) (decision prior to 1980 amendment of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1).

Court rejected commercial burglary defendant's arguments that his speedy-trial period began to run on either the date police were informed that DNA from the crime scene matched his, or on the date arrest warrants were issued; the seven-month delay between the issuance of the warrants and his arrest did not violate Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.2. Robinson v. State, 2013 Ark. 60 (2013).

Service of Process.

The defendant's time limit in Interstate Agreement on Detainers (see § 16-95-101) was never triggered where the State never filed a detainer and the defendant was never served with a detainer while incarcerated in another state. Durbin v. State, 59 Ark. App. 207, 955 S.W.2d 912 (1997).

RULE 30.

CONSEQUENCES OF DENIAL OF SPEEDY TRIAL

Rule

Rule 30.1. Absolute discharge.

Rule 30.2. Waiver.

Rule 30.1. Absolute discharge.

(a) Subject to the provisions of subsection (b) hereof, a defendant not brought to trial before the running of the time for trial, as extended by excluded periods, shall be absolutely discharged. This discharge shall constitute an absolute bar to prosecution for the offense charged and for any other offense required to be joined with that offense.

(b) An incarcerated defendant not brought to trial before the running of the time for trial as provided by Rules 28.1 — 28.3 shall not be entitled to absolute discharge pursuant to subsection (a) hereof but shall be recognized or released on order to appear.

(c) The time for trial of a defendant released pursuant to subsection (b) hereof shall be computed pursuant to Rules 28.1(b) and 28.2.

CASE NOTES

Amended Information.

Where charges of possession of certain drugs with intent to deliver, which were added by an amended information, arose out of the same criminal episode for which the defendants were arrested, and where allowable period had expired since the date defendants were released on bond, the state was barred from prosecuting the defendants on any of the charges. Callender v. State, 263 Ark. 217, 563 S.W.2d 467 (1978).

Burden of Proof.

The burden is upon the State to show good cause for an untimely delay in the trial. Chandler v. State, 284 Ark. 560, 683 S.W.2d 928 (1985).

Construction.

A municipal court speedy trial violation motion to dismiss pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule may be raised in the de novo circuit court proceeding even though Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 only refers to trial in a circuit court. Whittle v. Washington County Circuit Court, 325 Ark. 136, 925 S.W.2d 383 (1996).

Continuance.

Defendant was timely brought to trial because the case was passed from November 17, 2005, through January 5, 2006 at the request of the defendant, it was again passed at defendant's request from March 2, 2006, through May 4, 2006, and defendant failed to appear on May 4, 2006, and next appeared 28 days later on June 1, 2006. Layton v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 96, 302 S.W.3d 610 (2009).

Discharge Proper.

Where the record revealed no reason for delay in defendant's trial, he was discharged for violation of his speedy trial right. Alexander v. State, 268 Ark. 384, 598 S.W.2d 395 (1980).

Where defendant was jailed more than allowable period because trial was cancelled so that lead investigative officer could attend law enforcement conference, defendant was entitled to absolute discharge from the charges under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1, and this rule. Cash v. State, 271 Ark. 881, 611 S.W.2d 510 (1981).

Where defendants were unavailable because the sheriff failed to follow through in the serving of the proper notice or warrants, dismissal of the charges under this rule was proper. State v. Washington, 273 Ark. 82, 617 S.W.2d 3 (1981).

In a prosecution for murder, a three-year delay in bringing the defendant to trial caused by the failure of the municipal court to forward a copy of defendant's bond to the circuit court necessitated the defendant's absolute discharge. The failure of the State to check the available court records or otherwise demonstrate any diligence in locating the accused over a two and one half year period could not be excused. Chandler v. State, 284 Ark. 560, 683 S.W.2d 928 (1985).

Speedy trial motion should have been granted. Horn v. State, 294 Ark. 464, 743 S.W.2d 814 (1988).

Appellant's right to a speedy trial was violated when his trial commenced on the 600th day following his arrest where only 168 days of delay were excludable as attributed to appellant and the state failed to show cause for the additional 70 days of delay. Zangerl v. State, 352 Ark. 278, 100 S.W.3d 695 (2003).

Dismissal of Charges.

Where the state failed to show that there was good cause for the delay in bringing the accused to trial on manslaughter charges, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it granted the defendant's motion to dismiss the charges. State v. Lewis, 268 Ark. 359, 596 S.W.2d 697 (1980).

The state did not carry its burden of showing that certain time periods should be excluded under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, since the period between the recusal of the prosecuting attorney, who had been counsel to the defendant's codefendant, and the filing of the appeal under consideration could not be excluded because the trial court did not immediately appoint a substitute state's attorney and because it was not the defendant's fault that the prosecutor hired the codefendant's counsel or that the defendant had not been granted a severance; accordingly, good cause for exclusion did not exist under subsection (h) of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, and the defendant was entitled to dismissal of the charges pursuant to this rule. Norton v. State, 273 Ark. 289, 618 S.W.2d 164 (1981), overruled, Richards v. State, 338 Ark. 801, 2 S.W.3d 766 (1999).

Defendant successfully showed, and the state conceded, that defendant's prosecution was 113 days over the 12-month limit for speedy trial purposes; therefore, defendant's motion to dismiss should have been granted. Berry v. Henry, 364 Ark. 26, 216 S.W.3d 93 (2005).

Equal Protection.

Defendant in capital felony murder case was not denied equal protection of the law on ground that the speedy trial provisions of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 — 30.2, distinguish between persons serving a term of imprisonment on another conviction while awaiting trial on the principal charge (must be brought to trial within 18 months), and persons incarcerated as a result of the principal charge to be tried (must be brought to trial within 18 months, but entitled to release from incarceration after nine months), since neither is entitled to absolute discharge until after 18 months under this rule; furthermore, defendant failed to show any prejudice resulting from his incarceration prior to trial. Hayes v. State, 278 Ark. 211, 645 S.W.2d 662, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 198, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983).

Factual Findings Not Made.

Remand was necessary on the inmate's claim that counsel was ineffective for failing to move for dismissal for lack of a speedy trial, as the circuit court's order did not include factual findings regarding periods excludable for speedy trial, but merely determined that most continuances were at defendant's request. Turner v. State, 2016 Ark. 96, 486 S.W.3d 757 (2016).

Incarcerated Defendant.

An incarcerated defendant not brought to trial before the running of time is not entitled to absolute discharge; instead he is entitled to be recognized and released on order to appear, and the time for his trial is then computed pursuant to Rules 28.1(b) and 28.2. Matthews v. State, 268 Ark. 484, 598 S.W.2d 58 (1980).

Where defendant was not tried within nine months after his arrest and incarceration, that delay did not entitle him to an absolute discharge; at most, he was entitled to be released and then to be tried within the time allowed by Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1(b). Bell v. State, 270 Ark. 1, 603 S.W.2d 397 (1980).

Where defendant was arrested in July, 1978, on burglary charges and separately charged with several other unrelated offenses, was tried and convicted on the unrelated charges in February, 1979, and sentenced to seven years and 30 days, and the date of trial for burglary was then set for November, 1979, he was not entitled to discharge for not being tried within nine months of the first trial, but was at most entitled to release from custody; however, even release was not possible since he was confined in the department of corrections under an earlier conviction. Miller v. Lofton, 272 Ark. 164, 612 S.W.2d 732 (1981).

Jurisdiction.

Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 is jurisdictional inasmuch as it requires a defendant to be brought to trial within twelve months or it be absolutely discharged pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule. Turbyfill v. State, 312 Ark. 1, 846 S.W.2d 646 (1993); Rhodes v. Capeheart, 313 Ark. 16, 852 S.W.2d 118 (1993).

Presumption of Timeliness.

There may be a denial of one's constitutional right to a speedy trial after a period of delay shorter than those permitted under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28 and Ark. R. Crim. P. 30, but a strong showing of prejudice would be necessary to overcome the presumption that a time within the prescribed limits of these rules meets constitutional requirements. Matthews v. State, 268 Ark. 484, 598 S.W.2d 58 (1980).

Release on Recognizance.

Where defendant was held in jail for more than nine months on rape, attempted rape and burglary charges before being tried, he was not entitled to absolute discharge, but rather to release on his personal recognizance under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 and subsection (b) of this rule. Cash v. State, 271 Ark. 881, 611 S.W.2d 510 (1981).

Where the judge found that there had been a period of excusable delay, defendant was not entitled to dismissal; even if there was not excusable delay, defendant would only have been entitled to a release on his own recognizance, not absolute discharge. Cassell v. State, 273 Ark. 59, 616 S.W.2d 485 (1981).

Timely Trial.

Defendant's right to speedy trial was not violated. State v. Messer, 269 Ark. 431, 601 S.W.2d 857 (1980).

Defendant was brought to trial within the allowable time limitation; although defendant may have been entitled to pre-trial release at the end of nine months, as opposed to absolute discharge, such entitlement did not affect his convictions. Wallace v. State, 270 Ark. 17, 603 S.W.2d 399 (1980).

Where state filed nolle prosequi order and later refiled charges of first-degree battery, the period between the order and the refile could not be excluded under subsection (f) of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, in calculating the allowable period under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1, since the action by the state of entering a nolle prosequi or dismissing with leave to refile does not toll the running of the speedy trial provisions under subsection (f) of Rule 28.3 absent a showing of good cause for the period of delay; the state is not relieved of a speedy trial limitation placed upon it merely because the defendant is permitted absolute release pending disposition of the charges. State v. Washington, 273 Ark. 82, 617 S.W.2d 3 (1981).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated because he was brought to trial within 12 months after several excludable time periods were subtracted from a 464-day period; therefore, defendant's motion to dismiss several drug and weapons charges was properly denied. Gondolfi v. Clinger, 352 Ark. 156, 98 S.W.3d 812 (2003).

Trial court properly excluded time to hear motions filed by defendant, to complete a mental examination requested by defendant, to honor continuances requested by defendant, and for the state to obtain a witness who was unavailable to testify from the 12-month period which the state had, pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1, to try defendant, who was charged with capital murder, aggravated robbery, and theft of property. Romes v. State, 356 Ark. 26, 144 S.W.3d 750 (2004).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss because of a speedy-trial violation as 505 days were properly excluded and the state was only required to account for 493 days. Dodson v. State, 358 Ark. 372, 191 S.W.3d 511 (2004).

Defendant's argument that the charge of theft by receiving the second vehicle should have been dismissed as having arisen out of the same criminal episode when the charge of breaking and entering the first vehicle was dismissed for violation of the speedy-trial rule failed because the charges involved different vehicles, different locations and different victims, and the time for speedy trial commenced to run on the date of arrest for the theft by receiving the second vehicle, August 18, 2001, and the trial conducted on that charge in July 2002 was timely for speedy trial purposes. Yancy v. State, 85 Ark. App. 53, 146 S.W.3d 375 (2004).

Defendant was not deprived of his right to a speedy trial where he was arrested on April 8, 2004, and tried on September 29, 2004, for the rape of his step-daughter because the fact that defendant had been arrested in September 2003 for the charge of rape of his step-daughter in a different county had no bearing the speedy trial calculations in this case as the time began to run with the arrest in this case; thus, defendant had no right to be charged as there was no speedy trial violation. Anderson v. State, 93 Ark. App. 454, 220 S.W.3d 225 (2005).

In a stalking and terroristic threats case, denial of defendant's motion to dismiss on speedy-trial grounds was proper because subtracting the nol pros and continuance periods from the overall 426-day period between his arrest and the day his speedy-trial motion was filed left 347 days, well within the one-year period of Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1. Branning v. State, 371 Ark. 433, 267 S.W.3d 599 (2007).

Although defendant's retrial commenced 491 days after a mistrial, subtracting a 168-day continuance from 491 days meant that defendant's trial commenced on day 323; because defendant was brought to trial within one year from the date of the mistrial, there was no violation of defendant's right to a speedy trial and defendant was not entitled to dismissal. Eubanks v. State, 2012 Ark. 142 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to file a motion to dismiss on the ground of a speedy-trial violation because such a motion would have lacked merit as the excluded period of delay exceeded the period of time for which the State would have had to account. Moten v. State, 2013 Ark. 503 (2013).

Waiver of Speedy Trial.

Where no period of authorized delay was proven and more than 12 months lapsed from the date of filing armed robbery charge, the charge would have been discharged, and prosecution absolutely barred, if counsel had moved for dismissal; defendant waived his right to a speedy trial when he later pleaded guilty. Hall v. State, 281 Ark. 282, 663 S.W.2d 926 (1984).

Defendant's speedy trial rights were not violated because the arraignment had to be rescheduled due to defendant's failure to appear and subsequent late arrival. It was clear that the delay was defendant's fault, and therefore the State met its burden of showing that the delay was the result of defendant's conduct or was otherwise justified and that the circuit court was correct in excluding that twelve-day period from its speedy-trial calculations. Yarbrough v. State, 370 Ark. 31, 257 S.W.3d 50 (2007).

Rule 30.2. Waiver.

Failure of a defendant to move for dismissal of the charges under these rules prior to a plea of guilty or trial shall constitute a waiver of his rights under these rules.

CASE NOTES

Effective Assistance of Counsel.

A waiver of the right to a speedy trial does not operate, as a matter of law, as a waiver of the right to effective assistance of counsel; the constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel at the time of entering a plea of guilty is not vitiated by this rule. Hall v. State, 281 Ark. 282, 663 S.W.2d 926 (1984).

Failure to Move for Dismissal.

Where no period of authorized delay was proven and more than 12 months lapsed from the date of filing armed robbery charge, the charge would have been discharged, and prosecution absolutely barred, if counsel had moved for dismissal; defendant waived his right to a speedy trial when he later pleaded guilty. Hall v. State, 281 Ark. 282, 663 S.W.2d 926 (1984).

No Waiver of Rights.

Where the accused made a motion to dismiss for lack of speedy trial on October 3, 1979, the fact that the accused had been granted a continuance in August of 1979 did not affect the timeliness of his dismissal motion, because the accused asserted, and the state did not contest the assertion, that the third term of court after the date the accused was arrested and charged expired May 9, 1979, and the accused did not waive his right to a speedy trial under this rule because he did not plead guilty and his motion was made before he was tried. Garrison v. State, 270 Ark. 426, 605 S.W.2d 467 (Ct. App. 1980).

Where defendant's counsel did not move to dismiss the charges on speedy trial grounds, thereby waiving defendant's right to a timely trial, the failure to so move did not waive his right to effective assistance of counsel and he could raise the claim that failure to move for dismissal constituted ineffective assistance of counsel in a post-conviction relief petition under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1, although he must prove prejudice from the claimed error. Clark v. State, 274 Ark. 81, 621 S.W.2d 857 (1981).

Waiver of Rights.

While defendant's first trial occurred more than 12 months after his arrest, he waived his speedy-trial rights by failing to file a motion to dismiss before the trial and mistrial, and his second trial was held within 12 months of the mistrial. Dodson v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 435, 586 S.W.3d 701 (2019).

ARTICLE IX. TRIAL BY JURY

Rule 31. Right to Trial by Jury

Rule 32. Selection of Jurors

Rule 33. Rule 33. Motions for Directed Verdict and Other Trial Procedures

Rule 34. Juror Orientation

Rule 35. Judicial Comment

RULE 31.

RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY

Rule

Rule 31.1. Waiver of trial by jury: assent by prosecutor.

Rule 31.2. Waiver of trial by jury: personal request.

Rule 31.3. Waiver of trial by jury: waiver by counsel or agent.

Rule 31.4. Waiver of trial by jury: capital felonies.

Rule 31.5. Discretionary withdrawal of waiver.

Commentary to Article IX

The following rules are proposed chiefly to supplement existing statutory authority. Their provisions are not addressed to fundamental constitutional considerations such as when the right to trial by jury accrues. Rather the focus ranges from fundamental threshold questions concerning waiver to problems of less moment such as note-taking by jurors.

Of course the rules respecting trial by jury are to be considered against the background of the mandates of both the Arkansas and Federal Constitutions and interpretive decisions.

Article 2, § 10 of the Arkansas Constitution confers the right to trial by jury upon an accused. Under this provision an accused enjoys the right to a jury trial in all criminal prosecutions in a circuit court. It will be noted that, on its face, this constitutional provision confers a broader right to a jury trial speaking to the states via the Fourteenth Amendment. See, e.g., Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 88 S. Ct. 1444, 20 L. Ed. 2d 491 (1968); Dyke v. Taylor Implement Mfg. Co., 391 U.S. 216, 88 S. Ct. 1472, 20 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1968); Baldwin v. New York, 399 U.S. 66, 90 S. Ct. 1886, 26 L. Ed. 2d 437 (1970); McKeiver v. Pennsylvania, 403 U.S. 528, 91 S. Ct. 1976, 29 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1971).

It seems well established by Duncan, supra, and its progeny that the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment does not impose the requirements of Article 3, § 2 of the Federal Constitution and the Sixth Amendment thereto upon the states in criminal prosecutions for "petty" crimes.

Article 2, § 10 of the Arkansas Constitution, however, does not distinguish between "petty" and "serious" offenses for purposes of requiring a trial by jury in a circuit court. Neither, in fact, does statutory authority conferring the right to a trial by jury in lower courts. See, e.g., Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 44-114, 44-210 (Repl.1964).

Five rules comprise Article IX dealing with trial by jury.

The first, Rule 31, treats waiver of trial by jury in some detail. Rules 31.1 and 31.2 require assent by the prosecuting attorney in conjunction, in most instances, with a request of record made personally by the defendant. In making waiver contingent on prosecutorial assent, the rule reenacts the present statutory requirement of Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-2108 (Repl. 1964). Under narrowly circumscribed conditions, waiver by counsel alone is permitted by Rule 31.3.

Under Rule 31.4 a defendant charged with a capital felony may waive neither a trial by jury on the issue of guilt nor determination of sentence by a jury unless the prosecuting attorney waives the death penalty, the waiver is approved by the court, and the court determines that the defendant's proffered waiver is freely and voluntarily made. See, Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 43-2108 (Repl. 1964); 43-2108.1, 43-2108.2 (Supp. 1973).

Withdrawal of a waiver made voluntarily and knowingly is left to the discretion of the trial court by Rule 31.5. There is no Arkansas statutory authority dealing with the withdrawal of a knowing and voluntary waiver of jury trial. However, the Arkansas Supreme Court did consider this subject in Scates v. State, 244 Ark. 333, 424 S.W.2d 876 (1968), where the following language appears: While the Arkansas Constitution provides in Article 2, Section 7, for the right of trial by jury, it also provides for waiver of this right under the same provision in accordance with Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-2108, supra. After the defendant's right to trial by a jury has been duly waived, as in the case at bar, it is within the discretion of the trial court to permit or deny a withdrawal of such waiver. Id. at 337, 338, 424 S.W.2d at 879.

As a consequence, Rule 31.5 merely codifies in rule form present decisional law.

Rule 32 refines present authority regarding selection of jurors. Rule 32.1 goes further than existing Arkansas law — Ark. Stat. Ann. § 39-207 (Supp. 1973) — which provides that “[t]he master list of jurors’ names and addresses . . . may be examined in the presence of the Circuit Judge by litigants or their attorneys who desire to verify that names drawn from the wheel or box were placed there in the manner provided herein by the Commissioners.” Under the proposed rule, no requirement is imposed that such lists be examined in the presence of the judge or that they be requested only for a specific, statutorily set out purpose. Additionally, if other relevant information is in the court clerk's possession, it can be secured pursuant to the rule's provisions.

Rule 32.2 deals with the purposes of voir dire examination and the manner in which it should be conducted.

Present law found at Ark. Stat. Ann. § 39-226 (Repl. 1962) requires the court only to examine jurors “upon all matters set forth in the statutes as disqualifications.” Rule 32.2 refines this authority by setting out with more precision the matters to be explained and inquired into by the court.

Under present law litigants have a right to examine jurors separately. Griffin v. State, 239 Ark. 431, 389 S.W.2d 900 (1965). Although Rule 32.2 adopts existing law, it also takes a further step by making it clear that the primary responsibility for conducting voir dire examination rests with the court. The thrust of Rule 32.2 is toward avoidance of improper use of voir dire. See, ABA Standards, Trial by Jury (Approved Draft: 1968) at 64. (This volume is hereafter cited Standards, Trial by Jury.)

Rule 33 is one of broad purview and addresses problems involving such matters as restraint of defendants and jury requests for supplementary instructions.

Initially, in Rule 33.1 [now Rule 33.4], the problem of the recalcitrant witness or defendant is dealt with. There is Arkansas law to the effect that restraint is justifiable under certain circumstances as a reasonable precautionary measure to prevent the escape of an accused. See, Rayburn v. State, 200 Ark. 914, 141 S.W.2d 532 (1940); Johnson v. State, 253 Ark. 1, 484 S.W.2d 92 (1972).

The United States Supreme Court has recently approved both restraint of refractory defendants and their removal from the court room. Illinois v. Allen, 397 U.S. 337, 90 S. Ct. 1057, 25 L. Ed. 2d 353 (1970), rehearing denied, 398 U.S. 915, 90 S. Ct. 1684, 26 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1970). Relying on Allen, supra, the Arkansas Supreme Court in Morris v. State, 249 Ark. 1005, 462 S.W.2d 842 (1971), has approved of removing a defendant from the court room during trial.

To minimize the possibility of prejudice to a defendant excluded from the court room or restrained in the presence of the jury, Rule 33.1 [now Rule 33.4] requires that the court (1) enter into the record the reasons for the action taken, and (2) give a cautionary instruction if one is requested by the defendant or his attorney. Lastly, as the comment to the rule indicates, the rule is not designed to restrict the trial judge's discretion as to proper methods of dealing with an unruly defendant or witness.

Rule 33.2 [now Rule 33.5] explicitly authorizes notetaking during trial, a practice already common in many jurisdictions within the state.

Several arguments against note-taking have been raised in the past, but the Commission's thinking harmonizes with that of the ABA Standards Reporters in concluding that the advantages of note-taking outweigh whatever disadvantages might be said to exist. See, Standards, Trial by Jury at 97-100.

Rule 33.3 [now Rule 33.6] is derived from Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1732.1 (Repl. 1962), but is broader in as much as the rule obliges the trial judge to deliver copies of the instructions to the jury at the request of any party or a juror.

Rule 33.4 [now Rule 33.7] governs giving additional instructions to a jury after it has retired to deliberate. The proposed rules treat the subject with much greater specificity than present authority. See, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-2139 (Repl. 1964).

Juror orientation, a subject treated neither by statute nor case law in Arkansas, is the subject of Rule 34. Essentially the rule provides that jurors shall be educated as to the nature of their duties and, to some extent, as to trial procedures and legal terminology, in order that they might perform their obligations better and more efficiently.

The last rule of the Article, Rule 35, has no statutory counterpart. This provision precludes a trial judge from praising or criticizing a verdict in the presence of the jury rendering it. Comments expressing appreciation to jurors for the performance of a public service are permitted.

The Commission feels the restraint imposed by the rule is essential since the same jurors criticized or praised might immediately be assigned to duty respecting other pending cases of the same nature. The rule is, consequently, calculated to prevent judicial comment regarding one case from influencing the disposition of any other case.

Rule 31.1. Waiver of trial by jury: assent by prosecutor.

No defendant in any criminal cause may waive a trial by jury unless the waiver is assented to by the prosecuting attorney and approved by the court.

Comment to Rule 31.1

It is not the purpose of this rule to impose any limitation on a court's discretion to refuse to allow the waiver of trial by jury.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Comment to Rule 31.1

This Rule is mandatory. Even in a capital case the defendant cannot avoid a jury trial by entering a plea of guilty under Rule 24. Fretwell v. State, 289 Ark. 91, 708 S.W.2d 630

(1986). See, also, Rule 31.4 governing guilty pleas to capital felonies.

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

There is no federal rule binding the state courts to use a 12-member jury in state criminal prosecutions and an agreement to proceed with an 11-member jury in accordance with state law and court rules was not a violation of the constitutional right to trial by jury. Vinston v. Lockhart, 850 F.2d 420 (8th Cir. 1988).

Requirement under § 16-89-108(a) and this rule, that a prosecutor approve defendant's request to plead guilty and waive a jury trial, did not violate defendant's due process rights because the sentencing scheme codified at § 16-90-801 — 16-90-804 did not create a liberty interest in protecting from exposure to higher ranges of sentences. Whitlow v. State, 357 Ark. 290, 166 S.W.3d 45 (2004).

Assent by Prosecutor.

The trial court erred in accepting, without the State's assent, the defendant's guilty pleas to four counts of delivering a controlled substance. State v. Vasquez-Aerreola, 327 Ark. 617, 940 S.W.2d 451 (1997).

A trial court may not accept a guilty plea when the prosecuting attorney does not consent to the plea and instead requests a jury trial. State v. Smittie, 341 Ark. 909, 20 S.W.3d 352 (2000).

Because the State did not assent to defendant's guilty plea, the circuit court was without discretion to allow him to plead guilty over the State's objection. Rickman v. State, 2020 Ark. 138, 597 S.W.3d 622 (2020).

Construction.

Under this rule and Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 7, a defendant charged under § 5-65-205 has the right to a jury trial, and to the extent that § 5-65-205(c) [repealed] prevents a defendant from having a jury determination, it is unconstitutional. Medlock v. State, 328 Ark. 229, 942 S.W.2d 861 (1997).

Where the record contained no evidence that defendant was informed by the court of his right to be tried by a jury, or that he executed a knowing, voluntary, and intelligent waiver of that right, he was deprived of his constitutional right to trial by jury; a criminal defendant bears no burden of demanding a trial by jury. Davis v. State, 81 Ark. App. 17, 97 S.W.3d 921 (2003).

Mandatory Nature of Rule.

Criminal cases which require trial by jury must be so tried unless waived by the defendant, assented to by the prosecutor, and approved by the court; the first two requirements are mandatory before the court has any discretion in the matter. Fretwell v. State, 289 Ark. 91, 708 S.W.2d 630 (1986); State v. Vasquez-Aerreola, 327 Ark. 617, 940 S.W.2d 451 (1997).

Notice.

Trial court's standard practice of requiring a defendant to request a jury at least 48 hours before trial was not in accordance with the Arkansas Constitution or the Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure; the notice requirement put a defendant in the position of forfeiting his or her right to a jury trial due to inaction. Swindle v. State, 373 Ark. 519, 285 S.W.3d 200 (2008), cert. denied, 556 U.S. 1127, 129 S. Ct. 1616, 173 L. Ed. 2d 994 (2009).

Waiver Found Appropriate.

Defendant's unequivocal, signed writing that waived his right to a jury trial was sufficient under Ark. R. Crim. P. 31.2; a verbatim record was not required. Barrow v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 589, 377 S.W.3d 481 (2010).

Rule 31.2. Waiver of trial by jury: personal request.

Should a defendant desire to waive his right to trial by jury, he may do so either (1) personally in writing or in open court, or (2) through counsel if the waiver is made in open court and in the presence of the defendant. A verbatim record of any proceedings at which a defendant waives his right to a trial by jury in person or through counsel shall be made and preserved.

HISTORY: Amended June 6, 1994.

Publisher's Notes.

The Per Curiam Order dated June 6, 1994, provided, in part: "The purpose of this rule is to memorialize Bolt v. State, 314 Ark. 387, 862 S.W.2d 841 (1993)."

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 31.2

The "in writing or in open court" requirement of Rule 31.2 must be complied with. In a federal habeas corpus proceeding, the court will not presume a knowing, intelligent, and understanding waiver of a defendant's right to a jury trial from a silent record. Williamson v. Lockhart, 636 F. Supp. 1298 (E.D. Ark. 1986).

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

There is no federal rule binding the state courts to use a 12-member jury in state criminal prosecutions and an agreement to proceed with an 11-member jury in accordance with state law and court rules was not a violation of the constitutional right to trial by jury. Vinston v. Lockhart, 850 F.2d 420 (8th Cir. 1988).

Appeal.

Because the law providing the manner of waiver is obviously designed to assure that the jury trial right is not forfeited by inaction on the part of a defendant, the contemporaneous objection rule did not apply and defendant's conviction was reversed. Calnan v. State, 310 Ark. 744, 841 S.W.2d 593 (1992).

The Arkansas Constitution and Rules of Criminal Procedure assume a defendant will be tried by a jury unless that right is expressly waived. The law providing the manner of waiver is obviously designed to assure that the jury trial right is not forfeited by inaction on the part of a defendant. Calnan v. State, 310 Ark. 744, 841 S.W.2d 593 (1992).

Denial of defendant's motion for a mistrial was appropriate because he invited the alleged error. If he had not agreed to start his trial without alternate jurors, then the circuit court could have seated some when the trial began; defendant had to have known that his second cousin had been seated as a juror and yet, he let the matter go until she was dismissed. Marshall v. State, 102 Ark. App. 175, 283 S.W.3d 597 (2008).

Construction.

When construing Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 7 together with this rule, the law is clear that the only way a defendant may waive the jury trial right is by personally making an express declaration in writing or in open court and that the record of the open court proceedings where the defendant waives his or her right must be preserved. Hill v. State, 47 Ark. App. 44, 883 S.W.2d 857 (1994).

Under this rule and Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 7, a defendant charged under § 5-65-205 has the right to a jury trial, and to the extent that § 5-65-205(c) [repealed] prevents a defendant from having a jury determination, it is unconstitutional. Medlock v. State, 328 Ark. 229, 942 S.W.2d 861 (1997).

Express Declaration Required.

Where two separate questions (the possibility of incarceration and waiver of a jury trial) were being discussed by the prosecutor and defendant at the same time, the apparent withdrawal of defendant's request for a jury trial in exchange for the prosecutor's not seeking incarceration did not constitute an express declaration by defendant of an intentional relinquishment of his right to a jury trial. Duty v. State, 45 Ark. App. 1, 871 S.W.2d 400 (1994).

Insufficient Basis for Waiver.

Where the defendant was never made aware either by the trial court or his attorney, that the choice confronting him was, on the one hand, to be tried by jury of his peers, or on the other hand, to have his guilt or innocence determined by the judge, the defendant was deprived of sufficient information to make a knowing and intelligent waiver of the right to a jury trial. Williamson v. Lockhart, 636 F. Supp. 1298 (E.D. Ark. 1986).

Where the record contained no evidence that defendant was informed by the court of his right to be tried by a jury, or that he executed a knowing, voluntary, and intelligent waiver of that right, the defendant was deprived of his constitutional right to trial by jury. Davis v. State, 81 Ark. App. 17, 97 S.W.3d 921 (2003).

Wife who was found to be in civil contempt and sentenced to one year in a detention center did not waive her right to a jury trial where she was never advised that she was entitled to one. Linder v. Weaver, 364 Ark. 319, 219 S.W.3d 151 (2005).

In a felony non-support case, where counsel requested a jury trial at the pretrial hearing but the case proceeded as a bench trial, the appellate court held that defendant was denied his right to a jury trial as the record was silent as to whether defendant had knowingly, intelligently, and understandingly waived his right to a jury trial. Burrell v. State, 90 Ark. App. 114, 204 S.W.3d 80 (2005).

Dismissal of defendant's appeal of his conviction in the city court was improper as the dismissal would waive defendant's right to a jury trial, which he did not waive; defendant neither personally made an express declaration in writing or in open court, nor did counsel make the waiver in open court in the presence of the defendant. Ayala v. State, 365 Ark. 192, 226 S.W.3d 766 (2006).

Notice.

Trial court's standard practice of requiring a defendant to request a jury at least 48 hours before trial was not in accordance with the Arkansas Constitution or the Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure; the notice requirement put a defendant in the position of forfeiting his or her right to a jury trial due to inaction. Swindle v. State, 373 Ark. 519, 285 S.W.3d 200 (2008), cert. denied, 556 U.S. 1127, 129 S. Ct. 1616, 173 L. Ed. 2d 994 (2009).

Open Court.

Waiver of jury trial in judge's chambers satisfied the "open court" requirement of this rule where defendant requested a hearing in the judge's chambers because defendant did not want the jury panel to overhear, and thus be prejudiced by, defendant's statements regarding his reluctance to have his case tried to a jury; once in chambers, defendant made it absolutely clear that he wished to have his case tried to the circuit judge and not the jury because he feared a jury would "automatically" conclude he was guilty and "railroad" him, and, after the trial court admonished defendant that he was "giving up one of the most precious rights that anybody has in this country," defendant concluded that he wanted to take his chances with the trial judge. Burton v. State, 327 Ark. 65, 937 S.W.2d 634 (1997).

Post-Verdict Sentencing Agreement.

After the jury's confusion resulted in the jury returning two verdict forms, one recommending an alternative sentence of probation without specifying a term and the other recommending only a fine, there was no error when the circuit court accepted a sentencing agreement allowing the court to sentence defendant to a term of years of probation rather than resubmitting the matter to the jury. Barfield v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 501, 588 S.W.3d 412 (2019).

Record of Waiver.

Presuming waiver of right to a jury trial from a silent record is impermissible; the record must demonstrate or evidence disclose that a defendant knowingly, intelligently and understandingly waived his or her right to a jury trial and anything less is not a waiver. Williamson v. Lockhart, 636 F. Supp. 1298 (E.D. Ark. 1986).

Representation by Counsel.

It is not required that a waiver be accompanied by the advice of an attorney before a decision to waive a jury trial in order for that waiver to be "intelligent"; however, such a waiver must rest on an adequate preliminary statement of the trial court delineating the rights of the accused and the consequences of the proposed waiver with the implication, at least tacit, that the accused should reasonably comprehend her position and appreciate the possible effects of her choice. Maxwell v. State, 73 Ark. App. 45, 41 S.W.3d 402 (2001).

Waiver by Counsel.

Where defendant's counsel stated in open court, on the record, and in defendant's presence that defendant waived a jury trial and specifically asked the trial court to hear the case, the defendant "personally" waived a jury trial in compliance with this rule and Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 7. Bolt v. State, 314 Ark. 387, 862 S.W.2d 841 (1993).

While a defendant who desires to waive his right to a jury trial under this rule must do so either in writing or in open court, his or her attorney may also make such a waiver so long as the defendant has acknowledged he or she had been informed of the right and the attorney waives the right in open court, on the record and in the defendant's presence. Bolt v. State, 314 Ark. 387, 862 S.W.2d 841 (1993).

An attorney's waiver of his client's right to a jury trial, made in open court and in the presence of the defendant, satisfied the requirement of this rule that such a waiver be made "personally; where defense counsel explicitly submitted the case to the court for a bench trial, the defendant was bound by his attorney's action. Johnson v. State, 314 Ark. 471, 863 S.W.2d 305 (1993).

A waiver communicated by defense counsel in chambers, without defendant being present and without a record being made of the colloquy, was insufficient. Hill v. State, 47 Ark. App. 44, 883 S.W.2d 857 (1994).

Defendant effectively waived his right to have a jury sentence him where it was shown that defendant was in court when his attorney stated that the jury would not be needed for sentencing and did not object. Tumblison v. State, 93 Ark. App. 91, 216 S.W.3d 620 (2005).

Summary denial of an inmate's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 postconviction relief petition was reversed because the order did not provide the requisite findings and conclusions, and the record did not clearly support affirmation; because no hearing was held, the trial court had an obligation to provide written findings that showed that the inmate was entitled to no relief. It was not conclusive from the petition or the record that relief was not warranted on the inmate's claims concerning illegal sentencing as there was no evidence that counsel agreed to allow the court to sentence on a gun enhancement charge. Davenport v. State, 2011 Ark. 105 (2011).

Waiver Found Appropriate.

Defendant's unequivocal, signed writing that waived his right to a jury trial was sufficient under this rule; a verbatim record was not required. Barrow v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 589, 377 S.W.3d 481 (2010).

Rule 31.3. Waiver of trial by jury: waiver by counsel or agent.

In misdemeanor cases, where only a fine is imposed by the court, a jury trial may be waived by the defendant's attorney, except that a corporation charged with any crime may waive a jury trial through counsel or authorized corporate officer.

Defendant executed a written waiver of his right to a jury trial, which was signed by defendant, his attorney, the prosecutor, and the judge, and the circuit court made a verbatim record of defendant's personal waiver of his right to jury trial in open court; because defendant was waiving his right to be tried by a jury on the charges, he was also waiving his right to be sentenced by a jury on the charges. Johns v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 560, 444 S.W.3d 873 (2014).

Waiver form provided that defendant was facing sentences for up to 15 years, which range clearly showed the enhanced sentencing range, as ordinarily the range was not to exceed six years for a Class D felony, plus the circuit court directly referenced the enhanced punishment ranges and asked defendant if he understood the same; the waiver ensured that defendant understood that, if found guilty, he was to be sentenced by the circuit court, and his waiver was valid. Johns v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 560, 444 S.W.3d 873 (2014).

Withdrawal of Waiver.

Trial court abused its discretion by not allowing defendant to withdraw his waiver of a jury trial, because defendant waived his right to a jury trial and then immediately changed his mind. Defendant conceded that his initial waiver of his right to be tried by a jury was valid, however, there was no indication of any bad faith and the prosecutor made no objection to defendant's request to withdraw the waiver, and given the timeliness of the withdrawal request, there was no indication that this would have caused any delay, inconvenience to witnesses, or prejudice to the State. Hester v. State, 100 Ark. App. 234, 267 S.W.3d 623 (2007).

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

There is no federal rule binding the state courts to use a 12-member jury in state criminal prosecutions and an agreement to proceed with an 11-member jury in accordance with state law and court rules was not a violation of the constitutional right to trial by jury. Vinston v. Lockhart, 850 F.2d 420 (8th Cir. 1988).

Wife who was found to be in civil contempt and sentenced to one year in a detention center did not waive her right to a jury trial where she was never advised that she was entitled to one. Linder v. Weaver, 364 Ark. 319, 219 S.W.3d 151 (2005).

Presence of Defendant.

This rule is consistent with § 16-89-103, which states that a defendant's presence is not required in misdemeanor cases. Bolt v. State, 314 Ark. 387, 862 S.W.2d 841 (1993).

Rule 31.4. Waiver of trial by jury: capital felonies.

No defendant charged with a capital felony may waive either trial by jury on the issue of guilt or the right to have sentence determined by a jury unless:

- (a) the court in which the cause is to be tried determines that the waiver is voluntarily and freely proffered without compulsion or coercion; and
- (b) the prosecuting attorney, with the permission of the court, has waived the death penalty; and
- (c) the prosecuting attorney has assented to the waiver of trial by jury, and such waiver has been approved by the court.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 31.4

Since only a jury can impose a death sentence, it has been argued that the death penalty statute unconstitutionally infringes upon an accused's right to plead not guilty and avoid a jury trial and, thus, a death sentence. The Arkansas Supreme Court has consistently rejected this argument. See, Hill v. State, 289

Ark. 387, 713 S.W.2d 233 (1986); Ruiz v. State, 275 Ark. 410, 630 S.W.2d 44 (1982).

Lockhart*, 850 F.2d 420 (8th Cir. 1988).

Mandatory Requirements.

Criminal cases which require trial by jury must be so tried unless waived by the defendant, assented to by the prosecutor, and approved by the court; the first two requirements are mandatory before the court has any discretion in the matter. Fretwell v. State, 289 Ark. 91, 708 S.W.2d 630 (1986).

Because the prosecutor had not waived the death penalty nor assented to defendant's waiver of the right to a jury trial, defendant was not permitted to enter a plea of guilty to capital murder under the terms of this rule. Newman v. State, No. CR 02-811, 2003 Ark. LEXIS 295 (Ark. May 22, 2003).

Notice of Trial.

Defendant's failure to respond to a notice of trial setting, which advised that the court was to be notified 48 hours in advance if a jury trial was requested, did not constitute a waiver of a jury trial. Reaser v. State, 47 Ark. App. 7, 883 S.W.2d 851 (1994).

Protection for Accused.

The fact that, under this rule, a defendant may agree to waive trial by jury on the issue of guilt or the right to have guilt determined by a jury because the court and state will waive the death penalty does not chill an accused's right to a jury trial; rather, the rule offers a protection for the accused who wishes to avoid a jury trial. Ruiz v. State, 275 Ark. 410, 630 S.W.2d 44, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 882, 103 S. Ct. 181, 74 L. Ed. 2d 148 (1982).

Rule 31.5. Discretionary withdrawal of waiver.

A defendant may not withdraw his voluntary and knowing waiver of trial by jury as a matter of right, but the court, in its discretion, may permit withdrawal of the waiver prior to the commencement of trial.

CASE NOTES

Withdrawal Improperly Denied.

The trial court abused its discretion in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw her waiver of a jury trial where the trial court (1) erred in concluding that appellant waived her right to a jury trial knowingly and intelligently, (2) abused its discretion in denying her motion for the additional reason that this motion was filed after the defendant engaged private counsel who advised her that a jury trial was preferable, and (3) her motion was filed more than one month prior to trial, and no inconvenience to witnesses or to the administration of justice was demonstrated. Maxwell v. State, 73 Ark. App. 45, 41 S.W.3d 402 (2001).

Trial court abused its discretion in denying defendant's request to withdraw his waiver of his right to be tried by a jury under the United States and Arkansas Constitutions because the trial court apparently did not consider anything other than the fact that defendant had already waived his right to a jury trial; neither the trial court's order nor its oral explanation from a subsequent pretrial hearing mentioned timeliness, delay, or inconvenience. The motion to withdraw was filed less than 2 weeks after defendant's waiver, almost a month before a scheduled bench trial, and over 2 months from the date that the trial actually occurred. McCall v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 300, 495 S.W.3d 91 (2016).

SELECTION OF JURORS

- Rule
- Rule 32.1. List of prospective jurors.
- Rule 32.2. Voir dire examination.
- Rule 32.3. Alternate jurors.

Rule 32.1. List of prospective jurors.

The circuit court may require members of petit jury panels to complete written questionnaires setting forth the following information:

- (i) age;
- (ii) marital status;
- (iii) extent of education;
- (iv) occupation of juror and spouse; and
- (v) prior jury service.

Upon request, such questionnaires shall be made available by the clerk of the court to the defendant or his counsel and the prosecuting attorney. Upon a showing of good cause, additional information may be furnished regarding jurors by order of the court.

CASE NOTES

Questionnaires.

The decision to allow the use of expanded juror questionnaires lies within the sound discretion of the trial court. Danzie v. State, 326 Ark. 34, 930 S.W.2d 310 (1996).

The concept of expanded juror questionnaires is merely a written form of voir dire examination. Danzie v. State, 326 Ark. 34, 930 S.W.2d 310 (1996).

Defendant contended that he was entitled to an expanded juror questionnaire because there was no timeliness requirement in either this rule or Ark. R. Crim. P. 32.2; however, the trial court did not err in denying the motion because it had wide latitude involving voir dire, defendant failed to show how the trial court's ruling was prejudicial, and defendant was not prevented from asking any relevant question that was contained in the proposed questionnaire when defendant conducted examinations of the prospective jurors. Baughman v. State, 353 Ark. 1, 110 S.W.3d 740 (2003).

Neither § 16-10-301 to 16-10-305 (16-10-303 [repealed]) nor § 21-6-402 to 21-6-406 (21-6-404 and 21-6-405 [repealed]) refer to a fee that may be charged by bailiffs, clerks, or the courts for potential juror information. Therefore, a circuit court erred when it refused to refund a $3.00 fee charged by a bailiff for potential juror information in a criminal case. Aikens v. State, 368 Ark. 641, 249 S.W.3d 788 (2007).

Trial court did not err in excusing some prospective jurors in a capital murder case based on the written answers they gave to a questionnaire without ever being required to appear and answer questions from counsel. Such a questionnaire was clearly permitted under this rule. Miller v. State, 2010 Ark. 1, 362 S.W.3d 264 (2010).

Rule 32.2. Voir dire examination.

(a) Voir dire examination shall be conducted for the purpose of discovering bases for challenge for cause and for the purpose of gaining knowledge to enable the parties to intelligently exercise peremptory challenges. The judge shall initiate the voir dire examination by:

- (i) identifying the parties; and
- (ii) identifying the respective counsel; and
- (iii) revealing the names of those witnesses whose names have been made known to the court by the parties; and
- (iv) briefly outlining the nature of the case.

(b) The judge shall then put to the prospective jurors any question which he thinks necessary touching their qualifications to serve as jurors in the cause on trial. The judge shall also permit such additional questions by the defendant or his attorney and the prosecuting attorney as the judge deems reasonable and proper.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Comment to Rule 32.2

The trial court has broad discretion in determining the proper scope of voir dire examination by counsel, and restrictions imposed by the trial court will not require reversal on appeal unless a clear abuse of discretion is shown. Where appointed counsel for a defendant was not permitted to inquire of jurors about his being appointed, presumably as opposed to being retained, Finch v. State, 262 Ark. 313, 556 S.W.2d 434 (1977), and where it was alleged that the prosecutor "testified" about the credibility of police informants who were to testify at trial, Parker v. State, 265 Ark. 315, 578 S.W.2d 206 (1979), no error was found by the Arkansas Supreme Court.

On the other hand, it is clear that the trial court should, on occasion, permit more sharply focused inquiry about specific subjects such as prospective jurors' views about insanity defenses. In these cases it is not enough for the trial court merely to get assurances from prospective jurors that they will follow the law. Fauna v. State, 265 Ark. 934, 582 S.W.2d 18 (1979). The Arkansas Supreme Court has held, however, that "prospective jurors may not be questioned with respect to a hypothetical set of facts expected to be proved at trial and thus commit the jury to a decision in advance, but that they may be questioned, as here, about their mental attitude toward certain types of evidence, such as circumstantial evidence." Hobbs v. State, 277 Ark. 271, 275-76, 641 S.W.2d 9, 12 (1982).

CASE NOTES

Discretion of Trial Judge.

This rule has not materially affected the principle that the extent and scope of voir dire examination lies within the discretion of the trial judge, who is not subject to reversal except for clear abuse of such discretion. Finch v. State, 262 Ark. 313, 556 S.W.2d 434 (1977).

The extent and scope of voir dire examination of prospective jurors are matters lying within the sound judicial discretion of the trial court, the latitude of which is rather wide. Parker v. State, 265 Ark. 315, 578 S.W.2d 206 (1979).

The scope of voir dire examination by counsel is largely within the sound judicial discretion of the trial court, and his limitation of that examination is not reversible on appeal unless it is a clear abuse of discretion. Fauna v. State, 265 Ark. 934, 582 S.W.2d 18 (1979).

In capital felony murder prosecution, where one venireman stated that he had not formed an opinion about capital punishment before the voir dire began, because he had not thought about it or had to make that decision, that he was not sure what his opinion would have been if he had been the first juror questioned but he had decided that he believed in it under certain circumstances, the defendant was not prejudiced by this recited occurrence, since he did not receive the death penalty and incident did not demonstrate abuse of court's discretion in refusal to conduct sequestered voir dire. Hefferman v. State, 278 Ark. 325, 645 S.W.2d 666 (1983).

The extent and scope of voir dire examination is largely within the sound discretion of the trial judge and the latitude of that discretion is rather wide; his restriction of that examination will not be reversed on appeal unless that discretion is clearly abused. Izzard v. State, 10 Ark. App. 265, 663 S.W.2d 192 (1984); Henry v. State, 309 Ark. 1, 828 S.W.2d 346 (1992).

The trial judge did not abuse his discretion by refusing to allow defendant to strike members of the jury panel in chambers. Felty v. State, 306 Ark. 634, 816 S.W.2d 872 (1991).

There is no abuse of discretion when the trial court curtails protracted voir dire examination, or restricts questions that do not touch upon the qualifications of the venirepersons to serve as impartial jurors, or that are potentially confusing to the prospective jurors. Henry v. State, 309 Ark. 1, 828 S.W.2d 346 (1992).

This rule provides trial judges with wide latitude in conducting and monitoring voir dire; sequestration of the jury for purposes of voir dire is also within the discretion of the trial court. Danzie v. State, 326 Ark. 34, 930 S.W.2d 310 (1996).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in the manner in which it questioned prospective jurors where, after defense counsel asked an unclear question, the court asked a question in an attempt to ascertain whether the prospective juror had prejudged the case and whether she could render a verdict based on the evidence adduced at trial rather than based on media accounts. Britt v. State, 334 Ark. 142, 974 S.W.2d 436 (1998).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in restricting the defendant's voir dire of prospective jurors with regard to lesser offenses since the line of questioning was irrelevant because it was unknown at that point whether instructions on lesser charges would even be submitted to the jury. Christopher v. State, 340 Ark. 404, 10 S.W.3d 852 (2000).

It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to refuse to allow the defendant in a murder prosecution to ask the jury if they understood that the state would be allowed to put on evidence of the nature and circumstances of the crime but that she could not put on any evidence of innocence, and to ask the jury if they understood that the failure to put on any evidence of innocence did not mean she agreed with the state's theory of the case where the court had not yet determined whether evidence of innocence would be excluded. Goff v. State, 341 Ark. 567, 19 S.W.3d 579 (2000).

Permitting a general voir dire and then a specific, individual voir dire falls readily within the circuit court's discretion with respect to the extent and scope of voir dire. Anderson v. State, 357 Ark. 180, 163 S.W.3d 333 (2004).

Trial judge is responsible for regulating and conducting voir dire, and the fact that the rule permits such additional questioning as he or she deems proper underscores the discretion vested in the trial judge. Hughes v. State, 98 Ark. App. 375, 255 S.W.3d 891 (2007).

Because of the wide discretion given to the circuit court in conducting voir dire, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in sustaining the State's objections during defendant's voir dire of potential jurors on the basis defendant was attempting to "fact qualify" the jury. Wilson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 371, 554 S.W.3d 279 (2018).

Because six prospective jurors expressed views that could have impaired their service as juror (that they believed the State's burden of proof was higher in sexual assault cases), the circuit court did not err by dismissing them for cause without allowing further questioning from counsel. McCree v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 205, 624 S.W.3d 114 (2021).

Exclusion.

A member of the news media, though not a party to the litigation, has standing to question an exclusion from voir dire. Memphis Publishing Co. v. Burnett, 316 Ark. 176, 871 S.W.2d 359 (1994).

Hypotheticals.

In a capital murder case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in limiting defendant's use of hypotheticals during voir dire; defendant was not entitled to unfettered examination, and limiting the use of emotionally charged hypotheticals, such as those involving school shootings, was within the trial court's broad discretion. Reid v. State, 2019 Ark. 363, 588 S.W.3d 725 (2019), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 551, 208 L. Ed. 2d 175 (2020).

Informing of Nature of Charges.

Circuit court did not violate defendant's right to a bifurcated trial under § 16-97-101 when it included the word "feloniously" in the description of the charges read during voir dire; the court had considered the issue, decided it was necessary to inform the jury of the nature of the charges as required by this rule, and provided a cautionary statement after reading the information so as to limit any prejudice. Hall v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 411, 558 S.W.3d 399 (2018).

Interruptions by Court.

Where in almost every instance while a juror was being examined, the court interrupted the defense counsel by stating that the court would declare the law and then proceed to ask the prospective jurors if they would follow the court's reasoning, although this temporarily interrupted defense counsel, it did not prevent them from coming through the side door or back door and eventually gaining all the information they sought, and while it appears that both the court and defense counsel were too aggressive, the purposes of voir dire on behalf of the defense were effectively carried out by able counsel. Van Cleave v. State, 268 Ark. 514, 598 S.W.2d 65 (1980).

Limitations on Questioning.

In a criminal prosecution for capital murder, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in limiting counsel's ability to question individual jurors regarding: (a) favoring one child over another; (b) personal knowledge of one who was mentally retarded; (c) the type of domestic violence incurred; and (d) a spouse's employment in the circuit clerk's office; counsel's questions would have been more appropriate during the general voir dire. Anderson v. State, 357 Ark. 180, 163 S.W.3d 333 (2004).

Court did not err when it denied defense counsel the right to question prospective jurors after the prosecutor challenged those jurors for cause on whether they could impose the death penalty under certain circumstances; the court was only required to ask questions of jurors that it believed were necessary and to permit attorneys to ask additional questions it deemed reasonable and necessary. Thessing v. State, 365 Ark. 384, 230 S.W.3d 526, cert. denied, 549 U.S. 891, 127 S. Ct. 193, 166 L. Ed. 2d 158 (2006).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's request to ask a venire person whether the venire person had a prior DWI conviction because any information that defendant might have gleaned from questioning the venire person about the conviction would not have impugned the prosecution's use of a peremptory challenge to excuse the venire person from the jury. Hughes v. State, 98 Ark. App. 375, 255 S.W.3d 891 (2007).

No Prejudicial Error.

Where trial court permitted prosecuting attorney to go beyond the purpose of the voir dire, but there was no motion for mistrial or admonishment, there was no prejudicial error. Sanders v. State, 278 Ark. 420, 646 S.W.2d 14 (1983).

There was no error in a felony case whereby prospective jurors were questioned on voir dire and subjected to challenges for cause and peremptory challenges two jurors at a time, as long as the state and the defendant were allowed to examine jurors individually and the state was required to exercise its peremptory challenges first. Chenoweth v. State, 291 Ark. 372, 724 S.W.2d 488 (1987).

Although defendant argued that the circuit court erred in preventing his counsel from responding to the prosecutor's statement during voir dire regarding convictions and circumstantial evidence and, thus, prejudiced him, questioning on voir dire was a matter of discretion vested in the circuit court; further, defendant never argued his credibility or prejudice point to the circuit court and, had he done so, the court might well have understood the basis for defendant's statement and admonished the venire not to view its ruling as a credibility matter. Henderson v. State, 360 Ark. 356, 201 S.W.3d 401 (2005).

In a rape prosecution where the victim was a police officer, the fact that the prosecutor asked the jurors during voir dire to agree that a combat trained person could be raped with minimal force did not violate § 16-31-102(b)(3), as the jurors were not asked to agree that rape could occur without force, but the questions were directed to the amount of force necessary. McElroy v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 533, 385 S.W.3d 406 (2011).

Preserving Issue.

Defendant objected to seating a juror during voir dire and requested that the trial court dismiss her for cause, such that the point was preserved for review; case law does not support the argument that a party must make an additional objection at the conclusion of voir dire. Adams v. State, 2009 Ark. 375, 326 S.W.3d 764 (2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 1021, 130 S. Ct. 1922, 176 L. Ed. 2d 392 (2010).

Trial court did not err in reading the enhancement offenses of commission of a felony with a firearm and commission of a felony in the presence of a child to a jury prior to trial because the enhancement charges did not give the jury any potentially prejudicial information about defendants. The reading of the enhancements gave the prospective jurors knowledge as to the nature of the offenses alleged, which was necessary for them to have in order for voir dire to be properly conducted. Watkins v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 124, 302 S.W.3d 635 (2009).

Public Proceeding.

Jury selection is a stage of the proceedings where openness is particularly appropriate under the guarantee of a public trial provided for in U.S. Const., Amend. 6, Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 10, and § 16-10-105. Memphis Publishing Co. v. Burnett, 316 Ark. 176, 871 S.W.2d 359 (1994).

Purpose.

The purpose of voir dire examinations is to gain knowledge for the intelligent exercise of peremptory challenges. Ward v. State, 308 Ark. 415, 827 S.W.2d 110, 831 S.W.2d 100, cert. denied, 506 U.S. 841, 113 S. Ct. 124, 121 L. Ed. 2d 79 (1992).

The purposes of voir dire examination are to discover if there is any basis for challenges for cause and to gain knowledge for the intelligent exercise of peremptory challenges; those purposes do not include an attempt to commit the jurors to a decision in advance. Nutt v. State, 312 Ark. 247, 848 S.W.2d 427 (1993).

Questionnaires.

The concept of expanded juror questionnaires is merely a written form of voir dire examination. Danzie v. State, 326 Ark. 34, 930 S.W.2d 310 (1996).

Defendant contended that he was entitled to an expanded juror questionnaire because there was no timeliness requirement in either Ark. R. Crim. P. 32.1 or this rule; however, the trial court did not err in denying the motion because it had wide latitude involving voir dire, defendant failed to show how the trial court's ruling was prejudicial, and defendant was not prevented from asking any relevant question that was contained in the proposed questionnaire when defendant conducted examinations of the prospective jurors. Baughman v. State, 353 Ark. 1, 110 S.W.3d 740 (2003).

Rehabilitation of Jurors.

In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err in refusing to allow defense counsel to attempt to rehabilitate prospective jurors by additional voir dire questions where the court had already posited the general question of whether the prospective jurors could consider the death penalty under any circumstances; the court clearly did not believe that additional questions would be productive or beneficial. Isom v. State, 356 Ark. 156, 148 S.W.3d 257, cert. denied, 543 U.S. 865, 125 S. Ct. 204, 160 L. Ed. 2d 110 (2004).

Sentencing.

No reversible error occurred even though defendant's attorney was unable to question potential jurors regarding sentencing, where defendant was not sentenced by the jury. Armer v. State, 51 Ark. App. 173, 912 S.W.2d 436 (1995), aff'd, 326 Ark. 7, 929 S.W.2d 705 (1996).

When defendant entered into a plea agreement after a jury was selected but before the jury was sworn, it was not an abuse of discretion to decline to accept defendant's proffered additional voir dire questions to be asked of the sentencing jury because (1) the venire had been excused, (2) defendant had exhausted all peremptory challenges, (3) the court had already found the jury qualified, and (4) the court considered the proposed questions, as well as the State's response. Pedraza v. State, 2014 Ark. 298, 438 S.W.3d 226 (2014), writ denied, Pedraza v. Pope, 2015 Ark. 172 (2015).

Sequestration.

Sequestration of the jury for voir dire purposes is within the trial court's discretion. Hefernan v. State, 278 Ark. 325, 645 S.W.2d 666 (1983).

Rule 32.3. Alternate jurors.

(a) The court may direct that additional jurors be called and impanelled in addition to the regular jury to sit as alternate jurors. The number of alternate jurors shall be at the discretion of the court, taking into consideration the estimated length and cost of the trial, the number of witnesses, and the ages and health of the regular jurors. Alternate jurors in the order in which they are called shall replace jurors who are discharged by the court for good cause upon being found unable or disqualified to perform their duties. Alternate jurors shall be drawn in the same manner, shall have the same qualifications, shall take the same oath, and shall have the same functions, powers, facilities and privileges as the regular jurors. Each side shall be entitled to one peremptory challenge for each alternate juror to be impanelled. The additional peremptory challenge may be used against an alternate juror only, and all other peremptory challenges allowed by law shall not be used against an alternate juror.

(b) Any alternate juror, who has not replaced a regular juror prior to the time the jury retires to consider its verdict, shall be further instructed by the court in addition to the usual instruction regarding discussion of the case and not permitting any one to discuss the case with him or her, to remain at the courthouse during deliberation. During deliberation, should any regular juror die, or upon good cause shown to the court be found unable or disqualified to perform his or her duties, the court may order the juror to be discharged. The court may in its discretion, as an alternative to mistrial, replace such juror with the next alternate. In such event, the court shall instruct the jury to disregard all previous deliberation, and to commence deliberation anew. The trial court in its discretion may seat additional alternates as jurors in this manner as needed.

(c) In the case of a capital murder trial or any other bifurcated trial in which the court cannot fix punishment pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 5-4-103(b), and in which there are alternate jurors remaining after the jury has returned a verdict of guilty, the next alternate jurors, not to exceed two, shall be placed in the jury box along with the regular jurors. Any alternate jurors in addition to these two shall be dismissed. The trial will proceed with the penalty phase. When the jury retires to deliberate the penalty, the remaining alternate juror or jurors will again remain at the courthouse during deliberation.

(1) If at any time after a verdict of guilty, but before a verdict fixing punishment, a juror who participated in the guilt phase of a capital murder trial or other trial described above dies, becomes ill, or is otherwise found to be unable or disqualified to perform his or her duties, such juror shall be discharged. The court may in its discretion, as an alternative to mistrial or any other option available by statute or these rules, replace such juror with the next alternate. However, in such event, the court may first give the defendant, with the agreement of the prosecution, the option to waive jury sentencing, in which case the court shall impose sentence, or to accept a verdict by the remaining jurors. If the defendant does not waive jury sentencing, or agree to accept a verdict by the remaining jurors, the trial will continue with the alternate participating in the penalty phase. In such event, the court shall instruct the jury to commence deliberation anew as to the sentencing phase only.

(2) Notwithstanding Ark. Code Ann. § 5-4-602(3), which requires that the same jury sit in the sentencing phase of a capital murder trial, the court may in its discretion proceed pursuant to this rule and seat an alternate juror.

HISTORY: Adopted May 21, 1998.

Reporters Notes.

In Johnson v. State, 328 Ark. 526 (1997), the Supreme Court held that Ark. Code Ann. § 5-4-103(b)(3) authorized the trial court to fix punishment when the twelfth juror became disqualified in the sentencing phase. '[T]he court was authorized to fix punishment when the jury was unable to agree upon the punishment because only eleven jurors remained after one was disqualified.' "

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

This rule did not apply to the facts of the case because no juror became incapacitated or was in any way disqualified, and the issues in the case had nothing to do with any particular juror; thus, the circuit court did not exceed its jurisdiction in declaring a mistrial as to the guilt phase of the trial, and instead, it correctly determined that the unique circumstances required a mistrial as to both the guilt and penalty phases of the trial. State v. Torres, 2021 Ark. 22, 617 S.W.3d 232 (2021).

Notification of Parties.

Trial court did not commit reversible error when it replaced a juror, who was excused when her sister became gravely ill, with an alternate juror for the penalty phase of defendant's trial without discussing it with the parties. Williams v. State, 347 Ark. 728, 67 S.W.3d 548 (2002).

- Rule 33.2. Sentencing and entry of judgment.
- Rule 33.3. Post-trial motions.
- Rule 33.4. Custody and restraint of defendants and witnesses.
- Rule 33.5. Note-taking by jurors.
- Rule 33.6. Instructions and Verdict Forms.
- Rule 33.7. Additional instructions.
- Rule 33.8. Questions by Jurors.
- Rule 33.9. Record of waiver of right to testify.

Rule 33.1. Motions for directed verdict and motions for dismissal.

- (a) In a jury trial, if a motion for directed verdict is to be made, it shall be made at the close of the evidence offered by the prosecution and at the close of all of the evidence. A motion for directed verdict shall state the specific grounds therefor.
- (b) In a nonjury trial, if a motion for dismissal is to be made, it shall be made at the close of all of the evidence. The motion for dismissal shall state the specific grounds therefor. If the defendant moved for dismissal at the conclusion of the prosecution's evidence, then the motion must be renewed at the close of all of the evidence.

(c) The failure of a defendant to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence at the times and in the manner required in subsections (a) and (b) above will constitute a waiver of any question pertaining to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict or judgment. A motion for directed verdict or for dismissal based on insufficiency of the evidence must specify the respect in which the evidence is deficient. A motion merely stating that the evidence is insufficient does not preserve for appeal issues relating to a specific deficiency such as insufficient proof on the elements of the offense. A renewal at the close of all of the evidence of a previous motion for directed verdict or for dismissal preserves the issue of insufficient evidence for appeal. If for any reason a motion or a renewed motion at the close of all of the evidence for directed verdict or for dismissal is not ruled upon, it is deemed denied for purposes of obtaining appellate review on the question of the sufficiency of the evidence.

Publisher's Notes.

Former Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.1. has been re-numbered as Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.4.

Court's Comment to Rule 33.1 (1995):

This rule is former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.21(b). The word "again" has been added to the first sentence to emphasize the requirement that an appropriate motion be made after the State's case and at the close of the case. The next to the last sentence was added to codify the holding in Walker v. State, 318 Ark. 107, 883 S.W.2d 831 (1994), in which the Supreme Court expressed the standard as follows: "We draw a bright line and hold that a motion for a directed verdict in a criminal case must state the specific ground of the motion." Walker at 109. For example, in Walker a motion simply stating that the evidence was insufficient for a conviction of first or second degree murder or manslaughter did not preserve for appeal issues relating to whether the state proved that the defendant had the requisite culpable mental state for any of those offenses. The last sentence was added to reflect the holding in Durham v. State, 320 Ark. 689, 899 S.W.2d 470 (June 5, 1995), which did not require a party to repeat the specific deficiencies in the evidence when the motion is renewed.

Reporter's Notes, 1988 Amendment [of former ARCrP 36.21]:

It is the feeling of the committee that this change would bring the criminal rules and the civil rules into alignment by requiring a motion challenging the sufficiency of the evidence as an essential step to raising the issue on appeal.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1998 Amendment:

A new sentence has been added to the rule to make clear that a party's failure to obtain a ruling on his or her motion for directed verdict at the close of all the evidence is not a waiver of the issue of the sufficiency of the evidence for purposes of appellate review. Compare Danzie v. State, 326 Ark. 34, 930 S.W.2d 310 (1996) (sufficiency of evidence issue was not preserved for appeal where there was no ruling on the defendant's motion for directed verdict at the close of all the evidence). The new sentence provides that the motion is deemed denied if for any reason it is not ruled upon.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1999 Amendment:

The rule was divided into subsections for ease of reference. Subsection (a) applies to jury trials, subsection (b) to bench trials, and subsection (c) to both. In both jury and bench trials, the defendant is required to notify the trial court of the particular reasons why the state's evidence is insufficient in order to preserve that issue for appeal. This requirement in a bench trial is a change in previous procedure and overrules the decision in Strickland v. State, 322 Ark. 312, 909 S.W.2d 318 (1995). See generally Note, An Analysis of Arkansas's Exceptional Treatment of the Contemporaneous Objection Rule in Criminal Bench Trials, 19 U. Ark. Little Rock L.J. 291 (1997).

CASE NOTES

In General.

Directed verdict motions are treated as challenges to the sufficiency of the evidence. Bennett v. State, 308 Ark. 393, 825 S.W.2d 560 (1992).

In no case has the Supreme Court allowed a meritorious argument as to sufficiency of the evidence prevail over the defendant's failure to raise it in the trial court. Collins v. State, 308 Ark. 536, 826 S.W.2d 231 (1992).

A challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence must be made by a directed verdict motion. Jackson v. State, 316 Ark. 405, 871 S.W.2d 591 (1994).

Circuit court was never asked to determine whether a motion for a directed verdict should be granted on first-degree murder, thus, there was no ruling for the appellate court to review; it was defendant's obligation to obtain a ruling to preserve an issue for appeal, and the appellate court considered the issue of a directed verdict motion on capital murder, where the defendant was convicted of first-degree murder, and held that the denial of a directed verdict motion based on a failure to prove capital murder would not provide a basis on which to appeal where the criminal defendant was convicted of first-degree murder. Ashley v. State, 358 Ark. 414, 191 S.W.3d 520 (2004).

Trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict where the jury could have inferred that he in some way aided in the commission of the murder, and any error in instructing the jury on affirmative defenses was harmless. Jackson v. State, 359 Ark. 87, 194 S.W.3d 757 (2004).

Defendant's motions for directed verdict were properly denied where, for purposes of § 5-12-101, it was immaterial whether defendant ever intended to use physical force against the victim to further his escape from the store; physical force meant any bodily impact, and testimony from the victim was that defendant struck him in the nose, which was corroborated by the police officer's testimony and believed by the jury. McElyea v. State, 87 Ark. App. 103, 189 S.W.3d 67 (2004), aff'd, 360 Ark. 229, 200 S.W.3d 881 (2005).

Appellate Review.

Where a motion for directed verdict, although lodged at the close of the state's case, was not made at the conclusion of defendant's evidence, review by the Supreme Court was precluded. Hayes v. State, 311 Ark. 645, 846 S.W.2d 182 (1993).

When the sufficiency of the evidence is challenged, the Supreme Court considers only that evidence which supports the guilty verdict. Stipes v. State, 315 Ark. 719, 870 S.W.2d 388 (1994).

Double jeopardy considerations require the appellate court to consider a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence prior to other assignments of trial error. Dixon v. State, 327 Ark. 105, 937 S.W.2d 642 (1997).

A specific directed-verdict motion is required to preserve a sufficiency of the evidence challenge in a proceeding for the revocation of probation. Miner v. State, 70 Ark. App. 142, 15 S.W.3d 356, aff'd, 342 Ark. 283, 28 S.W.3d 280 (2000).

A trial court's decision considering and then denying a motion for a directed verdict made after the jury was instructed, but before closing arguments, did not comply with this rule, which requires that the motion be renewed at the close of the case. Robinson v. State, 348 Ark. 280, 72 S.W.3d 827 (2002).

Defendant's failure to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence at both the close of the state's case and the close of all of the evidence constituted a waiver of any question pertaining to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the jury verdict on appeal. Grady v. State, 350 Ark. 160, 85 S.W.3d 531 (2002).

Court did not reach the merits of defendant's argument that the evidence was not sufficient to support his conviction because defendant failed to preserve the issue for review; in defendant's directed-verdict motions, defendant failed to specify how the state's case was deficient, as required by this rule. Smith v. State, 352 Ark. 92, 98 S.W.3d 433 (2003).

Arkansas Supreme Court will strictly construe and apply Admin. Order No. 4, and require that all motions for directed verdicts be conducted on the record at the times such motions are mandated; under Admin. Order No. 4, unless the parties agree otherwise, it is the duty of the circuit court to require a verbatim record in any contested proceeding before it. Robinson v. State, 353 Ark. 372, 108 S.W.3d 622 (2003).

Defendant's argument on appeal that there was no evidence to satisfy the element of negligent care and that, in the absence of proof of this element, her conviction had to be reversed, was raised for the first time on appeal and, thus, the appellate court could not address it. Houston v. State, 82 Ark. App. 556, 120 S.W.3d 115 (2003).

To preserve an issue for appeal from a decision on a directed-verdict motion, the issue had to be stated clearly and specifically to the trial court and, because defendant failed to raise the appealed issue in his directed-verdict motion, the issue was not properly preserved for appellate review. Phillips v. State, 361 Ark. 1, 203 S.W.3d 630 (2005).

When defendant challenged the sufficiency of the evidence supporting his convictions for second degree domestic battery, under § 5-26-304(a)(1), and third degree domestic battery, under § 5-26-305(a)(1), alleging that the victim was not a "family or household member" who could be a victim of these offenses, his challenge was waived because this particular ground was not preserved for appellate review as it was not raised in the trial court. Brock v. State, 90 Ark. App. 164, 204 S.W.3d 562 (2005).

Appeal from defendant's conviction was meritless where the only adverse ruling was the trial court's denial of his directed-verdict motion, which was not preserved for appeal because the motion was not specific, as required by subsection (b) of this rule; a general motion that merely asserted that the state failed to prove its case was inadequate to preserve the issue for appeal. Wright v. State, 92 Ark. App. 369, 214 S.W.3d 280 (2005).

Where it was unclear from the record as to whether defendant had renewed her motion for a directed verdict at the close of evidence, as required by subsection (b) of this rule, the issue was not preserved for review. $ 735 in United States Currency v. State, 364 Ark. 526, 222 S.W.3d 209, overruled in part, $15,956 in U.S. Currency v. State, 366 Ark. 70, 233 S.W.3d 598 (2006).

Defendant's drug convictions were upheld as the appellate court did not address the merits of the sufficiency argument because his directed-verdict motion was not preserved for review; defendant raised specific arguments on appeal that were not raised at the trial court level. Nelson v. State, 365 Ark. 314, 229 S.W.3d 35 (2006).

When defendant moved to dismiss because aggravating factors were allegedly improperly submitted to the jury during the death penalty phase of defendant's trial, none of defendant's objections specified the respect in which the evidence was deficient; as such, defendant failed to preserve the argument for review, and the submission of the aggravating circumstances to the jury was not a situation that fell within a Wicks exception. Springs v. State, 368 Ark. 256, 244 S.W.3d 683 (2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 939, 127 S. Ct. 2257, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1100 (2007).

Where defendant failed to renew his directed-verdict motion following the state's rebuttal testimony, his sufficiency arguments were not preserved for appeal and the appellate court could not reach the merits of his argument. Deshazo v. State, 95 Ark. App. 398, 237 S.W.3d 493 (2006).

Defendant's conviction for rape was affirmed as his arguments concerning sufficiency of the evidence, under subsection (c) of this rule, were not preserved for appellate review. Stone v. State, 371 Ark. 78, 263 S.W.3d 553 (2007).

Defendant's sufficiency-of-the-evidence challenge to his theft-of-property charges was not properly preserved for review under subsections (a) and (c) of this rule because defendant moved only for a directed verdict on the capital-murder, aggravated-robbery, and residential-burglary charges; thus, review was limited only to those convictions. Young v. State, 371 Ark. 393, 266 S.W.3d 744 (2007).

In a case alleging rape, kidnapping, and third-degree domestic battery, a sufficiency of the evidence argument was not preserved for review because defendant argued on the first time on appeal that the amount of restraint or force used did not warrant a kidnapping conviction and a third-degree battery conviction in addition to the rape. This was not the same argument raised during a directed verdict motion. Rounsaville v. State, 372 Ark. 252, 273 S.W.3d 486 (2008).

Defendant's conviction for unlawful discharge of a firearm from a vehicle was upheld where defendant's argument regarding the sufficiency of the evidence was not preserved for appellate review; defense counsel failed to make the specific motion regarding lack of evidence to prove serious physical injury at the close of the state's case. Maxwell v. State, 373 Ark. 553, 285 S.W.3d 195 (2008).

Appellate court was precluded from considering the merits of defendant's argument that insufficient evidence of accomplice liability was presented to support his conviction of capital murder because defense counsel failed to make a specific motion regarding the lack of evidence to prove that defendant was an accomplice. Bienemy v. State, 374 Ark. 232, 287 S.W.3d 551 (2008).

Defendant convicted of first degree murder under § 5-10-102(a) failed to preserve his complaint that the evidence of intent was insufficient by failing to make a motion for directed verdict at the close of the state's case and at the close of all the evidence, as required by this rule. Brown v. State, 374 Ark. 324, 287 S.W.3d 587 (2008).

Argument that defendant made on appeal regarding the denial of a directed verdict motion under subsection (a) of this rule was not the same argument that defendant made at trial; thus, the argument on appeal was not preserved for appellate review. Williams v. State, 375 Ark. 132, 289 S.W.3d 97 (2008).

An appellate court declined to reach the merits of defendant's argument that a trial court should have granted defendant's motion for a directed verdict on accomplice liability and that the state was pursuing inconsistent theories because the judgment against an alleged accomplice did not indicate the state's theory of the accomplice's criminal responsibility. Bradley v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 714, 370 S.W.3d 263 (2009).

Defendant failed to preserve for review that the evidence was insufficient to show that he committed theft by receiving of the car keys, because his motion to the trial court for a directed verdict was made too late, when defendant the motion during discussion of jury instructions, after both sides had rested. Lewis v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 504, 323 S.W.3d 640 (2009).

Defendant failed to preserve for review that there was no evidence that he had a shotgun upon entering the victim's home, because the issue was not argued before the trial court. Lewis v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 504, 323 S.W.3d 640 (2009).

Where defendant was convicted of four counts of battery, his motion for a directed verdict did not challenge whether the state had proved that he committed serious physical injury under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life; therefore, the issue was not preserved for appellate review under this rule. Davis v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 573 (2009).

During defendant's criminal trial for first degree felon murder in violation of § 5-10-102(a)(1) with theft as the underlying felony under § 5-36-103, defendant challenged the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the theft charge but did not file a motion for a directed verdict challenging the sufficiency of the evidence supporting his conviction for first degree felony murder; therefore, the issue was not preserved for appellate review. Lockhart v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 587 (2009).

Where a state trooper discovered two kilograms of cocaine in duct-taped packages found in a car during a traffic stop, defendants gave incriminating statements; at trial, they made no pretrial motion to suppress the evidence or the statements under Ark. R. Crim. P. 16.2. Defendants' motion for a directed verdict, which was labeled as a motion to dismiss, was not an adequate attempt to suppress the evidence; therefore, any issue concerning the admission of the evidence or defendants' statements was not preserved for review. Camacho-Mendoza v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 597, 330 S.W.3d 46 (2009).

Defendant made a directed-verdict motion at the close of the state's case in chief, but failed to renew his directed-verdict motion after the presentation of the state's rebuttal testimony as required by subsection (a) of this rule; therefore, his challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence supporting his conviction for rape was not preserved for review. Rouzer v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 658 (2009).

While defendant brought a motion for a directed verdict during a rape trial, the motion failed to identify in what respect the evidence was insufficient and, therefore, did not preserve the argument for appeal under subsection (a) of this rule. Accordingly, the appellate court would not address the merits of defendant's argument as to the sufficiency of the evidence. Rye v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 839, 373 S.W.3d 354 (2009).

Juvenile's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence was unpreserved, as the juvenile failed to make a motion to dismiss at the close of all of the evidence that was specific enough to advise the circuit court of the exact element of the crime that the state had failed to prove; counsel did not argue the failure to prove the specific element of the offense for second-degree murder. T.C. v. State, 2010 Ark. 208, 364 S.W.3d 53 (2010).

Defendant waived some of his arguments for purposes of appeal under subsection (c) of this rule because he failed to raise them in his motion to dismiss; even so, the assertions were matters that were within the province of the trier of fact to determine credibility, and the trier of fact's credibility determinations, and the trial court did not find the testimony on these subjects worthy of belief. Lee v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 15 (2010).

In a case in which defendant was convicted on theft of property, in violation of § 5-36-103, and he argued on appeal that the evidence was insufficient to show that the value of the property exceeded $2,500 or more, he had not preserved that issue for appeal. His motion under subsection (b) of this rule for dismissal and renewal of that motion made no mention whatsoever of the value of the stolen property. Walker v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 63 (2010).

Defendant's second-degree sexual assault conviction, pursuant to § 5-14-125(a)(3), was proper because defendant's argument that the state failed to offer proof that defendant touched the victim for the purpose of obtaining sexual gratification was not raised below and therefore, pursuant to subsections (a) and (c) of this rule, could not be addressed on appeal. Ross v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 129 (2010).

Juvenile's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence was unpreserved, as the juvenile failed to make a motion to dismiss at the close of all of the evidence that was specific enough to advise the circuit court of the exact element of the crime that the state had failed to prove; counsel did not argue the failure to prove the specific element of the offense for second-degree murder. T.C. v. State, 2010 Ark. 208, 364 S.W.3d 53 (2010).

When defendant was convicted of simultaneously possessing drugs and firearms, in violation of § 5-74-106(a)(1), defendant did not waive, for appellate review, the issue of whether sufficient evidence showed defendant possessed a firearm by not renewing a directed verdict motion at the close of all evidence because defendant moved for a directed verdict at the close of the state's evidence, and defendant did not present any evidence. Patton v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 453 (2010).

When defendant was convicted of being a felon in possession of a firearm, defendant did not preserve for appellate review the issue of whether sufficient evidence showed defendant possessed a firearm because defendant made no motion for a directed verdict. Patton v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 453 (2010).

Two of defendant's challenges to the sufficiency of the evidence were not preserved for appellate review because, at trial, defendant had moved to dismiss in the time and manner directed by subsections (b) and (c) of this rule, but defendant's argument was simply that the state failed to establish possession of the controlled substances. Jacobs v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 860 (2010).

Since defendant failed to raise in his dismissal motion the particular grounds he argued on appeal, as required by this rule, the court declined to address his argument. Brown v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 150, 381 S.W.3d 175 (2011).

Defendant never argued to the trial court that the state's evidence proved a Class B felony kidnapping pursuant to § 5-11-102, but not Class Y. Accordingly, defendant failed to comply with the requirements of subsections (a) and (c) of this rule, and the issue was not preserved for appellate review. Sweet v. State, 2011 Ark. 20, 370 S.W.3d 510 (2011).

As defendant's counsel properly moved for a directed verdict pursuant to subsections (a) and

(c) of this rule, the issue of whether the evidence was sufficient to support the convictions was properly preserved for review on appeal. Jackson v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 528, 385 S.W.3d 394 (2011).

Credibility arguments relating to a conviction for second-degree sexual assault were not preserved for appellate review because appellant presented different arguments at the trial court level; appellant argued that the charge was a lesser-included offense of rape and that the element of sexual gratification was not proven. Arguments not raised at trial were not addressed for the first time on appeal, and appellant was not able to change the grounds for his directed verdict motion on appeal. Clayton v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 199 (2012).

Defendant's failure to move for a directed verdict on the ground that the substance he possessed was amphetamine, not methamphetamine precluded the court from reviewing the issue. Ashley v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 131, 388 S.W.3d 914 (2012).

Where defendant's directed-verdict motion did not specify any deficiency in the state's proof, the reviewing court could not consider defendant's claim that the evidence at trial was insufficient to convict him of first-degree murder. Plessy v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 74, 388 S.W.3d 509 (2012).

Defendant convicted of the lesser-included offense of second-degree battery waived a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence supporting his conviction where he did not argue in his motions for directed verdict that an element of second-degree battery was not proven. Ches-tang v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 222 (2012).

Defendant's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence supporting a theft of property conviction was not preserved for appellate review under subsection (c) of this rule as defendant failed to make a directed verdict motion regarding the particular charge. Nickelson v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 363, 417 S.W.3d 214 (2012).

Defendant's challenge to the denial of his motions for a directed verdict, which were filed during his trial for failure to register as a sex offender, was not preserved for review under subsection (c) of this rule; the directed verdict motions did not contain any reference to a specific element of absent proof in the crimes for which he was charged. Reed v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 225 (2012).

Juvenile's argument that a trial court erred in denying the juvenile's motion to dismiss a second-degree battery disposition was not preserved for review under subdivisions (b) and (c) of this rule; counsel for the juvenile failed to make the specific motions regarding lack of evidence to prove serious physical injury and the lack of evidence to prove culpable mental state. L.C. v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 666, 424 S.W.3d 887 (2012).

In a case alleging rape and other offenses, the merits of defendant's challenge to the denial of his motion to dismiss were not reached because he changed the basis of his argument on appeal. Defendant sought to change the basis of his directed-verdict motion on appeal to include alleged errors relating to the admission of certain witnesses' testimony. Dowdy v. State, 2015 Ark. 35 (2015).

Motion to dismiss was not required to preserve for appellate review the issue of whether the DWI statute, codified at § 5-65-103, requires proof of a culpable mental state. This rule requires a motion to dismiss only where the defendant seeks to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence. The rule does not require such a motion where the defendant raises an issue of law or statutory interpretation. Leeka v. State, 2015 Ark. 183, 461 S.W.3d 331 (2015), superseded by statute as stated in Tackett v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 271, 523 S.W.3d 360 (2017), superseded by statute as stated in Small v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 80, 543 S.W.3d 516 (2018), superseded by statute as stated in Cordero v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 484, 588 S.W.3d 369 (2019).

Defendant's point on appeal, that the state failed to negate defendant's claim of justification, was not preserved for appellate review because, at the conclusion of the evidence, defendant failed to renew his dismissal motion, challenging the sufficiency of the state's evidence to negate defendant's justification defense. Furthermore, defendant's justification argument made in defendant's closing argument could not preserve defendant's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence. Doty v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 193 (2015).

Pursuant to this rule, defendant made and renewed a specific directed-verdict motion at the close of the State's case and at the close of all the evidence, so his argument was preserved for review. Starling v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 429, 468 S.W.3d 294 (2015).

Sufficiency-of-the-evidence challenge to defendant's conviction for possession of drug paraphernalia was not specifically made such that the appellate court could review that conviction. Jordan v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 255, 492 S.W.3d 543 (2016).

Manslaughter defendant's argument that a directed verdict was warranted due to a lack of testimony that he did anything reckless was not preserved for appellate review where he did not specifically renew or otherwise incorporate by reference his previous argument regarding recklessness at the close of all the evidence. Ewells v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 321, 603 S.W.3d 210 (2020).

Defendant's argument that the circuit court erred in denying her motion for a directed verdict on two counts of first-degree battery was not addressed where she generally argued that the State failed to prove that she did not act in self-defense and did not offer a specific element that the State failed to disprove. Boston v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 551, 613 S.W.3d 764 (2020).

Applicability.

The 1999 amendment to subsection (b) of this rule applied to a juvenile proceeding arising out of an incident which occurred prior to the effective date of the amendment where the adjudication hearing occurred after the effective date of the amendment as the amendment did not criminalize conduct that was previously non-criminal, did not increase the severity or harshness of the punishment for the offense, and did not deprive the juvenile of a defense that was available to him at the time he committed the offense with which he was charged. Trammell v. State, 70 Ark. App. 210, 16 S.W.3d 564 (2000).

Bench Trial.

In a trial by the court without a jury, it is unnecessary to raise the question of sufficiency of the evidence by motion at the close of the trial to preserve the issue for appeal. Igwe v. State, 312 Ark. 220, 849 S.W.2d 462 (1993), superseded by statute as stated in Harvey v. State, 2004 Ark. App. LEXIS 334 (Ark. Ct. App. Apr. 28, 2004).

Although defendant moved for a directed verdict, the motion was actually a motion for dismissal pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule because the motion was made in a bench trial, not a jury trial. Turner v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 214 (2010).

Defendant did not preserve the question of the sufficiency of the evidence supporting defendant's conviction, in a bench trial, of misdemeanor theft, for appellate review, because (1) it was apparent that defendant's counsel's statement asking the court to find defendant not guilty was in the nature of a closing argument, and (2) defendant's counsel never moved for dismissal before making this closing argument, as required by this rule. Higgins v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 442 (2010).

Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence; although defense counsel moved for dismissal at the close of the State's case in defendant's bench trial, defense counsel did not renew his motion at the close of all the evidence, and he did not move to dismiss until the sentencing phase. Under this rule, counsel did not have to move to dismiss at the close of the State's case, but if he did, he had to renew it at the end. Sellers v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 210 (2013).

In a bench trial, because defendant did not renew his motion to dismiss as to the battery charge and never moved to dismiss as to the residential burglary charge, defendant's arguments on appeal concerning the sufficiency of the evidence were not preserved. Smith v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 374 (2020).

Although defendant in a bench trial challenged the amount of damages following the presentation of the first-degree criminal mischief case by the State, defendant failed to challenge it in her renewed motion to dismiss at the conclusion of all the evidence. Because defendant failed to challenge the damage amount in her renewed motion, the issue was not preserved. Sharp v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 506, 588 S.W.3d 770 (2019).

In a bench trial, because defendant did not renew defendant's motion to dismiss as to the battery charge and never moved to dismiss as to the residential burglary charge, defendant's arguments on appeal concerning the sufficiency of the evidence were not preserved. Smith v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 374 (2020).

Close of the Case.

Where defense moved for a directed verdict at the close of the state's case and renewed the motion at the close of the defense's case-in-chief, but the state presented a rebuttal case, then the defense's failure to further renew the motion until after the state made its closing arguments, i.e., after the jury had been charged, meant that the motion was not renewed "at the close of the case," and the sufficiency of evidence argument was not preserved for review. Rankin v. State, 329 Ark. 379, 948 S.W.2d 397 (1997).

For purposes of determining whether a motion for directed verdict is made again at the close of the case in a prosecution of multiple defendants, the relevant point in time is the close of each individual defendant's case. Williams v. State, 338 Ark. 178, 992 S.W.2d 89 (1999).

Defendant, who was convicted of murdering his girlfriend and of kidnapping her two grandchildren, waived his argument that there was insufficient evidence to sustain the kidnapping convictions by not renewing his motion for directed verdict at the close of the State's rebuttal testimony. Smith v. State, 347 Ark. 277, 61 S.W.3d 168 (2001).

The appellant failed to move for dismissal at the close of the evidence pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule where he made his motion as part of and during his closing argument, after the state gave its closing argument. J.R. v. State, 73 Ark. App. 194, 40 S.W.3d 342 (2001).

In a capital murder trial, appellant properly preserved a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence on appeal by moving for a directed verdict at the close of the state's case and again at the close of all the evidence, as required by this rule. Barrett v. State, 354 Ark. 187, 119 S.W.3d 485 (2003).

Defendant failed to make a specific motion regarding the sufficiency of the evidence to prove the charges of kidnapping and terroristic threatening at both the close of the state's case and the close of all of the evidence; accordingly, his sufficiency argument relating to the jury's verdict on those two charges was not preserved for the supreme court's review. Rounsaville v. State, 2009 Ark. 479, 346 S.W.3d 289 (2009).

Defendant preserved a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence supporting his possession of marijuana conviction by making a specific motion for a directed verdict at the close of the State's case; defendant renewed the motion again at the close of all the evidence. Duggar v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 135, 427 S.W.3d 77 (2013).

Construction.

Where defendant made a motion for a directed verdict at the close of the state's evidence, but failed to do so at the close of the case, and 2 days after his conviction, he filed a motion for a directed verdict or a judgment non-obstante verdicto on the conviction; the motion made 2 days after the jury verdict was in fact a motion for a new trial, and thus, the court declined to address the defendant's sufficiency of the evidence issue. Easter v. State, 306 Ark. 452, 815 S.W.2d 924 (1991).

This rule is stated in the conjunctive, clearly requiring the motion to be made in both instances. Hayes v. State, 312 Ark. 349, 849 S.W.2d 501 (1993).

Counsel as well as trial courts have often, in their efforts to expedite proceedings, treated various matters, including motions for directed verdict, in a rather cursory fashion; however, the appellate court's strict construction of this rule requires that a motion for a directed verdict be specifically made. Cummings v. State, 315 Ark. 541, 869 S.W.2d 17 (1994).

While it is true that S. Ct. & Ct. App. Rule 4-3(h) requires the Arkansas Supreme Court to review the record for error in life and death cases, this review presupposes that sufficient an objection was made at trial; where defendant failed to make a specific motion for directed verdict indicating the particular deficiencies in the State's proof, it is as if he failed to object at all, and that failure below precluded review of the sufficiency of the evidence on appeal. Webb v. State, 327 Ark. 51, 938 S.W.2d 806 (1997).

In a criminal appeal, the appellate court was precluded from reviewing appellant's sufficiency claim because appellant failed to move at trial to dismiss the state's case at the close of evidence based on the insufficiency of evidence. Raymond v. State, 354 Ark. 157, 118 S.W.3d 567 (2003).

Contempt.

Circuit court did not err in finding a witness in criminal contempt because he did not inform counsel for a legislative audit committee that he had a conflict, but merely left a voicemail that he was not going to appear at the hearing, his reasons for failing to answer a subpoena did not amount to good cause, the petition and order to show cause sufficiently provided the witness with notice that he was accused of criminal contempt, and he did not preserve his sufficiency-of-the-evidence claim. Valley v. Pulaski County Circuit Court, 2014 Ark. 112, 431 S.W.3d 916 (2014).

Denial of Motion.

It was defendant's brother who fired the shot that killed the victim, and although defendant claimed the State failed to prove it was his conscious object to assist his brother, the law in Arkansas made no distinction between the criminal liability of a principal and an accomplice; defendant drove around with the stated purpose to assist in hunting down and killing the victim, and thus the evidence supported his convictions of first-degree murder and committing a terroristic act, and the circuit court properly denied his motions for directed verdict. Starling v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 429, 468 S.W.3d 294 (2015).

Substantial evidence was presented that defendant possessed a useable amount of cocaine, as there was testimony that the cocaine sample was both weighable and detectable and equaled 0.3082 grams, plus the cocaine could be seen with the naked eye and was tangible; the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict. Robinson v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 240, 491 S.W.3d 481 (2016).

Evidence linked defendant to the marijuana and supported a finding that he constructively possessed it, given that the marijuana was discovered on the driver's side of the vehicle wedged between defendant's seat and the center console right next to his leg, he was driving the car, showing he exercised dominion and control over it, and the officer smelled the odor of marijuana when he approached the vehicle; the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict. Robinson v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 240, 491 S.W.3d 481 (2016).

Lesser Included Offenses.

A defendant is required to address the lesser-included offenses in his motion for a directed verdict to preserve on appeal a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence necessary to support a conviction for a lesser-included offense; failure to question the sufficiency of the evidence for lesser-included offenses, either by name or by apprising the trial court of the elements of the lesser-included offenses, at the close of the state's case constituted a waiver of the argument. Jordan v. State, 323 Ark. 628, 917 S.W.2d 164 (1996).

To preserve for appeal the issue of sufficiency of the evidence to support a conviction of a lesser-included offense, a defendant's motion for directed verdict must address the elements of the lesser-included offense. Moore v. State, 330 Ark. 514, 954 S.W.2d 932 (1997).

Where defendant moved for a directed verdict as to first-degree battery on the theory that the State failed to prove he caused serious physical injury to another person, defendant's challenge to the battery conviction was waived where the jury convicted the defendant of second-degree battery and defendant did not argue any aspect of second-battery in his motion for directed verdict. Brown v. State, 347 Ark. 308, 65 S.W.3d 394 (2001).

Preservation for Review.

Defense counsel made the motion that the State had not proven that defendant was in possession of the cocaine, and by addressing the specific deficiency of proof required to support the circuit court's ruling, in this case possession, defense counsel's motion was made with enough detail to preserve the motion to dismiss. Clark v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 679, 477 S.W.3d 544 (2015).

In a rape case, an appellate court did not reach the merits of defendant's sufficiency of the evidence argument because defendant's argument made before the trial court relating to sexual gratification was significantly different from the argument made on appeal. Even if the argument was considered on appeal, the evidence was sufficient to prove the crime of rape since the five-year-old victim testified that defendant put his hand in her panties and tickled her private part. Matar v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 243, 492 S.W.3d 106 (2016).

Defendant's credibility argument was not preserved because it was not mentioned in his motion to dismiss. Oliver v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 332, 498 S.W.3d 320 (2016).

Although defendant argued that another person fired the shots from the vehicle, for purposes of his unlawful discharge of a firearm from a vehicle conviction, defendant did not raise this issue in his motion to dismiss, and although he did raise the issue in closing argument, that was not a substitute for a motion to dismiss; the issue was not preserved for review. Oliver v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 332, 498 S.W.3d 320 (2016).

In a motion for a directed verdict at the close of the State's case, in which no specific element of the offense of sexual indecency with a child was challenged, and, at the close of all the evidence, in which defendant renewed his motion for directed verdict but added that the State had failed to prove solicitation where the explicit story sent to the victim, defendant's younger stepdaughter, did not request or ask the victim to do anything sexual, defendant's failure to make a specific motion for directed verdict at the close of the State's case rendered the lack of sufficient proof of the solicitation issue not preserved for appellate review. Camp- bell v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 59, 512 S.W.3d 663 (2017).

Appellant's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence was wholly without merit where he had failed to move for dismissal at the close of all evidence at trial, as required by this rule, and thus any argument pertaining to the sufficiency of the evidence to support his convictions had been waived. Griffin v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 400 (2017).

Defendant's argument that the State failed to provide substantial evidence of forcible compulsion of the alleged sexual assault victim was not preserved for review in defendant's motions for a directed verdict and for a new trial as the argument was not made at the close of the prosecution's case. In fact, when defendant's attorney renewed defendant's motion for a directed verdict at the close of the defense case, defendant's attorney specifically said that defendant had a new argument and then made the argument. Taffner v. State, 2018 Ark. 99, 541 S.W.3d 430 (2018).

Defendant's challenge to the sufficiency of evidence was not preserved for review where his directed-verdict motion was general in nature and lacked the requisite specificity required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.1. Dorth v. State, 2018 Ark. 135, 544 S.W.3d 518 (2018).

Defendant's motion for directed verdict was too general to preserve the constructive-possession argument he raised on appeal because the motion merely stated that defendant did not possess the firearm, and defendant did not argue that the State failed to prove that he constructively possessed the firearm. McKinney v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 10, 538 S.W.3d 216 (2018), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 1155, 206 L. Ed. 2d 206 (2020).

In a first-degree murder case, the appellate court was precluded from reaching defendant's sufficiency-of-the-evidence arguments on appeal because defendant failed to strictly comply with this rule, specifically, (1) defendant's initial directed-verdict motion was too general and lacked any specific challenge to the State's proof; (2) defendant's motion did not mention credibility of witnesses or the requirement of corroboration of accomplice testimony; and (3) even if the initial motion contained the necessary specificity and included these arguments, appellant failed to renew the motion for directed verdict at the appropriate time. Bullock v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 118, 544 S.W.3d 566 (2018).

Defendant's arguments on appeal that the evidence was insufficient to support his convictions were not preserved for review; neither of the arguments defendant made on appeal was the argument he made to the circuit court in his directed-verdict motions. Sampson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 160, 544 S.W.3d 580 (2018).

In a case in which defendant was convicted of committing aggravated assault on a family or household member, defendant's motion for directed verdict was too general to preserve the sufficiency-of-the-evidence issue for appellate review as it asserted only that the State failed to prove that the act occurred or that defendant committed the act; defendant's renewed motion for directed verdict added a challenge to the victim's credibility, which was too late as it was required to be raised in the initial motion for directed verdict; and defendant's challenge on appeal to a witness's credibility was not raised in either the initial motion or in the renewed motion for directed verdict. Even if the issues had been preserved, however, the trial court would not have erred in denying the motion for directed verdict. Daniels v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 334, 551 S.W.3d 428 (2018).

Challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence supporting a juvenile delinquency adjudication was not preserved for review where the dismissal motion did not address § 5-71-208(a)(4), which was referenced in the State's petition, and defense counsel argued below that defendant had not committed harassment pursuant to § 5-71-208(a)(1) or (a)(2), but counsel did not argue any deficiency with respect to the elements of either of those subdivisions or § 5-71-208(a)(4). K.O. v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 5, 569 S.W.3d 344 (2019).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for directed verdict because defendant failed to adequately develop and support his challenge that the disorderly conduct statute was unconstitutionally overbroad as applied to him; defendant failed to identify and make clear whether the constitutional violation involved the Arkansas Constitution, the United States Constitution, or both, and he also failed to cite to any case law in his motion. Newman v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 38, 567 S.W.3d 110 (2019).

In an appeal of convictions for second-degree battery and aggravated residential burglary, the appellate court could not address defendant's argument that the evidence was insufficient to negate self-defense because it was not preserved for appeal. Defendant's directed-verdict motion to the circuit court did not mention self-defense or the elements of self-defense the State failed to negate. Thompson v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 391 (2019).

Juvenile's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence supporting his adjudication in a bench trial was not preserved for appellate review where defense counsel failed to renew the motion to dismiss at the close of all the evidence. The juvenile was present and had every opportunity to renew the motion for dismissal, and any constitutional challenge concerning the procedures required to preserve a sufficiency issue during a delinquency hearing had to first be argued below. A.J.A. v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 464, 588 S.W.3d 92 (2019).

Defendant's conviction for breaking and entering was affirmed without reaching the merit of his sufficiency challenge where he failed to move for a directed verdict on the "purpose" argument he was making on appeal and thus failed to preserve the argument for appellate review. Daniels v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 507, 588 S.W.3d 407 (2019).

In a case under § 5-14-103(a)(3), defendant's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence was not preserved because he made only a general directed verdict motion without specifying the respect in which the evidence was deficient; and, in any event, the victim's testimony was substantial evidence to support defendant's convictions and credibility determinations are within the jury's province. Peoples v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 559, 590 S.W.3d 783 (2019).

Defendant's argument that the evidence was insufficient to sustain his conviction for felon in possession of a firearm under § 5-73-103 was preserved for review despite the State's argument concerning defendant's failure to use the word "constructive" in his directed verdict motion at the close of the State's case; the broad term "possession" encompassed the more precise term "constructive possession" because defendant essentially argued constructive possession in his initial directed verdict motion. Bens v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 6, 593 S.W.3d 495 (2020).

For the first time on appeal, defendant specifically argued that the State failed to prove in his trial for nonsupport that he was $25,000 or more behind on his child support obligations. This challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence was not preserved for appeal because the directed verdict motion made below did not specifically allege that the State's proof was insufficient as to the amount of unpaid child support. Turley v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 118 (2020).

In a prosecution for possession of methamphetamine, defendant did not preserve his challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence because his oral motion for a directed verdict did not satisfy this rule, as he did not make with enough precision in the circuit court the argument that the State failed to prove that he constructively possessed contraband. Lambert v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 557, 613 S.W.3d 768 (2020).

Defendant's motion for directed verdict was sufficient to preserve defendant's sufficiency of the evidence challenge because the motion for directed verdict demonstrated that defendant advised the circuit court of the exact element of first-degree murder that defendant contended the State failed to prove—purpose. Hayes v. State, 2020 Ark. 297 (2020).

In a prosecution for possession of methamphetamine, defendant did not preserve his challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence because his oral motion for a directed verdict did not satisfy this rule, as he did not make with enough precision in the circuit court the argument that the State failed to prove that he constructively possessed contraband. Lambert v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 557, 613 S.W.3d 768 (2020).

Purpose.

A motion for a directed verdict at the close of the state's case has as its purpose a procedure for determining whether the state has met the burden of establishing a prima facie case, with that question to be resolved by the court as a matter of law. Rudd v. State, 308 Ark. 401, 825 S.W.2d 565 (1992).

Record.

Where the record failed to reflect defendant's motion for a directed verdict at the end of the trial, appellant could have corrected and had the record modified but failing to do so, his claim was not preserved for review. Shankle v. State, 309 Ark. 40, 827 S.W.2d 642 (1992).

Subsection (a) of this rule requires a defendant to make a motion for directed verdict at the close of the evidence offered by the prosecution and at the close of all the evidence, and the motion must recite the specific grounds in support of the requested directed verdict; further, the failure of a defendant to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence at the times and in the manner required will constitute a waiver of any question pertaining to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict under subsection (c) of this rule. Robinson v. State, 353 Ark. 372, 108 S.W.3d 622 (2003).

Renewal of Motion.

Defendant was procedurally barred from raising the issue of sufficiency of the evidence as to kidnapping and rape, since he failed to renew his motion for directed verdict at the close of all of the evidence. Brooks v. State, 308 Ark. 660, 827 S.W.2d 119 (1992); Cummings v. State, 315 Ark. 541, 869 S.W.2d 17 (1994).

A motion for a directed verdict at the close of the entire case is rendered necessary, of course, by virtue of the automatic waiver that occurs when the defendant proceeds to mount a case. Cummings v. State, 315 Ark. 541, 869 S.W.2d 17 (1994).

Motion for directed verdict must be renewed at the end of the "close of the case." An attempt to renew a motion for directed verdict after the jury has been charged is not timely and is not in compliance with this rule. Claiborne v. State, 319 Ark. 602, 892 S.W.2d 511 (1995).

Defendant complied with this rule when he made a directed verdict motion at the close of the state's case specifying the grounds, made a second motion for directed verdict at the conclusion of his case, incorporating the arguments made in connection with his initial motion, and, after rebuttal, at the close of all the evidence, simply stated "I would renew all previous motions I have made"; the defendant is not required to restate his grounds for directed verdict when the defendant has made a specific motion at the close of the state's case, and incorporates the same arguments by the later renewal. Durham v. State, 320 Ark. 689, 899 S.W.2d 470 (1995).

In prosecution for aggravated robbery, defendant was procedurally barred from challenging the sufficiency of the evidence because he failed to renew his motion for a directed verdict at the close of all evidence. Love v. State, 324 Ark. 526, 922 S.W.2d 701 (1996).

Issue of sufficiency not preserved for appeal where defendant renewed the motion for directed verdict as required by subsection (b) of this rule, but failed to obtain a ruling on the renewed motion. Danzie v. State, 326 Ark. 34, 930 S.W.2d 310 (1996).

Issue of sufficiency not preserved for appeal where defendant renewed his motion for directed verdict as required by this rule, but failed to obtain a ruling on the renewed motion. Danzie v. State, 326 Ark. 34, 930 S.W.2d 310 (1996).

The motion for directed verdict must be renewed at the close of the case; an attempt to renew a motion after the jury has been charged is not timely. Webb v. State, 326 Ark. 878, 935 S.W.2d 250 (1996).

Despite the "in every instance" language in Ark. R. Civ. P. 50(a), as long as a specific basis was articulated for the original directed-verdict motion, a general renewal is sufficient. Dale v. State, 55 Ark. App. 184, 935 S.W.2d 274 (1996).

Defendant did not preserve for appellate review his challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence that he acted with a culpable mental state where he failed to renew his motion for a directed verdict after the prosecution presented rebuttal evidence. Williams v. State, 56 Ark. App. 156, 940 S.W.2d 500 (1997).

In a murder trial, because defendant failed to renew her motion for a directed verdict following the state's rebuttal, as required by this rule, the appellate court could not consider defendant's sufficiency of the evidence argument on appeal. Doss v. State, 351 Ark. 667, 97 S.W.3d 413 (2003).

Defendant failed to comply with the requirements of this rule where she failed to make a renewed motion for dismissal at the close of the evidence; because defendant failed to comply with this rule, her sufficiency argument was not preserved for appeal. Maxwell v. State, 359 Ark. 335, 197 S.W.3d 442 (2004).

Defendant's argument relating to the sufficiency of the evidence was not preserved for appellate review because defendant failed to make a directed verdict motion at the close of the state's evidence and again at the close of all the evidence, as required by this rule. Fisher v. State, 84 Ark. App. 318, 139 S.W.3d 815 (2004).

Defendant's failure to renew his motion for directed verdict at the close of all the evidence operated as a waiver of his challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the jury's verdict, and the issue is not preserved for review under subsections (a) and (c) of this rule. Chunestudy v. State, 2012 Ark. 222, 408 S.W.3d 55 (2012).

Sufficiency of the evidence argument by a juvenile who was adjudicated delinquent was not preserved for the appellate court's review; while the juvenile's motion for a directed verdict was specific, the juvenile failed to renew it at the close of all the evidence. B.J. v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 310, 462 S.W.3d 709 (2015).

Defendant's failure to renew his motion for directed verdict at the close of the evidence constituted a waiver of any sufficiency-of-the-evidence issue on appeal. Ross v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 613, 474 S.W.3d 539 (2015).

Merits of defendant's sufficiency challenges could not be addressed on appeal where he failed to renew his motions for a directed verdict after he was given permission to reopen the evidence to submit medical records. Gamet v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 206, 518 S.W.3d 130 (2017).

Defendant did not preserve an appellate argument that defendant's truck was defendant's home on the road, permitting the defense under § 5-74-106 that defendant was in defendant's home and defendant's gun was not readily accessible; even if defendant sufficiently articulated the argument at the close of the State's case, defendant did not renew the argument at the close of all the evidence. Steen v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 156, 545 S.W.3d 789 (2018).

Defendant's argument that the evidence was insufficient to support his first-degree battery conviction was not preserved for appeal. Although defendant's attorney moved for directed verdict in the bench trial at the close of the State's case, he did not renew his motion at the close of all the evidence. Gadsden v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 153, 570 S.W.3d 527 (2019).

Revocation Proceedings.

The rule applies to probation revocation proceedings and requires a defendant in such a proceeding to move for dismissal, stating the specific grounds therefor, in order to preserve the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict or judgment. Miner v. State, 342 Ark. 283, 28 S.W.3d 280 (2000), overruled, Barbee v. State, 346 Ark. 185, 56 S.W.3d 370 (2001).

The rule applies to a hearing to revoke a suspended sentence. Thompson v. State, 342 Ark. 365, 28 S.W.3d 290 (2000).

A defendant is not required to move for dismissal or directed verdict under this rule in a probation revocation proceeding in order to preserve error on appeal. Barbee v. State, 346 Ark. 185, 56 S.W.3d 370 (2001).

Defendant in a revocation proceeding was not required to comply with this rule regarding motions for directed verdict in order to preserve the issue of the sufficiency of the evidence; consequently, she was not precluded from raising a sufficiency issue on appeal of the revocation. Brown v. State, 85 Ark. App. 382, 155 S.W.3d 22 (2004).

In a probation revocation proceeding, a sufficiency of the evidence argument was preserved for review because this rule and its requirements did not apply to probation revocation proceedings. Short v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 335 (2016).

—In General.

A motion for a directed verdict at the close of the case is something more than a matter of mere form: it goes to the substance of the evidence arrayed against the criminal defendant, and is not a technicality subject to “tidying up” in chambers. Thomas v. State, 315 Ark. 504, 868 S.W.2d 483 (1994).

A general motion is insufficient to preserve a defendant’s argument that the statutory elements of his crime were not proved. Stewart v. State, 320 Ark. 75, 894 S.W.2d 930 (1995).

General motion insufficient to preserve challenge of sufficiency of evidence on appeal. Smallwood v. State, 326 Ark. 813, 935 S.W.2d 530 (1996).

Argument that there was insufficient evidence to support a kidnapping conviction based on a lack of evidence on the element of restraint without consent was not preserved for appellate review because a motion for the directed verdict before the trial court did not raise this issue. Davis v. State, 365 Ark. 634, 232 S.W.3d 476 (2006).

Defendant’s challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence was procedurally barred because he made only a general directed-verdict motion to the trial court. White v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 588 (2010).

Counsel’s motion for acquittal on a charge of aggravated residential burglary based upon the insufficient evidence of the elements of the charge failed to satisfy the requirements of subsections (a) and (c) of this rule because counsel did not specify how the evidence was insufficient. Bell v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 5 (2011).

Defendant’s prior contempt proceedings did not present a double-jeopardy bar to the state’s prosecution for criminal nonsupport, § 5-26-401, because each time defendant failed to pay his child support, he offended his ongoing duty to provide support; the state was not seeking to punish defendant for the acts of nonpayment for which he had already been punished, but rather, the state was attempting to penalize defendant for a violation of the statute for which he had not yet been punished. Halpaine v. State, 2011 Ark. 517, 385 S.W.3d 838 (2011).

In a driving while intoxicated case, several issues were barred on appeal because they were not adequately raised in a directed verdict motion. Appellant was bound by the scope and nature of the motion and was unable to change the grounds on appeal. Carruth v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 305 (2012), reprinted, 2012 Ark. App. LEXIS 432 (Ark. Ct. App. May 2, 2012).

In a drug case, because a motion for a directed verdict pertained only to the sufficiency of the evidence to support a finding that appellant possessed cocaine and methamphetamine seized from an apartment, and appellant did not argue at trial that there was insufficient evidence of an intent-to-deliver element of the offenses, that issue was procedurally barred. Review was limited as to whether there was substantial evidence to support a jury’s conclusion that appellant possessed the controlled substances at issue. Robelo v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 425, 421 S.W.3d 329 (2012).

Defendant’s convictions for robbery and aggravated residential burglary were supported by sufficient evidence because he failed to preserve his arguments for appeal where his directed-verdict motions were only general assertions that the State had failed to prove the elements of the offenses and did not specify the respect in which the evidence was deficient, and did not comply with the criminal procedure rules. Rayfield v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 123 (2014).

Defendant’s challenge to his conviction for committing a terroristic act was waived; while he made a motion for dismissal at trial and also renewed his motion after the State presented rebuttal testimony, it was not preserved for review where he changed the grounds for his argument on appeal from insufficient evidence to identify him as the shooter based solely on the victim’s testimony to whether he had the requisite intent to commit the offense. Thomas v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 88 (2015).

Circuit court properly denied defendant’s motion for directed verdict because none of his arguments on appeal were presented during his motion and there was sufficient evidence to support his convictions for rape and sexual assault where the victim testified that defendant came into her bedroom and explained that his penis went inside her vagina, the DNA on a stain in her underwear was consistent with defendant’s DNA, an examination revealed a deep notch in the victim’s hymen that was consistent with the victim’s testimony, and defendant admitted that he penetrated her vagina with his penis “just a little bit.” Brown v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 40 (2015).

—Not Stated.

Where defendant failed to provide a specific basis for his directed verdict motion, the trial court did not err in denying it. Helton v. State, 320 Ark. 352, 896 S.W.2d 887 (1995).

Where neither defendant’s original directed-verdict motion nor his renewal motion indicated that any specific deficiency in the evidence was called to the trial court’s attention, there was a failure to raise the specific basis for a directed verdict at trial, and defendant could not challenge the sufficiency of the evidence on appeal. Jones v. State, 323 Ark. 655, 916 S.W.2d 736 (1996).

Argument that evidence of offense was insufficient not considered on appeal where the defendant’s directed verdict motion did not specify the manner in which the evidence was insufficient or the elements of the offense alleged not to have been proven by the State. McCoy v. State, 326 Ark. 104, 929 S.W.2d 712 (1996).

Issue of denial of motion for directed verdict not preserved for appellate review where defendant did not specify the proof alleged to be insufficient. Lovelady v. State, 326 Ark. 196, 931 S.W.2d 430 (1996).

Motion for a directed verdict “on all counts on the grounds of insufficient evidence” was clearly insufficient to preserve defendant’s argument that the statutory elements of his crimes were not proved. Dixon v. State, 327 Ark. 105, 937 S.W.2d 642 (1997).

Motion for a directed verdict stating that the state failed to make a prima facie case was no more than a general motion for a directed verdict. Gray v. State, 327 Ark. 113, 937 S.W.2d 639 (1997).

Where the defendant’s directed verdict motions failed to specifically identify the proof of the element of the crime alleged to be missing, the court refused to consider the defendant’s challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence. Travis v. State, 328 Ark. 442, 944 S.W.2d 96 (1997).

Defendant’s failure to make a specific motion for directed verdict precluded a review of the sufficiency of the evidence on appeal. Bragg v. State, 328 Ark. 613, 946 S.W.2d 654 (1997).

A claim of insufficient evidence was barred by the defendant’s failure to state specific grounds in his directed verdict motion where defense counsel stated only that his motion was based on a “lack of evidence.” Bowen v. State, 342 Ark. 581, 30 S.W.3d 86 (2000).

The defendant’s motions for directed verdict failed to specify the respect in which the evidence was deficient and, instead, they were simply general motions stating that the evidence was insufficient, which was not adequate to comply with the requirements of the rule.

Hutcherson v. State, 74 Ark. App. 72, 47 S.W.3d 267 (2001).

Defendant’s general motion for a directed verdict failed to comport with this rule because it did not inform the trial court of the specific issues in the state’s case that were being challenged and, thus, precluded appellate review of his capital murder conviction. Grady v. State, 350 Ark. 160, 85 S.W.3d 531 (2002).

Because defendant’s standby counsel merely stated that the testimony did not reflect all of the elements of capital murder, the objection was insufficient to preserve a sufficiency argument for appeal and the trial court’s denial of defendant’s motion for a directed verdict was not preserved for review. Newman v. State, No. CR 02-811, 2003 Ark. LEXIS 295 (Ark. May 22, 2003).

Where defendant was on trial for simultaneous possession of drugs (marijuana) and a firearm, defendant’s motion for directed verdict as to the simultaneous possession charge was insufficient because counsel merely moved to dismiss for lack of sufficient proof and did not specify the respect in which the evidence was insufficient; in any event, the .22 Derringer pistol in plain view constituted substantial evidence within the meaning of § 5-1-102(6). Saulsberry v. State, 81 Ark. App. 419, 102 S.W.3d 907 (2003).

Defendant was procedurally barred from mounting a challenge on appeal to his rape conviction because his trial counsel’s initial motion at the close of the state’s case was manifestly a general challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence and failed to point to any specific flaw in the state’s case, nor did it specify any elements of the criminal acts which had not been proven; therefore, because defendant’s directed verdict motion was non-specific, it was not preserved for appellate review. Pinell v. State, 364 Ark. 353, 219 S.W.3d 168 (2005).

Defendant’s sufficiency argument was not preserved for review because defense counsel made a generic directed-verdict motion which the circuit court denied and, in renewing the motion, it was clearly general and lacked any mention of the specific element or elements of the crime which the state might have failed to establish. Carey v. State, 365 Ark. 379, 230 S.W.3d 553 (2006).

Appellate court refused to consider defendant’s claim that the trial court erred by denying his motion for a directed verdict on the ground that the evidence was insufficient; defendant failed to make a proper directed verdict motion where the motion merely stated that the evidence was insufficient and did not provide a specific deficiency. Smith v. State, 367 Ark. 274, 239 S.W.3d 494 (2006).

Where defendant’s directed-verdict motion was general and did not inform the trial court of any specific deficiencies in the state’s proof, the argument that defendant made on appeal regarding the sufficiency of the evidence to support his conviction for battery was waived. Davis v. State, 97 Ark. App. 6, 242 S.W.3d 630 (2006).

Defendant's motion for a directed verdict was general in nature. Therefore, in light of this rule, the only issue that he preserved for appellate review was whether the evidence was insufficient to convict him of rape where there was no physical evidence of abuse. Price v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 111, 377 S.W.3d 324 (2010).

Rape and kidnapping defendant's general directed-verdict motion that the state failed to prove all the elements charged failed to comport with the requirement of this rule that the directed-verdict motion state the specific grounds therefor. Tapia v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 124 (2010).

In his directed-verdict motions, because appellant did not identify the specific elements that he claimed the State failed to prove, under subdivisions (a) and (c) of this rule, the question of the sufficiency of evidence to support his convictions was not preserved for appeal. Lee v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 209 (2013).

Defendant's argument for a directed verdict, that the state failed to make a prima facie case that any of the drugs or guns were ever in his possession, lacked the specificity required by the rule; because defendant's motion was too general, his argument was not preserved for appellate review. Cooley v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 580 (2013).

In a case involving capital murder and aggravated robbery, a claim of insufficient evidence was not preserved for appellate review because defendant made a general motion for a directed verdict, but failed to raise the specific issues that he raised on appeal; the general motion, which failed to specify any deficiencies in the State's proof, was inadequate to preserve for appellate review the specific challenges made to the sufficiency of the evidence. Even though review of the record was required for all life and death cases, this review presupposed that a proper objection was made at trial. Perry v. State, 2014 Ark. 535, 453 S.W.3d 650 (2014).

Argument that there was insufficient evidence to adjudicate appellant, a juvenile, delinquent based on a charge of rape was not preserved for appellate review because counsel's motion for dismissal, simply stating that there was no evidence other than a tape, did not advise the trial court of any missing element. N.W. v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 57, 454 S.W.3d 271 (2015).

Defendant's motion for a directed verdict, stating that the elements of possession of drug paraphernalia and possession of a controlled substance had not been proved, was properly denied because defendant did not specify the deficiency in the State's proof and did not preserve her sufficiency challenge for appellate review; counsel never mentioned that he believed the case was a joint-occupancy situation or that the additional required elements for constructive possession had not been shown. Scott v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 504, 471 S.W.3d 236 (2015).

In a rape case, an appellate court declined to address a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence due to the lack of specificity in defendant's directed verdict motions; even if the issue had been addressed, a rape victim's testimony alone could have been sufficient to sustain the conviction. The victim gave specific testimony relating to penetration, and defendant was permitted to cross-examine the victim about previous lies. Tatum v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 80 (2016).

In an aggravated assault case, the merits of a sufficiency argument were not reached because of a failure to comply with this rule; defendant failed to specify the respect in which the evidence was deficient, and merely challenging the credibility of all of the State's witness was not enough. McCall v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 300, 495 S.W.3d 91 (2016).

Juvenile failed to preserve a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence on the offenses of aggravated assault on a family or household member and second-degree domestic battery where he made a generic motion at the close of the State's case, and that generic motion was insufficient to preserve the specific sufficiency arguments that were being raised on appeal. Even when a specific argument supporting the motion for dismissal is made during the closing arguments, the sufficiency argument is not preserved for appeal. N.L. v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 227, 519 S.W.3d 360 (2017).

Defendant's motion for directed verdict was not preserved for appellate review because it merely stated that the evidence was insufficient rather than stating specific grounds. Reynolds v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 8, 538 S.W.3d 223 (2018).

Defendant's conviction for second-degree murder was proper because her arguments were not preserved for appellate review. Defendant argued only that she was defending her sons and she did not address the elements of justification as delineated in the jury instruction; Arkansas appellate courts do not address the merits of an insufficiency argument when the directed-verdict motion is not specific. Woods v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 256, 548 S.W.3d 832 (2018).

Defendant juvenile's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the finding that he committed second-degree sexual assault was not preserved because in making his motion for dismissal, he did not advise the trial court of the element of the offense that the State failed to prove; in any event, the State sufficiently proved forcible compulsion where the victim testified that defendant shoved her against the wall and put one hand on her shoulder and one hand down her pants while she kept telling him to stop. P.J. v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 315, 578 S.W.3d 307 (2019).

Circuit court properly convicted defendant of aggravated robbery because defendant's directed-verdict motions were not specific regarding which elements were not met by the State's evidence nor did they specify the elements of aggravated robbery; defendant simply argued that none of the elements were met. Avery v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 405, 585 S.W.3d 742 (2019).

Defendant's directed-verdict motion on the tampering with physical evidence charge was inadequate to preserve his challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence as the motion failed to adequately specify any deficiencies in the State's proof. Even had the motion been specific enough, there was sufficient evidence presented to support the conviction because defendant threw the gun in the river after shooting the victim; while defendant claimed that the discharge was accidental and that the disposal was not to impede any investigation or prosecution, the jury was not required to believe his version of events. Webb v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 436, 587 S.W.3d 252 (2019).

Directed verdict motion not sufficiently specific; therefore, defendant's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence was not preserved for appellate review. Adway v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 495, 587 S.W.3d 617 (2019).

Directed verdict motion was not sufficiently specific to preserve issue for appeal. Buffington v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 97 (2020).

Appellate court could not reach the merits of defendant's sufficiency of the evidence argument on appeal because defendant's motions for directed verdict did not comply with this rule in that they were general and lacked any mention of the specific element or elements of the crime that the State may have failed to establish. Thomas v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 307 (2020).

—Required.

A challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence, whenever it is made, requires a specific motion to apprise the trial court of the particular point raised, and a general "usual motion" will not suffice. Middleton v. State, 311 Ark. 307, 842 S.W.2d 434 (1992).

A motion by defendant's attorney for a directed verdict that as to each of the five counts the state has not proved sufficiency of the evidence was not sufficiently specific to preserve the issue for appeal. Houston v. State, 319 Ark. 498, 892 S.W.2d 274 (1995).

Defendant's initial and renewal motions for a directed verdict on the grounds that the evidence established defendant's defense of justification and that the evidence was insufficient to establish his intent to purposely cause the victim's death was sufficiently specific to preserve this issue for appellate review. Williams v. State, 325 Ark. 432, 930 S.W.2d 297 (1996).

Where motion for directed verdict stated that the state failed to link defendant to the crime, but did not mention that the state failed to prove the "premeditated and deliberate" element of capital murder, defendant did not preserve the intent issue for appeal. Roseby v. State, 329 Ark. 554, 953 S.W.2d 32 (1997), overruled, MacKintrush v. State, 334 Ark. 390, 978 S.W.2d 293 (1998).

Motion for directed verdict was denied and the judge had no opportunity to rule on specific grounds with respect to any of the charges where defense counsel was given the opportunity, but did not "specify the respect in which the evidence was deficient." Welch v. State, 330 Ark. 158, 955 S.W.2d 181 (1997).

—Stated.

Motion for directed verdict sufficiently specified that the evidence was insufficient for a conviction because the element of identity was missing. Wilson v. State, 332 Ark. 7, 962 S.W.2d 805 (1998).

Sufficiency of Evidence.

The defendant's general objection was insufficient to satisfy the requirements of subsection (c) of this rule with regard to two counts of second degree murder, especially as it was clear that he intended to object only to a first degree murder charge and two felony-murder charges. Crisp v. State, 341 Ark. 893, 20 S.W.3d 394 (2000).

Defendant waived his insufficiency of the evidence challenge as his motion for directed verdict addressed only the capital murder charges and failed to address the lesser-included offenses. Grillot v. State, 353 Ark. 294, 107 S.W.3d 136, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 967, 124 S. Ct. 435, 157 L. Ed. 2d 312 (2003).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for directed verdict on his convictions for possession of drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture and possession of a controlled substance because the evidence sufficiently linked defendant to the contraband in that it showed that: (1) there was an operational methamphetamine lab in the kitchen of the shared residence; (2) numerous items used for the manufacture of crystal methamphetamine was seized from the residence; (3) drug paraphernalia was also found in a burn barrel near the residence and in the trash can on the back porch, indicating an ongoing drug manufacturing process; (4) the trash bags found on the side of the road alerted the drug task force to the existence of an illegal drug lab and included a receipt from a store that listed several items used to manufacture crystal methamphetamine that was traced to defendant; and (5) the jury was not required to believe defendant's statements, regarding items found in his office, in which he denied any knowledge of the contraband. Walley v. State, 353 Ark. 586, 112 S.W.3d 349 (2003).

Trial court correctly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict on the charges of rape and first-degree violation of a minor where the evidence clearly demonstrated that defendant occupied a position of trust or authority over the victim during the time that he lived with her and her mother; defendant had repeatedly disciplined the victim and she considered him to be her father. Martin v. State, 354 Ark. 289, 119 S.W.3d 504 (2003), writ denied, Martin v. Norris, No. CR 02-128, 2007 Ark. LEXIS 357 (Ark. June 7, 2007).

Defendant's challenges to the sufficiency of the evidence were not preserved for appellate review because he failed to make a motion for dismissal at the close of all evidence before closing arguments; in addition, defendant's argument that this rule served no perceivable purpose was without merit because it allowed the trial court the option of either granting the motion or allowing the prosecution to reopen its case to supply the missing proof. McClina v. State, 354 Ark. 384, 123 S.W.3d 883 (2003).

Witness who testified that she was a manager-level employee, that she handled the store when the manager was absent, and that, as such, she was familiar with the store's merchandise pricing, had independent actual knowledge of the value of stolen articles; thus, the value evidence was more than sufficient to support the verdict for theft of property over $500. Polk v. State, 82 Ark. App. 210, 105 S.W.3d 797 (2003).

Trial court did not err in failing to grant defendant's motions for directed verdict on the charges of possession of methamphetamine and possession of drug paraphernalia where the evidence, along with defendant's presence in the residence and the presence of drug paraphernalia and an odor associated with the manufacture of methamphetamine, corroborated the testimony of accomplices and tended to connect defendant with the commission of the offense of possession of drug paraphernalia. Breshears v. State, 83 Ark. App. 159, 119 S.W.3d 61 (2003).

Test for determining the sufficiency of the evidence for directed verdict purposes is whether a verdict is supported by substantial evidence, direct or circumstantial; substantial evidence is evidence forceful enough to compel a conclusion one way or the other beyond suspicion or conjecture. Tate v. State, 84 Ark. App. 184, 137 S.W.3d 404 (2003), rev'd, 357 Ark. 369, 167 S.W.3d 655 (2004).

In a capital murder case, the state proved defendant's extreme indifference to value of human life under § 5-10-101(a)(1) where a witness testified that defendant demanded to hold the gun in robbery, the witness saw defendant point an arm at the victim, defendant admitted to the shooting during a custodial interrogation but claimed the gun discharged accidentally when the delivery man grabbed it, and expert testimony showed that the fatal shot was not made at a close range; hence, defendant's motions for a directed verdict were properly denied. Jordan v. State, 356 Ark. 248, 147 S.W.3d 691 (2004).

In criminal prosecution for rape, defendant was not entitled to a direct verdict; the victim's testimony, along with the testimony of a doctor that the victim's hymen had an injury consistent with sexual abuse, and the fact that defendant fled the jurisdiction, was sufficient evidence to support the rape conviction. Hanlin v. State, 356 Ark. 516, 157 S.W.3d 181 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of rape where the victim testified that defendant forcibly held her down and penetrated her with his penis, and the arresting officer noticed that the victim had blood on her lip and defendant's shirt had blood on it; the jury was certainly within its right to believe the officer's testimony that indicated that force was used. Benson v. State, 357 Ark. 43, 160 S.W.3d 341 (2004).

Where defendant was in the room where drug manufacturing materials were found while executing a search warrant, under § 16-89-111(e)(1), such evidence was sufficient to connect defendant to the crime of manufacturing methamphetamine; hence, where accomplice testimony against defendant also pointed to defendant, the trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict. Tate v. State, 357 Ark. 369, 167 S.W.3d 655 (2004).

Circuit court erred in denying defendant's motion to dismiss where the state failed to produce substantial evidence that defendant received actual notice of the time and place to appear in court or that she received written notice of the time and place to appear; more had to be offered in the way of documentary proof or a judge's order, either written or verbal, to subject a defendant to a felony conviction for failure to appear. Stewart v. State, 362 Ark. 400, 208 S.W.3d 768 (2005).

Defendant's motion for directed verdict with respect to the charge of premeditated and deliberated capital murder was properly denied where there was evidence that defendant acted with premeditation and deliberation in the murder and that he aided, agreed to aid, or attempted to aid the principal in the commission of the murder. Woods v. State, 363 Ark. 272, 213 S.W.3d 627 (2005).

Denial of defendant's motion for a directed verdict was proper as the victim's testimony that he performed oral sex on defendant after being threatened and that defendant performed oral sex on him was sufficient to convict defendant under former § 5-14-103(a)(1)(C)(i).

Williams v. State, 363 Ark. 395, 214 S.W.3d 829 (2005).

Defendant's motion for directed verdict was properly denied where there was substantial evidence to support the jury's finding that defendant committed the crime of false imprisonment against her daughter by exercising excessive and unreasonable restraint that created a substantial risk of serious physical injury; there was no merit to defendant's argument that, as a parent, she could not be held liable for criminal conduct committed against her daughter because she had the lawful authority to consent to restraint of her child. Dick v. State, 364 Ark. 133, 217 S.W.3d 778 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendants of breaking or entering and theft of property where (1) a prosecution witness testified that she saw defendants break into an apartment and take a table; (2) a police officer observed that the security door had been pried open and the wooden door was kicked in; and (3) a defense witness testified that they took the table for their own use, that none of them owned it, and that there was an owner, but no one knew where the owner was. Bush v. State, 90 Ark. App. 373, 206 S.W.3d 268 (2005).

There was substantial evidence to support defendant's conviction for intimidating a witness where, after learning that the witness told police that she observed defendant's son commit murder, defendant threatened to kill the witness, burn her house down, and harm her children; hence, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss after the state presented its case-in-chief. Reed v. State, 91 Ark. App. 267, 209 S.W.3d 449 (2005).

Denial of defendant's motion for directed verdict and defendant's conviction under § 12-12-904(a)(1) were affirmed because defendant had previously been ordered to register as a sex offender in Louisiana, and his failure to do so in Arkansas was sufficient to support his conviction. Flowers v. State, 92 Ark. App. 337, 213 S.W.3d 648 (2005).

Court did not err in denying defendant's motions for a directed verdict because defendant's silence, knowledge, concealment, and failure to inform law enforcement officers of the sexual assaults committed against her daughter by two men who had resided with defendant made her an accomplice to those assaults under § 5-2-403(a)(1); there was no doubt that defendant was aware that the men were raping her daughter at various times when the girl was between eight or nine and 15 years of age. Hutcherson v. State, 92 Ark. App. 307, 213 S.W.3d 25 (2005).

In defendant's trial on charges of abuse of an adult, there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could have found that the victim was an endangered or impaired adult, or both, that he suffered from a physical or mental defect, or both, and that as a consequence was unable to protect himself from the repeated abuse that he was subjected to or to remove himself from defendant's care and control; thus, defendant's motion for directed verdict was properly denied. Thomas v. State, 92 Ark. App. 425, 214 S.W.3d 863 (2005).

Where a deputy found that defendant had an improvised weapon hidden in his sock while incarcerated at the county jail, the state was not required to show how defendant intended to use the weapon in order to convict him of possession of a weapon by an incarcerated person; thus, defendant's motion for a directed verdict was properly denied. Owens v. State, 92 Ark. App. 480, 215 S.W.3d 681 (2005).

At the time the offense was committed, § 5-36-106 provided that theft by receiving of a credit card was designated as a class C felony, but theft by receiving of a debit card was not; thus, where the state failed to show that the card was a credit card, there was insufficient evidence to support the conviction for theft by receiving as a class C felony and defendant's conviction was reduced to a misdemeanor in accordance with § 5-36-106(e)(3). Withers v. State, 93 Ark. App. 276, 218 S.W.3d 386 (2005).

Defendant's motion for directed verdict was properly denied where there was sufficient evidence to convict defendant of residential burglary, § 5-39-201(a)(1), and third degree assault, § 5-13-207(a); defendant took steps to hinder the victim's ability to summon help by turning off the power and pulling out the phone lines, and the fact that defendant had a potentially deadly weapon on his person could at least raise an inference that he intended to, at the very least, place victim in fear for her physical well-being. Diggs v. State, 93 Ark. App. 332, 219 S.W.3d 654 (2005).

Trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict on his capital murder conviction because the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of the underlying felony, aggravated robbery, even after eliminating the testimony of one of defendant's accomplices. Evidence showed that: (1) defendant had the purpose of committing a theft with the use of physical force, as he and three other individuals went to a witness's house to acquire ammunition for their firearm; (2) the fourth individual testified that defendant and three men arrived at his trailer where defendant displayed a gun, and that he provided ammunition for the gun; (3) a second witness, one of the three men who accompanied defendant, testified that he heard two gunshots fired after the two other men left the victim's apartment after the struggle between defendant and the victim ensued; and (4) the chief medical examiner testified that the victim died from a gunshot wound. Gardner v. State, 362 Ark. 413, 208 S.W.3d 774 (2005).

Circuit court did not err in denying defendant's motion for directed verdict where defendant never requested that the circuit court declare co-defendant an accomplice as a matter of law, nor did defendant ask that the circuit court give a jury instruction on the question of whether co-defendant was an accomplice as a matter of fact; therefore, defendant's accomplice-corroboration challenge was barred and the accomplice-corroboration principles of § 16-89-111(e)(1) did not apply. Price v. State, 365 Ark. 25, 223 S.W.3d 817 (2006).

Defendant's conviction for rape of his infant daughter and the denial of his motion for a directed verdict were affirmed as the child showed signs of sexual abuse immediately after being left with defendant, and defendant's semen was found on the child's diaper; all evidence, both direct and circumstantial, supported defendant's conviction for rape. Terry v. State, 366 Ark. 441, 236 S.W.3d 495 (2006).

Because the sales tax should not have been included in computing the value of the generator, and the state failed to prove that the warranty was stolen along with the generator, defendant's Class C felony conviction could not stand; however, defendant did not challenge the sufficiency of the evidence showing that he was generally guilty of theft by receiving and, as the value of the generator was at most $499.99, defendant still stood convicted of a Class A misdemeanor. Russell v. State, 367 Ark. 557, 242 S.W.3d 265 (2006).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for directed verdict where substantial evidence existed to support a conclusion that defendant had the intent to possess and deliver 520 grams of cocaine rather than the 12.7914 grams that he actually possessed and, thus, the jury properly sentenced defendant under § 5-64-401(a)(1)(i) [repealed]. Strong v. State, 368 Ark. 23, 242 S.W.3d 620 (2006).

Defendant's motion for directed verdict was properly denied where the evidence showed that defendant signed the ticket to pawn a gun, which constituted circumstantial evidence that defendant constructively possessed the firearm; the pawn ticket indicated that defendant had given a security interest in the gun, and the pawn shop owner's testimony made it clear that only defendant could have redeemed the pawn ticket and retrieved the gun. Loar v. State, 368 Ark. 171, 243 S.W.3d 923 (2006).

Motion for a directed verdict was denied in a case involving second-degree sexual assault as evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction where the victim and a witness both testified that defendant pulled down the victim's pants and was touching her, despite defendant's contention that he was merely examining a bug bite when he removed the clothes. Hull v. State, 96 Ark. App. 280, 241 S.W.3d 302 (2006).

There was substantial evidence to convict defendant of arson because (1) a firefighter stated that, while responding to the fire, he saw defendant walking away from the crime scene; (2) the daughter-in-law of the victim's next door neighbor saw a pedestrian trying to hide his face from her as she drove past him, and she testified that defendant would have known her truck because she was at her mother-in-law's home about three days a week; (3) a reserve deputy who handled bloodhounds testified that his select-scent dog tracked defendant's scent 1.8 miles from a county road to the back door of the victim's mobile home; (4) there were spermatozoa cells present in the victim's rectum, which could generally live only 24 hours there, which gave rise to an inference that defendant had sexual relations with the victim close to the time she died; (5) defendant's DNA was present on the rectal swab and the probability of selecting an individual at random from the general population having the same genetic markers as those from defendant would be one in one trillion; (6) medical evidence showed that the victim was dead before the fire began, implying that she did not start it; and (7) the lead investigator on the fire ruled out any electrical malfunction as the cause of the fire. Therefore, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict. Wright v. State, 368 Ark. 629, 249 S.W.3d 133 (2007).

Defendant's sufficiency argument was not preserved for appeal because his directed-verdict motions were not specific and did not advise the circuit court or the state as to which element of the state's case was missing. In short, defendant's directed-verdict motions were too general in nature. Eastin v. State, 370 Ark. 10, 257 S.W.3d 58 (2007).

Where a victim testified that defendant put something inside of her body after he touched her private area, and she saw him covering up his private area when she turned around, a motion for a directed verdict was properly denied since there was sufficient evidence to support a rape conviction under former § 5-14-103(a)(1)(C)(i). Other evidence supporting the conviction included a videotape of the victim's minor sister entering and exiting a shower, along with evidence of defendant's flight after being named a suspect. Ward v. State, 370 Ark. 398, 260 S.W.3d 292 (2007).

Directed verdict was properly denied because a jury entered a general verdict; therefore, it was impossible which part of § 5-10-101 defendant was convicted under. Since defendant's sufficiency challenge only went to proof of the underlying felony, there was sufficient evidence regarding the other elements of capital murder where defendant shot her husband while he slept and took his property. Terry v. State, 371 Ark. 50, 263 S.W.3d 528 (2007).

Directed verdict was properly denied in a case involving robbery and capital murder because defendant shot the victim while he slept with the intent of taking some of his belongings. Therefore, evidence presented to the jury showed that defendant employed or threatened to immediately employ physical force upon the victim with the purpose of committing a felony or misdemeanor theft. Terry v. State, 371 Ark. 50, 263 S.W.3d 528 (2007).

Because the failure to register as a sex offender was a strict liability offense under § 12-12-901 et seq. and the state proved that defendant was required to register but failed to do so, the trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict. Adkins v. State, 371 Ark. 159, 264 S.W.3d 523 (2007).

Challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence in a drug case was not preserved for appellate review because defendant failed to renew his motion to dismiss at the close of all evidence. Champlin v. State, 98 Ark. App. 305, 254 S.W.3d 780 (2007).

Motion to dismiss was properly denied in a case involving possession with intent to use drug paraphernalia because a crack pipe constituted paraphernalia under § 5-64-101(14)(C); further, there was sufficient evidence of intent where defendant admitted the pipe was his, cocaine residue was found on the pipe, and defendant admitted to using it to smoke cocaine in the past. White v. State, 98 Ark. App. 366, 255 S.W.3d 881 (2007).

In a case involving the possession with intent to use drug paraphernalia as a Class C felony, the state is required to show that the possession of the drug paraphernalia facilitated that objective, or made the commission of the offense easier; therefore, defendant's motion for a directed verdict was denied, and he was properly convicted of a Class C felony for a crack pipe being used in the furtherance of a felony where the pipe and the drugs were both found on his person, and he testified that he had previously used that same pipe to ingest cocaine. White v. State, 98 Ark. App. 366, 255 S.W.3d 881 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support a residential burglary conviction under § 5-39-201 based on defendant's act of helping to remove stolen items, transport, and sell them, even though he did not enter a residence himself. Therefore, a motion for a directed verdict was properly denied. Hickman v. State, 99 Ark. App. 363, 260 S.W.3d 747 (2007), rev'd, 372 Ark. 438, 277 S.W.3d 217 (2008).

On appeal of defendant's conviction of second-degree assault, the court held that defendant's motion for a directed verdict was properly denied because defendant admitted that the victim's testimony was clearly so unbelievable that reasonable minds could differ thereon, and therefore the trial court properly submitted the issue to the jury. The evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction because the victim testified that defendant touched her vagina with his finger and rubbed her buttocks; the fact that there was no physical evidence of trauma did not prevent the jury from finding defendant guilty. Brown v. State, 100 Ark. App. 172, 265 S.W.3d 772 (2007), rev'd, 374 Ark. 341, 288 S.W.3d 226 (2008).

Appellate court declined to address a defendant's argument as to the sufficiency of DNA evidence because defendant's motion for directed verdict did not specifically raise this issue, but rather argued generally that the State was unable to prove the elements of the criminal charges against him. Gillard v. State, 372 Ark. 98, 270 S.W.3d 836 (2008).

Trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict on the capital murder charge because: (1) but for defendant's aggravated robbery, speeding, and fleeing from the police, the trooper would not have been in the roadway attempting to retrieve stop sticks and would not have been struck by another trooper's vehicle; (2) the State presented sufficient evidence that defendant acted under circumstances manifesting an extreme indifference to the value of human life, as it showed that defendant robbed the victim with a gun, fled with his accomplice and the loot in a stolen car on a busy interstate, and initiated a high-speed chase while being pursued by several law enforcement officers with their lights and sirens blaring, thereby engaging in life-threatening activity; and (3) the phrase "under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life" was not void for vagueness, as the cases interpreting the phrase provided fair warning that it involved a life-threatening activity. Jefferson v. State, 372 Ark. 307, 276 S.W.3d 214 (2008).

Defendant's motion for directed verdict was properly denied as substantial evidence supported the capital-murder and aggravated robbery convictions. Moore v. State, 372 Ark. 579, 279 S.W.3d 69 (2008).

Defendant's sufficiency of the evidence challenge was not preserved for appeal because a clear and specific motion for a directed verdict was not made to the trial court, as required by this rule; the defendant's directed-verdict motion failed to state with specificity what the flaws were or why certain witnesses lacked credibility. Elkins v. State, 374 Ark. 399, 288 S.W.3d 570 (2008).

Where defendant crossed the center line twice, the state trooper noticed that his breath smelled of alcohol, and he did not pass field-sobriety tests; within two hours of the traffic stop, defendant's breath-test results were more than 0.08. These facts alone were sufficient to support his conviction of driving while intoxicated pursuant to § 5-65-103(a); the trial court did not err in denying his motion for a directed verdict. Hayden v. State, 103 Ark. App. 32, 286 S.W.3d 177 (2008).

Court rejected defendant's claim of error in the denial of defendant's motion for a directed verdict in her driving while intoxicated (DWI) case, and contrary to defendant's claim, proof of blood-alcohol content, although admissible as evidence tending to prove intoxication, was not necessary to sustain a DWI conviction, as under § 5-65-206(a)(2), a blood alcohol level of more than .04 but less than .08 did not give rise to a presumption of intoxication, but could be considered with other evidence in determining intoxication; based on the eyewitness testimony, defendant's admission to drinking, her blood-alcohol reading, the failure of her field tests, the manner in which she drove the vehicle, and the witnesses' observations regarding her inebriated condition, the jury could have reasonably concluded that she was driving while intoxicated, as defined in § 5-65-102(2), and (1) the jury could have discounted testimony by defendant's son that he was driving the car, and (2) the fact that defendant was not cited for refusal to submit was of no moment because she did not refuse to submit to testing but instead deliberately delayed an officer in obtaining a successful test result by interfering with the testing. Blair v. State, 103 Ark. App. 322, 288 S.W.3d 713 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict as there was sufficient evidence to support his conviction for the rape of a nine-year-old, in violation of § 5-14-103(a)(3)(A); the victim's testimony constituted substantial evidence that defendant penetrated her vagina with his penis. Kelley v. State, 375 Ark. 483, 292 S.W.3d 297 (2009).

Where three eyewitnesses testified and identified defendant as the person who fired the shot that killed the victim, his car also matched the description of the car driven by the shooter. The Supreme Court of Arkansas held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the jury's verdict finding him guilty of murder; the trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict. Page v. State, 2009 Ark. 112, 313 S.W.3d 7 (2009).

Substantial evidence was presented to the jury to support a capital murder verdict under § 5-10-101(a)(4) and a finding that defendant murdered the victim with premeditation and deliberation, given that (1) a witness testified to seeing defendant and the victim fighting, then they split up, then defendant went back inside his house a second time before emerging with a shotgun, (2) as the victim began to drive away, defendant fired, and (3) the victim's death was caused by the shotgun pellet; the court rejected defendant's claim that the trial court erred in denying his motions for a directed verdict. Adams v. State, 2009 Ark. 375, 326 S.W.3d 764 (2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 1021, 130 S. Ct. 1922, 176 L. Ed. 2d 392 (2010).

In defendant's capital murder trial arising out of the beating death of the two-year-old child of defendant's girlfriend, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict because the evidence, although circumstantial, was sufficient to support his conviction where it established that the child was in good physical condition when entrusted to defendant's care and that she suffered fatal injuries while in defendant's sole custody. The jury did not err in rejecting defendant's testimony that the child slipped and fell, hitting her head on the floor, because the doctors who treated the child testified that this explanation was implausible and was inconsistent with the head injuries suffered by the child; further, the child suffered extensive injuries over her entire body, and defendant offered no explanation for the origin of the many other significant injuries, which the doctors testified were the result of blunt force trauma. Smith v. State, 2009 Ark. 453, 343 S.W.3d 319 (2009).

Defendant was convicted of possessing drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture, in violation of former § 5-64-403(b)(5)(A); based on the evidence of defendant's proximity to the manufacturing paraphernalia, the circuit court did not err in denying defendant's directed-verdict motion. Holt v. State, 2009 Ark. 482, 348 S.W.3d 562 (2009).

Based upon the evidence, the circuit court's denial of defendant's directed-verdict motion on the offense of maintaining a drug premise was proper. Holt v. State, 2009 Ark. 482, 348 S.W.3d 562 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying defendants' motions for a directed verdict because the victim's testimony stood as substantial evidence to support the jury's verdict; the victim specifically identified defendants as the ones who committed the acts of battery and kidnapping. The victim stated that defendants pointed guns at the victim while the victim was forced to undress and was bound. Watkins v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 124, 302 S.W.3d 635 (2009).

Where the victim testified that defendant drove her to an unfamiliar area, poured each of them a shot glass of liquor, and forced her to have sexual intercourse with him against her will, the victim's testimony was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for rape in violation of § 5-14-103(a)(1). The trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict. Goodman v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 262, 306 S.W.3d 443 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict during his trial for the rape of his niece through marriage, in violation of § 5-14-103(a)(4)(A)(ii), because the familial relationship extended to a relationship by affinity as well as a blood relationship; DNA testing confirmed that defendant was the biological father of the 15-year-old niece's child. Wade v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 346, 308 S.W.3d 178 (2009).

Informant and a drug task force officer both testified that the informant was given cash by the officer, the informant called defendant to set up a purchase, defendant arrived in a car, the informant presented the controlled-drug-buy money to defendant, and was given small off-white rocks that contained a cocaine base. The evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for delivery of cocaine; the trial court did not err in denying his motions for directed verdict. Green v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 589 (2009).

Neither of defendant's motions to dismiss satisfied the requirements of this rule where they did not give sufficient indication as to which elements of the offenses defendant believed the state failed to prove and the motions failed to even state which offense was being referenced. Lasker v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 591 (2009).

Trial court did not err in refusing to direct the verdicts where defendant took actions to conceal the harm to the child, and failed to take action to secure appropriate care for the child; the jury could conclude that defendant rubbing a substance known to cause skin irritation on the face of a toddler where Superglue had already adhered would cause, at the very least, the impairment of physical condition or a visible mark associated with the physical trauma. Price v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 664, 344 S.W.3d 678 (2009).

Evidence of a defendant's previous sales of ecstasy and his possession of firearms provided substantial evidence of defendant's intent to deliver, § 5-64-401(d) [repealed], and although defendant was not home at the time of the search, defendant had constructive-possession of the items, § 5-64-401(c) [repealed], as well as simultaneous possession, § 5-74-106(d), because the items were found in defendant's locked bedroom and there was no evidence that anyone other than defendant had a key to defendant's locked bedroom. Felipe Nevarez Ibarra v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 707 (2009).

Where defendant admitted that he inappropriately touched an eleven-year-old girl while she was sleeping, the jury could infer that his actions were motivated by a desire for sexual gratification. The evidence was sufficient to support his conviction for sexual assault in the second degree in violation of § 5-14-125(a)(3); the trial court did not err by denying his motion for a directed verdict under subsection (a) of this rule. Davis v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 753 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss the charge of possession of cocaine with intent to deliver in violation of § 5-64-401(a)(1)(A) [repealed] because the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction when a search of his vehicle revealed two containers of food, one of which contained a clear bag of off-white, rock-like items and some powder that later tested positive for cocaine base and cocaine hydrochloride, and on defendant's person, police officers found five one-hundred dollar bills, fourteen twenty-dollar bills, and one dollar and forty-three cents, totaling $781 in cash; both the passenger of the vehicle and an officer testified as to a bag of cocaine that was found inside the vehicle, and although there was conflicting evidence as to whether the cocaine was found in a container or in a bag, the factfinder had the sole authority to evaluate the credibility of witnesses and to apportion the weight to be given to the evidence. Brown v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 873 (2009).

Directed verdict was not appropriate under subsection (a) of this rule because the testimony of a trooper that defendant was obviously impaired and that he had observed defendant's vehicle swerve on the highway, along with defendant's admission that he had consumed enough alcohol to register above the legal limit constituted substantial evidence sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for third-offense driving while intoxicated. Heathman v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 601 (2009).

Pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, motions for a directed verdict had to state specific grounds or identify the respect in which the evidence was allegedly deficient. Such motions that only asserted the state failed to meet its burden of proof did not preserve defendant's challenges on appeal to the sufficiency of the evidence. Thomas v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 708 (2010).

Defendant's conviction for the delivery of crack cocaine was proper because his directed-verdict motion was too general to preserve his arguments on that charge. A general motion that merely asserted that the state failed to prove its case was inadequate to preserve the issue for appeal. Conley v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 597, 385 S.W.3d 875 (2011).

Defendant's conviction for possession of marijuana was proper because his directed-verdict motion was too general to advise the trial court of the exact element of the crime he believed the state had failed to prove, which was constructive possession. Thus, he failed to preserve a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence for his conviction of possession of marijuana. Conley v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 597, 385 S.W.3d 875 (2011).

Defendant's argument challenging the sufficiency of the evidence to support his conviction was not preserved for appeal as defendant's directed verdict motion under this rule did not specify the manner in which the evidence was insufficient. Fowler v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 321 (2011).

Motion for a directed verdict as to one rape charge against appellant relating to penetration by a penis was insufficient to challenge the sufficiency of a conviction for rape by digital penetration under subsection (c) of this rule; even if the issue was preserved, a victim's testimony was sufficient and substantial evidence to support a conviction. Clayton v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 199 (2012).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's conviction for one count of rape, because he admitted to engaging in sexual relations with his biological daughter when she was 10-years-old and a sexual-assault nurse examiner discovered injuries to the victim that were indicative of sexual assault or trauma. Defendant's motion for a directed-verdict under this rule only preserved appellate review of the issue regarding the sufficiency of the evidence establishing the victim's age. Breeden v. State, 2013 Ark. 145, 427 S.W.3d 5 (2013).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for directed verdict; defendant committed an overt act in furtherance of a conspiracy to commit kidnapping, aggravated robbery, theft of property, and aggravated residential burglary because he took another person to his residence and showed the person the inside of the premises, discussed how to break in the residence and how to subdue his wife, and identified the property to be taken from the residence. Winkler v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 704, 425 S.W.3d 808 (2012).

Defendant's directed-verdict motion stating that "there was not sufficient evidence upon which to base a prima facie case, much less sufficient evidence upon which to base a finding of guilty" was too general to preserve for appellate review a claim that the evidence was insufficient to convict defendant of terroristic threatening. Harris v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 651 (2012).

In a drug possession case, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict. A forensic chemist testified that the substance he tested was a partial pill that weighed 0.0824 grams and tested positive for morphine after he crushed it. Foster v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 412, 467 S.W.3d 176 (2015).

Defendant's admission to owning a firearm and his access to it was sufficient evidence to support his conviction for being a felon in possession of a firearm. Although defendant contended that his admission should not be considered because it was produced during cross-examination and not in the State's case-in-chief, this argument was never presented below, and defendant cited no convincing authority that, when considering a motion for directed verdict, the trial court may consider evidence presented only by the State in making its determination. Hemby v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 482 (2016).

Circuit court erred in denying defendant's motion to dismiss the possession-of-cocaine charge because substantial evidence did not support the finding that defendant constructively possessed cocaine; the evidence failed to give rise to a reasonable inference that defendant knew the cocaine was in the vehicle he was driving, as the only evidence linking defendant to the cocaine was that he was driving the jointly occupied vehicle and the cocaine was found in the front center cup holder. Baltimore v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 622, 535 S.W.3d 286 (2017).

Timeliness.

Appellate court affirmed the denial of defendant's motion to dismiss and her conviction for violating § 5-27-221 because there was evidence that defendant knew her son was being abused by her husband and she did nothing to prevent it. Graham v. State, 365 Ark. 274, 229 S.W.3d 30 (2006).

Neither the denial of defendant's motion for a directed verdict or his motion for a mistrial was preserved for review; the motion for a directed verdict was untimely because it was renewed after the jury had been charged, and defense counsel failed to move contemporaneously for a mistrial when his objections to the prosecution's questioning of a witness were sustained. Ellis v. State, 366 Ark. 46, 233 S.W.3d 606 (2006).

Denial of defendant's motion for directed verdict was proper where the record supported that defendant was convicted of violating the amended statute, and he failed to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence supporting that conviction. Barnes v. State, 94 Ark. App. 321, 230 S.W.3d 311 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict where there was sufficient evidence under the constructive-possession inquiry to link defendant to the contraband, crack cocaine, under the driver's seat and in the back seat of a vehicle; the vehicle was not only registered in defendant's name, but defendant also insured it. Tubbs v. State, 370 Ark. 47, 257 S.W.3d 47 (2007).

Based on his failure to properly renew a motion for directed verdict, defendant's challenges to the sufficiency of the evidence were not preserved for review on appeal. Dickey v. State, 2016 Ark. 66, 483 S.W.3d 287 (2016).

Waiver.

The sufficiency of the evidence issue was waived by defendant's failure to move for a directed verdict at the close of the case, and, therefore, the issue was not considered on appeal. Andrews v. State, 305 Ark. 262, 807 S.W.2d 917 (1991); Cole v. State, 307 Ark. 41, 818 S.W.2d 573 (1991); Jones v. State, 308 Ark. 555, 826 S.W.2d 233 (1992); McArthur v. State, 309 Ark. 196, 830 S.W.2d 842 (1992).

Defendant waived his right to have the sufficiency of the evidence considered on appeal where he made his motion for a directed verdict at the end of the state's case but failed to do so at the conclusion of all the evidence. Ferrell v. State, 305 Ark. 511, 810 S.W.2d 29 (1991); DeWitt v. State, 306 Ark. 559, 815 S.W.2d 942 (1991); Henry v. State, 309 Ark. 1, 828 S.W.2d 346 (1992); Mauppin v. State, 309 Ark. 235, 831 S.W.2d 104 (1992).

A defendant who goes forward with the production of additional evidence after a directed verdict motion is overruled, waives any further reliance upon the former motion. Crawford v. State, 309 Ark. 54, 827 S.W.2d 134 (1992).

Defendant waived his right to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence by failing to make a motion for directed verdict at the close of the state's case before presenting evidence on his behalf, and in addition, defendant again waived this argument when at the close of all evidence, he merely made "the usual motions." Middleton v. State, 311 Ark. 307, 842 S.W.2d 434 (1992).

A defendant who goes forward with the production of additional evidence after a directed verdict motion is overruled waives any further reliance upon the former motion. Thomas v. State, 315 Ark. 504, 868 S.W.2d 483 (1994).

This rule specifically requires that a defendant who wishes to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence move for a directed verdict at the close of the state's case and at the close of the whole case; failure to do so constitutes waiver of any question pertaining to the sufficiency of the evidence. Cummings v. State, 315 Ark. 541, 869 S.W.2d 17 (1994).

Where defense counsel moved for a directed verdict at the end of the state's case, which was denied, but failed to renew the motion at the end of all the evidence as required by this rule, the issue was not preserved for appeal. Jackson v. State, 316 Ark. 405, 871 S.W.2d 591 (1994).

That defendant made a specific motion at the close of the state's case in chief was of no consequence because by presenting evidence in his defense, he waived his former motion for a directed verdict; it was, therefore, incumbent upon defendant to move for a directed verdict at the close of the case in order to give the trial court an opportunity to consider the motion in light of the total proof presented, and by failing to do this, the issue of the sufficiency of the evidence presented was waived. Davis v. State, 320 Ark. 329, 896 S.W.2d 438 (1995).

Because defendant did not move for a directed verdict or object to the submission of the aggravating circumstance to the jury until after the jury returned the verdict, this point was procedurally barred. Willett v. State, 322 Ark. 613, 911 S.W.2d 937 (1995).

In prosecution for first-degree murder, defendant's failure to move for a directed verdict because of insufficiency of the evidence at the conclusion of all the evidence resulted in waiver of the issue on appeal under former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.21 (now see this rule and RAP—Crim 8). Smith v. State, 324 Ark. 74, 918 S.W.2d 714 (1996).

The right to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence was waived where defendant moved for a directed verdict at the end of the State's case on the counts of kidnapping and residential burglary only and then failed to make any directed-verdict motion at the close of the case. Diemer v. State, 340 Ark. 223, 9 S.W.3d 490 (2000).

An attorney waived his challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence on appeal of a contempt finding against him where he failed to make a timely motion for directed verdict or dismissal at the close of the evidence and did not even submit a proposed order containing his arguments for a finding of not guilty until after the court requested it. Etoch v. State, 343 Ark. 361, 37 S.W.3d 186 (2001).

Defendant was not entitled to dismissal on grounds of insufficiency of the evidence where the defendant moved for dismissal as part of closing argument, rather than at the close of evidence, as required by Ark. R. Evid. 33.1. State v. Holmes, 347 Ark. 689, 66 S.W.3d 640 (2002).

The right to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence was waived where defense counsel moved for a directed verdict at the end of the state's case on a charge of capital murder but failed to make a motion for a directed verdict after both sides rested their case. Romes v. State, 356 Ark. 26, 144 S.W.3d 750 (2004).

Where defendant was convicted of arson and capital murder, the appellate court was not permitted to review his claim regarding the admission of testimony at trial concerning the origin of the fire; this specific argument was not made to the circuit court as part of defendant's motions for directed verdict. Meadows v. State, 358 Ark. 396, 191 S.W.3d 527 (2004).

In a rape case, defendant waived his challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence where defendant's motion requesting a directed verdict was a general challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence, his attorney failed to identify a specific element of the crime that was not established by the state, and the motion did not assert a specific flaw in the state's case; thus, it did not inform the trial court of the specific issues in the state's case that were being challenged and did not comply with the requirements of this rule. Pratt v. State, 359 Ark. 16, 194 S.W.3d 183 (2004).

In a drug case, defendant failed to preserve for review the issue of the sufficiency of the evidence where the general motion made at trial was insufficient to apprise the trial court of any alleged deficiencies of the state's case; regarding the possession of pseudoephedrine charge, defendant merely argued that "the state failed to prove that defendant possessed those pills." Nelson v. State, 92 Ark. App. 275, 212 S.W.3d 31 (2005), rev'd, 365 Ark. 314, 229 S.W.3d 35 (2006), abrogated as stated in Nowlin v. State, 2007 Ark. App. LEXIS 523 (Ark. Ct. App. June 27, 2007).

Where defendant failed to renew his motion for a directed verdict after the presentation of his sub-rebuttal evidence, which was the last evidence submitted, he waived any question pertaining to the sufficiency of the evidence to support his rape conviction. Hamm v. State, 365 Ark. 647, 232 S.W.3d 463 (2006).

Defendant's arguments regarding his motion to suppress were not properly preserved for appeal because the argument that the affidavit disclosed no specific items to be found on the property, contained an insufficient time frame, and alluded to nothing more than a bare assertion of past criminal conduct were never raised to the circuit court. In addition, although defendant's argument regarding the reliability of the confidential informant was raised in his motion to suppress, his argument was never developed before the circuit court, and he failed to obtain a specific ruling on the issue. Eastin v. State, 370 Ark. 10, 257 S.W.3d 58 (2007).

Defendant's conviction for negligent homicide was appropriate because she failed to preserve for appellate review her contention that the judge erred in finding that she engaged in criminally negligent conduct and that the conduct caused the death of the pedestrian victim because the evidence was insufficient to support the conviction. Even though defendant's counsel made a specific argument to the judge, he never asked for dismissal but argued instead that the state had not met its burden of proving negligence, causation, beyond a reasonable doubt; the reasonable-doubt language was associated with a closing argument and not a motion to dismiss under this rule, where substantial evidence was the test. Grube v. State, 2010 Ark. 171, 368 S.W.3d 58 (2010).

Since defendant failed to make a specific directed-verdict motion at the close of the state's case and at the close of the evidence, as required by subsection (a) of this rule, none of the sufficiency arguments raised in his appeal were preserved for appeal. Bryant v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 348, 384 S.W.3d 46 (2011).

Counsel complied with Ark. Sup. Ct. & Ct. App. R. 4-3(k), and appellant's appeal from his aggravated robbery conviction and sentence lacked merit because (1) the sufficiency of the evidence was not preserved for appellate review as counsel's motion for directed verdict failed to state with specificity the deficiency in the state's evidence, in contravention of this rule; (2) there was no merit to appellant's chain-of-custody argument to the items found in his car pursuant to a search warrant as there was no evidence of tampering presented, and there was testimony that the items were logged into evidence and remained in the evidence room until the trial; (3) it was undisputed that an armed robbery took place under § 5-12-103(a)(1), so it was not an error to refuse to give an instruction on the lesser-included offense of robbery under § 5-12-102(a); and (4) appellant could not raise an ineffective assistance of counsel claim or challenge the qualifications of jurors for the first time on appeal. Mace v.

State, 2012 Ark. App. 420, 421 S.W.3d 335 (2012).

Defendant claimed the State was remiss in not complaining at the time of his closing argument that the State's case should be reopened, but the rule states that it is the appellant's duty to strictly comply, offering the motion to dismiss in a time and manner so the State might have the opportunity to reopen its case if the circuit court deems it necessary; when defendant failed to comply with the rule by arguing his case with no specificity at the time of the dismissal motion, the circuit court was not given the chance to rule on that issue, and the claim that the State failed to prove an element of the crime of internet stalking of a child was not preserved. Hendrix v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 696, 450 S.W.3d 692 (2014).

Because there was no objection to the amendment of the charges, and defendant did not challenge the sufficiency of the evidence supporting his convictions for aggravated assault and second-degree domestic battering after the State closed its case in chief and before he presented his own case, his challenges to those convictions were not preserved for review. Rodriguez v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 660, 449 S.W.3d 306 (2014).

Defendant failed to preserve his arguments regarding the sufficiency of the evidence where instead of renewing his directed-verdict motion at the close of his case, he made a closing argument after the State made its closing argument, and thus, he failed to comply with subdivision (b) of this rule. McCray v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 47 (2015).

Defendant's convictions and sentence enhancement were affirmed where although he moved for a directed verdict at the close of the State's case, the motion was nonspecific and did not comply with this rule, he failed to renew the motion at the close of all of the evidence as required by subdivisions (a) and (c), and therefore, his arguments had not been preserved for appellate review. Grady v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 49 (2015).

Because defendant's arguments were never raised to the circuit court, they were not preserved for review; defendant's directed-verdict motions did not make the specific arguments that defendant pursued on appeal. Hartman v. State, 2015 Ark. 30, 454 S.W.3d 721 (2015).

Although appellant moved for dismissal of the charges at the close of the State's case-in-chief, he did not renew the motion at the close of all evidence, as required by this rule; thus, the issue of sufficiency of the evidence was not preserved for appeal. Bailey v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 312 (2015).

Both of defendant's motions for dismissal failed to specify the respect in which the evidence was alleged to be deficient, and because his sufficiency argument was not properly presented in the manner prescribed by the rule, it was not preserved for appellate review. Woole v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 250 (2015).

Appellate review of the sufficiency of the evidence to support defendant's conviction for manslaughter was precluded; although defense counsel moved for directed verdict on the charge of first-degree murder, defense counsel failed to move for a directed verdict on the lesser-included offense of manslaughter. Brown v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 427, 468 S.W.3d 282 (2015).

Argument was not preserved for appeal because defendant failed to raise it in his directed verdict motion to the circuit court. Reynolds v. State, 2016 Ark. 214, 492 S.W.3d 491 (2016).

Because defendant failed to renew his motion to dismiss at the close of his own case—the close of all evidence, he waived his sufficiency argument, which was not preserved; this rule is strictly construed. S.A.T. v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 469, 503 S.W.3d 839 (2016).

In a first-degree murder case, appellant's sufficiency of evidence challenge was not preserved for appeal where the trial court was under no obligation to take over functions for a pro se defendant, and appellant offered no convincing argument or legal citation for the claim that the court was obligated to make specific directed-verdict motions to preserve his sufficiency challenge. Robinson v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 377, 526 S.W.3d 20 (2017).

Defendant's argument that the evidence was insufficient to support his first-degree murder conviction because he was justified in shooting the victim was not preserved for appeal where he made no directed-verdict motion to the circuit court mentioning self-defense or the elements the State failed to negate. Lewis v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 442, 528 S.W.3d 312 (2017).

Appellant's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence charge was barred on appeal where he had neither moved for a directed verdict at the close of the State's case nor moved for a directed verdict at the close of all evidence, and thus, he had not complied with this rule. Sanders v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 567, 533 S.W.3d 130 (2017).

Appellant did not preserve for appeal his challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence to support his first-degree murder conviction; although appellant initially made a motion for a directed verdict, he failed to renew the motion after the close of the State's rebuttal testimony. Harrison v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 580, 533 S.W.3d 146 (2017).

Although defendant initially made his directed-verdict motions at the close of the State's case and renewed those motions at the close of the presentation of his evidence, he failed to renew his motions after the close of the State's rebuttal testimony; thus, defendant waived any challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence on appellate review. Garza v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 422, 558 S.W.3d 404 (2018).

Because defendant failed to renew defendant's motion for directed verdict at the close of the rebuttal testimony by the State, defendant waived any challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence on appellate review. Hensley v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 513, 560 S.W.3d 834 (2018).

When defendant made his second motion for directed verdict at the close of all evidence, he failed to generally renew or otherwise incorporate by reference the arguments he made in his first motion and instead he made a different, nonspecific motion for directed verdict that failed to comply with this rule; therefore, his sufficiency arguments were not preserved for review. Bowman v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 240, 574 S.W.3d 235 (2019).

Rule 33.2. Sentencing and entry of judgment.

Upon the return of a verdict of guilty in a case tried by a jury, or a finding of guilty in a case tried by a circuit court without a jury, sentence may be pronounced and the judgment of the court may be then and there entered, or sentencing and the entry of the judgment may be postponed to a date certain then fixed by the court, not more than thirty (30) days thereafter, at which time probation reports may be submitted, matters of mitigation presented or any other matter heard that the court of the defendant might deem appropriate to consider before the pronouncement of sentence and entry of the formal judgment. The defendant may file a written demand for immediate sentencing, whereupon the trial judge may cause formal sentence and judgment to be made of record. At the time sentence is pronounced and judgment entered, the trial judge must advise the defendant of his right to appeal, the period of time prescribed for perfecting the appeal, and either fix or deny bond.

HISTORY: Amended May 30, 1989, effective July 1, 1989; amended October 29, 1990, effective January 1, 1991; adopted and; amended December 4, 1995.

Publisher's Notes.

Former Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.2 has been renumbered as Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.5.

The October 29, 1990 Per Curiam order of the Arkansas Supreme Court provided: "On May 30, 1989, by Per Curiam order, this court abolished Criminal Procedure Rule 37 and amended Criminal Procedure Rule 36.4, effective July 1, 1989. As we said in Whitemore v. State, 299 Ark. 55, 771 S.W.2d 266 (1989), the primary reason for abolishing Rule 37 was our concern that post-conviction remedies were drawn out extensively, and unnecessarily, before cases were concluded. It was our thought to accelerate post-conviction procedures and at the same time have a system which protects the defendant's constitutional and fundamental rights. Rule 36.4 was amended to provide a means by which a convicted defendant could assert claims of ineffective assistance of counsel within thirty days of judgment. Rule 36.4 also provided a procedure to consolidate the direct appeal of a judgment with the appeal of the denial by the trial court of post-conviction relief. (We would add that other states, such as Missouri, have adopted a similar consolidated direct appeal/post-conviction procedure in an attempt to expedite criminal appeals and post-conviction procedures.) The scope of the remedy afforded by Rule 36.4 was more limited than that which had been afforded by Rule 37.

"Members of the bench and bar have offered comments, and we have now had a period of some fifteen months to assess the procedure under Rule 36.4. We realize that any modification has its weaknesses and strengths, but we have presently settled on a procedure we believe will afford defendants their constitutional rights while substantially expediting his or her direct appeal and post-conviction remedies. The procedure is embodied in a modification of Rule 37 which, while it embraces the scope of Rule 37, places some limitations on the remedy which were not formerly a part of the rule; in particular, the time for filing a petition for postconviction relief under the rule has been reduced from three years to ninety days in cases where the defendant pleaded guilty or did not elect to appeal and sixty days where an appeal was taken.

"We reinstate Criminal Procedure Rule 37 as modified and publish it in its revised form and amend Criminal Procedure Rule 36.4 and publish it. We also amend Rule 26.1 and publish it. The modified Rule 37 and the amended Rule 26.1(a) and Rule 36.4 shall become effective January 1, 1991. We invite comments from the bench, bar and public on the revision of Rule 37 and amendment of Rule 26.1 and Rule 36.4. This rule is former ARCrP 36.4, with grammatical changes. At one time, it had been proposed to appear as Rule 2 of the Arkansas Rules of Appellate Procedure — Criminal.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Former Rule 36.4 [now Rule 33.2]

Rule Not Mandatory. On at least three occasions appellants have unsuccessfully argued that a judgment not entered within thirty days as provided in Rule 36.4 is void. The Arkansas Supreme Court has rejected this interpretation of the Rule. Hogan v. State, 289 Ark. 402, 712 S.W.2d 295 (1986); Hoke v. State, 270 Ark. 134, 603 S.W.2d 412 (1980); Lovett v. State, 267 Ark. 912, 591 S.W.2d 683 (1979).

It should be noted, however, that in Lovett the Court implied that a convicted defendant might be entitled to relief if he could show inconvenience or prejudice from a belated entry of a nunc pro tunc judgment. In denying claimant's request for relief, the Court stated: Moreover, appellant has not shown in any way how he has been inconvenienced or prejudiced by the belated entry of the nunc pro tunc judgment. . . . It is clear from this record that when the trial court was advised that judgment had not been entered on the jury's verdict, the court immediately entered a nunc pro tunc judgment. Lovett at 914-15, 591 S.W.2d at 684-85.

CASE NOTES

Compliance.

Motion not filed by defendant's counsel within 30 days, alleging ineffective assistance of counsel, was not in compliance with this rule. Matthews v. State, 305 Ark. 207, 807 S.W.2d 29 (1991).

Constitutionality of Conviction.

Allegations which challenge the constitutionality of a circuit court judgment should be raised at trial and subsequently on direct appeal, not in a petition for post-conviction relief. Bailey v. State, 312 Ark. 180, 848 S.W.2d 391 (1993).

Construction.

This rule is not mandatory, not only because it specifies that the sentencing and judgment "may" be postponed for not more than 30 days, but also because the nunc pro tunc entry of judgments actually rendered earlier has long been the practice in Arkansas and it cannot have been the intent of the rule to permit a convicted felon to escape punishment altogether merely because the judgment was not reduced to writing within 30 days; accordingly, a conviction for manslaughter was not void merely because the judgment was not entered within 30 days. Hoke v. State, 270 Ark. 134, 603 S.W.2d 412 (1980).

Ineffective Counsel.

Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was abolished effective July 1, 1989, but persons who had been convicted and sentenced during the existence of Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 could still proceed under that rule. Additionally, this rule was amended to provide that a defendant may assert his or her claim of ineffective counsel on direct appeal. Whitmore v. State, 299 Ark. 55, 771 S.W.2d 266 (1989) (decision prior to 1990 amendment).

While this rule is intended to address claims of ineffective assistance of counsel predicated on a motion for new trial that alleges errors made at the trial level, the rule also requires the assertion of "facts sufficient to raise an issue whether a defendant's counsel was ineffective" in order for a hearing on the issue to be held. Mays v. State, 303 Ark. 505, 798 S.W.2d 75 (1990) (decision prior to 1990 amendment).

To prevail on a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, the petitioner must show first that counsel's performance was deficient. This requires showing that counsel made errors so serious that counsel was not functioning as the "counsel" guaranteed the petitioner by the Sixth Amendment. Second, the petitioner must show that the deficient performance prejudiced the defense, which requires showing that counsel's errors were so serious as to deprive the petitioner of a fair trial. Mays v. State, 303 Ark. 505, 798 S.W.2d 75 (1990) (decision prior to 1990 amendment); Porter v. State, 308 Ark. 137, 823 S.W.2d 846 (1992).

The purpose of Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was to provide a procedural method by which one's constitutionally guaranteed right to effective assistance of counsel could be protected. The only manner in which that right can now be protected in state court is by the procedure provided in this rule. Looney v. State, 32 Ark. App. 191, 798 S.W.2d 452 (1990) (decision prior to 1990 amendment).

Claims of ineffective assistance of counsel were insufficient. Cox v. State, 305 Ark. 244, 808 S.W.2d 306 (1991).

Defendant made a timely claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, and therefore, new counsel should have been appointed to represent him in his direct appeal from a capital murder conviction and with respect to any other proceedings in connection with his claim for post conviction relief. Cox v. State, 305 Ark. 488, 807 S.W.2d 665 (1991).

The appointment of new counsel to prosecute the defendant's motion for a new trial further in that forum was not required where defendant's allegations were conclusory and he did not raise sufficient facts to support an issue of ineffective counsel. Cravey v. State, 306 Ark. 487, 815 S.W.2d 933 (1991) (decision under law prior to 1990 amendment).

The trial court's denial of defendant's motion for a new trial was not erroneous after finding that defendant had received effective assistance of counsel, and that defendant voluntarily entered his guilty plea with knowledge and understanding of the consequences. Thompson v. State, 307 Ark. 492, 821 S.W.2d 37 (1991) (decision under law prior to 1990 amendment).

In the absence of something in the record showing the contrary, it will be presumed that the court informed defendant of his right to assert ineffective assistance of counsel. Meekins v. State, 34 Ark. App. 67, 806 S.W.2d 9 (1991).

Where defendant was represented by the assistant public defender, and the co-defendant, whose interests were in conflict with the defendant's, was represented by the public defender, there was no conflict of interest since the attorneys worked together only part-time, their offices were in two different cities, they made a conscious effort to sever the cases, and they worked independently for their respective clients. White v. State, 39 Ark. App. 52, 837 S.W.2d 479 (1992).

Motion for a new trial following a capital murder conviction, alleging defense counsel ineffective, denied. Cox v. State, 313 Ark. 184, 853 S.W.2d 266 (1993).

Motion for New Trial.

Where defendant challenged his trial attorney's representation when he filed his motion for a new trial, but failed to appeal the denial of that motion to the state Supreme Court, defendant failed to comply with the state procedural rules, and thus, defendant's federal claim was procedurally barred unless he could establish the requisite cause and prejudice. Harris v. Norris, 864 F. Supp. 96 (E.D. Ark. 1994).

Where a motion for a new trial is filed asserting facts sufficient to raise an issue as to whether defendant's counsel was ineffective, the time for filing a notice of appeal will not expire until 30 days after the disposition of the motion. Gidron v. State, 316 Ark. 352, 872 S.W.2d 64 (1994).

Purpose.

The court's purpose in making the 1989 change in post-conviction procedure was to shorten, or compact, the period in which a convicted defendant may claim ineffective assistance of counsel. If a defendant does not make such an allegation within the thirty (30) day period of limitation, he is barred from asserting such a claim in state court. Mobbs v. State, 303 Ark. 98, 792 S.W.2d 601 (1990).

Right to Appeal.

Petitioner was never advised by the trial court of his right to appeal and, therefore, was granted leave to appeal. Easter v. Lockhart, 773 F. Supp. 1226 (E.D. Ark. 1991).

Right to Counsel.

A proceeding under former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.4 is a critical stage of a defendant's criminal proceedings, entitling defendant to representation by separate counsel under the Sixth Amendment. Robinson v. Norris, 60 F.3d 457 (8th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1115, 116 S. Ct. 1344, 134 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1996).

The fact that defendant continued to be represented by trial counsel throughout the thirty-day period for filing a motion under former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.4 was of no consequence because defendant was entitled to separate counsel to pursue his ineffective assistance claim. Robinson v. Norris, 60 F.3d 457 (8th Cir. 1995), cert.

denied, 517 U.S. 1115, 116 S. Ct. 1344, 134 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1996).

Rule Not Mandatory.

This rule is not mandatory. Hogan v. State, 289 Ark. 402, 712 S.W.2d 295 (1986).

Validity of Conviction.

Where the defendant failed to show how he was inconvenienced or prejudiced by the belated entry of the nunc pro tunc judgment, 116 days after his conviction for criminal attempt to commit rape, the court's failure to enter a judgment within the 30 days prescribed by the rule did not affect the validity of the defendant's conviction. Lovett v. State, 267 Ark. 912, 591 S.W.2d 683 (Ct. App. 1979).

This rule is directory rather than mandatory and the court's failure to enter a judgment within the 30 days prescribed by the rule does not affect the validity of the proceedings resulting in the conviction of a defendant. Lovett v. State, 267 Ark. 912, 591 S.W.2d 683 (Ct. App. 1979).

Waiver of Irregularities.

Where sentencing was not in conformity with § 16-90-105 or this rule and the record did not clearly set forth the sentence as required by §§ 16-90-106, 16-90-402 and 16-90-406 but there was no objection by either party and no appeal from the sentence, such irregularities were waived. Cooper v. State, 278 Ark. 394, 645 S.W.2d 950 (1983).

Rule 33.3. Post-trial motions.

(a) A person convicted of either a felony or misdemeanor may file a motion for new trial or any other application for relief. Such pleadings shall include a statement that the movant believes the action to be meritorious and is not offered for the purpose of delay. A copy of any such motion shall be served on the representative of the prosecuting party. The trial court shall designate a date certain, if a hearing is requested or found to be necessary, to take evidence, hear, and determine all of the matters presented. The hearing shall be held within ten (10) days of the filing of any motion or application unless circumstances justify that the hearing or determination be delayed.

(b) All posttrial motions or applications for relief must be filed within thirty days after the date of entry of judgment. A posttrial motion or application filed before the entry of judgment shall become effective and be treated as filed on the day after the judgment is entered.

(c) Upon the filing of a posttrial motion or application for relief in the trial court, the time to file a notice of appeal shall not expire until thirty (30) days after the disposition of all motions or applications. If the trial court neither grants nor denies a posttrial motion or application for relief within thirty (30) days after the date the motion or application is filed, the motion or application shall be deemed denied as of the 30th day.

HISTORY: Adopted and; amended December 4, 1995; amended February 15, 2001.

Publisher's Notes.

Former Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.3 has been re-numbered as Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.6.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 33.3 (1995):

This rule is former ARCrP 36.22 with a new title. At one time, it had been proposed that it appear as Rule 10 of the Arkansas Rules of Appellate Procedure — Criminal. See RAP—Crim 2, as to when a notice of appeal must be filed.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

The rule has been reorganized and divided into three subdivisions. The second sentence of subdivision (b) is new and effectively overturns a line of cases which held that a post-trial motion that is filed prior to the entry of the judgment is untimely and ineffective. See Brown v. State, 333 Ark. 698, 970 S.W.2d 287 (1998); Davies v. State, 64 Ark. App. 12, 977 S.W.2d 900 (1998); Hicks v. State, 324 Ark. 450, 921 S.W.2d 604 (1996); and Webster v. State, 320 Ark. 393, 896 S.W.2d 890 (1995). The second sentence of subdivision (c) provides that a motion not ruled on by the court within 30 days of its filing (or within 30 days of the date it is treated as filed) is "deemed denied as of the 30th day." This provision also appears in Rule 2(b)(1) of the Rules of Appellate Procedure — Criminal. The time within which to file a notice of appeal is found in Rule 2 of the Rules of Appellate Procedure — Criminal.

CASE NOTES

Appeal to Circuit Court.

Where defendant convicted of a misdemeanor in municipal court filed a motion to proceed as a pauper in circuit court, this rule did not stay the time for appeal pursuant to AICR 9 [now ADCR 9], since the motion to proceed as a pauper in circuit court was not one of the specified posttrial motions, and it was not pending in the trial court. Smith v. State, 316 Ark. 32, 870 S.W.2d 716 (1994).

Construction.

The terms of former Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.6 (now see this rule) are broad and include a motion for reconsideration of the denial of postconviction relief. Collins v. State, 324 Ark. 322, 920 S.W.2d 846 (1996).

Where defendant pleaded guilty to a terrorist act and manslaughter, but before sentencing filed a motion challenging the trial court's authority to enter a sentence as to the terrorist act, the motion did not constitute a posttrial motion by operation of this rule. Seibs v. State, 357 Ark. 331, 166 S.W.3d 16 (2004).

State could not appeal under Ark. R. App. P. Crim. 3 simply on the ground that the trial court erred in acquitting defendant upon defendant's posttrial motion, but where the state contended that the trial court acted without jurisdiction, the appellate court treated state's appeal as a petition for a writ of certiorari; under subsection (c) of this rule, posttrial motions were deemed denied on the 30th day after judgment was filed and, because defendant's posttrial motion was deemed denied on January 26, 2004, the trial court lost jurisdiction to rule on the merits of the motion after that date, thus, the trial court's ruling made on April 6, 2004, which resulted in the entry of an order of acquittal, was of no legal effect. State v. Markham, 359 Ark. 126, 194 S.W.3d 765 (2004).

While the time periods enumerated in subsection (a) of this rule are discretionary, the time restrictions of subsection (c) of this rule are mandatory. Wright v. State, 359 Ark. 418, 198 S.W.3d 537 (2004).

Effect on Postconviction Relief.

Where a defendant was convicted of manslaughter in February, 1980, and filed a petition in October, 1981, pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2, for permission to file a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence, the petition could not be granted since both this rule and § 16-91-105 fix the time for filing a motion for a new trial as that allowed for the filing of a notice of appeal, which is 30 days; accordingly, a motion filed 20 months after judgment is obviously too late. Chisum v. State, 274 Ark. 332, 625 S.W.2d 448 (1981).

A "deemed denied" ruling on a posttrial motion for a new trial is an insufficient order from which to raise on direct appeal a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Dodson v. State, 326 Ark. 637, 934 S.W.2d 198 (1996).

Defendant's motion for a belated appeal was denied because the appeal was not filed within 30 days of the date defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled by operation of law and defendant's attorney did not accept responsibility for the late filing; however, the court indicated that the motion would be granted if defendant's attorney filed a motion and affidavit within 30 days accepting responsibility. Jones v. State, 353 Ark. 121, 111 S.W.3d 853 (2003).

Petitioner's notice of appeal of the decision dismissing his petition for writ of habeas corpus and denying his motion for reconsideration was treated as a motion for rule on clerk, pursuant to Ark. Sup. Ct. & Ct. App. R. 2-2(b), to perfect the appeal. Petitioner's notice of appeal was timely filed within 30 days of the court's denial of the motion for reconsideration; the court clerk erred by declining to lodge the record based on a determination that the motion for reconsideration was deemed denied earlier than the court's ruling, as the deemed-denied provision under this rule does not apply to proceedings under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1. Hooper v. Hobbs, 2013 Ark. 31 (2013).

Excusable Tardiness.

Where judgment of conviction was entered on January 17, 1977, without notice to defendant, and where defendant's counsel discovered on February 17, 1977 that the judgment had been entered and filed notice of appeal on the same date, there was good reason shown for the one day tardiness in filing the notice of appeal. Goodwin v. State, 261 Ark. 926, 552 S.W.2d 233 (1977).

Hearing.

Although this rule states that a hearing is required when it is requested, the rule provides no sanction for when a hearing is not afforded a party; a new trial is certainly not contemplated under the terms of the rule as a sanction for failure to hold a hearing. Turner v. State, 325 Ark. 237, 926 S.W.2d 843 (1996).

Where a hearing was requested but the trial judge made its ruling in the absence of a hearing, there was no error committed by the trial court in its refusal to grant a hearing because the hearing would have been superfluous. Turner v. State, 325 Ark. 237, 926 S.W.2d 843 (1996).

There was no abuse of the trial court's discretion in denying without a hearing defendant's motion for a new trial because a hearing under subsection (a) of this rule was mandatory only when requested. A hearing was not requested, and the trial court's lengthy order was well considered and well reasoned. Sanders v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 833 (2009).

Ineffective Assistance of Counsel.

Motion for a new trial asserting ineffective assistance of counsel denied. McDonald v. State, 42 Ark. App. 37, 852 S.W.2d 833 (1993).

Appellate counsel filed the notice of appeal four days after the judgment and, therefore, could have timely raised ineffective assistance of counsel in a motion for a new trial; defendant's argument, that the appellate court should have address claims of ineffective assistance first raised on direct appeal where it was apparent from the face of the record that an appellant received ineffective assistance of counsel and there was no possibility that the ineffectiveness was due to trial strategy, was without merit. Ratchford v. State, 357 Ark. 27, 159 S.W.3d 304 (2004), writ denied, 2014 Ark. 452 (2014).

Defendant failed to present the appellate court with a sufficient order from which to consider allegations of trial counsel's ineffectiveness where defendant's claims were not raised or developed during the trial, further, the facts surrounding defendant's claims were not developed after trial because a hearing on defendant's posttrial motion was never held; thus, because defendant's motion was deemed denied, there was no order in which the trial court evaluated counsel's effectiveness. Maxwell v. State, 359 Ark. 335, 197 S.W.3d 442 (2004).

When someone driving appellant's car fled from an officer and ran into the woods, items used to manufacture methamphetamine were found in the car and appellant's girlfriend testified that he was driving; a jury found appellant guilty of manufacturing methamphetamine, possessing drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture methamphetamine, and fleeing. He was not entitled to postconviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 based on counsel's failure to move for a new trial under this rule when he received a letter in which appellant's girlfriend recanted her testimony; the letter was received more than thirty days after the judgment was entered, and a motion for new trial at that point would have been without merit. Britt v. State, 2009 Ark. 569, 349 S.W.3d 290 (2009).

In a case involving second-degree sexual assault and attempted rape, defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel was not heard on direct appeal because there was no ruling made on defendant's posttrial motions; even if the motions were deemed denied, this was an insufficient order from which to raise an ineffective assistance of counsel claim. Moreover, defendant did not file an amended notice of appeal within 30 days of the deemed denied posttrial ruling. Bean v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 107, 432 S.W.3d 87 (2014).

Supreme court was precluded from addressing defendant's ineffective-assistance claims because a deemed-denied ruling was an insufficient order from which to raise ineffective assistance of counsel on direct appeal; although the circuit court entered a written order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, it was not entered until after the motion had already been deemed denied pursuant to the rule. Chatmon v. State, 2015 Ark. 28, 467 S.W.3d 731 (2015).

Motion for New Trial.

In a prosecution for first-degree assault and second-degree battery, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the defendant a new trial on his motion that one of the prosecuting witnesses would recant his testimony, where no written motion for new trial was filed on that basis. Newberry v. State, 262 Ark. 334, 557 S.W.2d 864 (1977).

Where the defendant's motion for a new trial on a second degree battery charge was filed within 30 days after a mitigation hearing, but not within 30 days of the first pronouncement of his sentence, the motion was still timely made since the ultimate pronouncement of his sentence occurred on the date of the mitigation hearing, and the time for filing a notice of appeal and thus for moving for a new trial commenced that date rather than the date of the original pronouncement. Currie v. State, 267 Ark. 1178, 594 S.W.2d 56 (Ct. App. 1980).

Motion for new trial held untimely. Uteley v. State, 308 Ark. 622, 826 S.W.2d 268 (1992).

In a motion for new trial alleging jury misconduct and lack of a fair trial, this rule and § 16-91-105 have set the time frame, 30 days from date of judgment, and they have effectively superseded and taken precedence over § 16-89-130; therefore, defendant's motion was not timely when filed nearly 90 days after conviction was entered. Cigainero v. State, 310 Ark. 504, 838 S.W.2d 361 (1992).

Motion for a new trial held timely. Crisko v. State, 328 Ark. 388, 943 S.W.2d 582, modified, 328 Ark. 393, 945 S.W.2d 383 (1997).

Where a criminal defendant files a motion for a new trial, a motion for arrest of judgment, or any other application for relief prior to the time fixed to file a notice of appeal and requests a hearing, the court must designate a date certain for a hearing. Crouch v. State, 62 Ark. App. 33, 968 S.W.2d 643 (1998).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to hold a hearing on defendant's motion for a new trial where defendant failed to set out any new evidence; judicial economy would not have been served by holding a hearing. Brooks v. State, 76 Ark. App. 164, 61 S.W.3d 916 (2001).

Defendant's motion for a new trial in a capital murder case based on newly discovered evidence was properly denied because the witness's statement regarding the position of a victim's body and the time of death was not credible based on the physical evidence; moreover, the witness did not offer the story until after the trial had begun. Smart v. State, 352 Ark. 522, 104 S.W.3d 386 (2003).

Even though the trial court erred when it determined that it did not have jurisdiction to hear defendant's motion for a new trial, where no action was taken on the motion, it was deemed denied 30 days after it was filed. Smith v. State, 354 Ark. 226, 118 S.W.3d 542 (2003).

Trial court erred in denying defendant's motion for a new trial without granting defendant a hearing on defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel because by denying the motion without allowing defendant to develop the claim, the trial judge precluded defendant from presenting the issue on direct appeal. Rounsaville v. State, 374 Ark. 356, 288 S.W.3d 213 (2008).

Denial of defendant's motion for a new trial after he had been convicted of rape was appropriate because statements commenting on the lack of evidence were clearly directed towards rebutting the defensive strategy and did not constitute impermissible references to defendant's failure to testify. Because the remarks were not improper, counsel was not ineffective for failing to preserve an argument that those remarks were improper. Rounsaville v. State, 2011 Ark. 236 (2011).

In an aggravated robbery case, an issue relating to a motion for a new trial was preserved for appellate review because an oral motion prior to the entry of the judgment and commitment order was made in open court, the state was aware that the motion had been made, and the state was given an opportunity to respond. However, because appellant received a sentence within the statutory range short of the maximum, he was not prejudiced by an victim-impact statement, and a new trial was not warranted; appellant received a 60-year term of imprisonment, but the maximum he could have received was life in prison. Walden v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 307, 419 S.W.3d 739 (2012).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a new trial based on a witness's Facebook post where, reading the statement as a whole, the witness's comment about being one of only two people who came forward, despite the presence of a large crowd, was a reaction to the specific facts of the case, not a recantation of his eyewitness testimony that defendant was the shooter. Johnson v. State, 2017 Ark. 206, 515 S.W.3d 116 (2017).

Notice of Appeal.

Under former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.9(a)(2), the time for taking an appeal is within 30 days from the date of entry of an order denying a post-trial motion under this rule; the trial judge's decision from the bench denying appellant's motion does not become effective until the date of filing. Nance v. State, 318 Ark. 758, 891 S.W.2d 26 (1994).

The jurisdictional consequences for failing to timely file a motion for a new trial should mirror those which result from failing to timely file a notice of appeal, since the limitations period of § 16-91-105(b)(1) and former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.22 is specifically defined by reference to that set forth in former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.9(a); accordingly, compliance with the thirty-day filing period contemplated by § 16-91-105 and former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.22 is not a jurisdictional prerequisite to the state court's consideration of a motion for a new trial based upon newly discovered evidence. Perry v. Norris, 879 F. Supp. 1503 (E.D. Ark. 1995), aff'd, 107 F.3d 665 (8th Cir. 1997).

The timely filing of a notice of appeal is jurisdictional. Henry v. State, 49 Ark. App. 16, 894 S.W.2d 610 (1995).

A notice of appeal filed prior to the disposition of a post-trial motion has no effect, and a new notice of appeal must be filed within the prescribed time dated from the entry of the order dealing with the post-trial motion or from the expiration of the 30 days allowed in the absence of a ruling. Henry v. State, 49 Ark. App. 16, 894 S.W.2d 610 (1995).

Although defendant filed his motion for a new trial five days before his original conviction was entered, his notice of appeal was timely filed, because he had thirty additional days from the trial court's denial of his new trial motion to file his notice of appeal. McIntosh v. State, 340 Ark. 34, 8 S.W.3d 506 (2000).

Where defendant failed to renew his notice of appeal after the trial court failed to rule on his motion for reconsideration, none of the arguments raised in defendant's motion for reconsideration were preserved for review; however, notwithstanding defendant's failure to preserve the arguments in the motion for reconsideration, the appellate court could still consider the issue of the right to a jury trial on appeal. Ayala v. State, 365 Ark. 192, 226 S.W.3d 766 (2006).

Time Limitations.

Where 31 days after defendant's motion for a new trial was deemed denied defendant filed a second notice of appeal from his judgment of conviction, his failure to timely file an amended notice of appeal, as required by Ark. R. App. P. Crim. 2(b)(2), meant that his appeal of the denial of his motion for a new trial was not properly before the court because the time period in subsection (c) of this rule is mandatory. Wright v. State, 359 Ark. 418, 198 S.W.3d 537 (2004).

Where the state claimed on appeal that the trial court lacked jurisdiction to grant defendant's post trial motion to correct court costs, the appellate court treated the appeal as a petition for writ of certiorari under Ark. R. App.

P. Crim. 3 and found that, under subsection (b) of this rule, defendant's motion was filed six days after the 30-day deadline and was thus untimely. State v. Boyette, 362 Ark. 27, 207 S.W.3d 488 (2005).

Appellant's attorney was clearly at fault when he filed a motion for new trial more than 30 days after entry of the judgment and commitment order, and the attorney could not shift the responsibility for timely perfecting an appeal to the trial court clerk for his or her failure to send him copy of the judgment; this rule did not permit the addition of five days for service of the judgment under Ark. R. Crim. P. 1.4. Woods v. State, 368 Ark. 131, 243 S.W.3d 258 (2006).

Parties agreed that the circuit court's dismissal of the case under § 5-2-310 was error but the circuit court did not have jurisdiction to reconsider its dismissal, reinstate the case, and set a status hearing as the State did not file an appeal, a motion for a new trial, or any other written motion to reconsider within 30 days of entry of the order. Schepp v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 677, 536 S.W.3d 663 (2017).

Writ of Coram Nobis.

A writ of coram nobis cannot be granted on the basis of newly discovered evidence. Smith v. State, 301 Ark. 374, 784 S.W.2d 595 (1990).

Inmate's petition for a writ of coram nobis was properly denied where the DNA test results from vaginal swabs allegedly not disclosed by the state to defense counsel were not exculpatory because defendant had been convicted of oral rape. Cloird v. State, 357 Ark. 446, 182 S.W.3d 477 (2004).

Supreme Court of Arkansas declined to recall its mandate denying petitioner's request for post-conviction relief and writ of error coram nobis as petitioner's claims of juror misconduct did not fall within any of the categories of errors for which error coram nobis could provide relief; further, petitioner's claim of juror misconduct brought over a decade after his conviction was untimely as the matter could have been brought in a motion for new trial immediately after the verdict and conviction. Echols v. State, 360 Ark. 332, 201 S.W.3d 890 (2005).

Petition for a writ of coram nobis was denied in a rape case as inmate failed to show that evidence was withheld, the victim's subsequently recanted testimony was not necessary due to the DNA evidence, and inmate failed to exercise due diligence since the petition was not filed for five years. Thomas v. State, 367 Ark. 478, 241 S.W.3d 247 (2006).

Appellant's motion for reconsideration filed after a denial of a writ of error coram nobis did not operate to extend the time for filing a notice of appeal. The deemed-denied provision of this rule did not apply to appellant's postconviction proceeding, rendering appellant's notice of appeal untimely under Ark. R. App. P. Crim. 2(a)(3). McJames v. State, 2010 Ark. 74 (2010).

Because an inmate was convicted as an accomplice to a homicide and claimed that the inmate's sentence violated the Eighth Amendment, the inmate was not entitled to a writ of error coram nobis as the claim did not fit with the four categories of relief that were afforded in the writ. Cox v. State, 2011 Ark. 96 (2011).

Petitioner was not entitled to a writ of error coram nobis, because the petitioner offered no evidence to sustain the newly discovered evidence claim, when the allegations were conclusory in nature and seemed to be intended to cover the entire legal proceeding against him beginning with his arrest and continuing through his sentencing, when the petitioner had not shown that there was any information extrinsic to the record that, even if it had been known at the time of trial, would somehow have created an issue sufficient to call into question the outcome of the trial. Thompson v. State, 2012 Ark. 339 (2012).

Rule 33.4. Custody and restraint of defendants and witnesses.

Defendants and witnesses shall not be subjected to physical restraint while in court unless the trial judge has found such restraint reasonably necessary to maintain order. If the trial judge orders such restraint, he shall enter into the record of the case the reasons therefor. Whenever physical restraint of a defendant or witness occurs in the presence of jurors trying the case, the judge shall upon request of the defendant or his attorney instruct the jury that such restraint is not to be considered in assessing the proof and determining guilt.

Comment to Rule 33.4

This section does not purport to designate physical restraint as the sole permissible manner of dealing with recalcitrant defendants or witnesses. Accordingly, a judge may, in his sound discretion, take any constitutionally permissible alternative action should it become necessary to do so.

CASE NOTESDiscretion of Judge.

This rule leaves the issue of whether to subject a defendant or a witness to physical restraints while in the courtroom to the discretion of the trial judge. Woods v. State, 40 Ark. App. 204, 846 S.W.2d 186 (1993).

The trial court has discretion to use physical restraints on a defendant for security purposes and to maintain order in the courtroom. Stanley v. State, 324 Ark. 310, 920 S.W.2d 835 (1996).

Handcuffs.

Where it was clear from the nature of defendant's outbursts and the fact that it took six officers to restrain him that the handcuffs were reasonably necessary to maintain order, both at the time of his ouster from the courtroom and continuing after his return; and where the judge instructed the jury to disregard the outbursts in assessing the defendant's innocence or guilt, there was no denial of the right to a fair trial. Terry v. State, 303 Ark. 270, 796 S.W.2d 332 (1990).

It is not prejudicial, per se, when the defendant is brought into a courtroom handcuffed or legcuffed, where defendants were charged with violent offenses, engaged in disruptive behavior, or attempted escape, and there was no evidence of anything but a brief, inadvertent sighting by only some of the jurors. Townsend v. State, 308 Ark. 266, 824 S.W.2d 821 (1992).

Where each defendant received the maximum sentence and were regarded by the jury as first offenders, the placing of one of the defendants in restraints throughout the trial and for no compelling reason, within full view of the jury, had a telling effect on the jury in assessing punishment. Townsend v. State, 308 Ark. 266, 824 S.W.2d 821 (1992).

Jury Instructions.

Defendant's failure to request that the judge instruct the jury that use of a restraint is not to be considered in assessing the proof and determining guilt would not inure to defendant's benefit where defendant contended it was error to order him to appear in the courtroom wearing handcuffs. Stanley v. State, 324 Ark. 310, 920 S.W.2d 835 (1996).

Use of Restraints Improper.

Defendant had no record of prior criminal history, had not caused any previous disruptions in court, and there was no evidence of an attempted escape, thus, allowing defendant to be placed before a jury in the black-and-white jail uniform and leg restraints was inherently prejudicial. Flores v. State, 350 Ark. 198, 85 S.W.3d 896 (2002).

Use of Restraints Upheld.

It was not prejudicial to put restraints on defendant charged with escape in the second degree and aggravated robbery; use of restraints has been upheld where the defendant has been charged with violent offenses, engaged in disruptive behavior, and attempted escape. Stanley v. State, 324 Ark. 310, 920 S.W.2d 835 (1996).

Because defendant continued to interrupt the prosecutor's closing argument even after being reprimanded by the trial court, the trial court did not err in gagging defendant, which was reasonably necessary to maintain order under this rule, and the trial court properly explained its reasons, as required, for its decision. Newman v. State, No. CR 02-811, 2003 Ark. LEXIS 295 (Ark. May 22, 2003).

Where defendant was charged with four counts of attempting to commit capital murder and one count of attempting to commit first-degree murder, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ordering that defendant be restrained during the proceedings; defendant was prone to fleeing from authorities, it took several officers to get him handcuffed and it was not easy to subdue defendant even with the use of mace. Steward v. State, 95 Ark. App. 6, 233 S.W.3d 180 (2006).

Witnesses.

Defendant was not prejudiced by plexiglass screen placed around witness stand during trial to protect witnesses from defendant who was acting as his own attorney. Parker v. State, 300 Ark. 360, 779 S.W.2d 156 (1989), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 883, 111 S. Ct. 218, 112 L. Ed. 2d 186 (1990).

Restraint of witness was reasonable because of the witness's prior felony convictions and the two pending charges of aggravated robbery for which he was being held in jail. Woods v. State, 40 Ark. App. 204, 846 S.W.2d 186 (1993).

Rule 33.5. Note-taking by jurors.

Jurors may take notes regarding the evidence presented to them during the course of a trial and keep the notes when the jury retires for its deliberations. Any notes so taken shall be treated as confidential, disclosure of the notes or their nature being permissible only between the juror making them and his fellow jurors.

This rule is former Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.2.

Rule 33.6. Instructions and Verdict Forms.

(a) In the trial of all cases in courts of record wherein juries are employed, upon request of counsel for any party, or of a juror, it shall be the duty of the presiding judge to deliver to the jury immediately prior to its retirement for deliberation, a written copy of the oral instructions read to the jury. The written jury instructions shall be returned to the court by the foreman of the jury when the jury is dismissed.

(b) The verdict forms and written jury instructions shall be filed in the clerk's case file at the conclusion of the jury's deliberations.

(c) Any proffered jury instructions, which were requested by parties and rejected by the court, shall be delivered to the court reporter and made an exhibit to the court reporter's transcript.

Reporter's Notes, 2019 Amendment:

Subdivisions (b) and (c) were added.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 33.6

The trial court should deliver a copy of the instructions to the jury on motion of defense counsel, even if the motion comes an hour after the jury retires. Oliver v. State, 286 Ark. 198, 691 S.W.2d 842 (1985). See, also, Parker v. State, 270 Ark. 897, 606 S.W.2d 746 (1980), where the Court held that the rule "means exactly what it says," id. at 901, 606 S.W.2d at 748, and held that it was prejudicial error for the court to fail to deliver instructions as requested.

A corollary to the rule's requirement that the trial court deliver the instructions to the jury upon request is that proposed typewritten instructions be submitted by counsel to the court. The Arkansas Court of Appeals has held that a trial court does not commit error by refusing to read an instruction not submitted in typewritten form. Willett v. State, 18 Ark. App. 125, 712 S.W.2d 925 (1986) (appellant's counsel submitted model criminal jury instruction book to court with request that the court read AMCI 204 to jury). See, also, Henry v. State, 18 Ark. App. 115, 710 S.W.2d 849 (1986) (motion to give AMCI jury instruction insufficient to preserve issue on appeal where copy of instruction not submitted to court).

CASE NOTESConstruction.

This Rule does not contravene or modify § 16-89-125, which provides that when evidence is concluded, the court shall, on motion of either party, instruct the jury on the law applicable to the case. Bennett v. State, 302 Ark. 179, 789 S.W.2d 436, cert. denied, 498 U.S. 851, 111 S. Ct. 144, 112 L. Ed. 2d 110 (1990).

Failure to Deliver.

Since it is the expressed duty of the court to deliver typewritten instructions to the jury prior to its retirement, when requested to do so, it is prejudicial error for the court to fail to do so. Parker v. State, 270 Ark. 897, 606 S.W.2d 746 (1980).

Where the trial judge failed, over a specific objection by the defendant, to give the jury a copy of the instructions, the defendant's conviction had to be reversed. Oliver v. State, 286 Ark. 198, 691 S.W.2d 842 (1985).

Failure to Preserve Error.

Where the text of the proposed instruction on criminal trespass did not appear in the abstract or in the transcript, the Court of Appeals would not consider assigned error for refusal to give the instruction. Henry v. State, 18 Ark. App. 115, 710 S.W.2d 849 (1986).

In order to preserve for appeal an objection to the trial court's failure to give an instruction, the appellant must make a proffer of the instruction to the judge in accordance with the procedural rules of that court; therefore, where the proffered instruction was not typewritten, any error was not preserved. Willett v. State, 18 Ark. App. 125, 712 S.W.2d 925 (1986); Hart v. State, 301 Ark. 200, 783 S.W.2d 40 (1990); Pharo v. State, 30 Ark. App. 94, 783 S.W.2d 64 (1990).

An appellant cannot assign as error the failure to instruct on any issue unless he has submitted a proposed instruction on that issue; a request for an instruction is insufficient. Mings v. State, 318 Ark. 201, 884 S.W.2d 596 (1994).

Preservation of Issue.

Where counsel for defendant requested that trial judge provide written copy of instructions to the jury it was up to defense counsel to obtain a clear ruling in order to preserve the issue for appeal. Hamm v. State, 301 Ark. 154, 782 S.W.2d 577 (1990).

Rule Mandatory.

Ark. Const., Art. 7, § 23 and this rule make it mandatory that the trial judge, when requested by a party or a juror, deliver to the jury a typewritten copy of the oral instructions given to the jury. Henry v. State, 18 Ark. App. 115, 710 S.W.2d 849 (1986).

In a criminal case, upon request by counsel for any party, or by a juror, the trial judge must supply a written copy of the instructions to the jury. Hamm v. State, 301 Ark. 154, 782 S.W.2d 577 (1990).

Rule 33.7. Additional instructions.

(a) If, after retiring for deliberation, a jury desires additional instructions it shall be conducted to a court room designated by the judge.

(b) The court shall give additional instructions in response to a jury's request unless:

(i) the jury may be adequately informed by directing its attention to some portion of the original instructions;

(ii) the request concerns matters not in evidence or questions not pertaining to the law of the case; or

(iii) the request would require the judge to express an opinion as to factual matters that the jury must determine.

(c) In order to avoid giving undue prominence to additional instructions, the court in its discretion may repeat instructions previously given.

(d) The judge may recall the jury after it has retired to deliberate and give it additional instructions in order to:

(i) correct or withdraw an erroneous instruction;

(ii) clarify an ambiguous instruction; or

(iii) inform the jury on a point of law which should have been covered by the original instructions.

(e) Should additional instructions be given, the judge in his discretion may allow additional argument by counsel.

Publisher's Notes.

This rule is former Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.4.

CASE NOTES

Discretion of Court.

Because the additional instruction was supported by the evidence, was given after the other instructions were given and before the closing arguments were made, and was authorized by both case law and subsection (d) of this rule, even if the jury had retired to deliberate, there was no abuse of the court's discretion in giving the additional instruction. Donovan v. State, 26 Ark. App. 224, 764 S.W.2d 47 (1989).

Elaborating on Instructions.

A trial judge, once instructing a jury, should refrain from elaborating on his instructions, for such remarks, if in error, can lead to the necessity for a new trial. Sumlin v. State, 266 Ark. 709, 587 S.W.2d 571 (1979).

No abuse of discretion found where judge clarified a term in the jury instruction instead of rereading the entire instruction in light of the clarification, especially where appellant failed to request at that time that the entire instruction be reread. Ashe v. State, 57 Ark. App. 99, 942 S.W.2d 267 (1997).

Resolving Misunderstanding.

Where jury returning to courtroom was polled and stated unanimity as to guilt on charges of aggravated robbery, rape and kidnapping, but one juror stated that she had not agreed to the amount of time to be served and thus had not voted on the sentence, it was not error for the court to seek to eliminate a misunderstanding and send the jury back to the jury room to fix the sentence under this rule; thus, there was no coercion and no error in accepting the verdict under these circumstances. Ashby v. State, 271 Ark. 884, 611 S.W.2d 512 (1981).

Rule 37. Other Post-Conviction Proceedings and Relief

RULE 36.
APPEALS FROM DISTRICT COURT TO CIRCUIT COURT

[Note: For appeals in civil cases, see Rule 9 of the District Court Rules.]

(a) Right to Appeal. A person convicted of a criminal offense in a district court, including a person convicted upon a plea of guilty, may appeal the judgment of conviction to the circuit court for the judicial district in which the conviction occurred. The state shall have no right of appeal from a judgment of a district court.

(b) Time for Taking Appeal. An appeal from a district court to the circuit court shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court having jurisdiction of the appeal within thirty (30) days from the date of the entry of the judgment in the district court. The 30-day period is not extended by the filing of a post-trial motion under Rule 33.3.

(c) How Taken. An appeal from a district court to circuit court shall be taken by filing with the clerk of the circuit court a certified record of the proceedings in the district court. Neither a notice of appeal nor an order granting an appeal shall be required. The record of proceedings in the district court shall include, at a minimum, a copy of the district court docket sheet and any bond or other security filed by the defendant to guarantee the defendant’s appearance before the circuit court. It shall be the duty of the clerk of the district court to prepare and certify such record when the defendant files a written request to that effect with the clerk of the district court and pays any fees of the district court authorized by law therefor. The defendant shall serve a copy of the written request on the prosecuting attorney for the judicial district and shall file a certificate of such service with the district court. The defendant shall have the responsibility of filing the certified record in the office of the circuit clerk. Except as otherwise provided in subsection (d) of this rule, the circuit court shall acquire jurisdiction of the appeal upon the filing of the certified record in the office of the circuit clerk.

(d) Failure of clerk to file record. If the clerk of the district court does not prepare and certify a record for filing in the circuit court in a timely manner, the defendant may take an appeal by filing an affidavit in the office of the circuit clerk, within forty (40) days from the date of the entry of the judgment in the district court, showing (i) that the defendant has requested the clerk of the district court to prepare and certify the record for purposes of appeal and (ii) that the clerk has not done so within thirty (30) days from the date of the entry of the judgment in the district court. The defendant shall promptly serve a copy of such affidavit upon the clerk of the district court and upon the prosecuting attorney. The circuit court shall acquire jurisdiction of the appeal upon the filing of the affidavit. On motion of the defendant or the prosecuting attorney, the circuit court may order the clerk of the district court to prepare, certify, and file a record in the circuit court.

(e) Bond. When an appeal is taken from a district court to circuit court, the district court may require the defendant to post a bond or other security to guarantee the appearance of the defendant before the circuit court, provided that an appearance bond originally posted with the district court to guarantee the appearance of the defendant before that court shall serve to guarantee the appearance of the defendant before the circuit court on appeal. The approval of the bond or other security to guarantee the appearance of the defendant before the circuit court shall stay the imposition of the judgment imposed by the district court. The clerk of the district court shall transmit any bond or other security to the circuit court. The failure of the defendant to post a bond or other security with the district court shall not prevent the circuit court from acquiring jurisdiction of the appeal. After acquiring jurisdiction of the appeal, the circuit court may modify the bond or other security.

(f) Notice. When the record of the proceeding in the district court is filed in the office of the circuit clerk, the circuit clerk shall promptly give written notice thereof to the prosecuting attorney and to the circuit judge to whom the appeal is assigned.

(g) Trial De Novo. An appeal from a judgment of conviction in a district court shall be tried de novo in the circuit court as if no judgment had been rendered in the district court.

(h) Default Judgment. The circuit court may affirm the judgment of the district court if (i) the defendant fails to appear in circuit court when the case is set for trial; or (ii) the clerk of the district court fails to prepare and certify a record for filing in the circuit court as provided in subsection (c) of this rule and the defendant fails to move the circuit court for an order to compel the filing of the record within thirty (30) days after filing the affidavit provided in subsection (d) of this rule.

(i) District Court Without Clerk. If a district court has no clerk, any reference in this rule to the clerk of a district court shall be deemed to refer to the judge of the district court.

HISTORY: Adopted May 11, 2006, effective June 1, 2006; amended February 22, 2007.

Publisher’s Notes.

By Per Curiam dated Dec. 4, 1995, the Supreme Court of Arkansas provided: “Effective January 1, 1996, sections of former Rule 36 of the Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure have been recodified in the Revised Rules of Appellate Procedure — Criminal or elsewhere in the Rules of Criminal Procedure. To that extent Rules 36.1 through 36.26 are deemed superseded.”

Reporter’s Notes:

Prior to the adoption of Rule 36 appeals from limited jurisdiction courts to circuit court were governed by District Court Rule 9 (formerly Inferior Court Rule 9) and various statutory provisions in Title 16, Chapter 9, Subchapter 5. Although District Court Rule 1 limited the scope of the rules to “civil actions in district courts and county courts,” the Supreme Court ruled that District Court Rule 9 also governed criminal appeals. Bocksnick v. City of London, 308 Ark. 599, 825 S.W.2d 267 (1992).

Subsection (a) incorporates Ark. Code Ann. § 16-96-501 (shown as superseded) and Arkansas Code Ann. § 16-96-502 (repealed in 2005). See, also, Amendment 80, § 7(A) of the Arkansas Constitution, which establishes district courts as trial courts of limited jurisdiction, subject to the right of appeal to circuit court.

Subsection (b) substantially restates District Court Rule 9(a).

Subsection (c) is based on District Court Rule 9(b). Because appearance bonds are unique to criminal appeals, the sentence requiring the record to include any bond or other security to guarantee the defendant’s appearance in circuit court is not found in District Court Rule 9(b). Ark. Code Ann. § 16-96-505, which describes the transcript in a criminal case, was not included in this subsection because § 16-96-505 is shown as superseded by the Code Revision Commission.

Subsection (d) is based on District Court Rule 9(c). A defendant has two ways to perfect an appeal from district court to circuit court. The usual method will be to file the certified record with the circuit court, as described in subsection (c). Alternatively, if the district court clerk does not prepare and certify the district court record, the defendant can vest the circuit court with jurisdiction by filing the affidavit described in subsection (d). Velek et al. v. State (City of Little Rock), — Ark. —, — S.W.3d — (2006). If the district court record is not filed within thirty days but is filed within forty days, the circuit court does not acquire jurisdiction of the appeal unless the defendant also files an affidavit to the effect that the record was requested but not prepared and certified within thirty days by the district court clerk.

Subsection (e) is derived from on District Court Rule 9(d) and repealed Ark. Code Ann. § 16-96-504. The sentence providing that an appearance bond posted with the district court shall serve to guarantee the appearance of the defendant before the circuit court is consistent with Arkansas Rule of Criminal Procedure 9.2(e). The next to last sentence of the subsection codifies the holding of Velek, supra. In that case the Supreme Court ruled that the circuit court acquired jurisdiction upon filing of the affidavit described in subsection (d) even though the district court clerk refused to prepare the record because the defendant failed to post an appeal bond.

Subsection (f) ensures that both the prosecuting attorney and the circuit judge are aware that an appeal to circuit court has been filed and should reduce the number of cases in which the defendant fails to receive the speedy trial required by Arkansas Rule of Criminal Procedure 28. There is nothing comparable to this subsection in current law.

Subsection (g)’s provision for de novo review of a district court judgment on appeal to circuit court is required by Amendment 80, § 7(A) of the Arkansas Constitution. See, also, Ark. Code Ann. § 16-96-507.

Subsection (h) is based loosely on Ark. Code Ann. § 16-96-508. The collection and disposition of fines, penalties, forfeitures, or costs in the event of a default judgment in circuit court will continue to be governed by Ark. Code Ann. § 16-96-403.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2007 Amendments: The 2007 amendments clarified the contents of the record that must be filed with the circuit court in order to vest that court with jurisdiction of the appeal. Compare McNabb v. State, 367 Ark. 93, — S.W.3d — (2006) rehearing denied — Ark —, — S.W.3d —. After acquiring jurisdiction of the appeal, the circuit court can, if necessary or desirable, order additional documents or pleadings filed in the district court to be made a part of the record on appeal.

CASE NOTES

In General.

Plain language of subsection (c) of this rule is clear that the written-request requirement is mandatory, as are the service and filing requirements. Jones v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 211 (2018).

Principle that District Court Rules are mandatory and jurisdictional remains the same for Ark. R. Crim. P. 36. Ark. R. Crim. P. 36(c) clearly sets forth that filing a written request for the record with the district court clerk is the mandatory first step in perfecting an appeal. Failure to establish jurisdiction at the circuit court level forecloses a finding of jurisdiction in the appellate court. Jones v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 211 (2018).

In accord with Jones v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 211. Circuit court's dismissal of defendant's appeal from district court was affirmed; although defendant timely filed a certified copy of the district court record with the clerk of the circuit court, defendant did not comply with the remaining requirements of subsection (c) of this rule, as defendant did not file with the district court clerk a request that the clerk prepare a certified copy of the record, did not serve a copy of that request on the prosecuting attorney, and did not file with the district court clerk a certificate of that service. Bey v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 35 (2019).

Appellate Jurisdiction.

Circuit court properly dismissed defendant's appeal from district court where the plain language of subsection (c) of this rule was clear that the written-request requirement was mandatory, the provisions were jurisdictional, and defendant had failed to file a written request with the district court clerk to prepare a certified copy of the record, serve a copy of the request on the prosecuting attorney, and file a certificate of service of a written request with the district court. Jones v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 211 (2018).

Circuit court did not acquire jurisdiction of a criminal appeal where there was no indication in the record that appellant filed a written request to the district court clerk to prepare and certify the record, paid any fees for the preparation of the certified record, served the written request for the record on the prosecuting attorney, or filed a certificate of such service with the district court, and it was unclear whether the filing indicated on the circuit court's docket sheet was the notice of appeal file or the certified record from the district court. As a result, appellant had failed to comply with Ark. R. Crim. P. 36(c). Latham v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 323, 578 S.W.3d 732 (2019).

Subsection (d) of this rule provides that if the clerk of the district court does not prepare and certify a record for filing in the circuit court in a timely manner, the rule places a duty on the defendant to do two things. First, the defendant must file an affidavit in the office of the circuit clerk, within 40 days from the date of the entry of the judgment in the district court, showing (a) that the defendant has requested the clerk of the district court to prepare and certify the record for purposes of appeal, and (b) that the clerk has not done so within 30 days from the date of the entry of the judgment in the district court. Second, the defendant shall promptly serve a copy of such affidavit upon the clerk of the district court and upon the prosecuting attorney. Once these two things are satisfied, the rule plainly states that the circuit court "shall acquire jurisdiction of the appeal upon the filing of the affidavit". Treat v. State, 2019 Ark. 326, 588 S.W.3d 10 (2019).

Circuit court erred in granting the State's motion to dismiss defendant's appeal for lack of jurisdiction for failure to pay the $5 fee required by § 16-17-124 and subsection (c) of this rule, where the record demonstrated that defendant, consistent with subsection (d) of this rule, had filed an affidavit with the required information and served the clerk of the district court and the prosecuting attorney with the affidavit to place jurisdiction in the circuit court. The filing of defendant's affidavit triggered jurisdiction of his appeal from the district court and strictly complied with subsection (d) of this section to commence an appeal from the district court to the circuit court. Treat v. State, 2019 Ark. 326, 588 S.W.3d 10 (2019).

Appeal was dismissed for want of jurisdiction under this rule where defendant filed a notice of appeal on March 6, 2019, from the district court judgment of March 5, 2019, which stated that he had ordered the record from the district court clerk; the certified record was not filed until April 4, 2019; and, as a result, the circuit court had not acquired jurisdiction at the time of its hearing and order on March 28, 2019; thus, the court of appeals was likewise without jurisdiction to hear an appeal. Wells v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 451, 588 S.W.3d 99 (2019).

Defendant timely and properly appealed his conviction from the district court to the circuit court, because he filed a certified district court record in the circuit court within 30 days of the date of the entry of the judgment in the district court. The fact that defendant had not filed a written request to certify the record with the district clerk did not defeat the jurisdiction of the circuit court (expressly overruling certain previous decisions). Petty v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 162, 595 S.W.3d 442 (2020).

The requirement in subsection (c) of this rule that the defendant file a written request with the district court clerk to certify the record has no jurisdictional significance; it simply identifies when a district clerk is tasked with preparing the record. Petty v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 162, 595 S.W.3d 442 (2020).

Certified district court record timely filed in the circuit court perfects a de novo appeal to a circuit court. Petty v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 162, 595 S.W.3d 442 (2020).

Defendant's appeal to the circuit court was not timely filed where his sentence was final on the district court's entry of judgment, and he did not file his appeal within 30 days as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 36. Gruber v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 561, 614 S.W.3d 483 (2020).

Affidavit provided that a notice of appeal had been filed and the record reflected that the notice was filed and timely requested the clerk to prepare the record, plus counsel attested to having filed the notice, which assured that the request to prepare the record had been made timely; thus, defendant's claim that his affidavit did not meet the rule's requirements and that the circuit court did not acquire jurisdiction of the appeal from district court failed (review granted, 2021 Ark. LEXIS 5 (Jan. 21, 2021)). Collins v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 440, 610 S.W.3d 664 (2020), vacated, 2021 Ark. 80 (2021).

Information in a document that is referenced in the affidavit under subsection (d) of this rule and is part of the record may be considered by the appellate court in determining if a circuit court acquired jurisdiction of the appeal from district court on the filing of the affidavit (review granted, 2021 Ark. LEXIS 5 (Jan. 21, 2021)). Collins v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 440, 610 S.W.3d 664 (2020), vacated, 2021 Ark. 80 (2021).

Appellant's affidavit filed under subsection (d) of this rule was deficient because it failed to include the fact that appellant requested the district court clerk to prepare and certify the record; because appellant's affidavit did not strictly meet subsection (d)'s requirements, the circuit court did not obtain jurisdiction, and the Supreme Court lacked jurisdiction as well. Collins v. State, 2021 Ark. 80 (2021).

Responsibility for Timely Appeal.

Defendant claimed that the district court clerk mailed the transcript to the circuit court clerk within 30 days, for appellate timetable and jurisdiction purposes, but the responsibility to ensure that an appeal is timely perfected from district court to circuit court cannot be shifted from the defendant to the clerk's office. Defendant had to ensure that his appeal from district court was perfected in a timely manner, but instead it was filed 45 days late, and no circuit court decision or courteous district clerk practice could circumvent this rule's plain terms. Fletcher v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 215, 489 S.W.3d 726 (2016).

Time Limitations.

Because defendant failed to file a certified record of the district court proceedings on his driving while intoxicated trial with the circuit court clerk within 30 days of the district court judgment, as required by subsection (b) of this rule, the circuit court had no jurisdiction over his appeal, even though defendant's right to jury trial was thereby lost. Roberson v. State, 2010 Ark. 433 (2010).

RULE 37.

OTHER POST-CONVICTION PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF

Rule

Rule 37.1. Scope of remedy [Reinstated and revised -- See Publisher's Notes].

Rule 37.2. Commencement of proceedings; pleadings [Reinstated and Revised -- See Publisher's Notes].

Rule 37.3. Nature of proceedings; summary disposition; appointment of counsel; evidentiary hearings; presence of petitioner [Reinstated and Revised -- See Publisher's Notes].

Rule 37.4. Relief [Reinstated and Revised -- See Publisher's Notes].

Rule 37.5. Special rule for persons under sentence of death.

Publisher's Notes.

The Per Curiam of Dec. 19, 1994, provided: "This court frequently acts on motions filed in the course of appeals of orders denying post-conviction relief pursuant to Arkansas Criminal Procedure Rule 37, Ark. Code Ann. § 16-90-111 (Supp. 1991), statutes which govern the issuance of writs of habeas corpus and mandamus as well as legal remedies such as error coram nobis proceedings and others. As there is no provision in the prevailing rules of procedure for a motion for reconsideration to be filed after this court has denied a motion which stems from a post-conviction matter, such motions will no longer be filed."

Commentary to Rule 37 of Article X

Post-Conviction Proceedings. Two fundamental principles underlie Rule 37, Post-Conviction Proceedings and Relief. First, a defendant may waive a defense by deliberately or inexcusably failing to assert it at the appropriate time during trial of a case or on appeal. Ballew v. State, 249 Ark. 480, 459 S.W.2d 577 (1970). Second, a final determination of an issue of fact or law should foreclose further inquiry on the subject. Rule 37.2(b).

Arkansas' procedure respecting post-conviction remedies was brought in line conceptually with ABA Standards, Post-Conviction Remedies (Approved Draft: 1968), hereafter cited Standards, Post-Conviction Remedies or Standards, when the Arkansas Supreme Court promulgated Rule 1 of the Rules for Criminal Procedure on October 18, 1965. The Commission has, accordingly, decided to retain the language of Rule 1 as its proposed Rule 37, the proposed rule differing from the current only in arrangement of sections.

Rule 37.1, in the process of detailing the scope of the remedy conferred by the rule, provides that the prisoner is the appropriate moving party in a post-conviction proceeding. To this extent, 37.1 is consistent with Standards, Post-Conviction Remedies § 1.3(a).

Rule 37 departs from Standards recommendations, however, when, in Rule 37.3 (c), the prosecuting attorney for the circuit in which the court sits is designated the proper respondent. Standards, Post-Conviction Remedies § 1.3(b) suggests that:

[b]ecause of the nature of post-conviction claims and their probable pervasive importance to criminal process in any state, it is preferable to charge the office of the attorney general or comparable official with basic responsibility for representing the state in such cases. . . . [S]uch an office will develop a greater expertise on the manifold phases of this type of litigation than can be expected in most local prosecutors' offices. Id. at 27, 28.

The Commission feels that the approach currently established by Rule 1 is more desirable for a number of reasons. For example, the prosecuting attorney presumably enjoys the advantages of being conversant with the facts of each case and having some knowledge respecting the credibility of the witnesses involved. A representative of the attorney general's office would have to duplicate investigative work already done by the prosecutor in order to be in position to adequately represent the state.

The scope of the remedy, set out in broad terms by Rule 37.1(a)-(d), appears to be in accord with, though not as broad as, that of the Standards.

Implicit in the first clause of Rule 1, here Rule 37.1, is the notion that eligibility for relief extends only to incarcerated persons — not, for example, to persons who have completed terms of imprisonment or who have received suspended sentences. See, Wallace v. State, 251 Ark. 445, 473 S.W.2d 184 (1971). This being so, Rule 37 is at variance with its Standards corollary, § 2.3. In Arkansas, persons not in custody are left to those remedies available via writ of error coram nobis. Wallace, supra.

Rule 37.2(a) provides that, where a conviction was appealed originally, a circuit court may not entertain proceedings with respect to that case under this rule without prior approval of the Supreme Court. No counterpart of this rule appears in Standards, Post-Conviction Remedies.

The scope of the remedy available under Rule 37 is clarified and circumscribed by Rule 37.2(b) which excludes from consideration all grounds either finally adjudicated or intelligently waived in previous proceedings. See, also, Davis v. State, 253 Ark. 484, 486 S.W.2d 904 (1972).

Rule 37.3 makes summary disposition possible under certain circumstances and makes provision for appointment of counsel or the holding of evidentiary hearings when summary disposition is inappropriate.

In allowing for summary disposition without a hearing, the rule conforms to Standards, Post-Conviction Remedies § 4.2(b), although Rule 37.3(a) may allow dismissal upon a showing which would not support such a disposition under the Standards language. See, Standards, Post-Conviction Remedies §§ 4.2, 4.3(e).

Rule 37.4 sets out the forms of relief which may be granted by a circuit court pursuant to post-conviction proceedings.

Rule 37.5 provides for awards of attorney's fees to counsel for indigent petitioners.

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

Extent to which the petitioner sought relief that could have been granted to him under a timely postconviction petition, the petitioner did not establish good cause to excuse the delay, because a petition for writ of habeas corpus was not a substitute for proceeding under this rule. Hill v. State, 2012 Ark. 309 (2012).

Custody Requirement.

Summary judgment was properly awarded to the State of Arkansas and a prosecuting attorney on petitioner's complaint for a declaratory judgment that a statute was unconstitutional because petitioner was not in custody; because petitioner was on probation, and therefore not in custody, petitioner was not entitled to any postconviction relief. Neely v. McCastlain, 2009 Ark. 189, 306 S.W.3d 424 (2009).

Double Jeopardy.

Defendant's petition under this rule was properly denied because his convictions for aggravated robbery, attempted capital murder, and aggravated battery did not violate the prohibitions against double jeopardy as first-degree battery was not a lesser included offense of aggravated robbery, and aggravated robbery was not a lesser-included offense of attempted capital murder. Clark v. State, 373 Ark. 161, 282 S.W.3d 801 (2008).

Error Coram Nobis Proceedings.

Writ of error coram nobis was granted for a trial court to consider proof that the state suppressed material evidence that a witness was granted full immunity from a rape charge for testifying in a petitioner's criminal case; the matter was raised in petitioner's postconviction hearing and was not cognizable under this rule, but it could be raised in a coram nobis proceeding. Sanders v. State, 374 Ark. 70, 285 S.W.3d 630 (2008).

Granting of petitioner's, an inmate's, petition to reinvest jurisdiction in the trial court to consider the petition for a writ of error coram nobis was proper, in part because it made no sense that a Brady violation for prosecutorial misconduct would be barred by a petition under this rule since such a Brady claim was not cognizable under this rule. Material evidence withheld by the prosecutor was one of the fundamental errors in a trial that warranted error coram nobis relief. Howard v. State, 2012 Ark. 177, 403 S.W.3d 38, cert. denied, 568 U.S. 981, 133 S. Ct. 528, 184 L. Ed. 2d 345 (2012).

Federal Habeas Relief.

Statutory tolling under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2244(d)(2) applied to the timely-filed postconviction relief petition that petitioner inmate filed shortly after his direct criminal appeal was denied. Ben-Yah v. Norris, 570 F. Supp. 2d 1086 (E.D. Ark. 2008).

Petitioner's argument for statutory tolling failed because, if a state court found that a motion failed to comply with filing requirements, that motion was not "properly filed," regardless of whether those filing requirements were firmly established and regularly followed, and the Arkansas Supreme Court had specifically held that petitioner's petition under this rule was not properly verified because petitioner did not execute the verification (because the Arkansas Supreme Court affirmed and found petitioner's petition invalid, that was the end of the matter); petitioner's unverified petition under this rule did not toll the running of the one-year statute of limitations for filing a federal habeas petition because the petition was not filed in accordance with this rule's verification requirement. Nelson v. Norris, 618 F.3d 886 (8th Cir. 2010).

Findings.

—Written Findings Mandatory.

Where appellant was convicted of possession of methamphetamine, manufacturing methamphetamine, and possession of paraphernalia with the intent to manufacture methamphetamine, he filed a petition for postconviction relief pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1, alleging: (1) that he was subjected to double jeopardy; (2) that his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to make an accomplice-corroboration argument; and (3) that his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to the affidavit supporting the search warrant for his residence. The circuit judge erred by denying appellant's petition without a hearing and without making findings of fact, because the allegations complained of in the petition under this rule could have been raised on direct appeal; there was an exception to the waiver rule for allegations of fundamental error such as double jeopardy and ineffective assistance of counsel. Reed v. State, 375 Ark. 277, 289 S.W.3d 921 (2008).

Denial of appellant's, an inmate's, petition for postconviction relief pursuant to this rule was appropriate because the circuit court's written findings complied with Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.3. In part, the inmate himself submitted a portion of the record with his petition and the circuit court, in its order, stated that it reviewed the pleadings and transcripts in denying the inmate's petition for postconviction relief; in doing so, the circuit court outlined the inmate's claims and the reasons for its denial of those claims. Henington v. State, 2012 Ark. 181, 403 S.W.3d 55 (2012).

Granting of Relief Inappropriate.

Granting of an inmate's petition under this rule for postconviction relief was inappropriate because prejudice was not shown as a matter of law when the inmate received less than the maximum sentence for the charge of first-degree battery. State v. Smith, 368 Ark. 620, 249 S.W.3d 119 (2007).

Hearings.

In postconviction proceedings, appellant filed a petition under this rule alleging that trial counsel was ineffective because he failed to file a timely notice of appeal. Before deciding whether appellant could file a belated appeal, the circuit court was directed to conduct a hearing and make findings as to whether appellant timely advised counsel to appeal the judgment convicting him for possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver. Henderson v. State, 370 Ark. 521, 262 S.W.3d 143 (2007).

It was not clear whether the testimony of a psychologist regarding the state death-row inmate's social history would have been admissible pursuant to § 5-4-602(4)(B) at the penalty phase of the inmate's capital murder trial without other witnesses providing a factual foundation for his opinions; although, at the time of the inmate's trial, expert testimony presenting social history as mitigating evidence at the penalty phase of Arkansas capital cases was not uncommon, other witnesses, usually the inmate, also testified and provided a factual foundation for the expert's opinions. While the federal district court allowed this evidence at the inmate's evidentiary hearing under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254(e)(2), the state trial court in a evidentiary proceeding under this rule was in the best position to consider this issue. Williams v. Norris, 576 F.3d 850 (8th Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 1097, 131 S. Ct. 558, 178 L. Ed. 2d 542 (2010).

Ineffective Assistance Claim.

Defendant complained on appeal about an alleged conflict of interest involving his attorney, but the court's research had not revealed a single case where the court considered an ineffective assistance conflict of interest argument on direct appeal in the absence of a proper objection in the trial court; because defendant failed to raise his argument in the trial court, the court held that he failed to preserve this issue for review, and defendant himself had conceded that it could have been that the resolution of the matter was to occur in a proceeding under this rule, as many of the relevant decisions on the point came in postconviction proceedings. Rackley v. State, 371 Ark. 438, 267 S.W.3d 578 (2007).

Order denying an inmate's motion for postconviction relief under this rule was affirmed because defense counsel's decision not to call a certain shaky witness who had a criminal history went to counsel's trial strategy and was not an omission resulting in ineffective assistance of counsel. Gaye v. Ark., 2009 Ark. 201, 307 S.W.3d 1 (2009).

Order granting an inmate's petition for postconviction relief in accordance with this rule based on ineffective assistance of counsel was reversed because circuit court failed to inquire if the disclosure of a calendar ahead of trial would have changed the evidence before the jury in such a manner as to create a reasonable probability of an acquittal. State v. Brown, 2009 Ark. 202, 307 S.W.3d 587 (2009).

Applicant was not entitled to postconviction relief because he did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel based on his trial attorney's failure to play an audio recording at trial; matters of trial strategy and tactics fell within the realm of counsel's professional judgment. Trial counsel thoroughly cross-examined the victim and even got her to admit that she lied on several occasions in her previous statements; however, counsel made a reasonable professional judgment that continued and prolonged attacks on the victim's credibility would have alienated the jury and resulted in a negative outcome. Lemaster v. State, 2015 Ark. 167, 459 S.W.3d 802 (2015).

Jurisdiction.

Circuit court was without jurisdiction to entertain an inmate's second petition under this rule, and the court was likewise without jurisdiction to hear an appeal from any decision of the circuit court in the matter because the inmate failed to ask to court to recall its mandate and reopen postconviction proceedings. Kemp v. State, 2009 Ark. 631 (2009).

Circuit court properly dismissed defendant's appeal of convictions in a district court because defendant failed to perfect the appeal in a timely manner; hence, the circuit court did not have jurisdiction to try defendant's case de novo. Williams v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 525, 334 S.W.3d 873 (2009).

Preservation for Review.

Because defendant did not request jail-time credit below, either directly or in an Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition, his claim was not properly preserved and could not be raised for the first time on appeal. Weatherford v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 536, 590 S.W.3d 172 (2019).

Records on Appeal.

Because the appeal transcript provided by defendant did not refer to the charges that defendant was appealing, and because defendant's inability to read did not relieve defendant of the responsibility of knowing what the docket sheet reflected and what documents defendant had filed to perfect defendant's appeal, the appeal was properly dismissed under subsection (c) of this rule. Risner v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 549 (2011).

Rv' s 37.1. Scope of remedy [Reinstated and revised -- See Publisher's Notes].

(a) A petitioner in custody under sentence of a circuit court claiming a right to be released, or to have a new trial, or to have the original sentence modified on the ground:

(i) that the sentence was imposed in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States or this state; or

- (ii) that the court imposing the sentence was without jurisdiction to do so; or
 - (iii) that the sentence was in excess of the maximum sentence authorized by law; or
 - (iv) that the sentence is otherwise subject to collateral attack; may file a petition in the court that imposed the sentence, praying that the sentence be vacated or corrected.
- (b) The petition shall state in concise, nonrepetitive, factually specific language, the grounds upon which it is based. The petition, whether handwritten or typed, shall be clearly legible, and shall not exceed ten pages of thirty lines per page and fifteen words per line, with left and right margins of at least one and one-half inches and upper and lower margins of at least two inches. The circuit court or appellate court may dismiss any petition that fails to comply with this subsection.
- (c) The petition shall be accompanied by the petitioner’s affidavit, sworn to before a notary or other officer authorized by law to administer oaths, in substantially the following form:

AFFIDAVIT

The petitioner states under oath that (he) (she) has read the foregoing petition for postconviction relief and that the facts stated in the petition are true, correct, and complete to the best of petitioner’s knowledge and belief.

Petitioner’s signature

Subscribed and sworn to before me the undersigned officer this ____ day of _____, 20 ____.

Notary or other officer

- (d) The circuit clerk shall not accept for filing any petition that fails to comply with subsection (c) of this rule. The circuit court or any appellate court shall dismiss any petition that fails to comply with subsection (c) of this rule.
- (e) In addition to filing the petition with the clerk of the court, the petitioner shall (i) send a letter to the judge of the circuit court that imposed the sentence notifying the judge that the petition has been filed and (ii) file with the clerk a copy of the letter notifying the judge that the petition has been filed. The letter to the judge shall enclose all copies of pleadings and documents relating to the petition and shall reflect service on the prosecuting attorney. Filings pursuant to this subsection (e) shall be used solely for purposes of Administrative Order No. 3, and failure to comply with this subsection (e) shall not be grounds for dismissing the petition.

HISTORY: Amended October 1, 1984; amended June 5, 1989; abolished May 30, 1990 and effective July 1, 1990; reinstated and revised October 29, 1990 and effective January 1, 1991; subsection (e) amended November 14, 1994; amended February 2, 2006, effective March 1, 2006; amended September 27, 2007.

Reporter’s Notes, 2006 Amendment:
Rule 37.1 formerly stated that a petition for postconviction relief had to be “verified.” The 2006 amendments added subsections (c) and (d) to reduce the likelihood that the verification requirement would be overlooked by the petitioner or the courts.

Publisher’s Notes.
This rule was abolished by the May 30, 1989, Per Curiam of the Arkansas Supreme Court, effective July 1, 1989 and was subsequently reinstated and revised by the October 29, 1990, Per Curiam of the Arkansas Supreme Court, effective January 1, 1991.

The May 30, 1989, Per Curiam provided that “persons who have been convicted and sentenced during the time the rule was in effect may proceed in accordance with the rule as it existed prior to that date.”

The October 29, 1990, Per Curiam order of the Arkansas Supreme Court provided: “On May 30, 1989, by Per Curiam order, this court abolished Criminal Procedure Rule 37 and amended Criminal Procedure Rule 36.4, effective July 1, 1989. As we said in Whitmore v. State, 299 Ark. 55, 771 S.W.2d 266 (1989), the primary reason for abolishing Rule 37 was our concern that post-conviction remedies were drawn out extensively, and unnecessarily, before cases were concluded. It was our thought to accelerate post-conviction procedures and at the same time have a system which protects the defendant’s constitutional and fundamental rights. Rule 36.4 was amended to provide a means by which a convicted defendant could assert claims of ineffective assistance of counsel within thirty days of judgment. Rule 36.4 also provided a procedure to consolidate the direct appeal of a judgment with the appeal of the denial by the trial court of post-conviction relief. (We would add that other states, such as Missouri, have adopted a similar consolidated direct appeal/post-conviction procedure in an attempt to expedite criminal appeals and post-conviction procedures.) The scope of the remedy afforded by Rule 36.4 was more limited than that which had been afforded by Rule 37.

“Members of the bench and bar have offered comments, and we have now had a period of some fifteen months to assess the procedure under Rule 36.4. We realize that any modification has its weaknesses and strengths, but we have presently settled on a procedure we believe will afford defendants their constitutional rights while substantially expediting his or her direct appeal and post-conviction remedies. The procedure is embodied in a modification of Rule 37 which, while it embraces the scope of Rule 37, places some limitations on the remedy which were not formerly a part of the rule; in particular, the time for filing a petition for postconviction relief under the rule has been reduced from three years to ninety days in cases where the defendant pleaded guilty or did not elect to appeal and sixty days where an appeal was taken.

“We reinstate Criminal Procedure Rule 37 as modified and publish it in its revised form and amend Criminal Procedure Rule 36.4 and publish it. We also amend Rule 26.1 and publish it.

The modified Rule 37 and the amended Rule 26.1(a) and Rule 36.4 shall become effective January 1, 1991. We invite comments from the bench, bar and public on the revision of Rule 37 and amendment of Rule 26.1 and Rule 36.4. Comments may be addressed to: Arkansas Supreme Court Attn: Criminal Procedure Rules 37 and 36.4625 Marshall Street Little Rock, Arkansas 72201”

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2007 Amendment:

Subsection (e) was added in 2007. Administrative Order No. 3 requires circuit judges to report cases under advisement for more than 90 days to the Administrative Office of the Courts. The 90-day period does not start to run on a Rule 37 petition until the judge is notified as provided in subsection (e).

CASE NOTES

In General.

Post-conviction relief is not a substitute for appeal and is not available while an appeal is pending. Brewer v. State, 274 Ark. 38, 621 S.W.2d 698 (1981).

This rule created a method for determining whether an accused's rights with respect to constitutional or statutory requirements had been violated or whether the sentence was otherwise subject to collateral attack, rather than providing for a second trial. Chisum v. State, 274 Ark. 332, 625 S.W.2d 448 (1981).

There is no requirement under this rule that a trial judge inform the unsuccessful petitioner in a collateral attack on the judgment that he may appeal. Hill v. State, 293 Ark. 310, 737 S.W.2d 636 (1987).

A constitutional violation is not in itself enough to trigger application of this rule. Cotton v. State, 293 Ark. 338, 738 S.W.2d 90 (1987).

This rule is not the equivalent of either a second appeal or a petition for rehearing. Robinson v. State, 295 Ark. 693, 751 S.W.2d 335 (1988).

This rule does not provide an opportunity to reargue points settled on appeal. O'Rourke v. State, 298 Ark. 144, 765 S.W.2d 916 (1989).

Former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.26 applies to appeals of orders denying post-conviction relief. Miller v. State, 299 Ark. 548, 775 S.W.2d 79 (1989).

The court will not consider matters which are outside the scope of the petition for post-conviction relief. Jones v. State, 308 Ark. 555, 826 S.W.2d 233 (1992).

Where a petition for postconviction relief is denied on procedural grounds in a case in which a sentence of death has been imposed, great care should be taken to assure that the denial of the petition rests on solid footing. Sanders v. State, 352 Ark. 16, 98 S.W.3d 35 (2003).

Although proceedings for postconviction relief from a criminal proceeding are civil in nature, the trial court erred in applying the summary judgment provisions of Ark. R. Civ. P. 56 to deny a petition for postconviction relief filed by a defendant in a capital murder case who had been sentenced to death on the grounds that defendant had raised no genuine issue of material fact in support of his petition. Sanders v. State, 352 Ark. 16, 98 S.W.3d 35 (2003).

Petition for writ of mandamus was moot where the judge explained that faulty internal procedures caused the lengthy delay in the disposition of petitioner's petition for postconviction relief under this rule and then acted on the petition. Cabral v. Keith, 364 Ark. 456, 220 S.W.3d 683 (2005).

Issue of alleged prosecutorial misconduct is an issue that should be raised on direct appeal, and is not a claim that may be raised for the first time in an Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition. Howard v. State, 367 Ark. 18, 238 S.W.3d 24 (2006).

Abolishment of Rule.

—Effect.

—In General.

—Reinstatement.

—Effect.

When the Supreme Court of Arkansas opted to retroactively grant Rule 37 relief to defendants convicted during this rule's hiatus, it was bound to meet Due Process Clause requirements in executing the remedy it had created; where there was no way even a diligent, well-trained lawyer, much less an indigent inmate, could have foreseen any remedy, much less the time-limited, retroactive nature it would take, no state forum was available to hear defendant's claims, and defendant was entitled to federal court consideration of the merits of his petition. Easter v. Endell, 37 F.3d 1343 (8th Cir. 1994).

Where the availability of this rule had not been firmly established when defendant needed to pursue it, defendant's Rule 37 default was not adequate to support a denial of federal review of the merits of his constitutional claims. Pearson v. Norris, 52 F.3d 740 (8th Cir. 1995).

—In General.

Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was abolished effective July 1, 1989, but persons who had been convicted and sentenced during the existence of Rule 37 could still proceed under that rule. Additionally, Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.4 was amended to provide that a defendant may assert his or her claim of ineffective counsel on direct appeal. Whitmore v. State, 299 Ark. 55, 771 S.W.2d 266 (1989) (decision prior to 1990 amendment).

—Reinstatement.

Defendants convicted and sentenced between July 1, 1989, the abolition of this rule and December 31, 1990 who were advised of the right to proceed under former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.4 were obliged to avail themselves of that remedy; those defendants who did not do so are procedurally barred from raising claims for relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 after its reinstatement on January 1, 1991. Burk v. State, 313 Ark. 652, 856 S.W.2d 14 (1993). But see Pearson v. Norris, 52 F.3d 740 (8th Cir. 1995).

Where state trial court failed to inform defendant of his post-conviction remedy under Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.4 (now Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.2), and then forced defendant to seek post-conviction relief under new Rule 37 within 90 days of date of reinstatement of Rule 37, defendant was denied constitutional due process. Cherry v. State, 323 Ark. 733, 918 S.W.2d 125 (1996).

Alternative Remedies.

Where there was a failure to mention that prior conviction might affect parole eligibility, thus defendant's remedy, if any, was an action against the department of corrections rather than a Rule 37 proceeding. Clark v. State, 271 Ark. 866, 611 S.W.2d 502 (1981).

Despite the overlapping provisions of this rule and § 16-90-111, the rule and statute are separate, and judges are not required to consider a petition filed under the statute as a petition under the rule. If the trial court concludes that the petitioner has simply mislabeled the petition, it may treat the petition as a Rule 37 petition regardless of the title given it by the petitioner; however, if the trial court chooses to treat a motion labeled a motion to correct illegal sentence under § 16-90-111 as a Rule 37 petition, the court should so state in its order to prevent confusion. Williams v. State, 291 Ark. 255, 724 S.W.2d 158 (1987), superseded by statute as stated in Jones v. State, 301 Ark. 510, 785 S.W.2d 217 (1990).

The remedy provided by § 16-90-111 is not dependent upon a prior objection. The statute contains a post-conviction remedy, narrowly defined, for the correction of an illegal sentence, and the legislature obviously chose to provide a safeguard for persons aggrieved in this manner that goes beyond the review provided by appeal or even by a Rule 37 petition; if an objection were required, it would in many cases preclude the availability of the remedy and greatly reduce the effect the statute was intended to have. Lowery v. State, 297 Ark. 47, 759 S.W.2d 545 (1988).

Appeals.

- Belated Appeals.
- In General.
- Issues Considered.
- Jurisdiction.
- Standard of Review.

Postconviction proceedings under this rule are civil in nature; therefore, the state may appeal from the grant of a petition under this rule. State v. Dillard, 338 Ark. 571, 998 S.W.2d 750 (1999).

Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(c) does not apply to appeals under this rule. Morgan v. State, 360 Ark. 264, 200 S.W.3d 890 (2005), cert. denied, 2020 Ark. 239, 602 S.W.3d 736 (2020).

In a murder case, defendant's appeal from the denial of his petition for postconviction relief pursuant to this rule and Ark. R. Civ. P. 60 was dismissed as defendant could not prevail on appeal from the denial order, and Rule 60 did not apply in criminal matters. McArty v. State, 364 Ark. 517, 221 S.W.3d 332 (2006).

Supreme Court of Arkansas lacked jurisdiction to review circuit court's grant of defendant's petition for postconviction relief; while the State was not required to satisfy Ark. R. App. P. Crim. 3 where its appeal was neither direct nor interlocutory following a prosecution, but instead arose from a collateral proceeding, the appeal was untimely where the 90-day period contemplated by Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 5(a) began to run from the filing of the first notice of appeal, and the State did not demonstrate a lack of finality in the order. State v. Bragg, 2016 Ark. 242 (2016).

—Belated Appeals.

Merely stating in conclusory fashion that the notice of appeal was sent to the wrong place was not a ground for granting a belated appeal from denial of post-conviction relief; ignorance of proper procedure alone is not good cause to permit a belated appeal. Grain v. State, 280 Ark. 161, 655 S.W.2d 425 (1983).

Where the defendant claimed that his attorney failed to appeal when requested to do so, he was entitled at most to a belated appeal; however, this rule is not a means of by-passing a motion for belated appeal. Lomax v. State, 285 Ark. 440, 688 S.W.2d 283 (1985).

The Supreme Court will grant a belated appeal from an order denying a petition for post-conviction relief if the movant shows good cause for the failure to file a notice of appeal within 30 days of the date the order was entered. Garner v. State, 293 Ark. 309, 737 S.W.2d 637 (1987).

Motion to proceed with belated appeal from denial of post-conviction relief denied. Hill v. State, 293 Ark. 310, 737 S.W.2d 636 (1987); Garner v. State, 293 Ark. 309, 737 S.W.2d 637 (1987); Kelly v. State, 301 Ark. 294, 783 S.W.2d 369 (1990).

—In General.

Appellate court will reverse the trial court's denial of post-conviction relief only if its findings are clearly erroneous and against the preponderance of the evidence. Guy v. State, 282 Ark. 424, 668 S.W.2d 952 (1984), overruled, Ferrell v. State, 305 Ark. 511, 810 S.W.2d 29 (1991); Robbins v. State, 288 Ark. 311, 705 S.W.2d 6 (1986); Whisenhunt v. State, 292 Ark. 33, 727 S.W.2d 847 (1987); Branham v. State, 292 Ark. 355, 730 S.W.2d 226 (1987); Stephens v. State, 293 Ark. 231, 737 S.W.2d 147 (1987); Hudson v. State, 294 Ark. 148, 741 S.W.2d 253 (1987); Owens v. State, 296 Ark. 322, 756 S.W.2d 899 (1988); Pettit v. State, 296 Ark. 423, 758 S.W.2d 1 (1988).

Mandamus granted and trial court directed to act on pending Rule 37 petition or set it for a hearing. Skaggs v. State, 286 Ark. 189, 690 S.W.2d 354 (1985).

The Supreme Court will not grant a petitioner's request for permission to petition the trial court for post-conviction relief before the Supreme Court's own decision on appeal has become final. Oliver v. State, 286 Ark. 198, 691 S.W.2d 842 (1985).

Where issues are not raised in the Rule 37 petition, on appeal, the court will not address alleged errors which the trial court was not given an opportunity to correct in the proceeding from which the appeal has been taken. Locklear v. State, 290 Ark. 609, 721 S.W.2d 668 (1986); Pettit v. State, 296 Ark. 423, 758 S.W.2d 1 (1988).

Petition for a writ of certiorari may be treated as a request for Rule 37 relief. Fruit v. Lockhart, 291 Ark. 198, 723 S.W.2d 372 (1987).

When an issue was raised at trial but not argued as a point for reversal on appeal, it has been waived unless it presents a question so fundamental as to render the judgment of conviction absolutely void. A ground sufficient to void a conviction is one so basic that the judgment is a complete nullity, and the burden is on the petitioner to demonstrate that the judgment in his case is void. Shockley v. State, 291 Ark. 251, 724 S.W.2d 156 (1987).

The trial court may treat a petition which raises Rule 37 grounds as a petition under the rule regardless of the label placed on it by the petitioner, but once the trial court treats the petition as a Rule 37 petition, it will be considered as such on appeal. Williams v. State, 291 Ark. 255, 724 S.W.2d 158 (1987), superseded by statute as stated in Jones v. State, 301 Ark. 510, 785 S.W.2d 217 (1990).

In review on appeal, conflicts in testimony are for the trial judge to resolve, and the judge is not required to believe any witness's testimony, especially the testimony of the accused, since he has the greatest interest in the outcome of the proceedings. Owens v. State, 296 Ark. 322, 756 S.W.2d 899 (1988).

United States Court of Appeals reviews de novo district court's interpretation of Rule 37 petition, and in this regard, the interpretation of the petition is much like the interpretation of a written contract, which is clearly a matter of law, subject to de novo review. Williams v. Lockhart, 893 F.2d 191 (8th Cir. 1990).

Appeal of the denial of postconviction relief will not be permitted to go forward where it is clear that the appeal is wholly without merit. Seaton v. State, 324 Ark. 236, 920 S.W.2d 13 (1996).

Denial of the inmate's petition for postconviction relief was proper where an agreement between parties did not convert an otherwise incognizable claim into a cognizable one; this rule does not provide an avenue to raise matters that could have been raised on direct appeal, including constitutional claims, and a defendant ordinarily does not have a right to appeal a guilty plea, except as provided in Ark.

R. Crim. P. 24.3(b). Beulah v. State, 352 Ark. 472, 101 S.W.3d 802 (2003).

Because the effectiveness of counsel was not objected to nor raised to the trial court in defendant's motion for a new trial, defendant's claims of ineffectiveness of counsel were not preserved for appeal and should be addressed in a post-conviction proceeding under this rule. Anderson v. State, 353 Ark. 384, 108 S.W.3d 592, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1050, 124 S. Ct. 832, 157 L. Ed. 2d 699 (2003).

Although petitioner's death penalty case had been reviewed five times, the Supreme Court of Arkansas found the circumstances of the case were unique and recalled the mandate and reopened the case solely because of: (1) the alleged comparable verdict form deficiency in the Willett v. State case; (2) the federal district court's dismissal of the federal habeas corpus petition in order to give state courts the opportunity to explore the issue; and (3) the enhanced scrutiny required in death penalty cases. Robbins v. State, No. CR 98-1394, 2003 Ark. LEXIS 326 (Ark. June 12, 2003).

Inmate's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object properly to the victim impact evidence of the victim's sister during sentencing, and therefore the inmate's motion for relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was properly denied, because the sister's testimony was not objectionable, as it did not specifically instruct the jury on what she thought it should do; rather, the sister only acknowledged the family's helplessness and the jury's power to make a decision regarding defendant's punishment. Williams v. State, 369 Ark. 104, 251 S.W.3d 290 (2007).

Supreme court dismissed a prisoner's appeal of the circuit court's denial of his motion to reconsider the denial of his petition for postconviction relief under this rule because record did not contain an order denying the motion for reconsideration, and the deemed denied provision of the appellate rules did not apply to appeals in proceedings under this rule. The supreme court clerk accepted the record in error because there was no denial of the motion for reconsideration. Young v. State, 373 Ark. 264, 283 S.W.3d 188 (2008).

Circuit court did not clearly err in denying a prisoner's petition for postconviction relief. Evidence of third-party guilt the prisoner alleged should have been admitted at his murder trial did no more than create a suspicion or conjecture that two sisters may have played a role in the victim's death. Armstrong v. State, 373 Ark. 347, 284 S.W.3d 1 (2008).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief pursuant to this rule was appropriate because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, each of the inmate's allegations were entirely conclusory and there was no factual substantiation to show how counsel's conduct prejudiced his defense; he merely asserted that counsel should have hired experts and failed to significantly cross-examine the state's witnesses but the inmate failed to detail what assistance those experts could have provided or what relevant information could have been obtained through cross-examination. Davis v. State, 2011 Ark. 493 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief pursuant to this rule was appropriate because the evidence demonstrated that he was not prejudiced by his trial counsel's failure to properly renew his motion for directed verdict at the close of all the evidence. While the inmate was unable to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence in his direct appeal, there was substantial evidence to support the verdicts, including the inmate himself admitting to hitting his wife's car from behind and then getting out of his truck and shooting her. Davis v. State, 2011 Ark. 493 (2011).

Granting of inmate's petition for writ of mandamus was appropriate because the circuit court failed to provide the required rulings on each of the issues raised in his petition under this rule, and because the inmate properly filed a motion for modification to obtain the missing rulings. Garcia v. Arnold, 2012 Ark. 253 (2012).

State was permitted to appeal the order of the circuit court granting appellee postconviction relief under this rule in the form of a new trial on charges for rape and sexual abuse, because the appeal was civil in nature and the State was not required to satisfy Ark. R. App. P. Crim. 3. State v. Estrada, 2013 Ark. 89, 426 S.W.3d 405 (2013).

Defendant's appeal of the denial of defendant's petition to correct an illegal sentence was dismissed because defendant could not prevail, as, (1) to the extent defendant's claims were cognizable under this rule, defendant's request for relief was properly treated as a petition under this rule and was subject to the time limitations contained in Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2(c), which defendant did not satisfy after having pled guilty, and, (2) to the extent defendant's claims were not cognizable under this rule, the claims alleged no error required to support a claim of an illegal sentence, as defendant did not show defendant's sentences were outside the statutory range, and defendant's petition was not timely filed under § 16-90-111. Davis v. State, 2013 Ark. 189 (2013).

Petitioner seeking to appeal the denial of his postconviction motion under this rule was entitled to a belated appeal under Ark. R. App. P. Crim. 2(e) because his counsel neglected to file an appeal despite petitioner's request, apparently believing that petitioner's mother wished to pursue clemency rather than an appeal. Smith v. State, 2013 Ark. 166 (2013).

Defendant's appeal of the denial of defendant's motion for postconviction relief, alleging ineffective assistance of counsel and prosecutorial misconduct, was dismissed because (1) defendant's ineffective assistance allegations were wholly conclusory, and (2) defendant's prosecutorial misconduct allegations merely expressed dissatisfaction with the manner in which the prosecutor questioned jurors and witnesses and presented evidence. Glaze v. State, 2013 Ark. 141 (2013).

Appeal challenging the denial of the posttrial petition to withdraw a plea of guilty was dismissed, because in his affidavit, the petitioner verified that the statements in his affidavit were true and correct, however, he did not verify that the statements in his petition for postconviction relief were true and correct. Keck v. State, 2013 Ark. 139 (2013).

State's motion to dismiss defendant's appeal of an order denying defendant's motion for postconviction relief was granted because the notice of appeal was untimely; defendant failed to file the notice of appeal within 30 days of the trial court's order denying defendant's first motion for reconsideration. Lovett v. State, 2013 Ark. 8 (2013).

Defendant's motion to dismiss defendant's appeal of the denial of defendant's petition for post-conviction relief was granted because the petition was filed after defendant's criminal conviction was affirmed but before the appellate court's mandate was issued, so the trial court had not regained jurisdiction to consider the petition's merits, and, thus, a reviewing court did not have jurisdiction to hear the petition's denial. Green v. State, 2013 Ark. 190 (2013).

Dismissal of defendant's appeal was appropriate because there was clearly no merit to defendant's petition in that defendant could not prevail if the appeal were allowed to proceed. Defendant's motion was therefore moot in light of the dismissal of the appeal on the merits. Allen v. State, 2015 Ark. 55 (2015).

Defendant's appeal of the denial of his petition for postconviction relief was dismissed because, while his signature on the petition was notarized, there was no verification that the facts stated in the petition were true, correct, and complete. Bradley v. State, 2015 Ark. 144, 459 S.W.3d 302 (2015).

—Issues Considered.

Where petitioner requested relief on the basis of his lawyer's omissions at trial, not on the basis of his lawyer's failure to file a pre-appeal petition for a new trial (even though that petition would have alleged those omissions as well), the district court had no power on remand to address any issues other than the merits of petitioner's Sixth Amendment claims relative to ineffective assistance of counsel. Pearson v. Norris, 94 F.3d 406 (8th Cir. 1996).

The Supreme Court may address issues raised for the first time on appeal from a denial of a Rule 37 petition, where prejudice is conclusively shown by the record; such prejudice is shown only when there is an error of such magnitude that it deprived the defendant of the fundamental right to a fair trial, and conversely, where prejudice is not conclusively shown, the issue is procedurally barred and the court may not reach the merits. Jones v. State, 340 Ark. 1, 8 S.W.3d 482 (2000).

In death cases, the Arkansas Supreme Court may address issues raised for the first time on appeal from a denial of a Rule 37 petition where prejudice is conclusively shown by the record as an error of such magnitude that it deprived the defendant of the fundamental right to a fair trial. Jones v. State, 340 Ark. 1, 8 S.W.3d 482 (2000).

Where defendant requested relief based on a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, defendant's motion for a sentence reduction under § 16-90-111 should have been considered by the trial court as a petition for postconviction relief under subsection (a) of this rule. Gonder v. State, 2011 Ark. 248, 382 S.W.3d 674 (2011), writ denied, Gonder v. Glover, 2015 Ark. 425 (2015).

Because the trial court did not have the additional information when it ruled on appellant's petition for postconviction relief, appellant was not permitted to bolster the claims with additional allegations and argument provided for the first time on appeal. Carter v. State, 2015 Ark. 166, 460 S.W.3d 781 (2015).

Parties may not change on appeal the scope and nature of their arguments made below. Airsman v. State, 2015 Ark. 409, 473 S.W.3d 549 (2015), writ denied, Airsman v. Wright, 2016 Ark. 297, 498 S.W.3d 278 (2016).

Supreme Court was precluded from addressing certain arguments on appeal to the extent that appellant had added factual substantiation to the arguments; appellant enlarged on and embellished many of the allegations contained in his petition for postconviction relief. Gordon v. State, 2018 Ark. 73, 539 S.W.3d 586 (2018).

—Jurisdiction.

In this case wherein appellant challenged the denial of his petition for postconviction relief under this rule, the court had jurisdiction under Ark. Sup. Ct. & Ct. App. R. 1-2(a)(8). Taylor v. State, 2013 Ark. 146, 427 S.W.3d 29 (2013).

Because appellant was not in custody, the circuit court lacked jurisdiction to consider his petition for postconviction relief. Therefore, the appeal was dismissed because appellant admittedly failed to demonstrate that he was a person in custody as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 and thus could not receive any relief on his claims for postconviction relief. Chandler v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 103, 618 S.W.3d 454 (2021).

—Standard of Review.

The standard of review is narrow: the federal appellate court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the government and sustain the verdict if it is supported by substantial evidence; the government must be given the benefit of all logical inferences. Hill v. Norris, 96 F.3d 1085 (8th Cir. 1996).

Applicability.

This rule, which has a three-year time limit in most cases, is not available as substitute for a motion under former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.9 for a belated appeal. Ellis v. Lockhart, 875 F.2d 200 (8th Cir. 1989).

Post-conviction relief is available under this rule only where a prisoner is in custody under sentence of a circuit court and his case has not been appealed to the Supreme Court or Court of Appeals. Edwards v. City of Conway, 300 Ark. 135, 777 S.W.2d 583 (1989).

Under Arkansas law, a claim that could have been raised at trial, or on direct appeal, but was not, is not cognizable in a Rule 37 petition. McDougald v. Lockhart, 942 F.2d 508 (8th Cir. 1991).

A Rule 37 petition, filed after January 1, 1991, is timely brought if it is within 60 days of the date the mandate was issued by the appellate court, even if the conviction occurred during the time period when former Rule 36.4 was in effect. Pogue v. State, 316 Ark. 428, 872 S.W.2d 387 (1994).

This rule is not available to defendants who are not in custody. Mason v. State, 323 Ark. 361, 914 S.W.2d 751 (1996).

Post-conviction relief under this rule cannot be had while an appeal is pending. Tapp v. State, 324 Ark. 176, 920 S.W.2d 482 (1996).

This rule did not apply to a motion to modify a condition contained in a judgment of probation since a person on probation is not in custody. Reeves v. State, 339 Ark. 304, 4 S.W.3d 41 (1999).

Allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel are outside the purview of a coram-nobis proceeding, as such claims are properly raised in a timely petition for postconviction relief. A petition for writ of error coram nobis is not a substitute for raising an issue in a petition for postconviction relief. Johnson v. State, 2015 Ark. 170, 460 S.W.3d 790 (2015).

Because appellant filed in the county of his conviction a petition for writ of habeas corpus, seeking to collaterally attack his judgment-and-commitment order, and he did not file the petition in the county of his incarceration, the petition was properly treated as one seeking relief pursuant to this rule. Hinkston v. State, 2016 Ark. 4 (2016).

Because appellant made no claim to the trial court that his sentence was illegal on its face, which could be corrected at any time, appellant was obligated to raise all his claims for postconviction relief in a timely petition under this rule, which he did not do. Hinkston v. State, 2016 Ark. 4 (2016).

Attorney's Fees.

Rule 37 proceedings are civil in nature and, therefore, a trial court is without authority to require the Public Defender Commission to pay attorney's fees in such a proceeding. Arkansas Pub. Defender Comm'n v. Greene County Circuit Court, 343 Ark. 49, 32 S.W.3d 470 (2000).

Bias of Trial Judge.

Where trial judge was supposedly biased in that he had recently presided at the trial of another accused of the same offense as defendant, circumstances did not indicate that the judge was so biased as to call for his recusal at a Rule 37 proceeding. Welch v. State, 283 Ark. 281, 675 S.W.2d 641 (1984).

This rule does not authorize a litigant to silently await a decision, and then, if the litigant does not like the result, later claim a judge had some personal bias or prejudice. Orsini v. State, 287 Ark. 456, 701 S.W.2d 114 (1985).

Burden of Proof.

In a hearing on a motion for post-conviction relief, the burden is on the defendant to prove his allegations. Porter v. State, 264 Ark. 272, 570 S.W.2d 615 (1978); Branham v. State, 292 Ark. 355, 730 S.W.2d 226 (1987); Ross v. State, 292 Ark. 663, 732 S.W.2d 143 (1987).

For a petitioner to claim post-conviction relief regarding the deprivation of a constitutional right when the issue was not raised in the trial court, the burden is on petitioner to show why the issue was not raised and the prejudice that resulted. Bell v. State, 265 Ark. 596, 579 S.W.2d 586 (1979).

Allegations which are not supported by facts and a showing of some prejudice to the petitioner do not justify post-conviction relief. Urquhart v. State, 275 Ark. 486, 631 S.W.2d 304 (1982).

Allegations which are unsubstantiated and which fail to show prejudice to the defense are not sufficient to warrant postconviction relief. Taylor v. State, 297 Ark. 627, 764 S.W.2d 447 (1989).

It is incumbent on the petitioner to show actual prejudice so serious as to deprive him of a fair trial. O'Rourke v. State, 298 Ark. 144, 765 S.W.2d 916 (1989).

Competency to Stand Trial.

Trial court did not err in finding at post-conviction hearing that defendant was competent to stand trial inasmuch as competence depends on the defendant's ability to understand the proceedings against him. Deason v. State, 263 Ark. 56, 562 S.W.2d 79, cert. denied, 439 U.S. 839, 99 S. Ct. 126, 58 L. Ed. 2d 136 (1978).

Allegation by petitioner that he was in a demented mental capacity at the time of his trial to the extent that he was unable to participate in his own defense was merely a conclusory allegation and would not justify the granting of a post-conviction hearing. Walker v. State, 277 Ark. 284, 641 S.W.2d 19 (1982).

Although trial counsel's failure to request a competency hearing where there was a substantial doubt about a petitioner's competency may have constituted ineffective assistance of counsel, the failure of the defendant's trial counsel to pursue the issue of his competency did not violate his right to effective assistance of counsel where the defendant did receive a subsequent post-conviction hearing. Campbell v. Lockhart, 789 F.2d 644 (8th Cir. 1986).

Denial of the inmate's petition for postconviction relief under this rule was improper as to the competency issue because the supreme court was unable to determine whether there were any results of the mental evaluation of which the parties or the court might have been made aware, whether those results were contested, or whether there was any other resolution settling the issue of the inmate's competency to proceed and enter his plea. Sandoval-Vega v. State, 2011 Ark. 393, 384 S.W.3d 508 (2011).

Defendant's appeal of the denial of a postconviction relief petition was dismissed because defendant could not prevail if the appeal was allowed to proceed; defendant's contention about a history of mental health problems, unaccompanied by any specific evidence that called into question defendant's competency to enter a plea, was insufficient to warrant post-conviction relief. Little v. State, 2012 Ark. 194 (2012).

Defendant's petition for postconviction relief alleging ineffective assistance of counsel for failing to request a competency hearing was properly denied because defendant's attorney moved for and received an initial evaluation, a second opinion, and a third opinion from different medical professionals on defendant's competency; a fourth medical professional—defendant's own witness—agreed with the prior medical assessments that defendant was legally competent to stand trial and, consequently, to plead guilty; and, with three independent evaluations yielding opinions that defendant was competent, there was simply no plausible contention that an additional hearing would have resulted in a ruling that defendant was incompetent. Beverage v. State, 2017 Ark. 23, 508 S.W.3d 883 (2017).

Trial court properly denied appellant post-conviction relief because appellant did not contend that he was not actually competent to be tried, and appellant did not present evidence of his incompetence; appellant failed to identify any evidence establishing that he was not in fact competent to be tried or that the trial court should have made further inquiry into his mental capacity after the diagnosis of antisocial personality disorder. Lee v. State, 2017 Ark. 337, 532 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Constitutionality of Judgment.

Allegations which challenge the constitutionality of a circuit court judgment should be raised at trial and subsequently on direct appeal, not in a petition for post-conviction relief. Bailey v. State, 312 Ark. 180, 848 S.W.2d 391 (1993).

The right to trial by a twelve-member jury is a fundamental right, the violation of which renders the judgment void and subject to collateral attack, and therefore a defendant may raise the issue for the first time in Rule 37 proceedings. Collins v. State, 324 Ark. 322, 920 S.W.2d 846 (1996).

Construction.

When Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was reinstated the provision which had permitted relief in those instances where a ground was sufficient to void the conviction regardless of the timeliness of the petition was removed from the rule; therefore, claims of such a fundamental nature as to render the judgment void will no longer be heard unless filed within the time limit set forth in Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2. Prince v. State, 315 Ark. 492, 868 S.W.2d 77, cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1093, 114 S. Ct. 1857, 128 L. Ed. 2d 480 (1994).

Where petitioner was convicted while Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.4 [now Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.2] was in effect but where his conviction was affirmed less than five months after the re-adoption of Ark. R. Crim. P. 37, his failure to raise a conflict-of-interest claim in an Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition after the affirmance of his conviction did not trigger the procedural default doctrine even though he could have sought relief in the state courts. Cox v. Norris, 958 F. Supp. 411 (E.D. Ark. 1996).

If a sentence has been entered and placed in execution prior to the filing of a motion to withdraw the guilty plea upon which it was based, the motion must be treated as having been made pursuant to this rule, not Ark. R. Crim. P. 26.1, and the provisions of this rule govern the timeliness of the motion. Johninson v. State, 330 Ark. 381, 953 S.W.2d 883 (1997).

Because the time limits set forth in this rule are jurisdictional in nature, a trial court cannot extend the time to file a Rule 37 petition even if a motion for extension of time is filed before the sixty-day period allowed by Rule 37.2(c) elapses. Hill v. State, 340 Ark. 248, 13 S.W.3d 142 (2000).

Coram Nobis.

Inmate was not entitled to coram nobis relief based on a medical report that was allegedly withheld from the defense because the inmate did not exercise due diligence; there was no authority for the argument that pursuing other types of relief, such as under this rule, excused a delay in seeking coram nobis relief. Pinder v. State, 2012 Ark. 45 (2012).

Petitioner failed to establish grounds for re-investing jurisdiction in the trial court to consider a petition for writ of error coram nobis under this rule, because none of the documents petitioner presented supported his claim of insanity at the time of his trial for discharge of a firearm from a vehicle. Maxwell v. State, 2012 Ark. 251 (2012).

Coram nobis relief was not warranted after a first-degree murder conviction because the facts underpinning an insanity claim were not hidden or unknown. As to other claims, petitioner provided no facts that would not have been available at trial or shortly thereafter, and there were other remedies available to him; a petition for writ of error coram nobis was not a substitute for proceeding under this rule. Anderson v. State, 2012 Ark. 270, 423 S.W.3d 20, cert. denied, 568 U.S. 920, 133 S. Ct. 369, 184 L. Ed. 2d 219 (2012).

Trial court erred as a matter of law by granting defendant coram nobis relief, after the time limits for seeking relief under this rule had expired, due to counsel's failure to advise defendant of the immigration consequences of defendant's guilty plea because the court had no discretion to avoid the jurisdictional time limits for relief under this rule by extending the scope of coram nobis relief to include ineffective assistance of counsel. State v. Tejada-Acosta, 2013 Ark. 217, 427 S.W.3d 673 (2013).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's petition for a writ of error coram nobis or in deciding the matter without a hearing because, while defendant attempted to couch his claims in terms of a coerced-guilty plea, his claims were actually allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel, which were not cognizable in coram nobis proceedings, and his petition did not state a cognizable claim for relief. Nelson v. State, 2014 Ark. 91, 431 S.W.3d 852 (2014).

Defendant's petitions for a writ of error coram nobis and certiorari were denied because allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel and trial error were outside the purview of a coram-nobis proceeding, a coram nobis petition was not a substitute for raising claims of ineffective assistance of counsel under this rule, defendant's double-jeopardy claim was settled in an interlocutory appeal, and there was no cause on which to permit him to supplement the record to bolster the claims in the petition that were clearly without merit. Bean v. State, 2015 Ark. 136 (2015).

Appellant submitted a bare allegation without any facts to support a finding that he was coerced into pleading guilty. Because appellant's petition for writ of error coram nobis did not state a cognizable claim for relief, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying his petition. White v. State, 2015 Ark. 151, 460 S.W.3d 285 (2015).

Circuit court did not err in denying appellant's petition for a writ of error coram nobis because to the extent appellant argued that his decision to plead guilty was occasioned by an erroneous interpretation of law by his trial counsel, that complaint sounded under this rule; coram nobis proceedings are not a substitute for proceeding under this rule. Pelletier v. State, 2015 Ark. 432, 474 S.W.3d 500 (2015).

Petitioner's claims of ineffective assistance of counsel were not cognizable in a coram nobis proceeding; such claims are properly brought pursuant to this rule, and a petition for writ of error coram nobis is not a substitute for proceeding under this rule, even when the deadline for filing for Rule 37 relief has passed. McArthur v. State, 2017 Ark. 120, 515 S.W.3d 585 (2017).

Petitioner was denied a writ of error coram nobis because he failed to demonstrate the writ could issue on his claim that trial counsel was ineffective; the claim should have been raised in a timely petition for postconviction relief. Smith v. State, 2018 Ark. 37, cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 107, 202 L. Ed. 2d 67 (2018).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellant's petition for writ of error coram nobis because his allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel in the plea proceedings were not cognizable in coram nobis proceedings. Coram nobis proceedings are not to be used as a substitute for raising claims of ineffective assistance of counsel under this rule, and the writ is not available when a mistake or error of law is made by counsel. Osburn v. State, 2018 Ark. 341, 560 S.W.3d 774 (2018).

Because petitioner failed to state sufficient facts to establish a Brady violation, his pro se petition to reinvest jurisdiction in the trial court to consider a petition for writ of error coram nobis was denied; petitioner did not state facts that established a Brady violation but instead alleged ineffective-assistance-of-counsel claims, which are not cognizable in coram nobis proceedings. Talley v. State, 2019 Ark. 293, 586 S.W.3d 159 (2019).

Custody.

This rule requires that the defendant be in custody and that the petition be verified by the defendant before allowing the defendant to petition the trial court for post-conviction relief. Oliver v. State, 286 Ark. 198, 691 S.W.2d 842 (1985).

A defendant whose conviction is affirmed on appeal is not entitled to remain free merely because he files a petition to proceed under this rule. Mason v. State, 285 Ark. 484, 687 S.W.2d 849 (1985).

Proceedings under this rule are confined to prisoners in custody under sentence of a circuit court. So where defendants were out of custody on their original bonds when they filed their motion, they were not entitled to relief. Malone v. State, 294 Ark. 376, 742 S.W.2d 945 (1988).

A prerequisite for relief under this rule is that the convicted party be in custody when his petition is filed. Coplen v. State, 298 Ark. 272, 766 S.W.2d 612 (1989).

Death Penalty.

Generally, the Supreme Court will not consider errors raised for the first time on appeal; however, in death penalty cases the court will consider errors argued for the first time on direct appeal where prejudice is conclusively shown by the record and the court would unquestionably require the trial court to grant relief under this rule. Hill v. State, 275 Ark. 71, 628 S.W.2d 284, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 882, 103 S. Ct. 180, 74 L. Ed. 2d 147 (1982).

An attack on a death sentence by means of an allegation that an aggravating circumstance has been invalidated after trial constitutes a direct attack on the evidence used to establish the aggravating circumstance which was proved at trial and, as such, cannot be raised under this rule. Gardner v. State, 297 Ark. 541, 764 S.W.2d 416 (1989).

Argument that the jury ignored the evidence in mitigation and, therefore, the death sentence cannot stand is a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence and is a direct, rather than a collateral, attack on the conviction; such attacks are not cognizable under this rule. O'Rourke v. State, 298 Ark. 144, 765 S.W.2d 916 (1989).

Direct Appeal.

An appellant can not simultaneously pursue a direct appeal and Rule 37 relief. Haynes v. State, 311 Ark. 651, 846 S.W.2d 179 (1993).

This rule does not provide an opportunity to reargue points settled on direct appeal. Dunham v. State, 315 Ark. 580, 868 S.W.2d 496 (1994).

Denial of counsel under the Sixth Amendment is an issue more appropriately raised on direct appeal than by a petition pursuant to this rule; such an issue must be raised on direct appeal or be waived. Oliver v. State, 323 Ark. 743, 918 S.W.2d 690 (1996).

Rule 37 does not provide an opportunity to reargue points that were settled on direct appeal. Coulter v. State, 343 Ark. 22, 31 S.W.3d 826 (2000).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was appropriate because she had actual knowledge of a codefendant's statement when it was introduced into evidence at trial and her lack-of-knowledge argument could have been included in her direct appeal as an additional basis for reversal. Because her lack-of-knowledge argument could have been included in her direct appeal as an additional basis for reversal, it was precluded from being raised in a petition under this rule. McGahey v. State, 2009 Ark. 80 (2009).

Circuit court did not clearly err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief. Although appellant argued that the testimony of the investigating officer did not connect him with a handgun, this allegation constituted a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence, which was an issue raised and decided adversely to appellant on direct appeal. Leak v. State, 2011 Ark. 353 (2011).

Although defendant claimed entitlement to raise the question of whether the State established that forging certain checks was an offense, the trial court correctly declined to consider the claim, as it was an allegation that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain the judgment, and attacks on the sufficiency of the evidence were direct attacks on the judgment that had to be made at trial and on the record on direct appeal. Defendant could not add evidence to the record or otherwise refute evidence adduced at trial. Williams v. State, 2015 Ark. 466, 476 S.W.3d 800 (2015).

Discretion of Court.

Court did not abuse its discretion where petitioner was not diligent in preparing for the post-conviction hearing, and the affidavits of bystanders would have been of no value. Houff v. State, 268 Ark. 19, 593 S.W.2d 39 (1980).

It was discretionary and not obligatory on the trial court to allow appellant to change to a Rule 37 proceeding based on a motion to amend filed a few days before the hearing. Avants v. State, 293 Ark. 24, 732 S.W.2d 149 (1987).

Trial court abused its discretion in denying counsel's motion for leave to amend defendant's Rule 37 petition; defendant acted with persistence in trying to move the case forward and defendant's counsel did not seek to file an enlarged petition, which was not required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2(e). Butler v. State, 367 Ark. 318, 239 S.W.3d 514 (2006).

Double Jeopardy.

Double jeopardy protection is a fundamental right that can be raised for the first time in a petition under this rule. Rowbottom v. State, 341 Ark. 33, 13 S.W.3d 904 (2000).

Defendant convicted of capital murder, attempted capital murder, and aggravated robbery failed to show that his double jeopardy rights were violated; under § 5-10-101(d)(1)(A), separate convictions and sentences were authorized for both the capital murder and the felony underlying the capital-murder charge. Jackson v. State, 2013 Ark. 19 (2013).

Trial court properly denied appellant postconviction relief because he failed to show a double-jeopardy violation arising out of the charges for commission of a terroristic act, criminal attempt to commit first-degree battery, and aggravated assault; appellant could have been tried and convicted under the statute for the commission of a terroristic act for each shot that he fired. There were six separate criminal violations resulting from six separate impulses in the firing of six separate shots. Lee v. State, 2017 Ark. 337, 532 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Due Process.

Defendant was not denied due process when defendant's drug court participation was terminated because (1) defendant was properly assessed two strikes when defendant was one hour late for a drug test and the test was positive for THC, and (2) defendant was accorded the benefit of due process when the issue of whether defendant committed two strikes was fully aired at a postconviction hearing. Bass v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 407 (2019).

Petitioner's argument that his due process rights were violated by the circuit court's failure to rule on his discovery requests was meritless, as petitioner was not entitled to discovery to pursue postconviction relief. Lacefield v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 534 (2020).

Petitioner's due process rights were not violated by the circuit court's failure to rule on his motion to exceed the page limitation set forth for postconviction petitions. Lacefield v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 534 (2020).

Evidentiary Hearing.

Allegations made without a factual basis in a petition for post-conviction relief do not justify an evidentiary hearing. Blakely v. State, 283 Ark. 138, 671 S.W.2d 183 (1984); Jones v. State, 283 Ark. 363, 676 S.W.2d 738 (1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1219, 105 S. Ct. 1204, 84 L. Ed. 2d 347 (1985); Wilburn v. State, 292 Ark. 416, 730 S.W.2d 491 (1987); Ross v. State, 292 Ark. 663, 732 S.W.2d 143 (1987); Long v. State, 294 Ark. 362, 742 S.W.2d 942 (1988).

Evidentiary hearing held warranted. Sanchez v. State, 290 Ark. 39, 716 S.W.2d 747 (1986); Owens v. State, 292 Ark. 292, 729 S.W.2d 419 (1987).

In ordering a Rule 37 hearing, the court is not bound by the strict rules of evidence and will normally grant such relief when affidavits establish a prima facie showing in support of the petitioner's complaint. Although postconviction hearings are relatively informal, the rules of evidence still apply; testimony, to be admissible, must be under oath and subject to cross-examination. Poe v. State, 291 Ark. 79, 722 S.W.2d 576 (1987).

The defendant was entitled to a new hearing on her motion for postconviction relief where the court improperly refused to exclude her trial counsel from the courtroom during her testimony with regard to his alleged ineffective assistance. Finch v. State, 335 Ark. 254, 984 S.W.2d 360 (1998).

Trial court's decision to render its decision denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief pursuant to this rule without a hearing was not clearly erroneous because the trial court examined the record, found that appellant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims were without merit, entered written findings to that effect, and denied the petition without a hearing. Richardson v. State, 2011 Ark. 478 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for postconviction relief without an evidentiary hearing because defendant's claims were conclusory and without factual substantiation; there was no specific description of alleged prejudice from any failure of counsel to conduct adversarial testing of the prosecution's case. Thompson v. State, 2013 Ark. 179 (2013).

Inmate did not show it was error for a trial court to rule on the inmate's postconviction claims without a hearing because (1) the inmate did not show the inmate raised an issue that could not be ruled on by referring to the record, and (2) the inmate's claims called for no fact finding. Norris v. State, 2013 Ark. 205, 427 S.W.3d 626 (2013).

In a case in which appellant contended that the circuit court erred in denying his petition for postconviction relief without holding an evidentiary hearing, the Supreme Court could not say that the findings and record conclusively showed that appellant was entitled to no relief on the first of his two claims. Beverage v. State, 2015 Ark. 112, 458 S.W.3d 243 (2015).

Appellant failed to allege that he would not have pleaded guilty had his counsel more thoroughly investigated the murder victim's cause of death. Without some showing of prejudice, it was conclusive on the face of appellant's petition that no relief was warranted, and the circuit court did not err in declining to hold an evidentiary hearing on his ineffective assistance of counsel claim. Beverage v. State, 2015 Ark. 112, 458 S.W.3d 243 (2015).

Circuit court did not err in denying defendant's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition without holding an evidentiary hearing; despite the absence of specific findings in the instant case, it was evident from the face of the petition and the record that no relief was warranted. McLaughlin v. State, 2015 Ark. 335, 469 S.W.3d 360 (2015).

Circuit court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief without a hearing because the files and records of the case conclusively showed that appellant's allegations that he received ineffective assistance of counsel were not well taken. Sims v. State, 2015 Ark. 363, 472 S.W.3d 107 (2015).

Circuit court's order denying a petition for postconviction relief was reversed where drug-court participants were to be afforded the same protections as a probationer on revocation, the circuit court failed to hold a hearing prior to petitioner's expulsion from the drug-court program, and that failure amounted to a dueprocess violation. Neal v. State, 2016 Ark. 287, 497 S.W.3d 666 (2016).

Evidentiary hearing is required unless the petition and the files and records of the case conclusively show that the petitioner is not entitled to postconviction relief; in this case, petitioner was not entitled to postconviction relief and thus the circuit court did not err in denying his petition without a hearing. Luper v. State, 2016 Ark. 371, 501 S.W.3d 812 (2016).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by failing to conduct an evidentiary hearing before denying postconviction relief or by failing to enter sufficient findings in the absence of a hearing because its findings on most, but not all, of appellant's claims for relief were sufficient for review; a review of the petition itself, together with a consideration of the record on appeal, conclusively showed that appellant's claims did not merit postconviction relief. Wooten v. State, 2016 Ark. 376, 502 S.W.3d 503 (2016).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief without an evidentiary hearing because the petition, the files, and the record conclusively showed that defendant was not entitled to relief as defendant admitted at the plea hearing that his attorney had not told him how much of his sentence he would serve; his attorney explained to the court that he had told defendant that he did not know how much of his sentence he would serve; and the court clarified for defendant that he could serve the entire sentence. Mardis v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 433 (2017).

It was reversible error to deny an inmate's petition for postconviction relief without holding an evidentiary hearing because (1) the trial court made no required findings specifying the parts of the record relied on in finding the record conclusively showed the inmate was entitled to no relief, and (2) the record did not conclusively show the inmate was not entitled to relief when the inmate alleged counsel was ineffective for not objecting to prejudicial evidence stipulated to be inadmissible, failed to object to inadmissible evidence of "bondage" sex the inmate supposedly engaged in, failed to present proof defendant did not intend to engage in sex with children present or with children, and failed to subpoena a former officer, as the claims were not conclusory. Shreck v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 85, 572 S.W.3d 35 (2019).

Execution of Sentence.

Allegation could not properly be considered on a petition for post-conviction relief because it attacked the execution of the sentence rather than the validity of the sentence imposed by the trial court; any action the defendant might have as to the correctness of the computation of his sentence and the execution thereof would be against the department of correction. Bosnick v. State, 275 Ark. 52, 627 S.W.2d 23 (1982).

Allegations which pertain to events after trial are not within the purview of this rule, which is limited to questions related to the conviction and sentence, not the execution of the sentence. Taylor v. State, 297 Ark. 627, 764 S.W.2d 447 (1989).

Federal Writs.

Defendant's failure to present his double jeopardy claim to the Arkansas courts in accordance with state procedural rules constitutes a procedural default, which can be excused only on a showing of cause for the default and prejudice from the alleged violation of federal law; in addition, his failure to present the claim until his second federal habeas petition constituted an abuse of the writ, for which he also must meet the cause-and-prejudice standard. Wallace v. Lockhart, 12 F.3d 823 (8th Cir. 1994).

Arkansas's rule against successive Rule 37 petitions cannot constitute cause for abuse of the federal writ of habeas corpus. Wallace v. Lockhart, 12 F.3d 823 (8th Cir. 1994).

Filing of Petition.

A formal verified petition for post-conviction relief must be filed in appellate court following its affirmation for permission to proceed in the trial court. Knappenberger v. State, 278 Ark. 382, 647 S.W.2d 417 (1983); Knappenberger v. State, 279 Ark. 453, 652 S.W.2d 25 (1983).

When a petitioner seeks a stay of execution based on the contention that he is entitled to post-conviction relief, he must also file a petition setting out the grounds for that relief; the mere allegation that there are meritorious grounds to be raised is not good cause to grant a stay of execution. Simmons v. State, 280 Ark. 542, 659 S.W.2d 758 (1983).

Findings.

Although both Ark. R. Crim. P. 26 and this rule are in the nature of post-conviction relief, the latter is designed to attack constitutionality, jurisdiction, excess sentences, and other collateral attacks, and requires written findings; whereas the former is designed to correct manifest injustices, and requires no such findings. Rawls v. State, 576 S.W.2d 191 (Ark. 1979).

Circuit court's order denying postconviction relief complied with the mandates of this rule because it specifically addressed each argument presented by the prisoner independently with a finding of relevant facts and conclusions of law; the trial court was not required to certify the petition and the records of the case. Greene v. State, 356 Ark. 59, 146 S.W.3d 871 (2004).

In a postconviction proceeding, the trial court's lack of written findings of fact and conclusions of law amounted to reversible error because based on the transcript of the plea hearing and the alleged positive misrepresentations of trial counsel regarding defendant's parole eligibility, it could not be said that the files and record conclusively showed that defendant was entitled to no relief. Olivarez v. State, 2012 Ark. 24 (2012).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was appropriate because the circuit court's written findings complied with Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.3. In part, the inmate himself submitted a portion of the record with his petition and the circuit court, in its order, stated that it reviewed the pleadings and transcripts in denying the inmate's petition for postconviction relief; in doing so, the circuit court outlined the inmate's claims and the reasons for its denial of those claims. Henington v. State, 2012 Ark. 181, 403 S.W.3d 55 (2012).

Fundamental Claims.

When an issue could have been raised at trial or on appeal, it is not a basis for collateral attack on the conviction under this rule, unless it presents a question so fundamental as to render the judgment of conviction absolutely void. Campbell v. State, 288 Ark. 213, 703 S.W.2d 855 (1986); Madewell v. State, 290 Ark. 580, 720 S.W.2d 913 (1986); Troutt v. State, 292 Ark. 192, 729 S.W.2d 139 (1987); Ross v. State, 292 Ark. 663, 732 S.W.2d 143 (1987); Burnett v. State, 293 Ark. 300, 737 S.W.2d 631 (1987); Malone v. State, 294 Ark. 127, 741 S.W.2d 246 (1987).

Decision did not present a question so fundamental as to render judgment absolutely void. Dumond v. State, 294 Ark. 379, 743 S.W.2d 779 (1988).

While even constitutional issues must be raised in the trial court and on direct appeal rather than in Rule 37 proceedings, the Supreme Court has made an exception for errors that are so fundamental as to render the judgment of conviction void and subject to collateral attack, provided the petition is timely filed. Collins v. State, 324 Ark. 322, 920 S.W.2d 846 (1996).

Circuit judge erred by dismissing a petition for post-conviction relief pursuant to this rule, because the issues could have been raised on direct appeal. Appellant's allegations of a double jeopardy violation and ineffective assistance of counsel were fundamental errors, for which an exception to the waiver rule applied. Reed v. State, 375 Ark. 277, 289 S.W.3d 921 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying petitioner's motion for postconviction relief; petitioner's claims challenging the sufficiency of the evidence were a direct attack on the judgment and were not cognizable in a postconviction proceeding. Watson v. State, 2012 Ark. 27 (2012).

Defendant's claim of actual innocence of rape charges was not cognizable in a postconviction proceeding under the rule; the claim should have been raised at trial. Thompson v. State, 2013 Ark. 179 (2013).

Argument as to the proportionality of appellant's life sentence as compared to the sentences of the accomplices was not considered where she failed to raise the issue at trial; and because the proportionality of the sentence was not fundamental in nature, appellant could not raise the argument for the first time in an Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 proceeding. When appellant chose to exercise her right to jury trial, the only sentence available on a finding of guilt was the one imposed. Swain v. State, 2017 Ark. 117, 515 S.W.3d 580 (2017).

Grounds Generally.

The issue of the composition of the jury is one which could have been raised in the trial court; as such, it is not a proper ground for a petition under this rule. Urquhart v. State, 275 Ark. 486, 631 S.W.2d 304 (1982).

This rule is not available to a petitioner who wishes to have a post-conviction hearing only in the hopes of finding some ground for relief. Hayes v. State, 280 Ark. 509, 660 S.W.2d 648 (1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1051, 104 S. Ct. 1331, 79 L. Ed. 2d 726 (1984).

Allegations of mere error are not cognizable under this rule. Shockley v. State, 291 Ark. 251, 724 S.W.2d 156 (1987); Skeels v. State, 300 Ark. 285, 779 S.W.2d 146 (1989).

A challenge to the validity of an arrest is not cognizable under this rule. Gunn v. State, 291 Ark. 548, 726 S.W.2d 278 (1987).

This rule does not prescribe relief for one whose conviction has been affirmed in an opinion that has since, to some extent, been overruled. Burnett v. State, 293 Ark. 300, 737 S.W.2d 631 (1987).

An allegation which is general in nature with no showing of actual prejudice to the defense is not deserving of postconviction relief. Malone v. State, 294 Ark. 127, 741 S.W.2d 246 (1987).

A Rule 37 petition that merely presents constitutional arguments based upon the record will be denied because Rule 37 is not a substitute for an appeal or an alternative method of reviewing mere trial errors; an exception exists, however, when the constitutional claim would render the judgment absolutely void. McDougald v. Lockhart, 942 F.2d 508 (8th Cir. 1991).

Grounds sufficient to avoid the three year limit are extremely limited; in fact, error sufficient to avoid a conviction under Arkansas law appears to be limited to errors that prevent retrial. Snell v. Lockhart, 14 F.3d 1289 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 960, 115 S. Ct. 419, 130 L. Ed. 2d 334 (1994).

Claims of prosecutorial misconduct are not cognizable in a postconviction proceeding. Scott v. State, 2012 Ark. 199, 406 S.W.3d 1 (2012).

Direct challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence is not cognizable in a postconviction proceeding. Scott v. State, 2012 Ark. 199, 406 S.W.3d 1 (2012).

Defendant was properly denied postconviction relief because defendant's claim that the evidence was insufficient to support a kidnapping charge was not a cognizable claim; such a challenge was a direct attack on the judgment. Thacker v. State, 2012 Ark. 205 (2012).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because the assertion that the evidence adduced at trial was insufficient to sustain the judgment of conviction was not a ground for relief under the rule. Fletcher v. State, 2015 Ark. 106, 458 S.W.3d 234 (2015).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because his claims that he was denied a speedy trial, the trial court erred in denying a motion for mistrial, and the State did not meet its discovery obligations were a direct attack on the judgment and were thus properly raised in the trial court; such claims were not grounds for a collateral attack on the judgment under the rule. Fletcher v. State, 2015 Ark. 106, 458 S.W.3d 234 (2015).

Trial court did not err in declining to grant petitioner's application for postconviction relief because the sufficiency of the evidence, including the credibility of witnesses, was a matter to be decided at trial; petitioner's stringent disagreement with the trial court's statements concerning the facts of the case was not a ground to reverse the order denying postconviction relief. Stalnaker v. State, 2015 Ark. 250, 464 S.W.3d 466 (2015).

To the extent petitioner's allegations raised trial error, they were not cognizable under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1; Rule 37 is not available as a direct challenge to the admissibility of evidence or to raise questions of trial error, even questions of constitutional dimension. Lane v. State, 2019 Ark. 5, 564 S.W.3d 524 (2019).

Direct challenges to the sufficiency of the evidence are not cognizable in Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 proceedings. Myers v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 16, 593 S.W.3d 29 (2020).

—Evidentiary Questions.

Petition alleging newly discovered evidence was denied where it was plainly a direct effort to have judgment vacated rather than a collateral attack. Chisum v. State, 274 Ark. 332, 625 S.W.2d 448 (1981); Dumond v. State, 294 Ark. 379, 743 S.W.2d 779 (1988).

Insufficiency of the evidence is not a proper ground for post-conviction relief; challenges to the sufficiency of the evidence are a direct, not a collateral, attack on the conviction which must be made at trial or on direct appeal. McCroskey v. State, 278 Ark. 156, 644 S.W.2d 271 (1983); Pride v. State, 285 Ark. 89, 684 S.W.2d 819 (1985); Sanchez v. State, 290 Ark. 39, 716 S.W.2d 747 (1986); Shockley v. State, 291 Ark. 251, 724 S.W.2d 156 (1987); Ross v. State, 292 Ark. 663, 732 S.W.2d 143 (1987); Cotton v. State, 293 Ark. 338, 738 S.W.2d 90 (1987).

Attacks on the nature and sufficiency of the evidence and the credibility of witnesses are direct challenges to the judgment; and, as such, they are not proper challenges under this rule. This rule affords a remedy when the sentence in a case was imposed in violation of the constitution of the United States or of this state or is otherwise subject to collateral attack. Pitcock v. State, 279 Ark. 174, 649 S.W.2d 393 (1983); Fretwell v. State, 292 Ark. 96, 728 S.W.2d 180 (1987); Stephens v. State, 293 Ark. 231, 737 S.W.2d 147 (1987).

Petitioner may not challenge weight and sufficiency of the evidence by framing attack as an allegation of ineffective assistance of counsel. Guy v. State, 282 Ark. 424, 668 S.W.2d 952 (1984), overruled, Ferrell v. State, 305 Ark. 511, 810 S.W.2d 29 (1991); Hickey v. State, 287 Ark. 197, 697 S.W.2d 118 (1985); Gunn v. State, 291 Ark. 548, 726 S.W.2d 278 (1987); Stephens v. State, 293 Ark. 231, 737 S.W.2d 147 (1987).

Challenges to the weight of the evidence are direct attacks on the judgment which must be made at trial and on direct appeal, not in a petition for post-conviction relief. Jones v. State, 283 Ark. 363, 676 S.W.2d 738 (1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1219, 105 S. Ct. 1204, 84 L. Ed. 2d 347 (1985).

Challenges to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence are direct attacks on the conviction and, consequently, may not be raised in Rule 37 petitions. Nor can the argument be raised by way of an allegation of ineffective assistance of counsel. Robinson v. State, 295 Ark. 693, 751 S.W.2d 335 (1988).

The only instance in which sufficiency of the evidence is considered within the purview of this rule is when there is absolutely no evidence whatsoever to support the conviction; in such a case the conviction would be void. Williams v. State, 298 Ark. 317, 766 S.W.2d 931 (1989).

Guilty Plea.

Evidence showed that petitioner knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily entered a plea of guilty and was not entitled to post-conviction relief. Deason v. State, 263 Ark. 56, 562 S.W.2d 79, cert. denied, 439 U.S. 839, 99 S. Ct. 126, 58 L. Ed. 2d 136 (1978); Scott v. State, 267 Ark. 628, 593 S.W.2d 27 (1980); Treadwell v. State, 271 Ark. 823, 610 S.W.2d 884 (1981); Abdullah v. State, 281 Ark. 239, 663 S.W.2d 166 (1984); Holt v. State, 281 Ark. 210, 662 S.W.2d 822 (1984).

Where evidence supported the finding that there had been no difference between what the petitioner had bargained for and what the trial court had ordered, any cause of action the petitioner had would only be against the department of correction for the method it used in computing his parole eligibility date. Houff v. State, 268 Ark. 19, 593 S.W.2d 39 (1980).

Where the record indicated that the defendant was advised by his attorneys that if he went to trial before a jury in a capital murder case he could be given a death sentence, such advice did not constitute a threat which rendered his confession and guilty plea coerced and invalid, and he was not entitled to post-conviction relief under this rule. Williams v. State, 273 Ark. 371, 620 S.W.2d 277 (1981).

A defendant whose conviction is based upon a plea of guilty normally will have difficulty in proving any post-conviction prejudice since his plea rests upon his admission in open court that he did the act with which he is charged. Crockett v. State, 282 Ark. 582, 669 S.W.2d 896 (1984); Franklin v. State, 293 Ark. 225, 736 S.W.2d 16 (1987).

A defendant who pleads guilty upon the advice of counsel may not collaterally attack the voluntary and intelligent character of the guilty plea merely by demonstrating that some advice received from counsel was erroneous; rather, the question is whether counsel's advice was competent, taking into account the inherent uncertainty in advising a client about pleading guilty. Haywood v. State, 288 Ark. 266, 704 S.W.2d 168 (1986); Brown v. State, 291 Ark. 393, 725 S.W.2d 544 (1987).

Where any delay in obtaining counsel was caused by the defendant, the defendant was not coerced into entering guilty pleas by the trial court's denial of his motion for continuance. Jones v. State, 288 Ark. 375, 705 S.W.2d 874 (1986).

When a guilty plea is challenged, the sole issue is whether the plea was intelligently and voluntarily entered with the advice of competent counsel. Huff v. State, 289 Ark. 404, 711 S.W.2d 801 (1986); Branham v. State, 292 Ark. 355, 730 S.W.2d 226 (1987).

A petitioner who attacks his guilty plea is choosing to surrender whatever benefits he may have derived from his plea bargain; the state may charge him with whatever offense is appropriate under the facts of the case so long as the decision to charge with a greater crime is not prompted by vindictiveness on the part of the prosecutor to retaliate against the defendant for successfully attacking his original conviction based on his guilty plea. James v. State, 289 Ark. 560, 712 S.W.2d 919 (1986).

A motion to withdraw a guilty plea filed after sentencing may be treated as a post-conviction petition under this rule, regardless of its title. Brown v. State, 290 Ark. 289, 718 S.W.2d 937 (1986).

Erroneous advice concerning parole eligibility does not automatically render a guilty plea involuntary. Garmon v. State, 290 Ark. 371, 719 S.W.2d 699 (1986).

Trial court's failure to make factual determination when the plea was taken was remedied at the Rule 37 hearing where the factual basis was determined to have existed at the time of the guilty plea. Muck v. State, 292 Ark. 310, 730 S.W.2d 214 (1987); Knee v. State, 297 Ark. 346, 760 S.W.2d 874 (1988).

A conviction based on a guilty plea is difficult to overturn, because prejudice is difficult to prove. Morgan v. State, 296 Ark. 370, 757 S.W.2d 530 (1988).

The threat of the death penalty is not a basis for holding a guilty plea to have been coerced and thus invalid. Smith v. State, 300 Ark. 291, 778 S.W.2d 924 (1989).

If evidence at a post-conviction hearing supplies the factual basis for a plea of guilty, the failure of the trial court to establish it at the plea hearing is not reversible error. Strafaci v. State, 300 Ark. 298, 778 S.W.2d 602 (1989).

Even if a factual basis had been wanting at the guilty plea hearing, it can be adequately supplied by testimony at a Rule 37 hearing, which is sufficient. Gibson v. State, 301 Ark. 44, 781 S.W.2d 469 (1989).

Trial court clearly instructed appellant that he had a right to a jury and nonjury trial, that certain rights accrue as a result of exercising his right to go to trial and that by pleading guilty he would be waiving such rights. Cox v. Lockhart, 970 F.2d 448 (8th Cir. 1992).

Defendant did not qualify for postconviction relief under this rule where, pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.5, his guilty plea was voluntary and defendant was not found to be incapacitated; substantial compliance with Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.4 and 24.6 was sufficient to find that defendant understood the sentence ranges and agreement. Pardue v. State, 363 Ark. 567, 215 S.W.3d 650 (2005).

In a capital murder case, as defendant failed to show the conviction was invalid on its face or that the trial court lacked jurisdiction, the trial court properly denied his petition for writ of habeas corpus under § 16-112-103; defendant's assertion that his guilty plea was invalid should have been raised in a motion for post-conviction relief as this issue required the kind of factual inquiry that went beyond the facial validity of the commitment. Friend v. Norris, 364 Ark. 315, 219 S.W.3d 123 (2005).

Appellate court affirmed the denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief because, while the court did not ask the inmate if he agreed with the facts at the plea hearing, the trial court established that the facts presented were sufficient to find the inmate guilty, as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.6. O'Connor v. State, 367 Ark. 173, 238 S.W.3d 104 (2006).

Denial of the inmate's petition for postconviction relief was appropriate because an attempt to mitigate and reduce the agreed-upon term of years could not have resulted in a lower sentence. The inmate would have lost her bargained-for sentence and gone to trial, where she faced possible life imprisonment if convicted of the drug charges. Jamett v. State, 2010 Ark. 28, 358 S.W.3d 874 (2010).

Where defendant, while entering a guilty plea, told the trial court that defendant was satisfied with the advice and representation of counsel, defendant was not entitled to claim ineffective assistance in a petition under this rule. Polivka v. State, 2010 Ark. 152, 362 S.W.3d 918 (2010).

Post-conviction relief petition was properly denied because, inter alia, the record did not show that the inmate was mentally incapable of entering an intelligent and voluntary plea, nor did the petition present factual substantiation to support the inmate's claim; further, the inmate failed to establish ineffective assistance of counsel. The inmate's claims lacked factual substantiation to support a finding of deficient performance. Biddle v. State, 2011 Ark. 358 (2011).

Trial court properly denied defendant's petition for postconviction relief because defendant's sufficiency of the evidence, due process, illegal seizure, and severity of the sentence arguments were all subject to dismissal as being non-cognizable due to defendant's guilty plea. Schniepp v. State, 2012 Ark. 94 (2012).

Circuit court did not err in entering an order denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief alleging that he did not knowingly and voluntarily enter his no-contest and guilty pleas because the circuit court did not err in concluding that defendant was not credible in his testimony that he would not have entered the pleas of no contest and guilty if he had not been pressured to do so. Young v. State, 2015 Ark. 65 (2015).

In a plea agreement case where the State had added the habitual offender allegation by a separate information, the trial court had to amend the sentencing order nunc pro tunc because it had failed to check the habitual offender box, and petitioner was sentenced to 10 years with 5 years suspended on a reduced charge of breaking and entering, a Class D felony, the circuit court correctly denied post-conviction relief; petitioner failed to properly allege that his plea of guilty was not intelligently and voluntarily entered, and the record revealed that the trial court advised him as to the nature of the plea agreement, including the habitual offender elevation, and he informed the court that he was aware of the charges for which he was pleading guilty. Bridgeman v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 321, 525 S.W.3d 459 (2017).

Habeas Corpus.

A federal court of appeals is precluded from granting post-conviction habeas corpus relief on the basis of a claim that was not first presented in a state court. Wallace v. Lockhart, 701 F.2d 719 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 934, 104 S. Ct. 340, 78 L. Ed. 2d 308 (1983).

State court will not refuse to consider a timely Rule 37 petition simply because a federal court has already considered a petition for writ of habeas corpus. Ross v. State, 292 Ark. 663, 732 S.W.2d 143 (1987).

The rule that certain state-court procedural defaults will bar a petition for federal habeas corpus extends to procedural defaults occurring in the course of state post-conviction proceedings, as well as to procedural defaults occurring at trial or on direct appeal in the state courts. Williams v. Lockhart, 873 F.2d 1129 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 942, 110 S. Ct. 344, 107 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1989).

Where defendant filed a petition under this rule seeking post-petition relief, and state courts dismissed the petition because it was filed more than three years after date of defendant's commitment, and the state Supreme Court had consistently interpreted and applied this three-year limitation, and it was consistently applied in defendant's case, defendant was barred from federal habeas corpus relief. Williams v. Lockhart, 873 F.2d 1129 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 942, 110 S. Ct. 344, 107 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1989).

Procedural defaults do not always bar consideration of the merits of a federal claim by a habeas court, even when cause and prejudice have not been shown. But in order to qualify for such extraordinary treatment, petitioner must show that a constitutional violation has probably resulted in the conviction of one who is actually innocent. Ellis v. Lockhart, 875 F.2d 200 (8th Cir. 1989).

In a petition for writ of habeas corpus, the argument that counsel was ineffective at and after trial attacked neither the facial validity of the judgment nor the court's jurisdiction, but pertained to the attorney's conduct; it could not be redressed by the limited scope of the Arkansas habeas corpus relief. Dawan v. Lockhart, 980 F.2d 470 (8th Cir. 1992).

Where the judgment of conviction and order of commitment were void, but the petitioner remained charged with capital murder, the granting of a writ of habeas corpus did not mean that the petitioner had to be set free; the prisoner was released from the Arkansas Department of Correction and placed in the custody of the county sheriff to be held on the charge of capital murder. Waddle v. Sargent, 313 Ark. 539, 855 S.W.2d 919 (1993).

Just as Acts 2001, No. 1780 (the Act), codified as §§ 16-112-201 — 16-112-207, does not provide a substitute for proceeding under this rule, the Act does not provide a substitute for a petition for writ of error coram nobis filed in the trial court. Graham v. State, 358 Ark. 296, 188 S.W.3d 893 (2004).

Defendant's 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254 habeas petition was properly denied because an independent and adequate state ground existed to bar federal habeas review: (1) defendant had filed a post-conviction relief (PCR) petition, under this rule, challenging the legal assistance rendered by his state trial counsel; (2) the Supreme Court of Arkansas had affirmed a trial court's decision denying defendant's PCR petition because he had failed to comply with Ark. Sup. Ct. & Ct. App. R. 4-2(b)(3), which required him to include, in his appellate brief, relevant abstracts from the record necessary for adequate appellate review of his claims; and (3) the dismissal for failure to comply with the abstracting rule constituted an adequate and independent state ground for federal habeas relief purposes because the abstracting rule was firmly established and regularly enforced in Arkansas. Clay v. Norris, 485 F.3d 1037 (8th Cir. 2007).

The inmate's motions after his petition for habeas corpus relief was dismissed seeking to have the brief duplicated and to correct the docket number were properly dismissed as moot because it was clear from the record that the inmate could not prevail on appeal. To the extent that any allegation raised by the inmate was that he was denied effective assistance of counsel, allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel were not cognizable in a habeas proceeding; all of his claims could have been raised at trial and on the record on direct appeal or in a proceeding under this rule. Smith v. Hobbs, 2012 Ark. 18 (2012).

Inmate was not entitled to habeas corpus relief based on an allegation of ineffectiveness of counsel because that was not a cognizable issue; rather, the claim should have been raised in a timely petition under this rule. A petition for a writ of habeas corpus was not a substitute for proceeding under this rule. Ashby v. State, 2012 Ark. 48 (2012).

Was clear from the record that the petitioner could not prevail on appeal challenging the denial of his writ of habeas corpus, because allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel were not cognizable in a habeas proceeding, and claims concerning counsel's effectiveness were properly raised pursuant to this rule. Thomas v. State, 2012 Ark. 79 (2012).

Defendant argued that he was not told, prior to entering his guilty plea, that § 16-93-609 would apply to his sentence, however, he failed to show how this allegation would make the judgment against him facially invalid or to support his claim to believe that he was illegally detained, § 16-112-103(a)(1) all claims of ineffective assistance had to be brought under a timely petition under this rule, and a petition for writ of habeas corpus was not a substitute for a timely petition for postconviction relief. Smith v. Hobbs, 2012 Ark. 360 (2012).

Trial court did not err by denying a petition for writ of habeas corpus, because petitioner's allegations that the police department violated his rights, he was illegally arrested, his due-process rights were violated, and he was not afforded effective assistance of counsel were not grounds for the writ. The allegations could have been raised in his proceeding under this rule. Hooper v. Hobbs, 2013 Ark. 31 (2013).

Harmless Error.

Trial court erred in granting a new trial pursuant to this rule where defendant counsel's inadvertent failure to request a jury instruction regarding accomplice corroboration would not have changed the result of the trial. State v. Slocum, 332 Ark. 207, 964 S.W.2d 388 (1998).

Illegal Arrest.

Circuit court did not clearly err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief. Although appellant claimed that evidence was obtained as a result of an illegal arrest, appellant did not identify what evidence he was referencing, nor did he specify whose arrest or how the arrest was illegal. Leak v. State, 2011 Ark. 353 (2011).

Impartial Jury.

Petitioner could not claim a prejudiced jury or juror where all peremptory challenges had not been used; thus, even if the petitioner were allowed to produce evidence that there was bias on the question of pretrial publicity, that evidence would be irrelevant. Orsini v. State, 287 Ark. 456, 701 S.W.2d 114 (1985).

Where, on voir dire, the jurors were asked hypothetical questions to ascertain whether the jurors could convict the defendant based upon circumstantial evidence, and the jurors never committed themselves to do so absolutely, the defendant was not deprived of his right to an impartial jury. Hobbs v. Lockhart, 791 F.2d 125 (8th Cir. 1986).

Trial judge was in a far better position than the appellate court to say whether the particular juror was affected by the telephone call. Holland v. State, 288 Ark. 435, 706 S.W.2d 375 (1986).

Trial court properly denied appellant postconviction relief because appellant did not identify any juror bias, even liberally construed, that clearly fell within the statutorily provided categories; in those specific instances of potential bias that appellant identified in the record on appeal, the prospective juror indicated that he or she believed the issue would not impair the juror's ability to serve fairly and impartially or the court excused that individual from service on the jury. Lee v. State, 2017 Ark. 337, 532 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Ineffective Assistance of Counsel.

Circuit court properly denied appellant's petition for postconviction relief because its finding on ineffective assistance was not clearly erroneous since counsel conferred with defendant and made a reasonable professional judgment not to seek a mistrial when a witness wore a shirt with the victim's picture on it; trial counsel had stated his reasons for objecting, stated his reasons for not seeking a jury instruction or requesting a mistrial, and conferred with defendant. Coakley v. State, 2021 Ark. 207, 633 S.W.3d 328 (2021).

Circuit court properly denied appellant's petition for postconviction relief because it properly determined that trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to pursue the defense of provocation as defendant abandoned that claim on appeal. Coakley v. State, 2021 Ark. 207, 633 S.W.3d 328 (2021).

Circuit court properly denied appellant's petition for postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object when a doctor referenced the victim's medical records, which included records prepared by other physicians, because the witness testified only about his own findings; because the doctor was present at trial, and it was his report that was admitted, counsel was not ineffective regarding his handling of the doctor as a witness. Coakley v. State, 2021 Ark. 207, 633 S.W.3d 328 (2021).

Circuit court properly denied appellant's petition for postconviction relief because defendant provided no factual substantiation to support his claim that trial counsel was ineffective for his failure to investigate or rebut the State's expert with an independent expert on the claim of medical negligence. Coakley v. State, 2021 Ark. 207, 633 S.W.3d 328 (2021).

—Burden of Proof.

Where defendant argues that counsel was ineffective during the sentencing phase of the trial because he did not present any mitigating evidence or argument in an attempt to persuade the jury to be lenient in sentencing defendant, defendant has the burden to identify with specificity what mitigating evidence counsel omitted during sentencing. Helton v. State, 325 Ark. 140, 924 S.W.2d 239 (1996).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief from two judgments entered in 2009 on a number of drug-related charges was proper because he was not credible in his testimony to establish that he would not have entered guilty pleas if counsel had not pressured him by requesting more money for trial. He failed to meet his burden of showing prejudice from any deficient performance on the part of trial counsel. Heard v. State, 2012 Ark. 67 (2012).

Defendant failed to meet the burden on an ineffective assistance of counsel claim because defendant failed to show that any type of juror misconduct occurred or that counsel should have been aware of the juror misconduct. Defendant's arguments based upon self-serving statements did not meet the burden of establishing an ineffective-assistance claim. Airsman v. State, 2015 Ark. 409, 473 S.W.3d 549

—Conflict of Interest.

Conflict of interest adversely affected lawyer's performance and entitled defendant to post-conviction relief. Ingle v. State, 294 Ark. 353, 742 S.W.2d 939 (1988).

Evidence was insufficient to suggest a conflict of interest among defendants or any actual or potential conflicts which could have been considered prejudicial. Malone v. State, 294 Ark. 376, 742 S.W.2d 945 (1988).

Prejudice is presumed only if the defendant demonstrates that counsel actively represented conflicting interests and that an actual conflict of interest adversely affected his lawyer's performance. Dumond v. State, 294 Ark. 379, 743 S.W.2d 779 (1988).

Where defendant was denied post-conviction relief after he was convicted as a principal and his co-defendant was convicted as an accomplice, defendant was not prejudiced by the joint representation because both were charged as principals and accomplices, and 3 of the 5 counts in the information pertained solely to defendant. Cook v. State, 361 Ark. 91, 204 S.W.3d 532 (2005).

Circuit court did not clearly err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief. Although appellant claimed that his attorney was laboring under a conflict of interest, appellant did not specify what conflict of interest existed, nor did he make any allegation as to how counsel's performance was affected. Leak v. State, 2011 Ark. 353 (2011).

Inmate did not show counsel provided ineffective assistance by failing to reveal counsel's marriage to the prosecutor's office manager because the inmate showed no actual prejudicial conflict. Norris v. State, 2013 Ark. 205, 427 S.W.3d 626 (2013).

To the extent that appellant argued on appeal he received ineffective assistance based on the failure to investigate a conflict of interest, that conclusory allegation was not contained in appellant's verified petition for postconviction relief or supported by any evidence presented at the hearing, and it would not be considered for the first time on appeal; counsel testified that he was aware that appellant claimed a conflict of interest and that he did not believe there was any conflict. Boatright v. State, 2014 Ark. 66 (2014).

To the extent appellant raised the argument on appeal that the deputy prosecuting attorney erred in failing to disqualify himself from the case, that contention was not a claim that was cognizable in a postconviction proceeding. Boatright v. State, 2014 Ark. 66 (2014).

Trial court properly denied postconviction relief on ineffective assistance of counsel claims where claims of judicial bias were not cognizable and petitioner failed to identify the specific acts or omissions that resulted from an alleged conflict of interest. Stover v. State, 2016 Ark. 167, 489 S.W.3d 674 (2016).

Trial court did not err by rejecting postconviction petitioner's claim that his trial counsel had a conflict of interest, which was not remedied by a valid waiver, based on a romantic relationship between the prosecutor and counsel's law firm partner; trial counsel testified that he did not feel that his law firm partner's relationship with the prosecutor gave him either a favorable or an unfavorable edge and the law firm partner was not involved in petitioner's defense. Green v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 130, 595 S.W.3d 423 (2020).

—Contact with Counsel.

Petitioner was not entitled to relief on the claim that his trial counsel was ineffective for not accepting his phone calls and visiting him where he did not explain how further contact with counsel would have strengthened his defense or otherwise prevented him from entering a guilty plea. Engstrom v. State, 2016 Ark. 45, 481 S.W.3d 435 (2016).

Trial court properly denied postconviction relief because its finding that petitioner failed to demonstrate ineffective assistance in preparing for trial was not clearly erroneous; the trial court accepted trial counsel's testimony that he spent an adequate amount of time with petitioner. Gould v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 418, 585 S.W.3d 182 (2019).

—Defendant's Statements.

Trial court properly denied appellant's petition for postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object and file a motion to suppress appellant's Miranda rights form and custodial statement; appellant admitted he committed the offenses, the eyewitness testimony confirmed that he committed the offenses, and appellant did not invoke his right to remain silent but simply requested that his statement not be recorded at that time, which did not rise to the level of an invocation of his right to remain silent. Gordon v. State, 2018 Ark. 73, 539 S.W.3d 586 (2018).

—Defenses.

Inmate's claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to pursue an actual-innocence defense lacked merit, because counsel pursued an actual-innocence defense by eliciting testimony to support the theory that the inmate was actually innocent, including testimony that he was set up by the victim and her husband and could not have committed the offense due to his sight, hearing, and back problems. Van Winkle v. State, 2016 Ark. 98, 486 S.W.3d 778 (2016).

—Direct Appeal.

Although this rule generally provides the procedure for postconviction relief due to ineffective counsel, such relief may be awarded a defendant on direct appeal in limited circumstances. Missildine v. State, 314 Ark. 500, 863 S.W.2d 813 (1993).

Where defendant raised an ineffective counsel issue by motion for new trial and a hearing was conducted on the issue, it was proper for defendant to argue this subject on direct appeal. Missildine v. State, 314 Ark. 500, 863 S.W.2d 813 (1993).

—Evidence, Failure to Object.

Defendant's petition for postconviction relief was properly denied because defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to or limit the testimony of a pediatrician who examined a child rape victim; the pediatrician did not testify that the pediatrician believed the victim had been sexually abused, and the pediatrician did not comment directly on the veracity of the victim. Keck v. State, 2012 Ark. 145 (2012).

While testimony concerning a fugitive warrant might have been objectionable, the issue in this postconviction case was whether the failure to object violated the standards established in Strickland; while the revocation of bond did cast aspersions on petitioner's character, that negative information was mitigated by evidence of the reinstatement of his release, and there was not a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional error, the result of the proceeding would have been different. Hayes v. State, 2014 Ark. 104, 431 S.W.3d 882 (2014).

Trial court properly denied appellant postconviction relief because he failed to offer a meritorious basis for an objection to the admission of shell casings collected at the crime scene and of photos of the house; there was testimony about the collection of the shells following the shooting and that the photos accurately depicted the scene at the time, and the shells were relevant because they corroborated the officer's testimony and aided the jury in understanding the testimony. Lee v. State, 2017 Ark. 337, 532 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Petitioner's claim that trial counsel should have objected to the admission of the methamphetamine because of weight discrepancies did not provide a basis for postconviction relief; the State introduced evidence that the discrepancies could be explained, and there was therefore no marked difference in the description of the substance by the police officer and the chemist to establish a significant possibility that the evidence tested was not the same as that seized. Lane v. State, 2019 Ark. 5, 564 S.W.3d 524 (2019).

Postconviction relief was properly denied as counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to the admission of photographs as they were not particularly gruesome or overtly inflammatory and were clearly relevant. Reynolds v. State, 2020 Ark. 174, 599 S.W.3d 120 (2020).

Postconviction relief was properly denied as counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to the testimony of an accomplice on the grounds that it was uncorroborated where the testimony was corroborated by the physical evidence recovered from petitioner's home, which included the cables and the padlocks described by the accomplice and the victim as being used to restrain the victim, as well as the DNA evidence, which confirmed the presence of the victim's blood in the room where the assault took place, and without considering the accomplice's testimony, the victim's testimony and the evidence recovered from petitioner's home were sufficient to show that petitioner committed the crimes. Reynolds v. State, 2020 Ark. 174, 599 S.W.3d 120 (2020).

Failure to object to certain testimony fell within the realm of trial strategy and postconviction petition failed. Green v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 130, 595 S.W.3d 423 (2020).

Although defendant argued that his trial counsel provided ineffective assistance by failing to object to evidence of snuff sex and bondage sex, given the great extent to which counsel successfully kept defendant's comments about snuff sex and bondage sex from the jury, counsel did not perform deficiently for failing to object to a few mentions of snuff sex and bondage sex. Also, there was no prejudice given the totality of the evidence that was before the jury. Shreck v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 354, 605 S.W.3d 278 (2020).

—Evidence, Failure to Present.

Appellant claimed the trial court erred in denying his petition for ineffective assistance under this rule because counsel was ineffective in failing to present evidence of appellant's injuries, but the jury was able to hear testimony about his injuries, and testimony given at the hearing relating only to his injuries would have been cumulative of other testimony; a doctor appellant claimed counsel should have called was not appellant's doctor and based his report only on the records and information given by counsel, and thus the court agreed with the finding that testimony of the doctor and another witness would not have refuted what the officers involved in the chase saw appellant do, and prejudice was not shown. Taylor v. State, 2013 Ark. 146, 427 S.W.3d 29 (2013).

Where appellant was found guilty by a jury of the rape of two minor sisters, he was not entitled to postconviction relief under this rule based on his claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Appellant did not provide any substantiation for his conclusory claim that counsel could have found evidence from his former employers that he had worked with children without a problem; the former employers' experience with appellant could not have overcome the overwhelming evidence from the witnesses who testified. Webb v. State, 2013 Ark. 153 (2013).

Circuit court properly denied appellant's petition for postconviction relief concerning a case that had involved a justification defense because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to introduce medical evidence concerning the injuries of one of the persons involved in the altercation; counsel believed the records "downplayed" the person's injuries, and his decision to offer evidence of the person's injuries through a responding officer's testimony was not objectively unreasonable. Nelson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 583, 566 S.W.3d 530 (2018).

Postconviction relief denied because defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to present evidence that defendant's flat and unemotional demeanor was due to prescription medications he was taking; inter alia, defendant's contentions lacked factual substantiation because he provided no documentation regarding when he may have been prescribed the medications or that he obtained the medications from a pharmacy. Suchey v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 380, 581 S.W.3d 519 (2019).

Trial court properly denied postconviction relief because petitioner failed to offer factual substantiation to overcome the presumption that counsel's failure to put forth any of the purported evidence was an error on counsel's part that prejudiced him; petitioner's allegations wholly lacked any demonstration that he was prejudiced in any way. Dennis v. State, 2020 Ark. 28, 592 S.W.3d 646 (2020).

Postconviction petitioner failed to demonstrate that his counsel was ineffective for failing to secure admissible relevant evidence related to the child victim's prior sexual conduct because petitioner did not admit any documents into evidence at the postconviction hearing, address how the documents would be authenticated, explain how the documents would be admissible, or demonstrate how the contents of the report would be admissible. Joyner v. State, 2021 Ark. 78, 621 S.W.3d 124 (2021).

—Experts.

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was appropriate because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, counsel was not ineffective for failing to consult with or call an expert witness to testify because such testimony would not have been sufficient to raise the probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different. Hayes v. State, 2011 Ark. 327, 383 S.W.3d 824 (2011).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to investigate and secure the services of a gynecology expert and present that expert testimony at trial; the State provided expert testimony that evidence of sexual trauma was usually not present on a gynecology exam, and petitioner's hypothetical expert-swearing matches did not support a reasonable probability that the trial outcome would have been different or that counsel's professional judgment was unreasonable. Burnside v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 691, 537 S.W.3d 796 (2017).

Defendant was not entitled to postconviction relief because defendant did not show prejudice resulting from trial counsel's decision not to obtain an expert medical witness through the Arkansas Public Defender Commission; testimony that supported the defense's theory that the infant's head injury was accidental was brought out during cross-examination of the State's medical witnesses and calling a defense expert witness would have opened the door to evidence of the infant's prior injuries. Suchey v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 380, 581 S.W.3d 519 (2019).

Petitioner's conclusory Daubert argument failed and he was not entitled to post-conviction relief based on ineffective assistance of counsel. Lacefield v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 534 (2020).

—Factors Considered.

The trial court's order granting postconviction relief based upon ineffective assistance of counsel was erroneous because it failed to set forth what, if any, additional information or defenses would have been discovered but for one or any combination of counsel's deficiencies and failed to find that, with the benefit of this additional information, there existed a reasonable probability defendant would have insisted on going to trial rather than pleading guilty. State v. Herred, 332 Ark. 241, 964 S.W.2d 391 (1998).

Because defendant failed to preserve two of defendant's claims regarding counsel's alleged ineffectiveness, because counsel's decision to inform the jury about defendant's pending drug charges was one of trial strategy, and because defendant instructed counsel not to introduce any evidence in mitigation at sentencing, defendant failed to show that counsel was ineffective; therefore, defendant's petition for postconviction relief under this rule was properly denied. Sykes v. State, 2011 Ark. 412 (2011).

—Fair Trial.

Circuit court properly denied the petition for postconviction relief or an evidentiary hearing on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to move for a mistrial, change of venue, or other remedial measures based on the presence of an anti-child abuse motorcycle gang that showed up for petitioner's trial and remained directly outside the courtroom during the entire two-day trial. Petitioner simply stated a conclusory claim that the motorcycle gang's presence outside the courthouse created an atmosphere of prejudice, and he did not isolate a point in time when his trial counsel should have made a mistrial or change-of-venue motion or on what meritorious basis the motion could have been made. Burnside v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 691, 537 S.W.3d 796 (2017).

—Hearsay.

Hearsay testimony regarding postconviction petitioner's drug use was merely cumulative as petitioner had himself testified that he used drugs during the time of the alleged rapes; therefore, the circuit court did not clearly err in rejecting petitioner's claim that his counsel was ineffective in failing to object to the testimony. Smith v. State, 2016 Ark. 417, 504 S.W.3d 595 (2016).

Circuit court's rejection of petitioner's postconviction claim that counsel was ineffective for failing to object to hearsay testimony from various witnesses concerning statements the child victims had made to them was not clearly erroneous where the circuit court concluded that the elicited testimony fell within a hearsay exception, was cumulative, and was not so prejudicial as to undermine confidence in the verdict, or was trial counsel's deliberate trial strategy. Smith v. State, 2016 Ark. 417, 504 S.W.3d 595 (2016).

Circuit court's rejection of petitioner's postconviction claim that counsel was ineffective for failing to object to hearsay testimony was not clearly erroneous where a sexual-assault nurse's hearsay testimony regarding the victims' identification of the defendant as the perpetrator fell within the medical-treatment exception of Ark. R. Evid. 803(4). Smith v. State, 2016 Ark. 417, 504 S.W.3d 595 (2016).

As the inmate failed to demonstrate that an objection on the basis of hearsay would have been successful, the inmate failed to show that counsel was ineffective for failing to make such an objection; the inmate failed to indicate which hearsay statements would have been deemed inadmissible had an objection been made. Hartman v. State, 2017 Ark. 7, 508 S.W.3d 28 (2017).

Trial court properly denied appellant postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of a witness's testimony; appellant did not identify specific statements made to which counsel could have made a successful objection on the basis of hearsay. Lee v. State, 2017 Ark. 337, 532 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition based on a claim of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel where the declarant's status as a minor rape victim who was undergoing the continued stress of another encounter with the perpetrator was appropriate to consider in finding her statement to be an excited utterance; thus, raising the issue on direct appeal would not have resulted in an appellate court finding reversible error. Burnside v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 691, 537 S.W.3d 796 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to object to a minor's testimony on hearsay grounds; petitioner did not show how keeping out the hearsay statement would have resulted in a different trial outcome, given the minor victim's testimony detailing the rapes. Burnside v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 691, 537 S.W.3d 796 (2017).

Postconviction petitioner's claims that counsel should have made an objection to the admission of his statement to police on hearsay grounds provided no basis for postconviction relief as the statement constituted an admission of a party opponent. Lane v. State, 2019 Ark. 5, 564 S.W.3d 524 (2019).

—Identification of Defendant.

Trial court properly denied postconviction relief because there was no clear error in the trial court's finding that trial counsel was not deficient by electing to make an oral motion to exclude the in-court identification testimony as opposed to filing a written motion, as that fell within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance. Gould v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 418, 585 S.W.3d 182 (2019).

Trial court properly denied postconviction relief because it did not clearly err in finding that trial counsel's decision to not move to suppress a witness's photo-lineup identification did not constitute deficient performance; the photo-lineup procedure did not make it all but inevitable the witness would identify petitioner as she did so on her own accord and confirmed that he was the man who robbed her. Gould v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 418, 585 S.W.3d 182 (2019).

—Illustrative Cases.

Circuit court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because counsel's failure to offer evidence of the deceased's violent character did not fall below an objective standard of reasonableness; appellant did not know the deceased, and thus, the testimony was not admissible. Sims v. State, 2015 Ark. 363, 472 S.W.3d 107 (2015).

Circuit court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because counsel was not remiss for failing to offer character evidence when the prosecution did not open the door. Sims v. State, 2015 Ark. 363, 472 S.W.3d 107 (2015).

Circuit court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because counsel was not ineffective for failing to confront the medical examiner; trial counsel elicited from the medical examiner on cross-examination that he did not know where appellant was positioned when he stabbed the victim and that both the State's theory and the defense's theory were possible. Sims v. State, 2015 Ark. 363, 472 S.W.3d 107 (2015).

Defendant was not entitled to postconviction relief on claims of ineffective assistance of counsel because defendant did not establish (1) that defendant was prejudiced by any error in pretrial counsel not contesting jury instructions; (2) that pretrial counsel should have filed a motion to suppress the admission of copies of forged checks and that appellate counsel should have raised the issue of the admissibility of the checks on appeal; and (3) that pretrial counsel was ineffective for not contacting a witness for the defense. Williams v. State, 2015 Ark. 466, 476 S.W.3d 800 (2015).

Trial court properly denied postconviction relief on ineffective assistance of counsel claims where even if the usable amount issue had been raised concerning the amount of methamphetamine, petitioner was not prejudiced as the amount in his possession was sufficient to sustain his conviction. Stover v. State, 2016 Ark. 167, 489 S.W.3d 674 (2016).

Counsel's failure to object to the State's amendment of the criminal charges was not ineffective assistance of counsel where petitioner failed to explain how the amended charge of simultaneous possession of drugs and weapons impeded the development of his defense or prejudiced the outcome of his trial. Stover v. State, 2016 Ark. 167, 489 S.W.3d 674 (2016).

Counsel was not ineffective for failing to challenge the underlying probable cause for an arrest warrant issued by Washington County, which was executed by Benton County police officers, where the allegation that the Washington County charges were dismissed did not, without more, establish that the warrant served by the Benton County officers lacked probable cause or was otherwise invalid, and petitioner's conclusory allegations did not establish a meritorious ground to suppress the evidence discovered in the search incident to the arrest. Stover v. State, 2016 Ark. 167, 489 S.W.3d 674 (2016).

Counsel was not ineffective for failing to preserve the prison-identification bracelet issue for appeal where briefly appearing before potential jurors wearing a prison-identification bracelet did not constitute being forced to stand trial in prison garb, petitioner did not establish that any member of the jury panel noticed the bracelet or its significance in the short time that he was wearing it in their presence, and even if a few jurors spotted the bracelet, the sighting was brief and inadvertent. Stover v. State, 2016 Ark. 167, 489 S.W.3d 674 (2016).

Petitioner's counsel was not ineffective in failing to raise pretextual arrest issues where a police officer's allegedly perjured testimony was only relevant to the issue of probable cause for the arrest, which was rendered moot when the arrest was found not pretextual. Echols v. State, 2016 Ark. 225, 492 S.W.3d 846 (2016).

Postconviction relief premised on counsel's failure to challenge the prosecutor's reliance on case law was denied as that case law outlined when pretext for an arrest could be found. Echols v. State, 2016 Ark. 225, 492 S.W.3d 846 (2016).

Petitioner's counsel was not ineffective in failing to discredit the affidavit supporting the search warrant where an argument related to personal observation of contraband was frivolous, the affidavit set forth a sufficient time frame, and the information contained therein was reliable. Echols v. State, 2016 Ark. 225, 492 S.W.3d 846 (2016).

Circuit court did not clearly err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance by failing to obtain a previously undisclosed sixth 911 call; counsel simply did not know of the existence of the call, and thus, counsel would have had no way of knowing that there was a sixth 911 call to discuss or request. Doty v. State, 2016 Ark. 341, 500 S.W.3d 727 (2016).

Circuit court did not clearly err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because trial counsel's advice to a witness that he avoid remarks was a trial strategy supported by reasonable professional judgment; counsel feared that the witness's remarks would make him appear to have been the aggressor, which would undercut the defense's theory that appellant was justified in shooting the victim. Doty v. State, 2016 Ark. 341, 500 S.W.3d 727 (2016).

Circuit court did not clearly err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because trial counsel's decision not to use photographs could not be described as unreasonable; trial counsel stated that the primary purpose of the photographs was to impeach a witness and that when the witness was ultimately not called to testify, counsel did not see the point of introducing those pictures, and the photographs did not establish where the gunfire originated. Doty v. State, 2016 Ark. 341, 500 S.W.3d 727 (2016).

Trial court did not clearly err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because appellant failed to allege in his petition or provide sufficient argument on appeal establishing that an objection was made during the prosecutor's closing remarks to the prosecutor's comments during closing argument, that the trial court erred in its ruling on the issue, and that an argument concerning the issue could have been raised on appeal to merit appellate relief. Wooten v. State, 2016 Ark. 376, 502 S.W.3d 503 (2016).

Trial court did not clearly err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because appellant did not state sufficient facts concerning appellate counsel's failure to raise allegations of prosecutorial misconduct on direct appeal; appellant failed to describe in his petition or appellate argument the content or context of the prosecutor's comments or establish that meritorious objections were made at trial such that the issue was properly preserved. Wooten v. State, 2016 Ark. 376, 502 S.W.3d 503 (2016).

Trial court did not clearly err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because appellant did not state sufficient facts concerning appellate counsel's failure to raise allegations of prosecutorial misconduct on direct appeal; appellant failed to describe in his petition or appellate argument the content or context of the prosecutor's comments or establish that meritorious objections were made at trial such that the issue was properly preserved. Wooten v. State, 2016 Ark. 376, 502 S.W.3d 503 (2016).

Postconviction petitioner's claim failed that counsel was ineffective for failing to object to a sleeping juror, as the circuit court had found counsel's testimony concerning whether he was informed that a juror was sleeping more credible. Smith v. State, 2016 Ark. 417, 504 S.W.3d 595 (2016).

Circuit court properly denied defendant's petition for postconviction relief because the victim-impact testimony requesting life without parole for his murder conviction was not prejudicial as defendant received a 40-year sentence, and the circuit court had previously ruled on additional ineffective assistance of counsel claims in its order denying defendant's motion for new trial. Liggins v. State, 2016 Ark. 432, 505 S.W.3d 191 (2016).

Trial court did not err in denying postconviction relief on the ground of ineffective assistance of counsel because even if counsel was late in objecting to appellant appearing in front of the jury in restraints, appellant did not demonstrate prejudice; appellant refused to change into civilian clothing, and he did not show that had counsel timely objected, the objection would have been any more successful than the motion concerning the jail clothing or the motion for mistrial. Flemons v. State, 2016 Ark. 460, 505 S.W.3d 196 (2016).

Trial court erred in finding that trial counsel's decision not to introduce evidence that appellee's parents had been appointed as his permanent guardians constituted ineffective assistance where introduction of such evidence would have all but required the State to admit a more damaging, second evaluation. State v. Thompson, 2017 Ark. 50, 510 S.W.3d 775, cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 114, 199 L. Ed. 2d 31 (2017).

Trial court clearly erred in finding that appellee was prejudiced by counsel's failure to call additional witnesses during the penalty phase given that an imprisonment term was required following his rape conviction. State v. Thompson, 2017 Ark. 50, 510 S.W.3d 775, cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 114, 199 L. Ed. 2d 31 (2017).

Defendant failed to show that counsel was ineffective for (1) failing to elicit testimony from an expert witness regarding defendant's lack of capacity to form intent; (2) failing to pursue a self-defense theory of the case; and (3) failing to present adequate mitigation evidence at sentencing. Edwards v. State, 2017 Ark. 207, 521 S.W.3d 107 (2017).

Trial court properly denied appellant postconviction relief for trial counsel's failure to make an appropriate motion for directed verdict; appellant failed to show that the motion, even if properly preserved for appeal, would have been meritorious. It was not necessary for the State to demonstrate he aimed the gun at the individual occupants of the house or intended to shoot them when he fired in the direction of the house. Lee v. State, 2017 Ark. 337, 532 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Denying postconviction relief on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to move for a mistrial after the prosecutor made personal attacks on her counsel during closing remarks was not clearly erroneous where petitioner had not shown the prosecutor's comments warranted a mistrial. Blackwell v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 248, 520 S.W.3d 294 (2017).

Denying postconviction relief on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to appeal the State's acquisition of her sealed medical and psychological records filed in a separate, civil case was not clearly erroneous; petitioner had cited no authority showing that the State's acquisition of her records would have resulted in a reversible error. Blackwell v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 248, 520 S.W.3d 294 (2017).

Denying postconviction relief on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to move to dismiss one of the charges on double jeopardy grounds was not clearly erroneous; felony negligent homicide requires the element of intoxication, which is not included in the definition of manslaughter. Blackwell v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 248, 520 S.W.3d 294 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of photographs of the outbuilding where the victim had been raped; trial counsel did move for suppression of certain evidence, and, in any event, the photographs corroborated the testimony of both the victim and petitioner's girlfriend. McCulley v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 313, 525 S.W.3d 10 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of a drug-test report demonstrating that the 16-year-old rape victim tested positive for amphetamines; the alleged deficiencies of the drug-test results went to the weight of the evidence rather than its admissibility, and the exclusion of the drug test would not have rendered the guilty verdict unreliable. McCulley v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 313, 525 S.W.3d 10 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner post-conviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to testimony regarding the victim's incapacity due to ingesting amphetamines; the testimony, based on personal observations, met the requirements of admissibility under the Arkansas Rules of Evidence, and petitioner failed to allege sufficient facts demonstrating that an objection to the testimony would have been meritorious. McCulley v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 313, 525 S.W.3d 10 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner post-conviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the description by the prosecutor and witnesses of the out-building where the victim was raped as a "sex room"; an officer testified that when he entered the room pursuant to a search warrant he observed pornography playing continuously and discovered several pornographic videotapes as well as handcuffs, sex toys, rope, and lubricants. McCulley v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 313, 525 S.W.3d 10 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner post-conviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to testimony setting forth the titles of various pornographic videos seized in a search; evidence of the existence of pornographic videos corroborated the testimony of both the victim and petitioner and was therefore relevant and admissible. McCulley v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 313, 525 S.W.3d 10 (2017).

Post-conviction relief was properly denied, as trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to present character testimony that might have opened the door to excluded Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) evidence, or for only meeting with the inmate three times before trial, as the inmate failed to show what information would have been discovered that would have changed the outcome of the trial. Rose v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 355, 526 S.W.3d 11 (2017).

Circuit court did not err by rejecting petitioner's claim that his trial counsel was deficient for failing to file a motion for new trial for juror misconduct because petitioner failed to show any bias or misconduct; petitioner never presented any evidence at the sentencing hearing or in his postconviction proceedings to support his allegations. Harris v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 381, 526 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Petitioner's claim that the trial court erred by determining that he was not prejudiced by trial counsel's failure to introduce chatroom metadata was noncognizable because petitioner failed to raise the issue on direct appeal. Bishop v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 435 (2017).

Postconviction appellant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to call him as a witness; if appellant had been called, he would have been subject to cross-examination regarding his prior statement to police, and his testimony would not have negated whether there was sufficient evidence to deny a motion for a directed verdict. Todd v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 587, 535 S.W.3d 638 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner post-conviction relief because petitioner's contention that counsel lacked a coherent defense strategy and "basically did nothing" failed; counsel presented an opening statement, subjected the State's witnesses to cross-examination, offered a motion for directed verdict, attempted to influence the trial court to instruct the jury on a lesser-included offense, offered closing statements to the jury, and presented testimony on petitioner's behalf in the sentencing phase of the trial. Mercouri v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 74, 540 S.W.3d 328 (2018).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner post-conviction relief because petitioner's speculative allegations were not sufficient to establish a claim for relief under a theory that appellate counsel was ineffective on direct appeal; petitioner failed to show how he could have prevailed with an issue on appeal. Mercouri v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 74, 540 S.W.3d 328 (2018).

Not allowing petitioner to use the postconviction-hearing process to develop phone record evidence was not error where the circuit court had permitted petitioner to expand his petition and indicated that it would have examined any evidence submitted, but he failed to submit any phone record evidence. England v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 137, 543 S.W.3d 553 (2018).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claim failed where petitioner failed to show that the outcome would have been different if his attorney had presented more testimony about depression as a possible side effect of his prescription medications. England v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 137, 543 S.W.3d 553 (2018).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on the failure to sever allegations of the step-daughter victims under Ark. R. Crim. P. 22.2 failed where there was extensive, intertwined testimony from the stepdaughters about petitioner's relations with both girls, who lived in the same house with petitioner, and petitioner's action in making one stepdaughter stand guard while he had sex with the other stepdaughter in the same room constituted a single scheme or plan. England v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 137, 543 S.W.3d 553 (2018).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on the failure to object and request a mistrial due to the prosecutor's comment failed where the remarks made by the prosecutor during her rebuttal were directly connected to both the testimony elicited by trial counsel and trial counsel's closing argument. England v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 137, 543 S.W.3d 553 (2018).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claim failed where counsel asked a typical "yes/no" cross-examination question within the scope of a witness's direct testimony, and trial counsel did not ask the witness about any particular person's opinion of petitioner, but rather, the witness's response was a spontaneous comment. England v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 137, 543 S.W.3d 553 (2018).

Circuit court properly denied appellant's petition for postconviction relief concerning a case that had involved a justification defense because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to elicit evidence of a victim's prior acts of domestic violence; counsel tried to elicit testimony concerning the victim's prior acts of domestic violence but the court sustained the State's objection. Nelson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 583, 566 S.W.3d 530 (2018).

Inmate's petition for postconviction relief was properly denied because counsel was not ineffective for failing to move for a directed verdict on the forcible compulsion count of rape when substantial evidence was presented to the jury on the rape charges, including evidence that defendant trapped the minor victim in his van and vaginally and anally raped her, and such a motion would not have been granted. Sanders v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 604, 567 S.W.3d 76 (2018).

Petitioner was not entitled to postconviction relief on a claim that trial counsel should have obtained a ruling under Ark. R. Evid. 403 concerning his statement to police; although the jury would have been required to assess the credibility of the two conflicting statements, the codefendant's testimony did not make petitioner's statement unduly confusing and its admission was not unfairly prejudicial. Lane v. State, 2019 Ark. 5, 564 S.W.3d 524 (2019).

Petitioner was not entitled to postconviction relief on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to move for a directed verdict on the basis that there was no evidence that he knew of the presence of the gun and the other contraband because the motion could not have been successful as a matter of law. Even though the gun was wrapped in a bandanna, the gun and contraband were found in the bed where petitioner and codefendant had been and petitioner's suspicious behavior in making a statement attempting to absolve his codefendant of responsibility linked him to the contraband; thus, there was some evidence of knowledge to support presenting the question to the jury. Lane v. State, 2019 Ark. 5, 564 S.W.3d 524 (2019).

Petitioner's claim that trial counsel incorrectly advised him that, because the officers had committed a knock-and-announce violation in conducting the search, the evidence would be suppressed did not provide a basis for postconviction relief; petitioner knew well before trial that, despite counsel's arguments on the law, the trial court had ruled adversely on his motion to suppress, and counsel testified that given petitioner's state of mind, he would not have accepted a plea deal. Lane v. State, 2019 Ark. 5, 564 S.W.3d 524 (2019).

Order denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief was affirmed as counsel was not ineffective because any alleged lack of preparation on counsel's part had no effect on whether or not codefendant testified as he invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination and could not be forced to testify; and counsel attempted to cross-examine a detective regarding other suspects that were interviewed, but the trial court sustained the State's objection as evidence that only created an inference or conjecture as to another's guilt was inadmissible. Williams v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 58, 569 S.W.3d 361 (2019).

Postconviction relief was properly denied as counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a directed verdict motion as to the evidence supporting intent where the victim suffered severe injuries as a result of the assault, and a challenge to the evidence that petitioner was under the influence of drugs would have been futile. Reynolds v. State, 2020 Ark. 174, 599 S.W.3d 120 (2020).

Postconviction relief was properly denied as any deficiency in counsel's failure to object to the victim's initial testimony about her medical diagnoses was not so prejudicial as to change the trial's outcome as testimony and other evidence described her injuries. Reynolds v. State, 2020 Ark. 174, 599 S.W.3d 120 (2020).

Postconviction relief was properly denied as counsel was not ineffective in failing to file a motion for directed verdict on the Class Y kidnapping charge where the victim remained under petitioner's control. Reynolds v. State, 2020 Ark. 174, 599 S.W.3d 120 (2020).

Postconviction petitioner failed to demonstrate that trial counsel's performance fell below an objective standard of reasonableness due to counsel's failure to timely move for a mistrial for a discovery violation because petitioner and the State retained the same report and information, neither party was aware of the testimony that petitioner alleged was new, a forensic DNA examiner's testimony remained the same, and other evidence supported the DNA match to the victim, including the victim's own testimony. Joyner v. State, 2021 Ark. 78, 621 S.W.3d 124 (2021).

—In General.

A charge of inadequate representation can prevail only if the acts or omissions of an accused's attorney result in making the proceedings a farce and a mockery of justice, shocking the conscience of the court, or the representation is so patently lacking in competence or adequacy that it becomes the duty of the court to be aware of and correct it. Davis v. State, 267 Ark. 507, 592 S.W.2d 118 (1980); Bell v. State, 269 Ark. 85, 598 S.W.2d 738 (1980); Neal v. State, 270 Ark. 442, 605 S.W.2d 421 (1980); Fretwell v. State, 299 Ark. 305, 772 S.W.2d 334 (1989).

Petitioner has burden of establishing ineffective assistance of counsel. Davis v. State, 267 Ark. 507, 592 S.W.2d 118 (1980); Campbell v. State, 283 Ark. 12, 670 S.W.2d 800 (1984); Jones v. State, 288 Ark. 375, 705 S.W.2d 874 (1986); Troutt v. State, 292 Ark. 192, 729 S.W.2d 139 (1987); Owens v. State, 292 Ark. 292, 729 S.W.2d 419 (1987); Muck v. State, 292 Ark. 310, 730 S.W.2d 214 (1987); Branham v. State, 292 Ark. 355, 730 S.W.2d 226 (1987); Hudson v. State, 294 Ark. 148, 741 S.W.2d 253 (1987); Pettit v. State, 296 Ark. 423, 758 S.W.2d 1 (1988); Cox v. State, 299 Ark. 312, 772 S.W.2d 336 (1989); Skeels v. State, 300 Ark. 285, 779 S.W.2d 146 (1989).

Inadequate representation by counsel is a ground for post-conviction relief where there has not been an adequate opportunity to raise the question prior to direct appeal. Neal v. State, 270 Ark. 442, 605 S.W.2d 421 (1980).

Defendant's failure to move for dismissal on speedy trial grounds did not waive his right to effective assistance of counsel, and he could raise the claim that failure to move for dismissal constituted ineffective assistance of counsel in a post-conviction relief petition under this rule, although the defendant had to prove prejudice from the claimed error. Clark v. State, 274 Ark. 81, 621 S.W.2d 857 (1981).

The proper remedy to challenge the adequacy of an attorney's representation is a petition for post-conviction relief under this rule. Carrier v. State, 278 Ark. 542, 647 S.W.2d 449 (1983).

To prevail on an allegation of ineffective assistance of counsel a petitioner must show there is a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different. Lascano v. State, 282 Ark. 501, 669 S.W.2d 453 (1984); Neff v. State, 287 Ark. 88, 696 S.W.2d 736 (1985); Hicks v. State, 289 Ark. 83, 709 S.W.2d 87 (1986); Rode v. Lockhart, 675 F. Supp. 491 (E.D. Ark. 1987); McDaniel v. State, 291 Ark. 596, 726 S.W.2d 679 (1987); Philyaw v. State, 292 Ark. 24, 728 S.W.2d 150 (1987), overruled, Thomas v. State, 322 Ark. 670, 911 S.W.2d 259 (1995); Muck v. State, 292 Ark. 310, 730 S.W.2d 214 (1987); Wilburn v. State, 292 Ark. 416, 730 S.W.2d 491 (1987); Halfacre v. State, 292 Ark. 331, 731 S.W.2d 179 (1987); Dumond v. State, 294 Ark. 379, 743 S.W.2d 779 (1988); Furr v. State, 297 Ark. 233, 761 S.W.2d 160 (1988); White v. State, 301 Ark. 74, 781 S.W.2d 478 (1989); Vick v. State, 301 Ark. 296, 783 S.W.2d 365 (1990).

Petitioner must show that assistance or advice he received was not within the range of competence demanded from attorneys in criminal cases. Campbell v. State, 283 Ark. 12, 670 S.W.2d 800 (1984); Haywood v. State, 288 Ark. 266, 704 S.W.2d 168 (1986); Jones v. State, 288 Ark. 375, 705 S.W.2d 874 (1986); McDaniel v. State, 291 Ark. 596, 726 S.W.2d 679 (1987); Muck v. State, 292 Ark. 310, 730 S.W.2d 214 (1987).

Petitioner must show actual prejudice arising from counsel's conduct. Cavin v. State, 284 Ark. 363, 681 S.W.2d 913 (1984); Isom v. State, 284 Ark. 426, 682 S.W.2d 755 (1985); Brents v. State, 285 Ark. 199, 686 S.W.2d 395 (1985).

Neither mere error nor bad advice on the part of counsel is tantamount to a denial of a fair trial. Isom v. State, 284 Ark. 426, 682 S.W.2d 755 (1985).

The Arkansas Supreme Court does not recognize cumulative error in allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel. Isom v. State, 284 Ark. 426, 682 S.W.2d 755 (1985); Parks v. State, 301 Ark. 513, 785 S.W.2d 213 (1990); Jones v. State, 308 Ark. 555, 826 S.W.2d 233 (1992).

Counsel has the duty to advise his client of an offer of a negotiated plea, but before an appellate court will order a post-conviction hearing, the petitioner must allege that he would have accepted the plea had he known of it. Elmore v. State, 285 Ark. 42, 684 S.W.2d 263 (1985).

To prove ineffective assistance of counsel, the petitioner must show that counsel's performance was deficient in that counsel made errors so serious that he was not functioning as the counsel guaranteed by the U.S. Const. Amend. 6. In addition, the deficient performance must have resulted in prejudice so pronounced as to have deprived the petitioner of a fair trial whose outcome cannot be relied on as just. Orsini v. State, 287 Ark. 456, 701 S.W.2d 114 (1985); Huff v. State, 289 Ark. 404, 711 S.W.2d 801 (1986); Robinson v. State, 295 Ark. 693, 751 S.W.2d 335 (1988); Pettit v. State, 296 Ark. 423, 758 S.W.2d 1 (1988); White v. State, 301 Ark. 74, 781 S.W.2d 478 (1989); Wainwright v. State, 307 Ark. 569, 823 S.W.2d 449 (1992); Jones v. State, 308 Ark. 555, 826 S.W.2d 233 (1992).

Where, after the defendant's conviction, his attorney erroneously advised him that if he succeeded on appeal and was granted a new trial the defendant would again be faced with the possibility of the death penalty, and as a result the defendant did not file a direct appeal, the defendant lost his direct appeal due to his attorney's unprofessional error and his constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel was violated, even though the defendant was afforded post-conviction proceedings. Bell v. Lockhart, 795 F.2d 655 (8th Cir. 1986).

Petitioner must show such prejudice resulting from counsel's errors that there is a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's errors, he would not have pleaded guilty. Haywood v. State, 288 Ark. 266, 704 S.W.2d 168 (1986); Garmon v. State, 290 Ark. 371, 719 S.W.2d 699 (1986); Pettit v. State, 296 Ark. 423, 758 S.W.2d 1 (1988).

The failure of counsel to perfect an appeal when the defendant desires an appeal amounts to a denial of defendant's right to effective assistance of counsel. Robbins v. State, 288 Ark. 311, 705 S.W.2d 6 (1986); Chandler v. State, 297 Ark. 432, 762 S.W.2d 796 (1989).

Defendant must show that counsel's representation fell below an objective standard of reasonableness. Rode v. Lockhart, 675 F. Supp. 491 (E.D. Ark. 1987); Philyaw v. State, 292 Ark. 24, 728 S.W.2d 150 (1987), overruled, Thomas v. State, 322 Ark. 670, 911 S.W.2d 259 (1995); Muck v. State, 292 Ark. 310, 730 S.W.2d 214 (1987); Halfacre v. State, 292 Ark. 331, 731 S.W.2d 179 (1987); Dumond v. State, 294 Ark. 379, 743 S.W.2d 779 (1988); Furr v. State, 297 Ark. 233, 761 S.W.2d 160 (1988).

If counsel elects to omit an issue which could have been raised on appeal and the convicted defendant later claims under this rule that attorney was ineffective for failing to argue it, petitioner must demonstrate that counsel's decision amounted to an error of such magnitude that it rendered counsel's performance constitutionally deficient. Troutt v. State, 292 Ark. 192, 729 S.W.2d 139 (1987).

Defense counsel is not required to advise about post-sentencing alternatives in order to render effective assistance to a defendant facing criminal charges. Branham v. State, 292 Ark. 355, 730 S.W.2d 226 (1987).

Counsel cannot be found ineffective for not raising on appeal arguments which were not raised below. Malone v. State, 294 Ark. 127, 741 S.W.2d 246 (1987).

Appellant's counsel is presumed competent, and the appellant has the burden of overcoming that presumption. Owens v. State, 296 Ark. 322, 756 S.W.2d 899 (1988).

The mere fact that defendant's court-appointed attorney was sitting as a special municipal judge on the same day on some unrelated charges would not render him ineffective. Morgan v. State, 296 Ark. 370, 757 S.W.2d 530 (1988).

Where precise argument had already been rejected by the appellate court, the petitioner's attorney cannot be said to have been ineffective for failing to pursue the argument. O'Rourke v. State, 298 Ark. 144, 765 S.W.2d 916 (1989).

There is a presumption that counsel is competent, and the burden is on petitioner who must show more than mere errors, omissions, mistakes, improvident strategy or bad tactics. White v. State, 301 Ark. 74, 781 S.W.2d 478 (1989).

The trial court properly denied defendants' petition for relief pursuant to this rule because defendants failed to prove that counsel's conduct fell below the standard of reasonably effective assistance or to establish that they were prejudiced. Cranford v. State, 303 Ark. 393, 797 S.W.2d 442 (1990).

There is a strong presumption that counsel's conduct falls within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance, and the petitioner has the burden of overcoming that presumption by identifying the acts and omissions of counsel which when viewed from counsel's perspective at the time of trial could not have been the result of reasonable professional judgment and had a prejudicial effect on the actual outcome of the proceeding. Wainwright v. State, 307 Ark. 569, 823 S.W.2d 449 (1992).

The allegation that counsel could have shown that the statements made by defendant to the police were inadmissible had he called a specific witness to testify that the statements were coerced, was too weak to overcome the presumption that counsel was effective. Wainwright v. State, 307 Ark. 569, 823 S.W.2d 449 (1992).

A petitioner who claims that counsel was ineffective for not calling him to testify must state specifically what the content of his testimony would have been and demonstrate that his failure to testify resulted in actual prejudice to his defense. Wainwright v. State, 307 Ark. 569, 823 S.W.2d 449 (1992).

If counsel omits an issue which could have been raised on appeal, and the convicted defendant later claims under this rule that the attorney was ineffective for failing to argue it, the petitioner must demonstrate that counsel's action amounted to an error of such magnitude that it rendered counsel's performance constitutionally deficient. Wainwright v. State, 307 Ark. 569, 823 S.W.2d 449 (1992).

A convicted defendant's claim that counsel's assistance was so defective as to require reversal of a conviction has two components: first, the defendant must show that counsel's performance was deficient; second, the defendant must show that the deficient performance prejudiced the defense. Noble v. State, 319 Ark. 407, 892 S.W.2d 477 (1995).

Defendant convicted of rape was denied post-conviction relief under this rule because he was not denied effective assistance of trial counsel during either the guilt phase or the sentencing phase of the trial. Helton v. State, 325 Ark. 140, 924 S.W.2d 239 (1996).

Supplemental opinion was issued by the court to clarify for future cases that the standard for showing prejudice on an ineffective assistance of counsel claim is a reasonable probability—that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would (not could) have been different. Jones v. State, 340 Ark. 1, 8 S.W.3d 482 (2000).

Defendant failed to demonstrate that trial counsel was ineffective where there were no facts to show that if counsel had visited the defendant in jail more times, it would have produced a better result at trial, or that counsel's failure to call certain witnesses deprived the defense of vital evidence. Dansby v. State, 350 Ark. 60, 84 S.W.3d 857 (2002).

Trial court finding that petitioner was entitled to post-conviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was clearly erroneous where there was no showing of prejudice sufficient to deprive petitioner of a fair trial due to counsel's ineffectiveness. State v. Franklin, 351 Ark. 131, 89 S.W.3d 865 (2002).

While this rule generally provides the procedure for postconviction relief due to ineffective counsel, defendant did not raise this point below and failed to demonstrate that he was denied counsel on appeal. McClina v. State, 354 Ark. 384, 123 S.W.3d 883 (2003).

Defendant's assertion that his counsel had conflicts of interests, including involvement with a contract for a documentary film of the murder and trials and prior representation of parties related to the trial, was unfounded and defendant's income from the film in fact provided funds which aided, rather than prejudiced, the defense; in addition, the court found no merit to claims that defendant's counsel improperly failed to call expert witnesses, to conduct a thorough voir dire, to seek to exclude testimony of an occult expert, to seek a continuance and change of venue, and to present mitigating evidence at sentencing. Echols v. State, 354 Ark. 530, 127 S.W.3d 486 (2003).

Inmate who was convicted of murder and denied postconviction DNA testing made 13 claims of ineffective assistance of counsel, none of which met the two-pronged Strickland test of both deficiency and prejudice; among the arguments rejected were that counsel was ineffective for (1) failing to seek suppression of a confession, (2) failing to impeach testimony by defendant's stepmother, identifying blood stained clothing as his, on account of bias, (3) failing to fully proffer testimony and other evidence of a relationship between the victim and another African-American man, (4) failing to obtain the victim's counseling and psychological records, and (5) failing to object properly regarding Brady material. Johnson v. State, 356 Ark. 534, 157 S.W.3d 151, cert. denied, 543 U.S. 932, 125 S. Ct. 326, 160 L. Ed. 2d 235 (2004).

If an appellant desires to challenge a guilty plea on the ground that the appellant's attorney was ineffective in permitting the plea to be entered because it was coerced or otherwise was not voluntarily given, the matter could, and should, be raised in a petition pursuant to this rule. Graham v. State, 358 Ark. 296, 188 S.W.3d 893 (2004).

Trial court did not err in denying post-conviction relief where defendant claimed his counsel was ineffective for failing to impeach an informant regarding alleged inconsistent statements by using tape recorded conversations because there was no evidence that the jury would have resolved the credibility determination in defendant's favor such that it would have affected the outcome of his trial. Cook v. State, 361 Ark. 91, 204 S.W.3d 532 (2005).

Defendant's petition for postconviction relief was properly denied where, although defendant's trial counsel was not authorized to appear pro hac vice in Arkansas at the time of trial because he did not comply with Ark. R. Admis. Bar XIV, he was a properly licensed attorney in Tennessee, and failure to comply with rule did not rise to a Sixth Amendment violation. Fisher v. State, 364 Ark. 216, 217 S.W.3d 117 (2005).

Appellant's challenge to the denial of his postconviction relief petition was dismissed because, although appellant raised different issues than in a previously denied motion for a new trial, appellant failed to show a claim for ineffective assistance of counsel based on inconsistencies in witnesses' testimonies. Johnson v. State, 366 Ark. 286, 234 S.W.3d 858 (2006).

Inmate's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to introduce into evidence the supporting documentation of mitigating evidence relied on by a defense expert witness, and therefore the inmate's motion for relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was properly denied, because the expert testified at trial about each of the mitigating circumstances defendant cited. Williams v. State, 369 Ark. 104, 251 S.W.3d 290 (2007).

Inmate's trial counsel was not ineffective for allowing him to be shackled at trial and therefore the inmate's motion for relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was properly denied, because there was adequate justification for the shackles, as there was testimony at the hearing about defendant's violent acts, including two murders, his past disruptive behavior, and his attempts to escape. Williams v. State, 369 Ark. 104, 251 S.W.3d 290 (2007).

Defendant's petition for postconviction relief was properly denied where defendant could not prove that his counsel was ineffective in failing to investigate witnesses and the accomplice testimony was sufficiently corroborated; a copy of the record would not have been beneficial concerning the issues in question. Woody v. State, 2009 Ark. 413 (2009).

Where appellant entered negotiated pleas of guilty to kidnapping and additional charges, he was sentenced to 120 months' in prison with an additional 120-month suspended sentence; appellant was not entitled to postconviction relief under this rule, because he could not prove that counsel failed to advise him of a possible life sentence. On the record, counsel indicated that he had advised appellant that he could be subject to a life sentence if he violated the terms of the suspended sentence; appellant's remaining claims were not cognizable in a post-conviction proceeding, because he entered a guilty plea. French v. State, 2009 Ark. 443 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition under this rule because appellant failed to set forth facts sufficient to sustain a finding that any alleged ineffective assistance of trial counsel resulted in prejudice since appellant could not show prejudice from any alleged error by trial counsel concerning a failure to impeach or discredit a statement of the victim's daughter; the admission of the statement was not prejudicial, and a failure to impeach the statement was not prejudicial because the evidence at trial, aside from the daughter's statement, was overwhelming. Rodriguez v. State, 2010 Ark. 78 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying a prisoner's petition for postconviction relief because the prisoner did not set forth facts sufficient to state a cognizable claim; the prisoner's claims of ineffective assistance of counsel concerning procedural defects in the plea proceedings, failure to comply with Ark. R. Crim. P. 24, and trial counsel's failure to seek suppression of evidence or raise a defense were conclusory, and his other allegations of error, those concerning the negotiation procedures, counsel's inaction in raising issues in the negotiations, and counsel's failure to request jury sentencing, would not have had any impact on appellant's ultimate decision to accept the plea offer that he received. Shaw v. State, 2010 Ark. 112 (2010).

Denial of defendant's petition for postconviction relief under this rule was not clearly erroneous where defendant was unable to demonstrate that trial counsel made errors so serious that counsel was not functioning as the counsel guaranteed under U.S. Const., Amend. 6 and that defendant suffered actual prejudice as a result. Smith v. State, 2010 Ark. 137, 361 S.W.3d 840 (2010).

In pro se inmate's appeal of the denial of her petition for a writ of coram nobis, to the extent that she claimed trial counsel was ineffective, claims of ineffective assistance of counsel were outside the purview of a coram nobis proceeding. Allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel were properly raised in a timely postconviction proceeding pursuant to this rule, and a petition for writ of error coram nobis was not a substitute for proceeding under this rule or an opportunity to raise new allegations that could have been raised under the rule. Flanagan v. State, 2010 Ark. 140 (2010).

Although an inmate claimed trial counsel failed to argue for the admission of a written statement the inmate had given to a fellow inmate, a trial court did not err in finding the inmate failed to demonstrate the prejudice necessary under the second prong of the Strickland test for an ineffective assistance counsel claim because there was other evidence of both the inmate's willing participation in, and his intent to commit murder; the trial attorney effectively cross-examined the fellow inmate by obtaining an admission that the inmate had provided the written statement, with its details of the crime, even though the written statement was not admitted into evidence. Tavron v. State, 2010 Ark. 295 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief under this rule because it correctly determined that appellant did not satisfy the first prong of the Strickland test; under the circumstances and precedent as existed at the time of appellant's trial, counsel's conduct did not fall outside the wide range of reasonable professional assistance since counsel was not ineffective simply because he did not raise an argument that would have been largely against established precedent and would have required exceptionally thoughtful and extensive analysis. Jones v. State, 2010 Ark. 470 (2010).

Denial of an inmate's motion for postconviction relief was proper because, although the inmate claimed that he received ineffective assistance of counsel, the petition did not name a single witness that the defense should have called, did not state what a more thorough investigation of the prosecution's witnesses might have shown, did not explain in what way trial counsel was unprepared, and he offered nothing to suggest that a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence would have been successful. Payton v. State, 2011 Ark. 217 (2011).

Petitioner's appeal from the denial of a petition under this rule for post-conviction relief was improper, as it was clear that petitioner would not prevail on petitioner's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel; petitioner made no demonstration that counsel's failure to move for separate trials created conflicting interests or prejudiced petitioner's defense. Carter v. State, 2011 Ark. 226 (2011).

Denial of the inmate's petition for postconviction relief was proper because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. His motion was conclusory and there was no merit to his argument; even though not all the items recovered at the crime scene and introduced at trial directly linked the inmate to the crime, the items were relevant to the state's case, as they were among things recovered by the investigating officers at the scene of the crime. Bienemy v. State, 2011 Ark. 320 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was proper because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, the inmate's argument that the jury's verdict imposing the maximum sentences to run consecutively was a result of passion and prejudice was not persuasive; considering the court's ability to sua sponte reduce the sentence, the trial court did not clearly err in finding that a motion to reduce the sentence under § 16-90-107(e) would have been denied.

Hoyle v. State, 2011 Ark. 321, 388 S.W.3d 901 (2011).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for postconviction relief because the evidence showed that defendant's guilty pleas were made on the advice of competent counsel; had defendant not pled guilty, defendant potentially faced up to life in prison for each rape offense and up to 10 years in prison for a failure-to-appear offense, pursuant to § 5-4-401(a)(1), (4). Henson v. State, 2011 Ark. 375 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was proper because, while he was not able to directly appeal any challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence, there was substantial evidence to support his felony-murder conviction. He failed to demonstrate that he was prejudiced by trial counsel's error in failing to make a directed-verdict motion on the lesser-included charge of first-degree felony murder, § 5-10-102(a)(1). Lockhart v. State, 2011 Ark. 396 (2011).

Denial of the inmate's petition for postconviction relief pursuant to this rule was appropriate because he failed to prove that counsel was ineffective. The claim of prejudice was speculative and bereft of factual support for the assumption that the jury would have assessed a more lenient sentence than the trial court. Perry v. State, 2011 Ark. 434 (2011).

Denial of the inmate's petition for postconviction relief pursuant to this rule was proper because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. A juror stated that she had not formed an opinion about the inmate's guilt or innocence, and affirmed that she would base her decision on the evidence; further, trial counsel was not ineffective with regard to an argument for vindictive sentencing because two different judges presided over the inmate's trials, different sentencers imposed the two sentences, and thus, the presumption of vindictiveness did not arise. Butler v. State, 2011 Ark. 435, 384 S.W.3d 526 (2011).

Granting of a new trial to appellee inmate based upon his claims of ineffective assistance of counsel in his petition for postconviction relief was inappropriate because, by filing the petition, the inmate put in controversy the professional conduct of counsel, and as a condition of pursuing that petition, he must waive all attorney-client privilege with respect to the issues raised in the petition. State v. Cantrell, 2011 Ark. 449 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief pursuant to this rule because appellant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to a wording error contained in a verdict form; because the correct statutory language was consistently used throughout the other pleadings, instructions, and verdict forms, any error on the part of counsel was harmless, and appellant failed to prove prejudice. Richardson v. State, 2011 Ark. 478 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief pursuant to this rule because appellant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the trial court's failure to arraign appellant on the enhanced charge of possessing cocaine within 1,000 feet of a public-housing development; appellant was not prejudiced by the lack of a formal arraignment on the enhancement because he received the same rights at trial as he would have had he been arraigned, and since appellant was tried on the charge, he waived formal arraignment by appearing and announcing that he was ready for trial. Richardson v. State, 2011 Ark. 478 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief filed under this rule was appropriate because there was no mandated obligation to obtain an on-the-record waiver. Thus, the failure to make a record of the inmate's waiver of his right to testify did not constitute the ineffective assistance of counsel. Williams v. State, 2011 Ark. 489, 385 S.W.3d 228 (2011).

Because defendant supported a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel for failure to allow defendant to testify with specific testimony that defendant would have given had defendant taken the stand, the trial court erred in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief under this rule without a hearing. Cowan v. State, 2011 Ark. 537 (2011).

Defendant's petition for postconviction relief was properly denied because defendant failed to show that counsel was ineffective for failing to object to the use of a stun belt as a restraint during trial; defendant admitted that the stun belt was not visible to the jurors and that defendant was not shocked by the stun belt during trial. Simmons v. State, 2012 Ark. 58 (2012).

Circuit court did not err in denying postconviction relief under this rule without a hearing, because appellant failed to demonstrate he was prejudiced by trial counsel's alleged impairment or how her failure to call additional witnesses to testify that appellant's confession was coerced would have changed the outcome of trial. Charland v. State, 2012 Ark. 246 (2012).

Trial court properly denied defendant's petition for postconviction relief after he was convicted of rape and sexual assault because counsel was not ineffective for failing to cross-examine a six-year-old victim on inconsistencies in his statements; the discrepancies that defendant identified were not sufficient to alter the outcome of the trial. Bryant v. State, 2013 Ark. 305, 429 S.W.3d 193 (2013).

Appellant's claims of ineffective assistance of counsel were not cognizable in a habeas proceeding because any allegation appellant desired to raise concerning counsel's effectiveness should have been raised in a timely petition for postconviction relief. Davis v. State, 2014 Ark. 128, cert. denied, 574 U.S. 941, 135 S. Ct. 374, 190 L. Ed. 2d 266 (2014).

Because an inmate failed to show that the outcome of the trial would have been any different if he had been released on his own recognizance while awaiting trial, he was not entitled to relief on his claim that his trial counsel was ineffective in failing to seek his release after he was in jail for nine months awaiting trial. Breeden v. State, 2014 Ark. 159, 432 S.W.3d 618 (2014).

Defendant's petition for postconviction relief alleging ineffective assistance of counsel based on his counsel's failure to keep him reasonably informed about the status of his case and for not promptly complying with requests to provide him with the discovery materials was properly denied because counsel met with defendant prior to the hearings in court and five times while defendant was in jail; counsel discussed the case with defendant for at least one and a half hours immediately before the plea hearing; and counsel did not provide discovery to defendant far in advance of trial as defendant had a tendency to speak too freely, and counsel feared that another inmate might use the information to gain an advantage with the prosecuting attorney. Young v. State, 2015 Ark. 65 (2015).

Circuit court did not clearly err in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief because defendant did not raise the issue of whether the circuit court impermissibly placed itself in the role of the fact-finder in determining a factual issue that should have been resolved by the jury, and he failed to demonstrate that counsel was ineffective for not presenting an additional expert witness to give essentially the same testimony as a prior witness. Rasul v. State, 2015 Ark. 118, 458 S.W.3d 722 (2015).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because appellant's allegation that counsel failed to conduct a thorough investigation did not establish a Strickland violation; appellant did not prove that there was a reasonable probability that, but for some error of counsel, the fact-finder would have had a reasonable doubt respecting guilt such that the jury's decision would have been different absent the error. Fletcher v. State, 2015 Ark. 106, 458 S.W.3d 234 (2015).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because appellant offered no facts to show that counsel's decision not to ask for a mistrial under the circumstances was outside the bounds of reasonable professional judgment or that there was a ground for a mistrial. Fletcher v. State, 2015 Ark. 106, 458 S.W.3d 234 (2015).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because his claims of ineffective assistance of counsel could not be considered individually and collectively;

the concept of cumulative error is not recognized in the rule proceedings when assessing whether a petitioner was afforded effective assistance of counsel. Fletcher v. State, 2015 Ark. 106, 458 S.W.3d 234 (2015).

Trial court's decision to deny appellant's motion for postconviction relief was not clearly erroneous because with regard to counsel's decision not to move to quash the second amended information or for a continuance, appellant failed to overcome the presumption that counsel was effective; appellant did not show how the addition of the second charge of aggravated robbery impeded his ability to prepare his defense. Carter v. State, 2015 Ark. 166, 460 S.W.3d 781 (2015).

In a petition for post-conviction relief, defendant's appellate counsel was not ineffective in failing to argue on appeal that it was error for the trial court to grant the State's motion in limine, which prohibited defendant from questioning the victims about drugs found in their truck or the lack of charges filed against the victims for possession of marijuana; defendant did not raise any argument at trial that he had an absolute right to question the witnesses regarding possible bias nor did defendant raise any issue of his right to confrontation under the Sixth Amendment. Taylor v. State, 2015 Ark. 339, 470 S.W.3d 271 (2015).

—Jury.

Inmate's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to challenge a juror for cause, and therefore the inmate's motion for relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was properly denied, because counsel testified that he did not believe he could prevail on such a challenge. While the juror seemed to favor the death penalty, she also replied affirmatively that she could consider the full range of punishment, that she would consider mitigating circumstances and weigh them against aggravating circumstances, and that she would have to listen to the evidence to make a decision. Williams v. State, 369 Ark. 104, 251 S.W.3d 290 (2007).

Trial court properly denied appellant postconviction relief based on trial counsel's juror-selection choices; the appellate court will not label counsel ineffective merely because of possible bad tactics or strategy in selecting a jury, and none of appellant's claims of juror bias were supported with a showing of actual bias. Lee v. State, 2017 Ark. 337, 532 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Denying postconviction relief on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for not moving for a mistrial based on the juror's presence in a photo shown during sentencing was not clearly erroneous; the court had questioned the juror, counsel was satisfied with the response, and the juror had no memory of being in the photo that was more than 10 years old. Blackwell v.

State, 2017 Ark. App. 248, 520 S.W.3d 294 (2017).

A fair-cross-section-of-the-jury violation is structural and therefore cognizable in Rule 37 postconviction proceedings. Reams v. State, 2018 Ark. 324, 560 S.W.3d 441 (2018).

A fair-cross-section violation necessarily renders one's trial fundamentally unfair. Reams v. State, 2018 Ark. 324, 560 S.W.3d 441 (2018).

Prejudice is presumed if a fair-cross-section violation is established. Reams v. State, 2018 Ark. 324, 560 S.W.3d 441 (2018).

Circuit court clearly erred by requiring the postconviction petitioner to prove that he was prejudiced by his trial counsel's failure to pursue the fair-cross-section-of-the-jury claim based on the systematic underrepresentation of African American potential jurors. Reams v. State, 2018 Ark. 324, 560 S.W.3d 441 (2018).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to seek the excusal of a juror for cause; the juror stated on the record that she could be fair and afford petitioner the presumption of innocence. Mercouri v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 74, 540 S.W.3d 328 (2018).

Petitioner's trial counsel was not ineffective in referring to a high-profile case during the jury selection process where the references to that case were part of a strategy to identify potential jurors who might have viewed petitioner unfavorably. Woods v. State, 2019 Ark. 62, 567 S.W.3d 494 (2019).

Petition for postconviction relief alleging ineffective assistance of counsel based on the failure to question or strike a venireperson was properly denied; there was evidence from which the trial court could have concluded that the venireperson served on the jury with defendant's consent, as defense counsel, whom the trial court found credible, stated that he had told defendant that defendant would make the final call on which jurors would be on his jury because he knew many of them; and defendant testified that some individuals were not selected as jurors because of family ties, but the venireperson remained on the jury. Guthrie v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 203, 575 S.W.3d 460 (2019).

Petition for postconviction relief alleging ineffective assistance of counsel based on the failure to question or strike a venireperson was properly denied because the venireperson, who became jury foreman, testified that he was estranged from his family and had not had any contact for decades with either his first cousin, to whom defendant had been married, or his uncle, who had brought criminal charges against defendant; and counsel testified that defendant was not clear about his connection to the venireperson through the venireperson's cousin or uncle and that the matter was not brought to his attention until after the jury had

—Jury Instructions.

Defendant's motion under this rule for postconviction relief based on ineffective assistance of counsel was properly denied, as there was ample testimony that the offense occurred and that it was committed by appellant; even if counsel could have requested a jury instruction on corroboration, appellant had not shown that appellant was prejudiced by the failure to do so. Joiner v. State, 2010 Ark. 309 (2010).

Petitioner failed to meet his burden of establishing that he was denied effective assistance of counsel under the Strickland standard because he did not demonstrate that counsel was ineffective for failing to raise on direct appeal the issue of the trial court's declining to give proffered jury instructions on lesser included offenses; counsel's decisions were tactical decisions about which seasoned advocates could disagree. Stalnaker v. State, 2015 Ark. 250, 464 S.W.3d 466 (2015).

Circuit court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because appellant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel; the instruction on extreme-emotional-disturbance manslaughter complied with the Supreme Court's ruling in a case that took place one month before appellant's trial, and counsel was not ineffective for failing to have the foresight to predict all revisions to the instructions that were not directly mandated by that decision. Sims v. State, 2015 Ark. 363, 472 S.W.3d 107 (2015).

Circuit court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because appellant could not establish that prejudice resulted from counsel's failure to request an instruction on the lesser-included offense of manslaughter since the jury returned a guilty verdict on the greater offense of first-degree murder. Sims v. State, 2015 Ark. 363, 472 S.W.3d 107 (2015).

Circuit court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because appellant failed to demonstrate prejudice due to counsel's failure to request a justification instruction; the jury rejected appellant's claim of self-defense, and thus, it was highly unlikely that the outcome of the trial would have been different had counsel requested a justification instruction. Sims v. State, 2015 Ark. 363, 472 S.W.3d 107 (2015).

Circuit court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because trial counsel was not remiss for failing to seek a lesser-included-offense instruction when appellant's defense to aggravated assault was complete denial. Sims v. State, 2015 Ark. 363, 472 S.W.3d 107 (2015).

Circuit court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because appellant's brief merely recited the conclusory allegation that counsel's failure to request a lesser-included offense instruction was ineffective assistance, but he did not cite authority in support of that argument or otherwise develop the issue by referring to any facts contained in the record that would provide a rational basis for an instruction. Sims v. State, 2015 Ark. 363, 472 S.W.3d 107 (2015).

Circuit court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because appellant failed to show a reasonable likelihood that the outcome of trial would have been different had a justification instruction for the defense of a third party been given; the jury did not accept defendant's theory of self-defense, and thus, it was improbable and most unlikely that the jury would have believed that he was acting in defense of his wife. Sims v. State, 2015 Ark. 363, 472 S.W.3d 107 (2015).

Petitioner was not prejudiced by counsel's failure to object in the guilt phase to an erroneous instruction that manslaughter was subject to enhancement when committed in a child's presence where, given the totality of the evidence and the fact that the jury found petitioner guilty of the lesser-included offense of manslaughter, there was no reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different had the jury been correctly instructed in the guilt phase. Detherow v. State, 2015 Ark. 447, 476 S.W.3d 155 (2015).

While the failure to object to the absence of a proper instruction concerning the firearm enhancement constituted deficient performance, the error was harmless, as the inmate could not show prejudice since the jury was instructed on the general requirement and definition of reasonable doubt. Van Winkle v. State, 2016 Ark. 98, 486 S.W.3d 778 (2016).

Denying postconviction relief on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to obtain a ruling from the circuit court on the use of nonpattern jury instructions was not error; the court noted trial counsel's argument and ruled on the issue, and there was no showing that the instructions misstated the law such that there had been no actual finding of guilt. Blackwell v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 248, 520 S.W.3d 294 (2017).

Postconviction appellant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the modification of the jury instructions; the jury instructions read to the jury did not deviate from the model jury instructions. Todd v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 587, 535 S.W.3d 638 (2017).

Counsel's deficient performance in failing to correct instructional error that defendant was eligible for parole when he was not did not establish prejudice because the prosecutor emphasized the serious nature of the crime and the injury the petitioner inflicted on the mentally impaired victim and her family and the petitioner's seven prior felony convictions, and after deliberating less than 30 minutes, the jury imposed a sentence that would likely exceed his life span whether or not he would be granted parole. Stewart v. Kelley, 890 F.3d 1124 (8th Cir. 2018).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to present evidence sufficient to warrant a jury instruction on a lesser-included offense; counsel did proffer the instruction and petitioner failed to establish a reasonable probability that the outcome of his trial would have been different had the circuit court given the lesser-included-offense instruction. Mercouri v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 74, 540 S.W.3d 328 (2018).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner postconviction relief because petitioner failed to show that trial counsel lacked reasonable professional judgment in failing to have petitioner testify to support a lesser-included jury instruction on simple robbery; counsel did not want to risk putting petitioner on the stand since he potentially had prior convictions in California, which could have been used to impeach him, and when asked directly on the record whether he wished to testify, petitioner said no. Mercouri v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 74, 540 S.W.3d 328 (2018).

Circuit court properly denied appellant's petition for postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a non-model jury instruction on imperfect self-defense pursuant to § 5-2-614. Nelson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 583, 566 S.W.3d 530 (2018).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to present a proper jury instruction on extreme emotional disturbance manslaughter; although the victim may have been the initial aggressor, petitioner had initiated a second encounter with a firearm in tow and thus he had invited the provocation that led to the victim's death and was not entitled to a jury instruction on extreme emotional disturbance. Further, even assuming trial counsel was deficient, petitioner failed to demonstrate prejudice. Douglas v. State, 2019 Ark. 57, 567 S.W.3d 483 (2019).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to offer the proper jury instructions on extreme-emotional-disturbance manslaughter. The error in the instructions did not so prejudice the defense that defendant was deprived of a fair trial because the defense at trial was self-defense, not extreme emotional disturbance; the defense of self-defense was supported by defendant's testimony; and trial counsel argued that the evidence did not support a finding that defendant was acting under extreme emotional distress. Draft v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 171, 596 S.W.3d 585 (2020).

—Jury Sentencing Forms.

Given that the trial court would not have been bound by the jury's sentencing recommendation concerning concurrent or consecutive imposition of sentence, counsel's failure to ensure that the verdict form was given to the jury was not prejudicial; there was no indication that the trial court would have ordered the sentences to be served concurrently. State v. Thompson, 2017 Ark. 50, 510 S.W.3d 775, cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 114, 199 L. Ed. 2d 31 (2017).

—Mental Evaluation.

Petitioner failed to meet his burden of establishing that he was denied effective assistance of counsel under the Strickland standard because he offered no facts to substantiate his allegation that counsel was ineffective in failing to secure a mental evaluation for him before trial. Stalnaker v. State, 2015 Ark. 250, 464 S.W.3d 466 (2015).

—Pleas; Plea Negotiations.

Circuit court properly denied defendant's petition for postconviction relief summarily because defendant, who pleaded guilty, failed to allege sufficient facts to hold that his trial counsel's performance was deficient. Defendant's allegations concerned only the length of the sentence recommendation, not his foregoing his right to a trial; the record demonstrated that defendant was informed of the State's initial sentencing offer by his trial counsel; trial counsel was not ineffective because he failed to predict the substance of a future sentencing offer by the State—if one was offered; and defendant's argument that his trial counsel should have used his accomplice information as a bargaining chip for a better sentencing recommendation did not establish that counsel's performance was deficient. Robinson v. State, 2016 Ark. 211, 492 S.W.3d 77 (2016).

Circuit court's findings that petitioner was not entitled to postconviction relief were clearly erroneous where judicial precedent made clear that a defendant was entitled to effective assistance of counsel during the plea-bargaining process, trial counsel had given erroneous advice about parole eligibility, and petitioner testified that he would have taken the plea offer if it had been properly explained. Beavers v. State, 2016 Ark. 277, 495 S.W.3d 76 (2016).

Postconviction relief was properly denied because the trial court did not clearly err when it found that appellant's guilty plea was voluntarily and intelligently entered upon the advice of competent counsel. Although appellant argued that trial counsel had not informed him that the prosecutor had not filed notice of intent to seek the death penalty, the circumstances surrounding the death of the victim and her unborn child supported trial counsel's reasonable belief that appellant faced a potential death sentence. True v. State, 2017 Ark. 323, 532 S.W.3d 70 (2017).

Postconviction relief was properly denied because the trial court did not clearly err when it found that trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to investigate the case before advising defendant to plead guilty; counsel testified as to the substantial steps he took to investigate. True v. State, 2017 Ark. 323, 532 S.W.3d 70 (2017).

Postconviction relief was properly denied because the trial court did not clearly err when it found that trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a mental evaluation before advising appellant to plead guilty; the conclusions presented in the postconviction mental evaluation established that it was unlikely that a more thorough investigation of appellant's mental-health history would have produced sufficient evidence supporting an affirmative defense. True v. State, 2017 Ark. 323, 532 S.W.3d 70 (2017).

Defendant's petition for postconviction relief, alleging ineffective assistance of counsel, was properly denied because defendant's argument that his guilty plea to second-degree murder was not given voluntarily and intelligently on the advice of counsel was not preserved for appeal as it was not raised below; and, even if it had been adequately raised below, the argument lacked merit as defendant's allegation was conclusory; and he could not establish prejudice as he did not allege that he would not have pled guilty had counsel advised him that he could reasonably argue that his actions constituted manslaughter rather than second-degree murder. Williams v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 434, 559 S.W.3d 297 (2018).

On appeal from the denial of a postconviction petition following pleas of guilty, there are two issues for review—whether the plea of guilty was intelligently and voluntarily entered and whether the plea was made on the advice of competent counsel. Trial court clearly erred when it failed to address the second prong, and the appellate court reversed and remanded for the trial court to make the proper findings regarding whether petitioner entered his guilty plea on the advice of competent counsel. King v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 605, 566 S.W.3d 165 (2018).

Circuit court was not clearly erroneous in finding that trial counsel were not ineffective by failing to file a motion to suppress defendant's confession and a motion to suppress evidence seized as a result of the traffic stop before permitting him to plead guilty to capital murder, where defendant had instructed his counsel that he wished to plead guilty to avoid the death penalty months before the pretrial deadline to file motions had expired. Roos v. State, 2019 Ark. 360, 588 S.W.3d 738 (2019), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 2727, 206 L. Ed. 2d 860 (2020).

Circuit court did not clearly err in finding that trial counsel's failure to obtain a forensic mental evaluation before permitting defendant to plead guilty to capital murder was not ineffective assistance of counsel; despite that defendant had recently attempted suicide, the circuit court concluded that there was no reasonable basis to request a mental examination of defendant to establish either his unfitness to proceed or to assert a plea of not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect, especially when his attorneys were following his direction to seek a guilty plea in order to avoid the death penalty. Roos v. State, 2019 Ark. 360, 588 S.W.3d 738 (2019), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 2727, 206 L. Ed. 2d 860 (2020).

Defendant failed to demonstrate that but for his counsel's performance he would not have entered his nolo contendere pleas and would have proceeded to trial where in exchange for his nolo contendere pleas, the State nolle prossed 23 additional counts of possession of child pornography. Myers v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 16, 593 S.W.3d 29 (2020).

Petitioner's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel based on counsel's failure to inform her concerning parole eligibility dates failed as petitioner did not offer testimony or evidence in support of her speculative theory that the circuit court would have exercised its discretion to run her sentences concurrently had she not gone to trial and not pleaded guilty. Ringo v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 81, 594 S.W.3d 133 (2020).

Postconviction petitioner's claim of ineffective counsel based on the failure to advise petitioner as to possible weaknesses in the proximity enhancement was rejected as petitioner did not argue that had counsel expressly told her of the purported deficiencies in the State's proof, she would not have pled guilty. Ringo v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 81, 594 S.W.3d 133 (2020).

Postconviction petitioner failed to demonstrate that his counsel was ineffective during plea negotiations because the record did not support the existence of a plea offer or an enforceable agreement; if there was an agreement, petitioner failed to demonstrate a connection between his rejection of an offer and his counsel's ineffectiveness. Joyner v. State, 2021 Ark. 78, 621 S.W.3d 124 (2021).

—Prejudice.

Due to clear evidence of guilt that included testimony of a participant in drug transactions with appellant and corroborating videotapes, appellant was not prejudiced by appellant's counsel's failure to renew a motion for directed verdict at the close of all the evidence and was not entitled to postconviction relief pursuant to this rule. Miller v. State, 2011 Ark. 114 (2011).

Even if defendant's counsel erred in failing to obtain a ruling on defendant's Confrontation Clause objection, defendant did not demonstrate that admitting evidence that the nine-year old victim had chlamydia—without producing the laboratory technician who performed the test—prejudiced the defense; accordingly, the circuit court properly denied defendant's petition for postconviction relief under this rule. Kelley v. State, 2011 Ark. 504 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief after defendant was convicted of two counts of rape because defendant failed to demonstrate prejudice as to any error in counsel's failure to investigate the medical aspects of the case or the need for expert testimony. Abernathy v. State, 2012 Ark. 59, 386 S.W.3d 477 (2012).

Appellant's petition for postconviction failed to allege any facts to support a demonstration of prejudice concerning his claims. Appellant did not plead any facts to demonstrate that counsel's alleged inaction, or counsel's alleged mistakes concerning the potential for parole, would have an impact on the ultimate decision to accept a plea rather than go to trial. Pennington v. State, 2013 Ark. 39 (2013).

Appellant claimed the trial court erred in denying his petition for ineffective assistance under this rule because counsel was ineffective in not properly impeaching a witness with certain letters; given that the witness's testimony was not the only evidence that tied appellant to the crime and the jury was made aware of appellant's arguments that impeached the witness, appellant was not prejudiced by counsel's cross-examination of the witness. Taylor v. State, 2013 Ark. 146, 427 S.W.3d 29 (2013).

Trial court was clearly erroneous in finding the testimony of two witnesses was admissible character evidence because the testimony did not conform to the rule requirements, and the testimony was essentially expert testimony on whether the victim was being deceptive; as the evidence tended to establish that, despite the evidentiary error, the outcome of the trial would not likely have been different, prejudice for ineffective assistance purposes was not shown, and thus petitioner was not entitled to postconviction relief. Hayes v. State, 2014 Ark. 104, 431 S.W.3d 882 (2014).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to call four witnesses to testify concerning various instances of behavior that reflected the inmate's mental impairment following a drug overdose and the lack of successful treatment for it, as the proposed testimony did little to address whether the inmate was competent at the time of trial. Savage v. State, 2015 Ark. 212, 462 S.W.3d 326 (2015).

Inmate's claim that trial counsel provided false information concerning the retention of an independent expert to perform a mental evaluation lacked merit, as the inmate offered no factual basis to support his assertion that an independent expert would have provided beneficial testimony or that he was prejudiced.

Savage v. State, 2015 Ark. 212, 462 S.W.3d 326 (2015).

Petitioner failed to meet his burden of establishing that he was denied effective assistance of counsel under the Strickland standard because he did not show prejudice to the defense when counsel did not challenge the mention in the pretrial omnibus hearing that he had been found guilty of prior felonies; even if there were some mention in a pretrial hearing at which the jury was not present that petitioner had more than two prior felonies, that information was not before the jury. Stalnaker v. State, 2015 Ark. 250, 464 S.W.3d 466 (2015).

Video evidence showing appellant and his stepdaughter at Wal Mart the day after he allegedly raped her would have been cumulative to testimony, and petitioner failed to show that the outcome of the trial would have been different if counsel had presented the videos; thus, the circuit court did not err in denying relief on this postconviction claim without a hearing. Luper v. State, 2016 Ark. 371, 501 S.W.3d 812 (2016).

As appellee was sentenced to less than the maximum on all charges, there must be something more than the sentence received in order for him to demonstrate prejudice for purposes of post-conviction relief. A sentence less than the maximum sentence for an offense cannot show prejudice from the sentence itself. State v. Thompson, 2017 Ark. 50, 510 S.W.3d 775, cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 114, 199 L. Ed. 2d 31 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied appellant's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition alleging ineffective assistance of counsel where the court's communication to the jury, after they reached an impasse, that they could take more time the next day, which was a Saturday, did not provide a basis for granting a mistrial; as a result, appellant failed to demonstrate prejudice based on counsel's alleged failure to state grounds for a mistrial. Russell v. State, 2017 Ark. 174, 518 S.W.3d 674 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied appellant's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition alleging ineffective assistance of counsel where he failed to establish prejudice from the introduction of unredacted medical records, which contained information about an incident in which he broke a prior girlfriend's jaw. Although a ruling prevented the State from introducing such evidence pursuant to Ark. R. Evid. 404(b), the ruling was not applicable to medically relevant information bearing on appellant's own PTSD defense, the evidence was both admissible and cumulative, and there was no reasonable probability that additional efforts by counsel to limit introduction of the medical records would have altered the outcome of the murder trial. Russell v. State, 2017 Ark. 174, 518 S.W.3d 674 (2017).

—Presumption.

In order to warrant post-conviction relief on the basis of ineffective assistance of counsel, petitioner must overcome presumption of competency by clear and convincing evidence showing that he was prejudiced by counsel's conduct and the prejudice was such as to deny him a fair trial. Blackmon v. State, 274 Ark. 202, 623 S.W.2d 184 (1981); Rightmire v. State, 275 Ark. 24, 627 S.W.2d 10 (1982); Urquhart v. State, 275 Ark. 486, 631 S.W.2d 304 (1982); Rasmussen v. State, 280 Ark. 472, 658 S.W.2d 867 (1983); Jeffers v. State, 280 Ark. 458, 658 S.W.2d 869 (1983); Hayes v. State, 280 Ark. 509, 660 S.W.2d 648 (1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1051, 104 S. Ct. 1331, 79 L. Ed. 2d 726 (1984); Guy v. State, 282 Ark. 424, 668 S.W.2d 952 (1984), overruled, Ferrell v. State, 305 Ark. 511, 810 S.W.2d 29 (1991); Smith v. State, 283 Ark. 264, 675 S.W.2d 627 (1984); Maddox v. State, 283 Ark. 321, 675 S.W.2d 832 (1984), overruled, King v. State, 322 Ark. 51, 907 S.W.2d 127 (1995); Mitchell v. State, 289 Ark. 437, 711 S.W.2d 821 (1986); Hill v. State, 292 Ark. 144, 728 S.W.2d 510, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 873, 108 S. Ct. 208, 98 L. Ed. 2d 159 (1987); Mock v. State, 292 Ark. 148, 728 S.W.2d 513 (1987); Troutt v. State, 292 Ark. 192, 729 S.W.2d 139 (1987); Owens v. State, 292 Ark. 292, 729 S.W.2d 419 (1987); Branham v. State, 292 Ark. 355, 730 S.W.2d 226 (1987); Wilburn v. State, 292 Ark. 416, 730 S.W.2d 491 (1987); Ross v. State, 292 Ark. 663, 732 S.W.2d 143 (1987).

Counsel is presumed to have been competent. Guy v. State, 282 Ark. 424, 668 S.W.2d 952 (1984), overruled, Ferrell v. State, 305 Ark. 511, 810 S.W.2d 29 (1991); Campbell v. State, 283 Ark. 12, 670 S.W.2d 800 (1984); Mitchell v. State, 289 Ark. 437, 711 S.W.2d 821 (1986); Troutt v. State, 292 Ark. 192, 729 S.W.2d 139 (1987); Muck v. State, 292 Ark. 310, 730 S.W.2d 214 (1987); Branham v. State, 292 Ark. 355, 730 S.W.2d 226 (1987); Wilburn v. State, 292 Ark. 416, 730 S.W.2d 491 (1987); Ross v. State, 292 Ark. 663, 732 S.W.2d 143 (1987); Dumond v. State, 294 Ark. 379, 743 S.W.2d 779 (1988).

Trial court's decision to deny appellant's motion for postconviction relief was not clearly erroneous because appellant's argument that counsel was remiss in failing to argue that the information had to be dismissed on the ground that the prosecutor intentionally delayed charging him was limited to a conclusory allegation, and appellant failed to provide any facts to support his claim. Carter v. State, 2015 Ark. 166, 460 S.W.3d 781 (2015).

Petition for postconviction relief of a defendant convicted of two counts of rape and two counts of second-degree sexual assault was properly denied without an evidentiary hearing because defendant made the conclusory assertion that as a consequence of not receiving a public trial, his family was not privy to the responses of potential jurors, but he failed to explain how the family members' inability to hear what potential jurors said undermined confidence in the outcome of the trial; thus, defendant's assertion was speculative and insufficient to meet the ineffective assistance of counsel burden under Strickland. Pafford v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 195, 574 S.W.3d 735 (2019).

—Relief Not Warranted.

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failure to object to the charges pending against appellant for the manufacture of methamphetamine and possession of drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture methamphetamine on the basis that the charges were a violation of the prohibition against double jeopardy. The Supreme Court of Arkansas has held that possession of drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture methamphetamine is not a lesser-included offense of manufacture of methamphetamine; therefore, appellant was not entitled to postconviction relief under this rule. Britt v. State, 2009 Ark. 569, 349 S.W.3d 290 (2009).

When a jury found appellant guilty of manufacturing methamphetamine, possessing drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture methamphetamine, and fleeing, he was not entitled to postconviction relief under this rule based on his ineffective assistance of counsel claim. The Supreme Court of Arkansas held that counsel was not ineffective for failing to introduce a letter to show that appellant's girlfriend was a "meth cook": counsel's did not commit fraud in hiring an investigator; counsel's failure to call the investigator to testify was a matter of trial tactics; and appellant was not prejudiced by counsel's failure to call additional witnesses. Britt v. State, 2009 Ark. 569, 349 S.W.3d 290 (2009).

When someone driving appellant's car fled from an officer and ran into the woods, items used to manufacture methamphetamine were found in the car and appellant's girlfriend testified that he was driving; a jury found appellant guilty of manufacturing methamphetamine, possessing drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture methamphetamine, and fleeing. He was not entitled to postconviction relief under this rule based on counsel's failure to object to evidence that appellant and his girlfriend had been convicted of other crimes related to methamphetamine; the evidence was admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b), as it was independently relevant to the issue of the identity of the driver and his relationship to the passenger. Britt v. State, 2009 Ark. 569, 349 S.W.3d 290 (2009).

Denial of the inmate's petition for postconviction relief was appropriate because, to have shown prejudice and proven that she was deprived of a fair trial due to ineffective assistance of counsel, the inmate, who had pled guilty, was required to demonstrate a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's errors, she would not have so pleaded and would have insisted on going to trial. It would have defied all logic for her to have asserted that she would not have entered a plea for the agreed-upon sentence if trial counsel had presented mitigating evidence, as any presentation of mitigating evidence would have occurred subsequent to the inmate entering the guilty plea, which she admitted was entered knowingly and intelligently. Jamett v. State, 2010 Ark. 28, 358 S.W.3d 874 (2010).

In a case in which an inmate had been convicted of one count of delivery of a controlled substance and received an enhanced sentence pursuant to § 5-64-411(a)(7) (now § 5-64-411(a)(8)), he unsuccessfully argued that his trial counsel was ineffective because he failed to adequately investigate the facts underlying the application of the enhancement prior to trial or to flesh them out appropriately during cross-examination. As to the failure to investigate, the inmate made only a conclusory statement, wholly lacking in allegations of prejudice; as to the cross-examination claim, his argument provided him no relief as he was procedurally barred from raising it on appeal. McCraney v. State, 2010 Ark. 96, 360 S.W.3d 144 (2010).

In an appeal under this rule in which an inmate argued that his trial counsel was ineffective because he violated the inmate's Fifth Amendment right to testify if he so wished by refusing to allow appellant to take the stand, the inmate had not made a Fifth Amendment argument to the trial court. In his original Rule 37.1 petition, the inmate argued that counsel was ineffective because he did not let appellant testify that, at the time of the sale, he was at home with his children, nor did counsel call any witnesses to testify to the same; to the extent he attempted to couch his argument in Fifth Amendment terms, he was barred from doing so on appeal. McCraney v. State, 2010 Ark. 96, 360 S.W.3d 144 (2010).

Dismissal of inmate's appeal from the denial of his petition for postconviction relief was proper because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel; counsel testified, and the record confirmed, that he did question a police officer concerning a relationship with a witness and the inmate did not introduce any evidence or information of such a relationship that counsel might have found from further investigation or that counsel could have used to impeach the officer's testimony. Further, challenges to a witness's credibility were not cognizable claims in proceedings under this rule and allegations that trial counsel did not communicate with the inmate or investigate the case and was unprepared for trial were likewise deficient in factual substantiation. Dunlap v. State, 2010 Ark. 111 (2010).

Affirmance of defendant's conviction for failure to preserve arguments for appeal did not demonstrate ineffective assistance of counsel that would entitle defendant to postconviction relief pursuant to this rule; defendant still had to show it was reasonably probable that the jury's decision would have been different absent counsel's errors. Eastin v. State, 2010 Ark. 275 (2010).

Inmate's appeal of a judgment denying his petition for postconviction relief under this rule was denied because the inmate did not receive ineffective assistance of trial counsel; counsel made a motion for directed verdict and renewed it at the appropriate time, the inmate did not explain what factual substantiation counsel could have advanced to the trial court in favor of a concurrent sentence, and because the inmate failed to provide any factual substantiation to demonstrate that his dissatisfaction and lack of communication with counsel resulted in particular prejudice to the defense, there was no ground stated to warrant postconviction relief. Ewells v. State, 2010 Ark. 407 (2010).

Pro se post-conviction relief petitioner's ineffective assistance of counsel claim was rejected because he did not allege any specific evidence that could have been presented at trial if counsel had conducted an adequate investigation and did not describe any particular witness who could have been presented to change the outcome of his trial. Shipman v. State, 2010 Ark. 499 (2010).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was appropriate because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. Although the inmate alleged that counsel was ineffective because he declined an opportunity to review the prosecution's notes, to the extent that the inmate asserted that the notes might have contained suppressed exculpatory evidence, he provided no factual basis in support of his claim that the notes were necessary to show prejudice; the inmate did not provide facts that affirmatively supported his claims of an unchallenged Brady violation because he did not demonstrate that the notes might have contained favorable, suppressed evidence and that the prosecution's failure to provide the notes to counsel was improper. Croy v. State, 2011 Ark. 284, 383 S.W.3d 367 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was appropriate after he was convicted of first-degree sexual assault because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, there were striking similarities in the testimony of the boys, the evidence in the case was highly probative, and the inmate failed to show that counsel could have prevailed on appeal if the argument regarding witness testimony had been preserved. Croy v. State, 2011 Ark. 284, 383 S.W.3d 367 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief filed under this rule was appropriate because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel under U.S. Const. amend VI. Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a meritless argument with regard to jury instructions and counsel could not be ineffective for failing to make an argument that could not succeed; because methamphetamine was produced and the inmate admitted taking part in manufacturing the substance, he was not entitled to an instruction on the lesser-included offense of attempting to manufacture the substance. Hatcher v. State, 2011 Ark. 325 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was appropriate because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, the inmate presented nothing to show that a juror was actually biased, and the inmate failed to demonstrate that he was prejudiced by counsel's conduct to the point that he was denied a fair adjudication of his guilt. Hayes v. State, 2011 Ark. 327, 383 S.W.3d 824 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was appropriate because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, had trial counsel investigated whether a club indeed had metal detectors, any evidence produced would have had little, if any, relevance; whether the inmate had a gun inside of the club was of no moment because the kidnappings and rapes took place in a field outside of the club and in an apartment at a separate location. Hayes v. State, 2011 Ark. 327, 383 S.W.3d 824 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief under this rule was appropriate because trial counsel could not be ineffective for failing to make an objection or argument that was without merit and the inmate failed to show that an objection to the prosecution's failure to produce witnesses would have been successful. Reese v. State, 2011 Ark. 492 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief after he was convicted of four counts of rape because he did not provide any facts that would support a finding of prejudice with regard to his claims of ineffective assistance of counsel; he made conclusory allegations and failed to identify specific acts or omissions. Jones v. State, 2011 Ark. 523 (2011).

Defense counsel was not ineffective for not objecting that defendants' convictions violated double jeopardy because possession of drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture methamphetamine was not a lesser-included offense of manufacturing methamphetamine; hence, postconviction relief was properly denied. Myers v. State, 2012 Ark. 143, 400 S.W.3d 231 (2012).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief under this rule in which he alleged ineffective assistance of counsel during his trial for attempted murder in the first degree, aggravated robbery, and theft of property. Because appellant failed to demonstrate that counsel might have raised a successful challenge to testimony about the gun, testimony about the money, or admission of photographs, none of appellant's grounds for relief demonstrated prejudice. Lambert v. State, 2012 Ark. 150 (2012).

Denial of inmate's petition under this rule was proper because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. Had counsel made the objections that the inmate asserted should have been made, they would have been properly overruled because the inmate himself introduced the issue of a Virginia trip and his treatment of the victim's older sister; thus, the inmate opened the door to the very testimony he now found objectionable. Gilliland v. State, 2012 Ark. 175 (2012).

Defendant's petition for postconviction relief under this rule was properly denied because defendant did not offer any basis on which a bad-faith argument could have been made at the suspended sentence revocation hearing or on appeal, did not show how defendant was prejudiced by trial and appellate counsels' alleged failures, and defendant's petition was not timely. Jones v. State, 2012 Ark. 215 (2012).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief after he was convicted of sexual assault because counsel was not ineffective for failing to subpoena an unnamed doctor who allegedly could have testified to inconsistent statements by the victim's mother or the mother and victim's hallucinations. Johnson v. State, 2012 Ark. 225 (2012).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief after he was convicted of two counts of raping his daughter because he failed to show that he was prejudiced by counsel's performance; counsel had provided substantial evidence to support the defense theory that the victim had in fact been raped by a grandfather and that defendant's wife had coached the victim into implicating defendant. Walton v. State, 2012 Ark. 269 (2012).

Defendant's petition for postconviction relief under this rule was properly denied because, even if defendant did not receive the prompt notice required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.3(d) of this rule, the claims that defendant advanced in the petition were conclusory in nature, unsubstantiated, and clearly fell short of establishing that defendant was denied effective assistance of counsel at trial. Crain v. State, 2012 Ark. 412 (2012).

Petitioner for post-conviction relief failed to show any prejudice from trial counsel's decision to withdraw a motion to suppress evidence after being satisfied with the validity of the underlying warrant; there was no showing that the motion might have been successful had trial counsel pursued it. Lewis v. State, 2013 Ark. 105 (2013).

Denial of postconviction relief was proper, because the petitioner failed to meet his burden of demonstrating that his trial counsel's performance was deficient and that he was prejudiced by this deficient performance to the extent that he was deprived of a fair trial. Holloway v. State, 2013 Ark. 140, 426 S.W.3d 462 (2013).

Inmate did not show counsel provided ineffective assistance by failing to object to a deputy prosecutor signing the information because the inmate did not show a lack of the prosecuting attorney's consent. Norris v. State, 2013 Ark. 205, 427 S.W.3d 626 (2013).

Inmate did not show counsel provided ineffective assistance by failing to seek a bill of particulars or object to jury instructions because (1) the inmate did not show the defense was unaware of the crimes or conduct alleged, as the information and amended information stated the crimes, the statutes allegedly violated, and each crime's victim, (2) the inmate showed no doubt as to robbery's meaning, and (3) the inmate stated no valid ground to object to the robbery information or instructions. Norris v. State, 2013 Ark. 205, 427 S.W.3d 626 (2013).

Appellant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel because the majority of his claims that counsel did not conduct an adequate or thorough investigation were conclusory or lacked any substantiating facts to show prejudice; appellant did not show that further investigation would have been fruitful. Boatright v. State, 2014 Ark. 66 (2014).

Appellant's claims that counsel did not conduct an adequate or thorough investigation were not supported by the evidence. Boatright v. State, 2014 Ark. 66 (2014).

Allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel were not sufficient to establish that appellant was entitled to relief under this rule, as the strong evidence adduced by the State supported trial counsel's strategy to question whether the State had proved the elements of the offenses, including intent, and appellant failed to show that counsel made any specific error that would have undermined confidence in the jury's decision. Thomas v. State, 2014 Ark. 290 (2014).

Postconviction relief was properly denied, as trial counsel's failure to move for directed verdict did not amount to ineffective assistance, as there was sufficient evidence that the inmate engaged in sexual intercourse with the victim, his minor daughter, and thus, to support a rape conviction, and the inmate failed to show how counsel's failure to call a witness to rebut the testimony of a supervisor for the crimes against children division of the state police prejudiced the defense. Chunestudy v. State, 2014 Ark. 345, 438 S.W.3d 923 (2014).

Postconviction relief was not warranted because an applicant failed to present any argument on appeal with regard to his claim that counsel was ineffective for allowing his prior convictions to be admitted during the trial; moreover, he failed to make any further argument on appeal with regard to the allegation in his petition that trial counsel failed to adequately prepare for trial, and there was no showing of prejudice with regard to this allegation. Mister v. State, 2014 Ark. 446 (2014).

Petitioner failed to prove his ineffective assistance claim that he would have accepted the State's plea offer had counsel disclosed the evidence against him; petitioner's argument was based upon self-serving statements, and because he did not meet his burden of proof on the deficiency prong of the ineffective assistance test, the circuit court did not clearly err in denying his petition, and the denial of postconviction relief was affirmed. Camp v. State, 2015 Ark. 90, 457 S.W.3d 276 (2015).

Petitioner's claim that appellate counsel was ineffective for failing to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence on direct appeal was rejected where petitioner did not identify any specific facts in the record that could have been used to buttress his insufficiency argument. Woods v. State, 2019 Ark. 62, 567 S.W.3d 494 (2019).

Because the State presented evidence to support appellant's conviction for computer exploitation of a child, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to preserve the sufficiency-of-the-evidence issue for appeal; appellant testified that he prodded the victim with the broomstick around her thigh area, and it was the duty of the jury to view the video and determine if actual or simulated penetration of the victim's vagina or anus occurred. Sorum v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 354, 582 S.W.3d 18 (2019).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to inform the jury that rape included the element of sexual gratification; the State presented testimony that counsel did not do away with the element of sexual gratification but instead chose to focus the jury's attention on the element of penetration as a matter of trial strategy. Sorum v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 354, 582 S.W.3d 18 (2019).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to move for a directed verdict on the offense of computer exploitation of a child on the correct grounds; the State presented evidence that appellant had reason to know that a cell phone could have been recording video of his actions against the victim. Sorum v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 354, 582 S.W.3d 18 (2019).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to move for dismissal of the charge of second-degree sexual assault on double jeopardy grounds, as the State presented evidence of separate impulses comprising separate acts conforming with the definitions of rape and second-degree sexual assault. Sorum v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 354, 582 S.W.3d 18 (2019).

Trial court properly denied postconviction relief because petitioner failed to establish that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to the prosecutor's statements and also failed to demonstrate that an objection would have been fruitful. Dennis v. State, 2020 Ark. 28, 592 S.W.3d 646 (2020).

Although defendant argued that his trial counsel failed to investigate and present a complete defense regarding defendant's intent as to meeting an undercover officer's alleged minor children, such evidence was before the jury. Further, any additional self-serving testimony from defendant would not have changed the outcome of the trial. Shreck v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 354, 605 S.W.3d 278 (2020).

Denial of postconviction relief upheld. Lowery v. State, 2021 Ark. 97, 621 S.W.3d 140 (2021).

Denial of postconviction relief upheld. Rayburn v. State, 2021 Ark. 98, 622 S.W.3d 155 (2021).

—Relief Warranted.

Trial counsel was ineffective in a first-degree murder prosecution where he failed to object to a jury instruction which stated the elements of second-degree murder and instructed that the jury could find the defendant guilty of first-degree murder based upon those elements. Reynolds v. State, 341 Ark. 387, 18 S.W.3d 331 (2000).

Because trial court failed to reasonably investigate the facts, visit the crime scene, interview the state's witnesses, spend time interviewing defendant, make an opening statement, call witnesses for the defense other than defendant, object to defendant being present at trial in distinctive jail clothing, and make a closing argument in the penalty phase, it was obvious that trial counsel did very little in the way of investigating the facts or the law and abandoned defendant's best interests; thus, trial counsel was ineffective because his performance was so deficient and his errors were so serious that defendant was deprived of a fair trial. Flores v. State, 350 Ark. 198, 85 S.W.3d 896 (2002).

Court's earlier mandate denying inmate's postconviction appeal was recalled because there was evidence that inmate's counsel, appointed pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.5, had been impaired during the hearing and inmate, who had been sentenced to death, was entitled to a new hearing with competent counsel. Lee v. State, 367 Ark. 84, 238 S.W.3d 52 (2006).

Postconviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was granted in a capital murder case based on ineffective assistance of counsel because failing to present a defense theory and arguing that the State did not meet its burden of proof was deficient; and the outcome would have likely been different if an accidental theory had been submitted to the jury. State v. Barrett, 371 Ark. 91, 263 S.W.3d 542 (2007).

Circuit court clearly erred in denying defendant's motion for postconviction relief, because the petition provided specific facts to establish actual prejudice due to counsel's conduct at trial and the allegations were not conclusory, when counsel's performance was deficient by failing to suppress defendant's custodial statement as a violation of the Sixth Amendment right to counsel, and the deficient performance prejudiced the defense since the inclusion of defendant's statement as the state's evidence at trial and used in affirming the conviction was sufficient to find that there was a reasonable probability that the decision reached would have been different absent counsel's failure to suppress the statement; the conviction resulted from a breakdown in the adversary process that rendered the result unreliable. Sparkman v. State, 373 Ark. 45, 281 S.W.3d 277 (2008).

In postconviction proceedings under this rule, the circuit court did not err in granting appellee a new trial because trial counsel had been ineffective in failing to inquire as to whether any witnesses could testify regarding appellee's whereabouts during the month in which the victim testified that the offense occurred. This, coupled with counsel's failure to object to the testimony that placed the incident outside the range in the information, prejudiced appellee. State v. Estrada, 2013 Ark. 89, 426 S.W.3d 405 (2013).

In postconviction proceedings under this rule, the circuit court did not err in granting appellee a new trial because trial counsel was ineffective in failing to use the rape victim's recorded statements to police to impeach her credibility. State v. Estrada, 2013 Ark. 89, 426 S.W.3d 405 (2013).

Petitioner should have been granted postconviction relief on an ineffective assistance of counsel claim where 10 counts of fourth-degree sexual assault were time-barred at the time the criminal information was filed and counsel failed to move to dismiss those offenses either before or at trial. That deficient performance prejudiced the defense because without those counts, the jury would have been called on to decide whether defendant was guilty of only two charges against two victims as opposed to 12 charges against three victims and the testimony of the alleged victim of the time-barred counts would have been subject to a limiting instruction had he still testified. Bynum v.

State, 2018 Ark. App. 477, 561 S.W.3d 755 (2018).

—Remand.

Matter was remanded for findings of fact addressing petitioner's ineffective-assistance-of-counsel claim because additional findings were warranted with respect to petitioner's allegation that counsel was ineffective when he failed to make sufficient motions for directed verdict; the trial court rejected petitioner's claim and found that appropriate motions for a directed verdict were made by counsel during trial, but that fact-finding was contradicted in the opinion of the court of appeals. Lee v. State, 2016 Ark. 293, 498 S.W.3d 283 (2016).

Matter was remanded to the trial court with further direction to settle the record by ensuring that the transcript of the two hearings was included in the record submitted on appeal, together with any evidence introduced at those hearings, because testimony and evidence presented at the hearings were material to a determination of petitioner's allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel. Lee v. State, 2016 Ark. 293, 498 S.W.3d 283 (2016).

—Search Warrant.

Circuit court properly denied petitioner postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to move for suppression of evidence on the basis that the search warrant was signed by the presiding judge before the affidavit establishing probable cause had been presented; the officer testified at the suppression hearing that the affidavit was signed in the presence of the judge and the circuit court did not clearly err when it found that the search warrant was properly issued. McCulley v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 313, 525 S.W.3d 10 (2017).

—Sentencing.

Postconviction relief was properly denied because petitioner's counsel was not ineffective for failing to sufficiently inform him of the sentencing consequences of a suspended sentence; petitioner was incorrect in his analysis of the effect of his suspended sentence, and upon violation, the trial court could not sentence him to a term greater than the maximum allowed by law. Bridgeman v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 321, 525 S.W.3d 459 (2017).

—Sentencing Phase.

Denial of petitioner's postconviction petition was proper; even if counsel was deficient in failing to prohibit the introduction of two subsequent charges during sentencing, petitioner did not show prejudice, given his four previous felony convictions that permitted an extended sentence. Vaughn v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 241, 519 S.W.3d 717 (2017).

—Speedy Trial.

Where speedy trial issue was never raised in the trial court, it cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. The appellant's remedy is to challenge the adequacy of his attorney's representation in a petition for post-conviction relief under this rule. Spivey v. State, 25 Ark. App. 269, 757 S.W.2d 186 (1988).

Where petitioner's speedy trial argument was based solely upon the time that elapsed between his arrest and his guilty plea and failed to consider excludable periods resulting from his requests for a psychological evaluation and a continuance, no speedy trial violation occurred, counsel was not ineffective for failing to raise the issue, and petitioner was not entitled to postconviction relief. Johnson v. State, 2009 Ark. 553 (2009).

Pro se post-conviction relief petitioner's ineffective assistance of counsel claim was rejected because, although petitioner alleged that his counsel failed to object to a violation of the speedy-trial rule, petitioner did not assert that the two periods during which the running of the period under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 was tolled were not properly excluded but merely stated that his attorney should have objected at trial on the basis of the rule. Shipman v. State, 2010 Ark. 499 (2010).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was appropriate because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, with regard to his speedy trial claim, the inmate merely stated the length of time that he awaited trial; his petition simply lacked any factual basis for his claim. Hayes v. State, 2011 Ark. 327, 383 S.W.3d 824 (2011).

Trial court properly denied defendant's petition for postconviction relief after he was convicted of rape because counsel was not ineffective for failing to assert a violation of his right to a speedy trial; because he was brought to trial within one year from the date of a mistrial, there was no violation of his right to a speedy trial under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1(c). Eubanks v. State, 2012 Ark. 142 (2012).

Defendant's petition for postconviction relief was properly denied because four periods of time, when excluded from the 442-day period between arrest and trial, left 287 days, which was well within the one-year period for a speedy trial. Rueda v. State, 2012 Ark. 144, 400 S.W.3d 226 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to file a motion to dismiss based on a speedy trial claim where the inmate failed to show that the periods of delay should not have been excluded from the speedy-trial calculation. Breeden v. State, 2014 Ark. 159, 432 S.W.3d 618 (2014).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because if appellant intended to allege that counsel denied him his right to a speedy trial, he failed to provide any facts to support the claim. Fletcher v. State, 2015 Ark. 106, 458 S.W.3d 234 (2015).

—Substantiation of Claim.

Evidence established ineffective assistance of counsel warranting post-conviction relief. Chambers v. State, 264 Ark. 279, 571 S.W.2d 79 (1978); Neal v. State, 270 Ark. 442, 605 S.W.2d 421 (1980); Clark v. State, 274 Ark. 81, 621 S.W.2d 857 (1981); Neal v. State, 274 Ark. 217, 623 S.W.2d 191 (1981); Thomas v. Lockhart, 738 F.2d 304 (8th Cir. 1984); Rode v. Lockhart, 675 F. Supp. 491 (E.D. Ark. 1987); Howard v. State, 301 Ark. 281, 783 S.W.2d 61 (1990); Russell v. State, 302 Ark. 274, 789 S.W.2d 720 (1990).

Mere allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel do not warrant post-conviction relief; allegations must be substantiated by proof. Gilbert v. State, 282 Ark. 504, 669 S.W.2d 454 (1984); Blakely v. State, 283 Ark. 138, 671 S.W.2d 183 (1984); Brents v. State, 285 Ark. 199, 686 S.W.2d 395 (1985); Scott v. State, 286 Ark. 339, 691 S.W.2d 859 (1985); Garmon v. State, 290 Ark. 371, 719 S.W.2d 699 (1986); Mock v. State, 292 Ark. 148, 728 S.W.2d 513 (1987); Robinson v. State, 296 Ark. 86, 752 S.W.2d 34 (1988); Gunn v. State, 296 Ark. 105, 752 S.W.2d 262 (1988).

If a petitioner under this rule contends that counsel should have raised an issue which turns on factual evidence, he is responsible for citing in his petition facts contained in record which would have supported the argument on appeal. Troutt v. State, 292 Ark. 192, 729 S.W.2d 139 (1987).

In determining whether counsel was effective on appeal, court will consider only what was included in the record and the prevailing legal authority at the time counsel made his decision about whether to argue the particular point on appeal. Troutt v. State, 292 Ark. 192, 729 S.W.2d 139 (1987).

Factual support must establish that the petitioner suffered actual prejudice from his attorney's conduct. Ross v. State, 292 Ark. 663, 732 S.W.2d 143 (1987).

In deciding an ineffectiveness claim, reasonableness of counsel's challenged conduct must be judged on the facts of particular case when viewed as of the time of counsel's conduct. Dumond v. State, 294 Ark. 379, 743 S.W.2d 779 (1988).

Petitioner cannot establish that his attorney was ineffective for not securing additional funds merely by reciting testing which could have been done or witnesses which could have been called had there been more money available. Wainwright v. State, 307 Ark. 569, 823 S.W.2d 449 (1992).

Relief denied where defendant failed to show that counsel had been ineffective in representation for failing to timely renew the motion for directed verdict. Thomas v. State, 330 Ark. 442, 954 S.W.2d 255 (1997).

Although affidavit for life insurance proceeds allegedly drafted by petitioner's attorney was used against her, it could not be argued successfully that it was the deciding factor in petitioner's conviction for murder of husband; the affidavit was only one of several pieces of evidence that pointed to petitioner's guilt, and petitioner could not prove that, but for the attorney's alleged errors concerning the affidavit, there was a reasonable probability that petitioner would have been acquitted. State v. Goff, 349 Ark. 532, 79 S.W.3d 320 (2002).

Pro se petitioner's appeal from the denial of her petitions for post-conviction relief under this rule was dismissed because she failed to provide factual substantiation for her claims of ineffective assistance of counsel or her claims that she was not competent to stand trial for capital murder. Robertson v. State, 2010 Ark. 300, 367 S.W.3d 538 (2010).

Supreme court did not consider inmate's motion to file a belated reply brief after his motion for a belated appeal from the denial of his petition for postconviction relief had been granted because it was clear that the petition for postconviction relief was without merit. In part, the inmate had made only general assertions that did not provide sufficient factual substantiation for his claims of prejudice with regard to the ineffective assistance of counsel; the inmate failed to identify any specific potential evidence that counsel would have discovered if an adequate investigation had been undertaken. Fernandez v. State, 2011 Ark. 418, 384 S.W.3d 520 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was proper because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, the additional evidence at issue would not have been sufficient to raise a reasonable probability that the factfinder's decision would have been different if the jury had heard the inmate's testimony. Lowe v. State, 2012 Ark. 185, 423 S.W.3d 6 (2012).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief because defendant's argument that counsel was ineffective was based on the flawed belief that there was no evidence supporting a charge against defendant; although defendant argued that counsel coerced defendant into pleading guilty, that was nothing more than a conclusory allegation. Scott v. State, 2012 Ark. 199, 406 S.W.3d 1 (2012).

Although petitioner asserted that counsel was ineffective for failure to renew his motion for a directed verdict and for failure to offer instructions on lesser-included offenses, petitioner failed to offer facts to support his conclusion that the failure to move for a directed verdict and offer instructions on lesser-included offenses prejudiced him or his defense. Mitchell v. State, 2012 Ark. 242 (2012).

Inmate's claim that counsel was ineffective in failing to perform an adequate investigation failed where his arguments were limited to conclusory allegations, and he did not describe any convincing defense that counsel could have presented, show how further investigation would have been fruitful, or state how the defense suffered from any lack of communication. Breedon v. State, 2014 Ark. 159, 432 S.W.3d 618 (2014).

Postconviction relief was not warranted because an applicant failed to offer any argument with regard to the finding that he was precluded from re-litigating the strategic and tactical reason for the rejection of the global plea offers; at any rate, this was not a basis for finding ineffective assistance of counsel. Mister v. State, 2014 Ark. 446 (2014).

—Trial Preparation.

Circuit court did not clearly err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief. Although appellant claimed that his attorney did not conduct an adequate investigation, appellant did not set forth any facts in the petition to demonstrate that, had counsel performed further investigation, he could have presented any additional witnesses or evidence so as to change the results of trial. Leak v. State, 2011 Ark. 353 (2011).

Inmate did not show counsel provided ineffective assistance by failing to adequately prepare for trial because the inmate did not show what more preparation, including hiring a medical expert, would have revealed. Norris v. State, 2013 Ark. 205, 427 S.W.3d 626 (2013).

Circuit court did not err in entering an order denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief alleging ineffective assistance of counsel based on a failure to investigate because defendant did not provide facts concerning evidence or information that counsel could have discovered that raised a reasonable probability that defendant would not have entered the plea. Young v. State, 2015 Ark. 65 (2015).

Petitioner failed to meet his burden of establishing that he was denied effective assistance of counsel under the Strickland standard because he offered no facts to show that counsel should have spent more time preparing for trial and less time on plea negotiations. Stalnaker v. State, 2015 Ark. 250, 464 S.W.3d 466 (2015).

Petitioner did not offer any proof that exculpatory evidence could have been found in the alleged rape victim's phone records, and although he claimed that if a hearing was held, he would have subpoena power to obtain and present the records, the strong presumption in favor of counsel's effectiveness could not be overcome by a mere possibility that an evidentiary hearing might produce evidence to bolster his allegation; the circuit court did not err in denying relief on this postconviction claim without a hearing. Luper v. State, 2016 Ark. 371, 501 S.W.3d 812 (2016).

Postconviction relief petitioner failed to demonstrate prejudice for his claim that counsel was ineffective for failure to investigate and for failure to interview the officer who conducted the search of the confidential informant. Also, trial counsel thoroughly cross-examined the witnesses at trial concerning the procedures used to search the confidential informant and brought out a number of issues with the search methodology used. Flemons v. State, 2016 Ark. 460, 505 S.W.3d 196 (2016).

A postconviction petitioner asserting ineffective assistance of counsel based on failure to investigate must describe how a more searching pretrial investigation would have changed the results of the trial. Flemons v. State, 2016 Ark. 460, 505 S.W.3d 196 (2016).

Trial court properly denied appellant postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to investigate and adequately prepare for trial; counsel questioned a detective about inconsistencies in a witness's testimony and in her prior statements, and appellant did not point out any additional information that could have been more effective in discrediting her testimony. Lee v. State, 2017 Ark. 337, 532 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Trial court properly denied appellant's postconviction relief petition because his claim that trial counsel failed to conduct an adequate pretrial investigation was conclusory and lacked the factual substantiation necessary to overcome the presumption that counsel's conduct fell within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance; appellant made no allegation as to how information would have changed the outcome of his trial or how he was prejudiced by counsel's failure to investigate. Gordon v. State, 2018 Ark. 73, 539 S.W.3d 586 (2018).

—Trial Tactics and Strategy.

Matters of trial tactics and strategy, even if proven to be unwise, are not grounds for postconviction relief. Neal v. State, 270 Ark. 442, 605 S.W.2d 421 (1980); Urquhart v. State, 275 Ark. 486, 631 S.W.2d 304 (1982); McDaniel v. State, 282 Ark. 170, 666 S.W.2d 400 (1984); Watson v. State, 282 Ark. 246, 667 S.W.2d 953 (1984); Campbell v. State, 283 Ark. 12, 670 S.W.2d 800 (1984); Tackett v. State, 284 Ark. 211, 680 S.W.2d 696 (1984); Neff v. State, 287 Ark. 88, 696 S.W.2d 736 (1985); Hill v. State, 292 Ark. 144, 728 S.W.2d 510, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 873, 108 S. Ct. 208, 98 L. Ed. 2d 159 (1987); Dumond v. State, 294 Ark. 379, 743 S.W.2d 779 (1988).

The calling and questioning of witnesses is a matter of trial tactics which is outside the scope of this rule. Hayes v. State, 280 Ark. 509, 660 S.W.2d 648 (1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1051, 104 S. Ct. 1331, 79 L. Ed. 2d 726 (1984);

McDaniel v. State, 282 Ark. 170, 666 S.W.2d 400 (1984); Neff v. State, 287 Ark. 88, 696 S.W.2d 736 (1985); Hicks v. State, 289 Ark. 83, 709 S.W.2d 87 (1986); Stephens v. State, 293 Ark. 231, 737 S.W.2d 147 (1987); Dumond v. State, 294 Ark. 379, 743 S.W.2d 779 (1988).

The question of whether the accused should take the stand is a question of trial strategy and outside the purview of this rule. McDaniel v. State, 282 Ark. 170, 666 S.W.2d 400 (1984); Lomax v. State, 285 Ark. 440, 688 S.W.2d 283 (1985); Robinson v. State, 295 Ark. 693, 751 S.W.2d 335 (1988); Johnson v. State, 325 Ark. 44, 924 S.W.2d 233 (1996).

Advice as to acceptance of plea agreement is a matter of trial tactics and strategy and is outside the purview of this rule. Lomax v. State, 285 Ark. 440, 688 S.W.2d 283 (1985); Jones v. State, 308 Ark. 555, 826 S.W.2d 233 (1992); Johnson v. State, 325 Ark. 44, 924 S.W.2d 233 (1996).

Decision to request a venue change is a matter of trial tactics. Neff v. State, 287 Ark. 88, 696 S.W.2d 736 (1985).

Lack of success with trial tactics does not equate with ineffective assistance of counsel. O'Rourke v. State, 298 Ark. 144, 765 S.W.2d 916 (1989).

The decision to advise a defendant not to take the stand, even if it proves improvident, is a tactical decision within the realm of counsel's professional judgment, and matters of trial tactics and strategy are not grounds for postconviction relief. Wainwright v. State, 307 Ark. 569, 823 S.W.2d 449 (1992).

Defendant's counsel was not ineffective for failing to renew a motion to hold witness an accomplice as a matter of law where the defense was a complete denial of any participation in the crime. Vickers v. State, 320 Ark. 437, 898 S.W.2d 26 (1995).

An Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 appeal asserting ineffective assistance of counsel did not provide a forum to debate trial tactics or strategy, even if that strategy proved to be improvident; thus, defendant's counsel was not deficient in failing to call a witness at trial. Jenkins v. State, 348 Ark. 686, 75 S.W.3d 180 (2002).

Appellant failed to show that counsel was ineffective for failing to present significant mitigation testimony at the penalty phase of his capital murder trial; counsel called a mental health professional to explain appellant's mental illness and his refusal to call appellant's mother was clearly a question of trial strategy. Rankin v. State, 365 Ark. 255, 227 S.W.3d 924 (2006).

In defendant's trial on a charge of felony possession of drug paraphernalia, trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to request a jury instruction on the lesser-included offense of misdemeanor possession of drug paraphernalia because it was a matter of trial strategy. Petitioner's defense was an all-or-nothing strategy based upon an assertion of complete innocence of the crime, and an instruction on the lesser-included offense would have been inconsistent with this strategy; counsel was not ineffective merely because the all-or-nothing strategy failed. Johnson v. State, 2009 Ark. 460, 344 S.W.3d 74 (2009).

In a case in which an inmate had been convicted of one count of delivery of a controlled substance and received an enhanced sentence pursuant to § 5-64-411(a)(7) (now § 5-64-411(a)(8)), he unsuccessfully argued that his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to move for a continuance following the state's amendment of the charging information. While his timeline regarding the informant's controlled buy from him and the police officer's measurement of the distance between the church and the sale location was correct, he failed to cite any authority for the proposition that trial counsel had a duty to ask for a continuance based thereon, and trial counsel made the tactical decision to proceed with the trial as scheduled. McCraney v. State, 2010 Ark. 96, 360 S.W.3d 144 (2010).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on the cumulative effect of counsel's alleged errors was improper; counsel's decision not to seek analysis of fingerprints at the crime scene may have been based on the prisoner's acknowledgement that the prisoner's fingerprints would be found and on counsel's hope that the jury would be swayed by the prosecution's failure to provide definitive fingerprint evidence. Anderson v. State, 2010 Ark. 404, 373 S.W.3d 876 (2010).

Defendant's motion for postconviction relief was properly denied because counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to testimony from a police officer that referenced a photograph of defendant taken at the jail; counsel's decision not to call further attention to the remark by seeking admonition was supported by reasonable professional judgment. Mitchem v. State, 2011 Ark. 148 (2011).

As defendant did not demonstrate that counsel's decisions regarding an independent mental-health evaluation or an involuntary intoxication defense rather than self-defense were not supported by reasonable professional judgment or that defendant was prejudiced as a result, defendant was not entitled to postconviction relief under this rule. Winston v. State, 2011 Ark. 264 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was appropriate because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, counsel testified that he consciously decided to present evidence concerning a skin tag on the inmate's body later because he sought to deprive the prosecution of any opportunity to rehabilitate the witness testimony from what have been construed as significant omissions; counsel's testimony was that he had concern that the witnesses might have had some knowledge of the growth and given detrimental answers and those actions fell well within the broad range of conduct that a reasonable professional might have chosen. Croy v. State, 2011 Ark. 284, 383 S.W.3d 367 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief because counsel's decision not to seek further DNA testing after the state's tests indicated a match to defendant was a strategic decision that did not support an ineffective-assistance claim; a second independent DNA test would not have excluded from evidence the victim's testimony that she had been raped 20 times by defendant. Clarks v. State, 2011 Ark. 296 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was proper because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, although the inmate might have successfully quashed the amended information, he was not prejudiced by any resulting error, because the prosecutor would have simply refiled the charges since the State's dismissal of a case by nolle prosequi did not bar a subsequent prosecution under § 16-89-122; Moreover, trial counsel appeared to have made a well-reasoned tactical decision not to object to the amendment. Hoyle v. State, 2011 Ark. 321, 388 S.W.3d 901 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was proper because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, the trial court did not clearly err in finding that counsel made a strategic decision based on reasonable professional judgment not to raise an objection to certain hearsay. Hoyle v. State, 2011 Ark. 321, 388 S.W.3d 901 (2011).

Circuit court did not clearly err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief. Although appellant claimed that his attorney was ineffective because he did not question the credibility of a prosecution witness, the decision of appellant's counsel not to delve into the matter further was in all likelihood a matter of trial strategy and therefore not within the purview of this rule. Leak v. State, 2011 Ark. 353 (2011).

While counsel's persuasive techniques did not rise to the level of coercion, defendant's petition under this rule raised issues that challenged whether counsel's strategic decision to recommend a plea offer was based upon reasonable professional judgment. Riley v. State, 2011 Ark. 394 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was proper because counsel testified that she encouraged the inmate not to testify because the state would ask him about a previous murder conviction; according to trial counsel, the inmate weighed his options, decided to heed her advice, and chose not to testify. In denying the inmate's petition, the circuit court stated that it did not know any attorney who would encourage a client to testify knowing that the jury would learn about a prior murder conviction and on that issue, the supreme court deferred to the circuit court's superior position to resolve credibility issues. Lockhart v. State, 2011 Ark. 396 (2011).

Because counsel was not ineffective for failing to raise a speedy-trial argument that was without merit, and because counsel's trial tactics or strategy were supported by reasonable professional judgment, defendant was not entitled to postconviction relief under this rule. Matthews v. State, 2011 Ark. 397 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief under this rule was appropriate because he failed to meet his burden of establishing that counsel was ineffective. The fact that there was a witness or witnesses who could have offered testimony beneficial to the defense was not, itself, proof of counsel's ineffectiveness. Further, the record clearly demonstrated that trial counsel's decision not to call any witnesses regarding the inmate's mental status was based on reasonable professional judgment. Wade v. State, 2011 Ark. 411 (2011).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was improper, in part, because the circuit court made findings based on assumptions that counsel did not object for strategic reasons and, based on those findings, determined that this allegation presented no basis for relief. However, the supreme court was unable to simply say from the face of the petition or the record that relief was not warranted where there was no evidence to support the circuit court's findings; a hearing was necessary to determine whether counsel's failure to object to testimony was, in fact, a matter of trial strategy. Montgomery v. State, 2011 Ark. 462, 385 S.W.3d 189 (2011).

Trial court properly denied defendant's petition for postconviction relief after defendant pled nolo contendere to first-degree murder; defendant failed to show prejudice on a claim that counsel was ineffective for failing to object to the trial court's determination that defendant's 300-month sentence was required to run consecutively to a prior sentence. Scott v. State, 2012 Ark. 159 (2012).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for postconviction relief because counsel was not ineffective for failing to move for a directed verdict on the issue of the amount of restraint used to commit a kidnapping; there was evidence that defendant told the victim defendant was a police officer and showed the victim a badge, which constituted deception. Prater v. State, 2012 Ark. 164, 402 S.W.3d 68 (2012).

Inmate's motions for extension of time in which to file his brief-in-chief and for photocopying at public expense of the transcript from the circuit court's evidentiary hearing were dismissed because it was clear that he could not prevail if his appeal were allowed to proceed. Counsel's advice not to testify was purely one of trial strategy, as was an inmate's ultimate decision not to testify; thus, ineffective-assistance claims based on counsel's advice in such situations were not cognizable under this rule. Cowan v. State, 2012 Ark. 229 (2012).

Trial court did not err by denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief pursuant to this rule based on his ineffective assistance of counsel claim, because trial counsel's decision not to call witnesses was a matter of trial strategy outside the purview of Rule 37.1. Furthermore, substantial Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) evidence provided overwhelming proof of appellant's guilt; and trial counsel argued various motions to suppress and to exclude the Rule 404(b) evidence. Banks v. State, 2013 Ark. 147 (2013).

Counsel was not ineffective for failing to spend time sufficient time discussing the case and developing trial strategy with appellant because appellant did not show that there was a different and more successful strategy that counsel could have adopted; counsel testified that he met with appellant on 15-20 occasions and that he investigated every defense that appellant proposed. Boatright v. State, 2014 Ark. 66 (2014).

Appellant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel because he failed to substantiate his claim that counsel was ineffective based on the failure to interview or call any witness, and he did not name any particular individual that counsel should have interviewed or called as a witness or what information a particular witness would have provided. Boatright v. State, 2014 Ark. 66 (2014).

While an objection to the relevance of testimony that petitioner violated a bond condition could have been appropriate, the issue was whether counsel's failure to object fell below the proper standard; counsel said he made a conscious decision not to object, and evidence of flight was admissible to show consciousness of guilt, and thus the failure to object did not constitute a Strickland violation for postconviction relief purposes. Hayes v. State, 2014 Ark. 104, 431 S.W.3d 882 (2014).

Counsel made a conscious decision not to request a limiting instruction based on reasoned, professional judgment, and the alleged error did not support reversal of the denial of postconviction relief. Hayes v. State, 2014 Ark. 104, 431 S.W.3d 882 (2014).

There was no error in the finding that the decision by counsel not to object to petitioner's son's testimony was attributable to trial strategy; counsel did not want to call the issue to the jury's attention. Hayes v. State, 2014 Ark. 104, 431 S.W.3d 882 (2014).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in moving to suppress the inmate's confession based on an alleged Miranda violation where a recording of an investigator's interview did not support the allegation that he was threatened or the claim that he was in custody at the time. Breeden v. State, 2014 Ark. 159, 432 S.W.3d 618 (2014).

Appellant failed to show that his trial counsel was ineffective in failing to call his wife to testify where her testimony would not have shed light on whether the intellectually challenged victim was capable of consenting. Stewart v. State, 2014 Ark. 419, 443 S.W.3d 538 (2014).

Appellant failed to show that a formal objection to application of the rape-shield statute would have been successful given counsel's numerous unsuccessful attempts to elicit testimony concerning the victim's prior sexual contact. Stewart v. State, 2014 Ark. 419, 443 S.W.3d 538 (2014).

Appellant failed to show how more investigation into the victim's mental status would have uncovered specific facts benefitting his defense. Stewart v. State, 2014 Ark. 419, 443 S.W.3d 538 (2014).

Circuit court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because counsel was not ineffective for failing to seek an admonition or to move for a mistrial when a witness testified; the trial court was not clearly erroneous in finding that the decision was one of trial strategy or that the decision not to call further attention to the remark by seeking an admonition was supported by reasonable professional judgment. Sims v. State, 2015 Ark. 363, 472 S.W.3d 107 (2015).

Circuit court did not err in finding that counsel's trial strategy—which involved failing to object to several of the child victims' statements from different witnesses so that the inconsistencies would be evident to the jurors—was not grounds for a finding of ineffective assistance of counsel for purposes of postconviction relief, even if the strategy was imperfect. Smith v. State, 2016 Ark. 417, 504 S.W.3d 595 (2016).

Inmate was not entitled to postconviction relief based on trial counsel's failure to call certain witnesses who would have testified that the inmate drove a vehicle to the crime scene but did not participate in charged robberies, because calling these witnesses would have undercut counsel's defense theory, based on misidentification, that the inmate was not present at the crime scene, and this choice of strategy was not unreasonable. Williams v. State, 2016 Ark. 459, 504 S.W.3d 603 (2016).

Trial court did not err in denying postconviction relief because counsel's strategic decision to not present mitigation evidence for sentencing fell within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance; counsel made an investigation of possible mitigating evidence and was aware that defendant had been diagnosed with an impulse-control disorder. Flemons v. State, 2016 Ark. 460, 505 S.W.3d 196 (2016).

Trial court did not err in denying postconviction relief based on counsel's failure to raise an entrapment defense; counsel explained her reasons for not pursuing an inconsistent defense to what she believed was a relatively strong innocence defense, and even if appellant was entitled to an instruction on entrapment, counsel was not ineffective simply for failing to request it. Flemons v. State, 2016 Ark. 460, 505 S.W.3d 196 (2016).

Trial counsel's disparaging statements to the jury about defendant in a rape trial did not provide a basis for postconviction relief; counsel's strategy was reasonable given the particular circumstances presented, including defendant's statements to the police admitting that he had engaged in sexual contact with the victim, his stepdaughter. Hartman v. State, 2017 Ark. 7, 508 S.W.3d 28 (2017).

Circuit court did not clearly err when it concluded that trial counsel's decision to call an accomplice to testify without interviewing him first was not ineffective assistance where counsel testified that calling the accomplice was to put appellant's participation in the murder into perspective; the decision whether to call particular witnesses is a matter of trial strategy outside the purview of Ark. R. Crim. P. 37. Swain v. State, 2017 Ark. 117, 515 S.W.3d 580 (2017).

Trial court properly denied appellant postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to develop a successful trial strategy; counsel testified about the investigation that he conducted and his reasoning in developing a defense strategy to discredit the identifications of the defendant, and appellant failed to demonstrate both that further discussion or investigation could have produced information to develop an alternate strategy or that counsel's decision to adopt the trial strategy used was unreasonable. Lee v. State, 2017 Ark. 337, 532 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to pursue a defense theory that the rape victim's mother influenced the victim to fabricate the allegations against him where the choice to not pursue that defense theory was a reasonable trial-strategy choice. Burnside v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 691, 537 S.W.3d 796 (2017).

Trial court properly found that defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object and move for mistrial when a witness's testimony alluded to other victims; defense counsel testified that he did not want to draw attention to the fact that there were other victims and his strategy was not unreasonable, and, in any event, the record contained testimony from more than just the victim to corroborate the allegation. Pafford v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 700, 537 S.W.3d 302 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied appellant's petition for postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for advising appellant not to testify; even without appellant's testimony, evidence was presented that the victims had been in a physical altercation with defendant's cousin at the time of the incident. Nelson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 583, 566 S.W.3d 530 (2018).

Denial of postconviction relief was not erroneous, as the circuit court did not clearly err in finding that trial counsel's failure to insist that the circuit court give a second-degree-murder instruction was a matter of trial strategy, which included making the jury find self-defense or imperfect self-defense. Riley v. State, 2021 Ark. 70, 620 S.W.3d 511 (2021).

Circuit court properly denied defendant's petition for postconviction relief—claiming ineffective assistance of trial counsel and asking for a new trial—because his contentions failed to overcome the strong presumption that counsel's conduct fell within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance where defendant's credibility was an essential part of the defense strategy, and in order for such a strategy to be successful, defendant needed to testify. Britt v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 486, 612 S.W.3d 175 (2020).

—Venue.

Petitioner failed to meet his burden of establishing that he was denied effective assistance of counsel under the Strickland standard because counsel was not ineffective for failing to ask for a change of venue; petitioner did not state what circumstances would have formed a basis on which the trial court would have granted a motion for change of venue to support the assertion that he could not have received a fair trial without a change of venue. Stalnaker v. State, 2015 Ark. 250, 464 S.W.3d 466 (2015).

Inmate was not entitled to postconviction relief based on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to move for a change of venue, as counsel was aware of the pretrial publicity and made the strategic decision not to file such a motion but to try to capitalize on the inmate's reputation in the community. Van Winkle v. State, 2016 Ark. 98, 486 S.W.3d 778 (2016).

—Witnesses.

Ineffective assistance of counsel may result when there is a failure on the attorney's part to take reasonable steps to procure the attendance of a witness if material to the defense. When counsel is not given complete information concerning the location of witnesses, the burden of the petitioner to prove ineffective assistance of counsel is more difficult. Chandler v. State, 297 Ark. 432, 762 S.W.2d 796 (1989).

Circuit court did not clearly err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief. Although appellant claimed that his attorney was ineffective because he did not subpoena a particular witness, appellant failed to name the witness, provide a summary of his testimony, and establish that the testimony would have been admissible into evidence. Leak v. State, 2011 Ark. 353 (2011).

Counsel was not ineffective for failing to investigate and interview witnesses where counsel exhibited reasonable professional judgment in their stated reasons for not calling these witnesses. Stover v. State, 2016 Ark. 167, 489 S.W.3d 674 (2016).

Petitioner failed to show that, had counsel presented certain testimony or asked additional questions, the outcome of the trial would have been different; thus, prejudice was not shown and the circuit court did not err in denying post-conviction relief. Luper v. State, 2016 Ark. 371, 501 S.W.3d 812 (2016).

No hearing was required on an inmate's postconviction claim that trial counsel was ineffective for not subpoenaing a witness, because (1) the witness indicated an intention to invoke the Fifth Amendment, and (2) the circuit court made adequate written findings. Ross v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 234, 518 S.W.3d 758 (2017).

Denying postconviction relief on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to cross-examine a former police officer as to her termination was not clearly erroneous given counsel's testimony that she opted not to cross-examine because the trial court had stated that it would exclude the testimony. Blackwell v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 248, 520 S.W.3d 294 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to investigate and properly cross-examine the minor victim because her testimony was fabricated and taken almost directly word for word from a sexually explicit romance novel; petitioner failed to point to any specific passages or material from the book that he claimed were applicable to the victim, he did not cite a theme in the book, only the book itself, and he did not explain how pursuing that theory would have changed the course of the trial. Burnside v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 691, 537 S.W.3d 796 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to cross-examine the minor victim about various prior inconsistent statements. Burnside v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 691, 537 S.W.3d 796 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to call the brother of the minor victim to testify where the brother's testimony about where he was when the alleged rapes occurred would not have made a material difference, given the victim's testimony that the rapes occurred when she and petitioner were alone together except for one occasion when her brother was in the next room. Burnside v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 691, 537 S.W.3d 796 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to impeach the minor victim with proof of other sexual misconduct allegations that she and her sister had made in the past; a minor's prior sexual activity is generally excluded in a criminal sexual-assault trial, and petitioner had not shown how his trial counsel's failure to fully explore the victim's and her sister's sexual history as a trial defense rose to the level of effectively having no counsel. Burnside v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 691, 537 S.W.3d 796 (2017).

Trial court properly denied appellant's post-conviction relief petition because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to interview witnesses and codefendants; appellant failed to provide a summary of the witnesses' testimony and establish that the testimony would have been admissible, and he failed to demonstrate that had counsel performed any further investigation and presented the witness or witnesses, the outcome of the trial would have been different. Gordon v. State, 2018 Ark. 73, 539 S.W.3d 586 (2018).

Trial court properly denied appellant's post-conviction relief petition because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to call a witness to testify at trial; appellant failed to demonstrate he was prejudiced by the inability to call a witness to corroborate his own custodial statement, and he failed to provide a summary of the witness's testimony or show that it would have been otherwise admissible had the witness been permitted to testify. Gordon v. State, 2018 Ark. 73, 539 S.W.3d 586 (2018).

Trial counsel's failure to have at least attempted to present codefendant's testimony during the penalty phase of postconviction petitioner's trial constituted deficient performance, and trial counsel's error was sufficient to undermine confidence in the jury's decision to sentence petitioner to death. Therefore, the circuit court did not clearly err in its determination that trial counsel was ineffective for his failure to call codefendant as a witness during the penalty phase. Reams v. State, 2018 Ark. 324, 560 S.W.3d 441 (2018).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on the failure to call witnesses during the sentencing phase failed where petitioner received a sentence less than the maximum sentence he could have received, and as a result, he could not show prejudice from the sentence. England v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 137, 543 S.W.3d 553 (2018).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on the failure to call character witnesses on petitioner's behalf failed where at most, their testimony would have challenged the alleged victims' credibility, and petitioner could not show a reasonable probability that the outcome of his trial would have been different. England v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 137, 543 S.W.3d 553 (2018).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on the failure to put on proof that a stepdaughter witness was untruthful failed where trial counsel questioned her about the event in question, i.e., when some of her family alleged that she had forged her grandmother's name on a check; and petitioner did not name the witnesses that should have been called and summarize their testimony. England v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 137, 543 S.W.3d 553 (2018).

Circuit court properly denied appellant's petition for postconviction relief because trial counsel's decision not to call additional witnesses during sentencing was a matter of professional judgment; counsel testified that he called appellant's mother and his fiancée to testify because they were the "most poignant" and that he did not call additional witnesses because he believed their testimony would have been "cumulative". Nelson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 583, 566 S.W.3d 530 (2018).

Trial court did not err in denying inmate's postconviction petition alleging ineffective assistance of counsel because petitioner failed to demonstrate that counsel's decision not to interview or call inmate-alibi witnesses was unreasonable; the decision not to call the inmates, who would have testified that petitioner did not assault the officer and the warden, was based on reasonable professional judgment and fell within the realm of trial strategy. Hinton v. State, 2019 Ark. 136, 572 S.W.3d 381 (2019).

Trial court properly denied postconviction relief because there was no clear error in the trial court's finding that had a witness been called, her testimony about other possible suspects would have been inadmissible hearsay; petitioner made no argument that the testimony would have been admissible under any hearsay exception. Gould v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 418, 585 S.W.3d 182 (2019).

Postconviction relief was properly denied as counsel was not ineffective in failing to call petitioner's cousin to testify where petitioner had not provided a summary of his cousin's testimony but made conclusory allegations that her testimony would have been favorable and would have supported the proposition that the victim had "conspired to retaliate false charges against petitioner in order to arrest and convict him" and trial counsel testified that he did not call the cousin as a witness because the cousin had not been present during the assault and had only seen the victim on the morning before the events surrounding the crimes unfolded.

Reynolds v. State, 2020 Ark. 174, 599 S.W.3d 120 (2020).

Petitioner failed to name or provide testimony of specific mitigation witnesses, and thus he was not entitled to post-conviction relief based on ineffective assistance of counsel. Lacefield v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 534 (2020).

Postconviction petitioner's claim of ineffective assistance for counsel's failure to properly cross-examine a witness failed; petitioner had to show that the testimony and evidence would have been admissible, which he failed to establish. Lacefield v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 534 (2020).

Although defendant's counsel did not ask witnesses during cross-examination any of the questions that defendant had specifically requested in writing, defendant was not entitled to postconviction relief because defense counsel's decisions at trial were professionally reasonable and within the permissible scope of trial strategy and because defendant did not show that had counsel asked witnesses the questions proposed by defendant the trial would have had a reasonable probability of turning out differently. Barrett v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 21, 617 S.W.3d 287 (2021).

Instructions to Jury.

The omission of the actus reus element from the instruction for attempted rape and attempted kidnapping is not "structural error"; therefore, an argument assigning error to such an omission cannot be considered for the first time in a proceeding under this rule. Sasser v. State, 338 Ark. 375, 993 S.W.2d 901 (1999).

Appellant's assertion of error by the trial court in permitting a cautionary instruction to include certain language was not cognizable in a proceeding under this rule. Britt v. State, 2009 Ark. 569, 349 S.W.3d 290 (2009).

Issues Previously Considered.

Issues considered on appeal are not grounds for relief under this rule. Neal v. State, 270 Ark. 442, 605 S.W.2d 421 (1980); Rowe v. State, 275 Ark. 37, 627 S.W.2d 16 (1982), superseded by statute as stated in Van Jenkins v. State, 2017 Ark. 288, 529 S.W.3d 236 (2017); Watson v. State, 282 Ark. 246, 667 S.W.2d 953 (1984); Clines v. State, 282 Ark. 541, 669 S.W.2d 883 (1984); Blakely v. State, 283 Ark. 138, 671 S.W.2d 183 (1984); Orsini v. State, 287 Ark. 456, 701 S.W.2d 114 (1985); Abdullah v. State, 294 Ark. 547, 744 S.W.2d 727, cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1025, 108 S. Ct. 2001, 100 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1988).

This rule was not designed as a substitute for asserting error in accordance with the controlling rules of procedure and does not permit a petitioner to raise a question which might have been raised at trial or on the record on direct appeal, unless the question is so fundamental as to render the judgment void and open to collateral attack. McCroskey v. State, 278 Ark.

156, 644 S.W.2d 271 (1983); Hill v. State, 278 Ark. 194, 644 S.W.2d 282 (1983); Hayes v. State, 280 Ark. 509, 660 S.W.2d 648 (1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1051, 104 S. Ct. 1331, 79 L. Ed. 2d 726 (1984); Watson v. State, 282 Ark. 246, 667 S.W.2d 953 (1984); Orsini v. State, 287 Ark. 456, 701 S.W.2d 114 (1985); Madewell v. State, 290 Ark. 580, 720 S.W.2d 913 (1986); Benson v. State, 293 Ark. 513, 739 S.W.2d 163 (1987).

This rule does not provide a method for raising questions which were properly considered at trial and on appeal. Hayes v. State, 280 Ark. 509, 660 S.W.2d 648 (1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1051, 104 S. Ct. 1331, 79 L. Ed. 2d 726 (1984); Orsini v. State, 287 Ark. 456, 701 S.W.2d 114 (1985); Benson v. State, 293 Ark. 513, 739 S.W.2d 163 (1987).

This rule does not provide a remedy when an issue could have been raised in the trial court or on appeal, unless the issue presents a question so fundamental that the judgment of conviction is rendered absolutely void. Robinson v. State, 295 Ark. 693, 751 S.W.2d 335 (1988).

Issues such as the sufficiency of the evidence and trial errors that could have been or were raised on direct appeal were not cognizable in a petition under this rule. Davis v. State, 2013 Ark. 118 (2013).

Jurisdiction of Trial Court.

Defendant was not entitled to post-conviction relief on ground that trial court lacked subject matter jurisdiction or that counsel was ineffective in failing to raise such claim. Holt v. State, 281 Ark. 210, 662 S.W.2d 822 (1984).

Once Supreme Court has affirmed a conviction, trial court has lost jurisdiction in the matter. Edgemon v. State, 292 Ark. 465, 730 S.W.2d 898 (1987).

Circuit court lacked jurisdiction to consider an appellant's petitions for postconviction relief from his theft by receiving, possession of a firearm by a felon, robbery, fleeing, and aggravated assault convictions where his first and second petitions were invalid under subsections (d) and (e) of this rule for lack of verification and his third petition was not filed within the 90-day time limit of Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2(c). Shaw v. State, 363 Ark. 156, 211 S.W.3d 506 (2005).

Dismissal of inmate's appeal from the denial of his petition for postconviction relief was appropriate pursuant to this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2 because, without an original timely petition in compliance with the rules, the trial court had no jurisdiction to consider his later-filed amended petitions. The appeal was dismissed because the trial court was, and therefore, the supreme court was, without jurisdiction to consider the claims. Williamson v. State, 2012 Ark. 170 (2012).

Subsection (b) of this rule is not jurisdictional in nature. Once jurisdiction is established by a defendant's timely filing of a verified petition, a circuit court has discretion to allow the defendant to file an amended petition that complies with subsection (b). Barrow v. State, 2012 Ark. 197 (2012).

Trial court properly denied appellant post-conviction relief because the challenge appellant would make concerning a transfer within the judicial district was not one that could be raised in postconviction proceedings. Lee v. State, 2017 Ark. 337, 532 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Juveniles.

The structure and purpose of the juvenile code make it incompatible with relief within the scope of this rule, which contemplates the trial, conviction, and sentencing of an adult prisoner under the criminal code. Robinson ex rel. Robinson v. Shock, 282 Ark. 262, 667 S.W.2d 956 (1984).

A juvenile who has been adjudged delinquent and committed to youth services is not a "prisoner in custody," nor is he "under sentence by a circuit court," and, thus, seeking relief for juvenile offenders under this rule is inappropriate. Robinson ex rel. Robinson v. Shock, 282 Ark. 262, 667 S.W.2d 956 (1984).

Pursuant to § 9-27-325, this rule applies to juvenile delinquency proceedings. Walker v. State, 330 Ark. 652, 955 S.W.2d 905 (1997).

Lesser Included Offenses.

The right to have the jury instructed on all lesser included offenses supported by the evidence is not a fundamental right that warrants review of the omission of such instructions for the first time in a proceeding under this rule. Kennedy v. State, 338 Ark. 125, 991 S.W.2d 606 (1999).

Limitation of Petition.

A motion for a trial transcript was denied where petitioner failed to demonstrate that he was entitled to a transcript at public expense, where his motion was not attached to or incorporated into a petition for post-conviction relief, and where a petition for post-conviction relief would not have been within the three-year period from the date of commitment. Washington v. State, 270 Ark. 840, 606 S.W.2d 365 (1980).

Mandamus.

All of petitioner's assertions had been ruled on, and the court saw nothing that remained for the trial court to do; even if any of his allegations had not been ruled on, his failure to seek a writ of mandamus barred further action, and although he suggested that case law in this regard be overruled, the court did not find that such consideration was warranted. Hayes v. State, 2014 Ark. 104, 431 S.W.3d 882 (2014).

Miranda Warnings.

Two affidavits attached to defendant's current motion for postconviction relief did not create a new ground that was sufficient to void his conviction because the adequacy of Miranda warnings did not implicate a fundamental right that was capable of voiding the judgment; instead, a challenge to Miranda warnings had to be first raised at trial. Also, the precedent announced in Mayfield v. State, 293 Ark. 216 (1987), which provided a clearer definition of what constitutes a sufficient Miranda warning, could not be applied retroactively to defendant's convictions when raised for the first time in an untimely postconviction proceeding. Munnerlyn v. State, 2018 Ark. 161, 545 S.W.3d 207 (2018).

Motion to Alter Judgment.

Where a motion to vacate a judgment was filed after the sentencing of the defendant, the trial judge could not consider the motion unless it was amended so as to be treated under this rule; however, since a valid sentence had been put into execution, the trial court was without jurisdiction to modify, amend, or revise it in any event. Shipman v. State, 261 Ark. 559, 550 S.W.2d 424 (1977).

Trial court may treat a motion to correct a judgment as a petition for post-conviction relief, regardless of style of pleading, if it alleges cognizable grounds. Avants v. State, 293 Ark. 24, 732 S.W.2d 149 (1987).

Motion to Amend.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellant's motion to amend his post-conviction petition under this rule because appellant clearly sought to amend by filing an expanded petition exceeding the ten-page limit in this rule, and the trial court's findings that the ten-page limitation was reasonable under the circumstances were not clearly erroneous; although appellant asserted that he demonstrated in the motion to amend that he was unable to adequately present his claims in ten or fewer pages, he failed to present any cogent reason that the claims set out in the motion would demonstrate a need for an expanded petition. Rodriguez v. State, 2010 Ark. 78 (2010).

Circuit court did not err in denying defendant's motion to file an enlarged postconviction petition because he failed to state in concise non-repetitive, factually specific language, the grounds upon which his ineffective assistance of counsel claims were based and thus squandered away the opportunity he had to raise the relevant claims in his petition. Evans v. State, 2014 Ark. 6 (2014).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in striking appellant's amended petition for post-conviction relief because it found no change in circumstances from the previous ruling. Sorum v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 354, 582 S.W.3d 18 (2019).

Appellant's claim that the trial court erred by denying his request to file an enlarged postconviction petition was not preserved because the trial court never ruled on the motion. Sorum v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 354, 582 S.W.3d 18 (2019).

Page Count.

Defendant is free to demonstrate that he is unable to adequately present his claims in ten or fewer pages, as required by subsection (e) of this rule, in a motion to file an overlength petition. Hill v. Norris, 96 F.3d 1085 (8th Cir. 1996).

Limiting petitions under this rule to 10 pages in length is an entirely reasonable restriction on petitioners for postconviction relief and does not violate their due process rights. Rowbottom v. State, 341 Ark. 33, 13 S.W.3d 904 (2000).

Trial court abused its discretion in counting the final page of an 11 page petition for post conviction relief filed by a defendant who had been sentenced to death against the 10 page limit set forth in this rule and summarily dismissing the petition on that basis where the final page of the petition contained only defendant's certificate of service; trial court could, however, properly refuse to consider defendant's 16 page "enhanced" petition. Sanders v. State, 352 Ark. 16, 98 S.W.3d 35 (2003).

Parole Eligibility.

A question involving parole eligibility is not an attack on the validity of the sentence imposed, but rather is an attack on the execution of the sentence; such a challenge is not a proper matter to be considered in a petition for post-conviction relief. Carter v. State, 283 Ark. 23, 670 S.W.2d 439 (1984).

The United States Constitution does not require the state to furnish the defendant with information about parole eligibility in order for the defendant's plea of guilty to be voluntary, and erroneous legal advice on parole eligibility does not automatically render a plea involuntary. Haywood v. State, 288 Ark. 266, 704 S.W.2d 168 (1986); Garmon v. State, 290 Ark. 371, 719 S.W.2d 699 (1986).

Where defendant was told the facts about parole eligibility as they were at the time of his conviction, the change in the situation did not render his plea involuntary. Even if it were concluded that erroneous advice about parole eligibility was given, that would not make the plea involuntary. Green v. State, 297 Ark. 49, 759 S.W.2d 211 (1988).

Although defendant alleged that he received ineffective assistance of counsel because his attorney misinformed him of the time he would be required to serve before becoming eligible for parole, the appellate court could not conclude that the circuit court clearly erred in determining that defendant did not receive incorrect advice regarding his eligibility for parole. Riddle v. State, 2015 Ark. 72 (2015).

Petition.

A court will not consider matters outside the scope of a Rule 37 petition. Morgan v. State, 296 Ark. 370, 757 S.W.2d 530 (1988).

The court may place reasonable limitations on the form of Rule 37 petitions before it. Maulding v. State, 299 Ark. 570, 776 S.W.2d 339 (1989).

The page limitation on post-conviction relief petitions is a procedural rule and not an ex post facto application of substantive law, since the rules which govern the form and length of petitions for post-conviction relief do not alter the substantive offense charged or the punishment attached to the crime. Maulding v. State, 299 Ark. 570, 776 S.W.2d 339 (1989).

Due process does not require courts to provide an unlimited opportunity to present post-conviction claims or prevent a court from setting limits on the number of pages a petition may contain, and ten pages is a reasonable restriction to place on petitioners for post-conviction relief. Washington v. State, 308 Ark. 322, 823 S.W.2d 900 (1992).

Exhibits to a petition are considered a part of the petition for the purposes of determining whether the petition conforms to the ten-page limitation, and petitions will not be accepted which exceed ten pages, unless the petitioner can demonstrate that he cannot adequately present his claims to the court in only ten pages. Washington v. State, 308 Ark. 322, 823 S.W.2d 900 (1992).

Rule 37 petitions, whether typed or handwritten, must conform to this rule with respect to the width of margins, the number of lines per page, and the number of words per line. Burkhart v. State, 310 Ark. 185, 834 S.W.2d 154 (1992).

A petition for post-conviction relief attacking a judgment, regardless of the label placed on it by the petitioner, is considered pursuant to this rule. Bailey v. State, 312 Ark. 180, 848 S.W.2d 391 (1993).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in choosing to dismiss the pro se postconviction petition because the margins did not comply with this rule; the trial court found that all of the left and right margins were less than one inch, all of the top margins were less than one inch, and all of the bottom margins, except one, were less than one inch, and that one exception was less than one and half inches. Badger v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 246, 626 S.W.3d 447 (2021).

Petition Insufficient.

Relief cannot be granted where there is no evidence that the defendant actually filed, or even tendered, a pleading that could be identified or rationally treated as a Rule 37 petition.

Terry v. State, 273 Ark. 544, 621 S.W.2d 476 (1981).

Post-conviction remedies under this rule require more than bare allegations and must be supported by clear substantiation of fact. St. John v. Lockhart, 286 Ark. 234, 691 S.W.2d 148 (1985); Smith v. State, 290 Ark. 90, 717 S.W.2d 193 (1986).

A petitioner is not entitled to a hearing for post-conviction relief under this rule if the petition and the records of the case conclusively show he is entitled to no relief. Garmon v. State, 290 Ark. 371, 719 S.W.2d 699 (1986).

Trial court did not err in dismissing with prejudice inmate's petition for postconviction relief as the petition violated this rule in that it was not signed and verified by the inmate, it exceeded ten pages in length, and a compliant brief could not be filed within the time limitations of Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2(c). Boyle v. State, 362 Ark. 248, 208 S.W.3d 134 (2005).

In determining a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, the totality of the evidence before the factfinder must be considered and, in order for the Supreme Court of Arkansas to consider the totality of the evidence, as required by this standard, all the evidence presented both at trial and at any postconviction relief proceeding must be included in an appellant's abstract of the proceedings as required by Ark. Sup. Ct. & Ct. App. R. 4-2. Johnson v. State, 366 Ark. 286, 234 S.W.3d 858 (2006).

Plea Negotiations.

Trial court did not err in declining to grant petitioner's application for postconviction relief because petitioner was not penalized for going to trial rather than accepting a negotiated plea; petitioner made the decision to be tried by jury, and the mere fact that he was later dissatisfied with his decision or that he received a longer sentence than he would have received had he accepted the plea bargain was not a basis for a collateral attack on a judgment. Stalnaker v. State, 2015 Ark. 250, 464 S.W.3d 466 (2015).

Plea Withdrawal.

Where the defendant filed a motion for post-conviction relief pursuant to this rule seeking to set aside two guilty pleas he had made, the petition was a backhanded attempt to withdraw the guilty pleas and not a timely presentation within Ark. R. Crim. P. 26.1. Jones v. State, 267 Ark. 79, 589 S.W.2d 16 (1979).

A trial court can treat an untimely Ark. R. Crim. P. 26 motion as a motion under this rule. Rowe v. State, 318 Ark. 25, 883 S.W.2d 804 (1994).

Because sentencing had already transpired and judgment entered when the defendant petitioned to withdraw his guilty plea, the trial court was correct to treat the petition as one for postconviction relief under this rule. McCuen v. State, 328 Ark. 46, 941 S.W.2d 397 (1997).

When a defendant pleads guilty he or she has a cognizable claim in a Rule 37 proceeding if he or she alleges that the plea was not made voluntarily and intelligently; however, where the government prosecuted or threatened to prosecute a defendant's relative in good faith with regard to probable cause, the defendant's plea, entered to obtain leniency for the relative, was not involuntary. State v. Herred, 332 Ark. 241, 964 S.W.2d 391 (1998).

When a motion to withdraw a guilty plea is untimely, a court reviews it on appeal as a motion for postconviction relief. Webb v. State, 365 Ark. 22, 223 S.W.3d 796 (2006).

Trial court properly denied defendant's oral motion to withdraw his guilty plea to first-degree murder and battery because the motion was made three days after the judgment and commitment orders were entered; thus, the unsworn, oral motion did not meet the requirements for postconviction relief. Webb v. State, 365 Ark. 22, 223 S.W.3d 796 (2006).

Postconviction Proceedings.

When Arkansas Supreme Court disposed of defendant's petition for postconviction relief filed under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 based on an independent and adequate state procedural rule and defendant made no attempt to show cause and prejudice or actual innocence, he forfeited his right to raise his federal claim in a habeas petition. Collier v. Norris, 485 F.3d 415 (8th Cir. 2007).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because appellant did not receive ineffective assistance of trial counsel, he did not demonstrate that an objection that the prosecution was leading would have had merit, and his claim that it was error to allow testimony concerning the rape without supporting technological evidence was a direct challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence and was not cognizable in proceedings under this rule; appellant's assertions of due process violations were likewise allegations of trial error that could have been raised at trial or on appeal and could not be raised in proceedings under this rule. Bell v. State, 2010 Ark. 65, 360 S.W.3d 98 (2010).

Summary denial of an inmate's postconviction relief petition under this rule was reversed because the order did not provide the requisite findings and conclusions, and the record did not clearly support affirmation; because no hearing was held, the trial court had an obligation to provide written findings that showed that the inmate was entitled to no relief. It was not conclusive from the petition or the record that relief was not warranted on the inmate's claims concerning illegal sentencing as there was no evidence that counsel agreed to allow the court to sentence on a gun enhancement charge. Davenport v. State, 2011 Ark. 105 (2011).

Where the ninety-day filing period under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.5(e) has expired and a waiver of postconviction relief has been affirmed by the supreme court, a petitioner must file the appropriate motion to reopen postconviction proceedings before a Rule 37 petition can be brought in circuit court; the jurisdiction rule that once the appeal record is lodged with the supreme court, the circuit court loses jurisdiction to issue subsequent rulings on a postconviction proceeding under this rule applies to petitions under Rule 37.5. Roberts v. State, 2011 Ark. 502, 385 S.W.3d 792 (2011).

Petitioner's motion to recall the mandate on his appeal affirming the circuit court's denial of postconviction relief was denied because petitioner failed to establish a defect or breakdown in the appellate process since the supreme court had reviewed his postconviction appeal, notwithstanding the unverified petition; petitioner's remedy for submitting an unverified petition would have been limited to a remand to allow him to verify his petition, followed by an appeal of his original petition. Ward v. State, 2015 Ark. 62, 455 S.W.3d 830, cert. denied, 577 U.S. 978, 136 S. Ct. 485, 193 L. Ed. 2d 355 (2015).

Preparation.

Even though the court denied the defendant's motion to unseal the medical records of a battery victim, the court granted the defendant access to them for purposes of preparing a petition for postconviction relief. Ivy v. State, 327 Ark. 683, 939 S.W.2d 843, sub. op., 327 Ark. 683, 939 S.W.2d 843 (1997).

Presiding Judge.

The same judge who presides over a defendant's trial may also preside over a postconviction proceeding; disqualification is discretionary and will not justify reversal absent an abuse of discretion. Travis v. State, 283 Ark. 478, 678 S.W.2d 341 (1984).

Prosecutor's Comments.

Error in comment by prosecutor was not of such a fundamental nature as would render the judgment void. Pitcock v. State, 279 Ark. 174, 649 S.W.2d 393 (1983).

Mistrial was properly denied where prosecutor's remark was just a comment that had nothing to do with the trial and did not impute anything to anyone. Holland v. State, 288 Ark. 435, 706 S.W.2d 375 (1986).

Purpose.

This rule is not meant to function as a substitute for appeal, as a method of review of mere error in the conduct of the trial, or as a second opportunity to petition for a rehearing; nor is it intended to permit the petitioner to again present questions which were passed upon on direct appeal or to permit a petitioner to raise questions which might have been raised at the trial or on the record on direct appeal, unless they are so fundamental as to render the judgment void and open to collateral attack. Neal v. State, 270 Ark. 442, 605 S.W.2d 421 (1980); Woodard v. State, 273 Ark. 235, 617 S.W.2d 861, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1068, 102 S. Ct. 618, 70 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1981); Ruiz v. State, 275 Ark. 410, 630 S.W.2d 44, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 882, 103 S. Ct. 181, 74 L. Ed. 2d 148 (1982); Holloway v. State, 276 Ark. 120, 632 S.W.2d 428 (1982); Bell v. Lockhart, 795 F.2d 655 (8th Cir. 1986); White v. State, 290 Ark. 77, 716 S.W.2d 203 (1986); Long v. State, 294 Ark. 362, 742 S.W.2d 942 (1988).

This rule provides for collaterally attacking a judgment and was never intended to provide a means to add evidence to the record or refute evidence adduced at trial. McDaniel v. State, 282 Ark. 170, 666 S.W.2d 400 (1984); Malone v. State, 294 Ark. 127, 741 S.W.2d 246 (1987); Taylor v. State, 297 Ark. 627, 764 S.W.2d 447 (1989).

Even when a petitioner can state a sound basis for an objection, this rule was not designed for the review of mere error made by either the trial court or counsel. Neff v. State, 287 Ark. 88, 696 S.W.2d 736 (1985).

This rule was not intended as a substitute for a timely motion for belated appeal addressed to the Supreme Court. Robbins v. State, 288 Ark. 311, 705 S.W.2d 6 (1986).

This rule is not meant to be a substitute for direct appeal and is not designed for review of a mere error that occurred at trial. Coplen v. State, 298 Ark. 272, 766 S.W.2d 612 (1989).

The purpose of Rule 37 was to provide a procedural method by which one's constitutionally guaranteed right to effective assistance of counsel could be protected. The only manner in which that right can now be protected in state court is by the procedure provided in Rule 36.4. Looney v. State, 32 Ark. App. 191, 798 S.W.2d 452 (1990) (decision prior to 1990 amendment).

Promulgating Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.4 (now see Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.2) and later this rule, the Supreme Court made every effort to afford convicted defendants due process, but at the same time, put a procedure in place that would offer less opportunity to misuse the federal and state systems to develop legal theories that unnecessarily prolonged meritless cases. Cherry v. State, 323 Ark. 733, 918 S.W.2d 125 (1996).

Reconsideration.

Petitioner filed a motion to reconsider after the entry of the trial court's order, claiming the trial court failed to rule on certain points; jurisprudence recognized that a request to modify the order to include an omitted issue was not a request for rehearing that was prohibited by the rule. Hayes v. State, 2014 Ark. 104, 431 S.W.3d 882 (2014).

Petitioner was barred from challenging a ruling in a motion for reconsideration. Hayes v. State, 2014 Ark. 104, 431 S.W.3d 882 (2014).

Record.

Tender of the record was timely, because the petitioner's notice of appeal was deemed filed on November 23, 2011, and the tender of the record on February 8, 2012, seventy-seven days after that date, was therefore timely; in circumstances such as were present in the instant case, where the request for a ruling on the omitted issue was still pending when the petitioner filed his notice of appeal, the notice of appeal was deemed filed on the day after the order disposing of the request for a ruling was entered. Lewis v. State, 2012 Ark. 355, 423 S.W.3d 16 (2012).

Petitioner's claim that he had to have access to at least the challenged portions of the trial record was not cognizable because petitioner did not allege at trial, on direct appeal, or in his petition for postconviction relief that the trial record was incomplete nor did petitioner file a motion for access to a complete trial record. Bishop v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 435 (2017).

Relief Denied.

Remand and resentencing ordered pursuant to Miller did not affect defendant's conviction and plea of guilty, and as such, any challenge to his plea of guilty should have been raised in a petition claiming relief under the rule filed in the appropriate circuit court within 90 days of the date of entry of the original judgment; the proffered jury instruction without the defense's additional language was found to accurately reflect the law in defendant's case, and a jury instruction on the issue of permanent incorrigibility or irretrievable depravity was not required. Elliott v. State, 2022 Ark. 165 (2022).

Where the record reflected that the appellant was represented by competent counsel at his trial and that he was given every opportunity at his trial to raise any possible defense that he had to the charges, but appellant failed to do so, he was precluded from collaterally attacking his sentence on appeal. Davis v. State, 267 Ark. 507, 592 S.W.2d 118 (1980).

Where petitioner asserted that his sentence and judgment were void because of a stipulation to prior felonies, but did not contend that he was not convicted of the prior felonies, or that he was not represented by counsel in the earlier proceedings, or that any undue prejudice arose out of the proceedings, he did not demonstrate that his sentence and judgment were void and was not entitled to post-conviction relief. McCroskey v. State, 278 Ark. 156, 644 S.W.2d 271 (1983).

Where the petitioner failed to substantiate any of the conclusory statements he made in his petition for post-conviction relief, and the record indicated that all of the allegations of constitutional error presented in his post-conviction petition had been raised on direct appeal and decided adversely to the petitioner, the petitioner was not entitled to an evidentiary hearing or other post-conviction relief. Perry v. State, 279 Ark. 213, 650 S.W.2d 240 (1983).

A flaw in the manner of arrest is not sufficient cause to set aside a judgment of conviction. Brents v. State, 285 Ark. 199, 686 S.W.2d 395 (1985).

A defendant who had been convicted at one trial of theft by receiving stolen firearms and then later convicted of being a felon in possession of firearms was precluded from proceeding for a new trial under this rule of the theft by receiving conviction because he had previously appealed this conviction on other grounds and he failed to seek the prior permission of the Supreme Court to proceed. Wilson v. State, 285 Ark. 271, 686 S.W.2d 414 (1985).

This rule does not provide a means to attack a conviction on the ground that a juror questioned after trial is heard to give an answer which conflicts with his testimony in voir dire. Pruett v. State, 287 Ark. 124, 697 S.W.2d 872 (1985).

Petition properly denied. Campbell v. State, 288 Ark. 213, 703 S.W.2d 855 (1986); Franklin v. State, 293 Ark. 225, 736 S.W.2d 16 (1987); Rhodes v. State, 293 Ark. 211, 736 S.W.2d 284 (1987); Pennington v. State, 294 Ark. 185, 741 S.W.2d 266 (1987).

Where all of the petitioner's grounds for relief could have been argued at the trial and on the record on appeal and none present a question so fundamental as to render the judgment void, he is not entitled to proceed with a petition for relief under this rule. White v. State, 290 Ark. 77, 716 S.W.2d 203 (1986).

Petition will be denied where it constitutes a direct attack on a judgment for which this rule is explicitly not intended. Sanders v. State, 291 Ark. 200, 723 S.W.2d 370 (1987).

In habeas corpus petition where the trial court correctly observed that the relief sought was more in the nature of the kind which can be granted pursuant to this rule, the court properly refused to consider Rule 37 relief when it had already been sought and denied. Miller v. State, 301 Ark. 59, 781 S.W.2d 475 (1989).

Disguised evidentiary argument that testimony should have been admitted under § 5-4-602(4), which states that the rules of evidence, such as hearsay, do not apply to mitigating evidence in capital cases, was not entertained in Rule 37 petition. Johnson v. State, 321 Ark. 117, 900 S.W.2d 940 (1995).

Denial of defendant's motion for postconviction relief was affirmed because the trial court did not direct the jury to impose the death penalty, but properly instructed the jury to go back into the jury room and correct an error made in completing the verdict form. Jackson v. State, No. CR 02-104, 2003 Ark. LEXIS 145 (Ark. Mar. 20, 2003), sub. op., 352 Ark. 359, 105 S.W.3d 352 (2003).

Defendant was not entitled to relief under this section, due to a failure to create and provide the court with a complete record sufficient to allow meaningful review, where defendant failed to show that he was prejudiced by a lack of a record on arraignment; a ministerial notation of a continuance was not a reference to hearing requiring a record, and a reference to a continuance based on defendant's request for a mental exam did not mandate a record. Scott v. State, 355 Ark. 485, 139 S.W.3d 511 (2003).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion in arrest of judgment because defendant had not timely filed a petition for post-conviction relief under this rule to challenge an illegal sentence. Holt v. State, 85 Ark. App. 151, 147 S.W.3d 699 (2004).

Trial court did not err in denying post-conviction relief where defendant failed to show that he was prejudiced when a pardoned sentence was introduced during the sentencing phase of his trial because, once the state offered the certified copy of the conviction, it had established a prima facie case and the burden shifted to defendant to establish the pardon; because no such evidence was introduced, the conviction was properly admitted. Cook v. State, 361 Ark. 91, 204 S.W.3d 532 (2005).

Trial court's written findings in the order denying defendant post-conviction relief were not deficient where the court mistakenly referred to defendant's medical records for treatment of a gunshot wound to his hand as being introduced during his testimony but where the records were, in fact, introduced at the close of testimony "for the record only"; further, although the trial court did not use the term "conclusively" in its order, its findings on the points addressed were clearly to that effect. Rutledge v. State, 361 Ark. 229, 205 S.W.3d 773 (2005).

Where inmate did not raise a claim of mental retardation in either his trial or in his petition for post-conviction relief, and did not meet the rebuttable presumption in favor of mental retardation in § 5-4-618(2), the appellate court rejected inmate's request to recall the mandate of his direct appeal and reopen his case. Coulter v. State, 365 Ark. 262, 227 S.W.3d 904, cert. denied, 549 U.S. 858, 127 S. Ct. 138, 166 L. Ed. 2d 101 (2006).

Under this rule, defendant's claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failure to object to the seating of a juror was a direct attack on the verdict and not a cognizable claim; as defendant did not state a meritorious basis upon which counsel could have objected to the juror's seating, his claim to ineffective assistance failed. Anderson v. State, 2009 Ark. 493 (2009).

Denial of postconviction relief under this rule was proper, because correction of the judgment to reflect the requirements of the Sex Offender Registration Act of 1997 (SORA), §§ 12-12-901 to 12-12-923, did not demonstrate error so fundamental as to render the judgment void and subject to collateral attack pursuant to this rule; since the petitioner pled guilty to false imprisonment in the first degree of a minor victim, which was a designated crime at the time he was sentenced pursuant to § 12-12-903(12)(A)(i)(r), he was subject to SORA requirements regardless of whether it was reflected on the original judgment. Justus v. State, 2012 Ark. 91 (2012).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief, which was filed after defendant was discharged from a drug-court program and sentenced to 30 years in prison for theft of property, because defendant was accorded the benefit of an adversarial hearing regarding the drug-court strikes; the issue of whether defendant committed the second and third strikes was fully aired. Tornavacca v. State, 2012 Ark. 224, 408 S.W.3d 727 (2012).

Denial of inmate's pro se petition for postconviction relief was appropriate because he offered no facts concerning the publicity surrounding his legal proceeding that demonstrated that any publicity was of an extreme nature or that the voir dire of the jury was insufficient to produce an unbiased jury. Wedgeworth v. State, 2013 Ark. 119 (2013).

Appellant failed to state a claim for postconviction relief pursuant to this rule, because the trial court had to enter an amended judgment requiring him to register as a child or sexual offender under the Arkansas Sex Offender Registration Act of 1997, §§ 12-12-901 to 12-12-923, when he entered a plea of guilty to false imprisonment, theft of property, and domestic battery committed in the presence of a child. Justus v. Hobbs, 2013 Ark. 149 (2013).

Where appellant was found guilty by a jury of the rape of two minor sisters, the trial court did not err by denying his petition for postconviction relief because it did not state a basis for granting relief under this rule. Appellant's claims that he was entitled to a new trial due to false testimony later recanted and prosecutorial misconduct could have been raised at trial or on appeal. Webb v. State, 2013 Ark. 153 (2013).

Defendant's petition for postconviction relief was properly denied because he failed to demonstrate prejudice stemming from prosecutor's alleged misconduct in failing to timely disclose the name of an expert witness; the trial court excluded the testimony of the witness based on a lack of qualification and untimely disclosure. Cunningham v. State, 2013 Ark. 304, 429 S.W.3d 201 (2013).

Because defendant's juror misconduct argument was not raised at trial or on appeal and because defendant failed to argue an error so basic that it rendered the judgment a nullity, defendant did not demonstrate that defendant was entitled to postconviction relief. Airsmann v. State, 2015 Ark. 409, 473 S.W.3d 549 (2015), writ denied, Airsmann v. Wright, 2016 Ark. 297, 498 S.W.3d 278 (2016).

Defendant's claims of prosecutorial misconduct were claims that should have been raised at trial or on direct appeal and were not claims that were to be raised for the first time in a petition for postconviction relief. Moreover, defendant's conclusory statements, wholly lacking in allegations of prejudice, were insufficient to warrant postconviction relief. Airsmann v. State, 2015 Ark. 409, 473 S.W.3d 549 (2015), writ denied, Airsmann v. Wright, 2016 Ark. 297, 498 S.W.3d 278 (2016).

Trial court did not err in denying postconviction relief on the basis that the prosecutor improperly withheld information concerning an officer's personnel file; even assuming that appellant's claim could be construed as an allegation of fundamental error and not one that could have been raised at trial or on appeal, appellant failed to identify any specific information that was contained in the personnel file, and thus, he failed to allege any factual basis in support of his claim that the file could have been used to impeach the officer. Flemons v. State, 2016 Ark. 460, 505 S.W.3d 196 (2016).

Supreme Court of Arkansas has held allegations of prosecutorial misconduct to be the type of issue that should be raised on direct appeal and therefore may not be raised for the first time in Rule 37 proceedings. Flemons v. State, 2016 Ark. 460, 505 S.W.3d 196 (2016).

Petitioner's claim that the trial court erred in determining that probable cause existed to search his residence was noncognizable because petitioner abandoned that argument at the hearing on his petition, alleging instead that there was insufficient probable cause to support the search warrant. Bishop v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 435 (2017).

Because petitioner did not challenge the validity of the second search warrant at trial or on direct appeal, he could not raise the claim for the first time in a postconviction proceeding; thus, petitioner's claim was noncognizable. Bishop v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 435 (2017).

Neither at trial nor on direct appeal did petitioner challenge his multiple charges under § 5-27-602(a)(2), and thus, his claim that the trial court incorrectly concluded that he could be charged with multiple counts was not cognizable. Bishop v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 435 (2017).

Appellant's postconviction challenge to the adequacy of the deputy prosecutor's signature on the felony information was, on its face, without merit; the trial court correctly stated that the elected prosecuting attorney was not required to sign a felony information when the deputy prosecuting attorney signed on his/her behalf as long as the elected prosecuting attorney's name was made clear in the felony information. Todd v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 587, 535 S.W.3d 638 (2017).

Inmate was not entitled to relief based on the unconstitutionality of the arrest warrant procedure under which his arrest warrants were issued; even if the inmate's arrest was illegal, the alleged error was not so basic that the judgment was a complete nullity and his allegations failed to establish any basis for the appellate court to recall its 1989 mandate (decided under prior version of rules). Logan v. State, 2019 Ark. 373, 590 S.W.3d 730 (2019).

Petitioner's constitutional claims were not cognizable in postconviction relief proceedings. Lacefield v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 534 (2020).

Challenge to sufficiency of the evidence was not cognizable under the rule. Lacefield v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 534 (2020).

Right to Counsel.

Denial of counsel may not be raised in a Rule 37 petition. Oliver v. State, 323 Ark. 743, 918 S.W.2d 690 (1996).

Fairness dictated a prospective application of Supreme Court's holding that denial of counsel under the Sixth Amendment must be raised on direct appeal or be deemed waived. Oliver v. State, 323 Ark. 743, 918 S.W.2d 690 (1996).

Although the trial court erred in not inquiring into defendant's financial situation, where defendant was adamant about wishing to proceed pro se and made no reference to his destitute status and where standby counsel, though appointed day of the trial, provided active representation, Supreme Court would be hard put to hold that defendant was denied his right to counsel or that the trial court's finding on this point, following a Rule 37 hearing, was clearly erroneous. Oliver v. State, 323 Ark. 743, 918 S.W.2d 690 (1996).

Ineffective assistance of counsel was not a basis to vacate defendant's guilty pleas, even assuming counsel was ineffective in failing to include all grounds for relief in a Rule 37 petition, because the petition to withdraw the guilty pleas was untimely and because in general a defendant has no constitutional right to counsel in state postconviction proceedings. McCuen v. State, 328 Ark. 46, 941 S.W.2d 397 (1997).

Denial of inmate's motion for counsel to represent him in his appeal from the denial of his motion for postconviction relief was appropriate because there was no constitutional right to an attorney in postconviction proceedings and because none of the inmate's claims in the motion amounted to a showing of merit. The supreme court was not persuaded by his argument that because an interpreter was provided, he should also have been provided counsel. Viveros v. State, 372 Ark. 463, 277 S.W.3d 223 (2008).

Self-Incrimination.

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was proper, in part, because the inmate, although in custody, did not make the statement at issue in response to any questioning by authorities. It was a spontaneous statement, which was not compelled or coerced in any significant way under the U.S. Const. Amend. V privilege against self-incrimination. Montgomery v. State, 2011 Ark. 462, 385 S.W.3d 189 (2011).

Sentence.

After defendant's valid sentence has been put into execution and an appeal taken to the Supreme Court, the trial court is without jurisdiction to modify, amend, or revise it, either during or after the term at which it was pronounced. Smith v. State, 262 Ark. 239, 555 S.W.2d 569 (1977); Rogers v. State, 265 Ark. 945, 582 S.W.2d 7 (1979).

If the penalty assessed against petitioner is too severe under the facts of the case, it is a matter that addresses itself to executive clemency, and not to the Supreme Court. Rogers v. State, 265 Ark. 945, 582 S.W.2d 7 (1979); Pettit v. State, 296 Ark. 423, 758 S.W.2d 1 (1988).

Where sentence issue was raised for the first time on appeal, the Supreme Court would not consider the issue. Davis v. State, 267 Ark. 507, 592 S.W.2d 118 (1980).

The state was warranted in asking for the maximum punishment in sensible language just as a defendant may argue for the minimum punishment; therefore, the prosecuting attorney's closing remarks were not improper as a matter of law and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to declare a mistrial. Holloway v. State, 268 Ark. 24, 594 S.W.2d 2 (1980).

Defendant could not claim that he did not make a knowing and intelligent plea based upon his belief that the sentences would run concurrently so as to entitle him to post-conviction relief under this rule, since he understood the difference between concurrent and consecutive sentences. Williams v. State, 273 Ark. 371, 620 S.W.2d 277 (1981).

Where defendant's convictions for two offenses grew out of a single act, and the proof required to prove one of the offenses necessarily included proof of the other offense, the defendant's conviction and sentence for the lesser offense had to be set aside. Sanders v. State, 279 Ark. 32, 648 S.W.2d 451 (1983).

This rule does not provide a procedure to go behind a conviction used to enhance a sentence and question its legality. Thomas v. State, 290 Ark. 76, 716 S.W.2d 765 (1986).

The issue of sentencing is the proper subject matter for a Rule 37 petition. Hendrix v. State, 291 Ark. 134, 722 S.W.2d 596 (1987); Malone v. State, 294 Ark. 127, 741 S.W.2d 246 (1987); Pettit v. State, 296 Ark. 423, 758 S.W.2d 1 (1988).

Although issue was not raised at trial, since it involved a question of double jeopardy which, if meritorious was sufficient to void the judgment, the court set aside two of the convictions and sentences for theft by receiving, leaving the conviction and sentence for one count of theft by receiving where the offense was a continuing one. Watson v. State, 295 Ark. 616, 752 S.W.2d 240 (1988).

Where defendant appeals from a sentencing procedure which was an integral part of the acceptance of the defendant's guilty plea, he must either file a motion to correct an illegal sentence pursuant to § 16-90-111(b), or seek relief under this Rule, which was still in effect when defendant was sentenced. State v. Sherman, 303 Ark. 284, 796 S.W.2d 339 (1990) (decision prior to 1990 reinstatement of rule).

Appellant could raise for the first time on appeal the issue that the revocation of his suspended sentence needed to be reversed because, inter alia, the period of suspension had expired. Jones v. State, 52 Ark. App. 179, 916 S.W.2d 766 (1996).

Circuit court did not have jurisdiction to entertain defendant's motion to dismiss the state's petition to revoke the suspended sentence he received for failure to comply with the reporting requirements of the Sex Offender Registration Act, § 12-12-901, because defendant failed to pursue postconviction relief under this rule within ninety days of the date of the entry of judgment; thus, he was barred from challenging his plea and conviction during a revocation proceeding. Wicks v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 499, 375 S.W.3d 769 (2010).

Petitioner's post-conviction claim that his sentence was illegal because the jury only gave the numbers "70" and "20" and did not specify years or months was rejected, because 70 months would fall short of the 20-year mandatory minimum for his cocaine conviction and 20 months would fall short of the eight-year minimum for his marijuana conviction, pursuant to former § 5-64-401 and § 5-64-408(a). Lewis v. State, 2013 Ark. 105 (2013).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because there was no showing that an improper sentence was imposed; the trial court merely amended the sentencing order to reflect the correct statute under which appellant was sentenced in accordance with the instructions given the jury. Fletcher v. State, 2015 Ark. 106, 458 S.W.3d 234 (2015).

Trial court did not clearly err by rejecting appellant's constitutional challenge to the habitual-offender statute, § 5-4-501, as conclusory and unsupported by legal authority because there was no showing that the United States Supreme Court's holding was applicable to the Arkansas statute or that the statute was unconstitutionally applied in appellant's case; appellant also did not demonstrate that appellate counsel was ineffective by failing to raise a meritless constitutional challenge on direct appeal. Wooten v. State, 2016 Ark. 376, 502 S.W.3d 503 (2016).

In a death penalty case, defendant's argument on appeal that the circuit court erred in permitting the jury to consider the death of the victim's unborn child as an aggravating circumstance under § 5-4-604 was abandoned below and could not be raised on appeal because defendant did not conclusively show prejudice, and he failed to show that the Supreme Court would unquestionably grant him Rule 37 relief on the issue. Smith v. State, 2018 Ark. 277, 555 S.W.3d 881 (2018), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 2666, 204 L. Ed. 2d 1072 (2019).

Subsequent Petition.

Where defendant's second petition for post-conviction relief in a state court was dismissed because he had already filed one such petition and it was dismissed, he had exhausted his state remedies on the issue raised in second post-conviction proceeding. Pruitt v. Hutto, 550 F.2d 1093 (8th Cir. 1977).

Appellate court will not entertain a subsequent petition under this rule unless the original petition was specifically denied without prejudice to filing a second petition. Ruiz v. State, 280 Ark. 190, 655 S.W.2d 441 (1983); Collins v. State, 280 Ark. 312, 657 S.W.2d 546 (1983); Grooms v. State, 293 Ark. 358, 737 S.W.2d 648 (1987).

Where petitioner had one petition decided on its merits, he is not entitled to file a second. Collins v. State, 280 Ark. 312, 657 S.W.2d 546 (1983).

If the court were to permit a petitioner to withdraw a petition and submit another as soon as the state through its response pointed out deficiencies in the petition, it would be unfair to the state and open the door to an unending succession of petitions. Parker v. State, 308 Ark. 187, 823 S.W.2d 877 (1992).

Inmate who had been sentenced to death was incorrect in his argument that victim impact procedure was inadequate in not requiring the jury to find proof beyond a reasonable doubt as to victim statements; the circuit court thus properly refused his request to supplement his Rule 37 petition on that point. Johnson v. State, 356 Ark. 534, 157 S.W.3d 151, cert. denied, 543 U.S. 932, 125 S. Ct. 326, 160 L. Ed. 2d 235 (2004).

Appellant failed to demonstrate that his first two petitions for postconviction relief were denied without prejudice, and thus, a subsequent petition would be prohibited. Hinkston v. State, 2016 Ark. 4 (2016).

Timely Claims.

Denial of inmates' pro se petition for postconviction relief under this rule was improper because the petition was timely. They filed their petition 49 days after the date that the court of appeals issued the original mandate for the appeal on October 6, 2009; although the trial court might not have had the correct information available to it upon which to make a decision at the time that it issued the order, appellants' petition was timely filed. Romero v. State, 2012 Ark. 133 (2012).

Transcripts.

Counsel for petitioners seeking postconviction relief should provide the court with transcript references in support of allegations that require specific verification in the record. Hill v. State, 278 Ark. 194, 644 S.W.2d 282 (1983).

The mere fact of indigency does not entitle a petitioner to a free transcript for the purpose of searching the record in an attempt to find support for allegations in a petition under this rule. Henderson v. State, 287 Ark. 346, 699 S.W.2d 397 (1985); Brooks v. State, 303 Ark. 188, 792 S.W.2d 617 (1990).

A petitioner is not entitled to a copy of the trial record or other material at public expense unless he demonstrates some reasonably compelling need for specific documentary evidence to support a particular allegation. Gunn v. State, 291 Ark. 548, 726 S.W.2d 278 (1987); Wilburn v. State, 292 Ark. 416, 730 S.W.2d 491 (1987).

Where abstract is deficient, court will rely on record if it shows that trial court's decision should be affirmed on a particular point, but will not explore the record for prejudicial error if none is shown by the abstract. Bowers v. State, 292 Ark. 249, 729 S.W.2d 170 (1987).

A petitioner is not entitled to a free copy of the trial transcript on file with appellate court or any other document in possession of the clerk unless he demonstrates some reasonably compelling need for specific documentary evidence to support an allegation contained in a petition for postconviction relief. Stone v. State, 298 Ark. 316, 767 S.W.2d 299 (1989).

The court will not provide a copy of a trial record to facilitate a postconviction appeal without a showing that the record is necessary; the inmate must set out specific anticipated points for reversal to be contained in the inmate's brief which cannot be properly raised without access to the trial record. Thomas v. State, 328 Ark. 753, 945 S.W.2d 939 (1997).

Trial court did not err in denying postconviction petitioner's request for copies of the transcripts of his criminal trials; petitioner's vague, conclusory declarations did not provide a demonstration of the compelling need required to support granting a request for copies of transcripts. Flemmons v. State, 2016 Ark. 460, 505 S.W.3d 196 (2016).

Trial court did not err in denying postconviction petitioner's request for copies of the transcripts of his criminal trials; petitioner's vague, conclusory declarations did not provide a demonstration of the compelling need required to support granting a request for copies of transcripts. Flemmons v. State, 2016 Ark. 460, 505 S.W.3d 196 (2016).

Untimely Claims.

Where claims were untimely as raised in the amended petition, they were therefore barred. Hulsey v. Sargent, 550 F. Supp. 179 (E.D. Ark. 1981), disapproved, Woodard v. Sargent, 753 F.2d 694 (8th Cir. 1985).

Defendant was procedurally barred from claim where he failed to raise the issue on direct appeal. Hobbs v. Lockhart, 791 F.2d 125 (8th Cir. 1986).

Petition was untimely. Bailey v. State, 312 Ark. 180, 848 S.W.2d 391 (1993).

Defendant's appeal of a trial court order denying his petition for postconviction relief was dismissed because defendant did not file his petition in the trial court within 90 days of the date defendant was convicted of driving while intoxicated pursuant to his guilty plea. Booth v. State, 353 Ark. 119, 110 S.W.3d 759 (2003).

Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2(c) provides that a petition attacking a judgment entered on a plea of guilty or nolo contendere is untimely if not filed within 90 days of the entry of judgment pursuant to the guilty plea; thus, where the 90-day period to file a petition under this rule expired in defendant's case on December 16, 2002, and defendant did not file his petition for postconviction relief until August 11, 2003, his petition was untimely and defendant was procedural barred from proceeding under the rule. Shabazz v. State, 359 Ark. 525, 199 S.W.3d 77 (2004).

Trial court did not err in denying inmate's petition for postconviction relief under this rule where the petition was filed 23 months after the mandate was issued in inmate's case, which was outside the time limits of Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2; thus, the appeal was dismissed. Johnson v. State, 362 Ark. 453, 208 S.W.3d 783 (2005).

Defendant's petitions for postconviction relief under this rule and § 16-90-111 were untimely filed from the 2003 mandate; if the trial court lacked jurisdiction to consider the petitions, jurisdiction to consider the portion of the appeal from the order that dismissed both petitions could not be vested in the supreme court. Smith v. State, 2009 Ark. 85 (2009).

Appellate court was without jurisdiction to hear an appeal from an order denying postconviction relief under this rule because the circuit court was without subject-matter jurisdiction where there was no evidence of a timely tender of the petition for postconviction relief to the circuit court clerk and the petition bore an intact file mark for more than a year after the date of entry of the judgment. Meraz v. State, 2010 Ark. 121 (2010).

Denial of postconviction relief under this rule was proper, because the petition was untimely as to the original judgment, and the amended judgment did not extend the time for the petitioner to file for postconviction relief. Justus v. State, 2012 Ark. 91 (2012).

Denial of petition and amended petition to correct a sentence was proper, because to the extent that the petitioner's claims were cognizable under this rule, his request for relief, filed more than a year after the judgment was entered, was not timely; to the extent that a claim under § 16-90-111 conflicted with the time limitations for postconviction relief on a petition under this rule, the statute had been superseded. Turner v. State, 2012 Ark. 99 (2012).

Appellant's motion for a new trial, filed 14 years after his convictions were affirmed, was properly denied because it was governed by this rule regarding postconviction relief and, thus, was untimely under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2(c) as it was not filed within 60 days of the date the mandate was issued by the appellate court. Evans v. State, 2012 Ark. 375 (2012).

Where appellant entered a guilty plea to multiple felony offenses and received an aggregate sentence of 720 months' in prison, the trial court did not err by denying his motion to correct an illegal sentence under § 16-90-111. The trial court treated the motion as a petition for post-conviction relief under this rule and determined that it was not timely filed within the 90-day time limit required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2(c)(i). Purifoy v. State, 2013 Ark. 26 (2013), writ denied in part, Purifoy v. Griffen, 2015 Ark. 171 (2015).

It was error to dismiss defendant's postconviction relief petition on the ground that the petition was untimely filed while an appeal was pending because a postconviction petition filed after an appellate court affirmed a judgment but before the mandate issued was considered timely filed on the day after the day the mandate issued, under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2(c)(ii). Glaze v. State, 2013 Ark. 141 (2013).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's motion seeking waiver of 70 percent requirement of former § 16-93-611 (repealed 2011) because whether treated as an action under this rule or former § 16-90-111(b) (amended 1999), it was not timely filed. Johnson v. State, 2014 Ark. 526, 452 S.W.3d 87 (2014).

Trial court correctly held that it could not consider a postconviction petition related to one case as the petition was filed outside the 90-day period to seek relief under this rule. Engstrom v. State, 2016 Ark. 45, 481 S.W.3d 435 (2016).

Any challenge in a postconviction petition claiming that the sentence was imposed in an illegal matter was not timely where petitioner conceded that the time had expired for a challenge under this rule; thus, petitioner was limited to bringing claims of an illegal sentence. Lukach v. State, 2017 Ark. 128, 516 S.W.3d 711 (2017).

Verdict Forms.

Trial court properly denied appellant postconviction relief because appellant failed to explain how the verdict forms, allegedly defective for failure to name a victim, could have resulted in prejudice or juror confusion; therefore, appellant did not establish that the alleged error was fundamental error sufficient to void the judgment. Lee v. State, 2017 Ark. 337, 532 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Verification of Motion.

This rule requires that motions for postconviction relief be verified and be filed with the court, a requirement of substantive importance to prevent perjury. Carey v. State, 268 Ark. 332, 596 S.W.2d 688 (1980).

Circuit court lacked jurisdiction to consider inmate's petitions for postconviction relief where the inmate's first and second petitions to the circuit court were invalid under subsection (d) of this rule because they lacked verification, and the inmate's third petition was not filed within the 90-day time limit of Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2(c). Shaw v. State, 363 Ark. 156, 211 S.W.3d 506 (2005).

Petition for a writ of habeas corpus under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2254 was denied as untimely because inmate did not properly file his petition under this rule within the meaning of § 2244(d)(2) where the verification portion was not completed; further, inmate was not entitled to equitable tolling as a lack of diligence, not extraordinary circumstances, caused the rushed filing. Walker v. Norris, 436 F.3d 1026 (8th Cir. 2006).

Where a petition for post-conviction relief in a death penalty case was not verified by the petitioner, but was solely verified by his attorney, rather than dismissing the petition, the court chose to remand the matter for verification in conformance with this rule. Howard v. State, 366 Ark. 453, 236 S.W.3d 508 (2006).

Trial court properly denied defendant's petition for postconviction relief under this rule because while the petition for postconviction relief was notarized, it did not contain an affidavit or statement substantially in the form of the affidavit required by subsection (c) of this rule; hence, the trial court could not consider the issues in the petition. Bunch v. State, 370 Ark. 113, 257 S.W.3d 533 (2007).

State's motion to dismiss appellant's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition was granted where the petition was not properly verified, and petitioner's sole argument on appeal was not considered below by the trial court and was raised for the first time on appeal. Randle v. State, 2016 Ark. 228, 493 S.W.3d 309 (2016).

Waiver of Appeal.

Because petitioner could have raised an argument on direct appeal, the court would not address it in this appeal from the denial of postconviction relief under this section. Gray v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 406, 636 S.W.3d 102 (2021), cert. denied, 142 S. Ct. 2881, 213 L. Ed. 2d 1098 (2022).

A petitioner whose Rule 37 petition is denied may also waive his right to appeal the denial. Barton v. State, 278 Ark. 159, 644 S.W.2d 272 (1983); Grain v. State, 280 Ark. 161, 655 S.W.2d 425 (1983).

Where, after denial of Rule 37 petition, petitioner sought federal habeas corpus relief rather than filing an appeal, he waived his right to appeal. Barton v. State, 278 Ark. 159, 644 S.W.2d 272 (1983).

Where the defendant did not inform counsel of his desire to appeal until the time for filing a notice of appeal had passed, the defendant waived his right to appeal. Robbins v. State, 288 Ark. 311, 705 S.W.2d 6 (1986); Brooks v. State, 303 Ark. 188, 792 S.W.2d 617 (1990).

Waiver of Issues.

Issues deemed waived. Irons v. State, 267 Ark. 469, 591 S.W.2d 650 (1980); Carey v. State, 268 Ark. 332, 596 S.W.2d 688 (1980); Bell v. State, 269 Ark. 85, 598 S.W.2d 738 (1980); Watson v. State, 282 Ark. 246, 667 S.W.2d 953 (1984).

Even questions of constitutional dimension are waived if not raised in accordance with the controlling rules of procedure. McCroskey v. State, 278 Ark. 156, 644 S.W.2d 271 (1983); Hill v. State, 278 Ark. 194, 644 S.W.2d 282 (1983); Hayes v. State, 280 Ark. 509, 660 S.W.2d 648 (1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1051, 104 S. Ct. 1331, 79 L. Ed. 2d 726 (1984); Orsini v. State, 287 Ark. 456, 701 S.W.2d 114 (1985).

Issues which were not raised on appeal in accordance with controlling rules of procedure must be considered waived. Hill v. State, 278 Ark. 194, 644 S.W.2d 282 (1983); Watson v. State, 282 Ark. 246, 667 S.W.2d 953 (1984); Clines v. State, 282 Ark. 541, 669 S.W.2d 883 (1984).

A post-conviction relief proceedings issue which could have been raised at trial is considered waived unless it presents a question so fundamental as to render the judgment void. Mackey v. State, 286 Ark. 188, 690 S.W.2d 353 (1985).

A condemned person may waive collateral challenges to his conviction and sentence provided he is mentally competent to do so. O'Rourke v. State, 300 Ark. 323, 778 S.W.2d 938 (1989).

Failure to preserve constitutional claims at trial is not satisfied by inclusion of each of these constitutional claims in an Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition. Whitmore v. Lockhart, 834 F. Supp. 1105 (E.D. Ark. 1992), aff'd, 8 F.3d 614 (8th Cir. 1993).

In a post-conviction appeal, the court refused to review defendant's challenge to the jury's imposition of the death sentence upon his conviction of three counts of capital murder as defendant should have preserved the issue during his trial and raised it on direct appeal. Rankin v. State, 365 Ark. 255, 227 S.W.3d 924 (2006).

Court refused to consider seven of eight grounds alleged by petitioner in his postconviction motion under this rule because petitioner failed to obtain a ruling from the trial court on those seven grounds. The trial court lacked jurisdiction to rule on his motion for reconsideration filed after his notice of appeal from the denial of the motion. Watkins v. State, 2010 Ark. 156, 362 S.W.3d 910 (2010).

Circuit court did not clearly err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief. Although appellant argued that he was denied due process because the police did not conduct a thorough investigation, appellant's challenges to the investigatory process could have been raised at trial. Leak v. State, 2011 Ark. 353 (2011).

Appellant waived his claim that the trial court erred in denying postconviction relief on the ground that counsel was ineffective for failing to investigate his mental state as a defense because appellant did not include the argument in his petition for postconviction relief; appellant raised the issue during the postconviction hearing, but did not obtain the trial court's permission to amend his petition during the hearing to include the new issue. Flemons v. State, 2016 Ark. 460, 505 S.W.3d 196 (2016).

Appellant waived his claim that the trial court erred in denying postconviction relief on the ground that counsel was ineffective for failing to investigate his mental state as a defense because appellant did not include the argument in his petition for postconviction relief; appellant raised the issue during the postconviction hearing, but did not obtain the trial court's permission to amend his petition during the hearing to include the new issue. Flemons v. State, 2016 Ark. 460, 505 S.W.3d 196 (2016).

Because appellant failed to file for a writ of mandamus asking the Supreme Court to direct the circuit court to act on the motion for postconviction relief after the circuit court failed to rule on one of the issues, the omitted issue (that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to allege appellant was prejudiced by a flawed instruction) was not preserved for appellate review. Nelson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 583, 566 S.W.3d 530 (2018).

Petitioner's argument that the circuit court violated Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.6 was not considered on appeal where he had not alleged in his Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 postconviction petition that the circuit court had violated that rule. Myers v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 16, 593 S.W.3d 29 (2020).

Withdrawal of Counsel.

Counsel's motion to be relieved was properly brought to the court's attention because, pursuant to Ark. R. App. P. Crim. 16, once a notice of appeal was filed, only the court had the power to relieve counsel, and Rule 16 applied to appeals from adverse orders in proceedings under this rule; the court granted counsel's motion and dismissed the appeal because it was clear that the inmate could not have prevailed on appeal. Johnson v. State, 362 Ark. 453, 208 S.W.3d 783 (2005).

Where appointed counsel failed to show good cause for being removed as counsel in inmate's appeal of the denial of his post-conviction relief and essentially abandoned inmate's appeal, the court denied counsel's motion to withdraw under Ark. R. App. P. Crim. 16. Trowbridge v. State, 368 Ark. 36, 242 S.W.3d 613 (2006).

Writ of Error.

Court denied the petition to reinvest jurisdiction in the trial court to consider a petition for writ of error coram nobis because coram nobis proceedings were not to be used as a substitute for timely raised claims of ineffective assistance of counsel. Kou Her v. State, 2021 Ark. 175, 630 S.W.3d 603 (2021).

Petition for writ of error coram nobis is not available after the Supreme Court reviews a case; once a conviction has been affirmed on appeal, error coram nobis is not available to secure a new trial on the basis of newly discovered evidence or to raise issues which are properly raised in a post-conviction relief petition. Williams v. Langston, 285 Ark. 444, 688 S.W.2d 285 (1985); Edgemon v. State, 292 Ark. 465, 730 S.W.2d 898 (1987).

A petition for writ of error coram nobis cannot be used as a substitute for a post-conviction petition to vacate a guilty plea. McDonald v. State, 285 Ark. 482, 688 S.W.2d 302 (1985).

Error coram nobis proceedings are not interchangeable with proceedings under this rule; error coram nobis is an extraordinary remedy which serves to fill a gap in the legal system and will provide relief after a plea of guilty only where a remedy was unavailable because a fact exists which was not known when the plea of guilty was entered. Williams v. State, 289 Ark. 385, 711 S.W.2d 479 (1986).

Where the petitioner filed an error coram nobis petition in the trial court seeking to vacate his guilty plea, the court properly treated the petition as a petition under this rule, since a court may treat a petition for post-conviction relief as a Rule 37 petition if it raises grounds covered by this rule regardless of the label placed on the petition. Williams v. State, 289 Ark. 385, 711 S.W.2d 479 (1986).

Writs of error coram nobis will be permitted based on newly discovered evidence if the evidence is such that it might have resulted in a different verdict, provided the writ is filed between the trial and an appeal. Edgemon v. State, 292 Ark. 465, 730 S.W.2d 898 (1987).

Inmate's petition for an order reinvesting the trial court with jurisdiction so that he could file a petition for a writ of error coram nobis was denied because the inmate failed to show he had meritorious reasons for challenging his conviction. Echols v. State, 354 Ark. 414, 125 S.W.3d 153 (2003).

There was no abuse of discretion in denying the petition for writ of error coram nobis without a hearing, because the petitioner did not act with due diligence in bringing the petition, and there was no restriction that would prevent pursuit of relief through the writ while the petitioner pursued an application for pardon, as relief under this rule and error coram nobis proceedings were not exclusive and could be pursued simultaneously. Deaton v. State, 373 Ark. 605, 285 S.W.3d 611 (2008).

Petitioner sentenced to life imprisonment for rape and sexual abuse was not entitled to a writ of error coram nobis; petitioner failed to show that the prosecutor withheld material exculpatory evidence or that the trial court lacked jurisdiction over his criminal case. Petitioner's alleged constitutional claims such as double jeopardy and the ineffective assistance of counsel should have brought in a proceeding under this rule. Mills v. State, 2009 Ark. 463 (2009).

Where appellant was convicted on a plea of guilty to aggravated robbery, the trial court did not err in denying his petition for a writ of error coram nobis without a hearing; he failed to prove that he was coerced into pleading guilty or that the state committed a Brady violation. Appellant's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence and his claim of ineffective assistance of counsel was not within the purview of a coram nobis proceeding; it was too late for him to file a timely petition under this rule. Pierce v. State, 2009 Ark. 606 (2009).

Because the facts forming the basis for a writ of error coram nobis were known to defendant at the completion of defendant's direct appeal, because allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel were outside the purview of a coram nobis proceeding, and because subsection (c) of this rule did not provide for a belated petition, defendant was not entitled to the relief sought. Lee v. State, 2011 Ark. 508 (2011).

Rule 37.2. Commencement of proceedings; pleadings [Reinstated and Revised -- See Publisher's Notes].

(a) If the conviction in the original case was appealed to the Supreme Court or Court of Appeals, then no proceedings under this rule shall be entertained by the circuit court while the appeal is pending.

(b) All grounds for relief available to a petitioner under this rule must be raised in his or her original petition unless the petition was denied without prejudice. Any ground not so raised or any ground finally adjudicated or intelligently and understandingly waived in the proceedings which resulted in the conviction or sentence, or in any other proceedings that the petitioner may have taken to secure relief from his or her conviction or sentence, may not be the basis for a subsequent petition. All grounds for post-conviction relief from a sentence imposed by a circuit court, including claims that a sentence is illegal or was illegally imposed, must be raised in a petition under this rule.

(c)(i) If a conviction was obtained on a plea of guilty, or the petitioner was found guilty at trial and did not appeal the judgment of conviction, a petition claiming relief under this rule must be filed in the appropriate circuit court within ninety (90) days of the date of entry of judgment. If a petition is filed before the entry of judgment, the petition shall be treated as filed on the day after the entry of judgment.

(ii) If an appeal was taken of the judgment of conviction, a petition claiming relief under this rule must be filed in the circuit court within sixty (60) days of the date the mandate is issued by the appellate court. If a petition is filed after a conviction is affirmed by the appellate court but before the mandate is issued, the petition shall be treated as filed on the day after the mandate is issued.

(iii) In the event an appeal was dismissed, the petition must be filed in the appropriate circuit court within sixty (60) days of the date the appeal was dismissed.

(iv) If the appellate court affirms the conviction but reverses the sentence, the petition must be filed as provided in subsection (ii) within sixty (60) days of a mandate following an appeal taken after resentencing. If no appeal is taken after resentencing, then the petition must be filed as provided in subsection (i) with the appropriate circuit court within ninety (90) days of the entry of the judgment.

(d) The decision of the court in any proceeding under this rule shall be final when the judgment is rendered. No petition for rehearing shall be considered.

(e) Before the court acts upon a petition filed under this rule, the petition may be amended with leave of the court.

(f) Within twenty (20) days after service of a petition under this rule, the state may file a response thereto with evidence of service on opposing counsel or on the petitioner if he or she is acting pro se.

(g) Inmate filing. For purposes of subsection (c) of this rule, a petition filed pro se by a person confined in a correctional or detention facility that is not timely under the provisions of subsection (c) of this rule shall be deemed filed on the date of its deposit in the facility's legal mail system if the following conditions are satisfied:

(i) on the date the petition is deposited in the mail, the petitioner is confined in a state correctional facility, a federal correctional facility, or a regional or county detention facility that maintains a system designed for legal mail; and

(ii) the petition is filed pro se; and

(iii) the petition is deposited with first-class postage prepaid, addressed to the clerk of the circuit court; and

(iv) the petition contains a notarized statement by the petitioner as follows:

"I declare under penalty of perjury:

that I am incarcerated in _____ [name of facility];

that I am filing this petition pro se;

that the petition is being deposited in the facility's legal mail system on _____ [date];

that first-class postage has been prepaid; and that the petition is being mailed to _____ [list the name and address of each person served with a copy of the petition].

[NOTARY]"

The envelope in which the petition is mailed to the circuit clerk shall be retained by the circuit clerk and included in the record of any appeal of the petition.

HISTORY: Amended December 18, 1978; amended July 6, 1981; amended February 22, 1982; amended September 17, 1984; amended January 25, 1988, effective March 1, 1988; amended February 5, 1990, effective March 1, 1990; abolished May 30, 1990, effective July 1, 1990; reinstated and revised October 29, 1990, effective January 1, 1991; subsection (c); amended January 29, 1996; amended February 9, 2011, effective April 1, 2011; amended June 25, 2015, effective September 1, 2015.

Reporter's Notes, 1988 Amendment:

The problems encountered with use of the word "commitment" in Rule 37.2(c) are the same as those set out above [in Reporter's Note, ARCrP 36.9]. Most petitions under Rule 37 are pro se, therefore, the need to clarify this rule equals or exceeds the need with respect to Rule 36.9. The pro se petitioner is understandably more likely to assume that the date he entered prison is the date of commitment. Under such an interpretation, those who have been free on appeal bond would have longer to file a petition than a defendant who goes directly to prison on conviction. Using entry of judgment as the pivotal date is preferable because even the untrained petitioner can grasp the significance of a filemarked date on the judgment which gives him/her a definite date from which to calculate the three years. In the case of a delay of more than ten days in filing the judgment, the petitioner can simply use the date of sentence.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1990

Amendment: This proposal gives the state twenty days rather than ten to answer Rule 37 petitions.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2011

Amendment: In addition to minor, nonsubstantive editorial revisions, the 2011 amendments made two major changes to the period within which a Rule 37 petition must be filed. First, the amendments struck confusing language in subsection (c)(i) pursuant to which the 90-day period for filing a petition commenced from the date sentence was "pronounced" when judgment was not entered within 10 days of the date sentence was pronounced. Second, the amendments adopted the "deemed filed" rule that Arkansas Rule of Appellate Procedure—Criminal 2(b)(1) applies to a premature notice of appeal. Thus, the amendment changes the result announced in Tapp v. State, 324 Ark. 176, 920 S.W.2d 482 (1996) ("[Rule 37] does not allow for holding allegations in abeyance for future consideration when the [circuit] court obtains jurisdiction.”)

Note that the “deemed filed” rule only applies to appealed cases if the petition is filed with the circuit court after the conviction is affirmed, but before the mandate is issued. If the Rule 37 petition is filed before the appellate court has issued its decision on the appeal, then the circuit court is limited to dismissing the petition as untimely.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2015 Amendment: The 2015 amendment added subsection (g). The amendment is patterned after the federal “mailbox rule,” Fed. R. App. P. 4(c). It is limited to petitions filed by pro se inmates.

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

There is no constitutional right to a post-conviction proceeding; but when a state undertakes to provide collateral relief, due process requires that the proceeding be fundamentally fair. The requirement that a petition meet certain threshold requirements to gain permission to proceed in circuit court is fundamentally fair. Robinson v. State, 295 Ark. 693, 751 S.W.2d 335 (1988).

In General.

In 1996, the supreme court amended subsection (c) of this rule to provide appropriate limitations for seeking post-conviction relief after action by the circuit court upon remand. Bowen v. State, 323 Ark. 233, 913 S.W.2d 304, cert. denied, Bowen v. Arkansas, 517 U.S. 1226, 116 S. Ct. 1861, 134 L. Ed. 2d 960 (1996).

The 1996 amendment of subsection (c) of this rule provides that, in cases where the appellate court affirms the conviction but reverses the sentence, a petition for postconviction relief must be filed within sixty days of a mandate following an appeal taken after resentencing, or, if no appeal is taken, the petition must be filed within ninety days of the circuit court’s judgment; in cases involving multiple counts where a conviction and sentence is affirmed as to one count in a case, but the sentences are reversed for resentencing on the remaining counts, the appellate court will recall the portion of the mandate affirming the conviction and death sentence and stay it until such time as a final disposition of the remaining counts is complete. As such, any petition under subsection (c) of this rule must be filed within sixty days of a mandate following an appeal taken after resentencing on the remaining counts, and if no appeal is taken after resentencing on these counts, the petition must be filed with the appropriate circuit court within ninety days of the entry of judgment. Kemp v. State, 326 Ark. 910, 934 S.W.2d 526 (1996).

Petitioner’s state court remedies with respect to postconviction relief from his convictions for rape and capital murder and his death sentence had been exhausted where petitioner and his post-conviction attorney agreed that there were no issues appropriate for relief, petitioner and his attorney deliberately decided not to pursue postconviction relief, and the time for filing a petition was long past. Engram v. State, 360 Ark. 140, 200 S.W.3d 367 (2004), cert. denied, 545 U.S. 1142, 125 S. Ct. 2965, 162 L. Ed. 2d 893 (2005).

Amendment to Petition.

An amendment to a petition is untimely where filed after the court has already ruled on the original petition. Ford v. State, 278 Ark. 106, 644 S.W.2d 252 (1982).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it denied a last-minute effort to insert a due-process claim (based on an outrageous conduct theory) into the petition because the state was unprepared and unable to respond to the new theory without obtaining a continuance. Weaver v. State, 339 Ark. 97, 3 S.W.3d 323 (1999).

The trial court did not err in denying appellant’s motion to file an enlarged petition where appellant failed to set forth any legitimate ground or justification for filing the enlarged petition; appellant spent the majority of his motion attacking the page restrictions of Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1(e), rather than establishing a need to exceed that limitation. Sanders v. State, 352 Ark. 166, 98 S.W.3d 35 (2003).

Trial court abused its discretion in denying counsel’s motion for leave to amend defendant’s Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition; defendant acted with persistence in trying to move the case forward and defendant’s counsel did not seek to file an enlarged petition, which was not required by subsection (e) of this rule. Butler v. State, 367 Ark. 318, 239 S.W.3d 514 (2006).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it denied the inmate’s motion to amend the petition for relief because the leave to amend was tied to defendant's request for production of counsel's files and the trial court could not conclude that it was error to refuse production of the attorney's files. Walker v. State, 367 Ark. 523, 241 S.W.3d 734 (2006).

Failure to amend the petition allegations, which the trial court was not obligated to permit, did not relate to an error made by the court and was not sufficient to warrant recalling the mandate in this case. Isom v. State, 2015 Ark. 219, 462 S.W.3d 638 (2015).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in striking appellant's amended petition for post-conviction relief because it found no change in circumstances from the previous ruling. Sorum v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 354, 582 S.W.3d 18 (2019).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying counsel's motion on reconsideration to amend the postconviction petition, which had been filed pro se, because the trial court was not required to permit petitioner to submit another petition to, among other things, cure the margin deficiencies apparent in his original petition; the rule neither requires that a dismissal based on procedural deficiencies be without prejudice nor references any guaranteed opportunity to cure the deficiencies. Badger v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 246, 626 S.W.3d 447 (2021).

Appeal.

Where the defendant's convictions were affirmed by the Court of Appeals, his subsequent petition for post-conviction relief was subject to automatic dismissal where he did not get permission from the Supreme Court prior to filing the petition. Coston v. State, 283 Ark. 155, 671 S.W.2d 738 (1984).

Once a case is appealed, the trial court's jurisdiction is lost and cannot be regained without the Supreme Court's permission. Subsection (a) of this rule clearly limits the jurisdiction of the trial court in post-conviction proceedings; the petition to proceed is absolutely required. Coston v. State, 283 Ark. 155, 671 S.W.2d 738 (1984); Jones v. State, 283 Ark. 363, 676 S.W.2d 738 (1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1219, 105 S. Ct. 1204, 84 L. Ed. 2d 347 (1985).

This rule does not specify whether "appealed" as used in subsection (a) of this rule denotes simply filing a notice of appeal or denotes only those cases affirmed on appeal, but the Supreme Court interprets it to mean that a case must be affirmed before it becomes necessary to have that court's permission to proceed in circuit court; if an appeal is dismissed before final disposition, jurisdiction returns to the trial court to consider petitions for post-conviction relief. Walker v. State, 283 Ark. 534, 678 S.W.2d 360 (1984).

The mere allegation that a petitioner mailed a notice of appeal without some substantiation is not good cause to grant a belated appeal. Elkins v. State, 300 Ark. 320, 778 S.W.2d 609 (1989).

An appellant can not simultaneously pursue a direct appeal and Rule 37 relief. Haynes v. State, 311 Ark. 651, 846 S.W.2d 179 (1993).

An appeal of the denial of post-conviction relief will be dismissed where it is clear that the appeal is wholly without merit. Reed v. State, 317 Ark. 286, 878 S.W.2d 376 (1994).

Where the circuit court never ruled on the issue raised by the defendant with regard to remarks made by the trial judge, a request that the circuit court modify its order to include the omitted issue could not be a request for a rehearing that is prohibited by the rule. Matthews v. State, 333 Ark. 701, 333 Ark. 705A, 975 S.W.2d 836 (1998).

Where defendant failed to ask the trial court to modify its order to include a ruling on the omitted conflict-of-interest issue, the court was precluded from addressing that issue on appeal. Beshears v. State, 340 Ark. 70, 8 S.W.3d 32 (2000).

Although defendant's appeal from the denial of his motion for modification was technically timely, this rule did not allow the filing of a motion for reconsideration following the denial of a Ark. R. Crim. P. Rule 37.1 petition; as the appeal from the denial of the actual petition was not timely, defendant's appeal was dismissed. Morgan v. State, 360 Ark. 264, 200 S.W.3d 890 (2005), cert. denied, 2020 Ark. 239, 602 S.W.3d 736 (2020).

Defendant's appeal of the denial of defendant's petition to correct an illegal sentence was dismissed because defendant could not prevail, as, (1) to the extent defendant's claims were cognizable under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1, defendant's request for relief was properly treated as a petition under Rule 37.1 and was subject to the time limitations contained in subdivision (c) of this rule, which defendant did not satisfy after having pled guilty, and, (2) to the extent defendant's claims were not cognizable under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1, the claims alleged no error required to support a claim of an illegal sentence, as defendant did not show defendant's sentences were outside the statutory range, and defendant's petition was not timely filed under § 16-90-111. Davis v. State, 2013 Ark. 189 (2013).

Appellate court did not consider an issue on appeal relating to a failure to award defendant jail-time credit because the claim was not raised in a petition filed with the trial court. Singleton v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 165 (2014).

Appellate court did not consider issues that were raised by defendant for the first time on appeal because all grounds for postconviction relief were to be asserted in the original or an amended petition for postconviction relief. Airman v. State, 2015 Ark. 409, 473 S.W.3d 549

(2015), writ denied, Airsman v. Wright, 2016 Ark. 297, 498 S.W.3d 278 (2016).

Applicability.

The 90-day period for filing petitions in subsection (c) of this rule also applies to pleas of nolo contendere, since the plea of nolo contendere to a charge in a criminal case is an admission of guilt. Seaton v. State, 324 Ark. 236, 920 S.W.2d 13 (1996).

Appointment of Counsel.

Court will not appoint counsel to pursue the appeal of an untimely Rule 37 petition unless the petition states a ground sufficient to void the judgment. Williams v. State, 293 Ark. 73, 732 S.W.2d 456 (1987).

Bond.

Where the trial court was not authorized to admit defendant to bail during release for hearing on a Rule 37 petition, the bail bond taken was void and the surety was not liable. Donna's Bail Bonds, Inc. v. State, 34 Ark. App. 175, 807 S.W.2d 934 (1991).

Burden of Proof.

Burden is on appellant, as petitioner, to demonstrate that judgment entered was a nullity, and presumption that a criminal judgment is final is at its strongest in collateral attacks on judgment. Hedrick v. State, 292 Ark. 411, 730 S.W.2d 488 (1987).

Competency to Stand Trial.

Where the petitioner had an extensive role at trial and he failed to provide any even slightly convincing evidence that he was incompetent, his allegation that the trial court should have ordered a hearing on his competence did not warrant an evidentiary hearing. Henry v. State, 288 Ark. 592, 708 S.W.2d 88 (1986).

If convicted defendant did not raise the issue of his competence at trial, he may nevertheless assert his incompetence to stand trial in a petition for post-conviction relief, since a person who is incompetent cannot knowingly and intelligently waive the right to have the court determine his capacity to stand trial. Henry v. State, 288 Ark. 592, 708 S.W.2d 88 (1986).

Construction.

When Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was reinstated, the provision which had permitted relief in those instances where a ground was sufficient to void the conviction regardless of the timeliness of the petition was removed from the rule; therefore, claims of such a fundamental nature as to render the judgment void will no longer be heard unless filed within the time limit set forth in this rule. Prince v. State, 315 Ark. 492, 868 S.W.2d 77, cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1093, 114 S. Ct. 1857, 128 L. Ed. 2d 480 (1994).

Section 16-90-111, which permits the trial court to correct a sentence imposed in an illegal manner within 120 days after receipt of the affirming mandate of the appellate court, and which permits an illegal sentence to be corrected at any time, is in conflict with subsection (c) of this rule, which provides that a petition under the rule is untimely if not filed within 60 days of issuance of the appellate court's mandate affirming the judgment of conviction; since the time limitations imposed in Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 are jurisdictional in nature, the circuit court may not grant relief on a untimely petition. Reed v. State, 317 Ark. 286, 878 S.W.2d 376 (1994).

Because the time limits set forth in Rule 37 are jurisdictional in nature, a trial court cannot extend the time to file a Rule 37 petition even if a motion for extension of time is filed before the sixty-day period allowed by subsection (c) of this rule elapses. Hill v. State, 340 Ark. 248, 13 S.W.3d 142 (2000).

Cruel and Unusual Punishment.

The constitutional prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment is directed toward the kind of punishment, not its duration, and the fact that punishment is severe does not make it cruel and unusual. Rogers v. State, 265 Ark. 945, 582 S.W.2d 7 (1979).

Evidentiary Hearing.

Inmate did not show it was error for a trial court to rule on the inmate's postconviction claims without a hearing because (1) the inmate did not show the inmate raised an issue that could not be ruled on by referring to the record, and (2) the inmate's claims called for no fact finding. Norris v. State, 2013 Ark. 205, 427 S.W.3d 626 (2013).

Exclusion of Juror.

Where the trial judge had justifiably excused a juror who said that she would vote against the imposition of the death penalty without regard to any evidence that might develop at the trial, the defendant could not claim in a petition for post-conviction relief that his capital felony murder conviction should be overturned because a juror had been improperly excluded. Hulsey v. State, 268 Ark. 312, 595 S.W.2d 934, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 938, 101 S. Ct. 337, 66 L. Ed. 2d 161 (1980).

Federal Habeas Corpus.

The rule that certain state-court procedural defaults will bar a petition for federal habeas corpus extends to procedural defaults occurring in the course of state post-conviction proceedings, as well as to procedural defaults occurring at trial or on direct appeal in the state courts. Williams v. Lockhart, 873 F.2d 1129 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 942, 110 S. Ct. 344, 107 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1989).

Where defendant filed a petition under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 seeking post-petition relief, and state courts dismissed the petition because it was filed more than three years after date of defendant's commitment, and the state Supreme Court had consistently interpreted and applied this three year limitation, and it was consistently applied in defendant's case, defendant was barred from federal habeas corpus relief. Williams v. Lockhart, 873 F.2d 1129 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 942, 110 S. Ct. 344, 107 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1989).

For purposes of federal habeas corpus relief, defendant established sufficient cause for not bringing guilt phase claim of ineffective assistance of counsel before the state court due to the ineffectiveness of counsel in defendant's subsequent state collateral challenge under this rule. Henderson v. Sargent, 926 F.2d 706 (8th Cir.), amended, 939 F.2d 586 (8th Cir. 1991).

Where defendant did not raise his guilt phase claim of ineffective assistance of counsel before the state court, and could not bring another petition under this rule due to the three-year time limitation, no non-future state remedy was available to him, thus satisfying the exhaustion of remedies requirement for federal habeas corpus relief. Henderson v. Sargent, 926 F.2d 706 (8th Cir.), amended, 939 F.2d 586 (8th Cir. 1991).

The fact that defendant failed to raise the claims of ineffective assistance of counsel or defective guilty plea in either of his petitions and he has not shown cause for this default and has not demonstrated that failure to consider the omitted claims will result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice, federal habeas review of the omitted claims was barred. Johnson v. Lockhart, 944 F.2d 388 (8th Cir. 1991).

Defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, first raised in a federal petition for writ of habeas corpus, should first have been raised in his petition for post-conviction relief under this rule; the failure to raise his claim in state court can be excused only on a showing of cause for the default and prejudice from the alleged violation of federal law. Ford v. Lockhart, 861 F. Supp. 1447 (E.D. Ark. 1994), aff'd sub nom. Ford v. Norris, 67 F.3d 162 (8th Cir. 1995).

Equitable tolling was not warranted where inmate's failure to file a habeas corpus petition within the one-year limitations period under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2244(d)(1)(A) was due to a misunderstanding of the proper procedures for filing a petition for post-conviction relief under this rule. Shoemate v. Norris, 390 F.3d 595 (8th Cir. 2004).

Prisoner's mental condition and conditions of confinement did not constitute cause to excuse the procedural default of his federal habeas claims arising from his failure to timely file his postconviction relief petition; forms documenting his mental health during the relevant period showed that he had a rational thought process. Gordon v. Arkansas, 823 F.3d 1188 (8th Cir. 2016).

Filing of Formal Petition.

A formal verified petition for post-conviction relief must be filed in Supreme Court, following its affirmance of a conviction for permission to proceed in the trial court. Knappenberger v. State, 278 Ark. 382, 647 S.W.2d 417 (1983).

Rule compared with § 16-90-111 concerning correction of illegal sentence. Williams v. State, 291 Ark. 255, 724 S.W.2d 158 (1987), superseded by statute as stated in Jones v. State, 301 Ark. 510, 785 S.W.2d 217 (1990).

Delivering an item to a circuit judge is not the equivalent of filing the item with the clerk for the purposes of determining whether an item is timely filed under this rule. Benton v. State, 325 Ark. 246, 925 S.W.2d 401 (1996).

Where appellant "sent" a petition to reduce sentence to the circuit judge, who ruled on it, but the petition was never filed-of-record, the appellant did not satisfy the requirement of this rule that a petition for postconviction relief be filed with the circuit clerk. Benton v. State, 325 Ark. 246, 925 S.W.2d 401 (1996).

Postconviction relief petition was timely filed under this rule when it was filed on the day that an appellate court issued its mandate affirming petitioner's conviction. Carter v. State, 2010 Ark. 231, 364 S.W.3d 46 (2010).

Fundamental Errors.

While even constitutional issues must be raised in the trial court and on direct appeal rather than in Rule 37 proceedings, the Supreme Court has made an exception for errors that are so fundamental as to render the judgment of conviction void and subject to collateral attack, provided the petition is timely filed. Collins v. State, 324 Ark. 322, 920 S.W.2d 846 (1996).

Grounds for Relief.

Where the defendant's petition under this rule alleged only that he was not guilty, the defendant was not entitled to post-conviction relief since he did not allege grounds which would void his conviction. Craft v. State, 289 Ark. 466, 712 S.W.2d 303 (1986).

Issues which could have been raised on appeal or in the original petition for post-conviction relief, but were not, must be considered waived. Blair v. State, 290 Ark. 22, 716 S.W.2d 197 (1986).

The failure of counsel to move to dismiss a charge on speedy trial grounds is not a defect sufficient to void a judgment. Locklear v. State, 290 Ark. 70, 716 S.W.2d 766 (1986).

A ground sufficient to void a conviction must be one so basic that the judgment is a complete nullity. York v. State, 295 Ark. 163, 747 S.W.2d 102 (1988).

A trial court's failure to establish a factual basis for a guilty plea is not so basic as to render a judgment of conviction a complete nullity. Jeffers v. State, 301 Ark. 590, 786 S.W.2d 114 (1990).

This rule does not provide a means to challenge the constitutionality of a judgment where the issue could have been raised in the trial court. Bailey v. State, 312 Ark. 180, 848 S.W.2d 391 (1993).

To the extent the trial court based its denial of petition upon conflicting testimonies presented by witness who was not excluded pursuant to Ark. R. Evid. 615, appellant demonstrated prejudice as a result of the trial court's error. Request for a new hearing granted. King v. State, 322 Ark. 51, 907 S.W.2d 127 (1995), different results reached on reh'g, 325 Ark. 313, 925 S.W.2d 159 (1996).

Guilty Pleas.

Ark. R. Crim. P. 24, 25, and 26, which govern pleas of guilty and nolo contendere, make no distinction between the pleas for the purposes of the rule. A judgment founded on a plea of nolo contendere may be challenged in a proceeding under this rule. Seaton v. State, 324 Ark. 236, 920 S.W.2d 13 (1996).

Illegal Sentence.

In criminal cases, an aggrieved party may seek relief to correct a sentence illegal on its face at any time, but must petition within 120 days to seek relief from a sentence imposed in an illegal manner; the corollary to this rule is that the trial court is without jurisdiction to modify a sentence once it has been put into execution. Pannell v. State, 320 Ark. 250, 897 S.W.2d 552 (1995).

Because modification of sentence was the only issue raised on appeal, and Rule 37 requires that the merits of the modification of the sentence be determined by the Circuit Court, the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal rather than modify the judgment. However, under subsection (c) of this rule appellant had 60 days from this dismissal to seek correction of his sentence which was imposed in an illegal manner. Cooley v. State, 322 Ark. 348, 909 S.W.2d 312 (1995).

Supreme Court could address the issue of an illegal sentence at any time regardless of the proceedings, and although defendant did not request permission to pursue postconviction relief, he did directly raise the issue of an illegal sentence; defendant's delay in raising the issue did not bar relief. Hallman v. State, 2018 Ark. 336, 561 S.W.3d 305 (2018).

Because defendant did not request jail-time credit below, either directly or in an Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition, his claim was not properly preserved and could not be raised for the first time on appeal. Weatherford v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 536, 590 S.W.3d 172 (2019).

Even though defendant claimed his sentence was illegal, and could be raised for the first time on appeal, because the circuit court's failure to award jail-time credit would require him to serve more than the maximum amount of time designated in the statutes for his offenses, defendant's sentence was not illegal on its face because the sentence was within the maximum prescribed by law; instead, a complaint for jail-time credit is a request for modification of a sentence imposed in an illegal manner. Weatherford v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 536, 590 S.W.3d 172 (2019).

Ineffective Assistance of Counsel.

Sufficient allegation of ineffective assistance of counsel. Lewis v. State, 265 Ark. 132, 577 S.W.2d 415 (1979); Poe v. State, 287 Ark. 292, 698 S.W.2d 297 (1985).

Petitioner was not barred from raising the issue of the ineffective assistance of counsel for the first time in federal court in a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. Knott v. Mabry, 671 F.2d 1208 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 851, 103 S. Ct. 115, 74 L. Ed. 2d 101 (1982).

While advice of law student, who was part of law school defender project, regarding the calculation of time limitations under this rule may have been erroneous, it did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel since the student was not a licensed attorney and there was no evidence that petitioner retained the defender project as his counsel or that the defender project was appointed by a court to represent him. Holloway v. State, 276 Ark. 120, 632 S.W.2d 428 (1982).

To prevail on an allegation of ineffective assistance of counsel with regard to jury selection, a petitioner first has the heavy burden of overcoming the presumption that the jurors were unbiased. The petition must demonstrate actual bias, and the actual bias must have been sufficient to prejudice the petitioner to the degree that he was denied a fair trial. Tackett v. State, 284 Ark. 211, 680 S.W.2d 696 (1984).

Petition held based on ineffective assistance of counsel deficient. Morrison v. State, 288 Ark. 636, 707 S.W.2d 323 (1986).

Inexperience of counsel held not a sufficient ground to void conviction. York v. State, 295 Ark. 163, 747 S.W.2d 102 (1988).

Petitioner was not barred from raising the issue of the ineffective assistance of counsel during the guilt phase of his trial for the first time in a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, where exhaustion of state remedies and cause for not raising the issue in the state proceedings was established. Henderson v. Sargent, 926 F.2d 706 (8th Cir.), amended, 939 F.2d 586 (8th Cir. 1991).

The unavailability of trial records destroyed by fire did not prevent defendant from presenting his ineffective assistance claim in an amended Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition. Accordingly, the district court erred in finding that the absence of records generally, or the absence of a transcript, more specifically, constituted sufficient cause to excuse his procedural default in failing to raise this claim in a timely manner. Bell v. Lockhart, 2 F.3d 293 (8th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1182, 114 S. Ct. 1229, 127 L. Ed. 2d 574 (1994).

Any prolonged incarceration was due to defendant's failure to follow the rules, not the appellate court's refusal to address ineffective assistance claims on direct appeal where the claims were not considered by the trial court; defendant failed to demonstrate that the appellate court's requirement, that an ineffective assistance claim must first be considered by the trial court, unduly prolonged his time in prison for a conviction that was defective and, as such, no exception to the rule was warranted on that basis. Ratchford v. State, 357 Ark. 27, 159 S.W.3d 304 (2004), writ denied, 2014 Ark. 452 (2014).

Because the state was not required to prove that an alleged theft had actually been accomplished, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to investigate the security system at a store, for failing to talk to a store representative regarding the theft, and for failing to interview alleged unnamed witnesses regarding the theft; postconviction relief was properly denied. Carter v. State, 2010 Ark. 231, 364 S.W.3d 46 (2010).

Jurisdiction of Trial Court.

Subsection (a) of this rule clearly limits the trial court in post-conviction proceedings to that authorized by the Supreme Court. Fink v. State, 280 Ark. 281, 658 S.W.2d 359 (1983).

Under subsection (c) of this rule, lack of jurisdiction is a ground sufficient to void a conviction. Ellis v. State, 291 Ark. 72, 722 S.W.2d 575, cert. denied, Blevins v. Norris, 481 U.S. 1040, 107 S. Ct. 1980, 95 L. Ed. 2d 819 (1987).

The petition must be filed after the mandate is issued because, when a case is directly appealed, the circuit court does not regain jurisdiction over the case until that event occurs, and a court must have jurisdiction before it can do more with respect to a Rule 37 petition than examine it to see if it is timely. Doyle v. State, 319 Ark. 175, 890 S.W.2d 256 (1994); Tapp v. State, 324 Ark. 176, 920 S.W.2d 482 (1996).

The filing deadlines imposed by this rule are jurisdictional in nature; if they are not met, a circuit court lacks jurisdiction to consider a Rule 37 petition or a petition to correct an illegal sentence on its merits. Petree v. State, 323 Ark. 570, 920 S.W.2d 819 (1995).

Because defendant was in custody when the trial court ultimately disposed of his motion to withdraw under Ark. R. Crim. P. 26.1 and because his motion was otherwise timely under Ark. R. Crim. P. 26.1 and this rule, the trial court had jurisdiction to consider the merits of his Rule 37 motion. State v. Herred, 332 Ark. 241, 964 S.W.2d 391 (1998).

Circuit court lacked jurisdiction to consider an appellant's petitions for postconviction relief from his theft by receiving, possession of a firearm by a felon, robbery, fleeing, and aggravated assault convictions where his first and second petitions were invalid under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1(d) and (e) for lack of verification and his third petition was not filed within the 90-day time limit of subsection (c) of this rule. Shaw v. State, 363 Ark. 156, 211 S.W.3d 506 (2005).

Circuit court erred in dismissing defendant's postconviction relief petition for lack of jurisdiction because once jurisdiction was established by defendant's timely filing of a verified petition pursuant to subdivision (c)(ii) of this rule, the circuit court had discretion to allow defendant to file an amended petition under subsection (e). Barrow v. State, 2012 Ark. 197 (2012).

Dismissal of inmate's appeal from the denial of his petition for postconviction relief was appropriate pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 and this rule because, without an original timely petition in compliance with the rules, the trial court had no jurisdiction to consider his later-filed amended petitions. The appeal was dismissed because the trial court was, and therefore, the supreme court was, without jurisdiction to consider the claims. Williamson v. State, 2012 Ark. 170 (2012).

Petition.

Any grounds for relief finally adjudicated in the original proceedings or in any other post-conviction proceedings may not be the basis for a subsequent petition. Ghent v. State, 265 Ark. 347, 578 S.W.2d 218 (1979).

Where the petitioner filed a second petition for post-conviction relief, the petition was denied because the petitioner failed to show why his attorney could not have raised the allegations in his first post-conviction petition and failed to demonstrate that manifest injustice had resulted from his several previous opportunities for redress. Scott v. State, 267 Ark. 536, 592 S.W.2d 122 (1980).

The Supreme Court will no longer consider any petitions subsequent to an original Rule 37 petition, unless the original petition was specifically denied without prejudice. Williams v. State, 273 Ark. 315, 619 S.W.2d 628 (1981); Grooms v. State, 293 Ark. 358, 737 S.W.2d 648 (1987).

Where a petitioner filed one motion for Rule 37 post-conviction relief, which was denied because it only presented conclusory allegations, and a second Rule 37 petition, properly submitted, was also denied, a petition seeking a transcript at public expense, subsequently filed, constituted a third Rule 37 petition and was properly denied pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. Williams v. State, 273 Ark. 315, 619 S.W.2d 628 (1981).

Since post-conviction petitions which raise grounds for relief cognizable under this rule are considered petitions to proceed under this rule, regardless of the label given them by the petitioner, trial court could simply have dismissed an Ark. R. Crim. P. 26.1 petition to withdraw guilty pleas as being a subsequent Rule 37 petition. Walker v. State, 283 Ark. 339, 676 S.W.2d 460 (1984).

Where the defendant's petition under Ark. R. Crim. P. 26.1 seeking to vacate his guilty plea was denied without written findings of fact, and the petitioner then filed a Rule 37 petition raising allegations similar to those raised in the earlier Rule 26.1 petition, the trial court did not err in refusing to hold an evidentiary hearing on the petition, since the trial court had already considered and denied one petition for post-conviction relief filed by the petitioner before he filed the petition in question. Porter v. State, 289 Ark. 475, 712 S.W.2d 304 (1986).

Where, in his second petition under this rule, the defendant did not allege that he did not voluntarily and intelligently choose to dismiss the first petition with prejudice, and the trial judge had questioned the defendant at considerable length about his desire to dismiss the first petition and the consequences of that decision, the trial court correctly denied the second petition on the ground that the defendant had already exhausted his remedy under subsection (b) of this rule. James v. State, 289 Ark. 560, 712 S.W.2d 919 (1986).

All grounds for relief pursuant to this rule must be asserted in the original or amended petition as prescribed by subsections (b) and (e) of this rule. Madewell v. State, 290 Ark. 580, 720 S.W.2d 913 (1986); Gunn v. State, 296 Ark. 105, 752 S.W.2d 262 (1988).

Fact that petitioner chose to label his second petition a petition for writ of error coram nobis did not change the fact that the grounds raised were encompassed by his original Rule 37 petition; and a petitioner may not reassert issues or raise new ones which are properly addressed under this rule by simply giving the petition a new name and filing it again. Mock v. State, 292 Ark. 148, 728 S.W.2d 513 (1987).

Although the principles that attorneys are required to file a brief setting out all issues which might support an appeal and explain why those issues have no merit prior to being relieved as counsel, it was held in Pennsylvania v. Finley, 481 U.S. 551, 107 S. Ct. 1990, 95 L. Ed. 2d 539 (1987) not to extend to collateral post-conviction petitions in federal proceedings, "Finley" does not affect the Arkansas rules. The Supreme Court of Arkansas will continue to review the denial of Rule 37 petitions, and appointed counsel must file an appeal brief; if he determines the appeal is without merit, he must state the reasons therefor. Mills v. State, 293 Ark. 312, 737 S.W.2d 460 (1987).

Subsection (c) of this rule requires that petitions for post-conviction relief must be filed in those cases where the petitioner was convicted, after January 1, 1991, within sixty days of the date the mandate was issued upon affirmance. Bailey v. State, 312 Ark. 180, 848 S.W.2d 391 (1993).

Circuit court was without jurisdiction to entertain defendant's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.5 petition for postconviction relief, and the supreme was likewise without jurisdiction to hear an appeal from any decision of the circuit court because defendant's initial waiver of postconviction relief was equivalent to filing a first petition for postconviction relief; subsection (b) of this rule makes it clear that all grounds for postconviction relief must be raised in the first petition, and subsection (b) contemplates not only the direct-appeal proceeding but also any postconviction proceedings. Roberts v. State, 2011 Ark. 502, 385 S.W.3d 792 (2011).

When defendant filed a petition for post-conviction relief after defendant's conviction was affirmed but before the appellate court's mandate was issued, and moved to dismiss without prejudice defendant's appeal of the petition's denial, while it was proper to dismiss the appeal due to lack of jurisdiction of both the trial and appellate courts, defendant was not entitled to file a second petition because subdivision (a) of this rule treated the first petition as having been filed the day after the appellate court's mandate was issued. Green v. State, 2013 Ark. 190 (2013).

Appellant failed to demonstrate that his first two petitions for postconviction relief were denied without prejudice, and thus, a subsequent petition would be prohibited. Hinkston v. State, 2016 Ark. 4 (2016).

Prior Consent.

Where petitioner for post-conviction relief had death sentence affirmed on previous direct appeal, he could not bring relief petition without the prior consent of the Supreme Court since, under this rule, prior consent must be obtained in such circumstances, and even questions of constitutional dimension are not preserved beyond the direct appeal of the conviction unless they are shown to be of such a fundamental nature that the judgment is rendered void. Swindler v. State, 272 Ark. 340, 617 S.W.2d 1, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 933, 102 S. Ct. 431, 70 L. Ed. 2d 240 (1981).

Defendant was precluded from proceeding for a new trial under this rule where he had previously appealed his conviction on other grounds and he failed to seek the prior permission of the Supreme Court to proceed. Wilson v. State, 285 Ark. 271, 686 S.W.2d 414 (1985).

Purpose.

A Rule 37 petition will be denied where a defendant does not seek any further hearing in the trial court, but merely presents constitutional arguments based upon the record on the original appeal, since it is not the purpose of this rule to provide a substitute for appeal, an alternative method of reviewing mere error in the conduct of the trial, or an opportunity for a belated petition for rehearing. Miller v. State, 273 Ark. 508, 621 S.W.2d 482 (1981).

Reconsideration.

Denial of the inmate's motion for reconsideration was not erroneous; although postconviction counsel failed to discover the evidence until after the hearing on the postconviction petition, there was no indication that the evidence was unavailable before then or had been wrongfully withheld. Hartman v. State, 2017 Ark. 7, 508 S.W.3d 28 (2017).

Record.

Tender of the record was timely, because the petitioner's notice of appeal was deemed filed on November 23, 2011, and the tender of the record on February 8, 2012, seventy-seven days after that date, was therefore timely; in circumstances such as were present in the instant case, where the request for a ruling on the omitted issue was still pending when the petitioner filed his notice of appeal, the notice of appeal was deemed filed on the day after the order disposing of the request for a ruling was entered. Lewis v. State, 2012 Ark. 355, 423 S.W.3d 16 (2012).

Court of Appeals was unable to rule on whether inmate's postconviction petition was timely filed because an essential item was missing from the record on appeal; the record did not contain the envelope in which the petition was received by the circuit clerk, as required by subsection (g) of this rule, showing the postmark information. Gould v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 333 (2019).

Relief Denied.

Where the petitioner waited until he filed his amended petition for reconsideration of the Supreme Court's denial of his earlier petition for post-conviction relief before raising his claims, the claims were untimely as raised in the amended petition, and were therefore barred. Hulsey v. Sargent, 550 F. Supp. 179 (E.D. Ark. 1981), disapproved, Woodard v. Sargent, 753 F.2d 694 (8th Cir. 1985).

Where the petitioner's claimed grounds for post-conviction relief are not raised in a timely fashion, this rule is an adequate and independent ground barring review of the claims on their merits by the state court. This procedural default also bars federal habeas corpus review of the issues where the petitioner has not demonstrated legally sufficient cause for his failure to raise the issues. Hulsey v. Sargent, 550 F. Supp. 179 (E.D. Ark. 1981), disapproved, Woodard v. Sargent, 753 F.2d 694 (8th Cir. 1985).

Allegations of petitioner not sufficient to render judgment of conviction void under this rule. Holloway v. State, 276 Ark. 120, 632 S.W.2d 428 (1982).

Denial of relief held proper. Cotton v. State, 293 Ark. 338, 738 S.W.2d 90 (1987); Grooms v. State, 293 Ark. 358, 737 S.W.2d 648 (1987); Abdullah v. State, 294 Ark. 547, 744 S.W.2d 727, cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1025, 108 S. Ct. 2001, 100 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1988); McCuen v. State, 328 Ark. 46, 941 S.W.2d 397 (1997).

As petitioner did not file his petition for post-conviction relief within the ninety-day period set by this rule to raise such claims, the petition was untimely; therefore, petitioner could not have prevailed on appeal even if he had perfected an appeal. Smith v. State, 321 Ark. 195, 900 S.W.2d 939 (1995).

Petition not filed until nearly a year after the judgment was untimely. Cothrine v. State, 322 Ark. 112, 907 S.W.2d 134 (1995).

Denial of postconviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 was proper, because the petition was untimely as to the original judgment, and the amended judgment did not extend the time for the petitioner to file for postconviction relief. Justus v. State, 2012 Ark. 91 (2012).

Denial of petition and amended petition to correct a sentence was proper, because to the extent that the petitioner's claims were cognizable under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1, his request for relief, filed more than a year after the judgment was entered, was not timely; to the extent that a claim under § 16-90-111 conflicted with the time limitations for postconviction relief on a petition under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1, the statute had been superseded. Turner v. State, 2012 Ark. 99 (2012).

Trial court properly denied defendant's petition for a writ of error coram nobis because his petition was untimely, his allegation of ineffective assistance of counsel was not cognizable in a coram-nobis proceeding, and his due process of law and equal protection rights were not violated. Schrader v. State, 2014 Ark. 379, 441 S.W.3d 1 (2014).

Inmate's declaratory judgment petition was dismissed because the petition was treated as a postconviction petition, and it was defective because the petition (1) was not filed within 90 days of the judgment entered after the inmate's guilty plea, and (2) was an impermissible successive petition, since the inmate's prior postconviction petition was not dismissed without prejudice to filing a second petition. Moreover, the appellate court rejected inmate's contention that the Governor's discretion to grant clemency under § 16-93-607 created a liberty interest in parole eligibility. Millsap v. Kelley, 2016 Ark. 406 (2016).

Supersession of Statutes.

Section 16-90-111, which permits the trial court to correct a sentence imposed in an illegal manner within 120 days after receipt of the affirming mandate of the appellate court and which permits an illegal sentence to be corrected at any time, is in conflict with subsection (c) of this rule, which provides that a petition under this rule is untimely if not filed within 60 days of issuance of the appellate court's mandate affirming the judgment of conviction; the rule supersedes the statute. Harris v. State, 318 Ark. 599, 887 S.W.2d 514 (1994).

Although the provisions of § 16-90-111(a) permit a circuit court to correct an illegal sentence at any time, this provision is invalid to the extent that it conflicts with subsection (b) of this rule. Petree v. State, 323 Ark. 570, 920 S.W.2d 819 (1995).

Supersession of Statutes.

Since the portion of § 16-90-111 that provides a means to challenge a sentence at any time on the ground that the sentence is illegal on its face remains in effect despite Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2(c), appellant's argument that his sentence was illegal on its face was not untimely. Neely v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 547, 615 S.W.3d 392 (2020).

Timeliness.

Petition denied as untimely. Scott v. State, 267 Ark. 536, 592 S.W.2d 122 (1980); Washington v. State, 270 Ark. 840, 606 S.W.2d 365 (1980); Collins v. State, 271 Ark. 825, 611 S.W.2d 182, cert. denied, 452 U.S. 973, 101 S. Ct. 3127, 69 L. Ed. 2d 984 (1981); Poe v. State, 273 Ark. 194, 617 S.W.2d 361 (1981); Chisum v. State, 274 Ark. 332, 625 S.W.2d 448 (1981); Pogue v. Cooper, 284 Ark. 105, 679 S.W.2d 207 (1984); Bell v. State, 287 Ark. 430, 700 S.W.2d 788 (1985); Abdullah v. State, 290 Ark. 537, 720 S.W.2d 902 (1986), superseded by statute as stated in Houston v. State, No. CR 97-225, 1997 Ark. LEXIS 465 (Ark. July 7, 1997); Leggins v. Lockhart, 822 F.2d 764 (8th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 907, 108 S. Ct. 1080, 99 L. Ed. 2d 239 (1988); Williams v. State, 293 Ark. 73, 732 S.W.2d 456 (1987); Bailey v. State, 312 Ark. 180, 848 S.W.2d 391 (1993).

The trial, the direct appeal of the judgment, and the safeguards afforded by this rule give the defendant ample opportunity to be heard; the three year limitation for raising claims under this rule protects the rights of the accused, while respecting the legitimate interest of society in the finality of criminal judgments. Travis v. State, 286 Ark. 26, 688 S.W.2d 935 (1985).

Although the three-year limitation was not in effect when a defendant was sentenced, his action must be timely filed three years from the date this rule was so amended in 1978. Abdullah v. State, 290 Ark. 537, 720 S.W.2d 902 (1986), superseded by statute as stated in Houston v. State, No. CR 97-225, 1997 Ark. LEXIS 465 (Ark. July 7, 1997).

Where defendant raises no issue which, if found in his favor, would make his conviction absolutely void, the exception to the three year requirement of former subsection (c) of this rule does not apply. Locklear v. State, 290 Ark. 609, 721 S.W.2d 668 (1986) (decision under prior law).

The language of subsection (c) of this rule and the policy reasons behind it are sufficient to hold that the time limits of the rule are jurisdictional in nature. Maxwell v. State, 298 Ark. 329, 767 S.W.2d 303 (1989).

The standard for allowing a late petition is not the "reasonableness" of the delay, but whether the alleged grounds are sufficient to render the conviction absolutely void. Maxwell v. State, 298 Ark. 329, 767 S.W.2d 303 (1989).

Where claims are not sufficient to render conviction absolutely void, petition coming well beyond the three-year limit of former subsection (c) of this rule is untimely filed. Maxwell v. State, 298 Ark. 329, 767 S.W.2d 303 (1989) (decision under prior law).

The three year limitations period runs from the date of entry of judgment, and not from the date the Court of Appeals affirms the conviction. Gass v. State, 298 Ark. 548, 769 S.W.2d 24 (1989).

In 1990, this rule was amended to require filing within 90 days in cases where the defendant pleaded guilty or did not elect to appeal and 60 days where an appeal was taken; that time limit is strictly imposed. Wainwright v. Norris, 836 F. Supp. 619 (E.D. Ark. 1993).

Because this rule takes precedence over conflicting § 16-90-111, where appellant did not file his petition for post-conviction relief within the 60-day period set by rule, the petition was untimely. Hamilton v. State, 323 Ark. 614, 918 S.W.2d 113 (1996).

The time limitations imposed in Rule 37 are jurisdictional in nature, and the circuit court may not grant relief on a petition for postconviction relief not filed within the 90-day period set by this rule. Seaton v. State, 324 Ark. 236, 920 S.W.2d 13 (1996).

Even though appellant filed petition for reduction of sentence under § 16-90-111 when it should have been filed under this rule, the time for filing appellant's brief was extended where the petition met the timeliness requirement of this rule. Taylor v. State, 324 Ark. 532, 922 S.W.2d 710 (1996).

The time limitations imposed in Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 are jurisdictional in nature, and the circuit court may not grant relief on a petition for postconviction relief that is not properly filed. Benton v. State, 325 Ark. 246, 925 S.W.2d 401 (1996).

Where the defendant provided no citation of authority supporting his allegation that the sixty-day deadline of this rule was fundamentally unfair, his petition for relief was dismissed as untimely. Larimore v. State, 327 Ark. 271, 938 S.W.2d 818 (1997).

A petition was untimely where it was not filed within 90 days of judgment, notwithstanding the pro se petitioner's argument that the court should adopt a mailbox rule, whereby the petition would be deemed filed when placed in the hands of prison officials for mailing. Hamel v. State, 338 Ark. 769, 1 S.W.3d 434 (1999).

Good cause was established for the petitioner's failure to file his petition in a timely manner and, therefore, would be allowed to proceed with his petition where the case involved the death penalty, the enactment of Rule 37.5 effectively cured the instant situation from recurring, and there were ambiguous circumstances surrounding the petitioner's legal representation at the time the petition was filed. Porter v. State, 339 Ark. 15, 2 S.W.3d 73, limited, O'Brien v. State, 339 Ark. 138, 3 S.W.3d 332 (1999).

A pro se petition was untimely where it was not filed within 60 days of the mandate of the Court of Appeals which affirmed his conviction, notwithstanding the petitioner's assertion that his trial counsel failed to inform him of the mandate. O'Brien v. State, 339 Ark. 138, 3 S.W.3d 332 (1999).

An appeal was not properly taken within 90 days of judgment, notwithstanding that the defendant's wife prepared and filed a notice of appeal on his behalf within 90 days, since she was not a licensed attorney and, therefore, her actions were of no consequence. Shoemate v. State, 339 Ark. 403, 5 S.W.3d 446 (1999).

The appellant timely filed his petition for postconviction relief with regard to claims associated with the revocation of his suspended sentences where he filed his petition less than 60 days after the court of appeals affirmed that revocation. Johnson v. State, 339 Ark. 487, 5 S.W.3d 477 (1999).

When a conviction results from a guilty plea, the party claiming relief under subsection (c) of this rule must file a petition in the appropriate trial court within 90 days of the date of judgment; thus, defendant's failure to file his petition until more than one year later meant the petition was untimely filed. Hamm v. State, 75 Ark. App. 358, 57 S.W.3d 252 (2001).

Trial court erred in dismissing defendant's postconviction relief petition of his death sentence as untimely under subsection (c) of this rule, a rule that applied only to non-death cases; defendant's petition was timely filed within 90 days after the appointment of counsel under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.5(e), which did apply to death penalty cases. Simpson v. State, 347 Ark. 564, 65 S.W.3d 878 (2002).

Subsection (c) of this rule provides that a petition attacking a judgment entered on a plea of guilty or nolo contendere is untimely if not filed within 90 days of the entry of judgment pursuant to the guilty plea; thus, where the 90-day period to file a petition under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 expired in defendant's case on December 16, 2002, and defendant did not file his petition for postconviction relief until August 11, 2003, his petition was untimely and defendant was procedural barred from proceeding under the rule. Shabazz v. State, 359 Ark. 525, 199 S.W.3d 77 (2004).

Motion to dismiss defendant's appeal was granted where defendant's postconviction petition was not filed within the jurisdictional time limitations of subsection (c) of this rule because it was filed 99 days after the judgment. Mims v. State, 360 Ark. 96, 199 S.W.3d 681 (2004).

In postconviction proceedings, the appellant's motion to remand the case to the trial court to settle the record was granted as the file-stamp date on the petition for postconviction relief was incorrect and the Court could not determine whether the petition was timely filed under subsection (c) of this rule. Smith v. State, 362 Ark. 173, 207 S.W.3d 555 (2005).

Trial court did not err in dismissing with prejudice inmate's petition for postconviction relief as the petition violated Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1(d) and (e) in that it was not signed and verified by the inmate, it exceeded ten pages in length, and a compliant brief could not be filed within the time limitations of subsection (c) of this rule. Boyle v. State, 362 Ark. 248, 208 S.W.3d 134 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying inmate's petition for postconviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 where the petition was filed 23 months after the mandate was issued in inmate's case, which was outside the time limits of this rule; thus, the appeal was dismissed. Johnson v. State, 362 Ark. 453, 208 S.W.3d 783 (2005).

Circuit court lacked jurisdiction to consider inmate's petitions for postconviction relief where the inmate's first and second petitions to the circuit court were invalid under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1(d) because they lacked verification, and the inmate's third petition was not filed within the 90-day time limit of subsection (c) of this rule. Shaw v. State, 363 Ark. 156, 211 S.W.3d 506 (2005).

Defendant's petitions for postconviction relief under this rule and § 16-90-111 were untimely filed from the 2003 mandate; if the trial court lacked jurisdiction to consider the petitions, jurisdiction to consider the portion of the appeal from the order that dismissed both petitions could not be vested in the supreme court. Smith v. State, 2009 Ark. 85 (2009).

Construing an inmate's petition as one under this rule, the petition was untimely under subsection (c) of this rule because it was not filed within ninety days from the date of judgment, but was filed over a year after the judgment was entered. McLeod v. State, 2010 Ark. 95 (2010).

Because the facts forming the basis for a writ of error coram nobis were known to defendant at the completion of defendant's direct appeal, because allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel were outside the purview of a coram-nobis proceeding, and because subsection (c) of this rule did not provide for a belated petition, defendant was not entitled to the relief sought. Lee v. State, 2011 Ark. 508 (2011).

Denial of appellants', inmates', pro se petition for postconviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 was improper because the petition was timely. They filed their petition 49 days after the date that the court of appeals issued the original mandate for the appeal on October 6, 2009; although the trial court might not have had the correct information available to it upon which to make a decision at the time that it issued the order, appellants' petition was timely filed. Romero v. State, 2012 Ark. 133 (2012).

Prisoner's habeas corpus petition was properly dismissed as untimely under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2244(d) because the prisoner was not entitled to statutory tolling since the prisoner's initial petition for post-conviction relief was not properly filed under this rule since it was filed before the state appellate court's mandate was issued, and the prisoner was not entitled to equitable tolling since the prisoner could not show that an extraordinary circumstance, external to the prisoner and not attributable to the prisoner's actions, prevented the prisoner from timely filing an application for a writ of habeas corpus. Johnson v. Hobbs, 678 F.3d 607 (8th Cir. 2012).

Inmate's appeal of the denial of the inmate's petition to correct an illegal sentence, pursuant to § 16-90-111, was dismissed because (1) subdivision (b) of this rule said all postconviction relief grounds cognizable under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 had to be raised in a Rule 37.1 petition filed within 90 days of the date of judgment when a defendant pled guilty, even though § 16-90-111 let a trial court correct an illegal sentence at any time, as the statute was superseded to the extent the statute conflicted with the Rule's time limits, (2) the petition was filed over six years after judgment was entered, (3) the time limits in this rule were jurisdictional, denying a trial court jurisdiction if the time limits were not met, and, on appeal, a reviewing court, and (4) the inmate's sentence was within the prescribed statutory ranges in §§ 5-4-501(b)(2)(A) and 5-4-401(b)(1). Redus v. State, 2013 Ark. 9 (2013).

State's motion to dismiss defendant's appeal of an order denying defendant's motion for postconviction relief was granted because the notice of appeal was untimely under subdivision (d) of this rule; defendant failed to file the notice of appeal within 30 days of the trial court's order denying defendant's first motion for reconsideration. Lovett v. State, 2013 Ark. 8 (2013).

Appellant's motion for a new trial, filed 14 years after his convictions were affirmed, was properly denied because it was governed by Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 regarding postconviction relief and, thus, was untimely under subsection (c) of this rule as it was not filed within 60 days of the date the mandate was issued by the appellate court. Evans v. State, 2012 Ark. 375 (2012).

Where appellant entered a guilty plea to multiple felony offenses and received an aggregate sentence of 720 months' in prison, the trial court did not err by denying his motion to correct an illegal sentence under § 16-90-111. The trial court treated the motion as a petition for post-conviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 and determined that it was not timely filed within the 90-day time limit required by subdivision (c)(i) of this rule. Purifoy v. State, 2013 Ark. 26 (2013), writ denied in part, Purifoy v. Griffen, 2015 Ark. 171 (2015).

Because appellant's first petition for postconviction relief was dismissed as untimely, any subsequent petitions were likewise untimely since they were not filed within the 60-day period. Hinkston v. State, 2016 Ark. 4 (2016).

Portion of the petition for postconviction relief regarding petitioner's plea was not timely filed because petitioner filed it more than 90 days after the judgment had been entered of record; accordingly, the circuit court had no jurisdiction to grant the relief sought. Harris v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 381, 526 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Trial court erred in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief on the basis of untimeliness because appellant complied with the terms of subsection (g), and his petition was timely filed; however, because there were other valid bases that supported the trial court's denial of the petition, the error regarding timeliness of filing was not cause for reversal. Todd v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 587, 535 S.W.3d 638 (2017).

State's motion to dismiss was denied because the petition for postconviction relief was deemed timely filed in circuit court before the 60-day deadline; petitioner's affidavit was made under penalty of perjury and signed pro se, the sworn petition contained a certificate of service to the circuit clerk and averred that petitioner was incarcerated, and the envelope was posted prepaid and contained a stamp that indicated it was mailed well within the 60-day period. Gould v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 418, 585 S.W.3d 182 (2019).

Because defendant's motion to enforce his plea agreement was untimely, he was not entitled to relief under the rule. Manuel v. State, 2021 Ark. 24 (2021).

Circuit clerk erred in not accepting petitioner's original filing where the time when the circuit clerk's office received the Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition was undisputed, petitioner included his petition and the required affidavit pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1, and there was no cover sheet requirement. Thus, the petition was timely under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2(c)(i). Billups v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 445, 610 S.W.3d 679 (2020).

Waiver of Issues.

A ground sufficient to void a conviction under subsection (c) of this rule must be one so basic that the judgment is a complete nullity, such as a judgment obtained in a court without jurisdiction to try the accused or a judgment obtained in violation of the provisions against double jeopardy. Issues not sufficient to void the conviction are waived even though they are of constitutional dimension, and the burden is on the petitioner to demonstrate that the judgment entered was a nullity. Travis v. State, 286 Ark. 26, 688 S.W.2d 935 (1985); Smittie v. Lockhart, 843 F.2d 295 (8th Cir. 1988).

Issue waived where not raised in petition for post-conviction relief. Snelgrove v. State, 292 Ark. 116, 728 S.W.2d 497 (1987).

Where defendant did not authorize the filing of an Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition by his attorney, who filed it without defendant's knowledge or participation, defendant should not be bound by the petition or his attorney's failure to raise the ineffective assistance of counsel claim. Ford v. Lockhart, 861 F. Supp. 1447 (E.D. Ark. 1994), aff'd sub nom. Ford v. Norris, 67 F.3d 162 (8th Cir. 1995).

The defendant waived any claim under this rule stemming from the denial of his motions to strike four jurors because those claims should have been raised on appeal. Camargo v. State, 346 Ark. 118, 55 S.W.3d 255 (2001).

Circuit court did not have jurisdiction to entertain defendant's motion to dismiss the state's petition to revoke the suspended sentence he received for failure to comply with the reporting requirements of the Sex Offender Registration Act, § 12-12-901, because defendant failed to pursue postconviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 within ninety days of the date of the entry of judgment; thus, he was barred from challenging his plea and conviction during a revocation proceeding. Wicks v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 499, 375 S.W.3d 769 (2010).

Postconviction petitioner's failure to obtain a ruling on an argument in a trial court precluded the Arkansas Supreme Court's review of that argument on appeal; petitioner could have sought a writ of mandamus to compel the trial court to act on the petition, which was filed under subsection (d) of this rule. Strain v. State, 2012 Ark. 184, 423 S.W.3d 1 (2012).

When Relief Sought.

Since, under Arkansas law, state prisoners are precluded from filing a second post-conviction petition, whether or not they are alleging new grounds of error, where a habeas corpus petitioner did not raise claims of error before the state court, the United States Court of Appeals was not compelled to dismiss federal jurisdiction and defer to the Arkansas courts by giving them the initial opportunity to rule upon petitioner's claims. Witham v. Mabry, 596 F.2d 293 (8th Cir. 1979).

In a federal habeas corpus proceeding to review a conviction, the court will decline to rule on petitioner's claim until his state remedies for reduction of sentence have been clearly exhausted; he should present to the Supreme Court of Arkansas a petition for leave to seek post-conviction relief. Rogers v. Britton, 466 F. Supp. 397 (E.D. Ark. 1979).

Rule 37.3. Nature of proceedings; summary disposition; appointment of counsel; evidentiary hearings; presence of petitioner [Reinstated and Revised -- See Publisher's Notes].

(a) If the petition and the files and records of the case conclusively show that the petitioner is entitled to no relief, the trial court shall make written findings to that effect, specifying any parts of the files, or records that are relied upon to sustain the court's findings.

(b) If the original petition, or a motion for appointment of counsel should allege that the petitioner is unable to pay the cost of the proceedings and to employ counsel, and if the court is satisfied that the allegation is true, the court may at its discretion appoint counsel for the petitioner for any hearing held in the circuit court. If a petition on which the petitioner was represented by counsel is denied, counsel shall continue to represent the petitioner for an appeal to the Supreme Court, unless relieved as counsel by the circuit court or the Supreme Court. If no hearing was held or the petitioner proceeded pro se at the hearing, the circuit court may at its discretion appoint counsel for an appeal upon proper motion by the petitioner.

(c) When a petition is filed in the circuit court and the court does not dispose of the petition under subsection (a) hereof, the court shall cause notice of the filing thereof to be served on the prosecuting attorney and the petitioner's counsel of record at the trial court level; and on the petition the court shall grant prompt hearing with proceedings reported. At any hearing ordered by the court the petitioner shall be present, unless the petitioner waives the right to appear or the trial court determines that the issues to be addressed at the hearing can be fairly resolved without the presence of the petitioner or the trial court directs that the testimony of petitioner be taken by deposition. The rules of evidence shall apply at any hearing. The court shall determine the issues and make written findings of fact and conclusions of law with respect thereto.

(d) When an order is rendered on a petition filed under this rule, the circuit court shall promptly mail a copy of the order to the petitioner.

HISTORY: Amended February 21, 1984; amended January 25, 1988, effective March 1, 1988; abolished May 30, 1990, effective July 1, 1990; reinstated and revised October 29, 1990, effective January 1, 1991; subsection (b); amended November 14, 1994.

Reporter's Notes, 1988 Amendment:

It is the committee's feeling that Rule 37.337.4(c) relating to notice should also include notice to the prisoner's trial counsel of record in order to eliminate any potential situations where a hearing is to be held concerning matters relating to trial counsel's performance, or other matters of interest to trial counsel, without timely notice to counsel.

CASE NOTES

In General.

This rule is essentially former Rule 1 and is designed to attack unconstitutionality, lack of jurisdiction, excess of authorized sentences, and sentences otherwise subject to collateral attack. Rawls v. State, 264 Ark. 954, 581 S.W.2d 311 (1979).

Supreme Court of Arkansas refused to reconsider its holding in Tarry v. State, 346 Ark. 267, 57 S.W.3d 163 (2001), that defendant would be allowed to proceed with a late appeal of his conviction only if his counsel admitted fault in failing to file the record in a timely fashion; regulation of the practice of law in state courts was a matter within the authority of the Supreme Court of Arkansas and the Court was not required to suspend its rules and procedures because a federal tribunal challenged the Court's authority sua sponte. Tarry v. State, 353 Ark. 158, 114 S.W.3d 161 (2003).

Appeal.

When a pro se Rule 37 petition is denied, the petitioner is entitled to appeal, but with the right goes the responsibility to file a timely notice of appeal; the bare allegation that the notice was lost in the mail is not good cause to grant a belated appeal. Alexander v. State, 282 Ark. 216, 667 S.W.2d 366 (1984); Moore v. State, 285 Ark. 321, 686 S.W.2d 790 (1985).

To reverse a trial judge's denial of post-conviction relief under this rule, the appellate court would have to find the court's decision was clearly erroneous and against the preponderance of the evidence. Hall v. State, 285 Ark. 38, 684 S.W.2d 261 (1985); Stephens v. State, 293 Ark. 231, 737 S.W.2d 147 (1987); Flaherty v. State, 297 Ark. 198, 761 S.W.2d 167 (1988).

Where an inmate alleged in his Rule 37 petition that he was unable to file a timely notice of appeal because he had not received notice from the circuit court, the fact that mail was delivered to the prison mailroom and not directly into the hands of the inmate was not in itself enough to overcome the presumption that a letter mailed was received by the person to whom it was addressed. Moore v. State, 285 Ark. 321, 285 Ark. 322, 688 S.W.2d 733 (1985).

Appellate court will grant a motion for belated appeal of the denial of a petition for post-conviction relief where the petitioner is not promptly provided a copy of the court's order. Davis v. State, 293 Ark. 203, 736 S.W.2d 281 (1987).

While subsection (b) of this rule affords a right to appointment of counsel for an appeal by an indigent, there is no requirement under the rule that the circuit clerk perfect the appeal for the petitioner. Bragg v. State, 297 Ark. 348, 760 S.W.2d 878, 764 S.W.2d 416 (1988).

Credibility is peculiarly within the province of the trier of fact. The decision of the trier of fact is binding on appeal in the absence of proof of abuse of discretion by the trial court. Chandler v. State, 297 Ark. 432, 762 S.W.2d 796 (1989).

Failure by clerk promptly to provide petition with court's order denying post-conviction relief as required by this rule was good cause to grant belated order of appeal. Chiasson v. State, 304 Ark. 110, 798 S.W.2d 927 (1990).

Trial court did not err in dismissing with prejudice inmate's petition for postconviction relief as the petition violated Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1(d) and (e) in that it was not signed and verified by the inmate, it exceeded ten pages in length, and a compliant brief could not be filed within the time limitations of Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2(c). Boyle v. State, 362 Ark. 248, 208 S.W.3d 134 (2005).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it denied defendant's request for a hearing because the trial court could conclude on the record submitted that defendant had not stated a cognizable claim for relief. Walker v. State, 367 Ark. 523, 241 S.W.3d 734 (2006).

Because appellant did not avail himself of the procedure set forth in this rule, his failure to obtain a ruling precluded the Supreme Court's review of his argument on appeal; the circuit court did not provide a ruling on appellant's argument. Sims v. State, 2015 Ark. 363, 472 S.W.3d 107 (2015).

Conclusive Record.

Where record in the case was conclusive, petitioner was not entitled to a hearing on his petition for post-conviction relief. Moore v. State, 273 Ark. 231, 617 S.W.2d 855 (1981).

Absent some compelling reason, appellate court will not grant a motion to supplement the record unless the proposed supplement was considered by the trial court. Brown v. State, 291 Ark. 143, 722 S.W.2d 845 (1987).

Where trial court failed to make written findings and conclusions of law pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, but, after appellant's brief was filed, the record was remanded to the trial court on the joint petition of the parties and written findings and conclusions were entered by the trial court, the issue was moot. Brown v. State, 291 Ark. 393, 725 S.W.2d 544 (1987).

Where only writing entered by the trial court was an order denying relief case was reversed and remanded for entry of fact findings in accordance with subsection (c) of this rule. Smith v. State, 300 Ark. 291, 778 S.W.2d 924 (1989).

Where it was conclusive on the face of defendant's petition under this rule that no relief was warranted, the trial court did not err in failing to hold an evidentiary hearing. Polivka v. State, 2010 Ark. 152, 362 S.W.3d 918 (2010).

Under a plain reading of this rule, the circuit court should make a determination whether to proceed under subdivision (a) before the prosecutor even files a response to the petition because a response is not necessary if it is conclusive from the face of the petition and the record that relief is not warranted. Guevara v. State, 2014 Ark. 200 (2014).

Evidentiary Hearing.

—Burden of Proof.

—Credibility of Witnesses.

—Hearing Not Required.

—Hearing Required.

—In General.

Although a trial court has discretion pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule to decide whether the files and records relating to a motion for postconviction relief are sufficient to sustain the court's findings on the motion without conducting an evidentiary hearing, an evidentiary hearing should be held unless the files and record of a case conclusively show that the petitioner is entitled to no relief. Sanders v. State, 352 Ark. 16, 98 S.W.3d 35 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by failing to conduct an evidentiary hearing before denying postconviction relief or by failing to enter sufficient findings in the absence of a hearing because its findings on most, but not all, of appellant's claims for relief were sufficient for review; a review of the petition itself, together with a consideration of the record on appeal, conclusively showed that appellant's claims did not merit postconviction relief. Wooten v. State, 2016 Ark. 376, 502 S.W.3d 503 (2016).

—Burden of Proof.

A Rule 37 hearing is not a trial. The petitioners have the burden of proof, not the state. Flaherty v. State, 297 Ark. 198, 761 S.W.2d 167 (1988).

Without some showing of prejudice as required by Strickland, it was conclusive on the face of defendant's postconviction petition that no relief was warranted, and a trial court did not err under subsection (a) of this rule in failing to hold an evidentiary hearing. Scott v. State, 2012 Ark. 159 (2012).

—Credibility of Witnesses.

At a Rule 37 hearing, the credibility of witnesses is for the trial judge to determine. Pettit v. State, 296 Ark. 423, 758 S.W.2d 1 (1988).

—Hearing Not Required.

There was no error in the denial of the inmate's petition for postconviction relief without an evidentiary hearing, as the petition and record conclusively showed that the inmate was not entitled to relief. Van Winkle v. State, 2016 Ark. 98, 486 S.W.3d 778 (2016).

Circuit court properly denied defendant's first claim for postconviction relief without a hearing because his allegation regarding defense counsel's stress level was conclusory and defendant never alleged how counsel's stress level led to specific instances of deficient conduct or could have altered the outcome of his trial. Sandrelli v. State, 2016 Ark. 103, 485 S.W.3d 692 (2016).

No hearing was required on an inmate's postconviction claim of ineffective assistance of counsel due to his trial counsel's failure to move to suppress his unwarned incriminating statements to police, because issues of credibility were for the circuit court's determination, the inmate's claim was conclusory only, and the circuit court found the claim to be meritless. Ross v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 234, 518 S.W.3d 758 (2017).

No hearing was required on an inmate's claim of trial counsel's ineffective assistance for allegedly failing to subject the State's case to adversarial testing because (1) an alleged failure to know the law was not cognizable, (2) a claim that a directed verdict was not properly sought was not properly raised, and (3) no prejudice was shown due to the overwhelming evidence of guilt. The circuit court's written findings complied with this rule. Ross v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 234, 518 S.W.3d 758 (2017).

No hearing was required on an inmate's postconviction claim of ineffective assistance of counsel due to his trial counsel's failure to object to evidence because a motion objecting to the admission of proper Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) evidence would have been meritless, and the circuit court's written findings were sufficient. Ross v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 234, 518 S.W.3d 758 (2017).

No hearing was required on an inmate's postconviction claim that trial counsel was ineffective for not subpoenaing a witness, because (1) the witness indicated an intention to invoke the Fifth Amendment, and (2) the circuit court made adequate written findings. Ross v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 234, 518 S.W.3d 758 (2017).

Trial court properly denied appellant's petition for postconviction relief without an evidentiary hearing because the petition and record conclusively showed that appellant was entitled to no relief, and the trial court made the requisite findings. Gordon v. State, 2018 Ark. 73, 539 S.W.3d 586 (2018).

Because the petition for postconviction relief, files, and records conclusively showed that petitioner was not entitled to postconviction relief, the circuit court was not obligated to hold an evidentiary hearing before denying the petition as wholly without merit. Mercouri v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 74, 540 S.W.3d 328 (2018).

Circuit court did not err by denying the postconviction petition without holding an evidentiary hearing; the circuit court found that counsel's assertion that the plea deal would have been withdrawn by the State if not accepted was true and that petitioner's allegation did not support an ineffective assistance of counsel claim, and the circuit court committed no error in finding that counsel's advice to take the plea was a defense tactic properly exercised. Miller v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 270, 599 S.W.3d 398 (2020).

As the record and petition conclusively revealed that petitioner was not entitled to postconviction relief, an evidentiary hearing was not warranted. Lacefield v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 534 (2020).

No hearing was required on a postconviction petition where the files and records in the case, and particularly the "Defendant's Statement", conclusively showed that petitioner was not entitled to relief. Billups v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 445, 610 S.W.3d 679 (2020).

—Hearing Required.

Circuit court erred in denying defendant's second and third claims for postconviction relief because, without an evidentiary hearing, the court had no way of knowing whether counsel's decisions were based on his reasonable judgment and defendant had a colorable claim that he was prejudiced because in the first trial there was, in fact, a different outcome. Sandrelli v. State, 2016 Ark. 103, 485 S.W.3d 692 (2016).

Although postconviction petitioner claimed that his counsel was ineffective for failing to play the dash-cam video at the suppression hearing, which would have shown that the stop was illegal, the trial court neither conducted an evidentiary hearing nor cited the parts of the record that conclusively showed that petitioner's claim was without merit. Under the specific facts of the case, an evidentiary hearing was necessary and the case was reversed and remanded for the trial court to review the video and make the appropriate findings. King v.

State, 2018 Ark. App. 605, 566 S.W.3d 165 (2018).

—In General.

Petitioner for post-conviction relief held entitled to evidentiary hearing. Cusick v. State, 259 Ark. 720, 536 S.W.2d 119 (1976); Boyett v. State, 290 Ark. 43, 716 S.W.2d 749 (1986).

If the motion can be decided on the record, no hearing is required, but if the record does not show conclusively that the motion should be denied, a hearing must be held. Morrison v. State, 288 Ark. 636, 707 S.W.2d 323 (1986); Stewart v. State, 295 Ark. 48, 746 S.W.2d 58 (1988).

Where the defendant files a post-conviction petition to set aside his conviction without stating any facts, and the prior record is undisputed, the defendant does not show that an evidentiary hearing is required. Franks v. State, 289 Ark. 122, 709 S.W.2d 406 (1986); Smith v. State, 290 Ark. 90, 717 S.W.2d 193 (1986).

Where trial court makes no findings other than finding that petition is without merit, an evidentiary hearing is unnecessary. Long v. State, 294 Ark. 362, 742 S.W.2d 942 (1988).

The defendant may not employ an evidentiary hearing to develop other grounds for relief to those originally pled in his Rule 37 petition. Gunn v. State, 296 Ark. 105, 752 S.W.2d 262 (1988).

If it can be shown on the record, or on the face of the petition itself, that the allegations have no merit, the circuit court need not hold an evidentiary hearing. Moreover, where the record clearly establishes that the petition is without merit, the court will affirm, notwithstanding the trial court's failure to make specific reference to the parts of the record relied on to deny the petition, which this rule also requires. Kain v. State, 296 Ark. 123, 752 S.W.2d 265 (1988).

Where the defendant was not present for the hearing on his pretrial motion for a continuance and for his commitment to the Arkansas State Hospital for a mental examination, defendant's absence was not prejudicial, since defendant's trial counsel testified at the Rule 37 hearing that nothing during the trial surprised him and that he did not know of anything else he could have done in preparation for the trial even if the continuance had been granted. Bell v. State, 296 Ark. 458, 757 S.W.2d 937 (1988).

A hearing is not required on a petition containing conclusory allegations. Garrett v. State, 296 Ark. 550, 759 S.W.2d 23 (1988).

A factual basis for the guilty pleas can be supplied at a Rule 37 hearing. Flaherty v. State, 297 Ark. 198, 761 S.W.2d 167 (1988).

Subsection (a) of this rule provides that an evidentiary hearing is not required where the trial court can conclude from the files and records of the case that the petitioner is entitled to no relief. Luna-Holbird v. State, 315 Ark. 735, 871 S.W.2d 328 (1994).

Petitioner for post-conviction relief held not entitled to evidentiary hearing. Nance v. State, 339 Ark. 192, 4 S.W.3d 501 (1999).

Trial court properly denied relief without holding an evidentiary hearing in a death penalty case; conclusory allegations that are unsupported by the facts do not provide a basis for either an evidentiary hearing or postconviction relief. Greene v. State, 356 Ark. 59, 146 S.W.3d 871 (2004).

Trial court's decision to render its decision denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 without a hearing was not clearly erroneous because the trial court examined the record, found that appellant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims were without merit, entered written findings to that effect, and denied the petition without a hearing. Richardson v. State, 2011 Ark. 478 (2011).

Trial court properly denied defendant's petition for postconviction relief after defendant was convicted of aggravated robbery and felony theft of property because the record did not show deficient investigation on the part of counsel; counsel argued that defendant did not have the intent to commit aggravated robbery and moved for a directed verdict on that very basis. Sartin v. State, 2012 Ark. 155, 400 S.W.3d 694 (2012).

Granting of petitioner's, an inmate's, petition for writ of mandamus was appropriate because the circuit court failed to provide the required rulings on each of the issues raised in his Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition, and because the inmate properly filed a motion for modification to obtain the missing rulings. Garcia v. Arnold, 2012 Ark. 253 (2012).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for postconviction relief without an evidentiary hearing because defendant's claims were conclusory and without factual substantiation; there was no specific description of alleged prejudice from any failure of counsel to conduct adversarial testing of the prosecution's case. Thompson v. State, 2013 Ark. 179 (2013).

Trial court erred in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief without an evidentiary hearing because its findings belied its determination that a hearing was not required under subdivision (a) of this rule; its findings indicated that its decision not to hold a hearing was based, in part, on its suppositions about how trial counsel might have explained the decisions they made at trial. Lacy v. State, 2013 Ark. 34, 425 S.W.3d 746 (2013).

Circuit court erred in relying on emails attached to the State's response to defendant's petition for postconviction relief where it was clear that it relied on the emails in lieu of testimony properly adduced at a hearing, as required by subdivision (a) of this rule and the Arkansas Rules of Evidence. Guevara v. State, 2014 Ark. 200 (2014).

Appellate court did not consider petitioner's contention that since the trial court initially scheduled a hearing on his postconviction petition, it necessarily found there was a factual issue in dispute entitling him to a hearing; petitioner cited no authority for the proposition that the trial court was bound by its initial assessment that a hearing was warranted and that it could not cancel a scheduled hearing after further review of a petition. Badger v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 246, 626 S.W.3d 447 (2021).

Failure to Understand Nature of Guilty Plea.

Where the defendant advised the judge that he fully understood his rights and the nature of the charges against him at the time his guilty plea was entered, he would not be later heard, on a motion pursuant to this rule, to complain that he did not. Renfro v. State, 264 Ark. 601, 573 S.W.2d 53 (1978).

Findings.

—Specific Findings Not Made.

—Written Findings Mandatory.

Where the trial court rules on a defendant's motion for post-conviction relief without specifying any findings, or parts of the record relied upon in doing so, reversible error is committed. Robinson v. State, 264 Ark. 186, 569 S.W.2d 662 (1978); State v. Manees, 264 Ark. 190, 569 S.W.2d 665 (1978).

Where the entire record had been furnished to the Supreme Court, the court was able to determine from the record that it conclusively demonstrated that the motion to withdraw a plea was without merit, even though the trial court failed to make written findings of fact specifying the parts of the files or records that were relied upon to sustain the court's findings. Rawls v. State, 264 Ark. 954, 581 S.W.2d 311 (1979).

Where the trial court, after a Rule 37 hearing, approved and signed an order, drafted by the prosecuting attorney at the request of the court, that denied a petition for post-conviction relief, the court adopted such order as its own and the order was in compliance with subsection (c) of this rule which required the court to make written findings of fact and conclusions of law. Scott v. State, 267 Ark. 628, 593 S.W.2d 27 (1980).

The failure of the trial judge to make specific reference to the parts of the record he relied on to deny the petition as required by this rule is reversible error; however, if the entire record conclusively shows that the petition was without merit, the Supreme Court will affirm, even though the trial court failed to make written findings of fact specifying the parts of the record that were relied upon to sustain the denial. Morrison v. State, 288 Ark. 636, 707 S.W.2d 323 (1986).

Where a petition for Rule 37 relief is filed, the court must either: (1) grant a hearing on the petition, or (2) make a determination from the files and records if they conclusively show that the petitioner is entitled to no relief. If the petition is summarily denied without an evidentiary hearing, the court must make written findings specifying the parts of the files and records relied upon in denying the petition. Brown v. State, 291 Ark. 143, 722 S.W.2d 845 (1987).

Where trial court failed to make a factual determination as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 24.6 at a Rule 37 hearing, such facts may be proven to have existed at the time of the guilty plea, and where the factual basis is established at his Rule 37 hearing, the appellant has not been prejudiced. Grover v. State, 291 Ark. 508, 726 S.W.2d 268 (1987).

The circuit court's findings were conclusory because they did not reflect how the court applied the standard for ineffective assistance of counsel claims to the allegations that were raised in the appellant's petition and that were addressed during the postconviction hearing; therefore, the order would be reversed and remanded for appropriate findings. Coleman v. State, 338 Ark. 545, 998 S.W.2d 748 (1999).

The circuit court's findings were conclusory as they did not address the numerous allegations listed in the appellant's petition or those reiterated on appeal; therefore, the order would be reversed and remanded for fact-findings. Dulaney v. State, 338 Ark. 548, 999 S.W.2d 181 (1999).

It is the defendant's obligation to obtain a ruling on any issues omitted from the written findings of the trial court in order to preserve those issues for appeal. Beshears v. State, 340 Ark. 70, 8 S.W.3d 32 (2000).

Trial court's written findings in the order denying defendant post-conviction relief were not deficient where the court mistakenly referred to defendant's medical records for treatment of a gunshot wound to his hand as being introduced during his testimony but where the records were, in fact, introduced at the close of testimony "for the record only"; further, although the trial court did not use the term "conclusively" in its order, its findings on the points addressed were clearly to that effect. Rutledge v. State, 361 Ark. 229, 205 S.W.3d 773 (2005).

Summary denial of an inmate's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 postconviction relief petition was reversed because the order did not provide the requisite findings and conclusions, and the record did not clearly support affirmation; because no hearing was held, the trial court had an obligation to provide written findings that showed that the inmate was entitled to no relief. It was not conclusive from the petition or the record that relief was not warranted on the inmate's claims concerning illegal sentencing as there was no evidence that counsel agreed to allow the court to sentence on a gun enhancement charge. Davenport v. State, 2011 Ark. 105 (2011).

Under subsection (a) of this rule, a trial court did not err in not holding a hearing on defendant's petition for postconviction relief because it made specific written findings regarding defendant's claims and noted the evidence from the record upon which it relied. Clarks v. State, 2011 Ark. 296 (2011).

Denial of the inmate's petition for postconviction relief under this rule was improper as to the competency issue because the supreme court was unable to determine whether there were any results of the mental evaluation of which the parties or the court might have been made aware, whether those results were contested, or whether there was any other resolution settling the issue of the inmate's competency to proceed and enter his plea. Sandoval-Vega v. State, 2011 Ark. 393, 384 S.W.3d 508 (2011).

In a postconviction proceeding, the trial court's lack of written findings of fact and conclusions of law, as required by subsection (a) of this rule, amounted to reversible error because based on the transcript of the plea hearing and the alleged positive misrepresentations of trial counsel regarding defendant's parole eligibility, it could not be said that the files and record conclusively showed that defendant was entitled to no relief. Olivarez v. State, 2012 Ark. 24 (2012).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was appropriate because the circuit court's written findings complied with this rule. In part, the inmate himself submitted a portion of the record with his petition and the circuit court, in its order, stated that it reviewed the pleadings and transcripts in denying the inmate's petition for postconviction relief; in doing so, the circuit court outlined the inmate's claims and the reasons for its denial of those claims. Henington v. State, 2012 Ark. 181, 403 S.W.3d 55 (2012).

Circuit court's written findings in the order denying post-conviction relief complied with this rule, because the order stated that the court had reviewed the file and set forth appellant's claims and the reasons the court denied those claims. Charland v. State, 2012 Ark. 246 (2012).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief without a hearing because in compliance with the rule, it made the requisite written findings in addressing each of the claims raised in the petition. Carter v. State, 2015 Ark. 166, 460 S.W.3d 781 (2015).

Circuit court's written findings as set out in its letter complied with this rule because it held a hearing, reviewed the trial record, issued a letter setting out each of petitioner's claims, applied the standard set forth in Strickland, and explained the reasons for denying each claim; in conjunction with the letter, the circuit court entered its order denying the petition for postconviction relief. McCulley v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 313, 525 S.W.3d 10 (2017).

It was reversible error to deny an inmate's petition for postconviction relief without holding an evidentiary hearing because (1) the trial court made no required findings specifying the parts of the record relied on in finding the record conclusively showed the inmate was entitled to no relief, and (2) the record did not conclusively show the inmate was not entitled to relief when the inmate alleged counsel was ineffective for not objecting to prejudicial evidence stipulated to be inadmissible, failed to object to inadmissible evidence of "bondage" sex the inmate supposedly engaged in, failed to present proof defendant did not intend to engage in sex with children present or with children, and failed to subpoena a former officer, as the claims were not conclusory. Shreck v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 85, 572 S.W.3d 35 (2019).

—Specific Findings Not Made.

The fact that the state court denied Rule 37 motion without issuing a written opinion setting forth findings of fact and conclusions of law did not violate the defendant's constitutional rights, since there is no requirement that the court issue a written memorandum when no hearing has been held. Riley v. Lockhart, 726 F.2d 421 (8th Cir. 1984).

Because defendant's postconviction claims were wholly without merit and presented no impediment to review, a trial court did not err in denying defendant's postconviction petition without making written findings or conducting an evidentiary hearing under subdivision (c) of this rule. Greer v. State, 2012 Ark. 158 (2012).

Although the trial court did not make specific written findings regarding defendant's postconviction claims, the appellate court could affirm in the absence of an adequate order as the record before it conclusively showed that the petition was without merit. Mardis v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 433 (2017) (sub. op. on r'hg).

Although the trial court failed to make findings of fact regarding some of the bases set forth in its order denying postconviction relief, the record clearly demonstrated that appellant's claims were meritless and the petition was conclusive on its face that no relief was warranted. Todd v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 587, 535 S.W.3d 638 (2017).

Trial court's summary denial of an inmate's postconviction claim that counsel ineffectively presented the wrong extreme-emotional-disturbance instruction was reversed; the trial court's findings for denying the claim without a hearing were insufficient, as (1) the court merely adopted the State's argument, and (2) it could not be said conclusively no relief was warranted on the face of the inmate's petition or on the face of the record. Douglas v. State, 2018 Ark. 89, 540 S.W.3d 685 (2018).

—Written Findings Mandatory.

The provisions of this rule requiring written findings are mandatory, for on review the court determines whether the findings are supported by a preponderance of the evidence and, unless they are clearly erroneous, they will be affirmed, and thus the court must have specific findings regarding the facts in the case and the conclusion of law so that there can be a meaningful review of these findings. Williams v. State, 272 Ark. 98, 612 S.W.2d 115 (1981).

When an evidentiary hearing is held on a Rule 37 petition, subsection (a) of this rule is mandatory and requires written findings. Bumgarner v. State, 288 Ark. 315, 705 S.W.2d 10 (1986).

If the record conclusively shows that a petitioner is not entitled to a hearing on any issue raised in the motion, the appellate court will not reverse for a failure to make written findings of fact and conclusions of law explaining why the motion was denied. However, once a hearing is held and an issue is actually considered by the court, its resolution must be supported by written findings so that there can be a meaningful review of the proceedings. Bumgarner v. State, 288 Ark. 315, 705 S.W.2d 10 (1986).

The trial court was not in compliance with this rule where it did not make written findings that the defendant was not entitled to relief, and where the record before the appellate court did not conclusively show that the defendant's petition was without merit. Bohanan v. State, 327 Ark. 507, 939 S.W.2d 832 (1997).

Subsection (c) of this rule requires without exception that the order denying a motion for postconviction relief contain written findings of fact and conclusions of law. Beshears v. State, 329 Ark. 469, 947 S.W.2d 789 (1997).

When the trial court fails to enter written findings as required by subsection (c) of this rule, the supreme court will reverse and remand the case to the trial court for written findings of fact and conclusions of law on a defendant's claim for postconviction relief. Beshears v. State, 329 Ark. 469, 947 S.W.2d 789 (1997).

While the supreme court has affirmed the denial of Rule 37 petitions notwithstanding the trial court's failure to make written findings as required by subsection (a) of this rule, it has done so only where it can be determined from the record that the petition is wholly without merit or where the allegations in the petition are such that it is conclusive on the face of the petition that no relief is warranted. Wooten v. State, 338 Ark. 691, 1 S.W.3d 8 (1999).

Where the trial judge did not make any written findings in his order and did not specify what parts of the files or record were relied upon in denying a petition for postconviction relief, the court was unable to affirm because the record, which primarily consisted of the petition, the state's response, and the trial court's order, did not conclusively show that the petition was without merit, it was not clear from the face of the petition that no relief was warranted, and the record on appeal did not show whether the trial court had an opportunity to review the trial record. Wooten v. State, 338 Ark. 691, 1 S.W.3d 8 (1999).

Merits of the case could not be decided because the circuit court order was merely conclusory; it did not enter written findings of fact and conclusions of law, which is mandatory under this rule. Taylor v. State, 340 Ark. 308, 9 S.W.3d 515 (2000).

Where a trial court concludes, without a hearing, that a petitioner is not not entitled to postconviction relief from a criminal conviction, subsection (a) of this rule requires the trial court to make written findings specifying the parts of the record the form the basis of the trial court's decision; if the trial court fails to make such findings, it is reversible error unless the record on appeal conclusively shows that the petition is without merit. Sanders v. State, 352 Ark. 16, 98 S.W.3d 35 (2003).

Where appellant was convicted of possession of methamphetamine, manufacturing methamphetamine, and possession of paraphernalia with the intent to manufacture methamphetamine, he filed a petition for postconviction relief alleging: (1) that he was subjected to double jeopardy; (2) that his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to make an accomplice-corroboration argument; and (3) that his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to the affidavit supporting the search warrant for his residence. The circuit judge erred by denying appellant's petition without a hearing and without making findings of fact on the allegations raised in the petition, as required by this rule. Reed v. State, 375 Ark. 277, 289 S.W.3d 921 (2008).

Trial court did not fail to provide adequate written findings to support its decision denying appellant's petition under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 as required by this rule because the petition was wholly without merit; appellant failed to set forth facts sufficient to sustain a finding that any alleged ineffective assistance of trial counsel resulted in prejudice. Rodriguez v. State, 2010 Ark. 78 (2010).

Case was remanded with instructions for the circuit court to enter written findings of fact and conclusions of law because the circuit court's order denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief was conclusory in nature and failed to comply with this rule. Barrow v. State, 2012 Ark. 197 (2012).

Ineffective Assistance of Counsel.

Where the case records do not show conclusively that a defendant has been effectively represented by counsel, the circuit court errs when it denies a defendant's pro se petition for post-conviction relief without an evidentiary hearing as to the adequacy of the defense counsel. Blackmon v. State, 268 Ark. 316, 595 S.W.2d 689 (1980).

An inmate is at a disadvantage in properly framing a petition alleging ineffective assistance of counsel and in an even more difficult position in proving the allegations; thus it is incumbent on the trial court to look at the entire record and files before making a determination to deny a petition without a hearing. Brown v. State, 291 Ark. 143, 722 S.W.2d 845 (1987).

When a convicted defendant complains of the ineffectiveness of counsel's assistance, the defendant must show that the counsel's representation fell below an objective standard of reasonableness and that there is a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceedings would have been different. In order to satisfy the "prejudice" requirement, the defendant must show that there is a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's errors, he would not have pleaded guilty and would have insisted on going to trial; a defendant whose conviction is based upon a plea of guilty will have difficulty proving any prejudice since his plea rests upon his admission in open court that he did the act with which he is charged. Proctor v. State, 291 Ark. 459, 725 S.W.2d 827 (1987).

Where ineffective assistance of counsel argument was not accompanied by a statement that defendant would not have pled guilty but for counsel's error, his argument would not be considered. Garrett v. State, 296 Ark. 550, 759 S.W.2d 23 (1988).

The circuit court erred when it failed to hold an evidentiary hearing on the defendant's claim that his attorney was ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress his custodial statement since the record did not conclusively show that the claim was without merit where (1) the evidence that was introduced during the trial did not conclusively show that the alleged failure to file the motion did not prejudice the defendant, and (2) there was no means of determining whether counsel performed deficiently when he did not file a motion to suppress. Carter v. State, 342 Ark. 535, 29 S.W.3d 716 (2000).

Circuit court clearly erred in denying defendant's motion for postconviction relief, because the petition provided specific facts to establish actual prejudice due to counsel's conduct at trial and the allegations were not conclusory, when counsel's performance was deficient by failing to suppress defendant's custodial statement as a violation of the Sixth Amendment right to counsel, and the deficient performance prejudiced the defense since the inclusion of defendant's statement as the state's evidence at trial and used in affirming the conviction was sufficient to find that there was a reasonable probability that the decision reached would have been different absent counsel's failure to suppress the statement; the conviction resulted from a breakdown in the adversary process that rendered the result unreliable. Sparkman v. State, 373 Ark. 45, 281 S.W.3d 277 (2008).

In an Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 case in which an inmate had been convicted of one count of delivery of a controlled substance and received an enhanced sentence pursuant to § 5-64-411(a)(7) (now § 5-64-411(a)(8)), he unsuccessfully argued that his trial counsel was ineffective because he failed to adequately investigate the facts underlying the application of the enhancement prior to trial or to flesh them out appropriately during cross-examination. As to the failure to investigate, the inmate made only a conclusory statement, wholly lacking in allegations of prejudice; as to the cross-examination claim, his argument provided him no relief as he was procedurally barred from raising it on appeal. McCraney v. State, 2010 Ark. 96, 360 S.W.3d 144 (2010).

Although petitioner asserted that counsel was ineffective for failure to renew his motion for a directed verdict and for failure to offer instructions on lesser-included offenses, petitioner failed to offer facts to support his conclusion that the failure to move for a directed verdict and offer instructions on lesser-included offenses prejudiced him or his defense. Mitchell v. State, 2012 Ark. 242 (2012).

Circuit court did not err in denying postconviction relief without a hearing under subsection (a) of this rule, because appellant failed to demonstrate he was prejudiced by trial counsel's alleged impairment or how her failure to call additional witnesses to testify that appellant's confession was coerced would have changed the outcome of trial. Charland v. State, 2012 Ark. 246 (2012).

Appellant's petition for postconviction failed to allege any facts to support a demonstration of prejudice concerning his claims. Appellant did not plead any facts to demonstrate that counsel's alleged inaction, or counsel's alleged mistakes concerning the potential for parole, would have an impact on the ultimate decision to accept a plea rather than go to trial. Pennington v. State, 2013 Ark. 39 (2013).

Defendant convicted of capital murder, attempted capital murder, and aggravated robbery was not entitled to a hearing on his claim of ineffective assistance of counsel based on counsel's alleged deficiencies in questioning witnesses, because defendant failed to make a showing of prejudice as required by Strickland v. Washington. Jackson v. State, 2013 Ark. 19 (2013).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on the alleged failure to ensure an interpreter was present during all conversations with defendant was properly denied where the record demonstrated that defendant understood the proceedings and communicated without hesitation. Mancia v. State, 2015 Ark. 115, 459 S.W.3d 259 (2015).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on one attorney's alleged failure to investigate before advising defendant to plead guilty was properly denied where the circuit court cited the correct standard, and defendant had not alleged that but for the failure, he would not have pled guilty. Mancia v. State, 2015 Ark. 115, 459 S.W.3d 259 (2015).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on an alleged failure to investigate defendant's statements was properly denied where the record failed to demonstrate that defendant did not understand the proceedings, that he needed an interpreter, and that his defense counsel was deficient in his representation in this regard. Mancia v. State, 2015 Ark. 115, 459 S.W.3d 259 (2015).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on misadvising defendant regarding the range of punishment that applied to him was properly denied where the record demonstrated that he was informed and aware of the 25-year minimum sentence prior to the entry of his guilty plea. Mancia v. State, 2015 Ark. 115, 459 S.W.3d 259 (2015).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on an alleged failure to attempt to negotiate with the State for a sentence of less than life in prison was properly denied where the record demonstrated that defendant was aware that he had not received a plea bargain from the State. Mancia v. State, 2015 Ark. 115, 459 S.W.3d 259 (2015).

Circuit court properly denied postconviction relief on an ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on an allegation that counsel was intoxicated where the record demonstrated that counsel acted in an appropriate manner, and nothing in the record suggested he was intoxicated. Mancia v. State, 2015 Ark. 115, 459 S.W.3d 259 (2015).

Circuit court erred in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief without holding a hearing because the petition clearly asserted that had defendant been better informed about the sentencing enhancements and the law, been able to review the discovery material, and had not relied on his counsel's statements about his ability to persuade the court, he would not have pleaded guilty, and the circuit court improperly considered whether there was a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's error, the fact-finder (as opposed to defendant) would have had a reasonable doubt respecting guilt. Jones v. State, 2015 Ark. 119 (2015).

Matter was remanded for findings of fact addressing petitioner's ineffective-assistance-of-counsel claim because additional findings were warranted with respect to petitioner's allegation that counsel was ineffective when he failed to make sufficient motions for directed verdict; the trial court rejected petitioner's claim and found that appropriate motions for a directed verdict were made by counsel during trial, but that fact-finding was contradicted in the opinion of the court of appeals. Lee v. State, 2016 Ark. 293, 498 S.W.3d 283 (2016).

Circuit court did not err in denying defendant's petition for post-conviction relief alleging ineffective assistance of counsel because the attorney testified that, prior to defendant entering his plea, he met with him approximately seven times, including three occasions where he discussed the specifics of his case; he testified that he explained to defendant and his family that he knew the judge and that the judge would be fair and reasonable, but that he never indicated that defendant would receive special consideration because he knew the judge; and he testified that because of the egregious facts in the case — a child witnessing a murder — he advised that it was best for defendant to be sentenced by a judge and not a jury. Jones v. State, 2016 Ark. 304, 498 S.W.3d 720 (2016).

Inmate's postconviction claim of counsel's presentation of the wrong justification instruction (non-deadly force) was properly denied without a hearing because there was no rational basis for the correct justification instruction (deadly force); a confrontation initiated by the victim had ceased and defendant started a second confrontation resulting in the death of the victim, who tried to flee, so inmate failed to show that it was reasonably likely that the deadly force instruction would have made any difference in the outcome of his trial. Douglas v. State, 2018 Ark. 89, 540 S.W.3d 685 (2018).

Mandamus.

A petitioner was entitled to mandamus directing a judge to enter an order on a petition under this rule within seven days where he failed to act within a reasonable time on the petition even after several telephone calls from a supreme court staff attorney. Ladwig v. Davis, 340 Ark. 415, 10 S.W.3d 461 (2000).

Notice to Petitioner.

In order to provide for prompt, consistent notice to petitioners when a ruling is made on a petition for post-conviction relief, the supreme court amended this rule on February 21, 1984, to require that a copy of the court's order be promptly mailed to the petitioner. Scott v. State, 281 Ark. 436, 664 S.W.2d 475 (1984).

The supreme court will grant a belated appeal under former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.9 if the clerk neglects to comply with subsection (d) of this rule. Porter v. State, 287 Ark. 359, 698 S.W.2d 801 (1985).

When the record is silent on whether the clerk complied with the rule by mailing notice to the petitioner of the court's order, and the attorney general in his response to a motion for belated appeal is unable to provide the clerk's affidavit or some other proof that the order was mailed, it will be assumed that the petitioner was not notified of the denial of his petition. Porter v. State, 287 Ark. 359, 698 S.W.2d 801 (1985); Kelly v. State, 301 Ark. 294, 783 S.W.2d 369 (1990).

Mailing to defendant's counsel rather than to defendant a copy of the order denying petition for postconviction relief fulfilled court's obligations to notify defendant under this rule. Davis v. State, 293 Ark. 203, 736 S.W.2d 281 (1987).

Defendant's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 petition for postconviction relief was properly denied because, even if defendant did not receive the prompt notice required by subsection (d) of this rule, the claims that defendant advanced in the petition were conclusory in nature, unsubstantiated, and clearly fell short of establishing that defendant was denied effective assistance of counsel at trial. Crain v. State, 2012 Ark. 412 (2012).

Right to Counsel.

There is no right to appointment of counsel in the preparation of a petition under this rule. Watson v. State, 282 Ark. 246, 667 S.W.2d 953 (1984).

Since postconviction proceedings are civil in nature, there is no constitutional right to appointment of counsel to prepare a petition under this rule. This rule provides for the appointment of counsel by the circuit court where a hearing is granted and where the petitioner is unable to afford counsel. Robinson v. State, 295 Ark. 693, 751 S.W.2d 335 (1988).

Arkansas does provide for discretionary appointment of counsel for Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petitions; if a hearing is granted, counsel is required. Wainwright v. Norris, 836 F. Supp. 619 (E.D. Ark. 1993).

Since the repeal of § 16-92-108(b)(2) in 1993, there is no statutory authority for the granting of counsel, although the state courts continue to pay discretionary amounts to lawyers if they choose to appoint them. Wainwright v. Norris, 836 F. Supp. 619 (E.D. Ark. 1993).

The fact that defendant was not satisfied with the appointed counsel's efforts did not entitle the defendant to appointment of a different attorney; even on direct appeal of a judgment, a defendant does not enjoy the absolute right to counsel of his choosing. Franklin v. State, 327 Ark. 537, 939 S.W.2d 836 (1997).

Even though petitioner filed an pro se amended Rule 37 petition and a pro se notice of appeal, his attorney had not been relieved and was thus obligated to continue representing him, which included lodging the Rule 37 record on appeal. Sanders v. State, 329 Ark. 363, 952 S.W.2d 133 (1997).

Rule 16 of the Rules of Appellate Procedure — Criminal, requiring counsel to continue to represent a convicted defendant throughout any appeal to the Arkansas Supreme Court, applies to appeals of orders denying postconviction relief. Sanders v. State, 329 Ark. 363, 952 S.W.2d 133 (1997).

Denial of inmate's motion for counsel to represent him in his appeal from the denial of his motion for postconviction relief was appropriate because there was no constitutional right to an attorney in postconviction proceedings and because none of the inmate's claims in the motion amounted to a showing of merit. The supreme court was not persuaded by his argument that because an interpreter was provided, he should also have been provided counsel. Viveros v. State, 372 Ark. 463, 277 S.W.3d 223 (2008).

Circuit court properly denied defendant's petition for postconviction relief because he did not demonstrate merit to his appeal and, therefore, did not meet his burden of establishing that he was entitled to appointment of counsel. Evans v. State, 2014 Ark. 6 (2014).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to appoint counsel to represent petitioner in the Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 proceeding as the appointment of counsel was not required, and he had not raised the applicability of case law below. Detherow v. State, 2015 Ark. 447, 476 S.W.3d 155 (2015).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellant's motion for appointment of counsel because appellant was not entitled to counsel to assist him in developing his claims for the postconviction relief proceedings because he did not make a substantial showing that his petition included a meritorious claim. Flemmons v. State, 2016 Ark. 460, 505 S.W.3d 196 (2016).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying petitioner counsel in a postconviction proceeding where petitioner did not explain how further investigation might have better developed his ineffective assistance of trial counsel claims, and he had not identified a specific claim that had potential merit or described with particularity how counsel was needed to develop the claims. Lane v. State, 2019 Ark. 5, 564 S.W.3d 524 (2019).

Right to Relief.

The circuit court may deny a petition for post-conviction relief without a hearing if the petition and files and records of the case conclusively show that the prisoner is entitled to no relief. Scott v. State, 281 Ark. 436, 664 S.W.2d 475 (1984); Smith v. State, 291 Ark. 496, 725 S.W.2d 849 (1987).

Sentencing.

Where trial judge, prior to accepting defendant's guilty plea, told defendant he did not know how the concurrent sentences he was imposing would affect the sentence from which defendant was currently on parole, there was no deception such as to warrant post-conviction relief. Stevens v. State, 262 Ark. 216, 555 S.W.2d 229 (1977).

Withdrawal of Guilty Plea.

A motion to withdraw a guilty plea must necessarily be made under this rule if it is filed after the sentence has been carried into execution. Simmons v. State, 265 Ark. 48, 578 S.W.2d 12 (1979).

Writ of Mandamus.

A writ of mandamus can be granted to compel the circuit court to act on a petition filed under this rule. Costillo v. Goodson, 288 Ark. 639, 707 S.W.2d 776 (1986).

Rule 37.4. Relief [Reinstated and Revised -- See Publisher's Notes].

If the circuit court finds that for any reason the petitioner is entitled to relief, then the circuit court may set aside the original judgment, discharge the petitioner, resentence him or her, grant a new trial, or otherwise correct the sentence, as may appear appropriate in the proceedings.

HISTORY: Abolished May 30, 1990, effective July 1, 1990; reinstated and revised October 29, 1990, effective January 1, 1991.

CASE NOTES

Competency of Defendant.

Where evidence showed that defendant was delusional while on trial, the trial judge should have halted the trial and made a new determination of competency; while the failure to hold a further competency hearing violated due process, the proper remedy was not to grant the writ of habeas corpus, but to conduct a post-conviction competency hearing. Reynolds v. Norris, 86 F.3d 796 (8th Cir. 1996).

Mootness.

Appeal was dismissed because postconviction relief petitioner's release from custody rendered his remaining ineffective-assistance-of-counsel claim moot. The Arkansas Supreme Court firmly established that a petitioner seeking postconviction relief had to be incarcerated in order for the rule's remedies to be available to the petitioner. Burns v. State, 2022 Ark. App. 238 (2022).

Construction.

Section 16-90-111, permitting a court to correct an illegal sentence, is in conflict with this rule. Ashe v. State, 57 Ark. App. 99, 942 S.W.2d 267 (1997).

Federal Courts.

The United States District Court has no authority to order or direct the trial court or the Arkansas Supreme Court to take any action relative to granting a defendant relief; the appropriate avenue for federal relief is to grant a petition for habeas corpus, not to order or direct the state courts to take some action. Nail v. State, 315 Ark. 675, 869 S.W.2d 705 (1994).

New Trial.

Jury misconduct under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(a)(2) may apparently be used in a criminal proceeding as a basis for granting a new trial. Trimble v. State, 316 Ark. 161, 871 S.W.2d 562 (1994).

Defense counsel's dual representation of two brothers, one of whom entered into a plea agreement and then testified against the other brother, created an actual conflict of interest; because defense counsel could not effectively cross-examine the first brother, the second brother was adversely affected and entitled to a new trial. Sheridan v. State, 331 Ark. 1, 959 S.W.2d 29 (1998).

Relief Denied.

Circuit court properly denied defendant's petition for postconviction relief—claiming that his trial counsel was ineffective due to a conflict of interest—because the record demonstrated that counsel did not represent defendant's mother at the time of defendant's trial since the case was nolle prossed and counsel testified that his brief representation of defendant's mother did not affect any of his decisions in his representation of defendant, counsel explained that he objected to testimony regarding defendant's mother because defendant's mother was a defense witness and counsel wanted her to be seen in a positive way and explained that the testimony elicited was not relevant and contended the State's line of questioning was purely a tactic to "tarnish" defendant's mother ahead of time because she was a potential defense witness. Drennan v. State, 2021 Ark. 206, 632 S.W.3d 753 (2021).

Appellant was not entitled to relief where it was reasonably clear from the record that all of the parties involved in the plea agreement, with the possible exception of the appellant, fully understood that a person serving a life sentence is not eligible for parole, and that, under normal circumstances, at some point in time, a life sentence may be commuted to a term of years by the executive branch of the government, at which point the prisoner could become eligible for parole. Vagi v. State, 296 Ark. 377, 757 S.W.2d 533 (1988).

Where there was ample evidence from which the trial court could have concluded that there was no off-the-record motion for mistrial, counsel on appeal could not have been ineffective in failing to move to supplement the record to show a timely motion for mistrial, and accordingly, the petitioner did not show that he was entitled to any relief pursuant to this rule. Dumond v. State, 297 Ark. 21, 759 S.W.2d 36 (1988).

Waiver.

A guilty plea waives nonjurisdictional defects and errors. Garrett v. State, 296 Ark. 550, 759 S.W.2d 23 (1988).

Rule 37.5. Special rule for persons under sentence of death.

(a) Purpose and Scope. This rule shall apply only to persons under a sentence of death. Except as otherwise provided in this rule, the provisions of Rules 37.1, 37.2, 37.3 and 37.4 shall apply to a petition for post-conviction relief filed by a person under sentence of death. The intent of this rule is to comply with the provisions of 28 United States Code § 2261 et seq.

(b) Requirement of Hearing on Appointment of Attorney.

(1)(A) Upon affirmance of a sentence of death by the Supreme Court of Arkansas, the clerk of the court shall forward a copy of the mandate to the circuit court that imposed the sentence of death and to the Attorney General. The circuit court shall conduct a hearing to consider the appointment of an attorney to represent the person in post-conviction proceedings under this rule. If the Supreme Court affirms a sentence of death, the hearing shall be held not later than twenty-one (21) days after the mandate is issued by the Supreme Court.

(B) If the mandate is recalled within the twenty-one (21) day period, the requirement of a hearing shall be suspended until the mandate is reissued. The hearing shall be held within twenty-one (21) days after the mandate is reissued. If the hearing has already been held when the mandate is recalled, any findings and order entered pursuant to this subsection shall be deemed null and void and a new hearing shall be required within twenty-one (21) days after the mandate is reissued.

(2) The person under sentence of death shall be present at the hearing. At the hearing the circuit court shall inform the person of the existence of possible relief under this rule and shall determine whether the person desires the appointment of an attorney to represent him in proceedings under this rule. If the person rejects the appointment of an attorney, the waiver shall be made in open court on the record. If the circuit court determines that the person is indigent and that he either accepts the appointment of an attorney or is unable to make a competent decision whether to accept or reject an attorney, the circuit court shall issue written findings to that effect and enter a written order appointing an attorney to represent the person in proceedings under this rule. If the circuit court determines that the person rejects the appointment of an attorney and understands the legal consequences of his decision, or that the person is not indigent, the circuit court shall issue written findings to that effect and enter a written order declining to appoint an attorney to represent the person in proceedings under this rule. In determining whether the person is indigent, the circuit court shall consider the extraordinary cost of post-conviction proceedings in a capital case. The written findings and order required by this subsection shall be issued within seven (7) days after the hearing required by this subsection. The circuit clerk shall forward a copy of the order to the Attorney General.

(3) The appointment of an attorney under this rule shall remain effective through an appeal to the Supreme Court from a proceeding under this rule.

(c) Qualifications of Appointed Attorney.

(1) Except as provided in subsection (c)(4) of this rule, an attorney appointed to represent a person under this rule shall meet each of the following standards:

(A) Within ten (10) years immediately preceding the appointment, the attorney shall have:

(i) represented a petitioner under sentence of death in a state or federal post-conviction proceeding; or

(ii) actively participated as defense counsel in at least five (5) felony jury trials tried to completion, including one trial in which the death penalty was sought; and

(B) Within ten (10) years immediately preceding the appointment, the attorney shall have:

(i) represented a petitioner in at least three state or federal post-conviction proceedings, one of which proceeded to an evidentiary hearing and all of which involved a conviction of a violent felony, including one conviction of murder; or

(ii) represented a defendant in at least three (3) appeals involving a conviction of a violent felony, including one conviction of murder, and represented a petitioner in at least one evidentiary hearing in a state or federal post-conviction proceeding; and

(C) The attorney shall have been actively engaged in the practice of law for at least three (3) years; and

(D) Within two (2) years immediately preceding the appointment, the attorney shall have completed at least six (6) hours of continuing legal education or other professional training in the representation of persons in capital trial, capital appellate, or capital post-conviction proceedings.

(2) The circuit court may appoint pro hac vice an attorney who is not licensed to practice in Arkansas but who meets the standards of (c)(1) provided the court also appoints as co-counsel an attorney who is licensed to practice in Arkansas. In such case, the attorney who is licensed to practice in Arkansas is not required to meet the standards of (c)(1).

(3) The court shall make findings, either on the record or in the written order required by subsection (b) of this rule, specifying the qualifications of counsel which satisfy the standards for appointment under this rule.

(4) The circuit court may appoint an attorney who does not meet the standards of (c)(1)(A) and (c)(1)(B), but who does meet the standards of (c)(1)(C) and either (c)(1)(A), (B), or (D) if the circuit court determines that the attorney is clearly qualified because of his unique training, experience, and background to represent a person under sentence of death in a post-conviction proceeding. The order appointing such an attorney shall contain written findings specifying the unique training, experience, and background that qualify the attorney for appointment.

(5) The circuit court shall not appoint an attorney under this rule if the attorney represented the person under a sentence of death at trial or on direct appeal to the Supreme Court of Arkansas unless the person and the attorney request continued representation on the record. If the circuit court does appoint an attorney who represented the person at trial or on direct appeal, the circuit court shall appoint a second attorney, who did not represent the person at trial or on direct appeal, to assist in the representation of the person. At least one of the attorneys shall meet the standards of (c)(1) or (c)(4).

(6) In accordance with the terms of this rule, the circuit court may appoint the Capital, Conflicts, and Appellate Office of the Arkansas Public Defender Commission, unless otherwise disqualified.

(d) Access to Records. If a person is under sentence of death, any attorney who represented such person at trial or on appeal in connection with the conviction that resulted in the sentence of death shall make available the complete files in connection with such conviction to the attorney who represents such person in post-conviction proceedings under this rule. The attorney who represents such person in post-conviction proceedings may inspect and photocopy such files, but the attorneys who represented such person at trial or on appeal shall maintain custody of their respective files, except for material which was admitted into evidence in any trial proceeding, for at least five (5) years following completion of their representation of such person.

(e) Time for Filing Post-conviction Petition. A petition for relief under this rule shall be filed in the circuit court that imposed the sentence of death within ninety (90) days after the entry of the order required in subsection (b)(2) of this rule.

(f) Notification of Filing of Petition. Upon the filing of a petition under this rule, the petitioner shall immediately forward a copy of the petition to the circuit judge who entered the order required in subsection (b)(2) of this rule, the prosecuting attorney for the district, the Attorney General, the petitioner's counsel of record at the trial resulting in the sentence of death, and the Executive Director of the Arkansas Public Defender Commission.

(g) Effect on Sentence of Death. When the circuit court enters an order under subsection (b) of this rule, the court shall also enter an order staying any sentence of death. The stay of execution shall remain in effect until dissolved by a court with competent jurisdiction. The circuit court shall enter an order dissolving the stay of execution if:

(1) A timely petition is not filed under this rule; or

(2) A timely petition is filed under this rule but relief is denied by the circuit court under subsection (i) of this rule, and either the denial of relief is affirmed on appeal or the time for filing an appeal from the denial of relief has expired without the filing of a notice of appeal.

(h) Hearing on Petition. If the circuit court determines that a hearing is necessary, the hearing shall be held within one hundred eighty (180) days from the date of the filing of the petition, unless continued for good cause shown.

(i) Decision. If a hearing on the petition is held, the circuit court shall, within sixty (60) days of the conclusion of the hearing, make specific written findings of fact with respect to each factual issue raised by the petition and specific written conclusions of law with respect to each legal issue raised by the petition. If no hearing on the petition is held, the circuit court shall, within one hundred twenty (120) days after the filing of the petition, make specific written findings of fact with respect to each factual issue raised by the petition and specific written conclusions of law with respect to each legal issue raised by the petition. The time within which the circuit court shall make specific written findings of fact and conclusions of law shall be extended by thirty (30) days if the circuit court requests or permits post-hearing briefs.

(j) Compensation of Appointed Attorney. Compensation to be paid to attorneys appointed under this rule, as well as the fees and expenses to be paid for investigative, expert, and other reasonably necessary services, shall be fixed by the circuit and appellate courts in their respective proceedings at such rates or amounts as the courts determine to be reasonable. All compensation and reasonable expenses authorized by the courts shall be paid pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-91-202(f), or as otherwise provided by law.

(k) Effective Date. The effective date of this rule is August 1, 1997. This rule shall apply to all persons under sentence of death who became eligible to file a petition under Rule 37.2(c) on or after March 31, 1997. For persons who were eligible to file a petition between March 31, 1997 and August 1, 1997, the hearing required by subsection (b)(1) of this rule shall be conducted no later than twenty-one (21) days after the effective date of this rule. In all other cases, the hearing shall be conducted within the time set forth in subsection (b)(1) of this rule. In all cases, the time for filing the petition shall be governed by subsection (e) of this rule.

HISTORY: Adopted June 23, 1997, effective August 1, 1997; subsection (b); amended July 16, 1998; subsection (g); amended January 13, 2000; subsection (b)(1)(A); amended November 29, 2001.

Publisher’s Notes.

The adoption of Rule 10 of the Arkansas Rules of Appellate Procedure — Criminal (Automatic Review in Death Cases) rendered certain language in subdivision (b)(1)(A) obsolete. The subdivision was accordingly amended effective November 29, 2001.

Reporter’s Notes, 1998 Amendments.

Subsection (b)(1)(B) was added to address the situation where the mandate is recalled.

Subsection (b)(1)(A) was amended to require that a copy of the mandate be forwarded to the Attorney General, and subsection (b)(2) was amended to require that a copy of the order with respect to the appointment of counsel be forwarded to the Attorney General.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2000

Amendment: Subsection (g)(2) was amended to clarify the dissolution of the stay of execution when post-conviction relief has been denied and a notice of appeal has not been timely filed. (See Ark. R. App. P. — Crim. 10 for dissolution of stays of execution when the denial of post-conviction relief is affirmed on appeal.)

CASE NOTES

In General.

Trial court did not improperly cross into the jury's province when it directed them to deliberate further to fix an incorrectly completed verdict form on which the jury marked that it had found no mitigating evidence when mitigating evidence had, in fact, been offered; hence, petitioner was not improperly denied postconviction relief from his death penalty sentence. Jackson v. State, 352 Ark. 359, 105 S.W.3d 352 (2003).

This rule provides specific procedures on how postconviction relief is to be pursued and includes deadlines that must be met; thus, where the death penalty was imposed, unique attention to procedural safeguards had to be met and the circuit court had to appoint counsel who met these requirements and all issues had to be set out in petition. Collins v. State, 365 Ark. 411, 231 S.W.3d 717 (2006).

Inmate's claims regarding a juror's alleged untruthfulness during voir dire as to his feelings about the death penalty were not cognizable in inmate's postconviction proceeding; his remedy for alleged juror misconduct was to directly attack a verdict by requesting a new trial under § 16-89-130(c)(7). Howard v. State, 367 Ark. 18, 238 S.W.3d 24 (2006).

Appointment of Counsel.

The Supreme Court of Arkansas granted a motion for rehearing filed by a murder defendant under a death sentence and held that defendant might, in fact, be entitled to appointment of counsel to represent him at an evidentiary hearing ordered by the Court on defendant's motion for postconviction relief where the Court's earlier ruling that counsel need not be appointed was the result of the Court's mistaken belief that defendant was represented by retained counsel when, in fact, counsel appeared at trial on a pro bono basis without compensation; trial court was ordered to conduct a hearing to determine if counsel should be appointed under this rule despite the fact that defendant's eligibility for postconviction relief predated the effective date of this rule. Sanders v. State, 352 Ark. 520, 102 S.W.3d 480 (2003).

In the context of habeas corpus actions, State of Arkansas proceedings are not procedural mechanisms employed within the context of a federal action to insure the protection of a person's rights in that action, and allowing the payment of fees under 21 U.S.C.S. § 848(q)(8) will have the practical effect of supplanting state-court systems for appointment of counsel for unexhausted matters; 21 U.S.C.S. § 848(q) does not authorize an expanded appointment for a Federal Public Defender (FPD) to represent indigent capital defendants in state postconviction proceedings, and 21 U.S.C.S.

§ 848(q)(8) or the reference to "ancillary matters" in 18 U.S.C.S. § 3006A(c) cannot be read so broadly as to encompass state postconviction relief. Hill v. State (In re Fed. Pub. Def. Representation of Defendants Sentenced to Death), 363 Ark. 480, 215 S.W.3d 589 (2005).

Counsel appointed to represent indigent capital defendants in connection with unexhausted state remedies after the mandate has issued have to comply with the criteria for appointment set out in this rule, including whether the defendant accepts appointment of counsel and, further, counsel must be appointed by the Arkansas Supreme Court. Hill v. State (In re Fed. Pub. Def. Representation of Defendants Sentenced to Death), 363 Ark. 480, 215 S.W.3d 589 (2005).

Court's earlier mandate denying inmate's postconviction appeal under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 was granted because there was evidence that inmate's counsel, appointed pursuant to this rule, had been impaired during the hearing and inmate, who had been sentenced to death, was entitled to a new hearing with competent counsel. Lee v. State, 367 Ark. 84, 238 S.W.3d 52 (2006).

Requirement under this rule that an attorney be appointed to represent a capital defendant in post-conviction proceedings did not allow an inmate who had been sentenced to death to assert in federal habeas proceedings that ineffective assistance of the inmate's post-conviction counsel constituted a denial of due process. The state's decision to grant a right to counsel did not give rise to a constitutional right. Simpson v. Norris, 490 F.3d 1029 (8th Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1224, 128 S. Ct. 1226, 170 L. Ed. 2d 140 (2008).

Competency Hearing Necessary.

Although defendant was previously found competent to stand trial, that evaluation was so remote in time from the waiver hearing, which occurred over one year later, that a second evaluation was warranted; the trial court was instructed to order a state hospital to conduct an evaluation of defendant for the purpose of determining whether he was currently competent to proceed with the hearing mandated by this rule. State v. Newman, 355 Ark. 265, 132 S.W.3d 759 (2003).

After defendant, who was convicted of capital murder and sentenced to death, was informed of his rights pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule and was found competent, his decision to waive his right to postconviction counsel and to any postconviction relief was found to have been made knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily and, accordingly, the trial court's petition to lodge the record and affirm the findings was granted; after an initial hearing, it was found that defendant was under the influence of Thorazine and a further examination of defendant and a hearing was necessitated to assure that he was competent to waive his rights. State v. Newman, 357 Ark. 39, 159 S.W.3d 309 (2004).

Motion by petitioner, who was sentenced to death, to reopen proceedings and reinvest a trial court with jurisdiction to hear a postconviction petition pursuant to subdivision (b) of this rule was granted because petitioner's competency evaluations were so remote in time from petitioner's waiver-of-postconviction-rights hearing in 2003 that a second evaluation was warranted. Roberts v. State, 2013 Ark. 57, 426 S.W.3d 372 (2013).

Competency of Counsel.

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was appropriate because he alleged only bare conclusions and had not overcome the presumption of trial counsel's competence by identifying specific acts and omissions that could not have been the result of reasonable professional judgment. Counsel's testimony established that, because the inmate's IQ fell at the pivotal point of 65, that was a strategic decision not to pursue further the issue of the inmate's IQ and mental retardation. Anderson v. State, 2011 Ark. 488, 385 S.W.3d 783 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's petition for postconviction relief after defendant was convicted of capital murder and sentenced to death; while defense counsel was ineffective in not calling one of defendant's sons to testify as a mitigation witness, it could not be said that prejudice resulted therefrom such that there was a reasonable probability that the jury would have imposed a different sentence. Springs v. State, 2012 Ark. 87, 387 S.W.3d 143, cert. denied, 568 U.S. 981, 133 S. Ct. 528, 184 L. Ed. 2d 345 (2012).

Inmate did not show the inmate received ineffective assistance of counsel during the guilt phase of the inmate's trial because, inter alia, the inmate's claims of ineffective pretrial investigation were conclusory. Wertz v. State, 2014 Ark. 240, 434 S.W.3d 895 (2014).

Inmate did not show the inmate received ineffective assistance of counsel during the guilt phase of the inmate's trial because, inter alia, counsel cross-examined witnesses in an effort to attack the State's timeline. Wertz v. State, 2014 Ark. 240, 434 S.W.3d 895 (2014).

Inmate did not show the inmate received ineffective assistance of counsel during the guilt phase of the inmate's trial because, inter alia, the inmate did not show counsel failed to contest the State's footprint evidence. Wertz v. State, 2014 Ark. 240, 434 S.W.3d 895 (2014).

Inmate did not show the inmate received ineffective assistance of counsel during the guilt phase of the inmate's trial because, inter alia, the inmate's claims of counsel's failure to interview witnesses were conclusory and unsupported by the proposed witnesses' testimony. Wertz v. State, 2014 Ark. 240, 434 S.W.3d 895 (2014).

Inmate did not show the inmate received ineffective assistance of counsel during the guilt phase of the inmate's trial because, inter alia, the inmate's claim of not preparing the inmate to testify was not a basis for alleged ineffective assistance of counsel. Wertz v. State, 2014 Ark. 240, 434 S.W.3d 895 (2014).

Inmate did not show the inmate received ineffective assistance of counsel during the sentencing phase of the inmate's trial because counsel presented some mitigating evidence, and the inmate presented no potential mitigation evidence at the hearing on the inmate's postconviction motion. Wertz v. State, 2014 Ark. 240, 434 S.W.3d 895 (2014).

Defendant's claim that trial counsel was ineffective based on statements made during opening and closing argument failed where counsel's remarks were based on a trial strategy of using evidence that defendant was suffering from a mental disease or defect to ask the jury to return a verdict on the lesser-included offense of second-degree murder, and thus, defendant failed to show prejudice. Marcyniuk v. State, 2014 Ark. 268, 436 S.W.3d 122 (2014).

Trial counsel was not ineffective with regard to jury selection where he failed to identify any particular juror who was biased, and thus, he failed to overcome the presumption against an unbiased jury. Marcyniuk v. State, 2014 Ark. 268, 436 S.W.3d 122 (2014).

Since the jury was appropriately instructed pursuant to § 5-2-314, defendant could not show prejudice to raise the issue of trial counsel's comments for the first time on appeal. Marcyniuk v. State, 2014 Ark. 268, 436 S.W.3d 122 (2014).

Trial counsel was not ineffective with regard to jury selection where the jury had been death-and life-qualified through questioning by trial counsel and through the jury questionnaire, and each potential juror's view on the death penalty had been fully developed through the jury questionnaire and voir dire examination. Marcyniuk v. State, 2014 Ark. 268, 436 S.W.3d 122 (2014).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to attempt to rehabilitate four jurors who were struck for cause by the State where the jurors' remarks indicated that none of them could impose the death penalty, and there was no showing that the four prospective jurors could have been rehabilitated or that the seated jury was biased. Marcyniuk v. State, 2014 Ark. 268, 436 S.W.3d 122 (2014).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to give additional instruction to the jury to more thoroughly inform it that mercy could be given by returning a sentence of life rather than death where the decision to not call the proposed witnesses who would have testified to defendant's mental stability was a matter of counsel's professional judgment. Marcyniuk v. State, 2014 Ark. 268, 436 S.W.3d 122 (2014).

Circuit court did not err in denying petitioner postconviction relief because petitioner failed to show that he was prejudiced when trial counsel stated during his opening statement that petitioner had escaped from jail while he awaited trial; the statement did not substantially change the outcome of trial because there was overwhelming evidence of petitioner's guilt. Sales v. State, 2014 Ark. 384, 441 S.W.3d 883 (2014).

Circuit court did not err in denying and dismissing petitioner's application for postconviction relief because any failure on the part of trial counsel to advance petitioner's desired defense did not fall below an objective standard of reasonable assistance, was not deficient, and did not result in any prejudice to petitioner; petitioner failed to demonstrate that the defense provided to him by trial counsel was not supported by reasonable professional judgment. Decay v. State, 2014 Ark. 387, 441 S.W.3d 899 (2014).

Circuit court did not err in denying petitioner postconviction relief because petitioner failed to show that he was prejudiced when trial counsel stated during his opening statement that petitioner had escaped from jail while he awaited trial; the statement did not substantially change the outcome of trial because there was overwhelming evidence of petitioner's guilt. Sales v. State, 2014 Ark. 384, 441 S.W.3d 883 (2014).

Circuit court did not err in denying petitioner postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the prosecutor's statement that petitioner could become eligible for release if sentenced to life imprisonment without parole; the jury had before it the sentences of life imprisonment without parole and death, and while it chose the latter, petitioner did not demonstrate that it did so because it was influenced by the prosecutor's statement. Decay v. State, 2014 Ark. 387, 441 S.W.3d 899 (2014).

Circuit court did not err in concluding that petitioner failed to satisfy the prejudice prong of Strickland and, therefore, was not entitled to relief because the mere fact that the jury chose the more severe of two possible punishments was not a sufficient demonstration of prejudice in light of the aggravators found to exist by the jury; trial counsel's statement that petitioner could be pardoned if he received a life sentence, although unnecessary, was a correct statement of the law. Sales v. State, 2014 Ark. 384, 441 S.W.3d 883 (2014).

Circuit court did not err in denying and dismissing petitioner's application for postconviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to statements made by the prosecutor; the prosecutor's statements regarding defendant's lack of remorse were not improper comments on his failure to testify, and thus, any objection made by trial counsel would have been without merit. Decay v. State, 2014 Ark. 387, 441 S.W.3d 899 (2014).

Circuit court did not err in denying and dismissing petitioner's application for postconviction relief because trial counsel's performance was not deficient with respect to mitigation; petitioner wholly failed to identify to the circuit court any additional evidence or witnesses that should have been presented during the sentencing phase of his trial by his trial counsel but were not, and trial counsel did in fact investigate, develop, and present mitigating evidence. Decay v. State, 2014 Ark. 387, 441 S.W.3d 899 (2014).

Petitioner did not point to any behavior by counsel that was erratic, and the fact that counsel might have been sleeping in his office and required treatment of some form, absent some external impact on petitioner's case, was insufficient to show that his representation fell below the level of qualified or competent counsel required. Isom v. State, 2015 Ark. 219, 462 S.W.3d 638 (2015).

Petitioner claimed counsel was ineffective for waiving the claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to pursue a certain defense, but petitioner failed to point to any error by the court that would support a recall of the mandate; there was nothing in the record that would have required the trial court, or the court, to sua sponte order additional investigation. Isom v. State, 2015 Ark. 219, 462 S.W.3d 638 (2015).

Petitioner was properly denied relief on his claims of ineffective assistance of counsel where counsel explored the issue of neuropsychological testing and was told by an independent expert that it was not needed; based on the concerns that information elicited during cross-examination could have damaged defendant, the decision not to call an expert was a matter of trial strategy; petitioner's claim that family members called as witnesses were unprepared was not borne out by the record; and in closing arguments, trial counsel made strenuous efforts to convince the jury to impose a life sentence as opposed to the death penalty. Lacy v. State, 2018 Ark. 174, 545 S.W.3d 746 (2018), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 805, 202 L. Ed. 2d 591 (2019).

Supreme Court of Arkansas does not does not recognize cumulative error in allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel. Lacy v. State, 2018 Ark. 174, 545 S.W.3d 746 (2018), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 805, 202 L. Ed. 2d 591 (2019).

Defendant's petition for postconviction relief was properly denied because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to present additional mitigation evidence during the sentencing phase of his capital murder trial. Counsel made a reasonable, strategic decision to introduce mitigation evidence of defendant's childhood experiences through his half-sister's testimony as she was the best witness to testify about defendant's troubled childhood and the traumatic experiences that they faced as children; and counsel made a strategic decision not to introduce defendant's outdated mental health evidence as the State could have rebutted it with potentially damaging evidence. Johnson v. State, 2020 Ark. 168, 598 S.W.3d 515 (2020).

Competency of Petitioner.

Circuit court was under no obligation to determine petitioner's competency prior to adjudicating his postconviction claims because petitioner did not waive his postconviction rights. Ward v. State, 2015 Ark. 62, 455 S.W.3d 830, cert. denied, 577 U.S. 978, 136 S. Ct. 485, 193 L. Ed. 2d 355 (2015).

Coram Nobis.

In a proceeding in which appellant petitioned to reinvest jurisdiction in the trial court to consider a petition for writ of error coram nobis, the Supreme Court found that a prosecution witness's testimony during a pretrial hearing was at odds with his testimony in a postconviction relief hearing. Given that the witness had testified to two different versions of the facts, the Supreme Court was compelled to have the circuit court conduct an evidentiary hearing, as the Supreme Court was not in the position to exalt one version over the other. Isom v. State, 2015 Ark. 225, 462 S.W.3d 662 (2015).

Decision.

Under this rule, a defendant is allowed to raise as many issues as he chooses that may demonstrate that his conviction and death sentence were illegally and unconstitutionally obtained; once the issues are raised, the trial court then must make a determination whether a hearing is necessary by making specific written findings of fact and conclusions of law on each issue raised in the petition. Echols v. State, 344 Ark. 513, 42 S.W.3d 467 (2001).

Although petitioner's death penalty case had been reviewed five times, the Supreme Court of Arkansas found the circumstances of the case were unique and recalled the mandate and reopened the case solely because of: (1) the alleged comparable verdict form deficiency in the Willett v. State case; (2) the federal district court's dismissal of the federal habeas corpus petition in order to give state courts the opportunity to explore the issue; and (3) the enhanced scrutiny required in death penalty cases. Robbins v. State, No. CR 98-1394, 2003 Ark. LEXIS 326 (Ark. June 12, 2003).

The undeniable fact is the Supreme Court of Arkansas will recall a mandate and reopen a case in extraordinary circumstances. Robbins v. State, No. CR 98-1394, 2003 Ark. LEXIS 326 (Ark. June 12, 2003).

Denial of Investigator.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying the inmate authorization to retain an investigator to probe into issues of jury bias and misconduct because the inmate failed to demonstrate the need for an investigator, as nothing required the inmate's counsel to rely exclusively on an investigator to investigate whether one of the jurors had failed to disclose information accurately during voir dire and the inmate admitted that he did not know if any misrepresentation occurred. Williams v. State, 369 Ark. 104, 251 S.W.3d 290 (2007).

Law of the Case.

State never filed a motion to dismiss defendant's petition in the circuit court, and the State thus was improperly raising the issue of law of the case for the first time on appeal, but even if the issue was timely raised, it failed because defendant ultimately waived his right to file a petition on the advice of counsel, and it remained to be seen whether counsel's advice was the result of her failure to timely file the petition, and thus the court's previous holding did not preclude defendant from seeking relief now. Engram v. State, 2013 Ark. 424, 430 S.W.3d 82 (2013).

Petition Denied.

Inmate's petition for postconviction relief after a capital murder conviction was properly denied because the inmate failed to show that trial counsel's decision to forego conducting a fingerprint analysis on a cash register and several gas pumps amounted to ineffective assistance of counsel; the inmate failed to show what the test might have shown, and the decision to forego testing was a matter within counsel's professional judgment. Simpson v. State, 355 Ark. 294, 138 S.W.3d 671 (2003).

Supreme Court of Arkansas declined to recall its mandate denying petitioner's request for post-conviction relief and writ of error coram nobis as petitioner's claims of juror misconduct did not fall within any of the categories of errors for which error coram nobis could provide relief. Echols v. State, 360 Ark. 332, 201 S.W.3d 890 (2005).

In a post-conviction proceeding under this rule, appellant convicted of three counts of capital murder was not entitled to relief from his death sentence as counsel did not render a deficient performance at the penalty phase by failing to call appellant's mother to testify, and appellant's challenge to his death sentence was not preserved for review because he failed to raise the issue on direct appeal. Rankin v. State, 365 Ark. 255, 227 S.W.3d 924 (2006).

Inmate's postconviction claim that his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to submit the statutory mitigating circumstances set out in § 5-4-605 was properly rejected as counsel made a conscious choice not to do so because they were inconsistent with the defense of innocence and because the evidence showed that the inmate had a past of criminal activity, including drug dealing. Howard v. State, 367 Ark. 18, 238 S.W.3d 24 (2006).

Inmate's postconviction claim that his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to ask for a hearing or move for a mistrial once she learned about a juror's discussion with the court regarding an officer whom she overheard saying that the jury would hang the inmate was properly rejected as counsel's decision to keep the juror was a matter of carefully considered trial strategy. Howard v. State, 367 Ark. 18, 238 S.W.3d 24 (2006).

Inmate's postconviction claims that the state knowingly introduced false testimony in order to bolster its theory of the case and that the information charging him with capital murder was defective on the ground that it failed to enumerate any of the four aggravating circumstances upon which the state relied to obtain the death penalty were rejected as the claims could have been raised on direct appeal but were not, and could not be raised for the first time in a Rule 37 petition. Howard v. State, 367 Ark. 18, 238 S.W.3d 24 (2006).

Petitioner's request for postconviction relief under this rule was properly denied as petitioner failed to prove that but for trial counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of petitioner's trial would have been different; petitioner alleged that counsel was ineffective for failing to call witnesses who would testify that another individual had bloodied and bandaged hands after the crimes were committed, but the only blood at the scene was the victim's blood. Isom v. State, 2010 Ark. 495, 370 S.W.3d 491 (2010).

Prohibitions.

Petitioner claimed that this rule prohibited the appointment of an attorney who represented the defendant during his capital-murder trial in order to prevent conflicts of interest and contended that a conflict of interest arose because the investigator worked in the same office as one of petitioner's trial attorneys. Because petitioner did not point to any actual conflict, petitioner's invitation to extend case law to include all employees of the public defender's office was declined. Isom v. State, 2015 Ark. 219, 462 S.W.3d 638 (2015).

State correctly maintained that petitioner failed to show a defect or breakdown of the appellate process for purposes of recalling the mandate; contentions regarding the photo lineup were repeatedly addressed, and petitioner failed to show that the circuit court erroneously concluded that the photo lineup was not unduly suggestive. Isom v. State, 2015 Ark. 219, 462 S.W.3d 638 (2015).

Recalling the mandate was warranted only when the breakdown in the appellate process consisted of an error made by the court, and allegations that postconviction counsel was ineffective were not errors by the court, and the petition was denied. Isom v. State, 2015 Ark. 219, 462 S.W.3d 638 (2015).

Failure to amend the petition allegations, which the trial court was not obligated to permit, did not relate to an error made by the court and was not sufficient to warrant recalling the mandate in this case. Isom v. State, 2015 Ark. 219, 462 S.W.3d 638 (2015).

Prosecutorial Misconduct.

To the extent that petitioner argued prosecutorial misconduct in relation to the photo lineup, the issue of alleged prosecutorial misconduct was an issue that should have been raised on direct appeal and was not a claim that may be raised for the first time in a Rule 37 petition. Isom v. State, 2015 Ark. 219, 462 S.W.3d 638 (2015).

Petition to recall the mandate in petitioner's postconviction proceedings was denied because he had not identified any error on the part of the court that would constitute a breakdown in the appellate process. Isom v. State, 2015 Ark. 219, 462 S.W.3d 638 (2015).

Remand.

Considering whether trial counsel was ineffective in failing to present an affirmative defense of not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect was error where the finding that such failure was not ineffective assistance had been affirmed on appeal, the issue was not remanded, and thus, the circuit court lacked jurisdiction to consider it. Lacy v. State, 2018 Ark. 174, 545 S.W.3d 746 (2018), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 805, 202 L. Ed. 2d 591 (2019).

Requirements.

There had to be an error in the record that was before the court during the appeal in order to say that the court made an error that resulted in a breakdown of the appellate process, for purposes of recalling the mandate. Isom v. State, 2015 Ark. 219, 462 S.W.3d 638 (2015).

Stay of Execution.

Defendant's motion to lift the stay of execution was moot because there was no stay of execution in effect at the time; the circuit court was obligated to vacate the stay of execution it issued when defendant's Rule 37 petition was affirmed on appeal. Nooner v. State, 352 Ark. 481, 101 S.W.3d 834 (2003).

Time to File Petition.

The circuit court wrongly dismissed the defendant's petition for post-conviction relief as untimely, notwithstanding that the petition was not filed within 90 days of the court's order appointing counsel for the defendant, where the attorney appointed by the circuit court moved to be relieved on the basis of a conflict of interest and was relieved on that basis and, therefore, the defendant was not provided with counsel prior to the expiration of the filing period. Jackson v. State, 343 Ark. 613, 37 S.W.3d 595 (2001).

Trial court erred in dismissing defendant's postconviction relief petition of his death sentence as untimely under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.2(c), a rule that applied only to non-death cases; defendant's petition was timely filed within 90 days after the appointment of counsel under subsection (e) of this rule, which did apply to death penalty cases. Simpson v. State, 347 Ark. 564, 65 S.W.3d 878 (2002).

Where defendant: (1) timely filed his Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition and the mandate of the state Supreme Court was returned to the trial court on April 29, 1999; (2) on May 18, 1999, appeared before the trial court, at which time the trial court appointed counsel for defendant who met the qualifications set forth in subdivision (b)(2) of this rule; and (3) on August 11, 1999, filed his Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition, defendant's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition was not untimely with regard to his murder sentence. Kemp v. State, 348 Ark. 750, 74 S.W.3d 224 (2002).

As defendant was sentenced to death, his postconviction remedy was governed by the rule that allowed a petitioner to file a postconviction petition within 90 days from the date of an order appointing counsel. Engram v. State, 2013 Ark. 424, 430 S.W.3d 82 (2013).

Defendant's allegations included a declaration by an attorney who asserted that defendant's counsel mistakenly allowed the deadline for the filing to pass, and this information gave rise to a question of whether there was good cause for defendant's failure to timely file a petition, and it was thus error for the circuit court to have summarily dismissed the petition without holding a hearing to consider the issue of good cause; the court could not accept the State's claim that the petition was an impermissible successive petition. Engram v. State, 2013 Ark. 424, 430 S.W.3d 82 (2013).

Verification of Motion.

Where a petition for post-conviction relief in a death penalty case was not verified by the petitioner, but was solely verified by his attorney, rather than dismissing the petition, the court chose to remand the matter for verification in conformance with Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1. Howard v. State, 366 Ark. 453, 236 S.W.3d 508 (2006).

Petitioner's motion to recall the mandate on his appeal affirming the circuit court's denial of postconviction relief was denied because petitioner failed to establish a defect or breakdown in the appellate process since the supreme court had reviewed his postconviction appeal, notwithstanding the unverified petition; petitioner's remedy for submitting an unverified petition would have been limited to a remand to allow him to verify his petition, followed by an appeal of his original petition. Ward v. State, 2015 Ark. 62, 455 S.W.3d 830, cert. denied, 577 U.S. 978, 136 S. Ct. 485, 193 L. Ed. 2d 355 (2015).

Reliance of the court in Wooten v. State, 2010 Ark. 467, on Collins v. State, 365 Ark. 411 (2006), resulted in a holding that is out of step with the rest of the jurisprudence on the verification requirement and recalling the mandate. Accordingly, the supreme court overruled it. Ward v. State, 2015 Ark. 62, 455 S.W.3d 830, cert. denied, 577 U.S. 978, 136 S. Ct. 485, 193 L. Ed. 2d 355 (2015).

Waiver of Appeals.

The defendant was competent to waive his appeals, including his postconviction remedies under this rule, where (1) not only did the defendant file a pro se motion for withdrawal of the appeal timely filed on his behalf by counsel, but affirmed during a hearing that he had a long-standing desire to waive his right to appeal and that he was doing so against the advice of his attorneys, who had told him that at least two reversible errors in the case could result in resentencing or retrial, and (2) an expert evaluated the defendant and testified that he understood the difference between life and death, the consequences of the death sentence, and the consequences of execution by lethal injection, that he understood his right to appeal and the posttrial relief available to him, and that he had the capacity to knowingly and intelligently waive any and all appeals and postconviction relief. Smith v. State, 343 Ark. 552, 39 S.W.3d 739 (2001).

Given that: (1) the psychological evidence indicated that defendant knew right from wrong; (2) defendant indicated an understanding that he was waiving appeal rights; and (3) the trial court asked defendant appropriate questions concerning the waiver, the trial court properly found that defendant made a knowing and intelligent waiver of appeal rights. Roberts v. State, 352 Ark. 489, 102 S.W.3d 482 (2003), dismissed without prejudice, 2011 Ark. 502, 385 S.W.3d 792 (2011), overruled in part, Dimas-Martinez v. State, 2011 Ark. 515, 385 S.W.3d 238 (2011).

Record supported a trial court's findings that defendant had knowingly and intelligently waived his right to have appointed counsel, to pursue postconviction relief, and to pursue federal habeas corpus relief from a conviction and death sentence; the trial court had reviewed testimony of psychologists and defendant's former employer pertinent to defendant's competency, and defendant had repeatedly indicated that he understood he was choosing death over life. State v. Roberts, 354 Ark. 399, 123 S.W.3d 881 (2003).

Inmate waived any error that may have arisen from sheriff's acting as a witness in his case and as bailiff because inmate failed to raise the issue on direct appeal and because the state and defense counsel agreed for the sheriff to remain in the courtroom in exchange for the defense team to be able to keep its investigators in the courtroom as well. Howard v. State, 367 Ark. 18, 238 S.W.3d 24 (2006).

Circuit court was without jurisdiction to entertain defendant's petition for postconviction relief under this rule, and the supreme court was likewise without jurisdiction to hear an appeal from any decision of the circuit court because defendant's initial waiver of postconviction relief was equivalent to filing a first petition for postconviction relief; because jurisdiction remained with the supreme court following its affirmance of the circuit court's decision that defendant waived his rights to postconviction relief, the circuit court never acquired jurisdiction to hear the Rule 37.5 petition. Roberts v. State, 2011 Ark. 502, 385 S.W.3d 792 (2011).

Where the ninety-day filing period under subsection (e) of this rule has expired and a waiver of postconviction relief has been affirmed by the supreme court, a petitioner must file the appropriate motion to reopen postconviction proceedings before a Rule 37 petition can be brought in circuit court; the jurisdiction rule that once the appeal record is lodged with the supreme court, the circuit court loses jurisdiction to issue subsequent rulings on a postconviction proceeding under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 applies to petitions under this rule. Roberts v. State, 2011 Ark. 502, 385 S.W.3d 792 (2011).

It was clear error to find defendant able to waive postconviction remedies because (1) defendant had schizophrenia, (2) defendant's symptoms impacted defendant's ability to choose between life and death and intelligently waive defendant's appeal rights, and (3) defendant's rational reasoning for waiver was not conclusively found to be greater than defendant's psychotic reasoning. Roberts v. State, 2016 Ark. 118, 488 S.W.3d 524 (2016).

Circuit court's finding was not clearly erroneous that the waiver of postconviction rights by defendant, who was sentenced to death, was made knowingly and intelligently and with the capacity to choose between life and death. While the two experts rendered different diagnoses, only one of the experts rendered an opinion on defendant's competency to waive; although the other expert diagnosed defendant with mild intellectual disability, he did not testify that defendant lacked the capacity to understand his choice or to waive knowingly and intelligently. Lard v. State, 2020 Ark. 110, 595 S.W.3d 355 (2020), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 1086, 208 L. Ed. 2d 540 (2021).

Written Findings.

Written findings on a petition for postconviction relief in a capital murder prosecution were insufficient where the trial court generally denied 19 claims, specifically denied 12 claims, and completely omitted rulings on 15 claims. Echols v. State, 344 Ark. 513, 42 S.W.3d 467 (2001).

Where the trial court failed to make specific written findings of fact and conclusions of law as required under this rule, the appellate court reversed and remanded for entry of a written order in compliance with subsection (i) of this rule. McGehee v. State, 344 Ark. 602, 43 S.W.3d 125 (2001).

This rule reinforces the responsibility of the trial court to make specific written findings of fact and conclusions of law on each issue raised in a petition. Kemp v. State, 347 Ark. 52, 60 S.W.3d 404 (2001).

Trial court erred in denying inmate's petition for post-conviction relief without making specific written findings of fact and conclusions of law with respect to each issue raised by the petition. Fudge v. State, 354 Ark. 148, 120 S.W.3d 600 (2003).

Where an appeal of the denial of a defendant's petition for postconviction relief was remanded for the trial court to make specific written findings of fact and conclusions of law as required by subsection (i) of this rule, the trial court's adoption verbatim of the proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law submitted by the prosecution was sufficient to satisfy the mandate; the trial court allowed the parties to submit proposed findings, but the trial court was not required to conduct any further hearing or even seek input from the parties. Echols v. State, 354 Ark. 530, 127 S.W.3d 486 (2003).

Trial court's findings and conclusions in holding defendant able to waive postconviction remedies were sufficient because the findings sufficiently specified the basis for the court's ruling by stating the court (1) considered the experts' testimony and reports, defendant's letters, and affidavits of those who assisted in defendant's defense, (2) concluded defendant was competent to knowingly and intelligently waive all rights to postconviction relief and had the capacity to choose between life and death and forego representation, and (3) found remaining arguments were inapplicable and moot. Roberts v. State, 2016 Ark. 118, 488 S.W.3d 524 (2016).

Administration of District Courts, Ark. Sup. Ct. Admin. Order No. 18.

Rule 1. Scope of rules.

(a) Except as provided in subdivision (b), these rules shall govern the procedure in all civil actions in the district courts and county courts (hereinafter collectively called the “district courts”) of this state. They shall apply in the small claims division of district courts except as may be modified by Rule 10 of these rules.

(b) These rules shall not apply to an appeal of a tax assessment from an equalization board to the county court. Rule 9 of these rules, however, shall apply to a tax-assessment appeal from county court to circuit court.

(c) Where applicable and unless otherwise specifically modified herein, the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and the Arkansas Rules of Evidence shall apply to and govern matters of procedure and evidence in the district courts of this State. Actions in the small claims division of district court shall be tried informally before the court with relaxed rules of evidence, see Rule 10(d)(2) of these rules.

(d) Rules specific to criminal proceedings in district court shall so indicate, and in such cases, such rules shall apply to actions pending in city courts.

(e) Other matters affecting district courts may be found in Administrative Order Number 18.

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001; revised December 9, 2004, effective January 1, 2005; amended October 9, 2008, effective January 1, 2009.

Publisher's Notes.

The Per Curiam orders of the Supreme Court entered on December 18, 1978, adopting the Rules of Civil Procedure, the Rules of Appellate Procedure, and the Rules for Inferior Courts, read: “PER CURIAM. The Court, pursuant to Act 38 of 1973 and to its constitutional and inherent power to regulate procedure in the courts, hereby adopts the Rules of Civil Procedure submitted by the Civil Procedure Revision Committee, with modifications made by the Court. These Rules will be effective July 1, 1979. The Court expresses its great appreciation for the untiring work done by the members of the Committee and for the various suggestions made by attorneys in response to the Court's invitation.

“Without limiting the effect of the supersession rule adopted by this court as part of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure, Rules of Appellate Procedure and Rules for Inferior Courts, pursuant to Act 38 of the General Assembly of 1973, we deem the following statutes (designated by section numbers in Ark. Stat., 1947, Annotated) to be specifically superseded by those rules:

§ 27-1801; § 28-353 (1).

"The following rules are deemed to be superseded:

Rule 13, Rules Governing Procedures in Circuit and Chancery Courts.

Rule 26A, Rules of Supreme Court.

"The question of supersession of all other rules and statutes will be determined by the supersession rule and Act 38 of 1973."

The Per Curiam order of the Supreme Court entered on December 9, 2004, read: "As a consequence of Amendment 80 to the Arkansas Constitution, a number of statutory provisions governing district courts are repealed as of December 31, 2004. The Amendment 80 Implementation Committee has recommended to the Supreme Court the adoption of Administrative Order Number 18 — Administration of District Courts — and the revision of the Inferior Court Rules, including their renaming to the 'District Court Rules.' The purpose of these proposals is to put in place the framework to govern the administration of the district courts beginning January 1, 2005. The initial work on these proposals was done by the Supreme Court Civil Practice Committee, and the Committee's work was then reviewed by the District Court Judges of the state. We thank all of these entities for their work on this project.

"Administrative Order Number 18 creates four subject matter divisions: civil, criminal, traffic, and small claims. See In re Amended Supreme Court Statement on Limited Jurisdiction Courts under Amendment 80, 351 Ark. App. (2002). Amendment 80, Section 7 places responsibility for setting the civil jurisdiction of the district courts in the Supreme Court. The civil jurisdiction of the district courts was previously codified at Ark. Code Ann. § 16-17-704, which is repealed as of January 1, 2005.

"Several organizations, including the Arkansas Bar Association and the Arkansas District Judges Council, have recommended that we make no changes in the civil subject matter jurisdiction of the district courts at this time. While we adopt that recommendation, we are mindful of the significant opportunity provided to the justice system by the passage of Amendment 80 and the ability to reconsider the nature and operation of the district court. We are aware that the General Assembly is given the primary authority for adopting changes in the structure and funding of the court and, to some extent, our ability to change or expand the courts's jurisdiction is dependent upon the resolution of the structural issues. We will continue to work with all parties toward a final resolution of these issues, and we will continue to carry out our specific responsibility to review and establish jurisdictional monetary limits and the types of cases heard for possible changes in the future.

"The conversion of the Inferior Court Rules to the District Court Rules is further explained in the Reporter's Notes, which accompany several of the rules. Rule 10 addresses procedure in the small claims division and takes most of its provisions from Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-17-601 et seq. While some changes in the rules have been made, the primary intention at this time is to maintain the status quo and ensure that the procedural rules are in place when the statutes are repealed. We ask the Civil Practice Committee to review the District Court Rules and report any recommendations for their improvement to the court.

"In order to insure the continued operations of the district courts, the Supreme Court promulgates Administrative Order Number 18, effective January 1, 2005 and amends and republishes the District Court Rules, formerly known as the Inferior Court Rules, effective January 1, 2005. Administrative Order Number 18 and the District Court Rules are set out below.

"At the end of Administrative Order Number 18, a 'Note' is appended which may be helpful in understanding the provisions. Pre-2004 Reporter's Notes to the Inferior Court Rules and Additions to those Notes remain part of the District Court Rules."

Reporter's Notes to Rule 1:

1. These inferior court rules are designed for use in all civil actions in the inferior courts of Arkansas. Since many parties to such actions do not have benefit of counsel, these rules are drafted so as to permit a person to represent himself with a minimum of procedural assistance. A complex set of rules would be self-defeating of this goal; accordingly, these rules are kept to a minimum and the text made as simple and concise as possible. County courts are excepted from the rules, because their proceedings are in the nature of special proceedings.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

The first sentence has been amended by deleting the exception for county courts. Previously, actions brought in county court were considered to be "in the nature of special proceedings," but statutory procedures are virtually nonexistent. To fill the gap, these rules have been made applicable. The second sentence has been added to make clear proceedings in the small claims division of a municipal court are governed by Small Claims Procedure Act. These rules are applicable in such cases to the extent that they do not conflict with the act.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

Act 1693 of 2001 changed the name of municipal courts to district courts, and the second sentence of this rule has been amended accordingly. Courts of common pleas, which were previously subject to these rules, were abolished by Act 915 of 2001.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment:

As a consequence of Amendment 80 to the Arkansas Constitution, the Inferior Court Rules have been revised and renamed the "District Court Rules." Effective January 1, 2005, the implementing legislation for Amendment 80 repeals several statutes governing the procedures in the district courts. The substantive revisions of these rules fill the gaps created by that repeal.

Former Inferior Court Rule 1 used the term "inferior courts," which included both district courts and county courts. See Pike Ave. Dev. Co. v. Pulaski County, 343 Ark. 338, 37 S.W. 3d 177 (2001) and the Reporter's Notes to Inferior Court Rule 1. District Court Rule 1 dispenses with the term "inferior courts." All the rules have been revised to reflect this name change.

The provisions in subsection (b) were previously found in Inferior Court Rule 10. The procedural rules for the Small Claims Division of district court are now contained in Rule 10 of the District Court Rules. See Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment, to Rule 10.

Administrative Order Number 18 should be consulted for other matters affecting practice in the district courts.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2008 Amendment:

Subdivision (b) is new. It recognizes that our statutes prescribe specific procedures for appealing a tax assessment from an equalization board to the county court. Ark. Code Ann. §§ 26-27-311, 318. Those statutory procedures, not the District Court Rules, govern such cases in the county court with one exception. The exception is that Rule 9 governs appeals in tax-assessment cases from county court to circuit court. Former subdivisions (b)-(d) have been redesignated as (c)-(e).

CASE NOTESApplicability.

Pro se litigants must follow and conform to these rules of procedure, including the timely perfecting of an appeal under AICR 9 [now ADCR 9]. Ottens v. State, 316 Ark. 1, 871 S.W.2d 329 (1994).

The Inferior Court Rules [now District Court Rules] govern the procedure in all civil actions in the inferior courts (including county courts) of the state; the appeal procedure in a county court action has court administration as its basis, as do those civil actions in and appeals from other inferior courts. Pike Ave. Dev. Co. v. Pulaski County, 343 Ark. 338, 37 S.W.3d 177 (2001).

Cited:

State Child Support Enforcement Unit v. Markham, 292 Ark. 449, 730 S.W.2d 497 (1987); Barnett v. Howard, 363 Ark. 140, 211 S.W.3d 494 (2005).

Rule 2. Jurisdiction and venue unaffected; Right to jury trial.

(a) These rules shall not be construed to extend or affect the jurisdiction of the district courts of this State or the venue of actions therein.

(b) There shall be no jury trials in district court. In order that the right of trial by jury remains inviolate, all appeals from judgment in district court shall be de novo to circuit court.

HISTORY: Revised December 9, 2004, effective January 1, 2005.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 2:

1. It is not the function of these inferior court rules to extend or affect the jurisdiction of the inferior courts of Arkansas. Any attempt to increase the monetary jurisdiction of such courts would violate the Arkansas Constitution. United Loan & Inv. Co. v. Chilton, 225 Ark. 1037, 287 S.W.2d 458 (1956). Likewise, these rules do not attempt to define or affect the venue of civil actions in inferior courts.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment:

The second paragraph was added to this rule and designated subsection (b). It is derived from Ark. Code Ann. § 16-17-703.

CASE NOTES

Appeal.

When the time for filing an appeal is fixed by a rule or statute, the provision which limits the time is jurisdictional in nature. Ottens v. State, 316 Ark. 1, 871 S.W.2d 329 (1994).

Rule 3. Commencement of action.

A civil action is commenced by filing a complaint with the clerk of the proper court who shall note thereon the date and precise time of filing. However, an action shall not be deemed commenced as to any defendant not served with the complaint, in accordance with these rules, within 120 days of the date on which the complaint is filed, unless within that time and for good cause shown the court, by written order or docket entry, extends the time for service.

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; revised December 9, 2004, effective January 1, 2005.

however, be by written order of the court or by docket entry of the court. This requirement is designed to prevent any later misunderstandings as to whether such extension was granted.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 3:

1. Rule 3 follows Ark. R. Civ. P. 3 concerning the commencement of an action in an inferior court. Whether such action has been timely commenced under this rule depends upon the same standards applicable to actions in the circuit and chancery courts. As under Ark. R. Civ. P. 3, the inferior court is given considerable discretion to extend the time for service upon a showing of good cause. Such extension must,

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

The first sentence of the rule has been rewritten so that it is identical to Rule 3 of the Rules of Civil Procedure. The second sentence, which established a 60-day time limit for service, has been revised to make it consistent with Rule 4(i) of the Rules of Civil Procedure.

Rule 4. Complaint.

A complaint shall be in writing and signed by the plaintiff or his or her attorney, if any. It shall also: (a) state the names of the parties, the nature and basis of the claim, and the nature and amount of the relief sought; (b) warn the defendant to file a written answer with the clerk of the court, and to serve a copy to the plaintiff or his or her attorney, within 30 days after service of the complaint upon him; (c) warn the defendant that failure to file an answer may result in a default judgment being entered against him; (d) recite the address of the plaintiff or his or her attorney, if any; and (e) contain a proof of service form which shall be completed by the person serving the defendant. No separate summons is required.

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; revised December 9, 2004, effective January 1, 2005; amended June 2, 2011, effective July 1, 2011.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 4:

1. This rule simply requires a claimant to set forth in a brief writing the nature of his claim and the nature and amount of relief sought. It follows the intent of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 26-402 (Repl. 1962), which required only that the plaintiff file a short written statement of the facts upon which the action was founded. It is not the intent of this rule that complex pleadings be filed, but rather simple writings which are sufficient to inform a defendant of the nature and basis of the claim and the relief sought. The information required under this rule can be inserted on a printed form such as Exhibit 4-A attached to this rule.

2. The claim form must notify a defendant to file an answer or otherwise appear on a day and time certain or else a default judgment may be entered against him. The day and time to appear shall not be less than twenty days from the date of service. The court or the clerk thereof should exercise responsibility for fixing the day and time for answer or appearance and it should be far enough in advance to allow for service upon the defendant.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

The rule has been amended to require that the complaint warn the defendant that he must file a written answer within 20 days of service, with a copy to the plaintiff or his or her attorney. This change is necessary in light of the revision in Rule 6, which now requires that the answer be in writing. Previously, a defendant was permitted to appear personally in court, without filing a written answer, on the day stated in the complaint. In addition, the rule now refers to "proof of service" rather than to the "return," a change in terminology consistent with a 1997 amendment to Rule 4(g) of the Rules of Civil Procedure. Rule 4 has also been rewritten for purposes of clarity, and the accompanying form has been revised to take into account the changes made in the rule.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment:

The sentence "No separate summon is required" was added to the first paragraph and "Summons and" was added to the "Notice to Defendant" section of the form. These additions clarify that a separate summons is not required in district court. To improve administration, a space for the defendant's address was also added to the form.

The Rule and form were also amended to give defendants who are non-residents of Arkansas thirty days to answer. This change harmonizes the procedure in the civil division of District Court with the procedure in the small claims division. Part of the now-repealed Small Claims Procedure Act, Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-17-610, prescribed the longer time period for nonresident defendants to answer in the small claims division. That provision survives in District Court Rule 10(b). To establish uniform procedures between the civil and small claims divisions, Rule 4 was amended. This amendment reinstates the pre-1997 procedure for answers in the civil division. See Addition to Reporter's Note, 1997 Amendment to Inferior Court Rule 6.

Rule 5. Service of complaint.

(a) By Whom Served. A copy of the complaint shall be served upon each defendant by a sheriff or constable or any other person permitted to make service under Rule 4(c) of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure.

(b) Proof of Service. The person serving the complaint shall promptly make proof of service thereof to the clerk of the court. Proof of service shall reflect that which has been done to show compliance with these rules. Service by one other than the sheriff or constable shall state by affidavit the time, place, and manner of service.

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; revised December 9, 2004, effective January 1, 2005.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 5:

1. The claim form may be served by a sheriff, a sheriff's deputy, a constable or any other person permitted by Ark. R. Civ. P. 4 (c) to make service. Reference to the latter must be made for a determination as to the identity of those persons authorized to make service. Proof of service must be made by the effecting service on the return filed with the court clerk.

2. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 26-501 (Repl. 1962) provided for service of process by the constable although any other person authorized by law could also make service. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 26-507 (Repl. 1962) provided that service and return of process followed the procedure used in circuit court. Thus, no real changes are affected by this rule.

3. Section (b) requires any person other than a constable or sheriff who serves process to make affidavit or swear to the return. This requirement was also found in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 26-507 (Repl. 1962).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

The rule has been amended to replace the term "claim form" with the word "complaint." In addition, subdivision (b) now refers to "proof of service" rather than to "return," a change in terminology consistent with a 1997 amendment to Rule 4(g) of the Rules of Civil Procedure. The word "summons" in subdivision (b) has been replaced with "complaint."

Rule 6. Contents of answer; time for filing.

(a) Contents of Answer. An answer shall be in writing and signed by the defendant or his or her attorney, if any. It shall also state: (1) the reasons for denial of the relief sought by the plaintiff, including any affirmative defenses and the factual bases therefor; (2) any affirmative relief sought by the defendant, whether by way of counterclaim, set-off, cross-claim, or third-party claim, the factual bases for such relief, and the names and addresses of other persons needed for determination of the claim for affirmative relief; and (3) the address of the defendant or his or her attorney, if any.

(b) Time for Filing Answer or Reply. A defendant shall file an answer with the clerk of the court within thirty (30) days after the service of the complaint upon the defendant. An answer to a cross-claim and a reply to a counterclaim shall be filed with the clerk of the court within 30 days of the date that the pleading asserting the claim is served. A copy of an answer or reply shall also be served on the opposing party or parties in accordance with Rule 5(b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure.

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; revised December 9, 2004, effective January 1, 2005; amended June 2, 2011, effective July 1, 2011; amended May 24, 2012, effective July 1, 2012.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 6:

1. Under prior practice in most inferior courts of this State, a defendant simply appeared on the trial date and proceeded to trial without filing any formal answer or response. This rule recognizes and continues this practice. Where a defendant makes a timely personal appearance in court, he is deemed to have entered his appearance and generally denied plaintiff's claim. Section (a) is designed for this purpose.

2. Where, however, a defendant intends to raise some affirmative defense or seek affirmative relief, he is required under Section (b) to set forth his defenses or claims in a writing filed with the court clerk and served upon opposing counsel or party. This section is designed to afford a plaintiff notice of any affirmative defenses or claims for relief which may be asserted by the defendant. Exhibit 6-A to this rule is an example of the type of notice required of a defendant.

3. Section (c) requires reference to Ark. R. Civ. P. 12 (a) to determine the time for filing an answer or other response. This section does, however, grant authority to the court to allow a defendant who has timely appeared in person an additional fifteen days within which to file a written answer or response.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

Former subdivisions (a) and (b) have been collapsed into a single provision that requires a defendant to file a written answer. Under the previous version of the rule, a defendant could simply appear on the trial date without filing an formal answer, unless he intended to assert an affirmative defense or seek affirmative relief, in which case a written answer was necessary. In addition, subdivision (a) now specifies that the answer include information set out in the form accompanying the rule, which has also been revised slightly. Consistent with Rule 4, new subdivision (b) provides that an answer to a complaint, cross-claim or third-party claim, as well as a reply to a counterclaim, must be filed within 20 days after service. Former subdivision (c) created confusion in this regard by referencing Rule 12(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, under which a longer response time is permitted in certain situations.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment:

Rule 6(b) has been amended to give defendants who are non-residents of Arkansas thirty days to answer any complaint. This change harmonizes the procedure in the civil division of District Court with the procedure in the small claims division. Part of the now-repealed Small Claims Procedure Act, Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-17-610, prescribed the longer answer time for nonresident defendants in the small claims division. That provision survives in District Court Rule 10(b). To establish uniform procedures between the civil and small claims divisions, Rule 6(b) was amended. This amendment reinstates the pre-1997 procedure for answers in the civil division. See Addition to Reporter's Note, 1997 Amendment to Inferior Court Rule 6.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2012 Amendment:

The rule is revised to adopt the same 30-day response time for district court cross-claims and counterclaims that applies to responses to complaints, cross-claims, and counterclaims in circuit court and to responses to district court complaints.

Rule 7. Jurisdiction — Effect of counterclaim, cross-claim, or third-party claim — Transfer.

(a) Subject Matter Jurisdiction. The civil jurisdiction of district courts is set out in Administrative Order Number 18.

(b) Plaintiff's Claim Exceeds Jurisdictional Amount. If the plaintiff's claim is in an amount that exceeds the court's jurisdictional limit, the court, upon its own motion or upon motion of either party, shall dismiss the claim for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

(c) Compulsory Counterclaim or Set-off. If a compulsory counterclaim or a set-off involves an amount that would cause the court to lose jurisdiction of the case, the court, upon its own motion or upon motion of either party, shall transfer the entire case to circuit court for determination therein as if the case had been appealed.

(d) Permissive Counterclaim, Cross-Claim, or Third-Party Claim. If a permissive counterclaim, a cross-claim, or a third-party claim involves an amount that would otherwise cause the court to lose jurisdiction of the case, the court shall disregard such counterclaim, cross-claim, or third-party claim and proceed to determine the claim of the plaintiff.

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; revised December 9, 2004, effective January 1, 2005.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 7:

1. Rule 7 is designed for those situations where a counterclaim, set-off, cross-complaint or third party complaint is raised and the amount asserted therein is in excess of the court's jurisdictional limit. Where the counterclaim or set-off is compulsory as defined by Ark. R. Civ. P. 13 (a) and involves more than the jurisdictional limit, the court, upon its own motion or upon motion of any party, shall transfer the entire matter to the appropriate circuit court where it shall be tried in its entirety. Where, however, the counterclaim, set-off, cross-complaint or third party complaint is permissive and involves more than the jurisdictional limit, the court shall disregard same and proceed to try the claim of plaintiff.

Rule 8. Judgments — How entered.

(a) By Default. When a defendant has failed to file an answer or reply within the time specified by Rule 6(b) of these rules, a default judgment may be rendered against him.

(b) Upon the Merits. Where the court has decided the case, it shall enter judgment in favor of the prevailing party for the relief to which the party is deemed entitled.

(c) Docket Entry. The court shall timely enter in the docket the date and amount of the judgment, whether rendered by default or upon the merits.

(d) Judgment Lien. A judgment entered by a district court in this state shall not become a lien against any real property unless a certified copy of such judgment, showing the name of the judgment debtor, the date and amount thereof, shall be filed in the office of the circuit clerk of the county in which such land is situated.

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; revised December 9, 2004, effective January 1, 2005.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 8:

1. This rule requires that a formal record be made showing the date and amount of the judgment entered. It retains the provision of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 26-1123 (Repl. 1962) that no judgment from an inferior court could be considered a lien against real property unless such judgment was filed for record with the circuit clerk of the county in which the real property was located.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

Former subdivisions (a) and (b) have been redesignated as subdivisions (b) and (c), respectively, and have been reworded to reflect the terminology of the Rules of Civil Procedure. New subdivision (a) requires the court to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction if the plaintiff's claim exceeds the jurisdictional amount, which is presently $3,000. Previously, the court could transfer the case to circuit court in this situation. Bonnell v. Smith, 322 Ark. 141, 908 S.W.2d 74 (1995).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment:

Subsection (a) was added to provide the cross-reference to Administrative Order Number 18 and the other subsections were renumbered.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) has been amended to take into account the requirement, imposed by amended Rule 6(a), that a formal answer be filed. The previous version provided for a default judgment if the defendant did not appear in court on the trial date. The subdivision has also been revised to correct the cross-reference and to make plain that it applies to any party against whom affirmative relief has been sought.

CASE NOTES

Dismissal.

Circuit court did not err in dismissing a corporation's action against a limited liability company without prejudice under Ark. R. Civ. P. 41(b) due to the corporation's complaint for failure to obtain service because the corporation's failure to comply with Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(b) operated as an involuntary dismissal for purposes of Rule 41(b) and did not trigger the two-dismissal rule of Rule 41(b); the prior dismissal of the suit in district court was due to a lack of subject-matter jurisdiction and was not a voluntary nonsuit or a voluntary dismissal under Rule 41(a) because the corporation had no choice and no unilateral right to allow the case to proceed in district court, and the literal application of Rule 41(b) to the case would bring about a harsh and absurd result that did not serve the purpose behind the two-dismissal rule. Jonesboro Healthcare Ctr., LLC v. Eaton-Moery Envtl. Servs., 2011 Ark. 501, 385 S.W.3d 797 (2011).

Entry of Judgment.

While ARAP 4(e) establishes that a judgment is entered when it is filed with the clerk of a circuit, chancery, or probate court, the procedure is decidedly different from the manner in which a judgment is entered in inferior court [now district court] proceedings; that difference becomes quickly apparent by a review of this rule and AICR 9 [now ADCR 9]. These rules, particularly subsection (c) of this rule, reflect that an inferior court [now district court], such as the municipal court, enters any judgment it renders by entering, in a timely manner, the date and amount of the judgment in the court's docket; this specific procedure for entering judgments in an inferior court [now district court] is in marked contrast to that applicable to courts of general jurisdiction under ARAP 4(e), where judgments are entered only when they are filed with the clerk of those courts. West Apts., Inc. v. Booth, 297 Ark. 247, 760 S.W.2d 861 (1988).

A judgment is entered in municipal court by entering the date and the amount of the judgment in the court's docket. Murray v. State, 344 Ark. 7, 37 S.W.3d 641 (2001).

A judgment was properly entered when the pertinent information was written on the summons by a special judge; it was not necessary for the entry to be made in a docket book. Murray v. State, 344 Ark. 7, 37 S.W.3d 641 (2001).

Circuit court erred in dismissing defendant's appeal of the district court judgment as untimely because the appeal time began to run when the district court entered the judgment amount in the docket on August 1; an earlier docket entry on June 29 did not include the judgment amount as required by the rules, and the fact that the June 29 docket entry referenced an email from the judge that did contain the judgment amount did not change the result as that email was never entered in the docket. Java's Motorcycle Repair, LLC v. Barth, 2019 Ark. App. 584, 590 S.W.3d 225 (2019).

Timeliness.

The circuit court was correct in dismissing defendant's appeal as untimely where he failed to timely appeal from the municipal court and failed to avail himself of the provision in Rule 9(c) by filing an affidavit with the circuit court. Norman v. Swift, 69 Ark. App. 42, 9 S.W.3d 559 (2000).

Circuit court properly dismissed customers' appeal for lack of jurisdiction where, pursuant to Garland County, this rule and Ark. Dist. Ct. R. 9(a), more than thirty days had elapsed before the customers filed their appeal, which was untimely. Lewis v. Robertson, 96 Ark. App. 114, 239 S.W.3d 30 (2006).

Rule 9. Appeals to circuit court.

[Note: For appeals in criminal cases, see Rule 36 of the Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure.]

(a) Time for Taking Appeal From District Court. Within 30 days of the docket entry awarding judgment entered in accordance with Rule 8(c) of these rules, regardless of whether a written judgment is otherwise entered or filed, appeals in civil cases from district court to circuit court shall be filed with the clerk of the circuit court having jurisdiction of the appeal. The 30-day period is not extended by a motion for new trial, a motion to amend the court's findings of fact or to make additional findings, or any other motion to vacate, alter or amend the judgment.

(b) How Taken From District Court.

(1) A party may take an appeal from a district court by filing with the clerk of the circuit court having jurisdiction of the appeal (i) a certified copy of the district court's docket sheet which shows the entry awarding judgment and all prior entries or a certified copy of the record of the district court proceedings consisting of all documents and motions filed in the district court, and (ii) a certified copy of the complaint filed in the district court or, if filed in accordance with Rule 10 of these rules, a certified copy of the claim form filed in the small claims division of the district court. Neither a notice of appeal nor an order granting leave to appeal shall be required.

The appealing party shall serve upon counsel for all other parties and upon any party not represented by counsel, certified copies of the district court docket sheet or the district court record and a certified copy of the district court complaint or claim form. Service upon counsel or a party not represented by counsel shall be effected as follows:

(A) By sending the copies by any form of mail requiring a signed receipt;

(B) By delivering the copies as described in Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 5(b)(2);

(C) By sending the copies by a commercial delivery company as described in Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 5(b)(2); or

(D) If service is upon counsel, by sending the copies by electronic transmission as described in Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 5(b)(2).

If service is by mail, the signed receipt shall be attached to the certificate of service.

The following form may be used for the certificate of service:

Certificate of Service

The undersigned certifies that a true and correct copy of the certified copy of the district court docket sheet or the district court record and a certified copy of the district court complaint or claim form were served on _____ on the _____ day of _____, 2_____, by [state method of service used, examples: mail with the signed receipt attached; hand delivery; commercial delivery service].

[Signature of person making service]

Failure to serve certified copies of the district court docket sheet or district court record and a certified copy of the district court complaint or claim form shall not affect the validity of the appeal. The filing of the certified copy of the district court complaint or claim form with the clerk of the circuit court shall constitute the filing of the complaint for purposes of commencing the action in circuit court in accordance with Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 3(a).

(2) If the clerk of the district court does not prepare or certify a record for filing in the circuit court in a timely manner, a party may take an appeal by filing an affidavit in the office of the circuit clerk, within forty (40) days from the date of the entry of the judgment in the district court, showing (i) that the appealing party has requested the clerk of the district court to prepare and certify the record for purposes of appeal and (ii) that the clerk has not done so within thirty (30) days from the date of the entry of the judgment in the district court. The appealing party shall promptly serve a copy of the affidavit upon the clerk of the district court and upon the opposing attorney or party. The circuit court shall acquire jurisdiction of the appeal upon the filing of the affidavit. On motion of the appealing party, the circuit court may order the clerk of the district court to prepare, certify, and file the record in the circuit court.

(3) If service of the certified copies of the district court docket sheet or record and the complaint or claim form is not made within 120 days after filing the district court complaint or claim form with the circuit court or within the time period established by an extension granted pursuant to this subdivision, the action shall be dismissed without prejudice upon motion or upon the court's initiative. The court, upon written motion and a showing of good cause, may extend the time for service if the motion is made within 120 days of the filing with the circuit court the district court complaint or claim form or within the time period established by a previous extension. To be effective, an order granting an extension must be entered within 30 days after the motion to extend is filed, by the end of the 120-day period, or by the end of the period established by the previous extension, whichever date is later.

(c) Procedure on Appeal From District Court.

(1) All the parties shall assert all their claims and defenses in circuit court. Within 30 days after a party serves upon counsel for all other parties, and upon any party not represented by counsel, certified copies of the district court docket sheet or district court record and a certified copy of the district court complaint or claim form, the party who was the defendant in district court shall file its answer, motions, and claims within the time and manner prescribed by the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and the case shall otherwise proceed in accordance with those rules.

(2) At the time they file their complaint, answer, motions, and claims, the parties shall also file with the circuit clerk certified copies of any district court papers that they believe are material to the disputed issues in circuit court. Any party may also file certified copies of additional district court papers at any time during the proceeding as the need arises.

(3) As soon as practicable after the pleadings are closed, the circuit court shall establish a schedule for discovery, motions, and trial.

(4) Except as modified by the provisions of this rule, and except for the inapplicability of Rule of Civil Procedure 41, the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure shall govern all the circuit court proceedings on appeal of a district court judgment as if the case had been filed originally in circuit court.

(d) Supersedeas Bond on Appeal From District Court. Whenever an appellant entitled thereto desires a stay on appeal to circuit court in a civil case, he shall present to the district court for its approval a supersedeas bond which shall have such surety or sureties as the court requires. The bond shall be to the effect that appellant shall pay to appellee all costs and damages that shall be affirmed against appellant on appeal; or if appellant fails to prosecute the appeal to a final conclusion, or if such appeal shall for any cause be dismissed, that appellant shall satisfy and perform the judgment, decree, or order of the inferior court. All proceedings in the district court shall be stayed from and after the date of the court's order approving the supersedeas bond.

(e) Special Provisions For Appeals From County Court to Circuit Court. Unless otherwise provided in this subdivision, the requirements of subdivisions (a), (b), (c), and (d) govern appeals from county court to circuit court. A party may take an appeal from the final judgment of a county court by filing a notice of appeal with the clerk of the circuit court having jurisdiction over the matter within thirty (30) days from the date that the county court filed its order with the county clerk. A certified copy of the county court's final judgment must be attached to the notice of appeal. In the circuit-court proceeding, the party who was the petitioner or plaintiff in county court shall have all the obligations of the plaintiff in a case that has been appealed from district court to circuit court. If there were no defendants in the county-court proceeding, then the petitioner/plaintiff shall name all necessary, adverse parties as defendants in its complaint filed in circuit court.

(f) Administrative Appeals.

(1) If an applicable statute provides a method for filing an appeal from a final decision of any governmental body or agency and a method for preparing the record on appeal, then the statutory procedures shall apply.

(2) If no statute addresses how a party may take such an appeal or how the record shall be prepared, then the following procedures apply.

(A) Notice of Appeal. A party may appeal any final administrative decision by filing a notice of appeal with the clerk of the circuit court having jurisdiction of the matter within thirty (30) days from the date of that decision. The notice of appeal shall describe the final administrative decision being appealed and specify the date of that decision. The date of decision shall be either the date of the vote, if any, or the date that a written record of the vote is made. The party shall serve the notice of appeal on all other parties, including the governmental body or agency, by serving any person described in Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 4(d)(7), by any form of mail that requires a return receipt.

(B) The Record on Appeal. Within thirty (30) days after filing its notice of appeal, the party shall file certified copies of all the materials the party has or can obtain that document the administrative proceeding. Within thirty (30) days after these materials are filed, any opposing party may supplement the record with certified copies of any additional documents that it believes are necessary to complete the administrative record on appeal. At any time during the appeal, any party may supplement the record with a certified copy of any document from the administrative proceeding that is not in the record but the party believes the circuit court needs to resolve the appeal.

(C) Procedure on Appeal. As soon as practicable after all the parties have made their initial filing of record materials, the court shall establish a schedule for briefing, hearings, and any other matters needed to resolve the appeal.

HISTORY: Amended May 26, 1987, effective July 1, 1987; amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended January 22, 2004; revised December 9, 2004, effective January 1, 2005; amended October 9, 2008, effective January 1, 2009; amended March 13, 2014, effective July 1, 2014.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 9:

1. While Rule 9 does not change prior Arkansas law concerning the time for taking an appeal from an inferior court to circuit court, it does change prior procedures for taking an appeal. Section (b) removes the requirement found in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 26-1302 (Repl. 1962) that the appellant file an affidavit that the appeal was not taken for purposes of delay. Also abolished is the requirement found in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 26-1302(3) (Repl. 1962) that a bond be posted as a condition precedent for appeal. Since such a bond is not required for an appeal from any other court in Arkansas, it was deemed unnecessary under these rules, particularly since appeals from inferior courts are tried de novo.

2. The contents of the record need not be extensive for an appeal. As a minimum, however, the record should reflect the claim form, the written answer or response, if any, the judgment of the court and any other writings or documents filed in the inferior court or offered in evidence. As under prior Arkansas law, the appellant retains the responsibility for obtaining and filing the record with the circuit clerk.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1987 Amendment:

Rule 9(d) is amended to require that a supersedeas bond, with such surety as the court may require, be presented to the inferior court if a stay is sought pending appeal to circuit court. Under the prior rule, such a bond was posted with and approved by the circuit clerk. The rule was changed in light of the expanded jurisdiction given municipal courts under Amendment 64 to the Constitution. Amended Rule 9(d) follows closely Rule 8(c) of the Rules of Appellate Procedure.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

The second sentence of subdivision (b) has been divided into two sentences and revised to make clear that the clerk's duty to prepare and certify the record for an appeal is conditioned upon the appellant's payment of any fees authorized by law. This requirement is consistent with the notion that the responsibility for perfecting an appeal rests with the appellant, not with the clerk. See Hawkins v. City of Prairie Grove, 316 Ark. 150, 871 S.W.2d 357 (1994).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment:

The new second sentence of subdivision (a) incorporates the holding of the Court of Appeals in Barnett v. Howard, 79 Ark. App. 293, 94 S.W.3d 342 (2002). The new second sentence of subdivision (b) provides that neither a notice of appeal nor order granting an appeal is required to perfect an appeal to circuit court. The Supreme Court has made plain that all that is necessary is the timely filing of the inferior court record or an affidavit that the record is unavailable. E.g., McBride v. State, 297 Ark. 410, 762 S.W.2d 785 (1989); Ottens v. State, 316 Ark. 1, 871 S.W.2d 329 (1994). However, an express statement in Rule 9 was deemed desirable in light of reports that some clerks have demanded a notice of appeal or court order.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2008 Amendment:

The rule has been substantially rewritten to eliminate several points of confusion and difficulty.

Subdivision (a) has been amended. The rule prescribes that the thirty-day time to appeal from a district court runs from the date that the court makes a docket entry of judgment. This change conforms the rule to precedent. E.g., Lewis v. Robertson, 96 Ark. App. 114, 239 S.W.3d 30 (2006). This change also preserves the flexibility that district courts need to dispose of many cases with only a docket entry. Counsel and parties proceeding pro se must monitor the district court's docket carefully to determine when the time to appeal begins to run.

The procedure prescribed in subdivision (b) for taking an appeal has been changed. Instead of having to file a certified copy of the entire district court record, now the appealing party must file with the circuit clerk only a certified copy of the district court docket sheet. This document should show all proceedings in the district court, including the judgment appealed from. This simplification makes it easier to perfect an appeal. It eliminates the difficulty that parties often encountered in getting a complete certified record from the district court clerk within thirty days of the judgment. This change also eliminates the need for former subdivision (c), which provided an affidavit procedure when the certified district court record was unavailable and which resulted in litigation about that procedure. E.g., Nettles v. City of Little Rock, 96 Ark. App. 86, 238 S.W.3d 635 (2006). New subdivision (b) also conforms the rule to case law. In McNabb v. State, 367 Ark. 93, 238 S.W.3d 119 (2006), the supreme court held that a party satisfied former rule 9's requirement that the appealing party file "a record of the proceedings" in the district court by filing a certified district court docket sheet with the circuit clerk.

To ensure notice of the appeal to opposing parties, the appealing party must serve the docket sheet on all other parties by some form of mail that generates a signed receipt. This provision echoes the requirements of Arkansas Rule of Appellate Procedure — Civil 3(f) about serving a notice of appeal. Rule of Civil Procedure 4 does not apply and service of process is not required.

Former Rule 9 was silent about the procedure that circuit courts should follow in perfected appeals from district court. This silence led to confusion. E.g., Wright v. City of Little Rock, 366 Ark. 96, 233 S.W.3d 644 (2006). New subdivision (c) outlines the procedure in circuit court: the party who was the plaintiff in the district court must file a complaint and plead its claims again; the other parties must file their answers, motions, and claims; all the parties must file certified copies of whatever district court materials they believe are important; and then the circuit court should handle the case like any other matter pursuant to the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure.

The requirement to plead again is new. It better captures the truth that appeals from district court are appellate in form but original in fact. This new pleading requirement generated a corresponding amendment in Rule of Civil Procedure 81(b), which formerly made pleading again discretionary with the circuit court.

Under settled precedent, an appeal from a district court judgment may not be dismissed without prejudice, either by a party's voluntary nonsuit or by the circuit court. Such a dismissal leaves the district court's judgment intact and finally adjudicates the matter. Wright, supra; Watson v. White, 217 Ark. 853, 233 S.W.2d 544 (1950). With that exception, and subject to the particularized requirements of this rule, the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure apply to circuit court proceedings on appeal from a district court's judgment. To insure that all parties have notice of the claims and defenses in circuit court, and to avoid defaults, all the parties must serve their pleadings by some form of mail requiring a signed receipt.

New subdivision (e) contains some needed special provisions for appeals to circuit court from final orders of the county court. Unless subdivision (e) provides a different procedure, the provisions of subdivisions (a), (b), (c), and (d) govern appeals from county courts to circuit court. This new provision conforms Rule 9 to precedent: the district court rules govern appeals from county courts. Pike Ave. Dev. Co. v. Pulaski County, 343 Ark. 338, 37 S.W.3d 177 (2001). Under the Arkansas Constitution, the county courts have jurisdiction over a number of matters, most prominently county taxes (including those on real property) and roads. See generally David Newbern & John J. Watkins, 2 Arkansas Practice Series: Civil Practice & Procedure § 2:6 (4th ed. 2005 & Supp. 2007). Former Rule 9 was written solely in terms of appeals from district court, and its requirements did not fit appeals from county courts well. The revised provisions of Rule 9 (a)-(d) are a better fit, but some special provisions for appeals in county-court cases are nonetheless needed.

The procedures used in county courts vary. Some, for example, do not maintain a docket sheet for each matter. All final orders of county courts, however, are filed with the county clerk. New subdivision (e) ties the time for taking an appeal from a county court, and the method of perfecting that appeal, to the filing of the county court's final order. A party seeking to appeal must file a notice of appeal with the appropriate circuit clerk within thirty days of the date that the county court enters its final order. The notice should describe the order being appealed from and must attach a certified copy of that order. The timely filing of this notice is jurisdictional, as was the timely filing of a certified record or affidavit of unavailability under the former rule. Pike Ave., supra. Some cases in county court involve petitioners and respondents, rather than plaintiffs and defendants, and some have no adverse party named. New subdivision (e) addresses these issues by making the party who sought relief in the county court the plaintiff in any appeal to circuit court and obligates that party to open the pleadings with a complaint naming all necessary, adverse parties as defendants. Whether a party is necessary should be determined by reference to Rule of Civil Procedure 19 and the cases interpreting it. Absent a specific and contrary provision in subdivision (e), all the provisions of subdivisions (a), (b), (c), and (d) apply to appeals from county court to circuit court.

Subdivision (f) is new. Rule 9 has long governed appeals from decisions by certain governmental bodies, such as zoning boards and city councils, to circuit court. See generally Newbern & Watkins, supra § 2:4. The fit between the provisions of the rule and these administrative appeals, however, was imprecise. This resulted in problems for litigants in perfecting their appeals. E.g., Bd. of Zoning Adjustment of City of Little Rock v. Cheek, 328 Ark. 18, 942 S.W.2d 821 (1997); Franks v. Mountain View, 99 Ark. App. 205, — S.W. 3d — (2007). The provisions of new subdivision (f) are tailored for administrative appeals.

Paragraph (f)(1) is a default provision: if a statute prescribes the method for filing an appeal or preparing the record on appeal, or both, then the statutory procedures apply. Paragraph (f)(2) and its subparts describe the governing procedures if no applicable statutory procedure exists. A party perfects its appeal under new paragraph (f)(2)(A) by filing a timely notice of appeal with the circuit court. The notice should describe the administrative decision being appealed and the date of that decision. The thirty-day window in which to file the notice is standard. Ark. R. App. P. — Civil 4(a). In cases involving administrative action, uncertainty sometimes arose about the exact date of the decision: was it, for example, when a vote was taken or when the minutes reflecting a vote were approved? Cf. Cheek, supra. The revised rule eliminates this uncertainty by allowing either the date of any vote, or the date of a writing embodying the decision (e.g., a letter determination or approved minutes), to be the date of decision. This provision is intended to loosen the governing standard so that parties do not lose their rights to seek judicial review of an administrative decision based on a hyper-technical concern about precisely when the government body made its decision. This new provision ensures that all parties will be informed about the appeal by mandating service of the notice of appeal by any form of mail that requires a return receipt. The certificate of service on the notice should show compliance with this requirement.

New provision (f)(2)(B) creates a new and less rigid procedure for getting the administrative record to the circuit court. The former rule's problematic requirement linking the filing of the record to perfecting the appeal has been eliminated. The record-keeping practices of local administrative bodies vary widely, but this variance should not handicap litigants. Getting any needed administrative record materials to the circuit court is a housekeeping matter, not a jurisdictional requirement. The revised rule instructs all the parties to take turns filing certified copies of whatever materials they possess or can obtain that document the administrative proceedings. And the parties may supplement the record at any time during the circuit court proceeding if important documents from the administrative process become available.

New provision (f)(2)(C) clarifies that, once the parties have made their initial record filings, the circuit court should enter an order scheduling whatever proceedings are needed — discovery, briefing, or hearings — to resolve the case.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2014 Amendment:

The amendment addresses several problems that have arisen in practice under District Court Rule 9. The rule prescribed that an appeal was taken from the district court by filing with the circuit clerk “a certified copy of the district court’s docket sheet,” rather than the district court record as had been required prior to a 2008 amendment of the rule. In Johnson v. Dawson, 2010 Ark. 308, 365 S.W.3d 913, the appellant did not file the docket sheet but filed all of the actual documents in the case, in effect, the district court record. Since the appellant had not complied with the Rule 9(b) requirement that the docket sheet be filed, the Arkansas Supreme Court held that the circuit court did not have jurisdiction and upheld dismissal of the case. The amended rule allows perfecting the appeal either by filing a certified copy of the docket sheet or by filing a certified copy of the district court record (See Johnson v. Dawson, 2010 Ark. 308, 365 S.W.3d 913 (Brown, J., concurring) (suggesting that revision of the rule to allow appeal by filing either the docket sheet or the record would eliminate the harsh result of the case.) 2010 Ark. 308, 365 S.W.3d 913).

District Court Rule 9 also required that, on appeal from district court, the plaintiff “shall file a complaint and plead all its claims in circuit court.” However, the rule was silent on what happened if the plaintiff failed to plead again by filing a complaint in circuit court. If the defendant appealed and the plaintiff failed to file a complaint in circuit court, the lack of procedural guidance from the rule could leave the circuit court with the undesirable choice of either dismissing the plaintiff’s case and awarding judgment to the defendant due to the failure of the plaintiff to follow the dictates of the rule or allowing the case to proceed despite lack of compliance with the rule’s re-pleading requirement. A survey of circuit court practices in regard to the repleading requirement found no uniform approach in dealing with the re-pleading issue. To a limited extent, the 2013 decision of Circle D Contractors, Inc. v. Bartlett ameliorated the repleading dilemma by holding that “[t]he requirement that a plaintiff refile its complaint in circuit court is not jurisdictional; it is procedural, thus only substantial compliance is required.” 2013 Ark. 131, at 3.

The amendment addresses the re-pleading problem by requiring that, on appeal by either party, a certified copy of the district court complaint or claim form must be filed with the circuit court clerk in addition to a certified copy of the district court docket sheet or the district court record. The amendment also provides that the filing in circuit court of the certified copy of the district court complaint or claim form constitutes the filing of the complaint for purposes of commencing the action in circuit court in accordance with the requirements of Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 3(a). After filing the certified copy of the district court complaint or the claim form, the case then proceeds in circuit court as prescribed by the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure with defendant filing its answer, motions, and claims within the time and manner prescribed by the rules and the plaintiff filing an amended complaint, if desired. This approach to resolving the re-pleading issue reinforces the view expressed in the 2008 Addition to Reporter’s Notes that “appeals from district court are appellate in form but original in fact.”

Although District Court Rule 9 required service of the appeal documents on all parties, the only method of service prescribed by the rule was by “any form of mail which requires a signed receipt.” This single method of service made processing the appeal dependent on the person to be served signing the receipt for the mail. The revised rule provides several other methods of service in addition to service by signed return receipt mail. In addition, the rule provides that failure to serve the appeal documents does not affect the validity of the appeal.

District Court Rule 9 previously did not prescribe a time limit for service of the appeal documents (under the revised rule the appeal documents are certified copies of the district court docket sheet or district court record and a certified copy of the district court complaint or claim form). Subsection (b)(3) of the revised rule borrows the Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 4(i) 120-day time limit for service of summons as the time limit for service of the appeal documents. As with Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i), the time limit may be extended upon motion and a showing of good cause made within 120 days of filing the suit or within the time period established by a previous extension.

The revision to District Court Rule 9 also addresses an issue that arose in the 2013 Court of Appeals decision of Kankey v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 68. In that case, within the time required for filing the record the appellant lodged what purported to be the complete, original district court record with the circuit court. However, the district-court record had not been certified when it was filed with the circuit court, although the district clerk later belatedly certified the record. The rule made no provision for belated preparation or certification of the district court record. The revised rule provides that if the clerk of the district court, after request, does not timely prepare or certify the record, a party may take an appeal by filing an affidavit with the circuit clerk within 40 days of the judgment showing that the appealing party requested preparation and certification of the record and that the clerk failed to do so within 30 days of the entry of the district court judgment. The filing of the affidavit gives the circuit court jurisdiction of the appeal and the circuit court may then order the clerk of the district court to prepare, certify, and file the record in circuit court. The revision is based on similar procedure under Arkansas Rule of Criminal Procedure 36(d).

Several other minor changes to District Court Rule 9 are not substantive and are made to enhance the clarity of the rule and to delete rule language that the 2013 amendments rendered redundant, unnecessary, or confusing.

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

This rule mandating an appeal within thirty days of judgment in civil cases, is also the appropriate procedure for criminal appeals. Bocksnick v. City of London, 308 Ark. 599, 825 S.W.2d 267 (1992).

This rule applies to criminal appeals as well as civil case appeals. Allred v. State, 310 Ark. 476, 837 S.W.2d 469 (1992); Laxton v. State, 49 Ark. App. 148, 899 S.W.2d 479 (1995).

The timely filing of an appeal from municipal court is controlled by this rule, rather than § 16-17-213. Hawkins v. City of Prairie Grove, 316 Ark. 150, 871 S.W.2d 357 (1994).

Although this rule only applies explicitly to appeals in civil cases, the Arkansas Supreme Court has held that the rule also governs appeals from municipal court to circuit court in criminal cases; these cases also hold that the thirty-day period for filing the record is jurisdictional and that this issue may be raised for the first time on appeal. Jones v. City of Flippin, 47 Ark. App. 102, 886 S.W.2d 875 (1994).

Landowners' time for filing their appeal to the circuit court was governed by this rule; even assuming that the 60-day provision of § 27-66-403(b) applied, the manner or procedure for perfecting the appeal would still be controlled by this rule, and not only did the landowners fail to file their notice of appeal in a timely manner, but the filing of the notice of appeal alone was ineffective to perfect the appeal. Barnett v. Howard, 353 Ark. 756, 120 S.W.3d 564 (2003).

Where police chief appealed from a decision of the civil service commission terminating the chief for cause, the Arkansas Supreme Court held that, once the requirements of § 14-51-308(e)(1)(B) were met, an appeal from a decision of the civil service commission to the circuit court should proceed in accordance with the rules of the Arkansas Supreme Court, specifically, this rule, governing an appeal from inferior courts. Clark v. Pine Bluff Civ. Serv. Comm'n, 353 Ark. 810, 120 S.W.3d 541 (2003).

Landowner's complaint filed in circuit court was not an appeal of final action taken by the City Council, but was, instead, a complaint against the mayor based on his alleged failure to comply with a mandatory duty; therefore, § 14-56-425 did not apply, and the landowner was not required to comply with the directives of this rule, and the circuit court had subject-matter jurisdiction of his claims. Brock v. Townsell, 2009 Ark. 224, 309 S.W.3d 179 (2009).

Subsection (e) of this rule applies in situations where a county court does not maintain a docket sheet. Pack v. Clark, 2010 Ark. App. 756, 379 S.W.3d 676 (2010).

Pursuant to Supreme Court Administrative Order No. 18(6)(c), a final order of protection signed by a district court judge could be appealed directly to the Court of Appeals, and the appeal procedures embodied in this rule did not apply; the 22nd Judicial District of Arkansas Administration Case Allocation plan provided that the Saline County District Courts have all authority permitted under Administrative Order No. 18 and that the Bryant division shall hear all final orders of protection cases. Smith v. Murphy, 2017 Ark. App. 188, 517 S.W.3d 453 (2017).

Class action was not subject to dismissal for lack of jurisdiction because appeal to circuit court under subsection (f) of this rule was not required since a municipal health benefit fund was not a governmental body or an agency; because the fund was not a governmental or municipal body or an agency but held itself out as a trust, the rule was inapplicable. Mun. Health Ben. Fund v. Hendrix, 2020 Ark. 235, 602 S.W.3d 101 (2020).

Construction.

This rule is mandatory and jurisdictional and leaves the circuit court without authority to accept untimely appeals. Hawkins v. City of Prairie Grove, 316 Ark. 150, 871 S.W.2d 357 (1994); J&M Mobile Homes, Inc. v. Hampton, 347 Ark. 126, 60 S.W.3d 481 (2001).

The 30-day requirement for filing under the rule is mandatory and jurisdictional, and the circuit court has no authority to accept untimely appeals. State v. Dawson, 343 Ark. 683, 38 S.W.3d 319 (2001).

Because subsection (e) of this rule does not address service of notice, it is not in conflict with subsection (b) and its requirement that an appellant serve notice of the appeal upon counsel for all other parties. Howard v. Ark. Cama Tech., 2012 Ark. App. 567 (2012).

Default Judgments.

Denial of a motion to set aside a default judgment is an appealable order, and there is no reason to deny such appeals from municipal to circuit courts. Marcinkowski v. Affirmative Risk Mgt. Corp., 322 Ark. 580, 910 S.W.2d 679 (1995).

Debtor's appeal to the circuit court from a magistrate's order denying her motion to set aside a default judgment was timely because it was made well within 30 days of the date of the denial of her motion to set aside as required by subsection (a) of this rule, although the default judgment had been entered over a year earlier. There was no time limit for seeking relief from default under Ark. R. Civ. P. 55(c). Gurien v. Access Credit Mgmt., 2011 Ark. App. 711 (2011).

Docket Entry.

Circuit court erred in dismissing defendant's appeal of the district court judgment as untimely because the appeal time began to run when the district court entered the judgment amount in the docket on August 1; an earlier docket entry on June 29 did not include the judgment amount as required by the rules, and the fact that the June 29 docket entry referenced an email from the judge that did contain the judgment amount did not change the result as that email was never entered in the docket. Java's Motorcycle Repair, LLC v. Barth, 2019 Ark. App. 584, 590 S.W.3d 225 (2019).

Duty of Counsel.

It is the duty of counsel, not the judge, clerk, or reporter, to perfect the appeal. Edwards v. City of Conway, 300 Ark. 135, 777 S.W.2d 583 (1989).

The duty to perfect an appeal rests upon the counsel of the appealing party. Ottens v. State, 316 Ark. 1, 871 S.W.2d 329 (1994).

Entry of Judgment.

The language of subsection (a) of this rule, providing for appeal to circuit court, is similar to Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(e), which provides that time for appeal runs from the date of filing. West Apts., Inc. v. Booth, 297 Ark. 247, 760 S.W.2d 861 (1988).

While Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(e) establishes that a judgment is entered when it is filed with the clerk of a circuit, chancery, or probate court, the procedure is decidedly different from the manner in which a judgment is entered in inferior court proceedings; that difference becomes quickly apparent by a review of AICR 8 [now ADCR 8] and this rule. These rules, particularly AICR 8(c), reflect that an inferior court [now district court], such as the municipal court, enters any judgment it renders by entering, in a timely manner, the date and amount of the judgment in the court's docket; this specific procedure for entering judgments in an inferior court [now district court] is in marked contrast to that applicable to courts of general jurisdiction under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(e), where judgments are entered only when they are filed with the clerk of those courts. West Apts., Inc. v. Booth, 297 Ark. 247, 760 S.W.2d 861 (1988).

Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies.

Circuit court erred by dismissing a property owner's constitutional, civil rights, and trespass claims solely on the basis of its failure to exhaust administrative remedies; while it could have been appropriate for the circuit court to first rule on the owner's administrative appeal before proceeding to the additional claims, the circuit court denied without explanation the owner's motion to reinstate those claims once the appeal under this rule had been decided. Convent Corp. v. City of North Little Rock, 2021 Ark. 7, 615 S.W.3d 706 (2021).

Jurisdiction.

When the time for filing an appeal is fixed by a rule or statute, the provision which limits the time is jurisdictional in nature. Ottens v. State, 316 Ark. 1, 871 S.W.2d 329 (1994).

In landowner's challenge to a decision by the board of zoning adjustment that he had abandoned a nonconforming use of the property, the circuit court never had jurisdiction where the landowner failed to perfect his appeal in the time and manner provided by this rule. Board of Zoning Adjustment v. Cheek, 328 Ark. 18, 942 S.W.2d 821 (1997).

When property owners and builder requested a writ of mandamus in circuit court, challenging a city's stop-work order on a building permit, the circuit court lacked jurisdiction as the builder and property owners prematurely circumvented the appellate process by filing a writ of mandamus prior to the board of zoning adjustment reaching a final decision on the matter. Douglas v. City of Cabot, 347 Ark. 1, 59 S.W.3d 430 (2001).

Failure to comply strictly with the rule precluded the circuit court from having jurisdiction over the appeal; filing of certified copy of the transcript of the lower proceedings had been within 30 days. J&M Mobile Homes, Inc. v. Hampton, 347 Ark. 126, 60 S.W.3d 481 (2001).

Homeowners association's appeal from the trial court's dismissal of its appeal of a planning commission's decision was dismissed; the trial court lacked jurisdiction over the appeal as the association failed to file certified minutes of the commission's hearing or an affidavit showing that it had requested certification of the record. Pierce Addition Homeowners Ass'n v. City of Vilonia Planning Comm'n, 76 Ark. App. 393, 65 S.W.3d 485 (2002).

Because this rule did not apply to the property owner's cause of action for deprivation of property against individual appellees, the trial court had jurisdiction to hear those claims and the judgment on the pleadings as to those claims involving the councilman, mayor, and former mayor were reversed and remanded to the trial court. Ingram v. City of Pine Bluff, 355 Ark. 129, 133 S.W.3d 382 (2003).

Judgment notwithstanding the verdict was appropriately granted to a city because a property owner failed to exhaust available administrative remedies or otherwise comply with this rule where the owner failed to appeal from a stop-work order before filing a declaratory judgment action seeking to invalidate a condemnation resolution and, therefore, the circuit court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction. Talley v. City of N. Little Rock, 2009 Ark. 601, 381 S.W.3d 753 (2009).

Once the requirements of § 14-51-308(e)(1)(B) have been met, an appeal from a decision of the civil service commission to circuit court should proceed in accordance with the rules of the court governing an appeal from inferior courts; thus, a party appealing a decision of the civil service commission has, pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule, thirty days from the entry of the commission's written decision to file a record with the circuit court. Barrows v. City of Fort Smith, 2010 Ark. 73, 360 S.W.3d 117 (2010).

Because § 14-51-308 and this rule are so interconnected concerning the procedural requirements for perfecting an appeal from a civil-service-commission decision to Arkansas circuit courts, the statutory filing requirements with respect to the commission are jurisdictional, as is true for Rule 9's filing requirements with respect to the circuit court. Accordingly, as is true for Rule 9's requirements, strict compliance with the statutory requirements is also necessary, and substantial compliance will not suffice. Bales v. City of Fort Smith, 2017 Ark. App. 443, 528 S.W.3d 845 (2017).

Circuit court erred in affirming a county assessor's denial of a tax exemption under Ark. Const., Art. 16, § 5, for three land parcels owned by a city and its airport (jointly, the airport) because a government entity's ownership of unleased property while it pursued a private lease could constitute an exclusive public purpose, the unrefuted evidence showed that the airport utilized the properties in a manner that served an exclusive public purpose during the unleased periods, and the county assessor's failure to file an answer and comply with subsection (c) of this rule was a procedural error, not a jurisdictional one, that did not deprive the circuit court of jurisdiction. City of Little Rock v. Ward, 2020 Ark. 399, 611 S.W.3d 471 (2020).

Mootness.

Justiciable controversy remained regarding certain of the property owner's claims, and the owner's failure-to-exhaust argument was not moot, because the circuit court never considered the merits of the remaining claims that were dismissed for failure to exhaust, with the exception of the facial due process claim, nor did the record reflect that the owner voluntarily dismissed or otherwise abandoned them. Convent Corp. v. City of North Little Rock, 2021 Ark. 7, 615 S.W.3d 706 (2021).

Mootness.

Supreme Court declined to address the merits of a property owner's administrative appeal and dismissed it as moot because the structure at issue had already been razed by a city, and the city withdrew its attempt to enforce payment of any penalties associated with the condemnation order; neither of the exceptions to mootness applied because the condemnation decision related only to the condition of the specific property at issue and was not likely to recur. Convent Corp. v. City of North Little Rock, 2021 Ark. 7, 615 S.W.3d 706 (2021).

Not Good Cause.

A lack of knowledge of the rules in itself does not constitute good cause for failure to file a timely notice of appeal. Citing Garner v. State, 293 Ark. 309, 737 S.W.2d 637 (1987). Norman v. Swift, 69 Ark. App. 42, 9 S.W.3d 559 (2000).

Perfection of Appeal.

The defendant's appeal from municipal court was perfected on the date that she filed an affidavit that stated that the municipal court clerk refused to certify and prepare the record for her appeal, rather than on the date that she posted an appeal bond. Worley v. State, 71 Ark. App. 80, 26 S.W.3d 142 (2000).

Where defendant filed, in the circuit court, the record of the municipal court proceedings regarding her conviction for driving while intoxicated within 30 days of the entry of judgment, she was not required to file a notice of appeal to perfect her appeal to circuit court. Crump v. Ford, 346 Ark. 156, 55 S.W.3d 295 (2001).

Appellant had to either actually lodge the record in the circuit court, or file an affidavit with the circuit court clerk stating that he requested the inferior court clerk [now district court clerk] to prepare the record and the clerk neglected to prepare and certify that record for purposes of appeal. J&M Mobile Homes, Inc. v. Hampton, 347 Ark. 126, 60 S.W.3d 481 (2001).

Even assuming that § 27-66-403(b) applied and appellants had 60-days to appeal the county court order denying their petition to establish a private road, this rule would still control the procedure for perfecting the appeal; because the filing of the notice of appeal alone was ineffective to perfect the appeal and appellants did not timely file the record, the appeal was properly dismissed. Barnett v. Howard, 79

Ark. App. 293, 94 S.W.3d 342 (2002), aff'd, 353 Ark. 756, 120 S.W.3d 564 (2003).

Even assuming, without deciding that § 14-51-308(e)(1)(B) was applicable to the terminated police chief, the chief would have had 30 days from the entry of the civil service commission's written decision to file a record with the circuit court or to file an affidavit showing that he had requested a record from the commission pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule, the circuit court was correct in its finding that the chief's failure to comply with the filing requirements of this rule required the dismissal of the case. Clark v. Pine Bluff Civ. Serv. Comm'n, 353 Ark. 810, 120 S.W.3d 541 (2003).

Dismissal of landowner's appeal was proper as the landowner did not perfect his appeal by filing it with a certified record of the city council proceedings that constituted the final decision under § 14-56-425, as required by this rule. Combs v. City of Springdale, 366 Ark. 31, 233 S.W.3d 130 (2006).

Property owners' appeal of the denial of non-conforming use status was improperly dismissed because their appeal was perfected under this rule and § 14-56-425 by the timely filing of the record in circuit court; Ark. R. Civ. P. 4 did not apply because there was no requirement of service of summons and complaint for the appeal and, to the extent that Weiss v. Johnson, 331 Ark. 409, 961 S.W. 2d 28 (1998), was inconsistent, it was overruled. Wright v. City of Little Rock, 366 Ark. 96, 233 S.W.3d 644 (2006).

Dismissal of the Arkansas Game and Fish Commission's (AGFC) appeal from a county judge's declaration of a public easement of public land next to the landowner's property was improper as a certified copy of the record was filed in the office of the circuit court in timely fashion, a file stamp was not essential for a "filing," and the requirements of subsection (b) of this rule were met. Ark. Game & Fish Comm'n v. Eddings, 2009 Ark. 359, 324 S.W.3d 328 (2009).

Appeal from the county court was properly dismissed for lack of jurisdiction because appellants had failed to strictly comply with this rule when they failed to serve notice of their appeal on counsel for the opposing parties; appellants had instead sent notice of their appeal to the parties directly. Howard v. Ark. Cama Tech., 2012 Ark. App. 567 (2012).

In a case relating to the seizure of animals, an appellate court lacked jurisdiction because a motion to reconsider or for a new trial was filed more than 10 days after the dismissal of a case; therefore, it did not extend the time for filing a notice of appeal, which should have been filed within 30 days of the entry of the trial court's order. Even if the notice of appeal had been timely filed, the appellate court still lacked jurisdiction because an appeal from a district court to a circuit court was not properly per-fectured; a certified copy of the docket sheet or the record was not filed with the circuit court within 30 days from the date of the docket entry awarding judgment. Kankey v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 68 (2013).

Subdivision (b) of this rule places a duty upon the party that is appealing to do two things: obtain a certified copy of the docket sheet and file it in the circuit court. Taylor v. Biba, 2014 Ark. 22 (2014).

Circuit court erred in granting a motion to dismiss an appeal for lack of jurisdiction where the record demonstrated that appellant had filed a certified copy of the docket sheet, and thus, appellant had strictly complied with subdivision (b) of this rule. Taylor v. Biba, 2014 Ark. 22 (2014).

Circuit court never acquired jurisdiction over a dog possessor's appeal from a district court order to turn the dog over to owners because the possessor did not strictly comply with subdivision (b)(1) or (b)(2) of this rule when she filed an affidavit with the circuit clerk and a certified copy of the district court's docket sheet, as (1) subdivision (b)(2) of this rule required the filing of a certified copy of the record, not a certified copy of the docket sheet, (2) the possessor did not give the clerk 30 days in which to prepare and certify the record, (3) the possessor did not comply with subdivision (b)(1) by filing a certified copy of the complaint, and (4) the docket sheet the possessor filed only reflected the judgment without any prior entries. Sikora v. Bogard, 2016 Ark. App. 619 (2016).

Because incorporators failed to perfect their appeal by filing a complaint in the circuit court, the circuit court never acquired jurisdiction over their appeal from the county court, and their appeal to the Court of Appeals from the circuit court's order dismissing their appeal from the county court was dismissed; under this rule, the incorporators had to file in the circuit court both a notice of appeal with an attached certified copy of the county court's judgment, which they did, and a complaint. Incorporators of the Cmty. Known as Little Italy v. Pulaski Cty., 2018 Ark. App. 566, 566 S.W.3d 505 (2018).

Compliance with this rule must be strict; substantial compliance will not suffice. Incorporators of the Cmty. Known as Little Italy v. Pulaski Cty., 2018 Ark. App. 566, 566 S.W.3d 505 (2018).

Record of Proceedings.

The necessary record in an appeal from a denial of a motion to suppress evidence and a misdemeanor conviction in municipal court would have included the information, the motion, and the judgment of the municipal court. Smith v. State, 316 Ark. 32, 870 S.W.2d 716 (1994).

Under this rule, the appellant has the burden of requesting the clerk to prepare and certify the record of the inferior court [now district court] proceedings, and is also charged with the responsibility of filing such record in the office of the circuit clerk; alternatively, the appellant must file an affidavit in the office of the circuit clerk showing that he has requested the clerk of the inferior court [now district court] to prepare and certify the record for purposes of appeal and that the clerk has neglected to prepare and certify such record for purposes of appeal. Pace v. Castleberry, 68 Ark. App. 342, 7 S.W.3d 347 (1999).

An appeal bond signed by the municipal judge and filed by the appellant was not sufficient to perfect the appellant's municipal appeal, even if the appeal bond contained the same information as the transcript, since an appeal bond cannot serve as a replacement of the record. Baldwin v. State, 74 Ark. App. 69, 45 S.W.3d 412 (2001).

District court's docket sheet was sufficient to satisfy a "record of proceedings" as the docket sheet included the violation defendant was charged with, the dates of the violation and arrest, defendant's plea, and the disposition of the case, and the docket sheet was obtained from the district court clerk in compliance with subsection (b) of this rule; thus, the circuit court erred in finding it was without jurisdiction due to the untimeliness of the appeal as it was undisputed that defendant timely filed the certified docket sheet within 30 days of the date of judgment. McNabb v. State, 367 Ark. 93, 238 S.W.3d 119 (2006).

Substantial Compliance.

The filing of an affidavit and appeal bond within the 30 days after a judgment in municipal court does not constitute substantial compliance with the requirements for taking an appeal from municipal court to circuit court. Bass v. State, 9 Ark. App. 211, 657 S.W.2d 218 (1983).

A notice of appeal is not necessary to perfect an appeal from municipal court to circuit court. As long as the record of the inferior court [now district court] proceeding is filed with the circuit clerk within 30 days of the entry of the judgment, the appeal is perfected. McBride v. State, 297 Ark. 410, 762 S.W.2d 785 (1989).

Filing a notice of appeal within thirty (30) days of the conviction does not suffice to perfect an appeal; the appealing party must file the record of the inferior court [now district court] proceeding within thirty (30) days in order to bring an appeal. Ottens v. State, 316 Ark. 1, 871 S.W.2d 329 (1994).

Trial court had jurisdiction to hear landowners' appeal as their affidavit was sufficient to comply with this rule where the substance of the affidavit and the clerk's response made clear that the record was not available to the landowners on July 7 and would not be available until after it was transcribed and approved by the city board of directors. Nettles v. City of Little Rock, 96 Ark. App. 86, 238 S.W.3d 635 (2006).

This rule mandated the filing of a certified copy of a docket sheet in order to perfect an appeal to the circuit court. Since an appeal transcript was filed instead of a docket sheet, the appeal was dismissed because compliance was strict; substantial compliance would not suffice as this rule's provisions were mandatory and jurisdictional. Johnson v. Dawson, 2010 Ark. 308, 365 S.W.3d 913 (2010).

Circuit court erred in dismissing an appeal of an order directing the placement of a roadway over appellants' property because by filing their complaint and attaching to it a certified copy of a county court's final order, appellants complied with subsection (e) of this rule; the fact that other certified documents were also attached was of no consequence. Pack v. Clark, 2010 Ark. App. 756, 379 S.W.3d 676 (2010).

Although a local utility customer failed to file a notice of appeal to the circuit court as required under this rule, which applied to an appeal from the municipal utility's decision, but instead filed a complaint alleging that it was seeking judicial review of a final administrative order, the complaint properly described the final administrative decision and specified the date of that decision as required. Mt. Pure, LLC v. Little Rock Wastewater Util., 2011 Ark. 258, 383 S.W.3d 347 (2011).

Strict compliance with all parts of the former version of subdivision (b) of this rule, including the provisions that specify the manner in which the docket sheet must be served on the opposing party, was required before a circuit court could acquire jurisdiction over an appeal from district court. Motor Cars of Nashville, Inc. v. Chronister, 2014 Ark. App. 430, 439 S.W.3d 101 (2014).

Circuit court did not err in granting a bidder's motion to dismiss the car seller's appeal for lack of jurisdiction where it was undisputed that the seller failed to serve a certified copy of the docket sheet on the bidder's attorney by any form of mail that required a signed receipt, and thus, the seller failed to strictly comply with the requirements of the former version of subdivision (b) of this rule and failed to perfect its appeal. Motor Cars of Nashville, Inc. v. Chronister, 2014 Ark. App. 430, 439 S.W.3d 101 (2014).

Supersession of Section.

Section 16-96-505, which places the responsibility for filing the transcript for inferior court [now district court] appeals on the court itself, has been superseded by this rule. Bocksnick v. City of London, 308 Ark. 599, 825 S.W.2d 267 (1992); Ottens v. State, 316 Ark. 1, 871 S.W.2d 329 (1994).

Section 16-17-213 has been superseded by this rule. Hawkins v. City of Prairie Grove, 316 Ark. 150, 871 S.W.2d 357 (1994).

There is no perceivable public policy reason for the General Assembly to provide a six-month period to appeal from a county court order involving a property assessment adjustment and, therefore, Inferior Court Rule 9 [now District Court Rule 9] governs such an appeal and supersedes all portions of § 16-67-201 to the contrary. Pike Ave. Dev. Co. v. Pulaski County, 343 Ark. 338, 37 S.W.3d 177 (2001).

Timeliness.

The fact that a plea of guilty was entered in municipal court does not prevent an appellant from perfecting an appeal to circuit court. However, where the appellant's notice of appeal and transcript were both filed over six months after the date of the municipal court judgment, the appellant failed to timely file his notice of appeal. Bass v. State, 9 Ark. App. 211, 657 S.W.2d 218 (1983).

Where judgment against defendant was entered by the municipal judge by docket entry, and no appeal was perfected within 30 days, there was no jurisdiction in the circuit court to hear an appeal as it was untimely, and thus there was no jurisdiction to grant a "new trial," and a hearing on that motion would have been superfluous. Allred v. State, 310 Ark. 476, 837 S.W.2d 469 (1992).

Where defendant convicted of a misdemeanor in municipal court filed a motion to proceed as a pauper in circuit court, former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.22 did not stay the time for appeal pursuant to this rule, since the motion to proceed as a pauper in circuit court was not one of the specified post-trial motions, and it was not pending in the trial court. Smith v. State, 316 Ark. 32, 870 S.W.2d 716 (1994).

Under this rule, a party has 30 days from entry of judgment to file an appeal; where defendant delayed five months before filing its motion for appeal with the circuit court, the circuit court was without jurisdiction or authority to accept defendant's untimely appeal from the judgment. McCourt Mfg. Co. v. Credit Bureau, 319 Ark. 23, 888 S.W.2d 650 (1994).

A late filing in circuit court thwarts the right to a jury trial. Subsection (a) of this rule is mandatory and jurisdictional. Lineberry v. State, 322 Ark. 84, 907 S.W.2d 705 (1995).

A notice of appeal is not required in an appeal from municipal court to circuit court; filing such a notice of appeal within 30 days of the municipal court conviction is not sufficient to comply with this rule. Laxton v. State, 49 Ark. App. 148, 899 S.W.2d 479 (1995).

Defendant's notice of appeal from a conviction for second-degree battery was timely filed on July 31, 1995, where judgment was entered June 29, 1995; the day of entry of judgment was not counted, making the 30th day fall on a Saturday, thereby allowing the defendant to file the notice the following Monday, July 31. Kersh v. State, 56 Ark. App. 39, 938 S.W.2d 569 (1997).

The circuit court lacked jurisdiction where the appellant failed to file his notice of appeal from the municipal court within 30 days of judgment. Barnett v. City of Dardanelle, 56 Ark. App. 131, 938 S.W.2d 572 (1997).

The circuit court was correct in dismissing defendant's appeal as untimely where he failed to timely appeal from the municipal court and failed to avail himself of the provision in subsection (c) of this rule by filing an affidavit with the circuit court. Norman v. Swift, 69 Ark. App. 42, 9 S.W.3d 559 (2000).

The appellant failed to comply with the rule where neither the record nor a proper affidavit was filed within the 30-day period, notwithstanding the contention that the appellant's president included a prayer for an appeal in his affidavit and complaint which were timely filed and that it could later amend the affidavit to correct it. Pike Ave. Dev. Co. v. Pulaski County, 343 Ark. 338, 37 S.W.3d 177 (2001).

Circuit court correctly granted the motion on the pleadings as to the property owner's counts against the city and planning commission where the owner's appeal, filed two years after the city's decision, was well outside the 30-day requirement and was thus untimely because the counts had nothing to do with action by the city council and the circuit court did not have subject matter jurisdiction. Ingram v. City of Pine Bluff, 355 Ark. 129, 133 S.W.3d 382 (2003).

Although circuit court erred in finding that the law of the case doctrine kept it from considering an appeal from the denial of a Ark. R. Civ. P. 60 motion in a road dispute, the error was harmless; there was no basis for relief under Rule 60(c)(4) because the alleged fraud was not caused by an adverse party. Barnett v. Howard, 363 Ark. 140, 211 S.W.3d 494 (2005).

In appellants' action to establish a road that would allow a reasonable means of access to their land, the trial court erred in refusing to entertain an appeal from a county court's denial of appellants' Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(c)(4) motion; as appellants complied with this rule within 30 days from the entry of the county court's order, the trial court had jurisdiction to conduct a de novo review. Barnett v. Howard, 363 Ark. 140, 211 S.W.3d 494 (2005).

Circuit court properly dismissed customers' appeal for lack of jurisdiction where, pursuant to Garland County, Ark., Dist. Ct. R. 8 and subsection (a) of this rule, more than thirty days had elapsed before the customers filed their appeal, which was untimely. Lewis v. Robertson, 96 Ark. App. 114, 239 S.W.3d 30 (2006).

Where the city council permitted a landowner to make curb cuts in front of his home that were contrary to the development plans' uniform design, the developers did not appeal that decision within thirty days as required by this rule. The trial court did not have jurisdiction over their complaint and appeal filed a year later; the developers did not file either a certified copy of the city council's proceedings or an affidavit stating that they could not timely file the record. Franks v. Mountain View, 99 Ark. App. 205, 258 S.W.3d 799 (2007).

Employer's appeal to a circuit court from a district court order directing the employer, as garnishee, to pay an employee's wages to a creditor, was untimely under this rule. The time for filing an appeal to the circuit court was not extended by a motion to set aside the district court's order, and the appellate court therefore lacked jurisdiction. Ark. State Univ. v. Profl Credit Mgmt., Inc., 2009 Ark. 153, 299 S.W.3d 535 (2009).

Because a construction company failed to perfect its appeal of the final decision of a city's planning commission in the time and manner provided by this rule, the trial court did not have jurisdiction to hear it, and the commission's decision was a final action under § 14-56-425 since it ended the controversy and left no issues to be resolved as to the right-of-way requirement; because the decision was a final action, the company was required to comply with the directives of this rule in filing an appeal, but it did not file its complaint until more than thirty days after the commission's decision, and failure to comply with the requirements of this rule prevented the trial court from acquiring subject-matter jurisdiction. Ark. Constr. & Excavation, LLC v. City of Maumelle, 2009 Ark. App. 874 (2009).

(d) Taking of Evidence — Third-party Practice.

(1) The plaintiff and the defendant shall have the right to offer evidence in their behalf by witnesses appearing at the hearing or, with the permission of the court, at any other time.

(2) Actions in the small claims division of district court shall be tried informally before the court with relaxed rules of evidence.

(3) No depositions shall be taken and no interrogatories or other discovery proceedings shall be used in proceedings, except in the aid of execution.

(4) No new parties shall be brought into an action in the small claims division of district court, and no party shall be allowed to intervene.

(e) Judgments and Orders — Awarding of Costs — Appeals.

(1) The judge may give judgment and make such orders as to time of payment or otherwise as may be deemed by him or her to be right and just. However, judgments and orders shall be in writing and entered upon the official record in the same manner as other judgments and orders of the district court.

(2) No prejudgment attachment or prejudgment garnishment shall issue in any suit in the small claims division of district court.

(3) Proceedings to enforce or collect a judgment shall be in all respects as in other cases, except that security interests may be proved at the same time as the proof of the claim. The order of judgment may include an order of delivery directing the sheriff to deliver the property subject to the security interests to the plaintiff. If the court issues an order of delivery, no further action shall be necessary on the part of the plaintiff to obtain possession of the property.

(4) Except as otherwise ordered by the court, no execution or enforcement proceedings shall issue on any judgment until after the expiration of ten (10) days from the entry thereof.

(5) The prevailing party in an action in the small claims division of district court is entitled to costs of the action, including the costs of service and notice directing the appearance of the defendant and the costs of enforcing any judgment rendered in the action.

(6) Appeals may be taken from the judgment rendered in the small claims division of district court in the same manner as other civil appeals are taken from district courts.

(f) Restrictions on Participation by Attorneys. See Administrative Order Number 18.

HISTORY: Revised December 9, 2004, effective January 1, 2005; amended June 2, 2011, effective July 1, 2011.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 10:

1. This rule makes it clear that the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and the Arkansas evidentiary rules govern and apply in all claims in inferior courts unless such rules have been modified or altered herein. Procedurally, the cases tried in the inferior courts should basically follow the procedural and evidentiary rules used in circuit and chancery courts in Arkansas.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment:

The provision previously contained in Inferior Court Rule 10, which concerned the applicability of the Rules, now appears in Rule 1 of the District Court Rules.

Effective January 1, 2005, the implementing legislation for Amendment 80 to the Arkansas Constitution repeals various statutes, including the Small Claims Procedure Act, Ark. Code

Ann. §§ 16-17-601 et seq., for the district courts. The procedural rules for the Small Claims Division of District Court are now contained in Rule 10 of the District Court Rules. This rule echos the now-repealed statutory procedures and makes no substantive changes in those procedures.

The claim form which appeared in Ark. Code Ann. § 16-17-607 is now contained in subsection (a) of this rule. It was amended to clarify that non-resident defendants have thirty days to answer any complaint. See District Court Rule 10(b). The form was also amended to add "Summons and" to the "Notice to Defendant" section. The sentence "No separate summons is required" was added to subsection (a)(3)(B). These additions clarify that a separate summons is not required in district court.

Subsection (d) is derived from Ark. Code Ann. § 16-17-612 and subsection (e) is derived from Ark. Code Ann. § 16-17-613. Former Ark. Code Ann. § 16-17-612 (a), which set out restrictions on participation by attorneys in small claim actions, is now found in Administrative Order Number 18.

CASE NOTES

Default Judgments.

Pursuant to this rule, a municipal court defendant who has suffered a default judgment may have review of the court's refusal to set aside the default judgment in response to request pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 55(c). Marcinkowski v. Affirmative Risk Mgt. Corp., 322 Ark. 580, 910 S.W.2d 679 (1995).

Rule 11. Uniform paper size.

All briefs, motions, pleadings, records, transcripts, and other papers required or authorized by these rules shall be on 8¹/₂" by 11" paper.

HISTORY: Adopted May 15, 1989; revised December 9, 2004, effective January 1, 2005.

Publisher's Notes.

The May 15, 1989 Per Curiam read: "In our per curiam order of December 19, 1988, we suspended our earlier order on the subject of doing away with the practice of abstracting the record for appeal and substituting a practice by which the parties would submit an appendix or appendices. We took that action because we wished to examine the possibility of changing from the use of legal size paper to letter size paper in all the courts, and we became aware that unless the changes occurred at the same time, appendices would likely be composed of paper of a different size from that of any brief we might permit to be filed, and that appendices might be composed of documents of varying paper sizes. The accompanying possible handling and storage problems made it seem a good idea to put off the changes until we had sought the recommendation of our Committee on Rules of Pleading, Practice, and Procedure (Civil)."

"We have now received a recommendation from the committee along with suggestions as to the rules which should be revised to accomplish the change in paper size."

"In addition to the committee's recommendations, we have studied those submitted by lawyers, judges, law firms, and lawyers' associations submitted in response to our earlier request for comments on the basic rules we proposed for the purpose of moving to the system of appendices rather than abstracts. Many of those suggestions have been implemented in the amendments we publish today."

"As we noted in our per curiam order of October 17, 1988, on this subject, we wish to have a trial period. These amendments will become effective this date; however, any case in which the appellant's brief is submitted or becomes due between now and December 31, 1989, may be presented in accordance with the rules in effect up until today. That will give this court sufficient time to observe the new practice. If we choose to retain the new system, we will be able to make that decision prior to the publication of the 1989 revision of the Rules Book which accompanies the Arkansas Code Annotated. The rules requiring appendices rather than abstracts may then be made permanent."

"During the trial period an appellant will be in the position of choosing the manner in which the briefs will be presented. If the appellant chooses to present a brief with an appendix rather than an abstract, then the appellee will be required to proceed in accordance with the new rules. If the appellant chooses to work under the abstract system, the appellee will do so also."

"While we may well decide, depending on the results of the trial period, to retain the abstracting practice, we will make permanent the changes with respect to paper size and doing away with printed briefs. Judges, clerks, lawyers, court reporters and others thus will have until January 1, 1990, to prepare to present all legal documents on 8 1/2" by 11" paper."

"The purposes of these changes are to decrease the cost of appellate litigation, increase the ease and accuracy of the evaluation of cases at the appellate level, and provide uniformity as well as compatibility with the age of the word processor in the case of the paper size. We acknowledge and appreciate the comments we received from members of the bench and bar, and we count on continued cooperation as we evaluate the appendix system."

The October 2, 1989 Per Curiam read: "By per curiam order of May 15, 1989, we published changes of court rules necessary to implement a system of appeals using appendices rather than abstracts of record. The order also provided for a change to a uniform 8 1/2" by 11" paper size to be used in all courts. The order provided that the changes with respect to paper size would come into effect January 1, 1990. The other changes having to do with using appendices rather than abstracts of record on appeal went into effect on May 15, 1989, but permitted an appellant to choose to follow the rules in effect until that date for cases in which the appellant's brief was submitted or became due between May 15, 1989, and December 31, 1989."

"We have reviewed the appeals now ready for submission and those which will be ready prior to December 31, 1989. Most appellants have chosen to follow the old rules. We have concluded we will not be able to decide the relative merits of the two methods by the end of this year because we will have had too little experience with appendices. The trial period is, therefore, extended until July 15, 1990. Any case in which the appellant's brief is submitted or becomes due prior to July 15, 1990, may be presented in accordance with the rules in effect up until May 15, 1989."

"The paper size changes are not affected by this order. All courts will begin using 8 1/2" by 11" paper no later than January 1, 1990."

The June 10, 1991 Per Curiam read: "On and after August 1, 1991, all briefs submitted to the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals will be accompanied by abstracts of record, as provided in Arkansas Supreme Court and Court of Appeals Rule 9 [now see S. Ct. & Ct. App. R. 4-2]. We will no longer accept briefs including appendices."

"The Per Curiam Order by which we created a trial period for experimental changes in our Rules was issued May 15, 1989, entitled, 'In re: Amendments to the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure, the Arkansas Rules of Appellate Procedure, the Arkansas Supreme Court Administrative Orders, the Rules of the Arkansas Supreme Court and Court of Appeals, and the Inferior Court Rules.' In that Order we made it clear that the rules changes having to do with the appendix experiment were adopted on a trial basis but that the changes no longer allowing printed briefs and establishing uniform paper size were to be permanent. We hereby revoke the changes, other than those having to do with printed briefs and paper size, which provided for submitting appendices rather than abstracts. We retain the changes with respect to paper size."

"The reason for ending the appendix experiment at this time is that we have found that it adds to the difficulty of, and time consumed in, reading briefs. If our case load and that of the Court of Appeals were not so great, we would be less willing to revert entirely to the abstracting system. Given the numbers of cases we must decide to remain current with our docket, however, we cannot tolerate the additional work we find the appendix system to have caused.

"The experiment with the appendix system began with our Per Curiam Order of October 17, 1988, creating a trial period for testing the new system which, with one intermission and two extensions, was to end March 1, 1991. As was expected, there were difficulties in adapting to the change. The main one from our perspective was the problem of expansion of the statement of the case, with appropriate appendix references, to an extent which would save members of the Court from having to scour the appendix for factual details.

"If we find a way to bring our case load and that of the Court of Appeals within reason, we may return to the appendix system, with some revisions, because we continue to wish to implement the goals stated in our original order. We would like our system to be as inexpensive and simple as possible. Under other circumstances we will be able to exercise the patience required to permit lawyers and litigants to become accustomed to the change and to fine tune it with revisions."

UNIFORM RULES FOR CIRCUIT AND CHANCERY COURTS

[ABOLISHED]

Publisher's Notes.

The Supreme Court of Arkansas, in its per curiam of Dec. 21, 1987, abolished these rules effective Mar. 14, 1988. The per curiam provided, in pertinent part:

"... While the changes we adopt today at the suggestion of the committee are generally explained in the accompanying reporter's notes, we wish to comment upon the abolition of Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 83. In 1984 the committee suggested that we abolish all local court rules. We declined to do so at that time, but asked the committee to document its complaint that local rules were unnecessary and were serving as little more than traps for the unwary lawyer or litigant participating in a case while away from home. The committee came back to us with documented instances of conflict between local rules and the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure. We noted that at that juncture some trial judges announced that they could well do without local rules and declared that they would no longer have them.

"We then embarked upon a compromise. We asked the trial courts to review their local rules and to tender revised versions of their local rules. We then received proposed local rules from a number of the trial judges. We submitted those proposals to our committee for review, and we ultimately approved most of them, excepting from approval those which were in direct conflict with the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure. The many trial judges who did not respond to our order that they review and submit proposed rules to us for review no longer have local rules, as our per curiam order of December 22, 1986, stated: 'As of July 1, 1987, the only local rules in effect in the circuit, chancery and probate courts will be those filed subsequent to June 24, 1985, and approved by this court after review by the appropriate committee or committees.'

"In our initial screening, and as we have continued to review local rules tendered to us, we and the committee have observed that many of the rules are no more than 'housekeeping' orders having nothing to do with the conduct of lawyers or litigants. Others are duplicative of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and thus serve no purpose except to say the same thing a different way and provide unnecessary fodder for disagreement. Sometimes, hidden within these innocuous and repetitious provisions, there are procedural requirements which do not conflict with the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and which may seriously affect the rights of litigants. To become aware of these rules, a litigant or counsel may have to wade through many pages of confusing materials.

"A member of the bar of this state, or a litigant representing himself or herself, should be able to go into any of our courts and know what to expect without having to read, in some instances, 50 pages of local rules trying to discern their effect. We recognize that some of the local rules may have great merit, and if they do, we should consider adopting them for all our courts. The Uniform Rules for Circuit and Chancery Courts apparently resulted from an attempt to create uniform 'local rules.' We are also abolishing those rules as of March 14, 1988, as we find them to be unnecessary in view of the since-adopted Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure. The useful portions of those rules have been transferred to the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and to the Administrative Orders we also publish today.

"We recognize that not all our judges operate under the same conditions, however, when the inconvenience caused by not having local rules is balanced against the inconvenience caused by them and, more importantly, against the often unanticipated and unnecessary effect they may have upon the rights of litigants, we conclude the scales tip in favor of not having them. We note that the Supreme Court of Kentucky, the state which gave us so much of our original statutory procedure, abolished its comparable Rule 83 in 1982.

"It is not our intention to subvert the power of the trial courts to preside as they see fit within the universal procedural rules we have established. We presume there will be a need for trial judges to publish administrative orders which will attend to necessary 'housekeeping' matters, such as the time and place court shall commence, the duties of the bailiff and the reporter and so on. It is, however, our intention that we will no longer sanction the promulgation by the trial courts of orders which may be characterized as procedural rules which will detract from the ability of any litigant or member of the bar of this state to know the fundamental rules of litigation which may affect their rights adversely no matter what court of this state they may be before. By doing away with Rule 83, we relieve the trial courts of filing local rules with this court, and we no longer sanction or recognize those which have been filed to date.

"As always, we invite the members of the bench and bar, and indeed any person, to make suggestions of rule changes to us through the appropriate committee. The reporters of our

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 1 [ABOLISHED]

HISTORY: Abolished December 17, 2020,
effective January 1, 2021.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 2 — DOCKETS AND OTHER RECORDS.

(a) Docket. The clerk shall keep a book known as a “civil docket,” designated by the prefix “CV”; a book known as a “probate docket,” designated by the prefix “PR”; a book known as a “domestic relations docket,” designated by the prefix “DR”; a book known as a “criminal docket,” designated by the prefix “CR”; a book known as a “juvenile docket,” designated by the prefix “JV”; and a book known as a “warrant docket.” The warrant docket shall be divided into a “search warrant docket,” designated by the prefix “SW” and an “arrest warrant docket,” designated by the prefix “AW.” Each action shall be entered in the appropriate docket book. Cases shall be assigned the letter prefix corresponding to that docket and a number in the order of filing. Beginning with the first case filed each year, cases shall be numbered consecutively in each docket category with the four digits of the current year, followed by a hyphen and the number assigned to the case, beginning with the number “1.”

For example:

criminal	CR2002-1
civil	CV2002-1
probate	PR2002-1
domestic relations	DR2002-1
juvenile	JV2002-1
warrant	SW2002-1
	AW2002-1

All papers filed with the clerk, all process issued and returns thereon, all appearances, orders, verdicts and judgments shall be noted chronologically in the dockets and filed in the folio assigned to the action and shall be marked with its file number. These entries shall be brief, but shall show the nature of each paper filed or writ issued and the substance of each order or judgment of the court and of the returns showing execution of process. The entry of an order or judgment shall show the date the entry is made. Where there has been a demand for trial by jury it shall be shown on the docket along with the date upon which demand was made. In counties where the county clerk serves as the ex officio clerk of any division of the circuit court, the filing requirement for any pleading, paper, order, judgment, decree, or notice of appeal shall be satisfied when the document is filed with either the circuit clerk or the county clerk.

The warrant docket is used for warrants that have been returned either executed or unexecuted when a case file has not yet been opened. If a criminal case is subsequently opened, the information in the warrant docket related to the criminal case is transferred to it. Access to the contents of the warrant docket shall be governed by the applicable rule of criminal procedure and Administrative Order Number 19.

(b) Judgments and Orders.

(1) The clerk shall keep a judgment record book in which shall be kept a correct copy of every final judgment or appealable order, or order affecting title to or lien upon real or personal property, and any other order which the court may direct to be kept.

(2) The clerk shall denote the date and time that a judgment, decree or order is filed by stamping or otherwise marking it with the date and time and the word "filed." A judgment, decree or order is entered when so stamped or marked by the clerk, irrespective of when it is recorded in the judgment record book.

(3) If the clerk's office has a facsimile machine, the clerk shall accept facsimile transmission of a judgment, decree or order filed in such manner at the direction of the court. The clerk shall stamp or otherwise mark a facsimile copy as filed on the date and time that it is received on the clerk's facsimile machine during the regular hours of the clerk's office or, if received outside those hours, at the time the office opens on the next business day. The date stamped on the facsimile copy shall control all appeal-related deadlines pursuant to Rule 4 of the Arkansas Rules of Appellate Procedure—Civil. The original judgment, decree or order shall be substituted for the facsimile copy within fourteen days of transmission.

(4) A judge may make any order effective immediately by signing it, noting the time and date thereon, and marking or stamping it "filed in open court" or "filed by Judge." Any such order shall be file-marked with the clerk no later than the next day on which the clerk's office is open, and this filing date shall control all appeal-related deadlines pursuant to Rule 4 of the Arkansas Rules of Appellate Procedure—Civil.

(c) Indices. Suitable indices of the civil, probate, domestic relations, criminal, juvenile and warrant dockets and of every judgment or order referred to in Section (b) of this rule shall be kept by the clerk under the direction of the court.

(d) Other Books and Records. The clerk shall also keep such other books and records as may be required by law and as directed by the Supreme Court.

(e) Uniform Paper Size. All records prepared by the clerk shall be on 8½" x 11" paper.

(f) Clerk Defined. When used herein, the term clerk refers to the clerks of the various circuit courts of the state; provided, that in the event probate matters are required by law to be filed in the office of county clerk, then the term clerk shall also include the county clerk for this limited purpose.

(g) File Mark.

(1) There shall be a two inch (2") top margin on the first page of each document submitted for filing to accommodate the court's file mark. If the pleading or document must be filed in multi-parts because of size or for other reasons, the first page of each part must include the file name and file mark and shall clearly indicate the part number and number of parts (example, part 1 of 2).

HISTORY: Adopted December 21, 1987, effective March 14, 1988; amended May 15, 1989; amended July 17, 1989; amended October 12, 1989; amended January 22, 1998; amended June 24, 1999; amended December 9, 1999, effective January 1, 2000; amended May 24, 2001, subsections (a)-(e) effective January 1, 2002, subsection (f) effective July 1, 2001; amended March 13, 2003; amended February 10, 2005; amended July 2, 2015, effective September 1, 2015; amended December 7, 2017; amended June 21, 2018, effective September 1, 2018.

Publisher's Notes.

This order supersedes Ark. R. Civ. P. 79.

The May 15, 1989 Per Curiam read: "In our per curiam order of December 19, 1988, we suspended our earlier order on the subject of doing away with the practice of abstracting the record for appeal and substituting a practice by which the parties would submit an appendix or appendices. We took that action because we wished to examine the possibility of changing from the use of legal size paper to letter size paper in all the courts, and we became aware that unless the changes occurred at the same time, appendices would likely be composed of paper of a different size from that of any brief we might permit to be filed, and that appendices might be composed of documents of varying paper sizes. The accompanying possible handling and storage problems made it seem a good idea to put off the changes until we had sought the recommendation of our Committee on Rules of Pleading, Practice, and Procedure (Civil).

"We have now received a recommendation from the committee along with suggestions as to the rules which should be revised to accomplish the change in paper size.

"In addition to the committee's recommendations, we have studied those submitted by lawyers, judges, law firms, and lawyers' associations submitted in response to our earlier request for comments on the basic rules we proposed for the purpose of moving to the system of appendices rather than abstracts. Many of those suggestions have been implemented in the amendments we publish today.

"As we noted in our per curiam order of October 17, 1988, on this subject, we wish to have a trial period. These amendments will become effective this date; however, any case in which the appellant's brief is submitted or becomes due between now and December 31, 1989, may be presented in accordance with the rules in effect up until today. That will give this court sufficient time to observe the new practice. If we choose to retain the new system, we will be able to make that decision prior to the publication of the 1989 revision of the Rules Book which accompanies the Arkansas Code Annotated. The rules requiring appendices rather than abstracts may then be made permanent.

"During the trial period an appellant will be in the position of choosing the manner in which the briefs will be presented. If the appellant chooses to present a brief with an appendix rather than an abstract, then the appellee will be required to proceed in accordance with the new rules. If the appellant chooses to work under the abstract system, the appellee will do so also.

"While we may well decide, depending on the results of the trial period, to retain the abstracting practice, we will make permanent the changes with respect to paper size and doing away with printed briefs. Judges, clerks, lawyers, court reporters and others thus will have until January 1, 1990, to prepare to present all legal documents on 8 1/2" by 11" paper.

"The purposes of these changes are to decrease the cost of appellate litigation, increase the ease and accuracy of the evaluation of cases at the appellate level, and provide uniformity as well as compatibility with the age of the word processor in the case of the paper size. We acknowledge and appreciate the comments we received from members of the bench and bar, and we count on continued cooperation as we evaluate the appendix system."

The October 2, 1989 Per Curiam read: "By per curiam order of May 15, 1989, we published changes of court rules necessary to implement a system of appeals using appendices rather than abstracts of record. The order also provided for a change to a uniform 8 1/2" by 11" paper size to be used in all courts. The order provided that the changes with respect to paper size would come into effect January 1, 1990. The other changes having to do with using appendices rather than abstracts of record on appeal went into effect on May 15, 1989, but permitted an appellant to choose to follow the rules in effect until that date for cases in which the appellant's brief was submitted or became due between May 15, 1989, and December 31, 1989.

"We have reviewed the appeals now ready for submission and those which will be ready prior to December 31, 1989. Most appellants have chosen to follow the old rules. We have concluded we will not be able to decide the relative merits of the two methods by the end of this year because we will have had too little experience with appendices. The trial period is, therefore, extended until July 15, 1990. Any case in which the appellant's brief is submitted or becomes due prior to July 15, 1990, may be presented in accordance with the rules in effect up until May 15, 1989.

"The paper size changes are not affected by this order. All courts will begin using 8 1/2" by 11" paper no later than January 1, 1990."

The June 10, 1991 Per Curiam read: "On and after August 1, 1991, all briefs submitted to the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals will be accompanied by abstracts of record, as provided in Arkansas Supreme Court and Court of Appeals Rule 9. We will no longer accept briefs including appendices.

"The Per Curiam Order by which we created a trial period for experimental changes in our Rules was issued May 15, 1989, entitled, 'In re: Amendments to the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure, the Arkansas Rules of Appellate Procedure, the Arkansas Supreme Court Administrative Orders, the Rules of the Arkansas Supreme Court and Court of Appeals, and the Inferior Court Rules.' In that Order we made it clear that the rules changes having to do with the appendix experiment were adopted on a trial basis but that the changes no longer allowing printed briefs and establishing uniform paper size were to be permanent. We hereby revoke the changes, other than those having to do with printed briefs and paper size, which provided for submitting appendices rather than abstracts. We retain the changes with respect to paper size.

"The reason for ending the appendix experiment at this time is that we have found that it adds to the difficulty of, and time consumed in, reading briefs. If our case load and that of the Court of Appeals were not so great, we would be less willing to revert entirely to the abstracting system. Given the numbers of cases we must decide to remain current with our docket, however, we cannot tolerate the additional work we find the appendix system to have caused.

"The experiment with the appendix system began with our Per Curiam Order of October 17, 1988, creating a trial period for testing the new system which, with one intermission and two extensions, was to end March 1, 1991. As was expected, there were difficulties in adapting to the change. The main one from our perspective was the problem of expansion of the statement of the case, with appropriate appendix references, to an extent which would save members of the Court from having to scour the appendix for factual details.

"If we find a way to bring our case load and that of the Court of Appeals within reason, we may return to the appendix system, with some revisions, because we continue to wish to implement the goals stated in our original order. We would like our system to be as inexpensive and simple as possible. Under other circumstances we will be able to exercise the patience required to permit lawyers and litigants to become accustomed to the change and to fine tune it with revisions."

The first 1999 amendment of this Rule added the subdivision (1) and (2) designations in (b); in (b)(2), added the second sentence; and added (b)(3) and (4). New subdivision (b)(3) provides that judgments, decrees, and orders may be filed with the clerk by facsimile transmission if the court so directs. New subdivision (b)(4) addresses emergency situations when an order needs to be effective immediately, but the clerk's office is not open. This amendment to subsection (b) of Administrative Order No. 2 became effective June 24, 1999.

The second 1999 amendment to this order substituted "four digits" for "the last two digits" in the second sentence of subsection (a). This change was necessitated by the coming of the year 2000. Instead of two digits (9901) for the docket year, the case number will be four digits (2000-1). This amendment to subsection (a) of Administrative Order No. 2 became effective January 1, 2000.

Reporter's Notes, (1999):

Subdivision (c)(2) of this rule does not authorize the filing of judgments, decrees or orders by facsimile transmission. However, Administrative Order No. 2(b), as amended in 1999, requires any clerk's office with a facsimile machine to "accept facsimile transmission of a judgment, decree or order filed in such manner at the direction of the court." The faxed judgment, decree or order is effective when entered by the clerk. To ensure the permanency of official court records, the original judgment, decree or order must be substituted for the facsimile copy within 14 days of transmission, but this step does not have any bearing on the effectiveness of the faxed document or the time for taking an appeal.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, (2000):

The second paragraph of this rule provides that a judgment or decree "is effective only when . . . set forth [on a separate document] and entered as provided in Administrative Order No. 2." As amended in 1999 [effective 1/1/00], Administrative Order No. 2(b) provides that a judgment, decree or order is "entered" when stamped or otherwise marked by the clerk with the time and date and the word "filed," irrespective of when it is recorded in the judgment book. When the clerk's office is not open for business, and upon an express finding of extraordinary circumstances, an order is effective immediately when signed by the judge. Such order must be filed with the clerk on the next day on which the clerk's office is open, and this filing date controls all appeal-related deadlines.

The amendment to Administrative Order No.

2(b) also requires any clerk's office with a facsimile machine to "accept facsimile transmission of a judgment, decree or order filed in such manner at the direction of the court." The faxed judgment, decree or order is effective when entered by the clerk. To ensure the permanency of official court records, the original judgment, decree or order must be substituted for the facsimile copy within 14 days of transmission, but this step does not have any bearing on the effectiveness of the faxed document or the time for taking an appeal.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2015 Amendment:

This order was amended to create a warrant docket for the filing of arrest warrants (see Ark. R. Crim. P. 7.3) and search warrants (see Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.4) upon their return, whether executed or unexecuted.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2018 Amendment:

Subdivision (g) was added to ensure that file marks are legible and is especially needed at this time to accommodate electronic-filing software.

CASE NOTES

In General.

The Supreme Court has made it clear that a judgment or decree is not effective until it has been "entered" as provided in Ark. R. Civ. P. 58 and this order. Morrell v. Morrell, 48 Ark. App. 54, 889 S.W.2d 772 (1994).

In a wrongful death action filed by the special administrator of decedent's estate, the trial court properly granted the doctors' motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction because the suit was filed before the order appointing the administrator was filed with the court clerk and a judicial order is not effective under Ark. R. Civ. P. 58 and this order until it is filed with the clerk of court. Filyaw v. Bouton, 87 Ark. App. 320, 191 S.W.3d 540 (2004).

Where a judge made several findings in its oral ruling about whether a bank had backed out of a loan to a turkey farm from which a propane company was to be created, the trial court's oral findings were not made part of the written order and, thus, did not present a basis for appeal. Cmty. Bank of N. Ark. v. Tri-State Propane, 89 Ark. App. 272, 203 S.W.3d 124 (2005).

Despite an oral pronouncement, because there was no written judgment regarding a default judgment entered in a foreclosure action, the case was dismissed without prejudice under Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b); the record was void of any proof that one alleged interest holder was served, so it was impossible to tell if a default judgment was appropriate. Nat'l Home Ctrs., Inc. v. Coleman, 370 Ark. 119, 257 S.W.3d 862 (2007).

In a case involving a dispute over credit life insurance, an appeal was timely filed under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(a) because the first judgment in the case did not comply with this order where the original of the facsimile-filed judgment was never filed with the trial court. The appeal was timely filed from a second judgment. Francis v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 98 Ark. App. 1, 249 S.W.3d 828 (2007).

Order that denied the inmate's indigent status did not state if the inmate had a colorable cause of action and was not file-marked. Until an order denying the inmate's indigent status was filed in the circuit court, there was no effective order from which the inmate could appeal the circuit court's decision. There is a duty to file-mark an inmate's petition and to enter an order to create a proper record. Duna-hue v. Dennis, 2016 Ark. 285 (2016).

Circuit court clearly based its denial of a biological mother's motion to set aside an adoption decree regarding her biological child on the mother's failure to prove any of the grounds for setting aside the default judgment and not on a misinterpretation of law; the court did not repeat the statement it made at a hearing in the written order. Qualheim v. Roush, 2019 Ark. App. 83, 572 S.W.3d 9 (2019).

Conflict.

Trial court pronounced from the bench that appellee actively misled appellant, and although the trial court said it would probably set the judgment aside, the trial court did not make a definitive finding from the bench, and to the extent the bench findings conflicted with the written order, the written order controlled. Carroll v. Carroll, 2013 Ark. App. 401 (2013).

Construction With Other Law.

With respect to judgment and commitment orders, they are effective upon entry of record in accordance with this order, and to the extent that § 16-65-121 directly conflicts with the rules of the Supreme Court of Arkansas and

Arkansas caselaw, and it is superseded; thus, a trial court is well within its authority to modify a sentence pronounced in open court prior to entry of judgment as long as it complies with other pertinent criminal rules. Bradford v. State, 351 Ark. 394, 94 S.W.3d 904 (2003).

Effective Judgment.

Dismissal of the appeal from a finding in favor of a parent and his son in their action after the son was injured in an all-terrain vehicle accident was proper because there were parties who were orally dismissed from the case without entry of subsequent written orders of dismissal; thus, the supreme court lacked jurisdiction. No written orders of dismissal were entered of record, and because the oral dismissals were not effective until reduced to writing, the order currently appealed was not a final order under subdivision (b)(2) of this Administrative Order. Carr v. Nance, 2010 Ark. 25 (2010).

Where the trial court entered a second order that corrected an oversight in the divorce decree and clarified the date previously awarded alimony would begin, the alimony award was effective when the divorce decree was entered by the clerk in accordance with subdivision (b)(2) of this order, rather than the date of oral pronouncement. Stuart v. Stuart, 2012 Ark. App. 458, 422 S.W.3d 147 (2012).

Appellate court was unable to review a former husband's arguments relating to the parties' initial divorce decree and property-settlement agreement because there were no specific findings in the trial court's written orders, despite comments that were made about the difficulty in making sense of some of the provisions of the decree. There was nothing to review where the trial court's order was not reduced to writing and filed of record. Ryburn v. Ryburn, 2014 Ark. App. 108, 432 S.W.3d 102 (2014).

Appeal from a grant of a writ of mandamus was dismissed because the appeal was moot, as no mootness exception applied since an exception only applied if a mayor's request to declare a term of office had been granted, but the trial court's written order did not reflect an oral ruling granting that request, so there was nothing to review that might fall within one of the exceptions. Jefferson County Election Comm'n v. Hollingsworth, 2014 Ark. 431, 445 S.W.3d 504 (2014).

Record in this case did not contain an order sentencing defendant to probation, and counsel claimed that it appeared that no such order was ever entered by the circuit court; because an effective judgment of conviction was never entered, the circuit court erred in granting the State's petitions for revocation, and the revocation was reversed and dismissed. Watts v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 16, 480 S.W.3d 212 (2016).

Jurisdiction.

Trial court never lost subject matter jurisdiction and was free to hear additional evidence and to alter its oral decision to admit a purported will to probate because no written order had been entered and filed of record from the prior hearing; pursuant to subdivision (b)(2) of this order, an oral order announced from the bench does not become effective until reduced to writing and filed. Judkins v. Hoover, 351 Ark. 552, 95 S.W.3d 768, overruled in part, West v. Williams, 355 Ark. 148, 133 S.W.3d 388 (2003).

Nolle Prosequi.

Defendant was entitled to a writ of certiorari because, under Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, her speedy trial right was not tolled until the charges were either dismissed or nolle prossed, and the trial court erred in determining that speedy trial was tolled during the period from October 21, 2013, to March 17, 2014, when there was no document, filed of record, dismissing the charges by nolle prosequi until the written order was filed on March 17, 2014. The nolle prosequi did not become effective until the written order was entered. While the record of appearance was a written document, it was never stamped or marked "filed" by the clerk. Zimmerman v. Circuit Court of Miller Cty., 2018 Ark. 264, 555 S.W.3d 406 (2018).

Father appealing the denial of his motion to change child custody failed to establish the circuit court applied an incorrect legal standard of best interest because on two occasions it correctly stated that the issue presented was a best interest determination without mentioning the application of a heightened burden of proof, and its order included a best interest finding without reference to a heightened burden; even if the circuit court had not stated the correct legal standard at the hearing, in its final order, it applied the best interest standard. Minahan v. Williams, 2021 Ark. App. 181 (2021).

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 3 — TRIAL BRIEFS — TRIAL AND APPELLATE COURT DECISIONS — TIME LIMITATIONS AND REPORTS

1. Trial briefs. All matters which are under submission to a trial judge should be promptly, efficiently, and fairly determined. The total time for all parties to file briefs in any case in the circuit courts is limited to a period not to exceed thirty (30) days after the trial is completed and the case is ready for decision. Upon a showing or written statement of special circumstances in a particular case, the time for filing briefs may be extended, reduced, or eliminated at the discretion of the trial judge.

2. Trial court decisions.

A. Judges of circuit courts are directed to submit to the Administrative Office of the Courts at the end of each calendar quarter, reports of cases which have been under advisement for more than ninety (90) days after final submission. These reports are to be submitted on forms supplied by the Administrative Office of the Courts. In cases which have been pending for more than ninety (90) days after final submission, the quarterly report shall include the date when the case was submitted and a statement of the reasons necessitating the delay in rendering a decision. If there are no cases which are pending for that length of time, the report shall simply state "none."

B. For purposes of subdivision 2(A) of this order, civil cases under final submission include those with motions submitted for decision that could result in the resolution or dismissal of the case, as well as those cases that have been fully tried and submitted on their merits. If a civil case has been fully tried, or a potentially dispositive motion argued at a hearing, then the case shall be under final submission at the conclusion of the trial or hearing, or on the date any post-trial or post-hearing briefing is filed, whichever last occurs. If no hearing is held on a potentially dispositive motion, then the case shall be under final submission on the date a party files with the circuit clerk a copy of a letter notifying the circuit judge that the motion is ready for decision. The letter shall enclose copies of all the filed papers relating to the motion and reflect service on all other counsel of record.

C. For purposes of subdivision 2(A) of this order, a motion, application, or petition requesting post-conviction relief in a criminal case, including a petition under Arkansas Rule of Criminal Procedure 37, shall be considered under final submission on the date that the petitioner files with the circuit clerk a copy of a letter notifying the circuit judge that the motion, application, or petition has been filed. The letter to the judge shall enclose all copies of pleadings and documents relating to the motion, application, or petition and shall reflect service on the prosecuting attorney. If, within ninety (90) days of the date on which the letter is filed with the circuit clerk, the judge sets a hearing on the motion, application, or petition, then the date on which the petition is considered under final submission shall be extended until the date on which the hearing concludes or the date on which the last post-hearing briefing is filed, whichever last occurs.

D. The Administrative Office of the Courts shall promptly review all reports filed by the trial courts, and if it determines that the delay in any case was not caused by the parties or their counsel, it shall recommend to the Supreme Court a judge to be assigned or appointed to dispose of the delayed case.

E. Willful noncompliance with the provisions of the order shall constitute grounds for discipline under the provisions of Canon 3B(8) of the Arkansas

Code of Judicial Conduct. Any judge whose quarterly report is not received by the 15th of the month following the end of the previous quarter (i.e., January 15, April 15, July 15, October 15) will be automatically referred to the Judicial Discipline and Disability Commission for possible discipline.

3. Appellate court decisions.

A. Justices and Judges of the Arkansas Supreme Court and Court of Appeals are directed to submit to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court at the end of each quarter a report of any case in which an opinion has not been issued within sixty (60) days from the case’s submission. The report shall include a statement of the reason necessitating the delay in issuing an opinion.

B. The Supreme Court will review the reasons given for delay in any reported case and make any reassignment or take any appropriate action necessary to dispose of the case.

C. Willful noncompliance with the provisions of this order shall constitute grounds for discipline under the provisions of Canon 3B(8) of the Arkansas Code of Judicial Conduct.

4. Effective date. This order shall become effective commencing January 1, 1991, and the initial quarterly reports shall be filed on or before March 31, 1991, and the last day of each quarterly month thereafter.

HISTORY: Adopted November 19, 1990, effective January 1, 1991; amended December 23, 1996; amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001; amended September 27, 2001; amended October 18, 2001; amended September 27, 2007.

Publisher’s Notes.

The Dec. 23, 1996, Per Curiam provided, in part: “The addition of the second sentence in subsection (2)(C) with respect to the late filing of quarterly reports shall become effective with the reports due March 31, 1997, which must be filed no later than April 15, 1997.”

Court Notes, 2007:

New subdivision (2)(B) has been added to clarify when, for purposes of this order, the circuit court takes civil cases under final submission. For dispositive motions where no hearing is held, the order now obligates counsel (or a pro se party) to write the court and provide copies of all the motions, thus fixing a clear submission date. This letter must also be served on all parties and filed with the circuit clerk. Former subdivisions (2)(B) and (2)(C) have been renumbered.

New subdivision 2(C) addresses Rule 37 petitions and similar post-conviction motions in criminal cases. Rule 37.3(a) permits the circuit court to dispose of a Rule 37 petition without a hearing based on the files and records of the case. Subdivision 2(C) requires the circuit judge to report Rule 37 petitions that have not been so disposed within ninety (90) days after the petitioner files the notification letter described in the subdivision. If within that 90-day period, the judge schedules a hearing on the petition, as provided in Rule 37.3(c), then the petition is not considered under final submission until ninety (90) days after the later of the conclusion of the hearing or the filing of any post-hearing briefs.

Subdivision 2(C) does not apply to post-trial motions filed under Arkansas Rule of Criminal Procedure 33.3. Pursuant to Rule of Appellate Procedure — Criminal 2(b)(1), such motions are deemed denied on the 30th day after the entry of judgment, unless the court denies the motion before that date. Consequently, a circuit court should never have a Rule 33.3 post-trial motion under advisement for more than ninety (90) days.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 4 — VERBATIM TRIAL RECORD

(a) Verbatim Record. The circuit court shall require the official court reporter to make a verbatim record of all proceedings, pertaining to any matter before the court or the jury, regardless of whether these proceedings occur in-person, in court, or in chambers; telephonically; or through video-conference. This may be waived by the parties in all matters except criminal cases. Circuit Courts are courts of records and waivers are discouraged in most circumstances. The verbatim record shall include a transcription of all spoken words from any source including but not limited to: colloquies between the court and counsel and self-represented litigants; arguments; objections; testimony; jury instructions; communications between the court and members of the jury; discussions concerning juror notes; and audio contained in videos or other recordings that are presented to the court or jury, whether in open court or in camera.

(b) Back-up System. When making a verbatim record, an official court reporter or substitute court reporter shall always utilize a back-up system in addition to his or her primary reporting system in order to insure preservation of the record.

(c) Exhibits. Physical exhibits received or proffered in evidence shall be stored pursuant to the requirements of Section 21 of the Regulations of the Board of Certified Court Reporter Examiners, Official Court Reporter Retention Schedule.

(d) Sanctions. Any person who fails to comply with these requirements shall be subject to the discipline provisions of the Rules and Regulations of the Board of Certified Court Reporter Examiners in addition to the enforcement powers of the court, including contempt.

(e) Electronic Recording.

1. Applicability. This subsection (e) shall apply to state district court judges presiding over matters pending in circuit courts pursuant to Administrative Order Number 18 and to circuit court judges upon request to and approval by the Supreme Court.

2. Electronic recording. An audio recording system may make the verbatim record of court proceedings. A recording system used for the purpose of creating the official record of a court proceeding shall meet the standards adopted and published by the Administrative Office of the Courts ("AOC"). The system shall be approved by the AOC, and it shall be tested and court personnel shall be trained before the system is implemented. The system shall include a back-up capability to satisfy the requirement of subsection (b) of this Administrative Order.

3. Record security. (A) The trial court shall maintain the electronic recordings of court proceedings and all digital files, backup files, and archive files consistent with standards adopted and published by the AOC.

(B) Subsection (c) of this Administrative Order regarding the storage of trial exhibits when using an electronic recording system is supplemented by the following: During the period in which the records are required to be retained, the trial court may order items of physical evidence held for storage and safekeeping by the attorneys of record, and such arrangements shall be appropriately documented. Forms of orders and receipts are appended to the Regulations of the Board of Certified Court Reporter Examiners. When physical exhibits include firearms, contraband, or other similar items, the trial court may order such items transferred to the sheriff or other appropriate governmental agency for storage and safekeeping. The sheriff or governmental agency shall sign a receipt for such items and shall acknowledge that the items shall not be disposed of until authorized by subsequent court order. See Regulation 21 of the Regulations of the Board of Certified Court Reporter Examiners for the record retention schedule and other requirements for maintaining records and exhibits.

4. Official transcripts. When a transcript is required and is to be prepared from an audio recording, the official court reporter of the circuit judge to which the case is assigned shall be responsible for preparing the transcript, and the statutory rate and payment provisions shall apply. A transcript prepared from an audio recording of a court proceeding prepared and certified by an official court reporter is an official transcript for purpose of appeal or other use.

HISTORY: Adopted May 6, 1991, effective July 1, 1991; amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001; amended February 21, 2008; amended April 9, 2009, effective June 1, 2009; amended February 9, 2011, effective July 1, 2011; amended December 3, 2020.

Court Notes, 2021:

Section (a) currently mandates the verbatim record, with waiver exception in limited circumstances, on circuit courts. It does not mandate a verbatim record for state district courts. Section (e) sets out the requirements when state district courts elect to create a record when presiding over circuit court matters, but it remains discretionary until a later amendment of Order 4.

A proceeding for purposes of Order 4 is considered a hearing, or portions thereof, conducted by the court.

CASE NOTES

Record Not Required.

Where appellant did not complete drug court, he was required to serve a six-year sentence for forgery and a ten-year suspended sentence for theft. The drug court's failure to make a record of its proceedings under this order, did not preclude review of appellant's claim that he was entitled to pre-jail sentencing credit. Laxton v. State, 99 Ark. App. 1, 256 S.W.3d 518 (2007).

Record Required.

Because the state and the defense did not waive their right to a verbatim record, the trial court's failure to make a verbatim record of the in-chambers conferences on the defendant's directed-verdict motion was error; although the state voiced no objection to the trial court's handling of the directed-verdict motion in this manner, the Supreme Court of Arkansas would not construe the state's silence on the issue at trial as implying a waiver of this requirement and warned that in the future the record requirement would be strictly construed and enforced. Robinson v. State, 353 Ark. 372, 108 S.W.3d 622 (2003).

Remand of a criminal case was necessary to conduct defendant's motion to suppress evidence on the record because an appellate court was unable to conduct a de novo review without the complete record. George v. State, 356 Ark. 345, 151 S.W.3d 770 (2004).

Although a videotape containing defendant's statements was part of the record on appeal, the relevant portions had not been abstracted, nor had a transcript been provided, and the record was not a verbatim recording of what occurred below; thus, the case was remanded to the trial court to settle the record regarding which of the police officer's remarks were objected to by defendant and were subsequently reviewed by the trial court and which portion of the videotape was played for the jury. Williams v. State, 362 Ark. 416, 208 S.W.3d 761 (2005).

Where the trial judge failed to make a verbatim record of the business's motion in limine, this alone was sufficient to warrant a reversal of the trial court's judgment. Riverside Marine Remanufacturers, Inc. v. Booth, 93 Ark. App. 48, 216 S.W.3d 611 (2005).

Remand was necessary to settle and supplement the record, because while the defective notice of appeal did not deprive the appellate court of jurisdiction, it did fail to put the court reporter on notice to transcribe the motion-to-dismiss hearing and it was not in the record; the appellate court was unable to reach the merits of appellant's first point on appeal. Evins v. Carvin, 2012 Ark. App. 622 (2012).

In reviewing the evidence to support appellant's second-degree murder conviction, the court would not consider a 911 call because the record did not contain a verbatim record of the call as the jury heard it and because the call was not properly abstracted. Rainer v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 588 (2012).

Supplementation of the record on appeal in a criminal case was required based on a failure to comply with subsection (a) of this order because a recording of a 911 call was played at a pretrial hearing, was introduced into evidence at trial, was played for the jury, and clearly pertained to a contested matter. There was no indication that the 911 transcript introduced at trial was prepared at the direction of a trial court in lieu of a transcription of the recording actually played at trial or that the parties waived on the record the making of an official transcription. Dillard v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 503 (2012).

Circuit court erred in failing to conduct an on-the-record hearing as to damages; despite the language contained in the default judgment order to the contrary, no hearing was held or other on-the-record statement was given, the owner's negligence complaint against a builder requested no specified amount of damages, and no affidavit, declaration, deposition, or other proof of damages was contained in the record. Wise v. Harper, 2015 Ark. App. 702, 477 S.W.3d 565 (2015).

Remand to settle the record, pursuant to Ark. R. App. P. Crim. 4(a) and Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 6(e), was required where due to the lack of a verbatim record, it was impossible to determine whether defendant and his counsel were present when the circuit court ordered the jury notes marked as court's exhibits and received the jury notes into evidence. Likewise, the appellate court was unable to determine compliance or noncompliance with § 16-89-125(e). Terry v. State, 2019 Ark. 342 (2019).

Writ to Compel Recording.

Petition for a writ of mandamus or prohibition to compel a circuit court to record chamber conferences as required by this order, or not to hold unrecorded conferences without the petitioner's waiver, was denied because there was no record that any in-chambers conference was held without being recorded. Thompson v. Guthrie, 373 Ark. 443, 284 S.W.3d 455 (2008).

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 5 — CRIMINAL CASES WHERE ALLEGED VICTIM UNDER AGE FOURTEEN

Arkansas Code Annotated § 16-10-130 (1987) provides that all courts of this state shall, in the absence of extraordinary circumstances, give precedence to the disposition of criminal cases over other matters, civil or criminal, when the alleged victim is under age fourteen. Effective immediately, when a case affected by § 16-10-130 is not tried or otherwise disposed of within nine months following the filing of a criminal information in the circuit court, the circuit judge, before whom the case is pending, will inform the Administrative Office of the Courts in writing the reason or reasons therefor. Thereafter, at intervals of ninety (90) days the trial court will inform the Administrative Office of the Courts of the status of the case. During the pendency of the case, no continuance shall be granted on motion of either the State or the defendant except upon written order detailing the reasons for, and the duration of, the delay.

HISTORY: Adopted October 5, 1992; amended March 13, 2014.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 6 — BROADCASTING, RECORDING, OR PHOTOGRAPHING IN THE COURTROOM

(a) Application — Exception. This Order shall apply to all courts, circuit, district, and appellate, except as set out below.

(b) Authorization. A judge may authorize broadcasting, recording, or photographing in the courtroom and areas immediately adjacent thereto during sessions of court, recesses between sessions, and on other occasions, provided that the participants will not be distracted, nor will the dignity of the proceedings be impaired.

(c) Exceptions. The following exceptions shall apply:

(1) An objection timely made by a party or an attorney shall preclude broadcasting, recording, or photographing of the proceedings.

(2) The court shall inform witnesses of their right to refuse to be broadcast, recorded, or photographed, and an objection timely made by a witness shall preclude broadcasting, recording or photographing of that witness.

(3) The following shall not be subject to broadcasting, recording, or photographing: all juvenile matters in circuit court, all probate and domestic relations matters in circuit court (e.g., adoptions, guardianships, divorce, custody, support, and paternity), and all drug court proceedings.

(4) In camera proceedings shall not be broadcast, recorded, or photographed except with consent of the court.

(5) Jurors, minors without parental or guardian consent, victims in cases involving sexual offenses, and undercover police agents or informants shall not be broadcast, recorded, or photographed.

(d) Procedure. The broadcasting, recording, or photographing of any court proceeding shall comply with the following rules:

(1) The court shall direct that the news media representatives enter into a pooling arrangement for the broadcasting, recording, or photographing of a trial. Any representative of a news medium wanting to broadcast, record, or photograph court proceedings shall present to the court a written statement agreeing to share with other media representatives. The media pool shall select one of its members to serve as pool coordinator. The media pool shall establish its own procedures, not inconsistent with these rules or with the wishes of the court, and the pool coordinator shall arbitrate any problems that arise. If a problem arises that requires the assistance of the court, the pool coordinator alone shall be responsible for coordinating with the court. A plan for the placement of the broadcast equipment shall be prepared and filed by the pool coordinator, subject to the final approval of the court.

(2) The court shall retain ultimate control of the application of these rules over the broadcasting, recording, or photographing of a trial. Decisions made as to the details are final and are not subject to appeal. The court may in its discretion terminate the broadcasting, recording, or photographing at any time. Such a decision should not be made in an effort to edit the proceedings but only as one necessary in the interest of justice.

(3) The media pool may have two cameras in the courtroom during the course of a trial. One camera shall be used for still photography, and one camera shall be used for television photography. Both cameras shall remain in stationary positions outside the bar of the courtroom. Videotape recording and other electronic equipment not a component part of the cameras shall be located in an area remote from the courtroom to be designated by the court.

(4) One additional audio system for radio broadcasting shall be permitted provided that all microphones and related essential wiring will be unobtrusive and located in places designated in advance by the basic courtroom plan. The pool coordinator shall permit the installation of a pickup distribution box to be located outside the courtroom area to allow additional agencies access to the audio feed.

(5) Only television or photographic equipment that does not require distracting sound or light shall be employed to cover court proceedings. No artificial lighting device shall be employed in connection with television cameras. Any court approved alterations in existing lighting or wiring shall be accomplished by and at the expense of the media pool.

(6) Camera and audio equipment shall be installed or removed only when the court is not in session. Film changes shall not be made while court is in session.

No audio equipment shall be used to record conversations between attorneys and clients or conversations between attorneys and the court held outside the hearing of the jury.

(7) Electronic devices shall not be used in the courtroom to broadcast, record, photograph, e-mail, blog, tweet, text, post, or transmit by any other means except as may be allowed by the court.

(8) If a court has its own broadcasting, recording, or photography system, the court's system shall be used, subject to the provisions of this Order, unless different or additional arrangements are necessary in the court's discretion.

(9) The Supreme Court and Court of Appeals may make audio and video recordings of oral arguments and other proceedings.

A. Oral arguments and other appellate proceedings may be recorded, broadcasted or webcasted through a live or tape-delayed format as the Supreme Court shall direct. Commercial and educational broadcasters may be allowed to connect to the court's systems for recording or broadcasting proceedings subject to the court's requirements.

B. Recordings will be maintained by the Clerk of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals and shall be retained until such time as the Supreme Court shall order their destruction. Copies of audio and video recordings may be made available to the public at a price representing the cost of copying as shall from time to time be established by the Supreme Court.

C. An objection under subsection (c)(1) of this Order to the broadcasting, recording, or photographing of an oral argument or other appellate proceeding shall be made to the court, and the court in its discretion shall decide whether broadcasting, recording, or photographing will be permitted.

(e) Contempt. Failure to abide by any provision of this Order can result in a citation for contempt against the news representative and his or her agency.

HISTORY: Adopted July 5, 1993; amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001; amended May 27, 2010; amended July 27, 2011, effective August 1, 2011.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 7 — ARKANSAS
SUPREME COURT AND COURT OF APPEALS RECORDS RETENTION SCHEDULE

Rule

- Section 1. Statement of policy.
- Section 2. Transfer of permanent records.
- Section 3. Alternatives to permanent retention.
- Section 4. Disposal of records.
- Section 5. Records omitted.
- Section 6. Retention schedule.

Rule

Section 7. Definitions.

Section 1. Statement of policy.

Unless otherwise provided by law or as set forth herein, all records of the Arkansas Supreme Court and Court of Appeals shall be permanently maintained.

Section 2. Transfer of permanent records.

a. Physical custody of any record to be maintained permanently, may be transferred to any institution which maintains a special collections department by letter agreement upon approval by the Arkansas Supreme Court. Title to records which must be permanently maintained shall remain with the Arkansas Supreme Court.

b. The Clerk shall permanently maintain a log of transferred records. The log shall list record series, description of records transferred, to whom transferred, and the date of transfer.

Section 3. Alternatives to permanent retention.

a. Once microfilmed in a manner approved by the Administrative Office of the Courts, any paper record may be destroyed or donated by the Clerk, regardless of the number of years stated for retention in the Retention Schedule found in Section 6 below.

b. Once the period of retention has expired, or the record has been microfilmed, whichever occurs first, the paper record may be donated, transferring full title possession to any institution which maintains a special collections department.

c. Any interested institution shall advise the Clerk of the institution's desire to receive notification when records become available for donation or transfer. The Clerk shall determine the recipient of the record(s) where more than one institution requests custody or custody and title. Records which are available for donation or transfer and which have not been requested within ninety (90) days of the notification shall be subject to disposal as set forth in Section 4 below.

d. The Clerk shall permanently maintain a log of donated records. The log shall list record series, descriptions of records donated, to whom donated, and date of donation.

Section 4. Disposal of records.

a. When records have been damaged or destroyed by decay, vermin, fire, water, or by other means which renders them illegible, the Clerk may dispose of the remains as provided in subsection b.

b. Records shall be disposed of by burning, shredding, recycling, or by depositing them in a public landfill.

c. Exhibits shall be disposed of as provided in Rule 3-6 of the Rules of the Arkansas Supreme Court and Court of Appeals.

d. The Clerk shall permanently maintain a log of disposed of records. The log shall list record series, descriptions of records disposed of, and method and date of disposal.

Section 5. Records omitted.

a. Any record not listed in the Records Retention Schedule shall be maintained permanently or until provided for otherwise in the retention schedule.

b. Omitted records should be brought to the attention of the Administrative Office of the Courts by letter which includes a description of the record, age of the record, and such photocopies as will assist in understanding the content and purpose.

c. Any recommendations for changes in the Retention Schedule should be brought to the attention of the Administrative Office of the Courts.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 8 — FORMS FOR REPORTING CASE INFORMATION IN ALL ARKANSAS COURTS

- Rule
- Section I. Scope.
- Section II. Responsibility for forms.
- Section III. Procedure.

Section I. Scope.

- a. In every action filed in the circuit courts, a form designed for the uniform collection of case data shall be submitted with the initial pleading and again at final disposition. The forms shall be used in assigning and allocating cases and to collect statistical case data. The forms shall not be admissible as evidence in any court proceeding or replace or supplement the filing and service of pleadings, orders, or other papers as required by law or the rules of this Court.
- b. In the event that a jurisdiction has implemented electronic filing pursuant to Administrative Order Number 21, the Administrative Office of the Courts shall have the authority to waive the utilization of the forms required by this order to the extent that the information can be submitted through the electronic-filing system.

HISTORY: Amended December 15, 2011, effective January 1, 2012; amended October 11, 2018, effective January 1, 2019.

Section II. Responsibility for forms.

- a. Administrative Office of the Courts. The Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) shall be responsible for the content and format of the forms after consultation with other appropriate agencies or as may be required by law. The AOC shall be responsible for training in the use of these forms and for initial dissemination of the forms.

b. Court clerk. For the purposes of this administrative order, court clerk means an elected circuit clerk in whose office a pleading, order, judgment, or decree is filed, as well as any deputy clerks in those offices. Court clerk also means any county clerk who serves as ex officio clerk of the probate division of the circuit court pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 14-14-502(b)(2)(B) for this limited purpose.

The court clerk shall not accept an initial pleading or final order that is not accompanied by the appropriate form, except as provided elsewhere in this order. The court clerk shall maintain a supply of forms to ensure their availability to attorneys or self-represented litigants. The court clerk shall report the data electronically to the AOC unless otherwise permitted by the AOC.

c. Attorney or self-represented litigant. The attorney or self-represented litigant filing the initial pleading is responsible for completing the appropriate form and submitting it with the pleading. The attorney or self-represented litigant submitting the final order, or trial court staff as designated by the court, shall complete the disposition information on the appropriate reporting form, and that form shall be submitted to the court clerk.

HISTORY: Amended October 11, 2018, effective January 1 2019.

Section III. Procedure.

a. Completeness. Forms accompanying the initial pleading shall be sufficiently complete to enable identification of the parties and to provide essential case information. Forms accompanying final orders shall be sufficiently complete to allow the clerk to enter accurate information to close the case.

b. Retention. Except as provided elsewhere in this order, once data have been entered and transmitted electronically to the AOC, forms may be discarded and shall be excluded from public access as permitted by Administrative Order No. 19.

c. Civil, probate, juvenile, and domestic-relations cases. If a complaint asserts multiple claims involving different subject matter divisions, the cover sheet for the type of case most definitive of the nature of the case should be submitted. Attorneys or self-represented litigants should be cognizant that claims that are wholly unrelated may be severed and proceeded with separately under Rule 18(b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure.

d. Criminal cases. A separate cover sheet shall be provided for each defendant. The office of the prosecuting attorney shall be responsible for completing either the Sentencing Order or the Reporting Form for Defense-Related Dispositions for each case, accounting for every charge in the initial or any amended pleading. The appropriate form shall be submitted to the circuit judge for signature and filed with the court clerk. The clerk shall report the data electronically to the AOC pursuant to section (II)(b) and forward a copy of the form to counsel of record for the defendant.

When any charge results in a commitment to the Arkansas Department of Correction or any of the following—probation, suspended imposition of sentence, commitment to Arkansas Community Correction or to the county jail, a fine, restitution, and/or court costs—the Sentencing Order shall be submitted.

When every charge is dismissed or nolle prossed, the case is transferred, or the defendant is acquitted, including an acquittal resulting from the defendant's mental disease or defect, the Reporting Form for Defense-Related Dispositions shall be submitted.

The Sentencing Order and Reporting Form for Defense-Related Dispositions should not be discarded, and they are publicly accessible under the terms of Administrative Order No. 19.

HISTORY: Adopted February 26, 1996; amended April 14, 1997; amended December 4, 1997; amended effective July 1, 2000; amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001, except section II.(c) [Multiple claims] effective January 1, 2002; amended November 1, 2001, effective January 1, 2002; amended February 9, 2011, effective April 1, 2011; amended December 15, 2011, effective January 1, 2012; amended October 11, 2018, effective January 1, 2019.

Publisher's Notes.

The per curiam order of November 1, 2001, declared the effective date of the amendment was to be January 1, 2001, to coincide with the effective date of revised cover sheets. The Publisher has construed this to mean January 1, 2002, as reflected in the rule's history line.

Commentary

Notes to Amendments (2019). The amendments involve simplification, clean-up, clarification of old language, and changes resulting from the adoption of the new cover sheets and disposition sheets in 2017.

Section (I) eliminates some obsolete language and adds a paragraph contemplating the ability to submit coversheet information through the electronic-filing system. When all data is received through eFlex, a cover sheet will not be required.

Section (II) adds clarifying language to the meaning of "court clerk" consistent with Amendment 80. Most significantly, the change requires clerks to report electronically to the AOC so that the AOC can end the receipt and data entry of paper from courts. This section also clarifies who is responsible for completing the cover and disposition sheets.

Section (III)(a) clarifies completeness required in order to decrease the number of improperly rejected filings by clerks. Section (III)(d) requires a separate criminal coversheet for each defendant and clarifies the requirement for Sentencing Orders and the Reporting Form for Defense-Related Dispositions. Cover sheets and disposition forms are not required to be file marked or retained. Sentencing Orders and Reporting Forms for Defense-Related Dispositions must be file marked and retained. The form for Defense-Related Dispositions is no longer appended to this order and, as with other forms, is available on the court's website.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 9 — COMPENSATORY TIME RECORD POLICY FOR ARKANSAS OFFICIAL COURT REPORTERS

A. Procedures. To ensure statewide compliance with the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. § 207(o)(6)), each official court reporter shall complete the time records required by the Administrative Office of the Courts ("AOC"), sign the time records to certify that they correctly report all hours worked in excess of the 40 hour work week that are not excluded by 29 U.S.C. § 207(o), and monthly submit the records to his/her appointing judge for approval. The time record forms shall be approved by the Arkansas Supreme Court, which is authorized to amend them from time to time as may be necessary.

The appointing judge shall approve and sign each monthly record certifying that, to the best of his/her knowledge, the time record reflects a true and accurate record of compensatory time earned for all hours worked in excess of the 40 hour work week, as defined by the Fair Labor Standards Act ("FLSA"). The appointing judge shall grant the court reporter compensatory time at the rate of one and one-half times the number of hours worked in excess of the 40 hour work week pursuant to this policy.

For the purpose of determining the 40 hour FLSA work week, the established work week shall begin on Saturday at 12:01 a.m. and continue through Friday at 12:00 midnight. Any time excluded by 29 U.S.C. § 207(o) and any time taken off for holidays, compensatory time leave, sick leave, annual leave or any other purpose during the week shall not be counted in determining whether the employee has worked 40 hours.

The appointing judge shall be responsible for maintaining the approved time record and shall forward copies to the AOC at the time and in the manner directed by the AOC. The time records shall be retained by the AOC for the period required by law.

Court reporters shall be permitted to use accrued compensatory time as soon as possible when the court is not in session and without unduly disrupting the operations of the court. The appointing judge shall approve use of compensatory time. Compensatory time may be used in lieu of sick leave or annual leave.

Under no circumstances shall the outstanding balance of compensatory time exceed 90 hours. The appointing judges are responsible for ensuring that court reporters do not exceed this maximum balance of compensatory time.

Accrued compensatory time should be used prior to the employee's termination of employment. If accrued compensatory time is not used prior to the employee's termination of employment, the appointing judge shall hold the official court reporter position vacant for a period equivalent to the period for which accrued compensatory time is paid. The payment for compensatory time shall be at the ending rate of pay for the employee.

The compensatory time records for official reporters is not intended for use by substitute court reporters. Substitute court reporters shall be governed by the provisions of Ark. Code Ann. § 16-13-509 as described in the AOC publication, Arkansas State Trial Court Employment Guide.

B. Enforcement.

(i) The failure of court reporters to comply with the requirements of this Order shall constitute grounds for discipline under the provisions of Section 19(c) of the Regulations of the Board of Certified Court Reporter Examiners and Section 7 of the Rule Providing for Certification of Court Reporters.

(ii) The failure of appointing judges to comply with the requirements of this Order shall constitute grounds for discipline under the provisions of Canon 3(C) of the Arkansas Code of Judicial Conduct.

HISTORY: Adopted December 23, 1996, effective January 1, 1997; amended October 22, 2015.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 10 — CHILD SUPPORT GUIDELINES

Rule

Section I. Authority and Scope.

Section II. Use of the Guidelines.

Section III. Gross Income.

Section IV. Health Insurance, Extraordinary Medical Expenses, and Childcare Costs.

Section V. Computation of Child Support.

Section VI. Miscellaneous Provisions.

Publisher's Notes.

The April 2, 2020 Per Curiam provides: "The court hereby adopts and implements the revised Administrative Order No. 10. Effective immediately, the new guidelines may be used as an alternative to the previous version of Administrative Order No. 10. The new guidelines shall be used for all support orders entered after June 30, 2020.”

Section I. Authority and Scope.

Pursuant to Act 948 of 1989, as amended, codified at Ark. Code Ann. § 9-12-312(a) and the Family Support Act of 1988, Pub. L. No. 100-485 (1988), the Court adopted and published Administrative Order Number 10, titled “Child Support Guidelines” (“Guidelines”). Pursuant to Act 907 of 2019, codified at Ark. Code Ann. § 9-12-312(a)(4), the attached revised monthly “Family Support Chart” (“Chart”) is based on an Income Shares Model. The attached Chart therefore supersedes any prior payor-income-based family support chart. (Section II.1 discusses when this Administrative Order’s incorporation of the Income Shares Model affects existing child-support orders.) This Administrative Order includes and incorporates by reference the “Forms” Addendum: Sample Calculation, Sample Language for Child-Support Orders, Family Support Chart, Child-Support Worksheet (“Worksheet”), and the revised Affidavit of Financial Means.

These Guidelines are based on the Income Shares Model, developed by the Child Support Guidelines Project of the National Center for State Courts. The Income Shares Model is based on the concept that children should receive the same proportion of parental income that they would have received had the parents lived together and shared financial resources. The best available economic data on child-rearing expenditures was used to develop the model. A more detailed explanation of the Income Shares Model and the underlying economic evidence used to support it is contained in Development of Guidelines for Child Support Orders, Report to the Federal Office of Child Support Enforcement, September 1987 (National Center for State Courts, Denver, Colorado). The September 2019 Review of the Arkansas Child Support Guidelines, an Analysis of Economic Data, Development of Income Shares Charts, and Other Considerations, prepared by Jane Venohr, Ph.D., is available at www.arcourts.gov/forms-and-publications/arkansas-child-support-guidelines.

Under the revised Family Support Chart, each parent’s share is that parent’s prorated share of the two parents’ combined income. The Chart reflects the average amount of money that families in the United States spend on their children. Differences between Arkansas prices and prices across the United States more generally have been accounted for using an index that the U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis (BEA) developed. The Chart also considers and accounts for:

- federal and state income taxes and FICA;
- average child-rearing expenditures using current measurements developed by Professor David Betson using the Rothbarth methodology to separate the children’s share of expenditures from total expenditures;
- out-of-pocket medical expenses of $250.00 per child per year.

The Chart excludes parental expenditures for work-related childcare, the child’s share of health insurance premiums, and out-of-pocket medical expenses over $250.00 per child per year.

These Guidelines and the accompanying Worksheet assume that the parent to whom support is owed (payee parent) is spending his or her calculated share directly on the child. For the parent with the obligation to pay support (payor parent), the pro-rata charted amount establishes the base level of child support to be given to the payee parent. The base amount may, however, be adjusted to account for work-related childcare expenditures, the child's share of the health insurance premium, out-of-pocket medical expenses exceeding $250.00 per child per year, the self-support reserve, or other factors a court determines to be in the best interest of a child or children.

HISTORY: Amended April 26, 2007, effective May 3, 2007; republished with revisions June 14, 2007; republished with revisions April 2, 2020.

CASE NOTES

Allowance.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in deviating from the child support chart provided by this section and by disallowing a mother's request for a $3,000 allowance per month so that she could work part-time or not at all because considering the child support chart, evidence, testimony, and exhibits, the trial court determined that the increase to $10,317 per month was reasonable and allowed both homes to provide for the children in like manner; the trial court found that the presumptive amount of monthly support provided by the family support chart was rebutted based on credible evidence, the testimony, the exhibits, and the needs of the children. Gilbow v. Travis, 2010 Ark. 9, 372 S.W.3d 319 (2010).

Deviation from Guidelines.

Trial court erred because it did not follow the child support guidelines in awarding retroactive child support and it did not take into account the child's best interests when it deviated from the chart amount in awarding prospective child support; in addition, the trial court failed to reference the child-support guidelines in either its letter opinion or in its judgment and failed to apply the deviation factors in this section. Akins v. Mofield, 355 Ark. 215, 132 S.W.3d 760 (2003).

Trial court erred in reducing appellee mother's child support obligation to $24 per week without considering estimates of her income for the first quarter of 2003; the evidence showed that appellee had from $7,167.32 to $8,441.32 per month in income during the first quarter of 2003 and, at that level, child support should have been set at $250.02 weekly. Huey v. Huey, 90 Ark. App. 98, 204 S.W.3d 92 (2005).

Father was allowed to claim the youngest child as a dependent and receive a tax exemption where the circuit court determined that the mother had not been employed since the birth of the last child and that the support of $4,653.00 per month for the child in the mother's custody was more than 50% of the support required to maintain the child in her lifestyle. Hill v. Kelly, 368 Ark. 200, 243 S.W.3d 886 (2006).

Husband stipulated to the amount of his income, and the court set child support based upon the chart, and the payment of counseling was a factor for a court to consider when determining whether to deviate from the chart amount; because there was no deviation from the chart amount, the trial court was not required to make any written findings and the husband's income was such that he could readily afford to bear the expense of the children's counseling. Rudder v. Hurst, 2009 Ark. App. 577, 337 S.W.3d 565 (2009).

Factors Considered.

Circuit court, in figuring father's income, properly ruled that the child support modifications were set on February 6, 2003, the effective date of the filing of the motion to modify; the circuit court's order contained substantial calculations of the father's income based upon previous tax returns that showed a material change in circumstances to justify a modification of child support. Hill v. Kelly, 368 Ark. 200, 243 S.W.3d 886 (2006).

Circuit court properly imputed to mother a minimum-wage income for child support for two older children in the amount of $6,694 where the father did not present evidence as to the mother's lifestyle or earning capacity. Hill v. Kelly, 368 Ark. 200, 243 S.W.3d 886 (2006).

Where the father's income of $540,217.00 exceeded that shown on the chart, he was directed to pay child support under § III(b) of this order in the amount of twenty-one percent of his income; upon a loss of $63,078.00 in income, the trial court erred by reducing his child support obligation from $8,333.00 to $7,607.75 as the award was a deviation downward from the family support chart. Morehouse v. Lawson, 94 Ark. App. 374, 231 S.W.3d 86 (2006).

Where the husband was ordered to pay 21 percent of his net income of $476,171.00 in monthly child support, he failed to rebut the presumption that the chart amount was proper; considering the factors set forth in this section, the court found that the husband lived extravagantly and had sufficient assets to buy a $70,000.00 ring for his fiancée and donate $4,000.00 per month to charity. Morehouse v. Lawson, 94 Ark. App. 374, 231 S.W.3d 86 (2006).

Benefits received by children from social security are properly considered for purposes of a downward deviation under this order; however, a father was not entitled to a full credit for the amount that his children received from social security. Lee v. Lee, 95 Ark. App. 69, 233 S.W.3d 698 (2006).

In a divorce action, a trial court did not err when it relied on a former husband's total net income and averaged the husband's salary to determine income for child support payments, which were presumptively proper under the guidelines and family support chart of Ark. Code Ann. § 9-12-312(a)(2) and this order. Taylor v. Taylor, 369 Ark. 31, 250 S.W.3d 232 (2007).

Circuit court did not clearly err in finding that the husband's income for child-support purposes was that reflected on his tax returns; it was clear that the husband's ownership in the limited partnership was a significant portion of his net worth; thus, that ownership interest would be a proper consideration. Brown v. Brown, 373 Ark. 333, 284 S.W.3d 17 (2008), overruled in part as stated in Johnson v. Young, 2017 Ark. App. 132, 515 S.W.3d 159 (2017), overruled as stated in Beck v. Beck, 2017 Ark. App. 311, 521 S.W.3d 543 (2017).

Circuit court erred in ordering a father to pay child support and child support arrearage because the circuit court's order did not contain a determination of the father's income, did not refer to the guidelines pursuant to § 9-12-312(a)(2) or the support amount required thereunder, and did not recite whether it deviated from the family-support chart as required under this order; under this section, the circuit court's order shall (1) contain the circuit court's determination of the payor's income, (2) recite the amount of support required under the guidelines, and (3) recite whether the circuit court deviated from the family support chart. Bradford v. Johnson, 2010 Ark. App. 492 (2010).

Trial court did not clearly err in setting child support based on the evidence in the record, as well as the amount of spousal support; child and spousal support were set at the temporary hearing, where the father testified about his income, and since that time, the father did not prove his income otherwise and he failed to appear at the final hearing. Deline v. Deline, 2019 Ark. App. 562, 591 S.W.3d 365 (2019).

Fluctuating Income.

Because the trial court was required to consult Administrative Order No. 10 for guidance, and there is no provision that requires an averaging method of calculating support when a payor's income fluctuates, the trial court did not err as a matter of law in not using the father's tax returns to average his income over a three- or four-year period; the only portion of Admin. Order No. 10 that directs the trial court to utilize a payor's tax returns to calculate support is the section involving self-employed payors, a finding not made with respect to the father in this case. Fischer (Jaskiewicz) v. Fis- cher, 2018 Ark. App. 519, 563 S.W.3d 601 (2018).

Modification.

Where the father was awarded child custody and the mother was ordered to pay child support based on the child-support chart rate set forth in this order, she was not entitled to a reduction in child support based on allegations that she could not make ends meet while the father was placing some of the child support funds into his savings account. The mother did not show a change of circumstances, nor did she rebut the presumption that the amount of child support awarded under the family-support chart was reasonable. Hubanks v. Baughman, 2009 Ark. App. 585 (2009).

Net-Worth Method.

Where father's tax returns were unreliable due to discrepancies in his testimony, a trial court did not err by using the net-worth method to determine his obligation since such was authorized under this rule; however, the order should have been made retroactive under § 9-14-107(d) to when the petition was filed. Tucker v. Tucker, 96 Ark. App. 194, 239 S.W.3d 532 (2006), aff'd, 368 Ark. 481, 247 S.W.3d 485 (2007).

Increase in the father's child support was proper as the circuit court first considered the father's tax returns and it was only after finding the tax returns unreliable that the circuit court proceeded to the net-worth approach; the reviewing court could not say that the circuit court's use of the net-worth approach in determining the father's disposable income was clearly erroneous. Tucker v. Office of Child Support Enforcement, 368 Ark. 481, 247 S.W.3d 485 (2007).

Order Deficient.

Trial court erred by awarding back child support to be paid by the legal father of a child because the order did not contain a determination of the father's income, did not refer to the guidelines or the support amount required thereunder, and did not recite whether there was a deviation from the family support chart. Madison v. Osburn, 2012 Ark. App. 212, 396 S.W.3d 264 (2012), overruled in part, Furr v. James, 2013 Ark. App. 181, 427 S.W.3d 94 (2013).

Where a child support order lacked a determination of a former husband's income, reference to the guidelines, and a recitation of whether the trial court deviated from the family support chart, it was insufficient. Ryburn v. Ryburn, 2014 Ark. App. 108, 432 S.W.3d 102 (2014).

Trial court clearly erred in failing to award the mother child-support arrearages for the period between the date when the father stopped providing voluntary support for the child to the date the father filed his petition to establish paternity as the father had never disputed his paternity and had paid child support or shared expenses previously. Henderson v. Johnston, 2017 Ark. App. 620, 534 S.W.3d 196 (2017).

Quarterly Accounting.

Trial court did not err in dismissing husband's petition for a quarterly accounting of child support payments where he failed to demonstrate an accounting was warranted; husband paid $570 per month, and wife paid $250 per month for medical insurance alone, leaving her with a little over $300 per month to provide the son with shelter, food, clothes, and any other day-to-day necessity. Schueler v. Schueler, 86 Ark. App. 347, 185 S.W.3d 107 (2004).

Self-Employed Payors.

Trial court erred in calculating husband's child support obligation because it did not follow the child support guidelines in calculating his income; this rule requires that child support for self-employed payors be calculated based on the last two years' federal and state income tax returns, but husband's income was calculated solely on one year's tax returns. Cole v. Cole, 89 Ark. App. 134, 201 S.W.3d 21 (2005).

For self-employed payors, the circuit court should first consider the last two years' federal and state income tax returns and the quarterly estimates for the current year, including contributions made to retirement plans, alimony paid, self-employed insurance paid, depreciation to the extent that it reflects the actual decrease in value of an asset and, if the circuit court determines that the tax returns are unreliable, then it shall make specific findings explaining the basis of its determination; the circuit court shall then proceed using the net-worth method, and the circuit court shall establish a beginning net worth at the start of the relevant period and an ending net worth at the end of the period, considering living expenses and allowable deductions for the same period. Tucker v. Office of Child Support Enforcement, 368 Ark. 481, 247 S.W.3d 485 (2007).

In a child support case, a trial court did not err by imputing minimum wage earnings to an unemployed father; Ark. Sup. Ct. Admin. Order No. 10(c) was not used because the father was not self-employed. Norman v. Cooper, 101 Ark. App. 446, 278 S.W.3d 569 (2008).

Section II. Use of the Guidelines.

There is a rebuttable presumption that the amount of child support calculated pursuant to the most recent revision of the Family Support Chart and these Guidelines is the amount to be awarded in any judicial proceeding for divorce, separation, paternity, guardianship, or child support.

In addition to an initial award for child support or the modification of an existing obligation, these Guidelines should be used to assess the adequacy of agreements for child support and to encourage parties to settle support-related disputes in a comprehensive manner.

These Guidelines provide calculated amounts of child support for a combined parental gross income of up to $30,000.00 per month, or $360,000.00 per year. The child-support obligation for incomes above $30,000.00 per month shall be determined by using the highest amount in these Guidelines. The court may then use its discretion in setting an amount above that to meet the needs of the child and the parent's ability to provide support.

These Guidelines assume that the payor parent has the minor child(ren) overnight in his or her residence less than 141 overnights per calendar year.¹

1. Modification of Existing Child-Support Obligation:

Pursuant to Act 904 of 2019, codified at Arkansas Code Annotated § 9-14-107(c)(2), "an inconsistency between the existing child-support award and the amount of child support that results from application of the Family Support Chart shall constitute a material change of circumstances sufficient to petition the court for modification of child support according to the Family Support Chart after appropriate deductions unless:

a. The inconsistency does not meet a reasonable quantitative standard established by the State of Arkansas in accordance with subsection (a) of this section;

b. The inconsistency is due to the fact that the amount of the current there has not been a change of circumstances that resulted in the rebuttal of the guidelines amount; or

c. The inconsistency is due solely to a promulgation to a revision of the Family Support Chart.”²

2. Deviation from the Chart:

All orders granting or modifying child support shall contain the court’s determination of the payor’s income, payee’s income, recite the amount of support required under these Guidelines, and state whether the court deviated from the presumptive child-support calculation set by the Worksheet and these Guidelines. If an order deviates from the Guidelines amount, then the order must explain the reason(s) for the deviation. When deciding whether the Worksheet-based amount is unjust or inappropriate, the court must consider all the relevant factors, including what is in the child’s or children’s best interest. A deviation from these Guidelines should be the exception rather than the rule. If a court chooses to deviate from the Guidelines amount, then it must make written findings and explain the deviation. It shall be sufficient in a particular case to rebut the presumption that the amount of child support calculated pursuant to the Worksheet is correct if the court provides in the order a specific written finding that the Worksheet-based amount is unjust or inappropriate. When determining whether to deviate from the Guidelines’ amount, a court should consider the following:

a. Educational expenses for the child(ren) (i.e., those incurred for private or parochial schools, or other schools where there are tuition or related costs) and/or the provision or payment of special education needs or expenses for the child(ren);

b. The procurement and/or maintenance of life insurance, dental insurance, and/or other insurance for the children’s benefit (for health insurance premiums, see Section II.2 infra);

c. Extraordinary travel expenses for court-ordered visitation;

d. Significant available income of the child(ren);

e. The creation or maintenance of a trust fund for the children;

f. The support given by a parent for minor children in the absence of a court order;

g. Extraordinary time spent with the payor parent;

h. Additional expenses incurred because of natural or adopted children living in the home, including stepchildren if the court finds there is a court-ordered responsibility to a stepchild;

i. The provision for payment of work-related childcare, extraordinary medical expenses for the child in excess of $250.00 per year per child, and/or health insurance premiums. Ordinarily, these expenses will be divided pro

In that scenario, it shall not support a deviation. However, if the court chooses not to add them in the total child-support obligation, they could support a deviation; and

j. Any other factors that warrant a deviation.

3. Self-Support Reserve, Minimum Order, and Deviation from the Minimum Order:

In cases where the payor parent's monthly gross income is less than $900.00, the Chart applies a self-support reserve (SSR). The SSR considers the basic subsistence needs of the payor parent and is based on the Federal Poverty Guidelines multiplied by Arkansas's price parity. Arkansas's price parity is the index used to adjust the Chart to reflect Arkansas prices. If the payor parent's child-support amount pursuant to the chart is based solely on the payor parent's gross income and corresponding number of children falls within the shaded area of the Chart, then the basic child-support obligation and the payor parent's total child-support obligation are computed using only the payor parent's income. In these cases, health insurance premiums, extraordinary medical expenses, and childcare expenses shall not be used to calculate the total child-support obligation. However, payment of these costs by either parent may be used as a reason to deviate from these Guidelines.

When the payor parent's monthly gross income is less than $900.00, a presumptive minimum award of $125.00 per month must issue unless a party can rebut the presumptive amount by a preponderance of the evidence. Some factors that a court may consider when deciding whether a party has rebutted the minimum order amount include but are not limited to the following:

- a. There is a large adjustment due to parenting time;
- b. The payor is incarcerated (see Section II.4 below);
- c. The payor is institutionalized due to a mental illness or other impairment;
- d. The payor has a verified physical disability that precludes work;
- e. The payor's only income is Supplemental Security Income (SSI);
- f. The payor's ability or inability to work; or
- g. Any other deviation factor listed above in Subsection II.2 or any income imputation factor listed below in Section III.7.

4. Incarcerated Individuals

Pursuant to Act 904 of 2019, codified at Arkansas Code Annotated § 9-12-312(a), § 9-14-106(a), and § 9-14-107(a), the incarceration of a parent shall be treated as involuntary unemployment for the purpose of establishing or modifying an award of child support. "Incarceration" means a conviction that results in a sentence of confinement to a local jail, state or federal correctional facility, or state psychiatric hospital for at least 180 days and excludes credit for time served before sentencing.

CASE NOTES

Deductions.

Father could not deduct the child support of his two daughters because they were his children with the mother. Johnson v. Young, 2017 Ark. App. 132, 515 S.W.3d 159 (2017).

directly to a noncustodial parent's children as a result of that parent's disability. Ark. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Hearst, 2009 Ark. 599, 357 S.W.3d 450 (2009).

It was error for the court to calculate the husband's income based on his tax returns after determining that the tax returns were not credible, because the court found that the husband was earning more than his reported Income.

The term income, as defined by this section, includes Social Security Disability benefits paid $40,000 salary and questioned him regarding his underemployment. John v. Bolinder, 2013 Ark. App. 224 (2013).

It was error for a trial court to deny a mother's child support modification motion based on an inability to determine if income a father concealed was regular or a one-time payment because 'income,' for child support purposes, was broadly defined to include non-periodic payments. Hall v. Hall, 2013 Ark. 330, 429 S.W.3d 219 (2013).

Considering that the definition of income is intentionally broad and designed to encompass the widest range of sources for the support of minor children, the trial court abused its discretion in failing to include either certain bonus amounts and employer contributions in the father's income calculation or explain why these amounts should not be included. Riddick v. Harris, 2016 Ark. App. 426, 501 S.W.3d 859 (2016).

Self-employed father proved no material change in circumstances warranting a child support reduction because income calculations did not properly account for the retained earnings of the father's subchapter S corporation or for other available income. Troutman v. Troutman, 2017 Ark. 139, 516 S.W.3d 733 (2017).

On the record before it, the appellate court could not conclude that the circuit court erred by declining to include the increase in value of the father's stock portfolio as income in calculating child support, as the record was insufficient to establish that the portfolio activity constituted income as defined in Administrative Order Number 10. Dare v. Frost, 2018 Ark. 83, 540 S.W.3d 281 (2018).

Under the broad definition of income in Administrative Order 10 and under the specific facts of the case, the Court of Appeals could not say that the circuit's court treatment of the father's tax refunds as income constituted reversible error; the divorce decree permitted the father to claim one child as a dependent each year. Morgan v. Morgan, 2018 Ark. App. 316, 552 S.W.3d 10 (2018).

Trial court did not clearly err or abuse its discretion in finding that the husband's average weekly net income for child-support purposes was $2,000, nor in finding that the difference in the wife's and husband's incomes justified ordering the husband to pay for the other needs of the child. Steeland v. Steeland, 2018 Ark. App. 551, 562 S.W.3d 269 (2018).

Requiring the wife to make a one-time payment of $1.25 million in child support to the husband per a provision in the divorce decree was error where the assets of the wife's inheritance did not constitute income under Admin. Order No. 10, § II, and there was no evidence of the children's needs. None of the assets that were part of the $5 million inheritance had been liquidated and the parties had joint custody. Grimsley v. Drewyor, 2019 Ark. App. 218, 575 S.W.3d 636 (2019).

Section III. Gross Income.

1. Definitions:

"Income" means the actual gross income of the parent, if employed to full capacity, or potential income if unemployed or underemployed as allowed under Section III.7. Gross income is used to avoid disputes over issues of deductibility that would arise if a net income was used.

These Guidelines presume that the parent with the legal obligation to pay support will file federal taxes as a single individual and have only one state exemption. Adjustments have been made in the Chart for federal and state income taxes, FICA, and average child-rearing expenditures (for example, out-of-pocket medical expenses of $250.00 per child per year).

The monthly child-support amount shall be converted to coincide with the payor's receipt of salary, wages, or other income. For purposes of computing gross monthly income, a month is 4.334 weeks. Bi-weekly means a party is paid once every two weeks, or 26 times during a calendar year. Semi-monthly means a person is paid twice a month, or 24 times per calendar year.

"Child Support Gross Income" means gross income-minus amounts for preexisting child-support obligations paid to another who is not a party to the proceedings and on behalf of a child who is not the subject of the action of the court. Child support arrearage payments shall not be considered in determining a payor's gross income.

"Combined Gross Income" means the combined gross income of both parties.

2. Gross Income Inclusions:

"Income" is "intentionally broad and designed to encompass the widest range of sources consistent with the State's policy to interpret 'income' broadly for the benefit of the child." Evans v. Tillery, 361 Ark. 63, 204 S.W.3d 547 (2005); Ford v. Ford, 347 Ark. 485, 65 S.W.3d 432 (2002); McWhorter v. McWhorter, 346 Ark. 475, 58 S.W.3d 840 (2001); Davis v. Office of Child Support Enforcement, 341 Ark. 349, 20 S.W. 3d 273 (2000).

Gross income includes, but is not limited to, the following:

i. Wages, overtime pay, commissions, regularly-received bonuses, or other monies from all employers or as a result of any employment (as usually reported in the Medicare, wages, and tips section of the parent's W-2).

ii. Earnings generated from a business, partnership, contract, self-employment, or other similar arrangement, or from rentals.

(a) Income (or losses) from a corporation should be carefully examined to determine the extent to which they were historically passed on to the parent or used merely as a tax strategy.

iii. Distributed profits or payments from profit-sharing, a pension or retirement, an insurance contract, an annuity, trust fund, deferred compensation, retirement account, social security disability payments, social security retirement payments, unemployment compensation, supplemental unemployment benefits, disability insurance or benefits, or worker's compensation.

(a) Consider insurance or other similar payments received as compensation for lost earnings, but do not include payments that compensate for actual medical bills or for property loss or damage.

(b) If a parent receives payments from an IRA, defined contribution, or deferred compensation plan, income does not include contributions to that account that were previously considered as the parent's income used to calculate an earlier child-support obligation for a child in this case. To the extent that the funds received are equivalent to the amount of the funds contributed by the parent while paying child support, that amount should be excluded from the computation of gross income.

(c) Social Security auxiliary benefits paid to children because of a parent's disability shall be income to the disabled parent. If either parent receives auxiliary benefits because of a spouse or children unrelated to the case before the court, that payment shall not be included as income.

iv. Military specialty pay, allowance for quarters and rations, housing, veterans' administration benefits, G.I. benefits (other than education allotment), or drill pay.

(a) If the service member receives housing pay and supports another home (i.e. second residence), housing pay is not considered income to the individual.

v. Tips, gratuities, royalties, interest, dividends, fees, or gambling or lottery winnings.

vi. Capital gains to the extent that they result from recurring transactions.

vii. The standard (basic needs) portion of adoption subsidies for children in the case under consideration (do not consider the medical needs and intensive rate portion of the subsidy, nor the family support subsidy as income).

viii. Any money or income due or owed by another individual, source of income, government, or other legal entity.

ix. Income also includes the market value of perquisites (perks) received as goods, services, or other noncash benefit for which the parent did not pay, if they reduce personal expenses, and have significant value or are received regularly.

(a) Common forms of perquisites (perks) or goods and services received in-kind include, but are not limited to, the following: housing, meals, or room and board, personal use of a company business vehicle or mileage reimbursement, including use between home and primary worksite, and other goods or services.

(b) Perquisites (perks) do not include money paid by an employer for benefits like tuition reimbursement, educational cost reimbursement, uniforms, and health savings account (HSA) contributions.

x. The court may consider assets available to generate income for child support. For example, the court may determine the reasonable earning potential of any asset at its market value and assess against it the current Treasury bill interest rate or some other similar appropriate method of computing income.

To further this State's policy of interpreting "income" broadly for the benefit of children, a support order may include as its basis a percentage of a bonus to be paid in the future. The child support attributable to a bonus amount (or another one-time source of money) shall be in addition to the periodic child-support obligation. This child-support obligation shall terminate when the underlying child-support obligation terminates. Variable income such as commissions, bonuses, overtime pay, military bonuses, and dividends shall be averaged by the court over a reasonable period of time consistent with the circumstances of the case and added to a parent's fixed salary or wages to determine gross income. When income is received on an irregular, nonrecurring, or one-time basis, the court may, but is not required to, average or prorate the income over a reasonable specified period of time or require the parent to pay as a one-time support amount a percentage of his or her nonrecurring income.

One-time sources of money like an inheritance, gambling or lottery winning, or liquidating a Certificate of Deposit, for example, is income for these Guidelines purposes (as detailed in the previous paragraph). If the receipt of an asset is not sold or otherwise disposed of, however, then it has not "realized a gain" and therefore is not income under these Guidelines.

3. Income from Self-employment, Business Owners, Executives, and Others

a. Difficulty in determining income for self-employed individuals, business owners, and others occurs for several reasons including:

i. These individuals often have types of income and expenses not frequently encountered when determining income for most people.

ii. Taxation rules, business records, and forms associated with business ownership and self-employment differ from those that apply to individuals employed by others. Common business documents reflect policies unrelated to an obligation to support one's child.

iii. Due to the control that business owners or executives exercise over the form and manner of their compensation, a parent, or a parent with the cooperation of a business owner or executive, may arrange compensation to reduce the amount visible to others looking for common forms of income.

b. To determine monies that a parent has available for support, it may be necessary to examine business tax returns, balance sheets, accounting or banking records, and other business documents to identify additional monies a parent has available for support that were not included as personal income. At a minimum, a self-employed parent shall provide their two most recent years of state and federal tax returns. The parent should provide three years of tax returns when there is a reduced, deferred, or elective income situation. Unless otherwise prohibited by law, the court may award expert witness fees when necessary to determine self-employed parent's income.

c. For income from self-employment, proprietorship of a business, or ownership or a partnership or closely held corporation, gross income is defined as gross receipts minus ordinary and necessary expenses required for self-employment or business operation, including an employer's share of FICA. However, the court should exclude from those expenses amounts allowed by the Internal Revenue Service for accelerated depreciation of investment tax credits for purposes of these Guidelines and add those amounts back in to determine gross income. In general, the court should carefully review income and expenses from a parent's self-employment or operation of a business to determine actual levels of gross income available to the parent. The court's duty is to accurately determine a child-support obligation in every case. This amount may differ from the determination of business income for tax purposes.

d. Whether organized informally, or as a corporation, a partnership, a sole proprietorship, or other arrangement or entity, these considerations apply to all forms of self-employment and business ownership, as well as to business executives and others who may receive similar forms of compensation.

e. For purposes of this subsection, income includes amounts that were not otherwise included as income elsewhere in this chapter. Special attention shall be given to the following forms of compensation:

i. Distributed profits, profit sharing, officers' fees and other compensation, management or consulting fees, commissions, and bonuses.

ii. In-kind income or perquisites (perks), gifts, free admission to entertainment, or personal use of business property. The value of these items must be based on a fair-market price, that is, the price a person not affiliated with the business would pay. In-kind payments received by a parent from self-employment, or the operation of a business is income if the payments are significant and reduce personal living expenses.

f. Redirected income, or amounts treated by the business or company as if the redirected amounts were something other than the parent's income. Amounts include, but are not limited to, the following:

i. Personal loans. Presume personal loans from a business are in fact redirected income, unless all the following are true: (1) the parent signed a contract or promissory note outlining the terms of the loan, (2) the business maintains records showing the loan owed as a receivable, (3) the parent makes installment payments and the present loan is paid current, and (4) the interest earned and repayment rate appear to be a reasonable business practice. Unless the presumption is overcome by a preponderance of the evidence, then a parent's income includes the difference between the amount the parent repays and a repayment amount for a similar commercially available unsecured personal loan.

ii. Payments made to friends or relatives of the parent. If the business cannot demonstrate that the payments are equivalent to a fair market value payment for the work or services the friend or relative performs, then include any amount that exceeds the fair-market value as the parent's income.

g. Reduced or deferred income. Because a parent's compensation can be rearranged to hide income, determine whether unnecessary reductions in salaries, fees, or distributed profits have occurred by comparing amounts and rates to historical patterns.

i. Unless the business can demonstrate legitimate reasons for a substantial reduction in the percentage of distributed profits, use a three-year average to determine the amount to include as a parent's income.

ii. Unless a business can demonstrate legitimate reasons for reductions (as a percentage of gross business income) in salaries, bonuses, management fees, or other amounts paid to a parent, use a three-year average to determine the amount to include as a parent's income.

h. Business income subject to elective treatment. Income that is subject to elective status (for example, retained income) may be considered as income after the court considers the circumstances and history of the elective treatment, which includes but is not limited to the status prior to the implementation of the support order. If a change in the status was made after the original election, then a court can either choose to include the income in child-support calculations or not include it in the calculations.

i. Deductions for Tax Purposes. For a variety of historical and policy reasons, the government allows considerable deductions for business-related expenses before taxes are calculated. Those same considerations are not always relevant to monies a parent should have available for child support. Therefore, some deductions should be added back into a parent's income for purposes of determining child support. The deductions include, but are not limited to, the following:

i. Rent paid by the business to the parent, if it is not counted as income on that parent's personal tax return.

ii. Real estate depreciation shall always be added back into a parent's income when calculating support.

iii. Depreciation figured at a straight-line (not accelerated) rate on a parent's (not a corporation's or partnership's) tangible personal property, other than for personal vehicles or home offices, shall be deducted from income. Any parent who uses accelerated depreciation for tangible personal property may deduct the value of the straight-line depreciation amount for property other than personal vehicles or home offices, if the parent proves what the straight-line amounts would have been.

iv. Home office expenses, including rent, hazard insurance, utilities, repairs, and maintenance.

v. Entertainment expenses spent by the parent. Legitimate expenses for customers' entertainment may be treated as deductions.

vi. Travel expense reimbursements, except where such expenses are inherent in the nature of the business or occupation (for example, a traveling salesperson), and do not exceed the standard rates allowed by the State of Arkansas for employee travel.

vii. Personal automobile repair and maintenance expenses.

4. Gross Income Exclusions:

Gross income does not include benefits received from means-tested public assistance programs, such as Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF), Supplemental Security Income (SSI) received for self or any child; Food Stamps and General Assistance; income derived by other household members; child support, adoption subsidy payments, and foster care board payments received for other children not involved in the case.

5. Spousal Support:

If a parent paying spousal support also pays child support to the same person, then the amount of alimony a former payee spouse may be receiving shall be reduced from the payor's gross income and added to the payee's gross income for purposes of determining income under the child-support calculation.

6. Other Child Support Paid:

Any previous or existing court orders requiring the payment of current child support shall receive priority over any subsequent child-support obligation. A subsequent support obligation shall not constitute the sole basis for a material change of circumstances sufficient to support a petition to the court for modification of a prior child-support order.

Current child support paid for the benefit of children other than those considered in this computation, to the extent such payment or payments are required by a previous court order, shall be deducted from gross income. Child support arrearage payments shall not be considered in determining a payor's gross income.

7. Income Verification:

The Affidavit of Financial Means and Worksheet shall be used in all family-support matters. Each party shall exchange the Affidavit of Financial Means and Worksheet at least three days before a hearing to establish or modify a support order. The Worksheet shall be filed in the court file and attached to the order that includes the child-support award. The Affidavit of Financial Means shall not be filed in the court file.

A court may rely on suitable documentation of current earnings, preferably for at least one month. Suitable documentation includes, but is not limited to, pay stubs, employer statements or verifications, and receipts and expenses if the parent is self-employed.

Verification of current earnings, whether they are reflected on the Affidavit of Financial Means or not, can be supported with copies of the most recent federal and state tax returns that a parent has filed.

Income can also be verified through the Department of Workforce Services or through the Department of Finance and Administration.

8. Income Imputation Considerations:

If imputation of income is ordered, the court must take into consideration the specific circumstances of both parents, to the extent known, including such factors as the parents' assets, residence, employment and earnings history, job skills, educational attainment, literacy, age, health, criminal record and other employment barriers, and record of seeking work, as well as the local job market, the availability of employers willing to hire the parent, prevailing earnings level in the local community, and other relevant background factors in the case.

There is a rebuttable presumption that the payor and the payee can work full-time or earn full-time income, and the court may calculate child support based on a determination of potential income that would otherwise ordinarily be available to the parties.

The court may consider a disability or the presence of young children or disabled children who must be cared for by the parent as being a reason why a parent is unable to work.

Although Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF) and other means-tested public assistance benefits are not included in gross income, income may be imputed to these recipients.

In addition to determining potential earnings, the court may impute income to any non-income producing assets of either parent, if significant, other than a primary residence or personal property. Examples of such assets are vacation homes (if not maintained as rental property) and idle land. The current rate determined by the court is the rate at which income may be imputed to such nonperforming assets.

CASE NOTES

Calculation.

Under subsection (c) of this rule, the trial court erred in the methodology that it used in calculating the husband's income for purposes of setting child support. Although he had been a self-employed payor in the past, his employment status changed to a direct employee on January 1, 2008, and had remained such since that time; thus, the trial court erred in treating him as a self-employed payor. Boudreaux v. Boudreaux, 2009 Ark. App. 685, 373 S.W.3d 329 (2009).

It was error for the court to calculate the husband's income based on his tax returns after determining that the tax returns were not credible, because the court found that the husband was earning more than his reported $40,000 salary and questioned him regarding his underemployment. John v. Bolinder, 2013 Ark. App. 224 (2013).

There was no rebuttal of the father's testimony regarding his income and the disability income received by his new wife and daughter that helped cover household expenses, and the trial court relied on the father's tax returns in determining his income, which was not clearly erroneous, and the court affirmed the reduction, but modified the retroactive application to a different date. Browning v. Browning, 2015 Ark. App. 104, 455 S.W.3d 863 (2015).

Circuit court did not use the correct method to calculate the father's income; it was unclear how the circuit court arrived at the father's "true income" of $3,300 a month, when his tax returns reflected something much larger. The circuit court made no findings that tax returns were unreliable and did not attempt to proceed to the next step concerning the net-worth approach, and remand was required. Johnson v. Young, 2017 Ark. App. 132, 515 S.W.3d 159 (2017).

Imputed Income.

Court did not abuse its discretion in imputing income to the father and reducing his monthly child support obligation by twenty percent, because while the father testified that his underemployment was reasonable, that he had aggressively searched for better employment and that he had a hard time finding a job due to his lack of education and mental issues, he offered no evidence to support his statements; the father introduced no evidence that he had applied for any jobs at all, in spite of the State's and the court's repeated requests for such information. Byrd v. Byrd, 2012 Ark. App. 589 (2012).

Determining whether the father was to be imputed any income at all, and if so, in what amount, was a matter left to the discretion of the trial court; the trial court is given discretion to determine appropriate child support income in a fact-intensive inquiry. Metz v. Langston, 2015 Ark. App. 319, 463 S.W.3d 305 (2015).

Issue was whether the trial court was justified in using a lower imputed income due to the father's health and unemployment condition when applying the Family Support Chart, and this was a matter of the trial court weighing the evidence, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in calculating the imputed income; there was no requirement to explain a deviation from the Family Support Chart because no deviation took place. Metz v. Langston, 2015 Ark. App. 319, 463 S.W.3d 305 (2015).

Because the father was unemployed, there existed a rebuttable presumption that the child support should be based on his zero income as applied to the support chart; the trial court could have rebutted that presumption by making written findings that the application of the support chart would be unjust or inappropriate, but the trial court did not make such findings and consequently erred in its calculation of child support. The trial court has the discretion to impute income, however, and the child support award was reversed and remanded for reassessment. Fox v. Fox, 2015 Ark. App. 367, 465 S.W.3d 18 (2015).

Finding a material change in circumstances warranting a reduction in the husband's child support obligation was not clear error where the circuit court found the husband's testimony as to why he left his job and the amount he would have made had he stayed credible and constituted reasonable cause for the departure. Langston v. Brown, 2016 Ark. App. 535, 506 S.W.3d 261 (2016).

Circuit court properly imputed income to a father, who was a self-employed farmer, and ordered the father to pay child support based on that imputed figure because the best evidence that the circuit court had was the father's bank records, and the court considered the relevant two years' worth of information in those records, as well as the factors set forth in Administrative Order No. 10, to discern a realistic assessment of the father's income. Boyd v. Crocker, 2017 Ark. App. 108, 513 S.W.3d 302 (2017).

Circuit court did not err by declining to impute income to a father based on his lifestyle because the record contained no evidence to indicate that the father was working below his full earning capacity. Dare v. Frost, 2018 Ark. 83, 540 S.W.3d 281 (2018).

Circuit court did not err in imputing income to the husband for purposes of calculating his child support obligation where personal benefits were paid by his corporation, including, but not limited to, payments for a truck, a boat, utilities, and satellite television, he lived in a house that the corporation owned, and although a boat had been repossessed and sold to another individual, the husband continued to use it exclusively. Wyatt v. Wyatt, 2018 Ark. App. 177, 545 S.W.3d 796 (2018).

Even though a husband lost his job, given the circumstances of this case, it was not an abuse of discretion to impute an income of $250,000 to the husband for the benefit of his children as the husband was capable of making that much annually and he had several business ventures, including rental properties, a farm, and an interest in a liquor store, his own law practice, and substantial savings and assets. Perry v. Perry, 2020 Ark. App. 63, 594 S.W.3d 126 (2020).

It was not an abuse of discretion for the circuit court to order a husband to pay $3,000 a month in child support based on his imputed income; the circuit court imputed an annual income of $250,000 to the husband and $40,000 to the wife and calculated that the husband would owe a presumptive child support amount of $3,793, and it offset the wife's support obligation against his to arrive at a final chart-based order. Perry v. Perry, 2020 Ark. App. 63, 594 S.W.3d 126 (2020).

Income.

The term income, as defined by Section II of this Administrative Order, includes Social Security Disability benefits paid directly to a noncustodial parent's children as a result of that parent's disability. Ark. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Hearst, 2009 Ark. 599, 357 S.W.3d 450 (2009).

Because the father's income was significantly lower than when the child-support amount was originally set and he did not commit criminal offenses to reduce his child-support obligation, the reduction in his income was not a matter of choice under subsection d of this section, and the reduction of his child-support obligation was not an abuse of discretion. Bendinelli v. Bendinelli, 2012 Ark. App. 127 (2012).

Circuit court, in calculating child support under this order, erred as a matter of law where it failed to follow the appropriate procedure for determining the father's net worth and to consider the factors required for determining child support. Colley v. Colley, 2014 Ark. App. 698, 450 S.W.3d 274 (2014).

At the time of the hearing, the father had not filed his 2014 tax returns and he did not introduce 2014 quarterly estimates, and thus the trial court used the only tax records presented to determine his farm income, and this was not an abuse of discretion. Riddick v. Harris, 2016 Ark. App. 426, 501 S.W.3d 859 (2016).

Self-employed father proved no material change in circumstances warranting a child support reduction because income calculations did not properly account for the retained earnings of the father's subchapter S corporation or for other available income. Troutman v. Troutman, 2017 Ark. 139, 516 S.W.3d 733 (2017).

Social Security Payments.

Under subsection (c) of this order, a father was not entitled to discharge his child-support arrears based on his son's receipt of a $15,835 lump-sum payment from the Social Security Administration. The payment did not relieve the inequities borne by the mother and caused by the father's failure to honor his child-support obligation; the mother testified at length regarding her difficulty accumulating sufficient income to cover her expenses. Grays v. State Office of Child Support Enforcement, 375 Ark. 38, 289 S.W.3d 12 (2008).

Tax Exemptions.

Circuit court erred in allocating the tax exemptions for the parties' children; the circuit court was not bound by the parties' earlier contractual agreement that was made part of the judicial separation case, and giving tax allocations to a noncustodial parent is considered a deviation from the child support chart amount, which requires findings, and the necessary findings were lacking. Callan v. Callan, 2020 Ark. App. 205, 599 S.W.3d 145 (2020).

Section IV. Health Insurance, Extraordinary Medical Expenses, and Childcare Costs.

Three additional child-rearing expenses—health insurance premiums, extraordinary medical expenses, and childcare expenses—shall be added to the Worksheet and must be considered by the court when determining the total child-support obligation. If either or both parents carry health insurance for the child(ren), incur extraordinary medical expenses for the child(ren), or pay for childcare expenses for one or more children who receive support, the cost of these expenses shall be added to the Worksheet. The court may in turn add one or more of these expenses to the basic child-support obligation as detailed below.

1. Health insurance:

The court shall consider provisions for the children's health care needs through health insurance coverage. Health insurance coverage is considered reasonable if the cost of dependent coverage does not exceed 5% of the gross income of the parent who is to provide coverage. The court may require coverage by one or both parents who can obtain the most comprehensive coverage through an employer or otherwise, and at the most reasonable cost.

If the employer provides some coverage, then only the amount the employee pays shall be used in the calculation of support. This amount may be determined by the difference between self-only coverage and family coverage, or the cost of medical insurance for the child. If the amounts for self-only and family coverage cannot be verified, then the total cost of the premium may be divided by the total number of persons covered by the policy and then multiplied by the number of children in the support order. If the party providing coverage does not incur an additional cost to add the child(ren), then no amount shall be added to the child-support obligation for insurance.

2. Extraordinary Medical Expenses:

Extraordinary medical expenses may be added to the basic child-support obligation and may include uninsured expenses for a single illness or condition. It may include but is not limited to reasonable and necessary costs for orthodontia, dental treatment, asthma treatment, physical therapy, uninsured chronic health problems, and professional counseling or psychiatric therapy for diagnosed mental disorders (including any reasonable treatment or diagnostic testing needed to diagnose whether there is a recognized mental disorder or disability in the first place).

3. Childcare Costs:

The childcare costs that a parent incurs due to employment or the search for employment is the third add-on to the Worksheet, and they may be considered in the total child-support obligation. Childcare costs must be reasonable, not to exceed the level required to provide quality care for child(ren) from a licensed provider.

Section V. Computation of Child Support.

1. Calculation and Use of Worksheet:

Except as provided in Section II, paragraph 3, Self-Support Reserve, the gross income of both parents shall first be determined and combined. Each parent's share of the combined total gross income is then determined based on their percentage of the combined income. Next, the basic child-support obligation is determined by looking at the Chart for the parties' combined income and the number of children they have. A presumptive child-support obligation is then determined by adding the allowed additional monthly child-rearing expenses (including health insurance premiums, extraordinary medical expenses, and childcare expenses). Each parent's share of additional child-rearing expenses is determined by multiplying the percentage of income they have available for support, which was determined in step 1. The total child-support obligation for each parent is determined by adding each parent's share of the child-support obligation with their share of allowed additional child-rearing expenses. Lastly, the payor receives a credit for the additional child-rearing expenses that the payor is paying out of pocket, resulting in their presumed child-support order. See the 'Forms' Addendum for a sample child-support calculation.

The payor parent shall owe his or her presumed child-support obligation as a money judgment of child support to payee parent.

All orders granting or modifying child support shall contain the court's determination of both parents' gross income and shall specify who is the payor parent and who is the payee parent. Any order shall also state the amount of health insurance premiums, extraordinary medical expenses, and childcare expenses allowed in determining the total child-support obligation. See the 'Forms' Addendum for sample language that may be used.

2. Shared Custody Adjustment:

In cases where the parties share approximately an equal amount of time, the parties shall complete the Worksheet and Affidavit of Financial Means. The court shall then determine the basic child-support obligation by deducting the smaller obligation from the larger obligation as determined in "Part II: Basic Obligation" of the Child Support Worksheet. Once the basic child support obligation has been determined, if the court determines there are Additional Monthly Child-Rearing Expenses that must be accounted for in Part III of the Child Support Worksheet, the court shall refer to "Line 10: Share of additional child-rearing expenses" to determine what adjustment, if any, should be made to the basic child-support obligation.

In cases where the parties share less than an approximately equal amount of time, but each parent has responsibility of the child(ren) for at least 141 overnights per calendar year, the parties shall complete the Worksheet and Affidavit of Financial Means. The court may then consider the time spent by the child(ren) with the payor parent as a basis for adjusting the child-support amount from the amount determined on the Worksheet.³ In particular, in deciding whether to apply an additional credit, the court should consider the presence and amount of disparity between the income of the parties, giving more weight to those disparities in the parties' income of less than 20% and considering which parent is responsible for the majority of the non-duplicated fixed expenditures, such as routine clothing costs, costs for extracurricular activities, school supplies, and any other similar non-duplicated fixed expenditures.

This discretionary adjustment is based on the number of overnights, or overnight equivalents, that a parent spends with a child pursuant to a court order. For purposes of this section, overnight equivalents are calculated using a method other than overnights if the parent has significant time periods on separate days when the child is in the parent's physical custody, under the direct care of the parent, but does not stay overnight.

If the court determines that the Worksheet-based offset amount is inappropriate, the court may deviate after having considered the deviation factors set forth in Section II, Paragraph 2 above, including what is in the child's or children's best interest.

3. Split Custody:

When each of the parents have sole custody of one or more of the children, a support obligation for each parent shall be determined based on the number of children in the other household and offsetting the smaller obligation against the larger obligation. The parent with the larger obligation shall pay to the other parent the difference between the two obligations. To accomplish this calculation, a Worksheet must be completed for each custody arrangement. There must be separate worksheets for the child(ren) who do not live primarily with the other(s).

4. Third-party Custody:

When one or more children are not in the care of either biological parent, a child-support order can issue against each parent. The support amount is calculated by using the Worksheet and computing the obligation of each parent by multiplying each parent's share of income by the total child-support obligation. Both parties shall owe his or her total child-support obligation as a money judgment of child support to the third-party caretaker or guardian. If only one parent is available, that parent's sole income shall be used to determine the total gross income and one hundred percent of the basic child-support obligation shall be given to that parent. If the third-party caretaker or guardian incurs costs for health insurance premiums, extraordinary medical expenses, and childcare expenses, those expenses may be apportioned pro rata between the parents, or apportioned by the court if only one parent is available, as a deviation from these Guidelines.

5. Social Security Benefit Payment:

a. When a monthly auxiliary Social Security payment is paid directly to a payee parent on behalf of a child(ren), that payment shall be treated as child support paid by the payor when:

(1) The monthly auxiliary benefit is paid based on the payor parent's qualification for disability or retirement benefits as determined by the Social Security Administration; and

(2) The payor and the payee are parties to the same child support case and the monthly auxiliary payment will benefit those same child(ren).

b. If the monthly auxiliary benefit paid to the payee parent exceeds the amount of child support the court has ordered to be paid, then the excess benefit shall be treated as a gift that should not be credited against future child support or past due child support unless otherwise ordered by the court. If the monthly auxiliary payment does not satisfy the monthly child support for which the payor is responsible, then the payor is responsible for the difference unless the court finds that a deviation is warranted as set forth in Section II, Paragraph 2 herein.

c. Any lump sum payment of Social Security Disability benefits received directly by a payee parent on behalf of the child(ren), and on account of the payor parent's disability which constitutes payment for the time period the payor parent was disabled or a disability claim was pending, shall be credited against unpaid support owed during the time period for which the lump sum was paid. If the lump sum payment exceeds the unpaid support owed for that time period, the excess payment shall be treated as a gift and shall not be credited against support owed during a prior or future period unless otherwise ordered by the court.

d. When the auxiliary benefit is paid directly to the payor parent, then the payor parent shall use those funds to pay his or her child support obligation to the payee parent.

CASE NOTES

Amounts Received from Government.

Trial court erred in awarding a mother $150 per month for her two special needs children, almost 80 percent less than the amount specified in this administrative order, without explaining why the chart amount was inappropriate. Amounts the mother received as an adoption subsidy and Social Security benefits could be considered, but these amounts were not earned by the father and were meant to benefit the children. Bass v. Bass, 2011 Ark. App. 753, 387 S.W.3d 218 (2011).

Deviation from Guidelines.

Trial court erred because it did not follow the child support guidelines in awarding retroactive child support and it did not take into account the child's best interests when it deviated from the chart amount in awarding prospective child support; in addition, the trial court failed to reference the child-support guidelines in either its letter opinion or in its judgment and failed to apply the deviation factors in this section. Akins v. Mofield, 355 Ark. 215, 132 S.W.3d 760 (2003).

Circuit court, which awarded child support and reimbursement of medical expenses to an ex-husband, abused its discretion in granting the ex-husband's objection to the ex-wife's discovery request. Income from the ex-husband was relevant for determining whether a deviation from the child-support chart should be allowed. Hill v. Kelly, 2014 Ark. 34 (2014).

Trial court lacked jurisdiction to modify payments for parochial school education because the parties' agreement on that subject was an independent contract separate from child support; tuition payments in this case did not support or care for the children where they were in addition to a support payment, and there was no deviation based on the tuition. An independent property-settlement agreement, if approved by a court and incorporated into a divorce decree, could not have been subsequently modified. Fischer v. Fischer, 2015 Ark. App. 116, 456 S.W.3d 779 (2015).

Trial court had not abused its discretion in reducing a father's child support obligation where there was an undisputed reduction in the father's income, and the 50-50 custody arrangement and expenses the father paid for the children justified a substantial deviation from the chart amount. Guin v. McWhorter, 2017 Ark. App. 463, 528 S.W.3d 326 (2017).

Health Insurance.

Allowing a reduction of income for child support purposes based on the practice of splitting the cost of the health insurance premium when there was no additional cost to the ex-husband was not error. Langston v. Brown, 2016 Ark. App. 535, 506 S.W.3d 261 (2016).

Section VI. Miscellaneous Provisions.

1. Allocation of Dependents for Tax Purposes:

Allocation of dependents for tax purposes belongs to the payee parent pursuant to the Internal Revenue Code. However, if allowed by state or federal law, the court shall have the discretion to grant dependency allocation, or any part of it, to the payor parent if the benefit of the allocation to the payor parent substantially outweighs the benefit to the payee parent.

2. Administrative Costs:

The amount paid to the Clerk of the Court or to the Arkansas Clearinghouse for administrative costs pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 9-12-312(e)(1)(A), § 9-10-109(b)(1)(A) and § 9-14-804(b) shall not be included as support.

3. Provisions for payment

All child-support orders shall fix the beginning date of the child-support obligation and the interval (weekly, bi-weekly, semimonthly, or monthly) on which payments shall be made.

Child-support obligations shall be rounded down to the nearest whole dollar. All other computations relating to the determination of a payor’s child-support obligation shall use mathematical rules for rounding. If the number you are rounding is followed by 5, 6, 7, 8, or 9, round the number up. For example: 37.5 will be rounded to 38. If the number you are rounding is followed by 0, 1, 2, 3, or 4, round the number down. For example, 37.4 will be rounded to 37. Each parent’s share of the basic child-support obligation on Line 5 of the Worksheet should be rounded to two decimal places.

All child-support orders shall include a provision for immediate implementation of income withholding or withholding from a financial institution, absent a finding of good cause not to require immediate income withholding or withholding from a financial institution. All withholding forms shall be filed in the court file and have a security level where it can only be viewed by the parties and attorneys of record. Circuit clerks shall only release the withholding order to parties, their employers, and attorneys of record.

Payment shall be made through the Arkansas Clearinghouse pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 9-14-805.

4. Sharing of income information

Parents shall provide proof of income for a previous calendar year whenever requested in writing by certified mail by the other parent, but not more than one (1) time a year.

CASE NOTES

Abatement Improper.

Trial court clearly erred in abating the father’s child-support obligation for the period the mother and child were living in another country as the obligation for child support did not depend on the father’s relationship or visitation with the child. Henderson v. Johnston, 2017 Ark. App. 620, 534 S.W.3d 196 (2017).

FORMS ADDENDUM

Sample Calculation

Step 1: The gross income of both parents is determined and combined. Payor parent earns $2,000 and payee parent earns $1,000, for a $3,000 combined gross income. Each parent’s share of income is then determined based on their percentage of the combined income. Payor earns 66.66% of the income, and payee earns 33.33% of the income.

Step 2: The basic child-support obligation is determined by looking at the Chart for the $3,000 combined income and is $469 for the parties’ one child. Each parent’s share of the basic child-support obligation is then determined: 66.66% of $469 is $312.67 (payor parent), and 33.33% of $469 is $156.33 (payee parent).

Step 3: A presumptive child-support obligation is then determined by adding the allowed additional monthly child-rearing expenses including health insurance premiums, extraordinary medical expenses, and childcare expenses. In this case, the court allows $100 that payor parent is paying for the child's health insurance premium and $200 that payee parent is paying for childcare expenses, for a total of $300 for additional child-rearing expenses. Each parent's share of additional child-rearing expenses is determined by multiplying the percentage of income they have available for support (see step 1) by the total expenses: 66.66% of $300 is $200 (payor parent), and 33.33% of $300 is $100 (payee parent).

Step 4: The total child-support obligation for each parent is determined by adding each parent's share of the child-support obligation with their share of allowed additional child-rearing expenses. Payor parent ($312.67 plus $200) has a total child-support obligation of $512.67, and payee parent ($156.33 plus $100) has a total child-support obligation of $256.33.

Step 5: The payor receives a credit for the additional child-rearing expenses that he is paying out of pocket. In this example, payor is paying $100 for the child's health insurance premium, so we deduct $100 from payor's total child-support obligation of $512.67. Payor has a presumed child-support order of $412.67, which shall be rounded down to $412.

Sample language for a court order based on the calculation provided above:

The court has determined that Plaintiff (payor) earns a gross income of $2,000 per month and Defendant (payee) earns a gross income of $1,000 per month. Therefore, the parents' combined gross income is $3,000 with a basic child-support obligation of $469 for their one child per the Chart. The court also finds that Plaintiff (payor) is paying for the child's health insurance premium in the amount of $100 per month and that Defendant (payee) is paying $200 for childcare expenses, for a total of $300 for additional child-rearing expenses. Plaintiff (payor) is responsible for 66% of the total obligation ($312.67 share of basic obligation plus $200 for expenses) and has a total child-support obligation of $512.67. Defendant (payee) is responsible for 33% of the total obligation ($156.33 share of basic obligation plus $100 for expenses) and has a total child-support obligation of $256.33. Plaintiff, as the payor, shall receive a $100 credit for the additional child-rearing expenses that he is paying out of pocket. Plaintiff shall pay $412 per month to Defendant beginning on March 1, 2020, and he shall continue to cover the child's health insurance premium.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF RESPONSIBILITIES AND CONSEQUENCES

I, _____, understand that I must comply with the following. I acknowledge and agree to each provision by initialing each paragraph below.

_____ Both parties must complete and exchange this six-page affidavit at least three days before a court hearing where financial matters are at issue. The affidavit must be provided to opposing counsel, if a party is represented, or directly to a self-represented litigant.

_____ Both parties must supply the original notarized affidavit to the court.

_____ If I am employed, I must attach copies of my last three paystubs to this affidavit.

_____ If I am self-employed, I must attach copies of my last two federal and state tax returns, including all schedules, to this affidavit.

_____ Before each court hearing where financial matters are at issue, I will review this document and provide updated information to the other party and to the court.

_____ I understand that the cost of dependent health insurance coverage is the difference between self-only and self with dependents or family coverage or the cost of adding the child(ren) to existing coverage.

_____ I understand that failing to comply with these provisions, or deliberately attempting to mislead the court or the opposing party, may result in my being held in contempt of court, being fined, being ordered to pay attorney’s fees, and/or being sentenced up to 6 months in jail, and that serious violations can result in prosecution for felony perjury—punishable by 3 to 10 years in prison.

Publisher's Notes.

By Per Curiam dated Sept. 25, 1997, the Supreme Court provided: "On February 5, 1990, this Court first adopted guidelines for child support in response to P.L. 100-485 and Ark. Code Ann. § 9-12-312(a). Effective October, 1989, P.L. 100-485 required that all states adopt guidelines for setting child support; that it be a rebuttable presumption that the amount of support calculated from the child-support chart is correct; and that each state's guidelines be reviewed and revised, as necessary, at least every four years. In response to the federal law, the Arkansas General Assembly enacted Ark. Code Ann. § 9-12-312 which included the federal provisions and authorized the Arkansas Supreme Court to develop guidelines based on recommendations submitted to the Court by a committee appointed by the Chief Justice.

"The Committee on Child Support initially made recommendations to the Court which formed the substance of the 1990 Per Curiam Order. On May 13, 1991, pursuant to the Committee's recommendations, the Court issued a new Per Curiam Order which supplemented the original. Then, in compliance with the four-year requirement of P.L. 100-485, the Committee again submitted recommendations to the Court in October, 1993, and the Court issued the most recent Per Curiam Order on October 23, 1993, adopting the guidelines which are published in the Court Rules Volume of the Arkansas Code Annotated.

"In the ensuing four years, the Committee continued to study the existing guidelines pursuant to federal and state law and has once again submitted its recommendations.

"Having carefully considered these most recent recommendations, the Court adopts and publishes Administrative Order Number 10 — Arkansas Child Support Guidelines, effective October 1, 1997. This Administrative Order includes and incorporates by reference the weekly and monthly family support charts and the Affidavit of Financial Means which are attached to Administrative Order Number 10.

"The Court thanks the Committee for its service, and as it has done in the past, directs the Committee and the Chief Justice, as its liaison, to continue its charge pursuant to law and the rules of this Court.

"Newbern, J. dissents. I dissent for the reasons stated in the dissenting opinion of Hickman, J., when the per curiam order adopting the guidelines was issued. In re: Guidelines for Child Support Enforcement, 301 Ark. 627, 784 S.W.2d 589 (1990)."

By Per Curiam dated Jan. 22, 1998, the Supreme Court provided: "On September 25, 1997, based on recommendations received from the Supreme Court Committee on Child Support pursuant to P.L. 100-485 and Ark. Code Ann. § 9-12-312(a), this Court published Administrative Order Number 10, adopting the most recent version of the child-support guidelines including the weekly and monthly family support charts and the Affidavit of Financial Means. The Order became effective October 1, 1997, and certain corrections were made to the charts before the Order reached the printer.

"The Committee has now apprised the Court of an unintended omission on the Affidavit of Financial Means. On page one of the Affidavit, Number 10 should include "(h) child care." This item is not a new consideration, having been included on the Affidavit of Financial Means since the Court first adopted it for use in 1991.

"THEREFORE, effective immediately, the Court republishes Administrative Order Number 10: Arkansas: Arkansas Child Support Guidelines in its entirety including the corrected weekly and monthly family support charts and the corrected Affidavit of Financial Means.

"Newbern, J. dissents. I dissent for the reasons stated in the dissenting opinion of Hickman, J., when the per curiam order adopting the guidelines was issued. In re: Guidelines for Child Support Enforcement, 301 Ark. 627, 784 S.W.2d 589 (1990)."

CASE NOTESAbility to Pay.

The child support chart specifically takes into account payments made under court order to support other children, and allows these payments to be deducted from weekly take home pay. The chart does not refer to support of children not under court order, but a payor spouse's ability to pay can be considered and necessarily includes other children the parent is legally obligated to support. Stewart v. Winfrey, 308 Ark. 277, 824 S.W.2d 373 (1992).

Trial court did not err when it ordered incarcerate father to pay $25 per week in child support; while that exact issue had never been determined in Arkansas, this rule provided that income could be imputed to an unemployed payor of child support and the Reid decision upheld the trial court's refusal to totally abate child support due to the father's incarceration. Allen v. Allen, 82 Ark. App. 42, 110 S.W.3d 772 (2003).

Given the evidence of the father's affluence, exceptional generosity to his girlfriend and sisters, and extravagant lifestyle, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in setting child support in the divorce proceeding in accordance with the presumptive amount derived from the family support chart. Williams v. Williams, 82 Ark. App. 294, 108 S.W.3d 629 (2003).

Applicability.

The Per Curiam Order guidelines of the Arkansas Supreme Court in effect at the time of the hearing on the request for modification of child support is the applicable law pertaining to the modification. Heflin v. Bell, 52 Ark. App. 201, 916 S.W.2d 769 (1996).

The child support guidelines Per Curiam Order of 1993 is very similar to the child support guidelines Per Curiam Order of 1991, but the paragraph governing the trial court's continuing jurisdiction to modify support orders is omitted and, therefore, not applicable to child support matters decided after the 1993 Per Curiam Order was issued. Heflin v. Bell, 52 Ark. App. 201, 916 S.W.2d 769 (1996).

Chart Reference Mandatory.

Courts are required to refer to chart but are not bound to set support payments in accordance with exact terms thereof; degree of dependence upon chart is left to sound discretion of the chancellor. Thurston v. Pinkstaff, 292 Ark. 385, 730 S.W.2d 239 (1987) (decision prior to amendment to § 9-12-312 by Acts 1989, No. 948).

Reference to the Family Support Chart is mandatory, and the chart itself establishes a rebuttable presumption of the appropriate amount which can only be explained away by written findings stating why the chart amount is unjust or inappropriate. Black v. Black, 306 Ark. 209, 812 S.W.2d 480 (1991).

Where the chancellor's order failed to indicate whether he indeed referred to the chart in making his decision, he projected a support chart amount premised on the defendant's monthly income, and he presumed that amount to be correct, the case was remanded for the chart to be considered. Black v. Black, 306 Ark. 209, 812 S.W.2d 480 (1991).

Provisions of property settlement agreement with regard to child support did not compel chancery court to deviate from presumptive amount set out in the child support guidelines to be used in arriving at a fair determination of support. Alfano v. Alfano, 77 Ark. App. 62, 72 S.W.3d 104 (2002).

Construction.

The family-support chart is, in essence, a rule promulgated by the Arkansas Supreme Court, and is construed using the same means, including canons of construction, that are used to interpret statutes. Anderson v. Anderson, 60 Ark. App. 221, 963 S.W.2d 604 (1998).

An interpretation of the provisions of this chart that would permit deduction of income-tax payments from the income that a child-support payor has available to pay child support is contrary to the purpose of the family-support chart. Anderson v. Anderson, 60 Ark. App. 221, 963 S.W.2d 604 (1998).

Definition of income for child support purposes was intentionally broad to encompass the widest range of sources consistent with the state's policy to interpret "income" broadly for the benefit of the child. Ford v. Ford, 347 Ark. 485, 65 S.W.3d 432 (2002).

Deviation from Guidelines.

Where chancellor made specific findings on the record spelling out why the support chart was inappropriate, considering all relevant factors, it was sufficient to rebut the presumption that the amount of child support calculated pursuant to the family support chart was correct. Scroggins v. Scroggins, 302 Ark. 362, 790 S.W.2d 157 (1990).

While there is a rebuttable presumption that the amount of support according to the chart is correct, the chancellor in his discretion is not entirely precluded from adjusting the amount as deemed warranted under the facts of a particular case. However, when deviating from the chart, the chancellor must explain his or her reasoning by the entry of a written finding or by making a specific finding on the record. Waldon v. Waldon, 34 Ark. App. 118, 806 S.W.2d 387 (1991).

Where the end result reached by the chancellor represented only a slight deviation from the chart amount, the findings made by the chancellor on the record were sufficient to rebut the presumption that the amount of support according to the chart was correct. Waldon v. Waldon, 34 Ark. App. 118, 806 S.W.2d 387 (1991).

The child support chart and the criteria used for deviating from it are not mandatory, but there is a rebuttable presumption that the amount specified in the chart is the appropriate amount. Other matters may have a bearing upon the amount of support reference to the chart is mandatory, but applying the specific chart amounts is not mandatory if it would be unjust or inequitable, and if written findings are made to that effect. Stewart v. Winfrey, 308 Ark. 277, 824 S.W.2d 373 (1992).

Given the presumption that the chart amount is reasonable, it is incumbent on the trial courts to give a fuller explanation of their reasons for rejecting the chart; it was not sufficient to state merely that the amount was "unreasonable." Cochran v. Cochran, 309 Ark. 604, 832 S.W.2d 252 (1992).

Trial court erred in awarding to the mother, the noncustodial parent, the right to claim a child for tax exemption purposes without providing the requisite written or specific findings to support the decision; an award of a tax exemption to a noncustodial parent resulted in a deviation from the child support chart. Dumas v. Tucker, 82 Ark. App. 173, 119 S.W.3d 516 (2003).

Exclusivity.

The list of factors set out in In re: Child Support Enforcement Guidelines, 301 Ark. 627, 784 S.W.2d 589 (1990), for determining whether an amount specified by the chart is unjust or inappropriate is not exclusive. Stewart v. Winfrey, 308 Ark. 277, 824 S.W.2d 373 (1992).

Income or Assets.

Where there was no evidence regarding defendant's weekly take home pay during the relevant time period, the support was set at the minimum level required of an unemployed person. Barnes v. Barnes, 311 Ark. 287, 843 S.W.2d 835 (1992).

The language "other income or assets available to support the child from whatever source" is intended to expand, not restrict, the sources of funds to be considered in setting child support. Belue v. Belue, 38 Ark. App. 81, 828 S.W.2d 855 (1992).

The chancellor correctly based the amount of child support ordered on a monthly income which included noncustodial Veterans' Administration disability benefits. Belue v. Belue, 38 Ark. App. 81, 828 S.W.2d 855 (1992).

Gambling proceeds were properly included as income for purposes of calculating child support, but the true income could only be arrived at by crediting gambling losses against the winnings. McWhorter v. McWhorter, 346 Ark. 475, 58 S.W.3d 840 (2001).

Mandatory Tier II withholdings from the father, a railroad employee, did not form part of disposable income for child support purposes; Tier II withholdings were part of railroad retirement deductions. Montgomery v. Bolton, 349 Ark. 460, 79 S.W.3d 354 (2002).

Even if father was considered an employee, rather than self-employed, his income was properly calculated based on an average over a period of time, given the variable nature of his earnings; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by employing an averaging method in determining father's income for child support purposes. Johnson v. Cotton-Johnson, 88 Ark. App. 67, 194 S.W.3d 806 (2004).

Purpose.

The family-support chart was established to ensure the proper enforcement of child-support awards in this state. Anderson v. Anderson, 60 Ark. App. 221, 963 S.W.2d 604 (1998).

It is wholly inconsistent with the purpose of the family-support chart to interpret it in such a way as to encourage child-support payors to minimize their child-support income. Anderson v. Anderson, 60 Ark. App. 221, 963 S.W.2d 604 (1998).

Retroactive Payments Upheld.

Where custody petition was filed in 1992, the hearing was held in 1994, and the chancellor made a finding of the father's income as of January 1, 1993, there was no abuse of discretion in the chancellor's ordering support payments retroactive to January 1993. Heflin v. Bell, 52 Ark. App. 201, 916 S.W.2d 769 (1996).

Subchapter "S" Corporation.

This chart does not permit a child-support payor/subchapter S corporation shareholder to deduct from his child-support income the amount of his shareholder earnings retained by the corporation; to interpret the chart to allow this would be to allow the payor to reduce his child-support income by the entire amount of income taxes that he pays on his corporate earnings, whether distributed to him or retained by the corporation. Anderson v. Anderson, 60 Ark. App. 221, 963 S.W.2d 604 (1998).

Undue Hardship.

Where the chancellor found that the chart called for $51.00 per week child support, which would quadruple the noncustodial parent's payments, and, considering his expenses, it would be devastating to increase by four times the amount of his support payments, an increase of the weekly payment to $30.00 instead of $51.00 followed the requirements, and applied the rules set out in the supreme court's per curiams by avoiding a modification that would work undue hardship on that party. Howard v. Wisemon, 38 Ark. App. 27, 826 S.W.2d 314 (1992).

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 11 — ARKANSAS CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR INTERPRETERS IN THE JUDICIARY

Rule

- Canon 1: Accuracy and Completeness.
- Canon 2: Representation of Qualifications.
- Canon 3: Impartiality and Avoidance of Conflict of Interest.
- Canon 4: Professional Demeanor.
- Canon 5: Confidentiality.
- Canon 6: Restriction of Public Comment.
- Canon 7: Scope of Practice.

Rule

Canon 8: Assessing and Reporting Impediments to Performance.

Canon 9: Duty to Report Ethical Violations.

Canon 10: Professional Development.

Preamble

Many persons who come before the courts are partially or completely excluded from full participation in the proceedings due to limited English proficiency or a speech or hearing impairment. It is essential that the resulting communication barrier be removed, as far as possible, so that these persons are placed in the same position as similarly situated persons for whom there is no such barrier.¹ As officers of the court, interpreters help assure that such persons may enjoy equal access to justice and that court proceedings and court support services function efficiently and effectively. Interpreters are highly skilled professionals who fulfill an essential role in the administration of justice.¹

Applicability

This code shall guide and be binding upon all persons, agencies and organizations who administer, supervise use, or deliver interpreting services to the judiciary.

Publisher's Notes.

By Per Curiam dated September 30, 1999, effective January 1, 2000, the Arkansas Supreme Court provided: "All persons, whether or not able to understand or communicate adequately in the English language, must be afforded rights when they appear in court. See Ark. Code Ann. § 16-64-111, § 16-89-104, § 16-10-102 and § 25-15-101. It is the intent of this Per Curiam Order to provide for the certification, appointment and use of interpreters for non-English speaking parties or witnesses in all state and local court proceedings.

"Ark. Code Ann. § 16-10-102 established the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) subject to the supervision of the Supreme Court of Arkansas to be responsible for the administration of the nonjudicial business of the judicial branch. Ark. Code Ann. § 16-10-127 authorizes and directs the AOC to establish a program to facilitate the use of interpreters and transliterators in all state and local courts in Arkansas and to prescribe the qualifications of and certify persons who may serve as certified interpreters in all courts in the state.

"Therefore, pursuant to our superintending powers, we hereby authorize the AOC, with advice of the Arkansas Judicial Council Ad Hoc Foreign Language Interpreter Certification Committee, and in compliance with Administrative Order No. 11 and the rules of Consortium for State Court Interpreter Certification, to prescribe requirements for the recruitment, testing, certification, evaluation, duties, professional conduct, continuing education, certification renewal, and other matters relating to interpreters.

"When an interpreter is requested or when the judge determines that a party or witness has a limited ability to understand and communicate in English, a certified interpreter shall be appointed, using the most current roster of certified interpreters maintained by the AOC. Where possible, but particularly for more complex cases, an interpreter with Advanced Certification as denoted on the roster should be used.

"The judge may appoint a non-certified interpreter only upon a finding that diligent, good faith efforts to obtain a certified interpreter have been made and none has been found to be reasonably available. Recognizing that the judge is the final arbiter of any interpreter's qualifications, a non-certified interpreter may be appointed only after the judge has evaluated the totality of the circumstances including the gravity of the judicial proceeding and the potential penalty or consequence involved. Before appointing a non-certified interpreter, the judge shall make a finding that the proposed non-certified interpreter appears to have adequate language skills, knowledge of interpreting techniques, familiarity with interpreting in a court setting, and that the proposed non-certified interpreter has read, understands, and will abide by Administrative Order No. 11, the Arkansas Code of Professional Responsibility for Interpreters in the Judiciary. A summary of the efforts made to obtain a certified interpreter and to determine the capabilities of the proposed non-certified interpreter shall be made on the record or as a docket entry of the legal proceeding.

"A non-English speaking party or witness may at any point in the proceeding waive the right to the services of an interpreter, but only when (1) the waiver is approved by the judge on the record or by docket entry after explaining to the non-English speaking party or witness through an interpreter the nature and effect of the waiver; (2) the judge makes a finding on the record or by docket entry that the waiver has been made knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily; and (3) in cases where the non-English speaking party or witness has retained/appointed counsel or has the right to counsel, that party or witness has been afforded the opportunity to consult with his or her attorney. At any point in any proceeding, for good cause shown, a non-English speaking party or witness may retract his or her waiver and request an interpreter.

All interpreters, before commencing their duties, shall take an oath that they will make a true and impartial interpretation using their best skills and judgment in accordance with the standards and ethics of the interpreter profession.

"Any of the following actions shall constitute good cause for the judge to remove an interpreter: (1) being unable to interpret adequately, including where the interpreter self-reports such inability; (2) knowingly and willfully making false interpretation while serving in an official capacity; (3) knowingly and willfully disclosing confidential or privileged information obtained while serving in an official capacity; (4) failing to adhere to the requirements prescribed by the AOC, including the Arkansas Code of Professional Responsibility for foreign language interpreters; (4) failing to follow other standards prescribed by law. The judge shall notify the AOC in writing whenever he or she removes an interpreter, setting forth the reason(s) for that action.

"In all legal proceedings, the cost of providing interpreter services shall be assessed by the judge according to law. Provided, no non-English speaking party or witness shall be denied the services of an interpreter because he or she is unable to pay for those services."

Commentary

The black letter principles of this model code are principles of general application that are unlikely to conflict with specific requirements of rule or law in the states, in the opinion of the code's drafters. Therefore, the use of the term "shall" is reserved for the black letter principles. Statements in the commentary use the term "should" to describe behavior that illustrates or elaborates the principles. The commentaries are intended to convey what the drafters of this model code believe are probable and expected behaviors. Wherever a court policy or routine practice appears to conflict with the commentary in this code, it is recommended that the reasons for the policy as it applies to court interpreters be examined.

Canon 1: Accuracy and Completeness.

Interpreters shall render a complete and accurate interpretation or sight translation, without altering, omitting, or adding anything to what is stated or written, and without explanation.

Commentary

The interpreter has a twofold duty: 1) to ensure that the proceedings in English reflect precisely what was said by a non-English speaking person, and 2) to place the non-English speaking person on an equal footing with those who understand English. This creates an obligation to conserve every element of information contained in a source language communication when it is rendered in the target language.

Therefore, interpreters are obligated to apply their best skills and judgment to preserve faithfully the meaning of what is said in court, including the style or register of speech. Verbatim, "word for word," or literal oral interpretations are not appropriate when they distort the meaning of the source language, but every spoken statement, even if it appears non-responsive, obscene, rambling, or incoherent should be interpreted. This includes apparent misstatements.

Interpreters should never interject their own words, phrases, or expressions. If the need arises to explain an interpreting problem (e.g., a term or phrase with no direct equivalent in the target language or a misunderstanding that only the interpreter can clarify), the interpreter should ask the court's permission to provide an explanation. Interpreters should convey the emotional emphasis of the speaker without reenacting or mimicking the speaker's emotions, or dramatic gestures.

Sign language interpreters, however, must employ all of the visual cues that the language they are interpreting for requires - including facial expressions, body language, and hand gestures.

Sign language interpreters, therefore, should ensure that court participants do not confuse these essential elements of the interpreted language with inappropriate interpreter conduct.

The obligation to preserve accuracy includes the interpreter's duty to correct any error of interpretation discovered by the interpreter during the proceeding. Interpreters should demonstrate their professionalism by objectively analyzing any challenge to their performance.

Canon 2: Representation of Qualifications.

Interpreters shall accurately and completely represent their certifications, training, and pertinent experience.

Commentary

Acceptance of a case by an interpreter conveys linguistic competency in legal settings. Withdrawing or being asked to withdraw from a case after it begins causes a disruption of court proceedings and is wasteful of scarce public resources. It is therefore essential that interpreters present a complete and truthful account of their training, certification and experience prior to appointment so the officers of the court can fairly evaluate their qualifications for delivering interpreting services.

Canon 3: Impartiality and Avoidance of Conflict of Interest.

Interpreters shall be impartial and unbiased and shall refrain from conduct that may give an appearance of bias. Interpreters shall disclose any real or perceived conflict of interest.

Commentary

The interpreter serves as an officer of the court and the interpreter's duty in a court proceeding is to serve the court and the public to which the court is a servant. This is true regardless of whether the interpreter is publicly retained at government expense or retained privately at the expense of one of the parties.

The interpreter should avoid any conduct or behavior that presents the appearance of favoritism toward any of the parties. Interpreters should maintain professional relationships with their clients, and should not take an active part in any of the proceedings. The interpreter should discourage a non-English speaking party's personal dependence.

During the course of the proceedings, interpreters should not converse with parties, witnesses, jurors, attorneys, or with friends or relatives of any party, except in the discharge of their official functions. It is especially important that interpreters, who are often familiar with attorneys or other members of the courtroom work group, including law enforcement officials, refrain from casual and personal conversations with anyone in court that may convey an appearance of a special relationship or partiality to any of the court participants.

The interpreter should strive for professional detachment. Verbal and non-verbal displays of personal attitudes, prejudices, emotions, or opinions should be avoided at all times.

Should an interpreter become aware that a proceeding participant views the interpreter as having a bias or being biased, the interpreter should disclose that knowledge to the appropriate judicial authority and counsel.

Any condition that interferes with the objectivity of an interpreter constitutes a conflict of interest. Before providing services in a matter, court interpreters must disclose to all parties and presiding officials any prior involvement, whether personal or professional, that could be reasonably construed as a conflict of interest. This disclosure should not include privileged or confidential information.

The following are circumstances that are presumed to create actual or apparent conflicts of interest for interpreters where interpreters should not serve:

1. The interpreter is a friend, associate, or relative of a party or counsel for a party involved in the proceedings;
2. The interpreter has served in an investigative capacity for any party involved in the case;
3. The interpreter has previously been retained by a law enforcement agency to assist in the preparation of the criminal case at issue;
4. The interpreter or the interpreter's spouse or child has a financial interest in the subject matter in controversy or in a party to the proceeding, or any other interest that would be affected by the outcome of the case;
5. The interpreter has been involved in the choice of counsel or law firm for that case.

Interpreters should disclose to the court and other parties when they have previously been retained for private employment by one of the parties in the case.

Interpreters should not serve in any matter in which payment for their services is contingent upon the outcome of the case.

An interpreter who is also an attorney should not serve in both capacities in the same matter.

Canon 4. Professional Demeanor.

Interpreters shall conduct themselves in a matter consistent with the dignity of the court and shall be as unobtrusive as possible.

Commentary

Interpreters should know and observe the established protocol, rules, and procedures for delivering interpreting services. When speaking in English, interpreters should speak at a rate and volume that enable them to be heard and understood throughout the courtroom, but the interpreter's presence should otherwise be as unobtrusive as possible. Interpreters should work without drawing undue or inappropriate attention to themselves. Interpreters should dress in a manner that is consistent with the dignity of the proceedings of the court.

Interpreters should avoid obstructing the view of any of the individuals involved in the proceedings. However, interpreters who use sign language or other visual modes of communication must be positioned so that hand gestures, facial expressions, and whole body movement are visible to the person for whom they are interpreting.

Interpreters are encouraged to avoid personal or professional conduct that could discredit the court.

Canon 5: Confidentiality.

Interpreters shall protect the confidentiality of all privileged and other confidential information.

Commentary

The interpreter must protect and uphold the confidentiality of all privileged information obtained during the course of his or her duties. It is especially important that the interpreter understand and uphold the attorney-client privilege, which requires confidentiality with respect to any communication between attorney and client. This rule also applies to other types of privileged communications.

Interpreters must also refrain from repeating or disclosing information obtained by them in the course of their employment that may be relevant to the legal proceeding.

In the event that an interpreter becomes aware of information that suggests imminent harm to someone or relates to a crime being committed during the course of the proceedings, the interpreter should immediately disclose the information to an appropriate authority within the judiciary who is not involved in the proceeding and seek advice in regard to the potential conflict in professional responsibility.

Canon 6: Restriction of Public Comment.

Interpreters shall not publicly discuss, report, or offer an opinion concerning a matter in which they are or have been engaged, even when that information is not privileged or required by law to be confidential.

Canon 7: Scope of Practice.

Interpreters shall limit themselves to interpreting or translating, and shall not give legal advice, express personal opinions to individuals for whom they are interpreting, or engage in any other activities which may be construed to constitute a service other than interpreting or translating while serving as an interpreter.

Commentary

Since interpreters are responsible only for enabling others to communicate, they should limit themselves to the activity of interpreting or translating only. Interpreters should refrain from initiating communications while interpreting unless it is necessary for assuring an accurate and faithful interpretation.

Interpreters may be required to initiate communications during a proceeding when they find it necessary to seek assistance in performing their duties. Examples of such circumstances includes seeking direction when unable to understand or express a word or thought, requesting speakers to moderate their rate of communication or repeat or rephrase something, correcting their own interpreting errors, or notifying the court of reservations about their ability to satisfy an assignment competently. In such instances they should make it clear that they are speaking for themselves.

An interpreter may convey legal advice from an attorney to a person only while that attorney is giving it. An interpreter should not explain the purpose of forms, services, or otherwise act as counselors or advisors unless they are interpreting for someone who is acting in that official capacity.

The interpreter may translate language on a form for a person who is filling out the form, but may not explain the form or its purpose for such a person.

The interpreter should not personally serve to perform official acts that are the official responsibility of other court officials including, but not limited to, court clerks, pretrial release investigators or interviewers, or probation counselors.

Canon 8: Assessing and Reporting Impediments to Performance.

Interpreters shall assess at all times their ability to deliver their services. When interpreters have any reservation about their ability to satisfy an assignment competently, they shall immediately convey that reservation to the appropriate judicial authority.

Commentary

If the communication mode or language of the non-English-speaking person cannot be readily interpreted, the interpreter should notify the appropriate judicial authority.

Interpreters should notify the appropriate judicial authority of any environmental or physical limitation that impedes or hinders their ability to deliver interpreting services adequately (e.g., the court room is not quiet enough for the interpreter to hear or be heard by the non-English speaker, more than one person at a time is speaking, or principals or witnesses of the court are speaking at a rate of speed that is too rapid for the interpreter to adequately interpret). Sign language interpreters must ensure that they can both see and convey the full range of visual language elements that are necessary for communication, including facial expressions and body movement, as well as hand gestures.

Interpreters should notify the presiding officer of the need to take periodic breaks to maintain mental and physical alertness and prevent interpreter fatigue. Interpreters should recommend and encourage the use of team interpreting whenever necessary.

Interpreters are encouraged to make inquiries as to the nature of a case whenever possible before accepting an assignment. This enables interpreters to match more closely their professional qualifications, skills, and experience to potential assignments and more accurately assess their ability to satisfy those assignments competently.

Even competent and experienced interpreters may encounter cases where routine proceedings suddenly involve technical or specialized terminology unfamiliar to the interpreter (e.g., the unscheduled testimony of an expert witness). When such instances occur, interpreters should request a brief recess to familiarize themselves with the subject matter. If familiarity with the terminology requires extensive time or more intensive research, interpreters should inform the presiding officer.

Interpreters should refrain from accepting a case if they feel the language and subject matter of that case is likely to exceed their skills or capacities. Interpreters should feel no compunction about notifying the presiding officer if they feel unable to perform competently, due to lack of familiarity with terminology, preparation, or difficulty in understanding a witness or defendant.

Interpreters should notify the presiding officer of any personal bias they may have involving any aspect of the proceedings. For example, an interpreter who has been the victim of a sexual assault may wish to be excused from interpreting in cases involving similar offenses.

Canon 9: Duty to Report Ethical Violations.

Interpreters shall report to the proper judicial authority any effort to impede their compliance with any law, any provision of this code, or any other official policy governing court interpreting and legal translating.

Commentary

Because the users of interpreting services frequently misunderstand the proper role of the interpreter, they may ask or expect the interpreter to perform duties or engage in activities that run counter to the provisions of this code or other laws, regulations, or policies governing court interpreters. It is incumbent upon the interpreter to inform such persons of his or her professional obligations. If, having been apprised of these obligations, the person persists in demanding that the interpreter violate them, the interpreter should turn to a supervisory interpreter, a judge, or another official with jurisdiction over interpreter matters to resolve the situation.

Canon 10: Professional Development.

Interpreters shall continually improve their skills and knowledge and advance the profession through activities such as professional training and education, and interaction with colleagues and specialists in related fields.

HISTORY: Adopted December 3, 1998.

Publisher's Notes.

By Per Curiam Order delivered December 3, 1998, the Supreme Court provided: "In 1997, a special committee was appointed by the Arkansas Judicial Council to study the issue of a certification program for foreign language interpreters and to make recommendations to the full Judicial Council. Judges and interpreters were appointed to serve on the committee.

"This fall the committee made its report to the Arkansas Judicial Council and recommended the adoption of the Model Code of Professional Responsibility for Interpreters in the Judiciary. This Code was developed by the National Center for State Courts with advice from experts in the field. It has been adopted by other states which have a certification process for foreign language interpreters.

"The Arkansas Judicial Council endorsed this recommendation at its recent meeting and has requested that the Supreme Court adopt it. In making its recommendation to us, the Arkansas Judicial Council stated that the Code provides a foundation for acceptable courtroom procedure and protocol and also serves as a basis for education and training of interpreters.

"We commend the Arkansas Judicial Council and the judges and interpreters who served on the committee for their work on this issue.

"Having now thoroughly considered the matter, we adopt, effective immediately, the Code and promulgate it as Administrative Order Number 11 — Arkansas Code of Professional Responsibility for Interpreters in the Judiciary."

Commentary

Interpreters must continually strive to increase their knowledge of the languages they work in professionally, including past and current trends in technical, vernacular, and regional terminology as well as their application within the court proceedings.

Interpreters should keep informed of all statutes, rules of courts and policies of the judiciary that relate to the performance of their professional duties.

An interpreter should seek to elevate the standards of the profession through participation in workshops, professional meetings, interaction with colleagues, and reading current literature in the field.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 12 — OFFICIAL FORMS

The following court forms are found in the publications noted below and may also be found at the Arkansas Judiciary website: (<https://www.arcourts.gov>).1. Probate Forms.

The Supreme Court, pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 28-1-114 and its constitutional and inherent powers to regulate procedure in the courts, has adopted thirty-three probate forms. These official forms supersede all earlier versions. The forms are published in 336 Ark. App'x [603] (1999).2. Court Forms for Orders of Protection.

The Supreme Court, pursuant to Amendment 80 of the Arkansas Constitution, has adopted the following forms to be used in order-of-protection cases: (a) Ex Parte Order of Protection, (b) Notice of Hearing on Petition for Order of Protection, and (c) Final Order of Protection. The Administrative Office of the Courts in collaboration with the Arkansas Judicial Council and others is authorized to prepare instructions to be used with these documents and to make technical corrections from time to time to the documents. These forms are published in 2010 Ark. 442.

3. Additional Forms and Orders.

To ensure consistency and efficiency in the courts, the Supreme Court authorizes the Arkansas Judicial Council to develop, revise, and maintain various uniform forms, petitions, and orders for use by courts. However, unless specifically directed by the Supreme Court, use of such uniform forms, petitions, and orders is not mandatory. All uniform forms, petitions, and orders remain subject to legal challenge and publishing them does not alter this.

HISTORY: Adopted January 26, 1999; 1, 2011; amended March 20, 2014, effective amended November 11, 2010, effective January July 1, 2014; amended December 17, 2020.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 13 — JUDICIAL EXEMPTION FROM JURY SERVICE

During their term of office, Supreme Court Justices, Court of Appeals Judges, and judges of general jurisdiction trial courts shall not serve as grand or petit jurors in the courts of this State.

HISTORY: Adopted March 25, 1999.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 14 — ADMINISTRATION OF CIRCUIT COURTS

1. Divisions.

a. The circuit judges of a judicial circuit shall establish the following subject-matter divisions in each county of the judicial circuit: criminal, civil, juvenile, probate, and domestic relations. The designation of divisions is for the purpose of judicial administration and caseload management and is not for the purpose of subject-matter jurisdiction. The creation of divisions shall in no way limit the powers and duties of the judges to hear all matters within the jurisdiction of the circuit court.

b. For purposes of this order, “probate” means cases relating to decedent estate administration, trust administration, adoption, guardianship, conservatorship, commitment, and adult protective custody. “Domestic Relations” means cases relating to divorce, annulment, maintenance, custody, visitation, support, paternity, and domestic abuse. Provided, however, the definitions of “probate” and “domestic relations” are not intended to restrict the juvenile division of circuit court from hearing adoption, guardianship, support, custody, paternity, or commitment issues which may arise in juvenile proceedings.

c. Specialty dockets or programs, typically, employ a problem-solving approach with the judge supervising a treatment plan for a defendant that is designed and implemented by a team of court staff and health professionals. Examples include “drug courts,” “mental health courts,” “veteran’s courts,” “DWI courts,” “Hope courts,” “smarter sentencing courts,” and “swift courts.” Specialty dockets or programs may be established within a subject-matter division of a circuit court if they are described in the circuit’s administrative plan and approved by the supreme court.

2. Administrative Judges. In each judicial circuit in which there are two or more circuit judges, there shall be an administrative judge.

a. Means of Selection. On or before the first day of February of each year following the year in which the general election is held, the circuit judges of a judicial circuit shall select one of their number by secret ballot to serve as the administrative judge for the judicial circuit. In circuits with fewer than ten judges the selection must be unanimous among the judges in the judicial circuit. In circuits with 10 or more judges the selection shall require the approval of at least 75% of the judges. The name of the administrative judge shall be submitted in writing to the Supreme Court. If the judges are unable to agree on a selection, they shall notify the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court in writing and furnish information detailing their efforts to select an administrative judge and the results of their balloting. The Supreme Court shall then select the administrative judge. An administrative judge shall be selected on the basis of his or her administrative skills.

b. Term of Office. The administrative judge shall serve a term of two years and may serve successive terms. The administrative judge shall be subject to removal for cause by the Supreme Court. If a vacancy occurs in the office of the administrative judge prior to the end of a term, then within twenty days of such vacancy, the circuit judges in office at the time of such vacancy shall select an administrative judge to serve the unexpired term, and failing to do so, the Supreme Court shall select a replacement.

c. Duties. In addition to his or her regular judicial duties, an administrative judge shall exercise general administrative supervision over the circuit court and judges within his or her judicial circuit under the administrative plan submitted pursuant to Section 3 of this Administrative Order. The administrative judge will be the liaison for that judicial circuit with the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court in matters relating to administration. In addition, the duties of the administrative judge shall include the following:

(1) Administrative Plan. The administrative judge shall ensure that the administrative plan and its implementation are consistent with the requirements of the orders of the Supreme Court.

(2) Case Assignment. Cases shall be assigned under the supervision of the administrative judge in accordance with the circuit's administrative plan. The administrative judge shall assure that the business of the court is apportioned among the circuit judges as equally as possible, and cases may be reassigned by the administrative judge as necessity requires. A circuit judge to whom a case is assigned shall accept that case unless he or she is disqualified or the interests of justice require that the case not be heard by that judge.

(3) Information Compilation. The administrative judge shall have responsibility for the computation, development, and coordination of case statistics and other management data respecting the judicial circuit.

(4) Improvements in the Functioning of the Court. The administrative judge shall periodically evaluate the effectiveness of the court in administering justice and recommend changes to the Supreme Court.

d. One-Judge Circuit. A circuit judge in a one-judge circuit is an administrative judge. An administrative plan shall be submitted to address specialty court programs (see subsection (3)(c)(2) of this administrative order), state district judges (see subsection (3)(c)(3), or district court plans (see subsection (3)(c)(4) of this order).

3. Administrative Plan. The circuit judges of each judicial circuit by majority vote shall adopt a plan for circuit court administration. The administrative judge of each judicial circuit shall submit the administrative plan to the Supreme Court. The purpose of the administrative plan is to facilitate the best use of the available judicial and support resources within each circuit so that cases will be resolved in an efficient and prompt manner. The plan shall include the following:

a. Case Assignment and Allocation.

(1) The plan shall describe the process for the assignment of cases and shall control the assignment and allocation of cases in the judicial circuit. In the absence of good cause to the contrary, the plan of assignment of cases shall assume (i) random selection of unrelated cases; (ii) a substantially equal apportionment of cases among the circuit judges of a judicial circuit; and (iii) all matters connected with a pending or supplemental proceeding will be heard by the judge to whom the matter was originally assigned. For purposes of subsection 3(a)(1)(i), “random selection” means that cases assigned to a particular subject-matter division shall be randomly distributed among the judges assigned to hear those types of cases. For purposes of subsection 3(a)(1)(ii), “a substantially equal apportionment of cases” does not require that the judges among whom the cases of a division are assigned must hear the same percentage of such cases so long as the judges’ overall caseloads are substantially equal. (2) Cases in a subject-matter division may be exclusively assigned to particular judges, but such assignment shall not preclude judges from hearing cases of any other subject-matter division.

b. Caseload Estimate. The plan shall provide a process which will apportion the business of the circuit court among each of the judges within the judicial circuit on as equal a basis as possible. The plan shall include an estimate of the projected caseload of each of the judges based upon previous case filings. If, at any time, it is determined that a workload imbalance exists which is affecting the judicial circuit or a judge adversely, the plan shall be amended subject to the provisions of Section 4 of this Administrative Order.

c. Other Provisions.

(1) [Repealed.]

(2) Specialty Dockets or Programs. The plan shall describe any special programs, dockets, or proceedings, including such things as the operation of a specialty docket or court program (see subsection (1)(c) of this administrative order). The plan shall:

(A) describe the program and how it is operated;

(B) provide the statutory or legal authority on which it is based;

(C) certify that the program conforms to all applicable sentencing laws, including fines, fees, court costs, and probation assessments;

(D) describe the program’s use of court resources, including without limitation, prosecuting attorneys or public defenders, and the availability of such resources and how they will be provided; and

(E) provide the source of funding for the program.

(3) State District Court Judges. If state district court judges preside over circuit court matters pursuant to the provisions of Administrative Order No. 18, the plan shall

(A) describe the cases or matters included;

(B) state the judges participating and the assignment and allocation of cases to them; and

(C) if specialty dockets or programs are included, provide the information required by subsection (3)(c)(2) of this administrative order.

(4) District Court Plans. Administrative plans prepared by State District Judges or Local District Judges pursuant to Administrative Order No. 18, section 9, shall be appended to the circuit court's administrative plan for submission to the supreme court under section (4) of this administrative order. The administrative judge and other circuit judges may endorse, object to, or otherwise comment on the district court's administrative plan.

4. Supreme Court.

a. The administrative plan for the judicial circuit shall be submitted by the administrative judge to the Supreme Court by July 1 of each year following the year in which the general election of circuit judges is held. The effective date of the plan will be the following January 1. Until a subsequent plan is submitted to and published by the Supreme Court, any plan currently in effect shall remain in full force. Judges who are appointed or elected to fill a vacancy shall assume the caseload assigned to the judge they are replacing until such time a new administrative plan is required or the original plan is amended. Upon approval, the Supreme Court shall publish the administrative plan and a copy shall be filed with the clerk of the circuit court in each county within the judicial circuit and the Clerk of the Supreme Court. The process for the amendment of a plan shall be the same as that of the plan's initial adoption.

b. In the event the administrative judge is unable to submit a plan consistent with the provisions of this Administrative Order, the Supreme Court shall formulate a plan for the equitable distribution of cases and caseloads within the judicial circuit. The Supreme Court shall set out the plan in an order which shall be filed with the clerk of each court in the judicial circuit and the Clerk of the Supreme Court. The clerk shall thereafter assign cases in accordance with the plan.

c. In the event an approved plan is not being followed, a judge may bring the matter to the attention of the Chief Justice of the Arkansas Supreme Court by setting out in writing the nature of the problem. Upon receipt of a complaint, the Supreme Court may cause an investigation to be undertaken by appropriate personnel and will take other action as may be necessary to insure the efficient operation of the courts and the expeditious dispatch of litigation in the judicial circuit.

HISTORY: Adopted April 6, 2001; amended November 1, 2001; amended July 11, 2002; amended January 30, 2003; amended January 22, 2004; amended May 27, 2010; amended April 21, 2011; amended December 13, 2012; amended December 17, 2020, effective January 1, 2021.

Publisher's Notes.

The July 3, 2003, Per Curiam read: "In our per curiam order dated January 30, 2003, In re: Administrative Order Number 14 — Administration of Circuit Courts, we directed that administrative plans be submitted by the various judicial circuits ¹ by July 1, 2003. The plans have been submitted, and the Court has reviewed them. We announce the following actions with respect to the plans.¹

"(1) The administrative plans submitted by the following judicial circuits are approved: 1st, 4th, 8th-N, 8th-S, 11th-W, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th-E, 19th-W, 20th, 22nd, and 23rd.

"(2) The plan adopted by the majority of the circuit judges and submitted by the administrative judge in the 10th judicial circuit is approved.

"(3) The administrative plans submitted by the 7th, 9th-W, 13th, and 21st judicial circuits are approved conditioned upon these plans being modified to provide for the computerized random assignment of cases. (See Administrative Order Number 14 (3)(a)(3)).

"(4) Administrative Order Number 14 (3)(a)(2) provides that 'except for the exclusive assignment of criminal and juvenile division cases, cases in other subject-matter divisions should not be exclusively assigned to particular judges absent extraordinary reasons which must be set out in the circuit's administrative plan.' The plans submitted by the 2nd, 5th, 6th, and 12th judicial circuits provide for particular judges to exclusively hear domestic relations and probate cases, but the plans fail to set out the extraordinary reasons for such assignments. Accordingly, these plans are remanded, and the above listed circuits are directed to furnish the Court with the required explanation or to submit a modified plan.

"(5) The plan submitted by the 3rd judicial circuit provides that one judge 'will primarily hear equity cases.' We have made clear that cases cannot be assigned based upon a law/equity dichotomy; consequently, this plan is remanded with directions to correct this flaw.

"The plans submitted by the 1st judicial circuit and the 6th judicial circuit as it relates to case assignments in Perry County have a troubling feature. Each provides for the open assignment of certain cases as opposed to the assignment of each case to a particular judge. We understand the reasons for this practice, but these judicial circuits should work toward assigning each case to a judge. In the future, plans may not be approved with this open assignment feature.

"Finally, we announce that it is the Court's belief that rotation of judges in those instances where judges are exclusively assigned to criminal or juvenile cases may be desirable. The possibility of 'burn-out,' as well as a desire to diversify, are factors worthy of consideration. Administrative judges and all circuit judges should be cognizant of this consideration as plans are prepared in the future. Hopefully, the wishes of colleagues will be addressed, but the Court will consider the possible need for rotation in specific instances, as well as any necessary amendment to Administrative Order Number 14.

"Pursuant to Administrative Order Number 14, approved plans shall be effective January 1, 2024."

The Per Curiam Order dated December 3, 2015, provided: "Pursuant to Administrative Orders No. 14 and No. 18, administrative plans have been submitted by all judicial circuits and district courts. The administrative plans are approved and shall be effective January 1, 2016, unless otherwise noted."

CASE NOTES

Jurisdiction.

Circuit court had jurisdiction to hear the case even though it concerned child-custody law and was outside the subject of proceedings in the juvenile division, because the designation of divisions was for the purpose of judicial administration and not for the purpose of subject matter jurisdiction, and the creation of divisions would in no way limit the powers and duties of the judges to hear all matters within the jurisdiction of the circuit court; once the juvenile division of the circuit court ordered that the child be placed in the permanent custody of the third parties, the child was no longer dependent-neglected and she came into dependency-neglect proceedings due to parental neglect and parental unfitness. Young v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2012 Ark. App. 334 (2012).

In a termination of parental rights case, a circuit court had subject matter jurisdiction to hear the case because it had original jurisdiction of all justiciable matters not otherwise assigned; the creation of divisions did not limit the power to hear the case. Russell v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2014 Ark. App. 734 (2014).

Circuit court, juvenile division, had subject-matter jurisdiction to hear the guardianship proceeding, which arose out of dependency-neglect proceedings. While the circuit court might have erred in retaining jurisdiction in the absence of a formal request, a failure to follow statutory procedure does not oust the subject-matter jurisdiction of the court. Section 9-27-306(a)(1)(B)(i) contemplates that the circuit court's juvenile division may exercise jurisdiction over a juvenile up to 21 years of age; because the mother did not object to the irregularity in the proceedings below, her argument was not preserved. Kantor v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2018 Ark. App. 402, 559 S.W.3d 747 (2018).

Probate Matters.

Circuit court had jurisdiction to determine the issues in this probate proceeding initiated to administer, settle, and distribute the decedent's estate's property pursuant to her will, and the circuit court had the power to determine whether real property was included in the estate; appellant placed the property at issue by including it as a part of the estate in his petition for appointment of an administrator, and the creation of court divisions did not limit the powers of judges to hear all matters within the circuit court's jurisdiction. Fenwick v. Clark, 2022 Ark. App. 300 (2022).

Probate case was originally filed in the probate division of the circuit court and it should have been filed in the civil division, because the exclusive jurisdiction in cases involving trusts were matters within the jurisdiction of the courts of equity, Amendment 80 to the Arkansas Constitution abolished chancery courts and vested jurisdiction for actions in equity and law in the circuit courts, and the designation of divisions was for the purpose of judicial administration and caseload management and was not for the purpose of subject-matter jurisdiction. Bell v. Bank of Am., N.A., 2012 Ark. App. 445, 422 S.W.3d 138 (2012).

S.W.3d 621 (2006); Foster v. Hill, 371 Ark. 666, 269 S.W.3d 791 (2007); Arman v. Chi St. Vincent Hot Springs, 2019 Ark. App. 187, 574 S.W.3d 731 (2019).

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 15 — ATTORNEYS

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 15.1

— QUALIFICATIONS AND STANDARDS FOR ATTORNEYS APPOINTED TO REPRESENT CHILDREN AND PARENTS

Rule

- Section 1. Qualifications for attorneys appointed by the court to represent children and indigent parents in dependency-neglect cases.
- Section 2. Standards of practice for attorneys ad litem in dependency-neglect cases.
- Section 3. Standards of practice for attorneys appointed by the court to represent parents in dependency-neglect cases.
- Section 4. Qualifications for attorneys appointed by the court to represent children in domestic relations cases and guardianship cases when custody is an issue.
- Section 5. Standards of practice for attorneys ad litem in domestic relations cases and guardianship cases when custody is an issue.

Section 1. Qualifications for attorneys appointed by the court to represent children and indigent parents in dependency-neglect cases.

- a. An attorney shall be licensed and in good standing with the Arkansas Supreme Court.
- b.(1) Prior to appointment, an attorney shall have initial education to include approved legal education of not less than 10 hours in the two years prior to the date an attorney qualifies as a court-appointed attorney for children or indigent parents in dependency-neglect cases. Initial training must include:
 - Child development;
 - Dynamics of abuse and neglect;
 - Attorney roles & responsibilities, including ethical considerations;
 - Relevant state law, federal law, case law, and rules;
 - Family dynamics, which may include but is not limited to, the following topics: substance abuse, domestic violence and mental health issues; and Division of Children and Family Services (DCFS) policies and procedures.
 - Additional initial legal education may include, but is not limited to:
 - Grief and attachment;
 - Custody and visitation;
 - Resources and services; and
 - Trial and appellate advocacy.
- (2) The Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) shall design and conduct programs for the initial 10 hours of legal education, either alone or in collaboration with other agencies or entities.

(3) Following completion of the initial 10 hours of legal education, continuing legal education (CLE) shall include at least 4 hours per year related to representation in dependency-neglect cases which may include, but is not limited to, the subject categories listed in (b)(1). The 4 hours of CLE may be in any one of the specified categories in (b)(1) or in any combination thereof.

(4) Both the initial 10 hours of education and the 4 hours of CLE shall be certified in accordance with the rules and regulations promulgated by the Continuing Legal Education Board. All educational hours shall be calculated with reference to the CLE reporting period of July 1 through June 30, as utilized for general CLE credit by the Continuing Legal Education Board. The CLE hours for attorneys may not be carried over from one CLE year to the next.

(5) An attorney who is qualified for court appointment in dependency-neglect cases but who fails to acquire 4 hours of CLE required by June 30 of any year shall be subject to the pertinent compliance dates of Rule 5.(D) of the Arkansas Rules and Regulations for Minimum Continuing Legal Education. In accordance with Rule 5.(D), attorneys who sign an acknowledgment deficiency by August 31, and obtain their 4 hours by December 1 shall remain qualified. However, such attorneys shall not be subject to the provisions of Section 5 of the Regulations for Minimum Continuing Legal Education.

(6) When an attorney is seeking to complete the 4-hour CLE requirement between June 30 and December 1 for the previous CLE year, he or she may remain as attorney on any pending cases for which appointment was made when the attorney was in compliance with the educational requirements. However, that attorney shall not accept appointment to any new cases until he or she is in full compliance with the CLE requirements.

(7) An attorney who fails to complete 4 hours of CLE by December 1 is no longer qualified for court appointment in dependency-neglect cases. His or her name shall be removed from the list of qualified attorneys that is maintained and distributed to the trial courts by the AOC. Such attorney can become qualified again only by completing 10 hours of CLE in the categories required for initial qualification.

(8) Attorneys in compliance with the educational qualifications as an attorney ad litem for dependency-neglect cases as of July 1, 2001 shall be deemed to have met the initial educational qualifications to represent parents in dependency-neglect cases.

c. Clinical prerequisite for new appointments in dependency-neglect cases. The Directors of the Attorney Ad Litem Program and Parent Counsel Program shall establish an individualized clinical prerequisite commensurate with each individual attorney's experience that may include but is not limited to participation in staffings, mediation and hearings with an experienced attorney, and assigning an experienced attorney as mentor to the new attorney. Each attorney shall have a documented clinical plan approved by an attorney program director in their dependency-neglect qualification file.

HISTORY: Amended March 17, 2016.

Section 2. Standards of practice for attorneys ad litem in dependency-neglect cases.

a. An attorney ad litem shall conduct personally or in conjunction with a trained Court Appointed Special Advocate (CASA) volunteer an independent investigation consisting of review of all relevant documents and records including but not limited to: police reports, DCFS records, medical records, school records, and court records. The ad litem shall interview the child, and in conjunction with a trained CASA volunteer, when one has been appointed, shall interview the parents, foster parents, caseworker, service providers, school personnel and others having relevant knowledge to assist in representation. Continuing investigation and regular contact with the child are mandatory. The attorney ad litem shall provide his or her clients and/or his or her client's caregivers, the attorney's contact information and shall respond promptly to all contacts concerning his or her client, understanding that traditional methods of communication may vary depending on the client's age and ability.

b. An attorney ad litem shall determine the best interest of a child by considering such factors as the child's age and sense of time, level of maturity, culture and ethnicity, degree of attachment to family members including siblings; as well as continuity, consistency, and the child's sense of belonging and identity.

c. An attorney shall make earnest efforts to attend all case staffings and court-ordered mediation conferences. Absent reasonable cause, the attorney shall directly communicate with his or her client and/or his or her client's caregiver prior to the date of each hearing. An attorney ad litem shall appear at all hearings to represent the best interest of the child. All relevant facts should be presented to the court and if the child's wishes differ from the ad litem's determination of the child's best interest, the ad litem shall communicate the child's wishes to the court.

d. An attorney ad litem shall explain the court proceedings and the role of the ad litem in terms that the child can understand.

e. An attorney ad litem shall advocate for specific and appropriate services for the child and the child's family.

f. An attorney ad litem shall monitor implementation of case plans and court orders.

g. An attorney ad litem shall file appropriate pleadings on behalf of the child.

h. An attorney ad litem shall review the progress of the child's case and shall advocate for timely hearings.

i. An attorney ad litem shall request orders that are clear, specific, and, where appropriate, include a time line for assessment, services, placement, treatment and evaluation of the child and the child's family.

j. Attorney-client or any other privilege shall not prevent the ad litem from sharing all information relevant to the best interest of the child with the court.

k. An attorney ad litem, functioning as an arm of the court, is afforded immunity against ordinary negligence for actions taken in furtherance of his or her appointment.

l. An attorney ad litem shall participate in 10 hours of initial legal education prior to appointment and shall participate in 4 hours of CLE each year thereafter.

m. An attorney ad litem shall identify any potential or actual conflict of interest that would impair his or her ability to represent a client. The attorney shall notify the court as soon as practical of such conflict to allow the court to appoint another attorney for the client or for the client to retain counsel prior to the next hearing.

n. A full-time attorney shall not have more than 75 dependency-neglect cases, and a part-time attorney shall not have more than 25 dependency-neglect cases. Any deviations from this standard must be approved by the Administrative Office of the Courts which shall consider the following, including but not limited to: the number of counties and geographic area in a judicial district, the experience and expertise of the attorney ad litem, area resources, the availability of CASA volunteers, the attorney's legal practice commitments and the proportion of the attorney's practice dedicated to representing children in dependency-neglect cases, the availability of qualified attorneys in the geographic area, and the availability of funding. An attorney who is within 5 cases of reaching the maximum caseload shall notify the Administrative Office of the Courts and the Juvenile Division Judge.

o. An attorney shall not accept appointment of any case for which he or she cannot devote the requisite amount of time to comply with the above Standards of Practice and the Model Rules of Professional Conduct.

HISTORY: Amended March 17, 2016.

Section 3. Standards of practice for attorneys appointed by the court to represent parents in dependency-neglect cases.

a. An attorney shall conduct a review of all relevant documents and records including but not limited to: police reports, DCFS records, medical records, and court records. An attorney shall interview all people having relevant knowledge to assist in representation, including but not limited to the investigator, OCC attorney or DCFS case worker, and service providers.

b. The attorney shall provide his or her clients the attorney's contact information and shall respond promptly to all contacts concerning his or her client. An attorney shall make earnest efforts to attend all case staffings and court-ordered mediation conferences. Absent reasonable cause, the attorney shall directly communicate with his or her client prior to the date of each hearing. An attorney shall attend all dependency-neglect court hearings until the case is closed or his or her client's parental rights have been terminated.

c. An attorney shall diligently and zealously protect and advance the client's interests, rights and goals at all case staffings and in all court proceedings.

d. An attorney shall advise and explain to the client each stage of the court proceedings and the likelihood of achieving the client's goals. An attorney, where appropriate, shall identify alternatives for the client to consider, including the client's rights regarding any possible appeal, and explain the risks, if any, inherent in the client's position.

e. An attorney shall appear at all hearings and present all evidence and develop all issues to zealously advocate for his or her client and to further the client's goals.

f. An attorney shall advocate for specific and appropriate services for the parent to further the client's goals.

g. An attorney shall monitor implementation of case plans and court orders to further the client's goals.

h. An attorney shall file appropriate pleadings to further the client's goals.

i. An attorney shall review the progress of the client's case and shall advocate for timely hearings when necessary to further the client's goals.

j. An attorney shall request orders that are clear, specific, and, where appropriate, include a time line for assessment, services, placement, and treatment.

k. An attorney shall participate in 10 hours of initial legal education prior to appointment and shall participate in 4 hours of CLE each year thereafter.

l. An attorney shall identify any potential or actual conflict of interest that would impair his or her ability to represent a client. The attorney shall notify the court as soon as practical of such conflict to allow the court to appoint another attorney for the client or for the client to retain counsel prior to the next hearing.

m. An attorney shall not accept appointment of any case for which he or she cannot devote the requisite amount of time to comply with the above Standards of Practice and the Model Rules of Professional Conduct.

HISTORY: Amended March 17, 2016.

Section 4. Qualifications for attorneys appointed by the court to represent children in domestic relations cases and guardianship cases when custody is an issue.

a. An attorney shall be licensed and in good standing with the Arkansas Supreme Court.

(1) Prior to appointment, an attorney shall have initial education to include approved legal education of not less than 10 hours in the two years prior to the date the attorney qualifies for appointment. Initial education shall include but is not limited to:

Child development;

Ad litem roles and responsibilities, including ethical considerations;

Relevant substantive state, federal and case law;

Custody and visitation; and Family dynamics, including substance abuse, domestic abuse, and mental health issues.

(2) The Administrative Office of the Courts shall design and conduct programs for the initial 10 hours of legal education, either alone or in collaboration with other agencies or entities.

(3) Continuing education required to maintain qualification as an attorney ad litem shall include 4 hours of annual education in any of the five subject-matter areas set out in (b)(1) above for initial training, or in other areas affecting the child and family. The 4 hours of CLE may be in any one of the specified categories or in any combination thereof.

(4) Both the initial 10 hours of education and the 4 hours of CLE shall be certified as CLE in accordance with the rules and regulations promulgated by the Continuing Legal Education Board. All educational hours shall be calculated with reference to the CLE reporting period of July 1 through June 30, as utilized for general CLE credit by the Continuing Legal Education Board. The CLE hours for attorneys ad litem may not be carried over from one CLE year to the next.

(5) An attorney who is qualified as an attorney ad litem but who fails to acquire 4 hours of CLE by June 30 of any year shall be subject to the pertinent compliance dates of Rule 5.(D) of the Arkansas Rules and Regulations for Minimum Continuing Legal Education. In accordance with Rule 5.(D), attorneys who sign an acknowledgment of deficiency and obtain their four hours by December 1 shall remain qualified as attorneys ad litem.

However, such attorneys shall not be subject to the provisions of Section 5 of the Regulations for Minimum Continuing Legal Education.

(6) When an attorney ad litem is seeking to complete the 4-hour continuing education requirement between June 30 and December 1 for the previous CLE year, he or she may remain as attorney ad litem on any pending cases for which appointment was made when the attorney was in compliance with educational requirements. However, that attorney shall not accept appointment to any new cases until he or she is in full compliance with the CLE requirements.

(7) An attorney who fails to complete 4 hours of CLE by December 1 is no longer qualified as an attorney ad litem. His or her name shall be removed from the list of qualified attorneys that is maintained and distributed to the trial courts by the AOC. Such attorney can become qualified again only by completing 10 hours in the categories required for initial qualification.

Section 5. Standards of practice for attorneys ad litem in domestic relations cases and guardianship cases when custody is an issue.

a. An attorney ad litem shall conduct an independent investigation consisting of review of all relevant documents and records. The ad litem shall interview the child, parents, and others having relevant knowledge to assist in representation. Continuing investigation and regular contact with the child during the pendency of the action are mandatory. Upon entry of a final order, the attorney ad litem's obligation to represent the minor child shall end, unless directed otherwise by the court.

b. An attorney ad litem shall determine the best interest of a child by considering such custody criteria as:

(1) Moral fitness factors: integrity, character, compassion, sobriety, religious training and practice, a newly acquired partner regarding the preceding elements;

(2) Stability factors: emotional stability, work stability, financial stability, residence and school stability, health, partner stability;

(3) Love and affection factors: attention given, discipline, attitude toward education, social attitude, attitude toward access of the other party to the child, and attitude toward cooperation with the other party regarding the child's needs;

(4) Other relevant information regarding the child such as stated preference, age, sex, health, testing and evaluation, child care arrangements; and regarding the home such as its location, size, and family composition.

c. An attorney ad litem shall appear at all hearings to represent the best interest of the child. All relevant facts should be presented to the court and if the child's wishes differ from the ad litem's determination of the child's best interest, the ad litem shall communicate the child's wishes to the court, as well as the recommendations of the ad litem.

d. An attorney ad litem shall file appropriate pleadings on behalf of the child, call witnesses, participate fully in examination of witnesses, present relevant evidence, and advocate for timely hearings.

e. An attorney ad litem shall explain to the child the court proceedings and the role of the ad litem in terms that the child can understand.

f. An attorney ad litem shall make recommendations to the court for specific and appropriate services for the child and the child's family. All recommendations shall likewise be communicated to the attorneys for the parties, or if a party is pro se, then to the party.

g. An attorney ad litem shall not be prevented by any privilege, including the lawyer-client privilege, from sharing with the court all information relevant to the best interest of the child.

h. An attorney shall not accept appointment to any case for which he or she cannot devote the requisite amount of time to comply with these standards of practice and the Model Rules of Professional Conduct.

HISTORY: Adopted September 21, 2001.

Publisher's Notes.

Acts 1999, No. 708, established a statewide system of contracts for attorneys ad litem and provided that the Arkansas Supreme Court adopt standards of practice and qualifications for service for all attorneys who seek to receive contracts to provide legal representation to children in dependency-neglect proceedings. The act also established a program for the appointment and payment of attorneys in domestic relations and guardianship cases where custody is an issue and provided that the Arkansas Supreme Court, with the advice of judges, adopt standards of practice and qualifications for service for all attorneys seeking appointment to provide legal representation for children in these cases. The qualifications and standards of practice for attorneys ad litem in dependency-neglect proceedings were adopted in a per curiam order dated June 24, 1999, effective January 1, 2000. The qualifications and standards of practice for attorney ad litem appointments in chancery and guardianship cases were adopted in a per curiam order dated December 9, 1999, effective April 1, 2000. These orders were amended on March 30, 2000, to clarify issues with regard to the educational qualifications for attorneys ad litem in these cases. This Administrative Order Number 15 supersedes the per curiam orders of June 24, 1999, December 9, 1999, and March 20, 2000.

As enacted, Section 4 has a subsection a. but no b.

CASE NOTES

Admissibility of Report.

In a child custody case, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the attorney ad litem's report into evidence over a hearsay objection because the report's contents and recommendation were admissible by law under § 5 of this administrative order. Tracy v. Denie, 2012 Ark. 281, 411 S.W.3d 702 (2012).

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 15.2 — PRO BONO LEGAL SERVICES BY NON-ADMITTED LICENSED ATTORNEYS

(a) Authorization to Provide Pro Bono Services. Notwithstanding the limitations on practice for attorneys who are not licensed by the State of Arkansas, non-admitted attorneys are authorized to provide pro bono legal services in this state as set out in this order. This order constitutes legal authorization for purposes of Ark. R. Prof. Conduct 5.5(d)(2).

(1) The attorney must be licensed in another state or the District of Columbia and be in good standing in that jurisdiction.

(2) The attorney shall provide his or her services without charge or an expectation of a fee to persons of limited means who have been referred to the attorney by an authorized sponsoring entity as set out in subsection (b) and only through such referrals.

(3) The volunteer attorney shall complete any appropriate training required by the sponsoring entity and shall additionally comply with the Continuing Legal Education requirements of any state in which the attorney holds a current license to practice law.

(4) If the volunteer attorney's services for a client require a court appearance, the attorney shall comply with the appearance requirements of Rule XIV of the Rules Governing Admission to the Bar and/or the procedure of the applicable forum, even if the attorney resides inside the State of Arkansas.

(5) The volunteer attorney agrees to be bound and subject to all applicable Arkansas Rules of Professional Conduct.

(b) Sponsoring Entity. When providing pro bono services pursuant to this provision, attorney's representation shall be under the auspices of a sponsoring entity. The sponsoring entity shall be a legal aid services provider that represents Arkansas clients, namely Legal Aid of Arkansas, Inc., Center for Arkansas Legal Services, Inc., Lone Star Legal Aid, Inc., or such other entity as may be approved by the Arkansas Supreme Court, and shall:

(1) make the volunteer attorney aware of the sponsoring entity's resources that may be of assistance to the attorney;

(2) maintain a log on an annual basis of all volunteer attorneys providing legal services through that sponsoring entity; and

(3) provide professional malpractice insurance covering the volunteer attorney's services if the volunteer attorney is not otherwise covered by professional malpractice insurance.

HISTORY: Added March 31, 2011.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 15.3 — PRO BONO LEGAL SERVICES BY RETIRED OR INACTIVE ATTORNEYS

(a) Authorization to Provide Pro Bono Services. Notwithstanding the limitations on practice for attorneys who are retired or inactive, attorneys with a license status of retired or voluntary inactive are authorized to provide pro bono legal services as set out in this order.

(1) The attorney must not have been publicly disciplined for professional misconduct by a bar, court, or government agency of any jurisdiction within the last five (5) years.

(2) The attorney shall provide his or her services without fee or an expectation of fee to persons of limited means who have been referred to the attorney by an authorized sponsoring entity as set out in subsection (b) and only through such referrals.

(3) The volunteering attorney shall complete any appropriate training required by the sponsoring entity.

(b) Sponsoring Entity. When providing pro bono services pursuant to this order, the attorney's representation shall be under the auspices of a sponsoring entity. The sponsoring entity shall be a legal aid services provider that represents Arkansas clients, namely Legal Aid of Arkansas, Inc., Center for Arkansas Legal Services, Inc., Lone Star Legal Aid, Inc., or such other entity as may be approved by the Arkansas Supreme Court, and shall

(1) make the volunteer attorney aware of the sponsoring entity's resources that may be of assistance to the attorney;

(2) maintain a log on an annual basis of all volunteer attorneys providing legal services through that sponsoring entity; and

(3) provide professional malpractice insurance covering the volunteer attorney's services if the volunteer attorney is not otherwise covered by professional malpractice insurance.

(c) Continuing Legal Education. A retired or voluntary inactive member of the Bar of Arkansas who practices law only to the extent authorized by this order shall be exempt from Rule 3 of the Rules for Minimum Continuing Legal Education.

(d) License Fees. A retired or voluntary inactive member of the Bar of Arkansas who practices law only to the extent authorized by this order shall pay only the attorney license fees otherwise required to maintain retired or voluntary inactive status, as applicable.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 16 — PROCEDURES REGARDING THE ASSIGNMENT OF JUDGES

Rule

Section I. Authority and scope.

Section II. Bases for assignment.

Section III. Request for assignment — Recusals.

Section IV. Request for assignment — Temporary Inability to Serve (Day Assignments).

Section V. Considerations in making assignments.

Section VI. Assigned judges' power to sign documents.

Section VII. Terminations and reassignments.

Section VIII. Reports.

Section I. Authority and scope.

Pursuant to Ark. Const. Amend. 80, §§ 4, 12, and 13; Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-10-101 (Repl. 2010), 16-13-214 (Supp. 2019), and this Court's inherent rule making authority, the Court adopts and publishes Administrative Order No. 16: Procedures Regarding the Assignment of Circuit, District, and Retired Judges and Justices.

This Order authorizes the Chief Justice to assign (A) sitting circuit court judges, (B) retired circuit and appellate court judges and justices, and (C) sitting state district court judges, with their consent, to serve temporarily in circuit court. Sitting circuit judges may be authorized to sit in a judicial circuit other than the one in which they are currently elected or appointed.

This Order also authorizes the Chief Justice to assign (A) sitting district court judges, (B) sitting state district court judges, and (C) retired district court judges and retired state district court judges, with their consent, to serve temporarily in a district court. Sitting district court judges and sitting state district court judges may be authorized to sit on assignment in a city, county, or judicial district other than the one to which they are currently elected or appointed. Retired district court judges and retired state district court judges may sit in any county in the state. Sitting circuit judges and retired circuit and appellate judges may also be authorized, with their consent, to sit temporarily in district courts, upon appointment by the Chief Justice.

With the adoption of this Order, Administrative Order No. 14, Section 3(c)(1) is repealed. It is no longer necessary for the administrative plan to provide the process for handling recusals, the reassignment of a case, or requests for assignment of a judge by the Supreme Court.

With the adoption of this Order, Administrative Order No. 1 and Administrative Order No. 18, Section 8 are repealed. It is no longer necessary to provide a process for the election of special judges.

This order shall be controlling in the event a circuit or district's administrative plan contains provisions in conflict with the process outlined herein, unless the conflicting provisions are required by this Court to obtain plan approval.

This Order provides a process for the assignment of judges in the event of disqualification, temporary inability to serve, or other need as determined by the Chief Justice. The duties of the Chief Justice under this Order may be discharged by his or her designee.

amended December 17, 2020, effective January March 4, 2021.

Section II. Bases for assignment.

- A. Disqualification pursuant to Arkansas Code of Judicial Conduct; or
- B. Temporary inability to serve; or
- C. Other need as determined by the Chief Justice.

HISTORY: Amended December 17, 2020,
effective January 1, 2021.

CASE NOTES

Jurisdiction.

In litigation involving the administration of several family trusts, the chief justice did not lack jurisdiction to appoint a special judge under the circumstances presented, even though all the judges in the judicial circuit had not recused. Plaintiff's focus on Admin. Order

No. 16, § III, ignored the broad language of Ark. Const. Amend. 80, § 13, and Admin. Order No. 16, § II, which provide the chief justice with the authority to assign a special judge if the chief justice determines there is "other need" for a special judge. Dawson v. Stoner-Sellers, 2019 Ark. 410, 591 S.W.3d 299 (2019).

Section III. Request for assignment -- Recusals.

Circuit Courts: All judicial circuits shall follow this process for the reassignment of a case and the request for an assignment of a special judge by the Chief Justice. A judge recusing him- or herself from a case shall file an Order of Recusal. The Circuit or County Clerk shall enter the case as a "recuse" into the case management system, which will then randomly reassign the case to another judge. The case management system shall first reassign the case to another judge who hears that case type before assigning the case to other judges in the circuit. If the newly assigned judge requests a recusal, he or she shall file an Order of Recusal. The reassignment process shall continue until an appropriate judge is selected by the case management system or until all judges in the circuit have filed Orders of Recusal.

If all judges have been recused, the Circuit or County Clerk shall complete the form provided by the Administrative Office of the Courts to request a special judge. The Clerk shall send the form, along with documentation that all judges in the circuit have been recused, to the Chief Justice requesting that an assignment be made.

Circuit judges shall not be involved in the process of reassignment other than to accept the case or disqualify from the case. Documentation of recusals and all logistics regarding reassignment shall be handled by the Circuit or County Clerk as an administrative function.

District Courts: District Courts shall follow the same process as set out for circuit courts above but will utilize the District Court Clerk.

If all judges have been recused, the District Court Clerk shall complete the form provided by the Administrative Office of the Courts to request a special judge. The clerk shall send the form, along with documentation that all judges in the district have been recused, to the Chief Justice requesting that an assignment be made.

District judges shall not be involved in the process of reassignment other than to accept the case or disqualify from the case. Documentation of recusal and all logistics regarding reassignment shall be handled by the District Court Clerk as an administrative function.

Circuit and District Courts: After notifying the clerk's office of the need for reassignment, a judge shall take no further action in the case other than to direct the attorneys and self-represented litigants to contact the clerk's office regarding reassignment.

If the case management system lacks the capability to reassign a case as detailed above, the clerk's office shall be responsible for creating a process to randomly reassign the case. It is the responsibility of the clerk to document the reassignment process in each case to ensure that the random selection of the judge can be independently verified.

HISTORY: Amended December 17, 2020, effective January 1, 2021; amended February 4, 2021; amended March 4, 2021.

Stoner-Sellers*, 2019 Ark. 410, 591 S.W.3d 299 (2019).

Section IV. Request for assignment -- Temporary Inability to Serve (Day Assignments).

Judges shall configure their calendars so that they are available to hear all matters and sign all orders in cases assigned to them. Judges are encouraged to use all available technology to fulfill these duties.

While it is preferable for judges to hear all cases assigned to them, there may be times when the assigned judge is temporarily unavailable. In the event the assigned judge is temporarily unavailable, he or she may request another judge from the respective circuit or district to preside over their cases. The parties shall be promptly notified of the temporary absence of the assigned judge and of the judge who will preside over the case instead. A party may request a continuance to allow the assigned judge to preside over the case and any continuance for this reason shall be granted, unless it is a time sensitive hearing under state or federal law. In criminal matters, a defendant's request for continuance shall toll the intervening time for purposes of speedy trial until the assigned judge takes further action in the case. Additionally, an order shall be entered memorializing the exclusion of this time period.

If the assigned judge determines that all judges are unavailable to preside over the cases scheduled for the day(s), the assigned judge shall request the clerk to complete the “Form Requesting Chief Justice to Assign a Special Judge.” The clerk shall send the form to the Chief Justice for the Chief Justice’s consideration.

When a judge presides over cases assigned to another judge or when a special judge is assigned by the Chief Justice, the cases shall not be permanently reassigned.

HISTORY: Adopted February 4, 2021; amended March 4, 2021.

Section V. Considerations in making assignments.

Issues which will be considered in selecting a judge to be assigned include, but are not limited to:

- A. the type and complexity of the case;
- B. the amount of time estimated for the assignment;
- C. the geographic location of the case and the proximity of the assigned judge; and
- D. the consent of the sitting judge or retired judge or justice selected.

Under no circumstances shall a judge, a lawyer, or a party seek to influence the decision of the Chief Justice in making an assignment.

HISTORY: Renumbered February 4, 2021;
March 4, 2021.

Section VI. Assigned judges’ power to sign documents.

A judge assigned to a cause or matter may render or sign orders, judgments, documents, or other papers in that cause or matter in a geographic location other than the judicial circuit or district in which the cause or matter is pending. Such order, judgment, document, or other paper shall have the same effect, for all intents and purposes, as if signed in the judicial circuit or district in which the matter or cause is pending.

HISTORY: Renumbered February 4, 2021;
March 4, 2021.

Section VII. Terminations and reassignments.

An assignment, once made, will be terminated only for good cause at the request of the assigned judge or at the discretion of the Chief Justice.

After termination of an assignment and notification to the clerk, the clerk shall reassign the case to a judge at random. If all judges in the judicial circuit or judicial district recuse, the process for assignment by the Chief Justice may begin anew upon completion of the “Form Requesting Chief Justice to Assign a Special Judge.” The clerk shall send the form to the Chief Justice along with documentation that all judges in the district have been recused. Assignment shall be made in the same manner as set out herein.

HISTORY: Amended December 17, 2020, effective January 1, 2021; renumbered February 4, 2021; March 4, 2021.

Section VIII. Reports.

All judges assigned to circuit court cases are subject to Administrative Order

No. 3, which requires the reporting of cases that have been under advisement for more than ninety (90) days after final submission. For reporting such cases, a judge shall follow the process set out in Administrative Order No. 3(2)(A). A judge who has no cases that have been under submission for more than ninety (90) days is not required to file a report.

HISTORY: Adopted on February 6, 2003; amended May 27, 2010; renumbered February 4, 2021; March 4, 2021.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 17 — MANDATORY COURSE ON MAINTAINING AN ARKANSAS LAW LICENSE

Each person admitted to the Bar of Arkansas (Bar), by examination, shall complete a mandatory course (Course) on maintaining an Arkansas Law License. The Course shall be completed within two years after the date an attorney is certified for admission to the Clerk of the Arkansas Supreme Court.

The Course shall consist of instruction approved by the Arkansas Supreme Court, focusing on lawyers' roles as an officer of the Court and as a member of the Bar, and lawyers' relation to community, clients, courts, and ethical standards.

The Course will be organized, prepared, and presented under the direction of the Arkansas Supreme Court Office of Professional Programs.

Upon good cause shown, an attorney may be entitled to an extension of time in which to meet the requirement of this rule. "Good cause," for purposes of this rule, includes but is not limited to military service or a family or medical emergency during or immediately before a scheduled Course. In addition, the Director of the Office of Professional Programs is authorized to grant an attorney leave to achieve compliance in a manner other than attendance at the Course.

An attorney who fails to meet this requirement shall have his or her license suspended. Such suspension shall be lifted only upon completion of the Course.

The Office of Professional Programs shall be the repository for all records pertaining to administration of this rule. The Office of Professional Programs shall be responsible for providing notice to all persons seeking admission to the Bar of this requirement, Course dates and locations. Further, the Office of Professional Programs shall maintain all records pertaining to compliance and provide all notices required for enforcement of the provisions of this rule.

HISTORY: Adopted July 1, 2004, effective January 1, 2005; amended April 10, 2008; vacated and replaced October 20, 2016.

Publisher's Notes.

The Per Curiam order dated July 1, 2004, also provided for a Professional Practicum Committee as follows: "PROFESSIONAL PRACTICUM COMMITTEE. There is hereby established a Professional Practicum Committee (Committee) composed of five members, one from each Congressional District (as now or hereafter constituted) and one from the State at large. The Court shall appoint the Chair of the Committee.

"The Committee shall organize, prepare, and present, the professional practicum as established by order of this Court.

"Each appointee shall serve a term of six (6) years, unless otherwise designated by this Court. Vacancies occurring from causes other than expiration of term of office will be filled by the Court as they occur, and the person so appointed shall serve the remainder of the term of his or her predecessor. Members shall continue to serve beyond their designated term until such time as their successor is qualified and appointed by the Court.

"A fee, as established by the Court, shall be set for applications to take the professional practicum. Remittances for such fee shall be made by money order or cashier's check payable to the Clerk of the Supreme Court. Fees thus provided shall be used by the Committee to defray the expenses of the professional practicum. Members of the Committee may be entitled to receive per diem, and reasonable reimbursement for expenses of meals, lodging, and transportation as may be set from time to time by order of this Court."

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 18 — ADMINISTRATION OF DISTRICT COURTS

This administrative order is promulgated pursuant to Ark. Const. Amend. 80, § 7; Ark. Code Ann. § 16-17-704; and the Supreme Court's inherent rule-making authority. Procedural rules applicable to district courts are set out in the District Court Rules.

1. Divisions.

(a) The district court judges shall establish the following subject-matter divisions in each district court: criminal, civil, traffic, and small claims. For purposes of this administrative order, the term "traffic division" means cases relating to a violation of a law regulating the operation of a vehicle upon a roadway.

(b) The designation of divisions is for the purpose of judicial administration and caseload management and is not for the purpose of subject-matter jurisdiction. The creation of divisions shall in no way limit the powers and duties of the judges to hear all matters within the jurisdiction of the district court.

(c) Warrant Docket. Within the criminal division, a warrant docket shall be established, which shall be divided into a "search warrant docket," designated by the prefix "SW" and an "arrest warrant docket," designated by the prefix "AW." The warrant docket is used for warrants that have been returned either executed or unexecuted when a case file has not yet been opened. If a criminal case is subsequently opened, the information in the warrant docket related to the criminal case is transferred to it. Access to the contents of the warrant docket shall be governed by the applicable rule of criminal procedure and Administrative Order Number 19.

2. Departments.

(a) Each department of a district court shall maintain its own docket, and the docket shall be heard at times and places as may be determined by the judge(s) of the district court. Except as authorized in subsection (2)(b) or as approved by the Supreme Court, each department of a district court shall hear cases in all of the subject matter divisions. "Department" is defined in Ark. Code Ann. § 16-17-901.

(b) If a district court's territorial jurisdiction is only city-wide and the district court has more than one department, the judges of the district court by unanimous written agreement may designate that cases of one or more of the subject matter divisions (criminal, civil, traffic, and small claims) be assigned to one or more of the departments.

3. Civil Jurisdiction. The district court shall have original jurisdiction within its territorial jurisdiction over the following civil matters:

(a) Exclusive of the circuit court in all matters of contract where the amount in controversy does not exceed the sum of one hundred dollars ($100), excluding interest, costs, and attorney's fees;

(b) Concurrent with the circuit court in matters of contract where the amount in controversy does not exceed the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000), excluding interest, costs, and attorneys' fees;

(c) Concurrent with the circuit court in actions for the recovery of personal property where the value of the property does not exceed the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000); and

(d) Concurrent with the circuit court in matters of damage to personal property where the amount in controversy does not exceed the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000), excluding interest and costs.

4. Small Claims Division. The small claims division shall have the same jurisdiction over amounts in controversy as provided in subsection 3 of this administrative order. Special procedural rules governing actions filed in the small claims division are set out in Rule 10 of the District Court Rules. The following restrictions apply to litigation in the small claims division:

(a) Restriction on participation by attorneys. No attorney-at-law or person other than the plaintiff and defendant shall take part in the filing, prosecution, or defense of litigation in the small claims division. When any case is pending in the small claims division of any district court and the judge of the court determines that an attorney is representing any party in the case, the case shall immediately be transferred to the civil docket. However, it is not the intention of this provision and this provision shall not be construed, to abridge in any way the rights of persons to be represented by legal counsel.

(b) Entities restricted from bringing actions. No action may be brought in the small claims division by any collection agency, collection agent, or assignee of a claim or by any person, firm, partnership, association, or corporation engaged, either primarily or secondarily, in the business of lending money at interest. "Credit bureaus and collection agencies", by definition, shall include those businesses that either collect delinquencies for a fee or are otherwise engaged in credit history or business.

(c) Actions by and against corporations.

(1) Corporations, other than those identified in subsection 4(b) of this administrative order, which are organized under the laws of this state and which have no more than three stockholders or in which eighty-five percent or more of the voting stock is held by persons related by blood or marriage within the third degree of consanguinity or any closely held corporations by unanimous vote of the shareholders may sue and be sued in the small claims division.

(2) A corporation shall be represented in the proceedings by an officer of the corporation.

5. Assignment of Judges. See Administrative Order Number 16.

6. Jurisdiction of State District Court Judgeships. [This section (6) applies to State District Court Judgeships ("Pilot District Courts") upon their effective date.] In addition to the powers and duties of a district court under this administrative order, a state district court shall exercise additional power and authority as set out in this section.

(a) Original Jurisdiction. A state district court shall have original jurisdiction within its territorial jurisdiction over the following civil matters:

(1) Exclusive of the circuit court in all matters of contract where the amount in controversy does not exceed the sum of one hundred dollars ($100), excluding interest, costs, and attorney's fees;

(2) Concurrent with the circuit court in matters of contract where the amount in controversy does not exceed the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars

($25,000), excluding interest, costs, and attorney's fees;

(3) Concurrent with the circuit court in actions for the recovery of personal property where the value of the property does not exceed the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000);

(4) Concurrent with the circuit court in matters of damage to personal property where the amount in controversy does not exceed the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000), excluding interest and costs.

(b) Reference. A state district court judge may be referred matters pending in the circuit court. An individual matter or a category of case may be the subject of a reference. A state district court judge presiding over any referred matter shall be subject at all times to the superintending control of the administrative judge of the judicial circuit. The following matters pending in circuit court may be referred to a state district court judge:

(1) Consent Jurisdiction. Matters filed in the civil, domestic relations or probate division of circuit court upon the consent of all parties (see subsection (d) below);

(2) Protective Orders. Ark. Code Ann. §§ 9-15-201 — 217;

(3) Forcible Entry and Detainers and Unlawful Detainer. Ark. Code Ann. §§ 18-60-301 — 312;

(4) Other Matters.

(A) Matters of an emergency or uncontested nature pending in the civil, domestic relations, or probate division of circuit court (such as, ex parte emergency involuntary commitments pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 20-47-209 — 210, decedent estate administration, uncontested divorces, and defaults) under guidelines and procedures set out in the judicial circuit's administrative plan; or

(B) other matters if the justification for the reference and the procedures to be employed are sufficiently demonstrated in the administrative plan; and

(5) Criminal Matters.

(A) Any of the following duties (the rules referenced below are the Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure) with respect to an investigation or prosecution of an offense lying within the exclusive jurisdiction of the circuit court:

(i) Issue a search warrant pursuant to Rule 13.1.

(ii) Issue an arrest warrant pursuant to Rule 7.1 or Ark. Code Ann. § 16-81-104, or issue a summons pursuant to Rule 6.1.

(iii) Make a reasonable cause determination pursuant to Rule 4.1(e).

(iv) Conduct a first appearance pursuant to Rule 8.1, at which the judge may appoint counsel pursuant to Rule 8.2; inform a defendant pursuant to Rule 8.3; accept a plea of "not guilty" or "not guilty by reason insanity"; conduct a pretrial release inquiry pursuant to Rules 8.4 and 8.5; or release a defendant from custody pursuant to Rules 9.1, 9.2, and 9.3.

(v) Conduct a preliminary hearing as provided in Ark. Code Ann. § 16-93-307. If a person is charged with the commission of an offense lying within the exclusive jurisdiction of the circuit court, a state district court judge may not accept or approve a plea of guilty or nolo contendere to the offense charged or to a lesser included felony offense but, may accept or approve a plea of guilty or nolo contendere to a misdemeanor.

(B) If authorized by an Act of the General Assembly, a state district court judge may preside over a drug court program, probation revocation proceedings, or parole revocation proceedings.

(C) Other criminal matters may be referred if the justification for the reference and the procedures to be employed are sufficiently demonstrated in the administrative plan.

(c) Reference Process. Except for the exercise of consent jurisdiction which is governed by subsection (d), with the concurrence of a majority of the circuit judges of a judicial circuit, the administrative judge of a judicial circuit may refer matters pending in the circuit court to a state district court judge, with the judge's consent, which shall not be unreasonably withheld. A final judgment although ordered by a state district court judge, is deemed a final judgment of the circuit court and will be entered by the circuit clerk under Rule 58 of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure. Any appeal shall be taken to the Arkansas Supreme Court or Court of Appeals in the same manner as an appeal from any other judgment of the circuit court. An order that does not constitute a final appealable order may be modified or vacated by the circuit judge to whom the case has been assigned as permitted by Rule 60 of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure.

(d) Consent Process.

1. Notice. The circuit clerk shall give the plaintiff notice of the consent jurisdiction of a state district court judge when a suit is filed in the civil, domestic relations, or probate division of circuit court. The circuit clerk shall also include the same notice with the summons for service on the defendant. Any party may obtain a "Consent to Proceed before a State District Court Judge" form from the Circuit Clerk's Office.

2. Consent. By agreeing to consent jurisdiction, the parties are waiving their right to a jury trial, and any appeal in the case shall be taken directly to the Arkansas Supreme Court or Court of Appeals.

3. Transfer. Once the completed forms have been returned to the circuit clerk, the circuit clerk shall then assign the case to a state district court judge and forward the consent forms for final approval to the circuit judge to whom the case was originally assigned. When the circuit judge has approved the transfer and returned the consent forms to the circuit clerk's office for filing, the circuit clerk shall forward a copy of the consent forms to the state district court judge to whom the case is reassigned. The circuit clerk shall also indicate on the file that the case has been reassigned to the state district court judge.

4. Appeal. The final judgment, although ordered by a state district court judge, is deemed a final judgment of the circuit court and will be entered by the circuit clerk under Rule 58 of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure. Any appeal shall be taken to the Arkansas Supreme Court or Court of Appeals in the same manner as an appeal from any other judgment of the circuit court.

7. Small Claims Magistrate.

(a) At the request of the majority of the district judges of a district court, with the concurrence of a majority of the circuit court judges of a judicial circuit, the Administrative Judge of the judicial circuit may designate one or more licensed attorney(s) to serve as a Small Claims Magistrate to preside over the Small Claims Division of the district court. A Small Claims Magistrate shall be deemed the "judge" as that term is used in Rule 10 of the District Court Rules. A Small Claims Magistrate shall be subject to the superintending control of the district judges of the district court.

(b) A Small Claims Magistrate shall possess the same qualifications as a district court judge. The appointment shall be in writing and filed with the District Court Clerk.

8. [Repealed.]

9. Administrative Plan.

(a) A state district court or a local district court shall prepare an administrative plan when the court operates a speciality court program (see section 10 of this administrative order) or when multiple judges preside in the district or the court has multiple venues in the district. With regard to the latter, the plan shall describe the types of cases assigned to the respective judges and the types of cases heard at the respective sites.

(b) The plan shall be forwarded to the administrative judge of the circuit court and appended to the circuit court's administrative plan for submission to the supreme court. District court plans follow the time lines set out in Administrative Order Number 14. Circuit court administrative plans are to be submitted to the supreme court by July 1st to be effective the following January 1st (see Administrative Order Number 1, section 4). Until a subsequent plan is submitted to and approved, any plan currently in effect shall remain in full force. Judges who are appointed or elected to fill a vacancy shall follow the plan until such time a new plan is required or the original plan is amended. Upon approval, the administrative plan shall be filed with the clerk of the district court. The process for the amendment of a plan shall be the same as that for the plan's initial adoption.

10. Specialty Dockets or Programs. If a local district court or a state district court conducts a specialty docket or program, such as "DWI court," "drug court," "mental health court," "veteran's court," "Hope court," "smarter sentencing court," and "swift court," the program must be described in the district court's administrative plan and approved by the supreme court. The plan shall (a) describe the program and how it is operated; (b) provide the statutory or legal authority on which it is based; (c) certify that the program conforms to all applicable sentencing laws, including fines, fees, court costs, and probation assessments; (d) describe the program's use of court resources, including without limitation, prosecuting attorneys or public defenders, and the availability of such resources and how they will be provided; and (e) provide the source of funding for the program.

HISTORY: Adopted January 1, 2005; amended May 25, 2006; amended September 27, 2007; amended February 9, 2011, effective July 1, 2011; amended June 22, 2012; amended December 13, 2012; amended July 2, 2015, effective September 1, 2015; amended June 21, 2018, effective January 1, 2019; amended December 17, 2020, effective January 1, 2021.

Publisher's Notes.

The Per Curiam Order dated December 3, 2015, provided: "Pursuant to Administrative Orders No. 14 and No. 18, administrative plans have been submitted by all judicial circuits and district courts. The administrative plans are approved and shall be effective January 1, 2016, unless otherwise noted."

Court Notes, 2004:

Authority for a small claims division in district courts was formerly found in Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-17-601 et seq. Subsection 1(b) is derived from Amendment 80, § 7(D). The jurisdictional amount and the subject matter jurisdiction of civil cases in district courts are established by the Supreme Court pursuant to Amendment 80, § 7(B). It was previously set by the legislature. See Ark. Code Ann. § 16-17-704. Subsection 4(a) is derived from former Ark. Code Ann. § 16-17-612. Subsection 4(b) is derived from former Ark. Code Ann. § 16-17-604. Subsection 4(c) is derived from former Ark. Code Ann. § 16-17-605.

Court Notes, 2006: New section 6 on small claim magistrates and new section 7 on special judges have been added. A special district judge shall be appointed or elected in the same manner as a special circuit judge. Section 3 has been amended to clarify that the jurisdictional amounts in contract cases are exclusive of costs and attorney's fees, as well as interest. In cases involving personal property, the jurisdictional amount is exclusive of interest and costs only because an award of attorney's fees will not be available.

Reporter's Note, 2015 Amendment: This order was amended by adding subsection (1)(c) to create a warrant docket for the filing of arrest warrants (see Ark. R. Crim. P. 7.3) and search warrants (see Ark. R. Crim. P. 13.4) upon their return, whether executed or unexecuted.

Addition to Reporter's Note, 2019 Amendment: Administrative Order No. 18(6)(d)(1) directs that the circuit clerk shall give to "give the plaintiff notice of the consent jurisdiction of a state district court judge when a suit is filed in the civil, domestic relations, or probate division of circuit court.” Rather than “attach” that notice to the summons, as under the current version of this provision, the clerk must now “include” it with the summons for service on the defendant. This language accommodates electronic as well as paper filing.

CASE NOTES

Jurisdiction.
Pursuant to Administrative Order No. 18(6)(c), a final order of protection signed by a district court judge could be appealed directly to the Court of Appeals, and the appeal procedures embodied in District Court Rule 9 did not apply; the 22nd Judicial District of Arkansas

Administration Case Allocation plan provided that the Saline County District Courts have all authority permitted under Administrative Order No. 18 and that the Bryant division shall hear all final orders of protection cases. Smith v. Murphy, 2017 Ark. App. 188, 517 S.W.3d 453 (2017).

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 19 — ACCESS TO COURT RECORDS

Rule
Section I. Authority, Scope, and Purpose.
Section II. Who Has Access Under This Order.
Section III. Definitions.
Section IV. General Access Rule.
Section V. Remote Access.
Section VI. Bulk Distribution and Compiled Information.
Section VII. Court Records Excluded From Public Access.
Section VIII. Obtaining Access to Information Excluded from Public Access.
Section IX. When Court Records May Be Accessed.
Section X. Contracts With Vendors Providing Information Technology Services Regarding Court Records.
Section XI. Violation of Order Not Basis for Liability.
Appendix I. Appendix I. Commentary

Section I. Authority, Scope, and Purpose.

A. Pursuant to Ark. Const. Amend. 80 §§ 1, 3, 4; Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-10-101 (Repl. 1999), 25-19-105(b)(8) (Supp. 2003), and this Court's inherent rule-making authority, the Court adopts and publishes Administrative Order Number 19: Access to Court Records. This order governs access to, and confidentiality of, court records. Except as otherwise provided by this order, access to court records shall be governed by the Arkansas Freedom of Information Act (Ark. Code Ann. §§ 25-19-101, et seq.).

B. The purposes of this order are to:

- (1) promote accessibility to court records;
- (2) support the role of the judiciary;
- (3) promote governmental accountability;
- (4) contribute to public safety;
- (5) reduce the risk of injury to individuals;
- (6) protect individual privacy rights and interests;
- (7) protect proprietary business information;
- (8) minimize reluctance to use the court system;
- (9) encourage the most effective use of court and clerk of court staff;
- (10) provide excellent customer service; and
- (11) avoid unduly burdening the ongoing business of the judiciary.

C. This order applies only to court records as defined in this order and does not authorize or prohibit access to information gathered, maintained, or stored by a non-judicial governmental agency or other entity.

D. Disputes arising under this order shall be determined in accordance with this order and, to the extent not inconsistent with this order, by all other rules and orders adopted by this Court.

E. This order applies to all court records; however clerks and courts may, but are not required to, redact or restrict information that was otherwise public in case records and administrative records created before January 1, 2009. However, confidential information shall be redacted from pre-January 1, 2009 case records and administrative records before remote access is available to such records.

HISTORY: Amended June 20, 2013, effective September 1, 2013.

Section II. Who Has Access Under This Order.

A. All persons have access to court records as provided in this order.

B. The following persons, in accordance with their functions within the judicial system, may have greater access than the public to court records:

- (1) employees of the court, court agency, or clerk of court;
- (2) private or governmental persons or entities who assist a court in providing court services;
- (3) public agencies whose access to court records is defined by other statutes, rules, orders or policies; and
- (4) the parties to a case or their lawyers with respect to their own case.

C. Notwithstanding other rules, the Administrative Office of the Courts is authorized to promulgate policies and procedures governing greater access than the public through AOC-provided systems to court records by entities enumerated in Section(II)(B) above.

D. Arkansas Code Ann. § 25-19-105(a)(1)(B), which limits access to public records by incarcerated individuals, shall not apply to court records. Nevertheless, an incarcerated individual who seeks, at public expense, a photocopy of a court record must file a motion with the court having jurisdiction over the record stating that he or she has requested the documents from his or her counsel and that counsel did not provide the documents. Furthermore, the motion must demonstrate that the incarcerated individual has a compelling need for the court record and an inability to pay.

HISTORY: Amended October 11, 2018, effective January 1, 2019.

Section III. Definitions.

A. For purpose of this order:

(1) “Court Record” means both case records and administrative records, but does not include information gathered, maintained or stored by a non-court agency or other entity even though the court may have access to the information, unless it is adopted by the court as part of the court record.

(2) “Case Record” means any document, information, data, or other item created, collected, received, or maintained by a court, court agency or clerk of court in connection with a judicial proceeding.

(3) “Administrative Record” means any document, information, data, or other item created, collected, received, or maintained by a court, court agency, or clerk of court pertaining to the administration of the judicial branch of government.

(4) “Court” means the Arkansas Supreme Court, Arkansas Court of Appeals, and all Circuit, District, or City Courts.

(5) “Clerk of Court” means the Clerk of the Arkansas Supreme Court, the Arkansas Court of Appeals, and the Clerk of a Circuit, District, or City Court including staff. “Clerk of Court” also means the County Clerk, when acting as the Ex-Officio Circuit Clerk for the Probate Division of Circuit Court.

(6) “Public access” means that any person may inspect and obtain a copy of the information.

(7) “Remote access” means the ability to electronically search, inspect, or copy information in a court record without the need to physically visit the court facility where the court record is maintained.

(8) “In electronic form” means information that exists as electronic representations of text or graphic documents; an electronic image, including a video image of a document, exhibit or other thing; data in the fields or files of an electronic database; or an audio or video recording (analog or digital) of an event or notes in an electronic file from which a transcript of an event can be prepared.

(9) “Bulk Distribution” means the distribution of all, or a significant subset of, the information in court records, as is, and without modification or compilation.

(10) “Compiled Information” means information that is derived from the selection, aggregation or reformulation of information from more than one court record.

(11) “Confidential” means that the contents of a court record may not be disclosed unless otherwise permitted by this order, or by law. When and to the extent provided by this order or by law, “confidential” shall mean also that the existence of a court record may not be disclosed.

(12) “Sealed” means that the contents of a court record may not be disclosed unless otherwise permitted by this order, or by law. When and to the extent provided by this order or by law, “sealed” shall mean also that the existence of a court record may not be disclosed.

(13) “Protective order” means that as defined by the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure.

(14) “Expunged” means that the record or records in question shall be sequestered, sealed, and treated as confidential, and neither the contents, nor the existence of, the court record may be disclosed unless otherwise permitted by this order, or by law. Unless otherwise provided by this order or by law, “expunged” shall not mean the physical destruction of any records.

(15) “Court Agency” means the Administrative Office of the Courts, the Office of Professional Programs, the Office of the Arkansas Supreme Court Committee on Professional Conduct, the Judicial Discipline and Disability Commission, and any other office or agency now in existence or hereinafter created, which is under the authority and control of the Arkansas Supreme Court.

(16) “Custodian” with respect to any court record, means the person having administrative control of that record and does not mean a person who holds court records solely for the purposes of storage, safekeeping, or data processing for others.

Section IV. General Access Rule.

A. Public access shall be granted to court records subject to the limitations of sections V through X of this order.

B. This order applies to all court records, regardless of the manner of creation, method of collection, form of storage, or the form in which the records are maintained.

C. If a court record, or part thereof, is rendered confidential by protective order, by this order, or otherwise by law, the confidential content shall be redacted, but there shall be a publicly accessible indication of the fact of redaction. This subsection (C) does not apply to court records that are rendered confidential by expungement or other legal authority that expressly prohibits disclosure of the existence of a record.

Section V. Remote Access.

A. Courts should endeavor to make at least the following information, when available in electronic form, remotely accessible to the public:

- (1) litigant/party/attorney indexes to cases filed with the court;
- (2) listings of case filings, including the names of the parties;
- (3) the register of actions or docket sheets;
- (4) calendars or dockets of court proceedings, including case numbers and captions, date and time of hearings, and location of hearings;
- (5) judgments, orders, or decrees.

B. Remote access to information beyond this list is left to the discretion of the court as follows:

- (1) In the district courts, the district judge(s) shall decide whether to allow public remote access;
- (2) In the circuit courts, the Administrative Judge of the Judicial Circuit, with input from the Clerk, and, if applicable, the Ex Officio Circuit Clerk for the Probate Division, of the counties within the circuit, shall decide whether to allow public remote access;
- (3) In the appellate courts, the Supreme Court shall decide whether to allow public remote access.

C. Public remote access shall be permitted only upon compliance with sections (I)(E) and (VII), and the implementation of appropriate security measures to prevent indexing by Internet search engines.

HISTORY: Amended June 20, 2013, effective September 1, 2013.

Section VI. Bulk Distribution and Compiled Information.

A. Requests for bulk distribution or compiled information stored on computers maintained by the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) shall be made in writing on the form provided to the Director of the AOC or other designee of the Arkansas Supreme Court. Requests for bulk distribution or compiled information that is not stored on computers maintained by the AOC shall be made in writing on the form provided to the court or court agency having jurisdiction over the records. Requests for bulk distribution or compiled information that exists as electronic representations of text or graphic documents; an electronic image, including a video image of a document, exhibit, or other thing; or an audio or video recording (analog or digital) of an event or notes in an electronic file from which a transcript of an event can be prepared shall be made in writing on the form provided to the court or court agency having jurisdiction over the records even if stored on computers maintained by the AOC. The AOC shall maintain on the Arkansas Judiciary website a current description of the records available on AOC computers. Requests will be acted upon or responded to within a reasonable period of time.

B. Compiled information shall be provided according to the terms of this section (VI)(B).

(1) Requests for compiled records shall identify the requested information and the desired format of the compilation.

(2) The grant of a request under this section (VI)(B) may be made contingent upon the requester paying the actual costs of reproduction, including personnel time, the costs of the of the medium reproduction, supplies, equipment, and maintenance, and including the actual costs of mailing or transmitting the records by facsimile or other electronic means.

(a) The requester may be charged for personnel time exceeding one (1) hour associated with the tasks, in addition to the actual costs of reproduction.

(b) If the estimated costs exceed twenty-five dollars ($25.00), an estimate will be required and the requester may be required to pay that fee in advance.

(c) Information may be furnished without charge or at a reduced charge if it is determined that a waiver or reduction of the fee is in the public interest.

(d) The requester is entitled to an itemized breakdown of charges under this section (VI)(B)(2).

(e) Costs for compiled records requested from a court or court agency having jurisdiction over the records shall be as otherwise permitted by state law or county or city ordinance.

(3) When the request includes cases or information excluded from public access under section (VII), or the identification of specific individuals is not essential to the purpose of the inquiry, then the requested records may be provided; however, names, addresses (except zip code), month and day of birth shall be redacted from the information.

(4) When the request includes release of social security numbers, driver's license or equivalent state identification card numbers, the information provided shall include only the last four digits of social security numbers, only the last four digits of driver's license or equivalent state identification card numbers. Account numbers and personal identification numbers (PINs) of specific assets, liabilities, accounts, and credit cards may not be released.

(5) When the identification of specific individuals is essential to the purpose of the request, then the request must include an executed copy of the Compiled Records License Agreement and the requester must declare under penalty of perjury that the request is made for a scholarly, journalistic, political, governmental, research, evaluation, or statistical purpose, and that the identification of specific individuals is essential to the purpose of the inquiry. This license agreement requirement may be waived for information furnished to an agency of the State of Arkansas. Denial of all or part of a compiled records request shall be reviewable by the Supreme Court Committee on Automation by the requestor filing a written request for review within 20 days of the denial. At its next regularly scheduled meeting the Committee shall review the request and make a determination whether the request should be granted. The determination shall be made by a majority of those members of the Committee present and voting. The Chair of the Committee shall communicate its decision to the Director of the Administrative Office of the courts or the court or court agency having jurisdiction over the records. The Committee's decision shall be final.

C. Bulk distribution shall be provided according to the terms of this section (VI)(C).

(1) The Administrative Office of the Courts is authorized to develop a license agreement for bulk records consistent with this rule.

(a) The license agreement shall provide the terms and conditions for receipt and update of the bulk data.

(b) The license agreement shall provide for a startup fee not to exceed $1,000 and a monthly subscription fee not to exceed $200 for access to the bulk data.

(c) The license agreement shall provide that recipients of the bulk data shall purge from their databases any records that become confidential or sealed within 24 hours of notice of the records being expunged or sealed.

(d) The license agreement shall provide that recipients of the bulk data shall replace their data within 24 hours of the availability of a monthly extract or transactional update of the databases.

(e) Costs for bulk records requested from a court or court agency having jurisdiction over the records shall be as otherwise permitted by state law or county or city ordinance.

(f) The license agreement requirement may be waived for information provided to an agency of the State of Arkansas. However, agencies of the State of Arkansas shall not be required to post a surety bond.

(2) The Administrative Office of the Courts shall establish a secure server from which the databases of case information may be downloaded by licensed users.

(a) The secure server shall include a monthly extract of all public case data.

(b) The secure server shall include transactional updates that will be periodically extracted from the case management databases no less frequently than once every 24 hours.

(3) The request for bulk distribution must:

(a) include an executed copy of the Bulk Records License Agreement or a request for waiver of the Bulk Records License Agreement if the requester is an agency of the State of Arkansas;

(b) Include a cashier's check or money order as indicated in the license agreement to set up a bulk distribution account.

(4) The monthly extract and transactional updates shall include only the last four digits of social security numbers, only the last four digits of driver's license or equivalent state identification card numbers. Account numbers and personal identification numbers (PINs) of specific assets, liabilities, accounts, and credit cards may not be released.

(5) The bulk data will not include cases or records excluded from public access under section (VII).

Section VII. Court Records Excluded From Public Access.

A. Case records. The following information in case records is excluded from public access and is confidential absent a court order to the contrary; however, if the information is disclosed in open court and is part of a verbatim transcript of court proceedings or included in trial transcript source materials, the information is not excluded from public access:

(1) information that is excluded from public access pursuant to federal law;

(2) information that is excluded from public access pursuant to the Arkansas Code Annotated;

(3) information that is excluded from public access by order or rule of court;

(4) Social Security numbers;

(5) account numbers of specific assets, liabilities, accounts, credit cards, and personal identification numbers (PINs);

(6) information about cases expunged or sealed pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-90-901, et seq. (repealed 2013), and Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-90-1401 et seq.;

(7) notes, communications, and deliberative materials regarding decisions of judges, jurors, court staff, and judicial agencies;

(8) all home and business addresses of petitioners who request anonymity when seeking a domestic order of protection.

B. Administrative Records. The following information in administrative records is excluded from public access and is confidential absent a court order to the contrary:

(1) information that is excluded from public access pursuant to Arkansas Code Annotated or other court rule;

(2) information protected from disclosure by order or rule of court;

(3) security and emergency preparedness plans. Security and emergency preparedness plans shall not be open to the public under this order or the Arkansas Freedom of Information Act, Ark. Code Ann. §§ 25-19-101 et seq., to the extent they contain information that if disclosed might jeopardize or compromise efforts to secure and protect individuals, the courthouse, or court facility. This exclusion from public access shall include: (A) Risk and vulnerability assessments; (B) Plans and proposals for preventing and mitigating security risks; (C) Emergency response and recovery records; (D) Security plans and procedures; and (E) Any other records containing information that if disclosed might jeopardize or compromise efforts to secure and protect individuals, the courthouse, or court facility.

(4) notes, communications, and deliberative materials of judges regarding court administration matters arising under Administrative Orders Number 14 and 18.

HISTORY: Amended October 23, 2008, effective January 1, 2009; amended May 24, 2012; amended January 15, 2015.

Explanatory Note:

Before the amendment, this part of the Administrative Order made the address and phone number of all litigants confidential. That rule would have been both too broad and unworkable. Litigants' addresses are needed for, among other things, summonses and judgments. The revised provision is limited to the situation where current substantive law makes a litigant's addresses confidential for an obvious and compelling reason. Ark. Code Ann. § 9-15-203 (Repl. 2008).

Section VIII. Obtaining Access to Information Excluded from Public Access.

A. Any requestor may make a verified written request to obtain access to information in a case or administrative record to which public access is prohibited under this order to the court having jurisdiction over the record. The request shall demonstrate that:

(1) reasonable circumstances exist that require deviation from the general provisions of this order;

(2) the public interest in disclosure outweighs the harm in disclosure; or

(3) the information should not be excluded from public access under section (VII) of this order.

The person seeking access has the burden of providing notice to the parties and such other persons as the court may direct, providing proof of notice to the court or the reason why notice could not or should not be given, demonstrating to the court the requestor's reasons for prohibiting access to the information.

B. The court shall hold a hearing on the request, unless waived, within a reasonable time, not to exceed thirty (30) days of receipt of the request. The court shall grant a request to allow access following a hearing if the requestor demonstrates by a preponderance of the evidence that any one or more of the requirements of (VIII)(A)(1) through (VIII)(A)(3) have been satisfied.

C. A court shall consider the public access and the privacy interests served by this order and the grounds demonstrated by the requestor. In its order, the court shall state its reasons for granting or denying the request. When a request is made for access to information excluded from public access, the information will remain confidential while the court rules on the request.

D. A court may place restrictions on the use or dissemination of the information to preserve confidentiality.

HISTORY: Amended May 24, 2012.

Section IX. When Court Records May Be Accessed.

A. Court records that are publicly accessible will be available for public access in the courthouse during regular business hours established by the court; however, public access to trial exhibits and trial transcript source materials shall be granted at the discretion of the court. Court records in electronic form to which the court allows remote access under this policy will be available for access during hours established by the court, subject to unexpected technical failures or normal system maintenance announced in advance.

B. Upon receiving a request pursuant to sections (VI) or (VIII) of this order, a court will respond within a reasonable period of time.

HISTORY: Amended May 24, 2012.

Section X. Contracts With Vendors Providing Information Technology Services Regarding Court Records.

A. If a court, court agency, or other private or governmental entity contracts with a vendor to provide information technology support to gather, store, or make accessible court records, the contract will require the vendor to comply with the intent and provisions of this access policy. For purposes of this section, the term ‘vendor’ also includes a non-judicial branch state, county or local governmental agency that provides information technology services to a court.

B. Each contract shall require the vendor to assist the court in its role of educating litigants and the public about this order. The vendor shall also be responsible for training its employees and subcontractors about the provisions of this order.

C. Each contract shall prohibit vendors from disseminating bulk or compiled information, without first obtaining approval as required by this order.

D. Each contract shall require the vendor to acknowledge that court records remain the property of the court and are subject to the directions and orders of the court with respect to the handling and access to the court records, as well as the provisions of this order.

E. These requirements are in addition to those otherwise imposed by law.

Section XI. Violation of Order Not Basis for Liability.

Violation of this order by the disclosure of confidential or erroneous court records by a court, court agency, or clerk of court employee, official, or an employee or officer of a contractor or subcontractor of a court, court agency, or clerk of court shall not be the basis for establishing civil or criminal liability for violation of this order. This does not preclude a court from using its inherent contempt powers to enforce this order.

Appendix I. Commentary

Section I. Commentary

The objective of this order is to promote public accessibility to court records, taking into account public policy interests that are not always fully compatible with unrestricted access. The public policy interests listed above are in no particular order. This order attempts to balance competing interests and recognizes that unrestricted access to certain information in court records could result in an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy or unduly increase the risk of injury to individuals and businesses. This order recognizes there are strong societal reasons for allowing public access to court records, and denial of access could compromise the judiciary's role in society, inhibit accountability, and endanger public safety. Open access allows the public to monitor the performance of the judiciary, furthers the goal of providing public education about the results in cases, and, if properly implemented, reduces court staff time needed to provide public access.

This order starts from the presumption of open public access to court records. In some circumstances; however, there may be sound reasons for restricting access to these records. This order recognizes that there are times when access to information may lead to, or increase the risk of, harm to individuals. However, given the societal interests in access to court records, this order also reflects the view that any restriction to access must be implemented in a manner tailored to serve the interests in open access. It is also important to remember that, generally, at least some of the parties in a court case are not in court voluntarily, but rather have been brought into court by plaintiffs or by the government. A person who is not a party to the action may also be mentioned in the court record. Care should be taken that the privacy rights and interests of such involuntary parties or "third" persons are not unduly compromised.

Subsection (C) is intended to assure that public access provided under this order does not apply to information gathered, maintained, or stored by other agencies or entities that is not necessary to, or is not part of the basis of, a court's decision or the judicial process. Access to this information is governed by the law and the access policy of the agency collecting and maintaining such information. The ability of a computer in a court or clerk's office to access the information, because the computer uses shared software and databases, does not, by itself, make the information subject to this order.

Existing laws, rules and policies regarding court records have been carefully reviewed during the development of this access policy.

The Administrative Office of the Courts may provide advisory information to individuals or entities about the provisions, restrictions, and limitations of this order.

Section II. Commentary

Section (II)(A) provides the general rule that all persons, including members of the general public, the media, and commercial and noncommercial entities, are entitled to the same basic level of access to court records. Generally, access to court records is not determined by who is seeking access or the purpose for seeking access; however, some users, such as court employees or the parties to a particular case, may have greater access to those particular records than is afforded the general public.

Section (II)(B) provides the exception to the general rule and specifies the entities and persons for whom courts may provide greater access. This greater level of access is a result of the need for effective management of the judicial system and the protection of the right to a fair trial.

Sections (II)(B)(1) through (4) identify groups whose authority to access court records is different from that of the public.

Subsection (1): Employees of the court, court agency, and clerk of court need greater access than the public in order to do their work and therefore work under different access rules.

Subsection (2): Employees and subcontractors of entities who provide services to the court or clerk of court or court agency, that is, court services that have been “outsourced,” may also need greater access to information to do their jobs and therefore operate under a different access policy. Section (X) provides the requirements under this order for contracts with vendors concerning court records. Private entities such as private process servers and bail bond companies may also need greater access in order to fulfill their duties to the court.

Subsection (3): This subsection is intended to cover personnel in other governmental agencies who have a need for information in court records in order to do their work. An example of this would be an integrated justice system operated on behalf of several justice system agencies where access is governed by internal policies or statutes or rules applicable to all users of the integrated system.

Subsection (4): This subsection continues nearly unrestricted access by litigants and their lawyers to information in their own cases but no higher level of access to information in other cases. As to cases in which they are not the attorney of record, attorneys would have the same access as any other member of the public.

Section (II) was amended in 2019 to add Section (II)(C) in order to facilitate uniform access through the AOC-provided case-management and eFiling systems. As the number of courts using the statewide system has grown, management of access has become challenging. The AOC is responsible for user administration of the case-management and electronic-filing systems. Experience has shown that, because of the general policy permitting greater access, user management is difficult when dealing with requests by agencies and entities outside the court that require greater than public access. The same is true even within the courts in multi-county jurisdictions, which now include overlapping jurisdictions of state district courts. Now that the AOC systems are being used statewide, access to court information should be uniform. This section grants authority to the Administrative Office of the Courts to promulgate system access policies and procedures consistent with this order.

Arkansas Code Ann. § 25-19-105(a)(1)(B) is a F.O.I.A. exception that provides:

(B) However, access to inspect and copy public records shall be denied to:

(i) A person who at the time of the request has pleaded guilty to or been found guilty of a felony and is incarcerated in a correctional facility; and

(ii) The representative of a person under subdivision (a)(1)(B)(i) of this section unless the representative is the person’s attorney who is requesting information that is subject to disclosure under this section.

Subsection (II)(D) of this Order was added to clarify that Ark. Code Ann. § 25-19-105(a)(1)(B) does not apply to court records subject to this Order. A recent Attorney General opinion acknowledges that, with respect to court records, F.O.I.A. merely serves as a gap filler. Op. Ark. Att’y Gen. No. 121 (2015). Incarcerated individuals do not lose their right of access to court records under Section (II)(B)(4) by virtue of their incarceration. Their incarceration also does not grant a right to unlimited photocopies of court records at no charge. Section (VI)(B)(2)(e) provides that costs for compiled records requested from a court or court agency having jurisdiction over the records shall be as otherwise permitted by state law or county or city ordinance. The new section also provides language consistent with Ark. R. App. P.—Crim. 19 adopted March 16, 2016, which was intended “to address a recurrent issue faced by the appellate courts: convicted offenders frequently request that the appellate court provide at public expense a copy of the party’s brief or appellate record that had previously been filed.” In re Arkansas Supreme Court Committee on Criminal Practice—Arkansas Rule of Appellate Procedure —Crim. 19, 2016 Ark. 145 (per curiam). The amendment to F.O.I.A. was adopted for the same reason, and this amendment will address the burden faced by clerks of the lower courts.

Section III. Commentary

Sections III(A)(1)-(3) explain which records in a court are covered by this order.

Section III(A)(1) excludes from the definition of “court record” information gathered, maintained, or stored by other agencies or entities that is not necessary to, or is not part of the basis of a court’s decision or the judicial process. Access to this information is governed by the laws and access policy of the agency collecting and maintaining such information. The ability of a computer in a court or clerk’s office to access the information, because the computer uses shared software and databases, does not, by itself, make the court records access policy applicable to the information. An example of this is information stored in an integrated criminal justice information system where all data is shared by law enforcement, the prosecutor, the court, defense counsel, and probation and corrections departments. The use of a shared system can blur the distinctions between agency records and court records. Under this section, if the information is provided to the court as part of a case or judicial proceeding, the court’s access rules then apply, regardless of where the information came from or the access rules of that agency. Conversely, if the information is not made part of the court record, the access policy applicable to the agency collecting the data still applies even if the information is stored in a shared database.

Section III(A)(2), “Case Record,” is meant to be all inclusive of information that is provided to, or made available to, the court that relates to a judicial proceeding. The term “judicial proceeding” is used because there may not be a court case in every situation. The definition is not limited to information “filed” with the court or “made part of the court record” because some types of information the court needs to make a fully informed decision might not be “filed” or technically part of the court record. The language is, therefore, written to include information delivered to, or “lodged” with, the court, even if it is not “filed.” An example is a complaint accompanying a motion to waive the filing fee based on indigence. The definition is also intended to include exhibits offered in hearings or trials, even if not admitted into evidence.

The definition includes all information used by a court to make its decision, even if an appellate court subsequently rules that the information should not have been considered or was not relevant to the judicial decision made.

The language is intended to include within its scope materials that are submitted to the court, but upon which a court did not act because the matter was withdrawn or the case was resolved. Once relevant material has been submitted to the court, it does not become inaccessible because the court did not, in the end, act on the information in the materials because the parties resolved the issue without a court decision.

The definition is written to cover any information that relates to a judicial proceeding generated by the court itself, whether through the court administrator's personnel or the clerk's office personnel. This definition applies to proceedings conducted by temporary judges or referees hearing cases in an official capacity. This includes two categories of information. One category includes documents, such as notices, minutes, orders, and judgments, which become part of the court record. The second category includes information that is gathered, generated, or kept for the purpose of managing the court's cases. This information might never be in a document; it might only exist as information in a field of a database such as a case management system, an automated register of actions, or an index of cases or parties.

Another set of items included within the definition is the official record of the proceedings, whether it is notes and transcripts generated by a court reporter of what transpired at a hearing, or an audio or video recording (analog or digital) of the proceeding. Public Access to these materials shall be granted at the court's discretion under Section IX(A), and information that would otherwise be confidential, but is included within these materials because it was disclosed in open court, is not required to be redacted under Section VII. Pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-13-501 et seq., court reporters are required to create transcripts only at the request of either party or the judge. The fees for creation of the transcript are set out in Ark. Code Ann. § 16-13-506. This order attempts to retain the common-law framework for access to court reporters' materials, but recognizes that technological changes such as automated electronic transcription and audio and video streaming over the Internet may result in increased availability of these materials without unduly burdening the ongoing business of the judiciary. Administrative Order Number 6 governs broadcasting, recording or photographing in the courtroom.

Section III(A)(3) defines "Administrative Record." The definition of "court record" includes some information and records maintained by the court and clerk of court that is related to the management and administration of the court or the clerk's office. Examples of this category of information include: internal court policies, memoranda and correspondence, court budget and fiscal records, and other routinely produced administrative records, memos and reports, and meeting minutes.

This subsection makes it clear that the order applies only to information related to the judicial branch. Some information maintained by clerks of court is not a court record, nor is the court responsible for its collection, maintenance, or accessibility. Land records and voter records are examples of information that do not pertain to the administration of the judicial branch of government.

An administrative record might or might not be related to a particular case. That is to say, an administrative record may relate to a particular case and therefore be a case record also. For example, the application of a judicial official for reimbursement for expenses incurred in the course of administering justice in a particular case is both an administrative record and a case record. A record with such dual character may be subject to public disclosure in either capacity; inversely, the record is excluded from public access only if it qualifies for exclusion in both capacities. For this reason, a judicial official who creates administrative records should take care to avoid including the sort of information that may be excluded from public access to case records and that is not essential to the administrative purpose of the record.

Section III(A)(6) defines “public access” very broadly. The language implies that access is not conditioned on the reason access is requested or on prior permission being granted by the court. Access is defined to include the ability to obtain a copy of the information, not just inspect it. The section does not address the form of the copy, as there are numerous forms the copy could take, and more will probably become possible as technology continues to evolve.

A minimum inspection of the court record can be done at the courthouse where the record is maintained. It can also be done in any other manner determined by the court that serves the principles and interests specified in section I of this order. The inspection can be of the physical record or an electronic version of the court record. Access may be over the counter, by fax, by regular mail, by e-mail or by courier. The section does not preclude the court from making inspection possible via electronic means at other sites, or remotely. It also permits a court to satisfy the request to inspect by providing a printed report, computer disk, tape or other storage medium containing the information requested from the court record.

The section implies an equality of the ability to “inspect and obtain a copy” across the public. Implementing this equality will require the court to address several sources of inequality of access. Some people have physical impairments that prevent them from using the form of access available to most of the public. Another problem has to do with the existence of a “digital divide” regarding access to information in electronic form. The court should provide equivalent access to those who do not have the necessary electronic equipment to obtain access. Finally, there is the issue of the format of electronic information and whether it is equally accessible to all computer platforms and operating systems. The court should make electronic information equally available, regardless of the computer used to access the information (in other words, in a manner that is hardware and software independent).

Another aspect of access is the need to redact restricted information in documents before allowing access to the balance of the document. In some circumstances this may be a quite costly. Lack of, or insufficient, resources may present the court with an awkward choice of deciding between funding normal operations and funding activities related to access to court records. As technology improves it is becoming easier to develop software that allows redaction of pieces of information in documents in electronic form based on “tags” (such as XML tags) accompanying the information. When software to include such tags in documents becomes available, and court systems acquire the capability to use the tags, redaction will become more feasible, allowing the balance of a document to be accessible with little effort on the part of the court.

The objective of section III(A)(7) defining “remote access” is to describe a means of access that is technology neutral that is used to distinguish means of access for different types of information. The term is used in section V regarding information that should be remotely accessible. The key elements are that: 1) the access is electronic, 2) the electronic form of the access allows searching of records, as well as viewing and making an electronic copy of the information, 3) a person is not required to visit the courthouse to access the record, and 4) no assistance of court or clerk of court staff is needed to gain access (other than staff maintaining the information technology systems).

This definition is independent of any particular technology or means of access. Remote access may be accomplished electronically by any one or more of a number of existing technologies, including dedicated terminal, kiosk, dial-in service, or Internet site. Attaching electronic copies of information to e-mails, and mailing or faxing copies of documents in response to a letter or phone request for information would not constitute remote access under this definition.

In section III(A)(8), the breadth of the definition of “in electronic form” makes clear that this order applies to information that is available in any type of electronic form. The point of this section is to define what “in electronic form” means, not to define whether electronic information can be accessed or how it is accessed. This subsection refers to electronic versions of textual documents (for example documents produced on a word processor, or stored in some other text format such as PDF format), and pictures, charts, or other graphical representations of information (for example, graphics files, spreadsheet files, etc.).

A document might be electronically available as an image of a paper document produced by scanning, or another imaging technique (but not filming or microfilming). This document can be viewed on a screen and it appears as a readable document, but it is not searchable without the aid of OCR (optical character recognition) applications that translate the image into a searchable text format.

An electronic image may also be one produced of a document or other object through the use of a digital camera, for example in a courtroom as part of an evidence presentation system.

Courts are increasingly using case management systems, data warehouses or similar tools to maintain data about cases and court activities. This order applies equally to this information even though it is not produced or available in paper format unless a report containing the information is generated. This section also covers files created for, and transmitted through, an electronic filing system for court documents.

Evidence can be in the form of audio or videotapes of testimony or events. In addition audio and video recording (ER - electronic recording) and computer-aided transcription systems (CAT) using court reporters are increasingly being used to capture the verbatim record of court hearings and trials. In the future real-time video streaming of trials or other proceedings is a possibility. Because this information is in electronic form, it would fall within this definition.

Section III(A)(10) recognizes that compiled information is different from case-by-case access because it involves information from more than one case. Compiled information is different from bulk access in that it involves only some of the information from some cases and the information has been reformulated or aggregated; it is not just a copy of all the information in the court’s records. Compiled information involves the creation of a new court record. In order to provide compiled information, a court generally must write a computer program to select the specific cases or information sought in the request, or otherwise use court resources to identify, gather, and copy the information.

Generating compiled data may require court resources and generating the compiled information may compete with the normal operations of the court for resources, which may be a reason for the court not to compile the information. It may be less costly for the court and less of an impact on the court to, instead, provide bulk distribution of the requested information, and let the requestor, rather than the court, compile the information.

The interchangeable definitions of “confidential” and “sealed” in section III(A)(11)-(14) recognize that in some circumstances the court is prohibited from disclosing the contents of a court record, and in some circumstances the court is prohibited from disclosing the very existence of a court record. For purposes of this order, the definition of “protective order” has the same meaning as found in the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure, i.e., the usual means by which a court designates a court record or parts of a record as confidential or sealed, for example, to protect a trade secret that includes information necessary to adjudication, but which would be harmful to the litigant if disclosed to the public. Also, this order itself provides that certain information in court records is “confidential,” such as a litigant’s personal bank account number, section VII(A)(5). The definitions of “confidential” and “sealed” recognize, however, that this order and other laws may provide limited access to confidential information. For example, consistently with section II, attorneys typically may access un-redacted records in cases on which they are attorneys of record.

Redactions from a publicly disclosed court record to protect sealed content are ordinarily indicated in the disclosure. However, the definitions of “confidential” and “sealed” recognize that in some instances, as provided by court order or by law, the court is prohibited from disclosing even the existence of a court record. For example, when a court record is “expunged,” as defined in section III(A)(14) and pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-90-901, et seq. neither the existence of nor the contents of the records may be disclosed. In some cases, expunge also means the physical destruction of court records in juvenile cases pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 9-27-309. In such cases, because physical destruction of the records in electronic form would be impractical, such records should be redacted to eliminate the ability to identify the juvenile while preserving sufficient information regarding the court’s actions for statistical and historic purposes.

The Court recognizes that for public policy reasons, such as to assist first-time offenders to remain productive members of society, it is sometimes necessary to conceal not only the contents of court records, but also the very existence of them from the general public. Expungement is not the only means by which a record may be sealed and made confidential as against disclosure of its very existence; for example, such confidentiality is afforded to adoption records by Ark. Code Ann. §§ 9-9-201, et seq. However, this order should not be construed to authorize the suppression of court records absent authorization by duly promulgated judicial rule or by duly enacted legislation. Cf. section IV(C).

The definition of “custodian” in section III(A)(16) recognizes that technology decreases the relevance of the physical location of records in electronic form. Court records might be stored remotely from the court in order to increase access, to provide greater security, to prevent loss in case of disaster, or to share resources with other agencies. However, that the records in electronic form are not physically located within a structure housing the court neither reduces the responsibility of the court and clerk for the content of the records, nor gives to the person holding the records for the purposes of storage, safekeeping, or data processing for the court the authority to disseminate the records.

Section IV. Commentary

The objective of this section is to make clear that this order applies to information in the court record regardless of the manner in which the information was created, collected or submitted to the court. Application of this order is not affected by the means of storage, manner of presentation or the form in which information is maintained. To support the general principle of open access, the application of the rule is independent of the technology or the format of the information.

Subsection (A) states the general premise that information in the court record will be publicly accessible unless access is specifically prohibited. The provision does not require any particular level of access, nor does it require a court to provide access in any particular form, for example, publishing court records in electronic form on a web site or dial-in database.

Subsection (C) provides a way for the public to know that information exists even though public access to the information itself is prohibited. This allows a member of the public to request access to the restricted record under section IX, which they would not know to do if the existence of the restricted information was not known.

However, the Court recognizes that for public policy reasons, such as to assist first-time offenders to remain productive members of society, it is sometimes necessary to conceal not only the contents of court records, but also the very existence of them from the general public. For example, Ark. Code Ann. § 16-90-903 limits the disclosure of the existence of certain expunged records. Section IV(C) accommodates this necessity, but should not be construed to authorize the suppression of court records absent authorization by duly promulgated judicial rule or by duly enacted legislation.

Section V. Commentary

This order does not impose an affirmative obligation to preserve information or data, or to transform information or data received into a format or medium that is not otherwise routinely maintained by the court. While this section encourages courts to make the designated information available to the public through remote access, this is not required, even if the information already exists in an electronic format.

Several types of information in court records have traditionally been given wider public distribution than merely making them publicly accessible at the courthouse. Typical examples are listed in this section. Often this information is regularly published in newspapers, particularly legal papers. Many of the first automated case management systems included a capability to make this information available electronically, at least on computer terminals in the courthouse, or through dial-up connections. Similarly, courts have long prepared registers of actions that indicate for each case what documents or other materials have been filed in the case. Again, early case management systems often automated this function. The summary or general nature of the information is such that there is little risk of harm to an individual through unwarranted invasion of privacy or proprietary business interests. This section acknowledges and encourages this public distribution practice by making these records presumptively accessible remotely, particularly if they are in electronic form. When a court begins to make information available remotely, they are encouraged to start with the categories of information identified in this list.

While not every court, or every automated system, is capable of providing this type of access, courts are encouraged to develop the capability to do so. The listing of information that should be made remotely available in no way is intended to imply that other information should not be made remotely available. Some court automated systems may also make more information available remotely to litigants and their lawyers than is available to the public.

Making certain types of information remotely accessible allows the court to make cost effective use of public resources provided for its operation. If the information is not available, someone requesting the information will have to call the court or come down to the courthouse and request the information. Public resources will be consumed with court staff locating case files containing the record or information, providing it to the requestor, and returning the case file to the shelf. If the requestor can obtain the information remotely, without involvement of court staff, there will be less use of court resources.

In implementing this section a court should be mindful about what specific pieces of information are appropriately remotely accessible. Care should be taken that the release of information is consistent with all provisions of the access policy, especially regarding personal identification information. For example, the information remotely accessible should not include information presumptively excluded from public access pursuant to section VII, or prohibited from public access by court order. An example of calendar information that may not be accessible by law is that relating to juvenile cases, adoptions, and mental health cases.

Subsection (5): One role of the judiciary, in resolving disputes, is to state the respective rights, obligations and interests of the parties to the dispute. This declaration of rights, obligations and interests usually is in the form of a judgment or other type of final order. Judgments or final orders have often had greater public accessibility by court rule or statutory requirement that they be recorded in a "judgment book." One reason this is done is to simplify public access by placing all such information in one place, rather than making someone step through numerous individual case files to find them. Recognizing such practices, this order specifically encourages this information to be remotely accessible if in electronic form.

There are circumstances where information about charges and convictions in criminal cases can change over time, which could mean copies of such listings derived from court records can become inaccurate unless updated. For example, a defendant may be charged with a felony, but the charge may be dismissed, or modified or reduced to a misdemeanor when the case is concluded. In other circumstances a felony conviction may be reduced to a misdemeanor conviction if the defendant successfully completes probation. These types of circumstances suggest that there be a disclaimer associated with such information, and that education about these possibilities be provided to litigants and the public.

Section VI. Commentary

In the past, court information other than that required to be reported to the Administrative Office of the Courts, was available only directly from the courts. In 2001, the Arkansas Court Automation Project began, with its long-term goal to provide a centralized case management system for all courts in the State of Arkansas. This project is the foundation to provide statewide electronic filing and document imaging for the courts. As courts go online with the new system, the public will have a more convenient central location from which to request court records. Before 2012, the AOC did not store documents, images, or digital court recordings for the courts, so this order did not contemplate requests for this information. As the electronic-filing system is being rolled out to the courts, more electronic information is being stored on AOC computers beyond information about the court records. Because the AOC is not the custodian of these records and because the electronic versions of these documents may contain sensitive or confidential information, requests for bulk or compiled distribution of information that exists as electronic representations of text or graphic documents; an electronic image, including a video image of a document, exhibit or other thing; or an audio or video recording (analog or digital) of an event or notes in an electronic file from which a transcript of an event can be prepared should be directed to the court or court agency having jurisdiction over the records even if the information is stored on computers maintained by the AOC.

Section VII. Commentary

Subsection (A)(1) Federal Law: There are several types of information that are commonly but possibly incorrectly, considered to be protected from public disclosure by federal law. Although there may be restrictions on federal agencies disclosing Social Security numbers, they may not apply to state or local agencies such as courts or clerks of courts. While federal law prohibits disclosure of tax returns by federal agencies or employees, this prohibition may not extend to disclosure by others. The Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA) and regulations adopted pursuant to it limit disclosure of certain health related information. Whether the limitation extends to state court records is not clear. There are also federal restrictions regarding information in alcohol and drug abuse patient records and requiring confidentiality of information acquired by drug court programs. This order does not supersede any federal law or regulation requiring privacy or non-disclosure of information.

In addition to deliberative material excluded under this order, a court may exclude from public access materials generated or created by a court reporter with the exception of the official transcript.

This Court recognizes that “[a] trial court has the inherent authority to protect the integrity of the court in actions pending before it and may issue appropriate protective orders that would provide FOIA exemption under Section 25-19-105(b)(8).” See City of Fayetteville v. Edmark, 304 Ark. 179, 191 (1990). Rule 26(c) of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure further recognizes that “the court in which the action is pending may make any order which justice requires to protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense.”

Subsection (A)(2) clarifies that this order does not supersede any Arkansas law requiring privacy or non-disclosure of information in court records. The following is a non-exhaustive list of Arkansas Code Annotated sections regarding confidentiality of records whose confidentiality may extend to the records even if they become court records:

(a) adoption records as provided in the Revised Uniform Adoption Act, as amended, Ark. Code Ann. §§ 9-9-201, et seq.;

(b) records relating to Human Immunodeficiency Virus or Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-82-101 et. seq.;

(c) records relating to child abuse not admitted into evidence as part of a public proceeding, pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. §§ 12-12-501, et seq.;

(d) records relating to drug tests conducted pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 11-14-101, et seq. except as provided by Ark. Code Ann. § 11-14-109;

(e) records of grand jury minutes, pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 25-19-105(b)(4);

(f) records of juvenile proceedings, pursuant to Ark. Code § 9-27-309;

(g) the master list of jurors’ names and addresses, pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-32-103;

(h) addresses and phone numbers of prospective jurors, pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-33-101;

(i) indictment against any person not in actual confinement, pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-85-408;

(j) home or business address of petitioner for domestic order of protection if omitted by petitioner, pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 9-15-203;

(k) records or writings made at dispute resolution proceedings, pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-7-206;

(l) information related to defendant's attendance, attitude, participation, and results of drug screens when participating in a pre- or post-trial treatment program for drug abuse pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-98-201, even though defendant may have executed a consent for a limited release of confidential information regarding treatment permitting the judge, the prosecutor, and the defense attorney access to the information.

Subsection (B) presumes that administrative records will be governed by the Arkansas Freedom of Information Act, but recognizes that some public record exclusions are codified outside of the Act and that courts have inherent authority to restrict access to court records.

Freedom of Information Act exemptions are only exemptions to the enclosing act. The reference to the Arkansas Code Annotated should not be construed as applying FOIA exemptions to the courts. They may provide guidance upon a motion for a protective order, but should not be construed to be general exemptions beyond their context.

Section VIII. Commentary

This section is intended to address those extraordinary circumstances in which confidential information or information which is otherwise excluded from public access is to be included in a release of information. In some circumstances, the nature of the information contained in a record and the restrictions placed on the accessibility of the information contained in that record may be governed by federal or state law. This section is not intended to modify or overrule any federal or state law governing such records or the process for releasing information.

Information excluded from public access that is sought in a request for bulk or compiled records is governed by section VI of this order.

Section IX. Commentary

Subsection (A) is intended to retain the common-law framework with respect to public access to court records at the courthouse. The section recognizes that access to trial exhibits and trial transcript source materials not filed with the court clerk is subject to the discretion of the court. This section is not intended to enhance, extend, or diminish the discretion of the court with respect to access to exhibits and transcript source materials.

This section does not preclude or require "after hours" access to court records in electronic form. Courts are encouraged to provide access to records in electronic form beyond the hours access is available at the courthouse, however, it is not the intent of this order to compel such additional access.

Section X. Commentary

This section is intended to apply when information technology services are provided to a court by an agency outside the judicial branch, or by outsourcing of court information technology services to non-governmental entities. Implicit in this order is the concept that all court records are under the authority of the judiciary, and that the judiciary has the responsibility to ensure public access to court records and to restrict access where appropriate. This applies as well to court records maintained in systems operated by any non-judicial governmental department or agency.

Section XI. Commentary

The Supreme Court recognizes that it is not within its constitutional authority to either establish or provide immunity for civil or criminal liability based on violations of this order. The intent of this section is to make clear that absent a statutory or common-law basis for civil or criminal liability, violation of this order alone is insufficient to establish or deny liability for violating the order. Neither does this section preclude the possibility that violation of this order may be used as evidence of negligence or misconduct that resulted in a statutory or common law claim for civil or criminal liability.

HISTORY: Amended May 24, 2012; amended October 18, 2018, effective January 1, 2019.

Publisher's Notes.

The Court's per curiam order dated October 11, 2018, amending Administrative Order No.

19, effective January 1, 2019, included only the one paragraph set out above as the amended Section VI Commentary, which clearly replaces the first paragraph of the former Section VI Commentary. It is not clear whether any of the other paragraphs of the former Section VI Commentary are to be retained.

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

Contrary to the district court clerk's contention, the request for all court records of a specific individual was not a request for "compiled information"; the process needed to identify and copy the requested records was not akin to selecting certain information from multiple cases and then aggregating or reformulating that information into a new court record. Thus, the request was not governed by any of the access limitations described in Ark. Admin. Order No. 19, the Arkansas Freedom of Information Act, § 25-19-101 et seq., applied, and while a custodian was not required to compile information or create a record in response to a FOIA request, that exemption did not apply here. Jones v. Prof'l Background Screening Ass'n, 2020 Ark. 362, 610 S.W.3d 640 (2020).

Construction.

For access to court records purposes, a compiled-information request involves some information from some cases and requires a reformulation or aggregation of the information and the creation of a new court record. Jones v. Prof'l Background Screening Ass'n, 2020 Ark. 362, 610 S.W.3d 640 (2020).

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 19.1 — REDACTION IN ADMINISTRATIVE RECORDS

Confidential information as defined and described in Sections III(A)(11) and VII(B) of Administrative Order 19 shall not be included as part of a court administrative record unless the confidential information is necessary to the administration of the judicial branch of government. Section III(A)(3) of the Order defines an administrative record as any document, information, data, or other item created, collected, received, or maintained by a court, court agency, or clerk of court pertaining to the administration of the judicial branch of government. If inclusion of confidential information in a court administrative record is necessary to the administration of the judicial branch of government:

A. The confidential information shall be redacted from the court administrative record to which public access is granted pursuant to Section IV(A) of Administrative Order 19. The point in the court administrative record at which the redaction is made shall be indicated by striking through the redacted material with an opaque black mark or by inserting some explanatory notation in brackets, such as: [Information Redacted], [I.R.], [Confidential], or [Subject To Protective Order]. The requirement that the redaction be indicated in a court administrative record shall not apply to administrative records rendered confidential by expungement or other legal authority that expressly prohibits disclosure of the existence of a record; and

B. An un-redacted copy of the court administrative record with the confidential information included shall be filed with the court under seal. It is the responsibility of a court, court agency, or clerk of court creating a court administrative record to ensure that confidential information is omitted or redacted from administrative records. As noted in Section XI of Administrative Order 19, a court may use its inherent contempt powers to enforce this rule.

HISTORY: Added October 23, 2008, effective January 1, 2009.

Explanatory Note:

This new Administrative Order applies only to records related to court administration created by the judicial branch and agents and agencies of that branch. It does not apply to records created by administrative agencies in the Executive Branch or independent administrative agencies.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 20 — PRIVATE CIVIL PROCESS SERVERS APPOINTMENT — QUALIFICATIONS

(a) Authority to Appoint Persons to Serve Process in Civil Cases. The administrative judge of a judicial district, or any circuit judge(s) designated by the administrative judge, may issue an order appointing an individual to make service of process pursuant to Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 4(c)(2) in cases pending in each county of the district wherein approval has been granted. The appointment shall be effective for every division of circuit court, and for every district court, in the county.

(b) Minimum Qualifications to Serve Process. Each person appointed to serve process must have these minimum qualifications:

- (1) be not less than 18 years old and a citizen of the United States;
- (2) have a high school diploma or equivalent;
- (3) not have been convicted of a crime punishable by imprisonment for more than one year or a crime involving dishonesty or false statement, regardless of the punishment;
- (4) hold a valid driver's license from one of the United States; and
- (5) demonstrate familiarity with the various documents to be served. Each judicial district may, with the concurrence of all the circuit judges in that district, prescribe additional qualifications.

(c) Appointment Procedure.

(1) A person seeking court appointment to serve process shall file an application with the circuit clerk. In a multi-county district, an applicant may file an application in one county seeking appointment in one or more counties of the district. The application shall be accompanied by an affidavit stating the applicant's name, address, occupation, and employer, and establishing the applicant's minimum qualifications pursuant to section (b) of this Administrative Order. Neither the application nor the affidavit shall require disclosure of the applicant's social security number. The General Assembly will set any application fee charged by the circuit court.

(2) The circuit judge shall determine from the application and affidavit, and from whatever other inquiry is needed, whether the applicant meets the minimum qualifications prescribed by this Administrative Order and any additional qualifications prescribed in that district. If the judge determines that the applicant is qualified, then the judge shall issue an order of appointment. The circuit clerk shall file the order, and provide a certified copy of it to the process server and to the sheriff of the county in which the person will serve process. The circuit clerk of each county shall maintain and post a list of appointed civil process servers. In multi-county districts, if the applicant has sought appointment in more than one county, then the order shall specify the counties in which the process server is qualified. In this instance, the circuit clerk shall also provide a certified copy of the order to the sheriff and circuit clerk of each county in which the person will serve process.

(d) Identification. When serving process, each process server shall carry a certified copy of his or her order of appointment and a valid driver's license. He or she shall, upon request or inquiry, present this identification at the time service is made.

(e) Duration, Renewal, and Revocation. A judge shall appoint process servers for a fixed term not to exceed three years. Appointments shall be renewable for additional three-year terms. A process server seeking a renewal appointment shall file an application for renewal and supporting affidavit demonstrating that he or she meets the minimum qualifications prescribed by this Administrative Order and the judicial district. The General Assembly shall set any renewal fee charged by the circuit court. Upon notice to the administrative judge, any circuit judge may revoke an appointment to serve process for his or her division for any of the following reasons: (1) making a false return of service; (2) serious and purposeful improper service of process; (3) failing to meet the minimum qualifications for serving process; (4) misrepresentation of authority, position, or duty; or (5) other good cause.

(f) Forms. Forms for the application, affidavit, order of appointment, and renewal of appointment are available at the Administrative Office of the Courts section of the Arkansas Judiciary website, <http://courts.state.ar.us>.

HISTORY: Added January 10, 2008, effective March 1, 2008; amended December 11, 2008.

Explanatory Note:

This new Administrative Order imposes expanded minimum qualifications for private process servers in civil cases. Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 4(c)(2) formerly provided that the circuit court could appoint any person more than eighteen years old to serve process. Given the importance and effect of service of process, that qualification is insufficient. The expanded minimum qualifications imposed by this Administrative Order will help ensure the competence and character of private process servers. The Order establishes a floor, not a ceiling: the circuit judges in each judicial district may establish additional qualifications. Rule 4(c)(2) has been amended to incorporate this Order by reference. The Order also creates a uniform procedure for appointment and reappointment by the circuit court, as well as giving examples of the good cause which would justify revocation of the privilege of serving process. Finally, the Order requires process servers to carry a certified copy of their order of appointment, and their driver's license, to establish the server's legal authority.

Explanatory Note, 2008 Amendment:

The Administrative Order has been clarified in various respects. The change in subsection (a) confirms that the Order and Rule 4(c)(2) must be read in harmony. Moreover, the circuit court's authority extends to appointing process servers for the district courts within the judicial district. In subsection (b), the requirement of having Arkansas driver's license has been changed to having a valid driver's license from any state. In subsection (c), the procedure for appointment in multi-county districts has been spelled out: an applicant may seek a multi-county appointment by applying to any circuit court in a multi-county district. The circuit clerk in the county where the petition is filed must provide certified copies of any appointment order to the circuit clerks and sheriffs in all counties covered by the appointment. As amended, the Order prohibits requiring an applicant to disclose his or her social security number during the application process. Finally, the Order clarifies that any fee related to an application for appointment or renewal shall be set by the General Assembly.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 21 — ELECTRONIC FILING

Rule

- Section 1. Purpose, Scope, and Application.
 - Section 2. Definitions.
 - Section 3. Implementation of Electronic Filing.
 - Section 4. Official Court Record.
 - Section 5. Preservation of Certain Conventional Documents.
 - Section 6. Time of Filing, Confirmation, Existing Practice, and File-Mark.
 - Section 7. Electronic Service.
 - Section 8. Signatures.
 - Section 9. Format of documents.
 - Section 10. Registration requirements.
 - Section 11. Access to Electronic Documents; Confidential Information.
 - Section 12. Technical Failures.
 - Section 13. Creation of Policies and Procedures Manual.
 - Section 14. Working Group.
- Forms

Section 1. Purpose, Scope, and Application.

(a) Purpose. This order establishes statewide policies and procedures governing the electronic filing process in all the courts in Arkansas.

(b) Scope. Electronic filing is a means of fulfilling the filing requirements of the courts of this state, but any court or clerk that elects to adopt electronic filing pursuant to this order must use the electronic filing system provided by the Administrative Office of the Courts (“AOC”) or an electronic citation system approved by the AOC. Once an election is made to use the electronic filing system provided by the AOC, then electronic filing shall be the exclusive means of filing in all cases, except as may otherwise be provided in this order or by rule adopted by the Supreme Court.

(1) Any person proceeding pro se and any person with a disability or special need that prevents electronic filing shall be entitled to submit conventional paper filings.

(c) Application. This order shall be liberally construed to secure the proper and efficient administration of the business and affairs of the court and to promote and facilitate the administration of justice by the court.

HISTORY: Amended May 31, 2012;
amended October 30, 2014.

Section 2. Definitions.

(a) Case management system. A “case management system” is an electronic database maintained by the court or clerk to track information used to manage the court’s caseload, such as case numbers, party names, attorneys for parties, titles of all documents filed in a case, and all scheduled events in a case.

(b) Case initiating document. A “case initiating document” is the first filing in any matter, including but not limited to the complaint and summons, any subpoena, and citation. For appellate submissions, a “case initiating document” is the first filing in the appellate court, including without limitation, the appellant’s brief, motion, or petition, but excluding any record or partial record prepared by another court or tribunal for use on appeal.

(c) Citation. “Citation” means a written order or electronic ticket issued by a law enforcement officer or employee of the department of public safety of a city or incorporated town who is authorized to make an arrest; and that requires a person accused of violating the law to appear in a designated court or governmental office at a specified date and time.

(d) Clerk. The “clerk” means the clerk of the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals, circuit court, or district court.

(e) Conventional document. A “conventional document” is a paper document that may be filed or submitted to the clerk for filing in paper form or a paper document that must be converted by a registered user or clerk to an electronic document.

(f) Document management system. A “document management system” is an electronic database containing documents stored in electronic form and structured to allow access to those documents using index fields such as case number, filing date, or type of document.

(g) Electronic case. An “electronic case” is one in which the case documents are electronically maintained in a document management system.

(h) Electronic document. An “electronic document” is an electronic version of a conventional document or an electronic ticket and has the same legal effect.

(i) Electronic filing. “Electronic filing” is the electronic transmission to or from a clerk of an electronic document by uploading from the registered user’s (or his or her designated agent’s) or clerk’s computer to the electronic filing system. It does not include submission via e-mail, fax, floppy disks, or other electronic means.

(j) Electronic filing system. “Electronic filing system” refers to the system established pursuant to this order that receives and stores electronic documents.

(k) Electronic service. “Electronic service” is the electronic transmission of an electronic document, or of notice of its filing, to a party, attorney, or representative under these rules. Electronic service may not be used to accomplish service of process or a subpoena to gain jurisdiction over persons or property.

(l) Electronic ticket. “Electronic ticket” means an electronic citation or warning printed by a law enforcement officer and issued to a person accused of violating the law.

(m) Public access terminal. A “public access terminal” is a computer terminal provided by a clerk for viewing publicly accessible electronic documents. Public access terminals must be available during the clerk’s normal business hours and must include access to a printer.

(n) Registered user. A “registered user” is an individual who has been issued a user ID and password to access the electronic filing system.

HISTORY: Amended May 31, 2012;
amended October 30, 2014.

Section 3. Implementation of Electronic Filing.

(a) Establishment of electronic filing and electronic citation systems. The AOC is authorized to develop or contract with a vendor for the development of electronic filing systems for the district, circuit, and appellate courts, and to approve the interface of electronic citation systems with the courts.

(1) In the district courts, the District Judge(s) shall decide whether to adopt the electronic filing system.

(2) In the circuit courts, the Administrative Judge of the Judicial Circuit, with input from the Clerk, and, if applicable, the Ex Officio Circuit Clerk for the Probate Division, of the counties within the Circuit, shall decide whether to adopt the electronic filing system.

(3) In the appellate courts, the Supreme Court shall decide whether to adopt the electronic filing system.

(4) Every court is encouraged to implement an electronic filing system as soon as practical.

(b) Mandatory electronic filing processes. Once implemented, use of the electronic filing system in all cases or a particular type of case is mandatory only if: (1) the court provides a mechanism for waiving electronic fees in appropriate circumstances; (2) the court allows for the exceptions needed to ensure access to justice for indigent, disabled, self-represented, and other litigants who have special needs; (3) the court provides adequate advance notice of the mandatory participation requirement; (4) the court provides a one-year transition period during which any document may be filed conventionally or electronically, and the court provides notice during the transition period about electronic filing to all parties filing a document conventionally; and (5) the court provides training for filers in the use of the process.

(c) Paper filing exceptions.

(1) Documents may be filed conventionally during the one-year transition period required by section (3)(b)(4) herein, and the clerk must electronically file such documents not later than 48 hours after the conventional filing.

(2) Conventional paper filings shall be permitted, pursuant to the provisions of the policies and procedures manual promulgated by the AOC, by the clerk for specific documents or classes of documents, such as documents not available in electronic form, documents that are too lengthy to electronically image, and documents filed under seal.

(3) Conventional paper filings shall be permitted in the event of electronic filing system errors or other technical problems pursuant to Section 12.

(d) Quality control procedures. The clerk must institute a combination of automated and human quality control procedures sufficient to ensure the accuracy and reliability of their electronic records system.

(e) Archiving electronic documents. The clerk must maintain forward migration processes to guarantee future access to electronic documents.

(f) Effect on Rules of Evidence. This order does not affect any rule of evidence regarding the authentication of a document.

(g) Fee for electronic filing system.

(1)(A) The fee to be charged for use of the electronic filing system shall be as prescribed in this section.

(B) No portion of the electronic filing system fee shall be refunded.

(2) The electronic filing system fee is as follows:

(A) For all civil actions and misdemeanors electronically filed in either the Supreme Court or Court of Appeals $20.00;

(B) For initiating a cause of action through the electronic filing system in the civil, domestic relations, or probate division of circuit court, including appeals $20.00;

(C) For initiating a cause of action through the electronic filing system in the civil or small claims division of district court $20.00.

(3) The fee provided under subdivision (g) of this section shall be remitted by the Clerk of the Supreme Court on or before the fifteenth day of each month to the Administration of Justice Funds Section on a form provided by the Office of Administrative Services of the Department of Finance and Administration for deposit into the Judicial Fine Collection Enhancement Fund established by section 16-13-712.

(4) No fee shall be charged or collected when the court by order, under Rule 72 of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure, allows an indigent person to prosecute a cause of action in forma pauperis.

(5) Prosecuting attorneys filing actions on behalf of the state, with the exception of child support cases, are exempt from paying fees under this section.

(6) Fees under this section shall not be charged or collected in cases brought in the circuit court under the Arkansas Juvenile Code of 1989, section 9-27-301 et seq., by a governmental entity or nonprofit corporation, including without limitation, an attorney ad litem appointed in a dependency-neglect case or the Department of Human Services.

HISTORY: Amended June 23, 2011;
amended May 31, 2012.

Section 4. Official Court Record.

(a) Legal effect of electronic documents. An electronic document is the official court record and has the same force and effect as a document filed conventionally.

(b) Form of record. To the maximum extent feasible, the clerk must ensure that all documents filed in electronic cases are maintained in electronic form.

(c) Scanning and disposition. Case-initiating documents and other paper documents may be scanned by the clerk and made part of the electronic record. Once the conventional document has been scanned, the electronic document is the official court record. Once scanned, with the exception of conventional documents identified in Section 5, the conventional document may be destroyed.

(d) Court documents. The court may electronically file or issue any notice, order, judgment, or other document prepared by the court. The court will provide a paper copy to any person proceeding pro se and to any person with a disability or special need that prevents access to electronic filings.

HISTORY: Amended October 30, 2014.

Section 5. Preservation of Certain Conventional Documents.

(a) Destruction of original documents. After conversion to an electronic document, a clerk may return or destroy conventional documents.

(b) Statutory requirements. This order does not alter a clerk's statutory obligation to retain conventional documents.

(c) Record on appeal. Any record or partial record prepared by another court or tribunal for use on appeal to the Supreme Court or Court of Appeals shall be maintained pursuant to Administrative Order No. 7.

HISTORY: Amended October 30, 2014.

Section 6. Time of Filing, Confirmation, Existing Practice, and File-Mark.

(a) Filed upon transmission.

(1) An electronic document shall be considered filed in district court or circuit court with the clerk when the transmission to the electronic filing system is completed. Upon receipt of the electronic document, the electronic filing system shall automatically confirm to the registered user that the transmission of the electronic document was completed and the date and time of the document's receipt by the electronic filing system. Absent confirmation of receipt, there is no presumption that the electronic filing system received the electronic document, and the electronic filer is responsible for verifying that the clerk received and filed the document transmitted.

(2) Subject to review and acceptance by the clerk, an electronic document shall be considered filed in the Supreme Court of Arkansas or the Arkansas Court of Appeals when the transmission to the electronic filing system is completed. Upon receipt of the electronic document, the electronic filing system shall automatically confirm to the registered user that the transmission of the electronic document was completed and the date and time of the document's receipt by the electronic filing system.

(b) Existing practice maintained. Electronic filing of documents does not change the rules and practice for the acceptance or rejection of documents presented to the clerk for filing.

(c) File-mark. The electronic filing system shall affix an electronic file-mark that shall have the same force and effect as a manually affixed stamp of the clerk.

(d) Time of filing. Any electronic document received by the electronic filing system before midnight shall be deemed filed on that date.

HISTORY: Amended October 30, 2014.

Section 7. Electronic Service.

(a) Consent to electronic service. Registered users of the electronic filing system consent to electronic service of electronic documents as the only means deemed to constitute service and such notice of filing is valid and effective service of the document on the registered users and shall have the same legal effect as service by conventional means.

(b) Applicability. Complaints, petitions, subpoenas, or other documents that must be served with a summons may not be served electronically.

(c) Service on registered users.

(1) The electronic filing system shall provide notice to all registered users associated with the case that an electronic document has been filed and is available on the document management system. The notice shall be sent electronically to the addresses furnished by the registered users associated with the case.

(2) When the clerk accepts a conventional document for filing pursuant to Section 3(c) and converts it to an electronic document that is stored in the document management system, the electronic filing system shall provide notice of this conventional filing to the registered users associated with the case.

(d) Service on nonregistered recipients. The registered user filing an electronic document shall serve nonregistered parties as otherwise provided by law or rule.

(e) Time of service; time to respond. Electronic service is complete at the time of transmission of the notice required by Section 7(c). For the purpose of computing time to respond to documents served via electronic service, any document served on a day or at a time when the court is not open for business shall be deemed served at the time of the next opening of the clerk for business.

(f) Termination of receipt of electronic notice. Upon the entry of a final order in a case or upon an attorney's withdrawal in a case, the attorney may motion the court to terminate transmission of any further electronic service of notice in that case. The request may be made by separate motion or combined with a motion to withdraw. Upon entry of an order terminating automatic transmission of the electronic notices, the clerk shall take the steps to discontinue automatic transmission of all electronic notices to the attorney, and no other remaining party or attorney shall be required to provide notice in any other format to the terminating attorney.

HISTORY: Amended April 19, 2018.

Section 8. Signatures.

(a) Deemed signed. Every electronic document shall be deemed to be signed by the registered user who files it. Each electronic document must bear the identifying information of the registered user as is required by rule or law. Where a statute or court rule requires a signature at a particular location on a form or pleading, the person's typewritten name shall be inserted. In the alternative, a facsimile, typographical, or digital signature may be used.

(b) Documents under penalty of perjury or requiring signature of notary public. Documents required by law to include a signature under penalty of perjury, or the signature of a notary public, may be submitted electronically, provided that the declarant or notary public has signed a conventional form of the document. The conventional document bearing the original signature(s) must be scanned and electronically submitted for filing in a format that accurately reproduces the original signatures and contents of the document.

(c) Documents requiring signatures of opposing parties.

(1) When a document to be filed electronically requires the signatures of opposing parties, such as a stipulation, the party filing the document must first obtain the signatures of all parties on a conventional document.

(2) The printed document bearing the original signatures must be scanned and electronically submitted for filing in a format that accurately reproduces the original signatures and contents of the document.

(d) Signature of judicial officer or clerk. Electronically filed court documents requiring a court official's signature may be signed electronically. A court using electronic signatures on court documents must adopt policies and procedures to safeguard such signatures and comply with any AOC guidelines for electronic signatures that may be adopted.

Section 9. Format of documents.

An electronic document shall be formatted in accordance with the applicable rules governing formatting of conventional documents, including page limits. Electronic documents shall be self-contained and shall not contain hyperlinks to external papers or websites. Hyperlinks to other electronic documents filed in the case are permitted.

Section 10. Registration requirements.

(a) Registration mandatory. Any person wanting access to the electronic filing system must become a registered user in order to access the system. A clerk shall permit persons who are not registered users and who are not authorized to access the document management system to access electronically filed documents via a public access terminal located in the courthouse, subject to the restriction on disclosure of confidential documents provided in section (11) of this order.

(b) Registration requirements. The AOC shall establish registration requirements for all registered users and must limit the registration of registered users to individuals, not law firms, agencies, corporations, or other groups. The AOC must assign to the registered user a confidential, secure log-in sequence. The log-in sequence must be used only by the registered user to whom it is assigned and by agents and employees as the registered user may authorize. No registered user shall knowingly permit his or her log-in sequence to be used by anyone other than his or her authorized agents and employees. The AOC may require registered users to undergo training prior to authorizing access to the electronic filing system. The AOC is permitted to collect a fee not to exceed $100 for training and registration to be deposited in the Bar Account of Arkansas. Attorneys who complete this training shall be entitled to receive one hour of general Continuing Legal Education Credits.

(c) Electronic mail address required. Registered users shall furnish at least one electronic mail address that the electronic filing system will use for electronic service and other notices. It is the registered user's responsibility to ensure that the electronic filing system has the correct electronic mail address.

(d) Misuse of electronic systems. Any registered user who attempts to harm the electronic filing system or document management system in any manner, attempts to alter electronic documents or information stored on the systems, or attempts any unauthorized use of the systems, has committed misuse of the system. Misuse of the electronic filing system or document management system may result in loss of a user's registration and subject the registered user to any other penalty provided by law or rule.

(e) Electronic citation systems registration and access. Registration requirements for, and access to, electronic citation systems shall be as determined through appropriate interdepartmental, interagency, or intergovernmental agreements. The agreements shall clearly state the terms of access to the systems and permitted uses of the systems by registered users.

HISTORY: Amended June 23, 2011;
amended May 31, 2012; amended October 11,
2018, effective January 1, 2019.

Section 11. Access to Electronic Documents; Confidential Information.

(a) Confidential information not to be filed. All confidential information identified in Administrative Order Number 19 (Section VII — A) shall be redacted from an electronic document before it is filed using the electronic filing system.

(b) Exceptions; filing under seal. Where a registered user reasonably believes that confidential information is necessary and relevant to the case and must be included in an electronic document, then the registered user shall file the unredacted document under seal and shall also file a redacted version of the document pursuant to Administrative Order 19 and related implementing rules. An electronic document or conventional document containing confidential information shall not be a public document.

(c) System requirements. The electronic filing system and the document management system shall segregate unredacted documents containing confidential information and filed pursuant to Section 11(b). Unredacted versions of documents shall be available only to court personnel and registered users associated on the electronic filing system with the case in which such documents are filed. The electronic filing system shall give notice to registered users associated with a case that an unredacted document containing confidential information has been filed in the case.

Section 12. Technical Failures.

(a) Electronic filing system errors. The electronic filing system is deemed subject to a technical failure on a given day if the site is unable to accept filings continuously or intermittently over the course of any period of time greater than one hour after 8:00 a.m. that day. Anticipated system outages must be communicated to registered users by electronic mail within a reasonable time prior to the outage and must be posted on the web site, if possible. A technical failure of the electronic filing system shall excuse an untimely filing.

(b) Other technical problems. Other technical problems in the nature of an unavoidable casualty, such as problems with the user's Internet Service Provider (ISP) that prevent a registered user from transmitting an electronic filing, may constitute a technical failure under these procedures excusing an untimely filing.

(c) Conventional filing allowed. In the event of a technical failure of the electronic filing system or other technical problems that prevent a registered user from submitting an electronic filing, documents should be submitted to the Clerk's office conventionally.

(d) Relief after technical failure. A party whose filing is made untimely as the result of a technical failure of the electronic filing system or other technical problems may seek appropriate relief from the court. Sample language is attached to this order as Form A. Technical failures of the electronic filing system under subdivision (a) of this Section 12 are excused. For technical problems that are considered to be user-related under subdivision (b) of this section, the court for good cause shown may excuse an untimely filing.

Section 13. Creation of Policies and Procedures Manual.

The AOC is authorized to promulgate a policies and procedures manuals for the implementation of this order and for the use and operation of the electronic filing and electronic citation systems and the document management system, and shall update policies and procedures and the manuals as needed from time to time.

HISTORY: Amended May 31, 2012.

Section 14. Working Group.

The Supreme Court Committee on Automation is authorized to appoint working groups, such as an electronic citation working group, which groups shall advise the Committee on matters of policy and procedure in the management of electronic filing systems.

HISTORY: Adopted May 31, 2012.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 22 — IOLTA PROGRAM RELATIONSHIP WITH ELIGIBLE AND MEMBER INSTITUTIONS

- Rule
Section 1. Definitions.
Section 2. Participation.
Section 3. Removal of financial Institutions from IOLTA Program.

Section 1. Definitions.

As used in Rule 1.15 of the Arkansas Rules of Professional Conduct, the terms below shall have the following meaning:

(a) “IOLTA account” means an interest- or dividend-bearing trust account benefiting the Arkansas Access to Justice Foundation, Inc., established in an eligible institution for the deposit of nominal or short-term funds of clients or third persons, which may be withdrawn upon request as soon as permitted by law.

(b) “Eligible institution” for IOLTA accounts means a depository bank or savings and loan association or credit union authorized by federal or state laws to do business in Arkansas, whose deposits are insured by an agency of the federal government, or any open-end investment company registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission and authorized by federal or state laws to do business in Arkansas. In addition, an eligible institution must either (1) maintain a physical office in the state of Arkansas or (2) be owned by a bank holding company regulated by the Federal Reserve System, of which a subsidiary federally-insured depository bank or savings and loan association or credit union maintains a physical office in the state of Arkansas. Eligible institutions must meet the requirements set out in section (b) above.

(c) “Interest- or dividend-bearing trust account” means a federally insured checking account or an investment product, including a sweep product and a daily (overnight) financial-institution repurchase agreement or an open-end money market fund. A daily financial-institution repurchase agreement must be fully collateralized by U.S. Treasury Securities; an open-end money-market fund must invest primarily in U.S. Treasury Securities or repurchase agreements fully collateralized by U.S. Treasury Securities. A daily financial-institution repurchase agreement may be established only with an eligible institution that is “well capitalized” or “adequately capitalized” as those terms are defined by applicable federal statutes and regulations. An open-end money-market fund must hold itself out as a money-market fund as defined by applicable federal statutes and regulations under the Investment Company Act of 1940 and, at the time of investment, have total managed assets of at least $ 250,000,000. The funds covered by this rule shall be subject to withdrawal upon request and without delay.

(d) “Allowable reasonable fees” means: (1) per check charges, (2) per deposit charges, (3) a fee in lieu of minimum balance, (4) federal deposit insurance fees, (5) sweep fees, 12b-1 fees, and subaccounting fees, and (6) a reasonable IOLTA account administrative fee.

(e) “U.S. Treasury Securities” means direct obligations of the federal government of the United States.

(f) “Repurchase agreements” means transactions in which a fund buys a security from a dealer or bank and agrees to sell the security back at a mutually agreed upon time and price. The repurchase price exceeds the sale price, reflecting the fund’s return on the transaction. This return is unrelated to the interest rate on the underlying security. Repurchase agreements are subject to credit risks.

HISTORY: Adopted November 5, 2015.

Section 2. Participation.

Participation in the IOLTA Program of the Arkansas Access to Justice Foundation is voluntary for banks, savings and loan associations, and investment companies. Any eligible institution that elects to provide and maintain IOLTA accounts shall do so according to the following terms:

(a) Determination of Interest Rates and Dividends. Eligible institutions that maintain IOLTA accounts that are, or are invested in, interest-bearing deposits or daily financial-institution repurchase agreements shall pay no less than the highest rate and dividend generally available from the institution to its non-IOLTA account customers when IOLTA accounts meet or exceed the same minimum balance or other eligibility qualifications, if any. In determining the highest rate or dividend generally available from the institution to its non-IOLTA accounts, eligible institutions may consider factors, in addition to the balance in the IOLTA account, customarily considered by the institution when setting interest rates or dividends for its customers, provided that such factors do not discriminate between IOLTA accounts and accounts of non-IOLTA customers, and that these factors do not include the fact that the account is an IOLTA account. The eligible institution may offer, and the lawyer may accept, a sweep account that provides a mechanism for the overnight investment of balances in the IOLTA account into a daily financial institution repurchase agreement or a money-market fund. However, this Rule shall not require any eligible institution to offer or otherwise make available sweep accounts for IOLTA accounts.

(b) Written Agreements. There shall be a written agreement between the lawyer and the eligible institution, designating interest on the IOLTA account be remitted to the Arkansas Access to Justice Foundation, Inc. on a monthly basis.

(c) Interest Rates and Dividends. Eligible institutions shall maintain IOLTA accounts that pay the highest interest rate or dividend generally available from the institution to its non-IOLTA account customers when IOLTA accounts meet or exceed the same minimum balance or other account eligibility qualifications, if any.

(d) Fees That May Be Deducted From Interest Earned. Allowable reasonable fees are the only service charges or fees permitted to be deducted from interest earned on IOLTA accounts. Allowable reasonable fees may be deducted from interest on an IOLTA account only at such rates and under such circumstances as is the eligible institution's customary practice for all of its customers with interest-bearing accounts. All other fees and charges shall not be assessed against the accrued interest on the IOLTA account but rather shall be the responsibility of, and may be charged to, the lawyer maintaining the IOLTA account.

(e) Negative Netting Prohibited. Fees or charges in excess of the interest earned on the account for any month shall not be taken from interest earned on other IOLTA accounts or from the principal of the account.

(f) Reporting Requirements. A statement should be transmitted monthly to the Arkansas Access to Justice Foundation, Inc., in an electronic format to be specified by the Foundation, showing the period for which the remittance is made, the name of the lawyer or law firm from whose IOLTA account the remittance is being sent, the IOLTA account number, the average account balance, the interest rate applied, the gross interest or dividend earned during the period, the amount and description of any service charges or fees assessed during the remittance period, and the net amount of interest or dividend remitted for the period.

HISTORY: Adopted November 5, 2015.

Section 3. Removal of financial Institutions from IOLTA Program.

In addition to the attorney trust account "automatic overdraft" notification procedures set out in Section 28 of the Procedures of the Arkansas Supreme Court regulating professional conduct of attorneys at law:

(a) Banks may only be removed from the IOLTA Program after notice from the Foundation to the bank of the action needed to correct or implement any needed changes and a timely response from the bank.

(b) Should a bank be removed from the IOLTA Program, the Foundation will give attorneys sufficient notice and time in order to move their IOLTA accounts to another participating bank.
